The new setup will pave the way toward early establishment of a single industrial union for maritime workers, an objective that has been paramount in the minds of CIO maritime workers, especially those of the Natl. Maritime Union, for some time.

Ford Signs With CIO; Grants Pay Boost, Union Shop, Check-off

WASHINGTON, June 20—The Ford Motor Co. today signed its first union contract with the CIO—an agreement which meets the highest wages paid for work in the entire automobile industry.

The contract brings the union shop to all plants of the Ford industrial empire, requiring that all employes join the CIO United Automobile Workers within 30 days after they go to work. Union dues are to be checked off by the company.

It provides for use of the UAW union label on all Ford cars.

Under the contract the 120,000 Ford employes gain seniority for the first time and a grievance structure.

The Ford Service Squad, which for years struck terror into the hearts of the workers, is eliminated. To protect the Ford properties a new custodial system will be established, with company police wearing badges or uniforms or other forms of identification.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray hailed the contract as an indication of the "wholesome approach that labor and industry has towards the solution of its own problems." He said the "wage contract itself bespeaks substantial progress for the United Automobile Workers CIO.

The CIO leader noted that "it includes the wholesome recognition of the closed shop and check-off, covering all of the production and maintenance employes at all the Ford plants throughout the country, including its steel mills, cement plant, rubber plant and glass factory.

"In other words, the contract embraces every eligible worker employed by the Ford Company in its nation-wide enterprises. It may be interesting to note also that the organization has given permission in the contract authorizing the Ford Motor Co. to use the UAW-CIO union label on its products."

After describing features of the contract, Murray asserted:

"The pattern set by Mr. Ford in this contract might very well be followed by other leading industrialists in the United States of America. It is the avowed purpose of the CIO to lend every practicable and legitimate cooperation toward the maintenance of friendly relations between the Ford Company and the organization."

MONTH AFTER POLL

The contract was signed by company, CIO and auto union officials in the office of CIO Pres. Philip Murray one day short of a month after the UAW-CIO swept to victory in a Natl. Labor Relations Board election at the huge River Rouge and Lincoln plants in Detroit. The union rolled up almost a 3-1 margin over the AFL.

CIO Pres. Murray, Pres. R. J. Thomas, Sec.-Treas. George Addes and Regional Director Richard Leonard of the UAW; CIO Director of Organization Allan S. Haywood and Ford Organizing Committee Director Michael S. Widman all hailed the agreement as an epoch-making event in American labor history.

Under the contract, Ford will equal the highest pay given by any other automobile manufacturer for any given type of work. Thus, the total Ford wage scale will surpass that of any other auto corporation.

Some 120,000 workers are covered by the contract, which applies to every Ford property in the country. In addition, Ford agreed to meet the highest wage paid among competitors in his rubber, steel, glass and cement factories.

540,000 MEMBERS

With the signing of the agreement, leaders of the UAW announced that their dues paying membership had risen to 540,000, making it second only to the United Mine Workers as the nation's largest union. A total of 700,000 auto workers are now covered by USW-CIO contracts.

Organizing activities first started at the Ford River Rouge plant in the spring of 1937 following CIO victories at General Motors and Chrysler, but they were met by severe resistance from the Ford Service Squad. The latest organizing drive started last autumn and it moved steadily ahead to the successful strike of early April, the Labor Board election victory of May 21 and the contract of June 20.

Thomas, Addes Hail Ford Agreement

WASHINGTON, June 20—Following is the statement on the United Automobile Workers contract with the Ford Motor Co. that was issued here by UAW Pres. R. J. Thomas and UAW Sec.-Treas. George Addes:

"The agreement reached today with the Ford Motor Company completes the organization of the automobile industry by the United Automobile Workers, CIO. It brings the paid-up membership of our organization to 540,000 and the number of workers covered by our agreements to approximately 700,000.

"The Ford contract eliminates the only important hold-out against unionism in the automobile industry. It paves the way for stabilization of labor relations in the industry through which all concerned, workers and employers, will benefit. It extends UAW-CIO standards of wages, seniority and working conditions to an additional 120,000 workers.

Agreement by the Ford Motor Company to establish a union shop sets a pattern for the industry which, we believe, will be universally adopted before the end of another year. The union shop clause recognizes the principle that all who gain from the union should contribute to its maintenance. It gives the union the authority which it must have to fulfill its responsibilities under the contract.

"The officers and members of the UAW-CIO cannot praise too highly the leadership and guidance of Philip Murray, President of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, in the campaign to organize the Ford workers which has now culminated in this outstanding contract. Both in his general policies and in his specific contributions during the Ford negotiations, President Murray has again placed the automobile workers and the workers of the nation in debt to him. We desire also to acknowledge the great service in the negotiations of Allan S. Haywood, Director of Organization of the CIO.

NLRB Announces Settlement of All Ford Cases

Washington, June 20.—The National Labor Relations Board today announced the complete settlement of all cases involving the Ford Motor Company and the UAW-CIO.

This included the entry of Board orders and enforcing decrees in the United States Circuit Courts of Appeals, upon consent of the Ford Motor Company, in cases at Buffalo, Richmond, Long Beach, St. Louis, Kansas City, Edgewater and Detroit. All other charges by the UAW-CIO now on file in any Board office will be withdrawn by the union as settled amicably between the parties.

The Ford Motor Company has further undertaken to comply in full with decrees already entered by the Courts covering the Detroit and Dallas plants.

Murray Charges Vinson Bill Still Anti-Labor Despite Face Lifting

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, June 21—No matter how they revise it, the Vinson bill still adds up to involuntary servitude for American workers, CIO President Philip Murray said here after Secretary James B. Carey and other CIO representatives had conferred with the poll-tax Representative whose name graces the anti-union measure.

The meeting was called at Vinson's request to discuss the new version of the bill in which some of the earlier objectionable features were dropped and new ones—just as objectionable to labor, as Murray pointed out—were added. AFL representatives were also present at the conference and joined in the opposition to the bill.

"The basic anti-labor character of the Vinson bill remains, despite attempts to win approval for its passage by revision of some of its features," Murray said after the meeting.

In the revised version, three points were dropped—the clause allowing employers to fire active union members at will, the freezing of the open shop through prohibiting union contracts, and the outlawing of so-called "coercive" methods of unions, which would have outlawed any normal union activity.

COMPULSORY ARBITRATION

Compulsory arbitration of all labor disputes was added, making the bill as drastically anti-labor as anything that has been offered in Congress. The original cooling-off period was left in, with changes making it an even sharper attack on the right to strike, and another clause added that revives the ancient injustice of the anti-union court injunction.

The compulsory arbitration angle comes in the section of the new bill giving the Natl. Defense Mediation Board authority to make all its awards final, Murray pointed out, adding that compulsory arbitration means one thing—involuntary servitude.

"The bill further gives the Mediation Board authority to make its awards final," he said "This section by itself imposes compulsory arbitration on all disputes. Compulsory arbitration is the negation of collective bargaining. This means involuntary servitude for American workers. It violates every tenet of American democracy, and directly violates the Bill of Rights and the U. S. Constitution."

DESTROYS RIGHT TO STRIKE

Retention of the cooling-off period, by which workers are forbidden to strike for a period of 30 days or longer after a dispute has been referred to the Mediation Board destroys the right to strike, Murray explained; "since it forces workers to refrain from acting to protect their rights while allowing employers to proceed with attacks on the union."

"Any restriction on the right to strike, no matter for what period of time, will be utilized by hostile employers and hostile courts as a basis for a permanent denial," he said.

"The fact that the present restriction is nominally limited to 30 days is meaningless, since there is

Labor Unions Rally Against Hostile Bills

BY JOHN T. JONES
CIO Legislative Representative
Director, Labor's Non-Partisan League

Faced with an unparalleled Congressional attack on all its rights, labor mobilized during the past week to demand that Congressmen vote down all measures that would destroy free labor unions and the right of collective bargaining.

More than 200 official representatives of CIO international unions have come to Washington to make a check on every Congressman's attitude on pending anti-labor legislation. Coming in response to a call issued by CIO President Philip Murray and the CIO legislative representative, these men and women represent internationals in: Steel, coal, auto, rubber, electric and radio, communications, aluminum, construction, die-casting, glass, ship-building, mine-mill-smelter, newspapers, oil, transport, government, shoe, and office and professional.

SLY MANEUVERS

The job before these labor representatives was complicated by purposefully sly and tricky Congressional maneuvers. Labor amend-

Three From CIO Named To Board

WASHINGTON, June 21—Formal appointment of three CIO officials to serve as alternate members of the National Defense Mediation Board was announced this week by the White House.

Named were CIO Sec. James B. Carey; John Brophy, director of Industrial Union Councils, and Hugh Lyons, regional director with offices in Boston, Mass.

Behind A Smoke Screen

The recent letter of CIO President Murray denying fantastic press stories about splits, purges, and red-hunts in the CIO, carries with it a serious warning to the whole movement to guard its unity against "slandermongers who seek to promote factionalism and other forms of internal dissension."

This type of propaganda campaign is nothing new in the history of the CIO. Ever since its great crusade of industrial organization was started, the enemies of the CIO have retailed such garbage to the anti-labor press, and AFL and company unions have been bankrupt enough to pick it up in nearly every Labor Board election campaign.

The contempt with which American workers regard such lies and slanders is shown by the whopping majorities which they have given to the CIO in every election in which its opponents have used this type of propaganda.

The present press campaign, however, has more serious elements to it than most of the previous campaigns. It comes at a time when a near-war hysteria has gripped the land, and when overheated emotions and intolerant prejudices are more out of hand. It is also promoted, both politically and in the press, from higher and supposedly more responsible quarters in the past.

Finally, and most important of all, the present propaganda campaign is the smoke screen behind which one of the worst attacks in labor history has been launched upon unionism and upon all of the democratic rights which labor has struggled so long to win.

If President Murray's warning is heeded, the current stream of propaganda, as in the past, will fall like water from a duck's back without harming the movement. For the CIO is big enough, strong enough, democratic enough, and confident enough of its patriotism and its Americanism to be able to order its own affairs and to disregard the slandermongers, while it concentrates upon repelling the real attacks on labor's rights which they seek to cover up and promote.

'M-Plan' Takes Shape

The outlines of a systematic scheme to bind labor hand and foot for at least the duration of the war are becoming clearer and clearer to anyone who examines the many anti-union measures now before Congress.

The latest step in this scheme is the revised Vinson bill. This would outlaw strikes through compulsory "cooling-off" provisions; destroy the Norris-LaGuardia anti-injunction act by permitting the use of anti-strike injunctions, and establish compulsory arbitration by giving the Mediation Board authority to make its awards final.

The new Vinson bill dovetails in with the Case and Pace amendments already passed by the House. These are "work-or-starve" measures. Under them the compulsory arbitration powers granted to the Mediation Board would be backed up by a government blacklist against workers who strike or aid strikes, and by breaking down the Wagner Act to give employers a free hand to fire strikers or other union workers.

All of these House measures in turn are carried a step further by the Connally amendment to the conscription law, passed in the Senate. This provides for use of the federal army to break strikes.

There are a number of other bills and amendments along similar lines, and it is still uncertain precisely which will finally be concentrated upon to round out the whole scheme.

But all of these measures constitute a piecemeal introduction of the notorious "M-Plan" for industrial mobilization in the event of war or a war emergency.

This plan, hatched in the War Department, has been in the course of preparation since 1921, and its general outline became known some time ago. It envisages making labor-protective legislation a dead letter and establishing an industrial dictatorship, under which workers will be virtually conscripted and compelled to work at such jobs and under such wage and hour conditions as the dictatorship may determine.

This is the direction in which Congress is moving TODAY. Right now, both Senate and House are debating and acting upon measures to destroy your freedom, and to make a mockery of our democracy.

Contact your Senators and Congressmen at once! Tell them that as a free American you are bitterly opposed to the Vinson bill, the Case and Pace amendments, the Connally amendment, and to any and all other bills that would destroy the right to strike and the other democratic rights that distinguish free men from slaves. There is no time to be lost!

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

CONGRESSMAN POOH-BAH greeted the delegation cordially. "Do you wish to speak to me as a Rotarian, a Friend of Labor, an Administration Man, a Representative of All the People, or a Loyal Party Man"? he asked.

"We're a CIO delegation," the visitors declared. "We want you to vote against the Vinson bill, and to oppose all the other anti-union, strikebreaking, blacklisting and compulsory arbitration measures before Congress."

"Well, well, well," Congressman Pooh-Bah replied. "I'm a union man myself, elected by the labor vote and one of the staunchest friends of labor in Congress. As a Friend of Labor I agree with you entirely. Labor's rights must be protected, or our democracy is lost."

"Then you'll vote against these vicious anti-labor measures?"

"Ah, not so fast! I was speaking as a Friend of Labor. But, as a Loyal Party Man, I must follow party discipline."

"Your party's election pledge was to advance collective bargaining and defend labor's rights."

"Correct, my friends, and as a Loyal Party Man I am ever mindful of labor's interests. But, as an Administration Man, I must back the administration's efforts to suppress strikes, punish agitators, and allow only big business and its own management to hold up defense production.

"Then, too," Congressman Pooh-Bah continued, "you must remember I am a Rotarian and a Representative of All the People. As such I must defend what you call the profiteers against outside labor agitators, high taxes, and wage increase demands. Labor has been coddled too much. That's why I voted to cut WPA and will vote for heavier taxes on lower incomes, compulsory arbitration, and the rest of the program to which you object.

"However," he added cheerfully, noting the rising anger of the delegation, "I don't want to offend you or lose labor support. So, as a Friend of Labor, I can assure you I am with labor 100 per cent, no matter how I vote."

THE ABOVE is only a slight exaggeration of some experiences reported by CIO union delegations which have been visiting members of Congress in the recent past.

Labor is being subjected to a blitzkrieg attack of unprecedented violence, including use of the conscription law for anti-union purposes, armed force, and legislation to destroy rights and gains which it has taken a century to win.

These union men and women have come to Washington to find out why many professing friends of labor, elected by the workers' votes, are now joining and even leading the tory pack in its howling, yelping drive against labor.

When they confront these politicians, they are reminded of Pooh-Bah in Gilbert & Sullivan's opera, The Mikado, who held so many cabinet posts that in one capacity he could always disagree with himself in another capacity.

NOR ARE the Pooh-Bahs confined to Congress. Washington is lousy with Democracy Abroad-Autocracy at Home boys. And you can hardly enter a government office without bumping into some lover of labor with a newly hatched scheme for garroting the object of his affections.

It is no secret in Washington that the big slander-and-split campaign against the CIO and its unions, which President Murray so vigorously denounced, had its origin in government departments where labor-lovers are supposed to reside. It was kept alive by stage whispers to reporters which could be heard at least ten blocks further than the loudest blasts of the Dies committee.

HITLER'S TACTICS have been faithfully followed in the current domestic blitzkrieg against American labor and democracy. First we have the Menace, then the Incident, then the Crackdown, and finally the Systematic Suppression.

The Menace is Red, of course, just like Hitler's. The Reichstag Fire Incident is a strike (even a little one will do). The Crackdown includes armed force and conscriptive powers injected into civil affairs. The Systematic Suppression, now being planned in Congress, includes the Connally bill for government strikebreaking, the Case-Pace and Vinson bills to destroy the right to strike, and a dozen other measures.

But American labor is not licked. It may have been surprised by the suddenness and viciousness of the attack, and confused by the propaganda smokescreen used to cover it up. But labor is now fighting back, and the political Pooh-Bahs are being called to account by angry labor voters. If you haven't written your representatives in Congress, now is the time!

Murray Assails 'Malicious Gossip' On CIO Policies

WASHINGTON, June 21—The unity and progress of the CIO will not be disrupted by "speculative and often highly fantastic stories in the public press about splits, purges, red-hunts" in the organization, CIO President Philip Murray told all affiliates in a circular letter sent out from here this week.

Murray's letter, sharply rebuking the "idle or malicious gossip," printed in the recent newspaper campaign, assured CIO members that "there have been no changes in the fundamental policies of the CIO" and that the CIO would continue organizing the unorganized despite "slander-mongers who seek to promote factionalism and other forms of internal dissension."

"The constitution of the CIO calls for the organization of all workers employed in industry for the sound and wholesome purposes of collective bargaining," Murray wrote. "To this purpose, and this alone, we have steadfastly adhered and will continue to adhere.

NO WITCH-HUNTS

"At the same time, the CIO has never engaged in witch-hunting nor lent any credence or support to the efforts of labor's enemies to divide our ranks by malicious slanders of duly elected officers; and to create factional dissension by appeal to intolerant prejudice regarding differences among our membership."

Murray pointed out as President of the CIO that he would continue to adhere to the democratic principles of the CIO, and further: "in line with these principles and the organizational discipline necessary for the proper functioning of any democratic movement, I have not hesitated to speak out when actions were taken that I deemed detrimental to the interests of our unions in the present national emergency."

But, he added, "neither by word nor by deed have I lent any encouragement to the current slander campaign against the loyal Americans who represent the CIO and its unions."

Murray's letter closed with a warning to all who slander the CIO and its members and leaders for their own factional purposes. "The CIO is a truly American institution," he said, "devoted to sound and constructive American objectives, and we have only contempt and indignation for those who dare to impugn our patriotism and our Americanism."

Unions Act Fast Against Threat To Curb Rights

WASHINGTON, June 21—Congressmen, fresh from last week's almost unanimous assault on labor's right, are hearing from the representatives of the workers and voters back home, who have poured into Washington at the call of CIO President Murray and John T. Jones, director of Labor's Non-Partisan League, to tell them what the people think about the Vinson bill and other drastic attacks on labor and democracy.

More than 60 representatives from almost every CIO national and international union are present, making the rounds of Congressional offices and explaining that American workers do not want the compulsory arbitration and involuntary servitude that Congress proposes to fasten on their necks.

According to reports from this workers lobby, some of the Congressmen are beginning to regret joining the anti-labor mob that formed so quickly during the events of the past two weeks. Plenty of them, however, are still defiant, though relying heavily on a smokescreen of national defense to cover up their anti-labor speeches and votes.

GENERAL HYSTERIA

The CIO lobbyists also report a much higher state of general hysteria in Congress than ever noted before, even at the height of previous campaigns to destroy the Wagner Act and other social legislation. This time, they point out, the labor-baiting epidemic is not confined solely to labor's traditional enemies — people like Hoffman, Cox, Vinson, Dies and other petrified tories—but has infected scores of labor's professed friends.

These skin-deep allies of the labor movement are just as much involved in the current wave of repressive measures as the older hands at the game, the CIO representatives have found, while they try to wrap themselves up in their former record of votes for the Wagner Act, the Walsh-Healy Act, etc.

The general atmosphere is improving, however, as thousands of letters and telegrams pour in on the Congressmen, out-and-out tories and shaky "liberals" alike.

Murray Letter On Tory Laws In Leaflet

WASHINGTON, June 21 President Murray's warning of last week to all CIO members that current proposals in Congress threaten the very existence of their unions has been printed in leaflet form, and is available for mass distribution.

The leaflet is a reprint of the letter to CIO affiliates carried in the June 16 issue of THE CIO NEWS. It lists and describes the effect the Vinson bill and the three amendments recently passed, two in the House and one in the Senate, would have on organization if they become law.

Pres. Murray also warns of the dangers to labor in the order cancelling draft deferments of striking workers and of the use of U. S. troops to take over and operate a struck plant.

The leaflet is titled "Defend Your Unions," and should be ordered from the Publicity Dept., CIO, 1106 Connecticut Ave., Washington, D. C.

Text of Murray's Letter

Following is the full text of the letter issued by President Philip Murray in connection with recent newspaper stories about the CIO:

GREETINGS:

In the past few weeks, a great many speculative and often highly fantastic stories have been printed in the public press about splits, purges, red-hunts, etc., taking place in the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

As President of the CIO, I have refrained from public comment on these stories because I did not deem it advisable to dignify idle or malicious gossip with formal denials, nor in any other way to add fuel to a press campaign which was little concerned with the best interests of the CIO.

I am writing to you, and to the direct representatives of the national CIO, to avoid any confusion in your minds due to the many press stories, and to re-assure you that there have been no changes in the fundamental policies of the CIO.

CIO'S SINGLE PURPOSE

The constitution of the CIO calls for the organization of all workers employed in industry for the sound and wholesome purposes of collective bargaining. To this purpose, and this alone, we have steadfastly adhered and will continue to adhere. We have no ulterior subversive purposes, nor do we tolerate attempts to divert our efforts to these or other ends foreign to collective bargaining and the advancement of labor's interests.

At the same time, the CIO has never engaged in witch-hunting nor lent any credence or support to the efforts of labor's enemies to divide our ranks by malicious slanders of duly elected officers; and to create factional dissension by appeals to intolerant prejudice regarding differences among our membership.

As President of the CIO, I have adhered strictly and will continue to adhere to the constitution of the CIO and the democratic principles on which it is founded. In line with these principles and the organizational discipline necessary for the proper functioning of any democratic movement, I have not hesitated to speak out when actions were taken that I deemed detrimental to the interests of our unions in the present national emergency.

DEMOCRATIC CONTROLS

But neither by word nor by deed have I lent any encouragement to the current slander campaign against the loyal Americans who represent the CIO and its unions. Democratic and constitutional controls are provided to insure their adherence to CIO policies and the wishes of their membership, and in such few instances as any may violate these policies such controls are applied in the regular functioning of organizational procedure.

The CIO is making tremendous strides today in organizing the unorganized and advancing labor's interests. We do not intend to allow the unity of our advancing ranks to be disrupted by slander-mongers who seek to promote factionalism and other forms of internal dissension. The CIO is a truly American institution, devoted to sound and constructive American objectives, and we have only contempt and indignation for those who dare to impugn our patriotism and our Americanism.

Murray Hits New Vinson Bill

nothing in the bill to prevent the Mediation Board from extending a case through technicalities to another 30 or 60 days or even longer period of time."

A phony clause in the bill saying that workers cannot be compelled to continue at work is meaningless, Murray pointed out, since the right to stop work to get better wages and conditions "must be exercised in a united maner—that is, through a strike—in order to be effective."

INJUNCTION REVIVED

The new bill, in giving the Board authority to enforce orders through court injunctions, revives an injustice that labor struggled for decades to remove, Murray said, declaring that this "completely destroys the Norris-LaGuardia anti-injunction act."

Another thick clause designed to head off criticism of the bill was also exposed by Murray in discussing the fact that Board orders must have the consent of the labor representative before they are issued.

"The fact that an order restricting the right to strike or a final award of the Board cannot be effective until the labor representative gives his consent does not provide any real protection," Murray said. "Our country is founded on a government of laws, not of men. All human beings are vulnerable including representatives of labor.

ments have been attached to bills that are not primarily concerned with labor. These include the Connally amendment, the Byrd amendment, and the Case-Pace amendments, which seek to establish compulsory arbitration, government-employer blacklists, and authorization to use trops as strike breakers.

An attempt to sugar-coat the Vinson bill through a substitute is now pending before Congress. This substitute, which provides a 30-day compulsory "cooling off" period, outlaws strikes, nullifies the Norris-LaGuardia Anti-Injunction Act, and makes it the policy of the United States Government to prevent all strikes in defense industries, regardless of the issues or causes.

"SABOTAGE" BILL

On June 18 Chairman May of the House Military Affairs Committee reported a measure containing new drastic provisions to the Connally amendment, S. 1524. The May bill would make workers and unions guilty of "sabotage" in ANY defense plant strike, if they do anything to prevent strike breaking, which a judge might interpret as "force or . . . threats thereof."

The Army is authorized to occupy plants in order to break any strikes in plants having defense orders. The bill in effect would deprive workers of the protection of the National Labor Relations Act and provides penalties for violation of any provision of five years imprisonment, $5,000 fine, or both.

FLOUT PROCEDURE

In acting on these bills and amendments, Congress is violating every established procedure for handling serious legislative matters. Measures which will take away from labor its most basic rights are rushed through the Senate and Congress without committee hearings. Little or no debate has been held on the merits of the legislation or its effects on labor's rights and the welfare of the country.

Never before has Congress attempted with such wholesale disregard for established American procedures to impose compulsory methods on labor. Compulsory arbitration is the direct purpose, through indirect means, which this anti-labor offensive seeks to clamp down on the working men and women of our country.

Those behind the drive are careful not to use the words, "compulsory arbitration"—which American labor has always regarded as contrary to free trade unionism and free collective bargaining. But compulsory arbitration is their aim, regardless of what fancy or vague words are used as a disguise.

Congressmen on whom labor has depended in the past are being influenced against labor's welfare. Isolated strikes are the false excuse used by them in promoting this legislation, which, as CIO President Murray has said, has "a single intent—to destroy organized labor."

Prelude To Victory:

Contract Goal Attained at Ford After Four Hard Years of Work

By FRANK WINN

It's a long road that leads from Gate 4 of the Rouge plant on May 26, 1937, to the conferences going on in Pittsburgh this week at the William Penn Hotel.

The drive to organize Ford workers into the UAW-CIO began four years ago on a sunless afternoon in May when service men brutally slugged Dick Frankensteen, Walter Reuther and other UAW-CIO officials and members who had gone to the Rouge plant to distribute union handbills.

This week in Pittsburgh Harry Bennett, Ford personnel manager, and other Ford officials are talking contract terms with Pres. Philip Murray of the CIO, Pres. R. J. Thomas of the UAW-CIO, Allan Haywood, George F. Addes and Mike Widman.

With negotiations almost completed, Ford workers and their leaders can look back on their campaign with the satisfaction of a job well done and with the knowledge that the main element of success was the tough determination of the workers themselves to be a part of the union in their industry.

Tragedy and Humor

Along the 4-year road from Gate 4 to Pittsburgh, the Ford workers have experienced incidents of stark tragedy and rich humor, of cowardly betrayal and high heroism. There were hardships, sacrifices and despair. But the great majority of Ford workers never gave up. They knew that eventually they could form for themselves the same kind of organization General Motors and Chrysler workers had won.

Their fath and their determination seems soon to be rewarded with one of the best collective bargaining contracts in the industry.

The ill-fated distribution of literature in 1937 was one of a number of abortive starts at organization. Attempts in several of the outlying plants—Dallas, Kansas City, Memphis, St. Louis, Edgewater and others—were stopped just as short. Labor board cases against the company mounted up, but the Ford workers remained unorganized.

Sell-Out Miscarried

They were the victims, too, of the growing pains which convulsed the UAW-CIO in 1937, 1938 and 1939, and almost victims of the great Homer Martin sellout to Ford, which luckily miscarried.

Through all these years the organized auto workers clamored for organization of Ford. Without adequate protection, the Ford workers responded as best they could. Some were physically attacked by service men, some were fired for union activities, some lost their furniture, their cars, their homes.

One, John Czwikel, fired in 1937, will never be reinstated. His widow will collect the back pay ordered by the NLRB and the U. S. District Court of Appeals.

A New Spirit

In the summer of 1940, a new spirit entered the UAW's Ford campaign. The last vestiges of factionalism that had rent the union for three years were disappearing. Its position in General Motors and Chrysler had been solidified by great NLRB election victories and sound contracts.

Local unions began to realize that now was the time, if ever, to smash the last outpost of the open shop in the auto industry, and they put organizers on their own payrolls and assigned them to the Ford drive.

At the end of the summer, the CIO and the UAW-CIO jointly established a $100,000 fund to organize Ford. The auto union leaders asked that the CIO assign Michael F. Widman, Jr., assistant national organizing director, to the Ford drive and their request was granted. Widman came to Detroit on Oct. 1, 1940. Within a few days he had built up an organizing staff of more than 40. This was shortly increased to 50 and at its peak reached 67.

Lots of Spade Work

A lot of spade work had to be done. Union membership in the Ford plants had dwindled to almost nothing. Most of the rank and file leadership had been fired. The ever present fear of the service department had to be broken down.

Widman and his associates mapped out a campaign. Every organizer had two assignments. One was to a geographical neighborhood, in the Detroit area. The other was to a building in the Rouge plant or Lincoln plant. The first several weeks in October and November were devoted mostly to the thankless drudgery of house to to house visits.

Some organizers had doors slammed in their faces. Others were chased with brooms or had kitchen utensils thrown at them by frightened wives who could then see in the union only a threat to their husband's jobs. Today, the organizers laugh about these incidents, and in most cases they laugh with the very people who were so frightened seven and eight months ago.

Other CIO locals lent a hand in this house to house work. Milk drivers who were members of the United Dairy Workers turned over to the committee the names of all the customers on their routes who were Ford workers.

By the latter part of November, the emphasis of the organizers had shifted from house to house to their building assignments. There was at least a nucleus of union organization in every building and department of the Rouge and Lincoln plants.

A system of volunteer organizers of Ford workers themselves was set up. These were the men who did the direct contact work of organizing. They were the men who stuck their necks out and organized the Ford plant by buttonholing their fellow workers in and about the plant before and after working hours and signing them up in the UAW-CIO.

Court Decision

The drive was stimulated by a series of favorable legal decisions. In October the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the NLRB in the original River Rouge case occasioned by the incident at Gate 4 in 1937. In November a courageous woman, Judge Lila M. Neuenfeldt of Dearborn, defied the Ford dictatorship and ruled unconstitutional the ordinance that prohibited the distribution of union literature at the Rouge gates. In February, the U. S. Supreme Court sustained the ruling of the circuit court of appeals.

Ford tried to stop the rush into the union with mass layoffs, but the company couldn't fire them as fast as they were joining without vitally interfering with production. The Ford drive had caught hold.

The System Cracks

First crack in the company's dedefensive armor came in March when the superintendent in the Rouge rolling mill precipitated a stoppage by trying to reinstate a union steward on production instead of on his regular skilled job. The whole building was completely shut down, and when a contingent of service men were powerless to force the men back to work, company officials became almost hysterical. A UAW-CIO committee was politely asked to confer with Mr. Bennett.

WIDMAN

"Sit down, gentlemen," Bennett said of the committee in his most courtly manner, when they entered his office.

"I've been working for Ford for ten years," drawled Carl Smith, husky hillbilly member of the committee, "and this is the first time anybody here ever asked me to sit down."

The rolling mill stoppage was settled in Bennett's office on the union's terms, and stoppages in other buildings were similarly settled. Union members put on their buttons, and supervision started dealing with union committees.

The prestige of the service hoodlums withered and blew away. Several who still tried to assert their authority based on physical threats stumbled and fell on their faces. They didn't try it any more.

The Strike

Then came the strike. It was so sudden and ended so quickly that even those most closely associated with it have difficulty in realizing its tremendous social implications.

One hard-boiled newspaper reporter tried to describe it—in conversation:

"I was covering the plant with —— from The ——. We were at Gate 4 watching the picket line. Whole families were in the line, men, women and children, marching in front of the biggest industrial plant in the world. Both of us had a feeling that here was something we belonged in, and that we ought to be doing something more than standing and watching. We took out our Guild cards, showed them to the picket captain and got in the line and marched with the pickets for an hour. That's how it made you feel."

But maybe it was described better by the most simple and uncomplicated reactions of the strikers themselves the first day of the strike.

"Last night," many of them told visitors in awed tones, "last night when we quit work, we SMOKED —right in the plant."

For most of the workers and their families, the brief strike was a holiday and an adventure. A mother brought her six-year-old daughter to the strike kitchen and one of the Women's Auxiliary gave the child a glass of milk.

"Wouldn't you like a sandwich, too?" she asked and the kid ducked back behind her mother's skirts.

"Oh, of course she would," beamed the mother. "She just loves to eat out."

High Discipline

They had an almost religious religious regard for the importance of strike discipline.

"How long has your husband worked at Ford's?" a reporter asked a woman in the strike kitchen.

"You'll have to ask the publicity department," she replied courteously. "We don't give out any statements."

If there was any doubt before the strike that the CIO would win the election, it was swept away completely as soon as work was resumed. UAW-CIO buttons and caps were worn throughout the Rouge and Lincoln plants. The company gave AFL organizers inordinate privileges and encouragement, but they could make no substantial headway.

Certain of victory and assured in their strength, union members jauntily laughed off whatever remained of the old fear of the service department and the supervision.

Improvement!

One day shortly before the election, the superintendent of the B Bldg., Wilfred Comment, who had been one of Frankensteen's sluggers four years before, summoned Marty Jensen, UAW-CIO building chairman, to his office. He took him to a nearby toilet and waved his arm at the walls which were plastered with UAW-CIO campaign stickers.

"This," said Comment, "looks like hell." Jensen agreed with him, and suggested that the superintendent permit him to call a meeting of the department right then and there. Everybody stopped work and gathered around the two.

"Those walls in there look like hell," Jensen thundered. "From now on, put them stickers up straight—not crooked!"

Things are comparatively quiet these days around the headquarters of Ford Local 600. The members are primarily interested in the outcome of negotiations, in the kind of contract they'll get; and while their leaders are in conferences, they are winding up the organizing job, bringing in the last holdouts into the fold of unionism.

Big Plans

They've got a real union, and they've got big plans for it. The immensity of the thing may be best appreciated by the local's tentative, thus far, excursions into cultural and recreational activities.

A group of musicians decided to form an 85-piece marching band. They put a coupon in the local paper asking for musicians. They now have an 85-piece marching band, two dance orchestras, a hillbilly band, an accordion band and scores of entertainers.

Another group wanted a softball league. They planned on 25 teams. First response brought enough applicants for 40 teams. There are now 190 teams in nine leagues.

Auto Union Officials Hail New Agreement With Ford

the spokesmen for all Ford employees, excluding supervisory employees and a limited number of other specified groups, in all of the Ford plants in the United States.

"II. All Ford workers, excluding the exceptions noted, must remain or become good standing members of the union. The company will check-off the union dues. The union is to accept all Ford workers into membership.

"III. The company will pay wage rates which will be at least equal to the highest rates paid, in the several classifications, by other automotive companies or companies engaged in the production of steel, rubber, glass and cement.

"IV. All wage increases are to be retroactive to the date of the signing of the agreement. There are to be no reductions from any prevailing rates of pay.

CONFER ON BONUS

"V. The company and the union will confer in December, 1941, on the payment of a bonus.

"VI. The service department of the company is to be eliminated. The function of plant protection will be performed by employees identified by badge or otherwise as plant protection men.

"VII. A shop steward system is to be set up and recognized by the company for the purpose of handling grievances. There is to be one steward for each 550 employees.

"VIII. Grievances machinery will be set up to adjust disputes which cannot be adjusted by the stewards and the foremen. The top appeal board in the grievance machinery will be composed of an equal number of company and union representatives.

"IX. The company is accorded the right to place the label of the union on its cars.

OVERTIME

"X. Overtime work is to be compensated for at the rate of time and a half after eight hours work in one day, or 40 hours in a week. Double time will be paid for Sunday and holiday work.

"XII. Workers called in for work and not given work will be given two hours call-in pay.

"12. Lay-off and re-hiring are to be on a strict seniority basis. A worker will accumulate seniority after being in the employ of the company for six months.

"XIII. Where lay-offs are necessitated because of a drop in production no seniority workers are to be layed off until the work week is reduced to 32 hours."

Miners, Northern Operators Sign Two-Year Pact

Washington, June 21—A new two-year agreement between the CIO United Mine Workers and eight coal operators associations in the northern Appalachian bituminous fields was signed here today, culminating negotiations which started in mid-March.

Meanwhile, UMW Pres. John L. Lewis made preparations for further conferences with the southern operators in an effort to get agreement on the same contract.

The wage rate set by the agreement is $7 a day, an increase of $1 a day. The vacation arrangement, won by the UMW for the first time in the industry's history, was modified for this year to entail a minimum loss of production time, but next year the mines will shut down on June 26 and reopen July 7, with the workers getting full pay.

Another victory for the union was the elimination of the "reject" clause, under which the operators had frequently made deductions from the miners' pay checks for "impurities" in the coal they dug.

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

Negotiations for the Ford contract continued this week, and an early announcement of a contract can be expected. When it comes, it will probably be one of the best in the industry—and will make it impossible for anyone to buy a non-union made car, even if anyone should want to do such a thing.

The three negotiators for the United Automobile Workers—President Philip Murray, UAW-CIO President R. J. Thomas, and the writer—have been meeting with an equal number of Ford company executives for some days now. During that time we have had the help of a committee of more than 20 Ford employes, with which we have consulted and reviewed progress from day to day.

WILL END SLANDER

After this contract, if anyone says the CIO can't organize or can't win benefits for its members, the job of refuting him will be easier than ever before. All you will have to do is point to the Ford agreement, add it to CIO agreements in steel, in coal, in scores of other basic industries, and the argument will be over. I don't know of anyone who would be rash enough to make such a statement, unless it might be a top leader in the AFL. We know, and the public knows, that such individuals do sometimes get taken with strange seizures that lead them to make silly statements.

Too much credit for this gigantic achievement in organizing the last big open shop in the automobile industry cannot be given to the leaders of the union who put in months of backbreaking work to make it possible, nor to the workers themselves who responded so eagerly to the message of the CIO. That accomplishment will live as long as labor history is made and written, as one of the greatest acts of emancipation ever carried through in the U. S.

ON OTHER FRONTS

But the Ford front is not the only one on which CIO is winning steady victories. Workers in International Harvester Co. plants throughout the midwest have shown that they want the CIO to represent them in collective bargaining. Four plants of the six involved have voted solidly for the CIO Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee and against the AFL. Of the two won by the AFL, the CIO union is preparing to protest one.

The Shoe Workers' drive is showing good results, too, as a report from Walter H. Harris of St. Louis shows. The CIO union received 83 per cent of the 860 votes—732 for the United Shoe Workers, 125 against, and three blank. The Federation of Glass, Ceramic and Silica Sand Workers, formerly the Federation of Flat Glass Workers, reports through International Secretary-Treasurer Peter J. Vidmar that a new local has been set up in the Michigan Silica Co.

The new local is starting off right, with a 5-cent wage increase and a closed shop contract won shortly after it was chartered. Secretary-Treasurer Vidmar credits Michigan Regional Director August Scholle and his staff for a considerable share of the victory.

Workers at the Los Angeles plant of the U. S. Gypsum Co., one of the country's biggest producers, got a 5-cent raise without asking for it, according to reports from the Los Angeles regional office. This is how it happened: The company asked the union, Local 12190 of the United Mine Workers of America, District 50, for separate negotiations.

Following out the Mine Workers' policy of insisting on a national contract, the local sidestepped the offer. Within three days notices were put up giving news of the increase—and the labor relations director of the company laft town.

MEMORIES OF THE PAST

Memories of the past were revived for UAW-CIO members when news came that the union had won, 776 to 214, over the AFL at the Kansas City Chevrolet plant of General Motors. The union was Homer Martin's home local. Homer has slipped completely out of the picture, though UAW members and other workers throughout the country will long remember him as one of the most vicious disrupters ever to curse the labor movement.

Bethlehem To Negotiate Shipyard Pact; East Coast Agreement Gets Union OK

NEW YORK CITY, June 21—The Bethlehem Steel Corp. has agreed to negotiate a master agreement with the CIO Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, and to consent to Labor Board elections in any of its plants where the union may request them.

At the same time, it was revealed that delegates from 33 east coast shipyards had voted 64-2 in favor of a new Atlantic seaboard stabilization contract.

Negotiations for the Bethlehem contract will start June 24, it was agreed in the memorandum signed by President John Green of the union and Joseph Larkin, company vice-president in charge of personnel. When the pact is signed, it will cover all Bethlehem's shipyards on the east coast where the union has been certified by the Labor Board, and other yards will be covered by the contract as soon as the union is certified.

TURN-ABOUT

The company's decision—following a similar stipulation for its steel plants with the CIO Steel Workers Organizing Committee—marks a drastic change in its previous policy of refusing to participate in collective bargaining.

President Green of the Shipyard union pointed out that "in the written understanding we have reached with the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, the Industrial Union has achieved a major objective of its seven years of organizing activity in its shipyards, namely, the institution of collective bargaining on a coast-wide scale."

At the present time the CIO union is certified as sole bargaining agency at two Bethlehem yards in Brooklyn, and at Hoboken, N. J., and at Boston.

WON ELECTION

Last week the union won an NLRB election at the Baltimore Key Highway yards. The poll, largest ever held in Baltimore, gave the Marine & Shipbuilding Workers 1,878 votes to 1,597 against.

In accordance with the understanding, the union has asked the NLRB to hold an election at the huge Fore River yards, near Quincy, Mass., on August 11, and has urged the Board to postpone indefinitely contempt of court proceedings against the company at Fore River in the interest of expediting the election.

The new contract will supersede a present agreement covering the Hoboken yards only, and will presumably embody terms of the new eastern Atlantic Coast 2-year stabilization agreement.

That agreement, covering 100,000 employes in 55 east coast yards, was worked out in a series of conferences at Washington and has already received union and OPM approval.

The Stabilization Conference—composed of union, employer and U. S. representatives—is scheduled to meet June 20 for ratification.

The coast-wide contract lifts wages 12 per cent, provides a 7 per cent bonus for night workers, time-and-a-half for overtime and double time on Sundays and holidays, and provides local grievance committees. Strikes and lockouts are barred. Wages will be adjusted after one year on the basis of changes in living costs.

Pointing out that the Marine & Shipbuilding Workers suggested the coast-wide agreement 3½ years ago, President Green said the union has "accomplished stabilization which it took other unions 30 years to bring about.

"I have no hesitancy in saying that we are giving a semblance of security against the increased cost of living. To the nation as a whole we are giving uninterrupted production of the ships vitally needed for our first line of defense.

"Without doubt, in view of the emergency, this stabilization is the best that we could have been granted during these trying times."

Haywood Praised for Great Work in Ford Drive

By R. J. THOMAS
President, United Automobile Workers, CIO

DETROIT, June 19—The UAW-CIO hopes within a few few days to announce the greatest victory in its history—what may well be one of the greatest victories of the CIO. I refer to a contract with the Ford Motor Company, for decades the traditional and outstanding foe of labor in the United States.

The contract will make news not only because it will be signed by the representatives of the Ford Motor Company, but also because of what it will contain. More than that I cannot say at this moment about the terms of the agreement which is now taking shape.

I can now, however, attest the great part being played in these negotiations by Allan S. Haywood, director of organization for the CIO. The contract, like all labor agreements, will have been won with the first instance through the efforts of the men in the shops. But it will also bear the impress of the leaders of the CIO, Philip Murray, our president, and Allan Haywood, among them.

EARLY IN DRIVE

It is fitting that Brother Haywood should have a hand in this culminating victory of the organized automobile workers. He was one of the group of men who came to the auto workers in 1936 and 1937 and laid the basis for our great union, which now has a membership of over 460,000 where, five years ago, it did not have 60,000. If the growth of unions could be indicated by a family tree, John L. Lewis, Philip Murray, Allan S. Haywood and Leo Krzycki would be on the top, in the place reserved for god-fathers.

Haywood's fathering of the UAW-CIO has not consisted merely of long-distance guidance, of a distant watchful eye. Allan got down close to the picket lines when needed and took part in the night and month-long negotiations which brought the union into being in 1937. He was present in the 1936 organizing drive; he was close to the GM negotiations and the Chrysler negotiations in 1937, which gave the union its first firm footing in the industry.

HELPED SOLIDIFY UAW

When factional troubles threatened to undo the work which created our union, Haywood joined with President Murray and Sidney Hillman in nursing it back to its full, fighting strength.

Allan has not always been sweetness and light, dealing only in general, helpful platitudes. Those who know him will realize that when bitter criticism and censure was justified, Allan was just as ready to serve. He has made friends and brothers in the UAW not by backslapping but by saying what was on his mind, forcefully and effectively, when it needed to be said.

No campaign of the auto workers, whether strike, negotiations or labor board elections, has failed to command the support and assistance of Allan Haywood. He always senses the auto workers' needs even before I can pick up the telephone to ask his help.

For that reason I feel impelled to pause for a moment, in the midst of these momentous Ford negotiations, to pay this tribute to Allan S. Haywood—as staunch a friend and of the auto workers as our organization can ever hope to have.

NO MATTER HOW THEY SLICE IT—

The Vinson bill is up again, this time in a "revised" form that is supposed to ease its way through Congress.

The revision, as President Murray pointed out, leaves the bill just as much anti-labor as before—with a few new union-busting wrinkles added.

As the bill now stands, it will (if passed):

1. Impose compulsory arbitration on all disputes—which means involuntary servitude for American workers.
2. Destroy the right to strike by enforcing a 30-day or longer waiting period on any dispute that has been referred to the Mediation Board.
3. Revive the anti-union court injunction with heavy criminal penalties for workers violating Board orders.
4. Make all Mediation Board orders final and binding, no matter what the merits of the case.

The millions of protests that poured in on Congress stopped the Vinson bill once, forcing this pretended "revision."

That protest must be heard again—louder and sharper than ever before.

The time is getting shorter by the minute. WIRE your Congressman and your two Senators IMMEDIATELY. Address Representatives at House Office Building, Senators at Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

Tell them American workers want no Vinson bill or any part of it.

Defend your unions, your jobs and your wages.
The Vinson bill must not pass.

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, June 21—Policies of the Aluminum Co. of America, one of the nation's most powerful monopolies, are detrimental to the defense program, a Senate committee was told today. The testimony contrasted with Congressional debate, where practically all defense delays have been attributed to labor in recent weeks.

Testifying before the Truman Committee Investigating the National Defense Program, Sec. of the Interior Harold Ickes declared:

"When the story of this war comes to be written, if it has to be written that it was lost, it may be because of the recalcitrance of the Aluminum Company of America."

Ickes accused the powerful aluminum monopoly, which controls almost all the country's production of the metal, of seeking to retain its privileged economic status with little regard for the nation's needs. His testimony came only a few days after the company's tactics had forced members of the National Association of Die Casting Workers to strike at the Alcoa plant in Cleveland. The union called off the walkout to accept a National Defense Mediation Board compromise offer.

PRESENT SHORTAGE

The Secretary of the Interior said that the company was responsible for a good part of the present defense shortage because of optimistic claims about its output—claims which quickly melted away and left the nation facing a drastic aluminum shortage. At present all production of aluminum goods for civilian use has been halted, with all metal available being turned into defense utilizations.

By restricting production, Alcoa hopes to cash in on high profits in the future, Ickes indicated. He made a similar charge against the Pacific Gas & Electric Co., huge west coast utility, which, Ickes asserted, admits there is not enough power on the West Coast but opposes government efforts to increase the supply.

Discussing possibility of an east coast oil shortage because of lacking transportation facilities, he said: "Oil is like aluminum. It is controlled by three people: Rockefeller, Morgan and Mellon."

FIRM MADE BOASTS

On the witness stand Ickes recalled that the government's Office of Production Management had assured a Congressional delegation that Alcoa could easily take care of airplane aluminum requirements. A month later, he said, Wilson testified in a federal anti-trust suit that the Aluminum Company "was in a position to supply the United States government with all the aluminum it will require for national defense for the next year."

Alcoa, Ickes said, "sought to put off the horrible day when the monopoly would have to experience some competition."

A day later I. W. Wilson, Alcoa vice president, denied the charges. After listening to his testimony, Sen. James Mead of New York indicated that if Wilson's testimony were correct, "it looks as if . . . the OPM is the culprit in the delay in this instance."

SEEK RAISES

New York.—(FP)—Wage increases of 14c an hour are sought by the Transport Workers Union, CIO, for 3,500 employes of the Third Avenue Railways.

It Doesn't Pay!

PHILADELPHIA, June 21—Several score embarrassed Patrons of Walters Restaurant, being picketed by a CIO union, belatedly realized today that it doesn't pay to pass a picket line.

Three girls were observed entering the restaurant recently while a stag party was in progress on the second floor. Buck Ferguson, a striking member of Local 356, Hotel & Restaurant Workers Union, who was doing picket line duty, recognized one of the girls as having appeared in the nude at an affair there last year.

So he stepped to the telephone and let the police know that something was in the wind at Walters. A few minutes later a flock of squad cars were at the door. The police raid netted the capture of several lewd movie films and three patrol wagons filled with red-faced customers.

City Has Full Power To Bargain, Transit Union Tells Court

NEW YORK, June 21—City authorities here have full power to bargain collectively with the Transport Workers Union, CIO, and to sign contracts, the TWU said in filing a local Supreme Court brief in answer to a counter-suit by city counsel.

The union brief, filed by the firm of Harrison and Marshman, special counsel assigned to it by CIO President Philip Murray, followed a court denial of a plea for a declaratory judgment by which the city had sought to escape collective bargaining without even a tdial of the issues. The trial, during which the entire issue will be thrashed out, is expetced to be set for an early date.

One of the major points made in the TWU brief is the fact that collective bargaining contracts are the surest means of guaranteeing safe, efficient and uninterrupted transit service. The contracts, the union pointed out, have been in force since 1937, and must be renewed now in order to continue high standards set by the union.

BETTER CONDITIONS

Citing "large increases in pay, substantial reduction in excessive hours and great improvements in working conditions" won by the union, the TWU brief pointed out that it has also "assured the citizens of New York against strikes upon the rapid transit facilities by said employes by provisions for continuous service for fixed periods of time."

The brief concludes by asking the court to dismiss the city's suit against the union, pointing out that collective bargaining has been upheld by federal, state and city law, and by the constitution of New York state.

Ancient charges of assault against certain union leaders, allowed to sleep in the files for three years until this week, were brought out by District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey, "as part of the all-out union-busting campaign designed to rob transit workers of their collective bargaining rights," the union charged in a statement released earlier in the week.

The union also announced that its case for collective bargaining had won the support of powerful Irish groups in the city, following a call issued by the Irish Echo, largest Iris hnewspaper in the U. S.

To Appeal Harsh Sentences For Allis Strike Pickets

West Allis, Wisc., June 21—Six union employes of the Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Company today were sentenced to a total of 420 days in prison for the "crime" of picketing the plant several months ago in defiance of the illegal Knudsen-Knox strikebreaking order that aroused nation-wide labor protests.

Officials of Local 248, United Automobile Workers, which conducted the strike and finally broke the company's stubborn resistance to collective bargaining, said it would take an immediate appealing from the ruling of Judge Harvey Neelen, who handed down the decision.

STUCK BY UNION

In his ruling, Judge Neelen made it clear that the heavy sentences were being ordered because the men had stuck by their union in the face of the Knox-Knudsen order, which had no official status and was contrary to the government's own labor policy.

One of the union men was sentenced to 120 days, two to 90 days, one to 60 days, two to 30 days and two were fined.

SOME QUESTIONS

Commented Local 248's official paper:

"What fines and punishments were levied against the company for defying the OPM? None.

"What was done to Sheriff Shinners and Police Chief Kluchefsky for shooting tear gas into the ranks of innocent people? Nothing.

"What was done to Knox and Knudsen for using an illegal procedure? Nothing.

"But the union men, who followed the law and the spirit of this land in defending their jobs through their union—what was done to them? 420 days of imprisonment and fines."

Union Acts To Avert Shutdown

Springdale, Pa., June 21—Acting for a second time to forestall the possibility of an electric power shutdown in this heavily industrialized area, Local 117 of the CIO Utility Workers Organizing Committee again cancelled a strike call at the local plant of the Duquesne Light Co.

The union's action followed certification of the dispute to the Natl. Defense Mediation Board.

Possibility of the strike action becoming necessary had followed a double cross by company union officials, who first agreed to a Labor Dept. suggestion that the State Labor Relations Board determine whether the Colfax plant here should be considered a separate bargaining unit.

PHONEYS RENEGED

As they had done on an earlier occasion, the fake leaders of the Independent Association of Employes went back on their promise, claiming that their "membership" had voted against the proposal. UWOC officials pointed out that the company union maintains office in a building owned by the utility corporation in Pittsburgh, and that foremen have been coercing employes into joining it.

The UWOC maintains that the majority of the 250 Colfax employes are members, and has asked for a consent election to prove it.

FAKE UNION ON BALLOT

A year ago the Republican-controlled state labor board ordered a company-wide election on the Duquesne utility system, and reversing a previous board precedent, allowed the company union to appear on the ballot. The election was boycotted by the CIO affiliate, which later asked for a separate election at the Colfax plant, where it claims to have had a majority since 1937.

UWOC officials denied newspaper propaganda that the controversy is a "jurisdictional dispute" and said the real issues are recognition of a bona fide union and the granting of 15 cent-an-hour wage increases, paid vacations and improved working conditions.

Dykstra Resigns

Washington, June 21.—Clarence Dykstra, chairman of the Natl. Defense Mediation Board has submitted his resignation to Pres. Roosevelt to take effect July 1.

He will return to his position as president of the University of Wisconsin.

Two More Locals Of AFL Teamsters Swing To CIO

Minneapolis, Minn., June 21—Two more locals of the AFL's teamsters union this week had switched affiliation to the CIO United Construction Workers Organizing Committee.

Following the lead of the powerful General Drivers Local 544, which came into the CIO ranks last week, the membership of Local 778 at Austin, Minn., voted to apply for a CIO charter. Similar action has been taken by members of Local 221 in Minneapolis, which voted to merge with Local 221.

Protests Win Reversal Of Draft Ruling

Inglewood, Calif., June 21—(FP) Following strong union protests, local Draft Board 242 has rescinded its action in cancelling the draft deferment of Harry C. Higgins, an engineer at the plant of the North American Aviation Co.

Higgins, who is secretary of Local 205, CIO Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists & Technicians, was the first victim of the work-or-fight order.

His deferment was canceled by the board when he failed to answer the company's summons to return to work on June 10, a day before the unauthorized strike ended. Higgins refused to go back while pickets were still marching.

STRONG PROTEST

In a protest wired to President Roosevelt and national draft officials, the FAECT described the board's action as "an attempt to smash unions by using the conscription act against union leaders."

President Lewis Allan Berne of the FAECT hailed the board's decision to extend Higgins' occupational deferment as a victory for the CIO and stated that "only such vigorous action by organized labor can prevent the draft act from becoming a Hitler weapon against the right to strike."

Company To Bargain On Pact

PITTSBURGH, June 28—The CIO Steel Workers Organizing Committee won a major victory in its campaign to organize Little Steel, sweeping to an easy win in elections at five plants of the Bethlehem Steel Co.

As a result of the polls the SWOC becomes sole bargaining agent for a unit comprising the big Cambria plant at Johnstown, Pa., two plants in Los Angeles, and plants at Rankin and Leetsdale, Pa.

Two months ago the SWOC gained a decisive majority in a poll at the huge Lackawanna, N. Y., works of Bethlehem, the nation's second largest steel manufacturer.

The company has agreed to bargain and sign a written contract with the SWOC as soon as the union has been certified by the NLRB.

Decisive!

The CIO polled 105 votes. The AFL got ony two.

Draftsmen Win Polls At GM

Detroit, June 28—The CIO scored another advance this week in the nation's motor capital, winning by a big margin an election among draftsmen at the General Motors Ternstedt plant.

About 98% of the men chose the Society of Designing Engineers, a division of the CIO Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists & Technicians.

Earlier in the same day 70% of the body drafting and designing staff voted for the FAECT. Similar elections are scheduled soon for the Cadillac plant here and at the Buick plant in Flint.

J. S. Jacoby, FAECT international vice-president, predicted victories in the two polls, and said he looked forward "to an equally successful election at the Chrysler Highland Park and Dodge plants, on which hearings start before the Natl. Labor Relations Board at the Wayne County Court Building June 30."

PLEASED: The Ford contract with the CIO was plenty gratifying to these members of the United Automobile Workers, shown at a Detroit mass meeting at which they ratified the precedent-breaking agreement.

Washington, June 28—An election among employes in the editorial and news departments of The New York Times was ordered this week by the National Labor Relations Board to determine whether they want to be represented by the CIO American Newspaper Guild or the AFL American Editorial Association.

The Board upheld the unit proposed by the Guild on the general basis of the "broad functional integration and community of interest existing among all the employes in the Editorial Department."

In the majority decision the Board stated: "The considerations supporting our conclusion that the unit proposed by the Association is impracticable and inappropriate indicate the appropriateness of the departmental unit requested by the Guild."

Board Member William Leiserson dissented, holding that the unit should be split into a "professional" and a "non-professional" group.

In his dissenting opinion Leiserson declared: "I regret that I cannot agree with the decision in this case in so far as it finds a unit consisting of professional employes to be inappropriate and holds that a combination of the professional editors, copy readers, cartoonists, reporters, news and editorial writers, together with office boys, messengers, stenographers and clerks, is the only appropriate unit."

Shirt Makers Strike, Seek Pay Boost

KINSTON, N. C., June 28 (FP)—Nearly 300 Atlas Shirt Co. workers are on strike in a demand for 10 per cent pay increases, a 40-cent minimum and one-week vacations.

The strike followed management's refusal to negotiate with the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, CIO, which has had contracts with the company both here and in the La Follette (Tenn.) plant.

The Tennessee unit was also due to be shut down by union members. Local union representatives from both LaFollette and Kinston met in Asheville, N. C., recently to agree on action if negotiations with the company were not successful.

The Atlas Shirt Co. was one of the few shirt plants dealing with the ACW which failed to grant pay increases recently when the union negotiated with the Shirt Institute, Inc.

Bernard Borah, southern ACW director who is in charge of the strike here, is leading the union negotiators who are seeking to reach an agreement with Alex I. Gross, company president.

Huge Coast Gas Utility Signs First CIO Pact

LOS ANGELES, June 28—A signed contract, first of its kind between a union and a utility company in the entire west, has just crowned with victory a four-year campaign of the CIO Utility Workers' Organizing Committee.

Finally yielding to the demands of an overwhelming majority of its employes, the Southern California Gas Company, purveyor of natural gas to 4,000,000 people in southern California, abandoned its hopeless fight against the CIO and signed on the dotted line.

The contract specifically covers 1,400 production employes of the company's central division, organized into Local 132, UWOC, but also applies with slight variations to a smaller group in the Van Nuys area, northern division, organized into Local 114. It will cover all other divisions and departments of the company as rapidly as the locals can hold elections and prove their majorities.

An immediate wage gain averaging $5 per month per employe was made directly through the contract, and the way was paved for even higher wages through a clause which permits reopening of wage scales whenever living costs rise. The union is immediately opening negotiations on this point, with a demand for a blanket increase of 10 cents per hour.

The contract provides severance pay of one week for each year of service up to 10 years; seniority rights, grievance and arbitration procedure, time and a half for overtime, the 40-hour week, six days' sick leave with pay, vacations with pay of one week for one year of service and two weeks for two years or more, and many other benefits.

'LONGEST' PACT

The contract, embodied in a document 40 pages long and said to be one of the most detailed agreements ever signed between a company and a union, was unanimously ratified by secret ballot of the union membership.

Local leaders give much of the credit in the long and difficult four-year campaign to the assistance and advice of the national leadership of the CIO. The invaluable aid of CIO Organizational Director Allan Haywood was particularly recognized, together with that of Harold Straub, national director of the UWOC. Haywood took the first step toward success when he appointed James Daugherty as local representative, thus giving strong guidance to the local drive.

The California State Industrial Union Council has assisted, providing funds for an assistant to Daugherty, Robert McKay. The entire local CIO movement, under the leadership of Philip M. Connelly, secretary of the Los Angeles Industrial Union Council, has also cooperated.

CASE BEFORE NLRB

The company, said to be the largest distributor of natural gas in the world, fought the CIO bitterly every inch of the way. The first clash came in a lengthy fight to win NLRB jurisdiction. When the NLRB assumed jurisdiction and Local 132 won an election and certification, the company threatened to carry the case to the highest courts.

The union, however, plugged right along, winning important concessions in informal negotiations with the company and building up better wages, improved conditions, and the strength of the union.

Finally the company yielded and began official negotiations five months ago. Daugherty announced that elections will be held very shortly to bring all other divisions of the company under the terms of the contract.

No Justice In Sales Tax, Hetzel Writes

Washington, June 28—"There is no economic or social justification for a federal excise or sales tax either during a period of defense expenditure or in the usual fiscal situation."

So wrote Ralph Hetzel, head of the CIO economic division, in a forum discussion appearing in the current issue of Modern Industry magazine. L. W. Houston, official of the Ludlow Valve Co. and chairman of the Natl. Manufacturers' Assn.'s committee on government finance, took the opposite view.

Hetzel wrote:

"The tax policy which labor is supporting is part and parcel of a general economic theory which holds that the normal operation of our economy is sadly interfered with by the failure of the mass of working people and farmers to get the income necessary to buy those things they can produce. . . . Sales or excise taxes, according to this kind of analysis, are simply taxes which decrease purchasing power and thus hinder the full operation of industry.

HUGE SAVINGS

"On the other hand, as almost every impartial analysis of the past few years has pointed out, our system continues to accumulate a great surplus of savings beyond that necessary for investment.

"It is first of all from such excess savings that revenue should be sought."

UP WAGES $23,000

Baltimore, Md.—Wage increases of $23,000 were won for 400 employes of the Mt. Vernon-Woodberry Mill here, it was announced by CIO Regional Director Frank Bender and Walter Pollard, organizer for the Textile Workers Union.

Shipyard Pact Lifts Pay By 250 Million

WASHINGTON, June 28 — The quarter of a billion dollar annual wage increase negotiated by the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America, CIO, for the 100,000 workers in the private construction and repair yards on the Atlantic Coast, went into effect as of June 23.

Estimated to aggregate $220,000,000 for the present employes of the industry on the Atlantic Coast, this wage increase was embodied in the zone standards which were formally endorsed last week by the Shipbuilding Stabilization Conference, at a meeting in Washington.

UNION REPRESENTATIVES

The IUMSWA representatives were the only ones at the labor table who had anything to say at Friday's conference. National President John Green was actually the spokesman for labor, as he informed the general conference that the tentative zone standards had been approved by a meeting of the Industrial Union local delegates in Camden on June 15.

Four other Industrial Union negotiators of these zone standards were also present at the general conference. They included Secretary-Treasurer Philip H. Van Gelder, Peter J. Flynn and Thomas Gallagher, General Executive Board members, and Robert Palumbo, financial secretary of Philadelphia Local 14.

As a result of the vigorous stand of the Industrial Union, every shipyard worker on the Atlantic Coast should get in his pay check a raise proportionate to that obtained by the first class mechanics, whose base rate is set at $1.12 an hour. There is also set a seven percent bonus for shift work. Piece work and contract rates should also reflect the increase in the base rates.

End City Strike

McKeesport, Pa., June 28—A four-day strike of municipal workers ended here with a pledge of wage increases ranging between 6½% and 10%, to go into effect July 1. The strike was called by the CIO State, County and Municipal Workers.

Immediately after the strike ended, garbage collectors and street sweepers started work on cleaning up debris which had accumulated during the walkout.

ARMS AGAINST MEN: Armed U.S. coast guardsmen stand watch at Buffalo Harbor, N. Y., after boarding two struck vessels of the Nicholson Transit Corp., where they drove off crew members who were asking recognition of the CIO Natl. Maritime Union. Both the company and the coast guard claimed the raid was in the interest of national defense.

Coast Guard Used Against CIO Seamen; Union Sends Protests

TOLEDO, June 28—For the second time in a fortnight, federal armed forces have intervened in a labor dispute.

The U. S. Coast Guard boarded the steamship Fellowcraft at Conneaut, Ohio, and physically removed the crew, which was striking for an agreement with the Natl. Maritime Union. Similar action was reported in Buffalo, where the Coast Guard took over the Steamship Donnelly.

Both ships are owned by the Nicholson Transit Corp., which has refused to meet with the CIO union or to consent to Labor Board elections.

NMU officials said the Coast Guard took over the Fellowcraft, which is loaded with pig iron, despite the willingness of the crew to take the ship to Detroit, where the cargo could be unloaded.

Union officials sent immediate protests to President Roosevelt, Secretary of the Navy Knox and the Commandant of the Coast Guard.

When the armed forces boarded the ship, they demanded that it be taken to sea because it contained defense materials. At a meeting of the crew, the men offered to sail it to Detroit, and continue their strike after it was unloaded.

The Coast Guard was agreeable to the proposal until the ship's captain informed them that he would not take the ship to sea with the present crew. The NMU members were then physically removed from the boat.

The S. S. Donnelly in Buffalo contained no cargo when the Coast Guard came aboard.

Win 10-Cent Raise At Plane Plant

Washington, June 28—Natl. Defense Mediation Board support of CIO steel union demands for a 10-cent-an-hour wage increase at the Curtiss Wright Co.'s Neville Island (Pa.) plant today had averted a threatened strike.

The board's proposal was accepted both by the company and the Steel Workers' Organizing Committee. The pay increases are retroactive to May 22.

The SWOC's strike deadline was postponed a week after the dispute was certified to the mediation group in Washington.

LOW EFFICIENCY

Earlier, Clinton S. Golden, SWOC regional director, had written a letter to the company pointing to widespread inefficiency on the part of management, and suggesting that if the company would heed SWOC suggestions, its savings would more than compensate for the union's pay demands.

The company manufactures airplane propellors, and Golden noted that because of defective materials a high proportion were being rejected, and that production was being held down by poor management planning.

Meanwhile, the Mediation Board reported that the W. W. Bliss Co. of Brooklyn, N. Y., manufacturers of torpedoes and naval equipment, and the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers have agreed to voluntary arbitration of a dispute over minimum pay demands. The arbitrators will be selected by the NDMB.

'No Irresponsibility':

Union Settles Apex Case; To Pay Company $110,000

PHILADELPHIA, June 28—A settlement ending the long-standing suit of the Apex Hosiery Company against Branch 1, American Federation of Hosiery Workers, CIO, certain of its officers, and the national union has been announced by Alex McKeown, national president of the hosiery union.

The agreement to end the suit, which is now in the Pennsylvania courts, provides that the union will pay to the company $110,000. Under the terms of the agreement the company cannot collect any damages from any individual member of the hosiery union.

The settlement will bring to an end a suit for $1,171,957.47 now pending against the union in the Pennsylvania courts, and another against the city for the same amount.

These state suits were initiated following the victory of the union against the company efforts to use the Sherman Anti-Trust Laws to collect treble damages in the case.

Since 1937 a closed shop contract has existed between the union and the Apex company.

McKeown pointed out that the hosiery union had, from the very start of the company's action in the Federal court, offered to arbitrate the entire question of strike damages, in a similar fashion as other disputes between the union and management have been arbitrated.

"At no time did the hosiery union ever seek to avoid its responsibility in this matter. We are too proud of our reputation, built up in 30 years, to have destroyed it through any attempt to dodge. We knew, too, that we had a responsibility to the entire labor movement with our actions in this case, and we feel, in the settlement, that we have forever answered those critics of trade unionism who delight in talking about the 'irresponsibility' of labor, without having a single fact to back up their theories.

FOUGHT DISTORTION

"Our concern in the original suit brought by the company under the Sherman act was that the company was seeking to use this case as a precedent for the establishment of a legal principle that would have been a direct attack upon the entire labor movement.

DEPARTED FOES

"In fighting the case through to the Supreme Court of the United States we were able to bring to an end any other effort to distort the anti-trust laws so that they could be used to cripple legitimate union activity.

"The Supreme Court decision in the Apex case has clarified this question, and served as the precedent for other decisions similarly exempting unions from the operations of the Sherman and Clayton Acts."

Negro Office Staff Strikes

Chicago, June 28—Negro office workers and tenants of the Mid-City Management Corp., large South Side real estate firm, walked out on strike together, June 17, in protest against low wages, high rents and bad housing. Local 24, United Office & Professional Workers, is leading the strike.

Robert Goodman, UOPWA organizer, said that the Mid-City firm which takes in about $3,000 a week, pays its office workers an average wage of $10 a week.

JUBILANT OVER PACT: Enthusiastic over the CIO United Automobile Workers' new union shop contract with Henry Ford, thousands of Ford employes ratified the agreement at a big open air meeting in Detroit last weekend. The photographer caught some of the UAW-CIO members as they "blew off steam" by carrying Michael F. Widman, Jr., Ford Organizing Committee director, around the park on their shoulders.

CIO Wins Poll At Five Plants Of Bethlehem

PITTSBURGH, June 28—The CIO Steel Workers Organizing Committee today had swept to a resounding Labor Board election victory in five plants of the Bethlehem Steel Co.

As a result of the SWOC's triumph, the five plants will be amalgamated into one collective bargaining unit, for which the company has already agreed to negotiate a wage agreement with the union.

The steel union scored its victory at the big Cambria plant in Johnstown, Pa.; at the Rankin and Leetsdale plants in Pennsylvania, and at two plants in Los Angeles, Calif.

The results:

WILL BARGAIN

Under the terms of the agreement reached by the SWOC and the company, the plants form one bargaining unit, to which the SWOC may add the Lackawanna, N. Y., works, where the union won a thumping victory two months ago.

Only remaining big Bethlehem plants outside the union fold are at Pottstown, Pa.; Bethlehem, Pa., and Sparrows Point, Md., near Baltimore.

Teamsters Moving To CIO

WASHINGTON, June 28—A widespread movement among truck drivers throughout the nation toward the CIO was developing swiftly this week as the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee sped its organizing efforts in the teeth of AFL resistance in the midwest area.

Emphasizing the vital importance to the welfare of all CIO unions of the UCWOC drive, Chairman A. D. Lewis pointed out the AFL teamsters have long been the spearhead of the AFL attack on all CIO organizing efforts.

WIRE FROM MURRAY

In Washington, meanwhile, CIO President Philip Murray congratulated members of Local 544 of the teamsters for their decision to affiliate with the CIO United Construction Workers. Murray wired to Frank Barnhart, UCWOC regional director:

"Please convey my compliments to the membership of Local Union 544 UCWOC, Minneapolis, Minn., upon their forward step in seeking affiliation with the UCWOC.

"The action taken by the membership of Local 544, and the UCWOC in chartering this local union is in complete accord with the policies of the national CIO.

"Will you please express also my hope as president of the CIO that the membership of Local 544 will be successful in relieving themselves of the yoke of servitude under which they have been laboring these past many years, and that they may successfully complete the organization of truck drivers under the banner of the CIO in Minnesota and in

Unions Send Delegates To Fight Bills

WASHINGTON, June 28 — More than 200 CIO delegates from unions all over the nation here to fight back the anti-labor drive in Congress were told by Pres. Philip Murray that they were "temporarily beating back the enemies of labor in America" but that their vigilance and energy would have to be kept up until the campaign was won.

Speaking at a meeting of the 200 union representatives in the United Mine Workers building, Murray declared:

"Not only the Congressmen but other evil-minded citizens attached to other groups are concentrating on legislation to destroy labor. They do this through the use of subtle devices as well as by frontal attack. Under the guise of patriotism they are trying to mislead the public into the impression that defense can only be successful through complete dictatorship."

The labor movement and the American people as a whole do not agree, Murray pointed out, and it is the supremely important task of the CIO to bring this message to Congress so emphatically that it cannot be denied.

"New bills to achieve this purpose are brought in from day to day," he added. "New schemes, new devices, new contraptions—all written to secure some kind of legislation to stop the progress of the CIO. Every newspaper has been filled with propaganda for these measures, designed to build up a false public opinion that will force Congress to pass at least one of these bills."

GLOOMY PICTURE

Murray praised the efforts of the CIO workers' lobby for their success in calling a temporary halt to the anti-union offensive, though he warned that the apparent retreat revealed in the shelving of the Vin-

Coal Mine Peace Question Left To Harlan Owners

WASHINGTON, June 28—The United Mine Workers today left the question of industrial peace in the southern bituminous coal fields on the doorstep of the Harlan County, Ky., Coal Operators Assn.

The UMW's international policy committee wound up a session here by directing 140,000 miners in the southern fields to refrain from work after July 7 unless the Harlan operators agree to the proposed contract, which has already been approved by 12 groups of mine owners in the southern states.

UMW Pres. John L. Lewis commented that the 14-day notice of the union's intent to close down the southern mines should "serve as a reasonable cooling-off period for the Harlan operators." The mines will close down on July 3 for a four-day vacation period, and unless agreement has been reached by the end of the holiday weekend, they will stay closed until the Harlan operators meet the UMW demands.

Lewis suggested that in the interim before the stoppage the other southern operators, railroads and "certain" banking institutions should "do something for the public weal" by urging the Harlan owners to sign the union contract.

'CAPTIVES' NOT AFFECTED

The policy committee, in announcing the threatened stoppage, ruled, however, that so-called "captive" mines owned by steel companies or electric utilities, will not be affected in order that their production may be continued for defense work.

The union's policy committee unanimously approved the statement stipulating "that in the event the southern Appalachian operators in their respective 13 mining districts fail to accept and execute the Appalachian agreement, with its supplemental understandings, by the end of the vacation period, that our members in these districts remain away from work until such an agreement is negotiated or until this policy."

VACATION PAY

The statement continued that "it is understood that any settlement reached shall provide for the vacation token payment by the southern operators, and set forth in the Appalachian agreement." The vacation payment, first in mine industry history, provides that each miner will receive $20 for the Fourth of July vacation period.

Having set forth its position and granted authority to the UMW officers to conduct the stoppage if necessary, the policy committee adjourned after a series of meetings which commenced last autumn. Contract negotiations started early in March.

Office Union Wins Polk Poll

New York, June 28—The CIO United Office & Professional Workers today had won by a 131-9 margin a Natl. Labor Relations Board election at the local office of R. L. Polk & Co., directory publishers.

Early this spring the union won a larger poll at the company's main office in Detroit, and subsequently signed a contract embodying substantial wage increases for 1,400 workers.

The employes include direct mail workers, canvassers, secretaries, shipping department employes and general office workers.

The union points to the fact that conditions in New York are similar to those which prevailed in Detroit before the contract was signed there: no paid holidays or vacations; hiring and firing without regard to length of service; no sick leave; and, for the greatest number of employes, a guaranteed weekly wage of only $12, the lowest which can be paid under the Wages and Hours law.

Cannery Workers Win Increase

Elwood, Ind., June 28—Wage increases of 10 cents an hour were won for 500 year-around and seasonal workers at the Fraziers' Packing Corporation in contract renewal negotiations just concluded here with Local 32 of the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing and Allied Workers of America. Other provisions of the contract include a union shop and check-off of union dues.

Aristocrats!

PHILADELPHIA, June 28—Name of a new AFL affiliate in Philadelphia: the Aristocrat Protective Association!

The outfit, a company union at the Philadelphia Dairy Products Co., has long been detested by the firm's employes, but AFL efforts to disestablish it never got very far.

Then the CIO stepped into the picture and organized every eligible employe.

About the same time George Craig, CIO regional director in Philadelphia, received a letter from the management of the Dairy Products Co. The company's letter announced that the "Aristocrats" had gone AFL!

HEART BROKEN

Look Behind the Label

In prohibition days all sorts of fancy labels were put on the bottles of hooch. But no matter what the labels said about the liquor's age or origin, it was usually just the same old moonshine.

The most poisonous anti-labor legislation is now being bootlegged in Congress. And each time the public gets wise to what is in it, the label is changed.

So much labor fire was centered on the notorious Vinson bill, that its sponsors decided to give the impression that it was "shelved" and to produce a supposedly new bill to do exactly the same job on labor.

The Case and Pace amendments passed by the House were so much exposed and attacked by the CIO, that the Senate committee voted against reporting them out.

But at the very same time, Speaker Rayburn declared that the May bill, recommended by the House military affairs committee, had been "given the green light."

This bill is one of the most vicious before Congress. It will avail labor nothing if other anti-labor measures are sidetracked to allow this one to pass.

It would declare striking, or doing anything to prevent scabs from entering a struck plant, to be "sabotage," punishable by five years' imprisonment or a $5,000 fine.

It would break down the protections of the Wagner act by permitting employers to fire workers who stand up for their union rights.

We must be on guard constantly against all such last-minute attempts to dish up, under new labels, the legislation that is poison to labor and democracy.

Urge your representatives in Congress, not only to vote against the Vinson, Connally, Ball and May bills, but also against any and all other bills that may be advanced to serve the same purposes.

Labor opposes any legislation (1) that embodies compulsory "cooling off" periods or any other restrictions of the right to strike; (2) that would destroy the anti-injunction act; (3) that would permit the government to seize plants and use the army for strike-breaking purposes; (4) that would establish government blacklists and "work-or starve" measures against strikers; (5) that would permit discrimination against active unionists through loosely drawn clauses supposedly directed as "subversives"; (6) that would break down the Wagner Act by permitting employers to fire strikers and other unionists; and (7) that would in any way tend to establish compulsory arbitration.

The bills against which the CIO has warned specifically include the above-mentioned attacks on labor's rights. But new bills or combinations of bills may be introduced at any time to serve the same purposes. So remember, and remind your Congressman, that it's not the label but what's in the bottle that counts.

Who Cares?

Ever since the CIO was formed, most of the press has maintained a hawk-like watch for even the faintest signs of disagreement within its ranks.

The slightest argument between two or three of its members has usually been reported as a "split." If the number involved extends beyond a dozen, the gossip-columns become filled wth imaginative tales of "internal dissension." And if the discussion reaches the point of a democratic vote, the CIO is headlined as "torn asunder."

But as to the AFL—its executive council members can engage in fist fights, whole unions can cease paying dues or quit its ranks entirely, and nobody seems to care.

At the present time, for instance, the AFL Machinists Union is believed to have ceased paying per capita to the Federation, the whole Brewery Workers union is about to be suspended, and the Intl. Typographical Union has voted by a thumping referendum majority against AFL reaffiliation.

But search as we will, we can't find a single headline about "AFL Split Wide Open," nor even one column about the names the AFL leaders are calling each other.

Maybe nobody does care whether the AFL is split or not.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

THE Ford agreement is such an astonishingly complete victory for the CIO that a lot of people are still going around pinching themselves to make sure they are not dreaming.

The news rendered Rep. Clare Hoffman speechless for a full five minutes—his all-time record.

Rep. Martin Dies was said to remark, "Ah-ha, my biggest catch yet!" as he added Henry Ford to his list of 5,000,001 CIO "Communists."

At AFL headquarters, Pres. William Green ordered another dish of sour grapes as he mulled over the following statement: "Another smashing victory for the AFL—we still have a local left somewhere." Then he crumpled it up, saying, "The last time I did this (after the General Motors election), the CIO found out where the local was and we didn't have it any more."

But it was Pres. Philip Murray of the CIO who broke the record in masterpieces of understatement with his modest announcement that the Ford contract "bespeaks substantial progress."

Throughout the country, the excitement at union gatherings knew no bounds when the news was announced.

If any employer was ever known to everyone as a last-ditch opponent of unionism and particularly of the CIO, it was Henry Ford.

To hear of Ford signing such a handsome union shop contract, with all the trimmings, was one of those thrills that comes once in a lifetime.

To the UAW it means almost complete industry-wide organization of the automobile industry.

To the whole CIO it brings assurance that no corporation can now resist its onward sweep of industrial organization.

To the outside public it brings the realization that the CIO cannot be as bad as it is painted, if the employer who has abused it most of all can accept it so completely.

It gave pause to many a politician who was being swept along on the flood-tide of anti-labor hysteria. It was a forceful reminder that the legislation many of them were supporting was directed at rapidly growing millions of union men and women, with votes to use against them.

Unquestionably it played its part in the Senate committee action to sidetrack the vicious "work-or-starve" and blacklist proposals of the Case and Pace amendments passed by the House.

But it is well to be on guard against over-confidence. For each great advance by labor brings a re-forming of lines on the part of labor's enemies, and new schemes for counter-attack.

For instance, the determined resistance of the CIO and the many signs of growing CIO strength have resulted in Congressional talk of sidetracking some of the most publicized anti-union measures and substituting for them new measures, which are even more vicious in many respects.

The new concentration on the May bill, for example, is like saying to labor, "You don't like being put on the frying pan, so we'll respect your objection and throw you into the fire."

Or, more exactly—"You object to 'work-or-starve' bills, so instead of just having active unionists fired, we'll arrange to put them in jail for five years, where they will at least have bread and water."

(The May bill would class strike activity as "sabotage," subjecting strikers to a fine of $5,000 or five years in jail.)

The moderation of Philip Murray's statement on the Ford contract is typical. But it is also significant of the CIO's attitude to all such victories.

The CIO has never yet rested on its laurels. Each of its greatest advances has been treated merely as the establishment of new bases from which further advances may be made for labor.

At the present time, the CIO is following up its Ford victory by the most intensive campaign to win similar victories with the "Little Steel" companies, and by the most widespread organizing drives in nearly every other industry as well.

As to the dear, departed (or at least departing) AFL, it just keeps on predicting "smashing victories" as it did at General Motors and Ford. Several days after the CIO election successes at most of the Harvester plants, a hot bulletin arrived in the mail from AFL headquarters, headlined "Smashing AFL Victory Predicted In International Harvester Elections."

A few more "smashing victories" like these, and the AFL will be smashed entirely!

FIGHT ANTI-LABOR BILLS: "Labor lobbyists," sent by a number of CIO unions to Washington in response to a call by CIO Pres. Philip Murray, meet at United Mine Workers headquarters before preparing to see their Congressmen and express the workers' disapproval of the current crop of reactionary, anti-labor bills. Pres. Murray (third from left in front row) addressed the meeting. Observers said the CIO's concentrated work was having a marked effect in stemming the tory tide.

Congress Anti-Laborites Shift Tactics; Bills Still Bad

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, June 28—Strategy of anti-labor leaders in Congress shifted this week with the introduction of a new anti-strike bill and the temporary shelving of three earlier ones, but the general plan to outlaw the right to strike and impose compulsory arbitration remained in full effect.

The strategy change was evident in the new Connally-May bill (HR 1524), announced by House Speaker Rayburn as having the green light for early passage, and in the simultaneous announcement that the Vinson bill would be laid back on the shelf in its favor.

The Connally-May measure, re- in its original form by CIO President Philip Murray as "a vicious anti-labor proposal which would make it a criminal act to strike in any defense industry" thus becomes the major danger to organized labor both in its provisions and in the fact that powerful Congressional leaders are publicly backing it.

Originally set for House debate June 27, the bill will now come come up on the floor July 8, according to the Speaker. CIO and Labor's Non-Partisan League officials who have been conducting the fight against the anti-labor blitz emphasized, however, that these postponements and apparent retreats were only temporary. They pointed out also that all of the measures either postponed or shelved could be called up at a moment's consideration.

PROVISIONS

The Connally-May measure, reported out by unanimous vote from the House Military Affairs Committee, was written "at the urgent request of the Army," according to the report, and is a follow-up on the Connally amendment to the conscription act passed in the Senate three weeks ago. In its main provisions, the new bill would:

1. Impose a $5,000 fine and five years in jail on anyone who tries "to prevent by force or violence or threats thereof, any person from accepting or continuing in employment in any defense plant"—which means that any picket who tried to keep strikebreakers out of a struck plant could be imprisoned.

2. Authorize the government to seize and operate any plant where a strike occurred through "subversive influences or otherwise" — which could mean any strike. This would include the power to "afford protection to all persons engaged in the operation of such plant or industry who voluntarily desire to work in such plant"—which could be used to escort strikebreakers through picket lines.

3. Deny payment of wages to any person "who is separated from or refused employment in any such plant by reason of any such order or action by the President"—which could be used to set up a blacklist of striking workers and would in effect repeal the Wagner Act, which now provides back pay for workers discharged for union activity.

STRATEGY PLUS

While the shelving of the Vinson bill and the pigeon-holing of two House proposals which would have blacklisted strikers represented a strategy move by Congressional leaders, it also reflected the heavy pressure of CIO delegates who have been visiting Congressmen in relays to protest against these and other threats to labor.

More than 200 delegates from CIO unions all over the country have been in Washington to remind the Congressmen that workers vote and that they are aroused over this attempt to abolish fundamental rights and institute forced labor in America.

The move also reflected an anxiety to sidestep the sharp criticism made of the Connally proposal, the Vinson bill and other similar anti-labor plans by President Murray, who wrote to all Congressmen earlier in the week telling them that 5,000,000 CIO members and their families expected to work and vote against such measures.

"Nothing more dangerous to the basic precepts of American democracy has been presented to Congress," Murray wrote, pointing out that forces back of these plant "falsely assume that the blame for interruptions in production rests mainly on labor, and ignore the fact that more than 80 per cent of the time lost in defense production occurred in plants still fighting against the rights of their workers to organize and bargain collectively as guaranteed through the National Labor Relations Act."

CIO STABILITY

Pointing out that the CIO has cooperated in the defense program and has stabilized labor relations where it has won contracts, Murray declared that the compulsory arbitration and other anti-labor features of the proposals would "seriously undermine established relationships which have maintained 99.5 per cent of America's defense industries in peaceful, efficient production."

Murray charged that forces trying to shove these bills through were either "tragically shortsighted" or represent "labor's ancient and bitter enemies, who use the present crisis as an excuse for the achievement of their reactionary, anti-democratic purposes."

MORE THAN EVER the right to strike is basic to all workers' rights and all freedom in the U. S. Read CIO's pamphlet "The Right to Strike —Keystone of Liberty" for the answer to reactionary attacks on your wages and your jobs. Professors Rap Tory Proposals

WASHINGTON, June 28 — An appeal to members of Congress to defeat legislative proposals that would hamstring labor and restrict its collective bargaining rights, was voiced this week by a number of college professors and research experts.

The statement, which was forwarded to members of Congress by Prof. Colston E. Warne of Amherst College, pointed out that "during the past ten years a broadened conception of the meaning of democracy has been written into American law," and that "collective bargaining between organized employers and employes has been encouraged by governmental action."

Recent proposals—among them the Vinson, Ball and May bills, which would definitely work against labor unions—would not be in the interest of the public welfare, the group declared.

"We are afraid that the emergency may impel members of Congress to vote for measures such as these which are but the latest in a long series of efforts to emasculate the National Labor Relations Act, render collective bargaining ineffective and return to a situation where the employer is the absolute dictator of industrial relations," the statement warned.

Among the signers were Prof. Dorothy Douglas of Smith College, Prof. James Esty of Purdue, Mildred Fairchild of Bryn Mawr, Max Lerner of Williams, Carl Rauschenbush of New York University and Norman Ware of Wesleyan.

son bill must not be considered a substantial victory.

"Three weeks ago the picture was gloomy," he said. "Congress could have passed any of these bills then —if it had not been for the vigilance of the CIO in sending you here. You have done a good job of telling Congress what these measures would mean to American labor.

"You have told the Congressmen that American labor could not, must not and would not accept any form of compulsory arbitration that would give the government power to regulate wages and so regulate the lives of American workers."

Such power, he added, if given by Congress to any government agency or official or leader would be the power "to tell you what kind of clothing to wear, what kind of housing to live in, what kind of food to eat, what kind of education to give your children—in a word, the power to determine life itself."

IN RELAYS

The CIO representatives have been visiting Congressmen in relays, and have to date talked to more than 350 of them, giving them the CIO message that they must work and vote against bills that would destroy the right to strike and with it destroy the labor movement.

A card index of the reactions of the Congressmen is kept, and those who require additional visits are seen by further delegations. Already the effect of this work is seen in the reactions of many Congressmen who have promised to vote against the Connally-May bill and and other anti-union proposals, but CIO and Labor's Non-Partisan League officials point out that continued watchfulness, not only by visiting delegations but by all the CIO's 5,000,000 membership, is absolutely vital to the preservation of labor's basic rights.

Ford Workers Ratify Contract; Provision Being Put Into Effect

By FRANK WINN

DETROIT, June 28—Ford workers, by an overwhelming vote, ratified their newly-won contract—the first union shop agreement in the automobile industry—and this week their bargaining committee was in daily session with company officials, taking the first steps toward putting its provisions into effect.

The agreement was received enthusiastically by the vast majority of a crowd of 20,000 Ford workers who turned out for the ratification meeting in the State Fair Coliseum in Detroit last Sunday.

First outward evidence of the agreement's effect in the plant itself is the steady parade back to their jobs of the hundreds of men named in NLRB cases against the company as discrimination cases. All of them are to be reinstated and the back wages of those in the Lincoln and Rouge cases will be submitted to arbitration, according to the settlement corollary to the signing of the contract.

OVERTIME PAY

Also beginning immediately are the overtime rates for Sunday and holiday work, as well as the 5 cents an hour bonus for afternoon and midnight shift workers.

Seniority, the steward system and grievance procedure, as set up by the contract, are in effect although it will take a few weeks to set up the necessary machinery for these processes of collective bargaining.

Other minor details of the contract are being ironed out and departmental and building committees are starting immediately on the job of negotiating specific improvements covered by the general clauses relating to sanitation, health, safety and other conditions.

RESEARCH JOB FOR UAW

Biggest job before the negotiating committee is the matter of wages. Under the contract the company agrees to at least equal the rates paid by the companies paying the highest rates for similar operations.

This will be a tremendous research job, for in the Rouge plant alone the operations extend far outside the automobile industry. Steel, cement, glass and rubber are some of the industries in which a comparison will have to be found.

Fifty thousand Rouge employes have already benefitted by union organization since last January by wage increases of from 5 to 30 cents an hour, totaling $18,000,000 a year.

Even so, most Ford workers will receive additional increases under the terms of the contract.

RAISES RETROACTIVE

All increases are retroactive to the date of the ratification of the contract, so the Ford workers are content to allow the committee to complete its exhaustive research job, knowing that those of them who receive increases will get a fat check for back wages when they go into effect.

The seniority list will not be completed for nearly 60 days, but the contract provisions covering this point protect Ford workers beginning immediately.

MOPPING UP

The UAW-CIO Ford Organizing Committee is losing no time in mopping up the organizational job in plants outside of Detroit. Organizers are already assigned to the approximately one dozen small towns near Detroit where Ford plants are operating—the so-called "village industries." Several thousand Ford workers are employed in these plants and the UAW-CIO is already prepared to show membership cards proving a substantial majority in most of these plants.

Several members of the organizing staff have gone to St. Louis to complete the job there, while a committee of Ford workers in the Boston plant have already called a meeting to elect officers and apply for a UAW-CIO charter. They did not want to wait until an organizer could be dispatched there.

Reveal Terms Of Ford-NLRB Settlement

Washington, June 28—More complete details of the settlement of outstanding Labor Board cases involving the Ford Motor Co. were announced by Robert Watts, NLRB general counsel. The cases were closed shortly before Ford signed his union shop contract with the CIO United Automobile Workers.

The company will comply fully with two cases, involving the Dearborn, Mich., and Dallas, Tex., plants, where the Circuit Courts of Appeal have already sustained the NLRB. Twenty-three men will be rehired with full pay at Dearborn and two in Dallas.

OTHER PLANTS

In five other plants, the company will enter circuit court consent of enforcement decrees. At Long Beach, Calif., the firm will reinstate 278 men; at Richmond, Calif., 143 men; at Buffalo, N. Y., 37 men. Back pay claims will be settled by payment of 90% of the money due the workers.

At Kansas City, 975 reinstated, and at St. Louis 95 employes, with the men getting 80% of their back pay claims. The company will rehire 253 workers at Detroit and 26 at Edgewater, N. J., with the back pay claims subject to arbitration.

In six other cases where the union has charged discrimination, some 2,148 workers will be restored to their jobs. The plants involved are Detroit, Kansas City, Long Beach and Milwaukee. The back pay claims will be arbitrated.

Truck Drivers Swinging Toward CIO Membership

other parts of the United States."

In chartering the powerful teamsters Local 544 in Minneapolis, Chairman Lewis said, "The UCWOC has gone far to remove AFL attempts to interfere with CIO organizing campaigns. Removal of the threat of AFL teamsters' opposition to CIO unions," Lewis added, "leaves the way open for more aggressive and widespread organizing by CIO affiliates generally.

"In accepting Local 544 into membership," Lewis continued, "the UCWOC took a long step forward toward its goal of building a powerful industrial union in the construction industry. It should be noted that all UCWOC locals conform to the national policy of the CIO and are always ready to assist other CIO affiliates in organizing.

"It is our aim to clean up the construction industry and free its workers from the exploitation and abuses tolerated by the AFL for so many years. The trend is definitely toward the CIO among construction workers and the swinging over of the big Minneapolis teamsters group is but the latest manifestation of this situation."

That the AFL teamsters were considerably disturbed by the switch in affiliation of the 5,000 members of Local 544 was indicated in a telegraphed report to Chairman Lewis from UCWOC Regional Director Frank Barnhart who is in Minneapolis.

Barnhart reported that a large number of AFL organizers had been sent into Minneapolis and were trying by strong-arm methods to force the UCWOC members to return to the AFL teamsters.

AFL DESPERATE

Amid threats of a boycott of CIO materials, Tobin's agents were working in open collusion with certain employer groups to try and smash Local 544. Headed by AFL General Counsel Padway, a battery of lawyers was leading a legal assault on the union.

WANT ELECTION

Telling of counter action by Local 544, Barnhart said:

"Tobin's international and the whole AFL are mobilized to smash Local 544 CIO in Minneapolis and thus crush in one overwhelming brutal assault the popular movement of truckdrivers throughout the nation toward the CIO. In the face of these overwhelming odds Local 544 CIO in Minneapolis is putting up a magnificent struggle and has stronger moral support than ever of the rank and file."

Fed Up With AFL:

Union Official Resigns To Aid CIO Teamsters

MINNEAPOLIS, June 28—In sharp protests against the tactics of the AFL Teamsters against the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee members in Minneapolis, an international organizer of the AFL Brotherhood of Electrical Workers has resigned and thrown in his forces with the CIO.

Saying he is convinced that the craft union setup belongs to the past, H. A. Schultz wrote Michael J. Boyle, Intl. Vice-President of the IBEW a sizzling letter in which he exposed Tobin's gangster methods and severed his connections of many years standing with the AFL.

Schultz said in his letter:

"I have been working as an International Organizer under your directions for the past three years. As far as personal relations with you are concerned, they have always been satisfactory and I have nothing to complain of on that score.

"The reasons for my action concern fundamental questions of trade-union policy. My experiences convince me to the hilt that the craft-union setup belongs to the past and that the great mass of the under-paid and exploited workers require and demand a more modern form of industrial organization, which they are finding in the CIO.

"This has been clear to me for some time but I still nourished the hope that I might do my bit to serve the workers and improve their conditions with the framework of the AFL.

TURNS THE STOMACH

"I can no longer entertain this hope. Last night I attended a meeting in Minneapolis under the auspices of Tobin's International Union of Teamsters-AFL. What I saw there was enough to turn the stomach of any loyal union man.

"Tobin and his agents, like similar bureaucratic formations in other international unions of AFL, have never been able to conduct a militant fight against the bosses, or even to get a real mobilization of their forces for such a fight. This meeting in Minneapolis was not a fight against the bosses, but against the rank and file of workers of the strongest, most militant and most honest union in the Northwest—Local 544."

Labor and the Law:

A New Attack On the Poll Tax

By LEE PRESSMAN
CIO General Counsel

The polltax in force in eight southern states disfranchises millions of American citizens, both white and Negro, who do not earn enough money to pay for the right to vote.

Congressmen from polltax states are elected by as little as five percent of the voters, which helps to explain their leading role in pushing anti-labor bills through Congress. They are not responsible to the people back home most affected by these bills—the workers and farmers—and consequently they have little to fear in taking the most extreme reactionary positions. Workers and farmers in polltax states don't vote, and "their" Congressmen feel perfectly secure in fronting for big business in its current drive against the rights of labor.

Bills to abolish the polltax have been introduced in Congress, but they have been blocked so far by the polltax Congressmen who would lose most by free elections in their home states. They have been able to do this because the polltaxers are in control of im-important Congressional committees where they have shelved anti-polltax bills.

ATTACKED IN COURTS

A second front in the attack on the polltax was opened recently in the courts, when suit was filed against the state of Tennessee in the name of Henry Pirtle, who was denied the right to vote when he failed to pay the tax. The case is now before the U. S. Supreme Court.

The main basis for the case is the fact that the U. S. Constitution specifically provides that the right to vote is one conferred by the U. S.—that is, the right to vote cannot be conferred by the states. Only a few days ago the Supreme Court reaffirmed this doctrine in the Classic case.

Another basic argument in the Pirtle case is the fact that the 14th Amendment to the U. S. Constitution prohibits any state from making or enforcing any law which abridges the privileges and immunities of citizens of the U. S. Obviously a state polltax law that interferes with the right to vote is an interference with the rights of U. S. citizens. For this reason, therefore, the polltax in Tennessee is unconstitutional and invalid.

DEMOCRACY IN THE SOUTH

The Pirtle case is one of the most important before the Supreme Court at the present time. If the Tennessee polltax is held unconstitutional, such a decision will eliminate all the other polltaxes in the Southern states. The effect of this development would be to bring democracy to the South for the first time since the polltaxes were fastened on the Southern workers and farmers.

The Southern workers and farmers are wise to the labor-hating Congressmen who pretend to represent them now. Given the chance, they will sweep them into the wastebasket. They know that these big business agents are in Congress for themselves and the anti-labor forces they front for, not for the welfare of the people.

They also know that attacks on labor promoted by these polltaxers are attacks on the whole nation, including themselves. They know that low wages and poverty of the South are due to lack of organization and to reactionary control of southern economy.

The polltax Congressmen stand for sweatshop wages, for hunger, disease, for the misery of the sharecroppers and the sweated workers in Southern industries. They would like to fasten these same conditions on workers and farmers everywhere—which is why they are pressing so hard now for the anti-labor measures currently up in Congress.

Once the polltax is removed, these Southern workers and farmers will vote these so-called representatives of the people out of existence.

This new leaflet issued by the CIO Publicity Department gives the low-down on anti-labor bills, and tells how to fight them. Order from the Publicity Dept., CIO, 1106 Connecticut Avenue, Washington, D. C. 100 copies for 40c; 1,000 for $3.75.

Shoe Union Protest Halts U. S. Order To Law-Flouter

Washington, June 28—A protest against relaxation of enforcement of labor laws in defense industries today held up a large Army Quartermaster order for shoes from the Endicott-Johnson Co. of upstate New York.

The company was to have received the order June 26, but a protest to the OPM by Leo Goodman, research director of the United Shoe Workers of America, brought a promise of delay pending further investigation.

Goodman charged that the Endicott-Johnson Co. had violated the Walsh-Healey law, which fixes a wage minimum of 40 cents an hour. A complaint was made against the company for violation of the minimum wage requirement in the fall of 1939 and has been pending for more than a year in Federal Judge Frederick H. Bryant's court.

On the ground that the company has deliberately delayed settlement of the case, Goodman insisted that it was not eligible for government orders. Donald Nelson of the OPM promised to consider the protest and meanwhile to hold up the Endicott-Johnson order.

Organizing

Director of Organization, CIO

BULLETIN—Results of the Bethlehem elections, won overwhelmingly by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, are in. They tell the same story told a thousand times—the workers want CIO.

With the Ford Agreement negotiated, ratified and signed we now move on to other important problems.

June 24th I was called upon to meet on the New York transit situation, and on Wednesday met with the officers of the Board of Transportation, New York City, assisting the Transportation Workers Union in their struggle to maintain their hard-earned right of collective bargaining.

Frank Sullivan, AFL attorney and member of the city Board of Transportation, very graciously told us the Board would listen to anything we had to say on wage rate adjustment, but would not bargain collectively in the understood sense of collective bargaining; neither would they sign any contract. But the members of the Board assured us in their all-wise manner they would look into any suggestion we would make in their own good way—namely, the typical anti-union way of all anti-union concerns.

In behalf of the CIO I called upon the Board to sit down and bargain collectively in good faith, to endeavor to work out an amicable agreement that would insure uninterrupted operation of the subways. I proposed a continuation of the same degree of union recognition that has operated for more than a year now under city ownership, pending final judicial interpretation of the issues involved, the Board of Transportation having resorted to the courts to ascertain whether or not they can sign a union contract. This resort to the courts has not been done in a friendly spirit, but with the hope that they will get a ruling enabling them to get rid of the Transport Workers Union as the sole collective bargaining agency. The union had established this right in the real American way by an election. I was supported in this proposal by President Michael Quill and Attorney Harry Sacher. The plea was denied.

DISCUSSION FUTILE

The futility of continuing discussion was apparent to all under such circumstances. The responsibility for anything that may happen now rests squarely upon the New York City Board of Transportation and Mayor LaGuardia. This controversy can be settled in a peaceful and constructive manner. It is up to the Mayor to see that it is done. The CIO has pointed out the way. Other cities operating transportation lines, as well as the federal Government on industrial enterprises in which it is engaged, such as the TVA, have entered into similar agreements.

In the interest of national defense, and with proper respect for genuine collective bargaining, it is essential that this problem be concluded in the manner suggested by the CIO. To Mayor LaGuardia, we say, labor and the nation await your answer, and expect you to be consistent with your proclamations and past record. Proper union recognition and sincere collective bargaining will settle it.

A union car must have union-made tires. It would be well for the Good-year Tire and Rubber Company to keep this in mind in negotiations which started Thursday of this week for a contract. If they are wise, they will follow the example set by the Ford Motor Company, because only CIO builds automobiles.

President Samuel Wolchok and Secretary John Cooney of the United Retail, Wholesale, and Department Store Employees of America, CIO, are now negotiating a contract with The Fair department store in Chicago, Illinois, involving more than 1600 workers. Splendid progress is reported from the conference room.

Recently this organization consummated an agreement with the Consolidated Biscuit Company of Chicago, employing 500 workers, providing for a closed shop. At the Charms Candy Company of Newark, New Jersey, they also obtained a closed shop agreement.

Director Walter Harris, in charge of the drive in the Shoe Industry reports the installation of 10 charters since the drive began, two in Manchester, New Hampshire; two in Hannibal, one in Windsor, one in Washington, two in St. Louis, all in Missouri; and one in Vincennes, Indiana.

The Brown Shoe Company has agreed to recognize the spokesmen for the union in each of their departments, pending determination of collective bargaining agency through an election. Also, the International Shoe Company has agreed to recognize the union representatives in the Hannibal, Missouri, area.

Regional Director Hugh Thompson, Buffalo, reports an election at the Hewitt Rubber Company, with a vote of 548 for the United Rubber Workers of America, and 241 for the company union. He also reports that at the Irving Air Chute Company, manufacturers of parachutes used by various governments in the world, every worker signed up with the union.

Indiana, Virginia CIO Council Hold Meetings

MUNCIE, Ind., June 28 — Some 800 delegates and visitors from all parts of the state attended the fourth annual convention of the Indiana CIO Industrial Union Council which met here last week-end to plan a program and elect officers for the coming year. James Robb, who has headed the Indiana Council for three years, presided.

James McEwan of the United Automobile Workers in South Bend was elected president and Walter Frisbie, Oil Workers International Union, East Chicago, Ind., was elected secretary-treasurer. The new vice-president is Tom Davis, United Mine Workers, Terre Haute.

The conference called for the promotion of a union drive throughout the state; condemned the use of troops to break strikes and warned of the need of unions to take vigorous steps to protect their civil liberties and safeguard the gains already made from the attacks of anti-union forces.

MURRAY WIRES

In a message of greeting read to the delegates, CIO President Philip Murray said: "The CIO has undertaken the heavy responsibility of offering wise guidance to its members in this critical period. Your Council will, I know, continue to carry its share of the burden and will go forward in offering its services to more and more members."

The convention later paid tribute to President Murray at a testimonial dinner attended by more than 250 persons.

Speakers who addressed the convention included Powers Hapgood, representing the national CIO office; Ora Gasaway, executive board member of the United Mine Workers and state president of Labor's Non-Partisan League in Indiana; O. M. Knight, president of the Oil Workers International, and Ted Silvey, secretary-treasurer of the Ohio CIO Council.

BOARD MEMBERS

Members elected to serve on the executive board for 1941 were: Adama Mair, United Mine Workers; Jack Mansfield, United Automobile Workers; G. B. Murphy, Packinghouse Workers; Arthur Batley, United Construction Workers; Frank Napolitano, Amalgamated Clothing Workers; Charles Flemming, Oil Workers; Frank Douthitt, United Federal Workers; Sam Baumgartner, United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers; Marie Talbot, State, County and Municipal Workers; Reece Warmoth, Steel Workers; Richard Marhanka, Farm Equipment Workers, and Marion Cunnington, United Retail and Wholesale Workers.

ROANOKE, Va., June 28 — Demands for greater political recognition of the growing strength of the CIO and for abolition of the poll-tax featured the convention of the Virginia Industrial Union Council, held here over last week-end. Some 100 delegates attended, representing more than 40,000 CIO members in the state.

The convention condemned Governor James H. Price for not giving labor adequate representation in the state defense commission. It also denounced Commissioner of Labor Thomas Morton for not giving the CIO proper consideration in his appointments.

Stating that labor had been slighted and ignored, Pres. Ray Thomason declared that political leaders "are always appealing for labor to cooperate, but they give labor no opportunity of cooperating through the representation to which it is entitled."

The convention gave its backing to the Geyer anti-poll tax bill, which would eliminate the poll tax as a prerequisite in voting for federal offices. It also passed a strong resolution against any discrimination in defense employment on account of age, creed or color.

THOMASON REELECTED

Ray Thomason was reelected president of the Virginia Industrial Union Council, and Lloyd P. Vaughan, secretary-treasurer. John Kabler of the Roanoke textile workers ran against Thomason, but was defeated by a vote of 62 to 38.

The delegates were stirred to great enthusiasm when the news of the Ford union shop contract with the CIO was brought to them Friday afternoon by Len De Caux, CIO Publicity Director and editor of The CIO News. Cheers and whistles greeted the terms of the history-making agreement as they were related.

De Caux warned, however, that the very magnitude of CIO successes at the present time was resulting in one of the most vicious counter-attacks ever made against labor, on the legislative field.

"Bottlenecks in production are caused in Washington and Wall Street, not by the CIO," he said. "But those who are out to do a job on labor have put out a smokescreen of propaganda about strikes, behind which they are moving to take away all of labor's democratic rights."

Other convention speakers included George Moorhouse, international representative of the Textile Workers Union, who told of organizing progress; David C. George of the Southern Electoral Reform League, who dealt with state efforts to abolish the poll tax; Russell Turner of the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee; W. C. Cole, regional wage-hour administrator; and Helen Borchardt of the Social Security Board.

CIO Growing In Louisiana, Confab Hears

New Orleans, La., June 28—Membership in CIO unions in this area has increased by more than 10,000 since June 1939, F. C. Pieper, CIO regional director, reported to an annual regional conference held here June 15, attended by some 200 officers and committeemen of local unions in the city.

Of the 26 locals now functioning here, 20 have been chartered since June 1939, Pieper said, while firms under contract have increased from 11 in 1939 to 54 today. He also reported that 43 out of 48 Labor Board elections had been won, and 19 out of 24 strikes called had ended successfully.

The conference called for the setting up of central legislative and educational committees through which the regional office and the Industrial Union Council will work, and laid plans for the first CIO Labor Day parade to be held in New Orleans.

BOARD TO MEET

Columbus, O.—The International Executive Board of the CIO Federation of Glass, Ceramic & Silica Sand Workers will meet here July 14.

Quaker Oats Votes CIO

They voted by a 493-214 margin for the United Cereal Workers Local Industrial Union as their sole bargaining agency, according to Ben Henry, CIO regional director. Negotiations for contracts will get under way shorty.

Fulton Named To Delaware CIO Post

Wilmington, Del., June 28—The duties of CIO Regional Director for the Delaware area were taken over this week by Fullerton Fulton, it was announced here today.

Fulton, assigned to the Delaware office by the national CIO office in Washington, was previously connected with the Springfield, Illinois, headquarters of the CIO in the capacity of Field Representative.

He is a member of the United Mine Workers of America, CIO, of which organization he was for many years a member of a District Executive Board. Fulton replaces former Regional Director Don Harris, who was recently assigned to take charge of the Connecticut Valley organizing drive of the Intl. Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers in Watrbury, Conn.

CIO Conference To Map Drive

Wilmington, June 28—Plans for a "vigorous renewal" of organizing activities for Delaware will be mapped out at the first annual Delaware CIO Conference on Sunday, July 13, it was announced today by the New Castle County Industrial Union Council, CIO affiliate sponsoring the conference.

Gene Derrickson, secretary of the Council, declared today that the conference will "launch a mass organizing drive to bring the benefits of CIO unionism to the thousands of Delaware workers who are still unorganized.

At least sixteen local CIO unions will be represented at the Conference, which will meet at the new CIO headquarters at 17 East Third Street in Wilmington. Representatives of the eleven CIO unions which have local units are also expected to be present.

CIO Backs Union Demand That City Renew Contracts

NEW YORK, June 28—Responsibility for "anything that happens" after contracts between the city and the Transport Workers Union, CIO, expire will rest on the shoulders of the Board of Transportation, Michael J. Quill, TWU president, announced after a fruitless meeting with the Board here.

The union delegation, led by National CIO Director Allan S. Haywood, Pres. Quill and other TWU officials, and consisting of 32 union men each representing some 1,000 workers, called on the Board to demand recognition of collective bargaining and renewal of contracts won when the lines were privately owned.

The Board's answer, a flat "no negotiations, no contracts" would be taken to the workers in a series of membership meetings called to consider further action, Quill said when the meeting was over. "Then we have no other choice but to report back to our membership on the events of this meeting," he said. "Anything that happens from then on will rest on the Board's shoulders."

STRIKE VOTE

Faced by the stubborn attitude of the Transportation Board, the TWU meanwhile began conducting strike votes among the various divisions of the subway lines.

In the first such vote, about 5,000 employes of the IRT and IND day shifts showed overwhelming favor for the walkout if the city refuses to meet the union's demand for collective bargaining and a renewed contract.

Pres. Quill told the men that up until the zero hour at midnight, June 30, the union officers and Haywood would make every effort "to get Mayor LaGuardia to recognize the subway workers' claim to collective bargaining.

FULL CIO AID

Full aid from the entire national CIO was pledged again by Director Haywood, who told the Board that President Murray had instructed him to work with the TWU until the dispute was settled.

"The national CIO is deeply concerned with this situation," Haywood said. "President Murray personally asked me to come to this meeting. President Murray has endeavored in many ways to take the heat out of this situation. He has, together with officers of the TWU, made repeated appeals that this controversy be settled peacefully and honorably, in the American way, through the process of bona fide colective bargaining."

Declaring that the refusal of the city to either honor the contracts or negotiate for their renewal would rob the workers of their union and "would border on fascism," Haywood pointed out that the CIO had met and signed contracts with private employers that had sought to behave in the same high-handed way, citing the Ford contract as an example.

"We do not consider what you want to do here collective bargaining," he said. "Private corporations once sought to deal with labor in this high-handed way, typified by Henry Ford and Tom Girdler. Well, we've just completed an agreement with Ford, and Girdler, too, will soon sign with the CIO.

"I was in negotiations with the Ford Co. for three weeks. The Ford Co. recognized the trend of events and met us fairly and squarely. There'll be no interruptions in the Ford plants now. We look for the Board of Transportation permitting the same kind of peaceful settlement here."

QUESTION PUT

Quill put the question squarely to the Board when he declared: "We came here prepared to negotiate on wages, hours and working conditions and for renewal of the labor agreements. We came here to deal with management as labor and management should deal with each other. We want to know whether the Board is prepared to meet us in this fair, peaceful and honorable way."

It was this question that drew the Board's flat reply: "No negotiations, no contracts."

TWU officials pointed out that despite a year's operation by the city, conditions on the lines are markedly below proper standards, in wages, hours and other conditions. Principal demands of the TWU are for equal pay for equal work, reduction of hours from 48 and more per week to 44 and 40, depending on the amount now worked, and a basic $1.00 per day wage raise.

"Transit workers, like all other American workers, have begun to feel the pinch of the rising cost of living," they said. "Their situation is, however, aggravated by the fact that their wages have been further cut by amounts ranging from 5 to 8 per cent for pension contribution. We, therefore, demand that the city pay all contributions to the pension fund which empoyes are now required to pay."

INDUSTRY RAISES PAY

Private industry has been increasing wages as the result of CIO demands, they pointed out, and government can do no less. Ample revenue exists as the result of economies through unification of the lines by city ownership, and the city can well afford to maintain decent wages and conditions on one of New York's largest industries.

PICKET TRANSIT BOARD: Members of the CIO Transport Workers Union turned out by the thousand to picket the New York City Board of Transportation, backing up the union's demand that the city bargain with the union for a new contract covering the city-owned subway lines. Members of other CIO and AFL unions joined the demonstration, then heard TWU leaders predict success in their fight for pact protection.

Guild Hears Report Of Gains; Raps Anti-Labor Bills

DETROIT, June 27—A record of a year of membership growth and of collective bargaining victories which put hundreds of thousands of dollars in wage increases into the pockets of newspaper workers was placed before the eighth annual convention of the American Newspaper Guild in Detroit this week by its International Executive Board.

The convention, held from June 23 through June 27, was attended by nearly 200 delegates from locals directly representing more than 90 per cent of the guild's 17,000 members among employes of editorial and business departments of news publications and wire services.

As had been expected, the convention developed a contest between supporters of the present administration, headed by President Donal Sullivan of Boston and executive Vice-President Milton Kaufman and Secretary-Treasurer Victor Pasche, and a group which tried unsuccessfully to unseat the administration at the 1940 convention.

A motion to censure handling of three stories printed in the Guild Reporter, ANG paper, during the last year, and to declare that the Reporter had been guilty of following the Communist Party line, was defeated, 80 to 91. A motion commending the editor of the paper, Fred Myers, was adopted subsequently by voice vote. An earlier vote on a minor question had given the administration forces an 80 to 86 majority.

Caucuses of both pro and anti-administration groups agreed to alter the Guild's constitution to provide that officers of the Guild, including 10 vice-presidents, hereafter shall be elected by referendum of the entire membership instead of at conventions as in the past.

Despite the hot contest for office which colored the convention, the delegates united in a large number of important and progressive actions.

By unanimous vote, they communicated to Congress and Pres. Roosevelt their opposition to any version of the Vinson Bill and the May-Connally amendment to the Selective Service Act, and promised support to the Transport Workers Union in their fight to gain collective bargaining with the City of New York.

Many other similar resolutions were scheduled to come before the convention on the last day of its session.

Sullivan, Kaufman, Pasche and a majority of their fellow members of the International Executive Board are candidates for re-election.

The opposition group named a slate composed of Milton Murray of Detroit for President; Sam Eubanks, San Francisco, for Executive Vice-President; and William Rodgers, Washington, for Secretary-Treasurer.

Dies Slanders Protested by Union Officials

Washington, June 28—Vigorous protests against their being listed as "Communists" by the Dies Committee were made public today by two CIO union officials—Joseph Cannon, chairman of the Distillery Workers Organizing Committee, and Nicholas Fontecchio, district director of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee in Baltimore.

Cannon wrote to Rep. Martin Dies that "I am not a Communist, nor a fellow traveler of Communists. I do not follow the Communist party line." He added that "I have never attended a Communist meeting, closed or open; I have never contributed to a Communist cause; never bought a Communist paper or magazine, nor have any more use for Communists or Communist fellow travelers than I have for Dies or Dies fellow travelers."

Fontecchio noted that his name had twice appeared in newspaper stories as being a Communist, but, he added, "I want to assure you that I don't belong to or pay tribute to any political party." Citing his association is with the United Mine Workers, of which he has been a member for 39 years, Fontecchio flatly denied the charges.

Organizing The Unorganized:

New York's 'Backyard' Sees CIO Gains

NEW YORK, June 28—A creek forms part of the boundary between the Borough of Queens and that of Brooklyn in New York City. Newtown Creek is of little importance to Brooklyn, of much to Queens.

Down the four-mile tidal inlet opposite Manhattan's 34th Street, floats a volume and value of traffic greater than that carried along the whole length of the Mississippi River! In 1936, 6,330,000 tons worth $156,000,000 were loaded into the barges that ply the stream. They served such plants as the Phelps Dodge Corporation's giant electrolytic copper refineries and the sugar plant of the National Sugar Company (Jack Frost) as well as the more typical small Queens factory.

The point is that Queens is a mighty industrial community turning out nearly half a billion dollars worth of goods each year from its 1360 manufacturing plants. To the trade unionist, it is more important to know that Queens is a stubborn fortress of the Open Shoppers within the corporate body of a highly union-conscious town: New York City.

POLITICIAN RAVES

The cultural flavor of the open shop in Queens can be tasted by sampling some of the frothy utterances of Borough President George U. Harvey. Recently, Queens' half-pint Hitler told the county Veterans of Foreign Wars, "Although I didn't help elect President Roosevelt, I hope he won't hold that against me when the time comes to appoint concentration camp directors."

That kind of government has kept Queens a concentration camp for industrial workers ever since the borough was created in 1898.

The labor enthusiasm that gave rise to the CIO did not penetrate Queens to the same extent, perhaps, as in the centers of heavy industry elsewhere in the country. Queens is a community of plants employing from ten to three hundred workers with but few larger establishments. It turns out consumer and light durable goods.

Nevertheless, the stir in heavy industry caused a minor "explosion" in a medium-sized Queens plant in 1937. A spontaneous strike at the Etched Products Company, set things off.

Against the three hundred workers the full force of Queens vigilante-minded Open Shop organization was mobilized. There were arrests and persecutions; the Sanitation Department was induced to declare the building uninhabitable so that force could be used to evict the sitdown strikers. But the spirit of the workers infected all of Queens labor and spread beyond the borough's bounds.

The bulk of Queens labor remained unorganized. While benefitting from the drive in increased pay and improved working conditions, they failed—in most cases—to consolidate their gains by establishing and obtaining recognition for, a strong union.

THE 1941 DRIVE

By 1941 the CIO had become a major institution in the nation's life, and the ferment was being felt in Queens to the last little plant employing ten hands.

The demand for unions came from local workers and the CIO drive began in widely scattered plants. Because the plants were small and a score of CIO international unions were represented only by small locals in Queens, there was a demand for assistance. The Greater New York Industrial Council set up a coordinating committee to bind local initiatives together and create a major organizing drive from within.

The committee set up shop on February 8. In three months the drive had affected over 10,000 Queens workers. Of these, 2,268 were completely organized; organization had begun for 4,170; contract had been made with 3,975 more. On April 25 the first CIO mass meeting ever held in Queens was staged at the Woodside Labor Temple. Among the hundreds of small plants the work of organization, demanding enormous labor and an incredible volume of detail work, moved toward completion.

It is too early to brag, but the right direction has been taken and this time the perspective is to make open shop Queens a union town. With sufficient alertness to the new dangers in the present situation, the workers of Queens will succeed in their effort.

Murray Calls CIO Conference To Resist Anti-Labor Bills

MESSENGER GIRLS: Here's another reason for having Postal Telegraph handle your messages. In addition to having a contract with the CIO American Communications Assn., the firm has started to use pretty girl messengers in Baltimore. Company officials said the boys are either being drafted or getting jobs in defense industries.

Asks All Unions to Send Delegates to July 7 Meeting

WASHINGTON, July 5—CIO mobilized its full resources to fight anti-labor legislation pending in Congress when President Philip Murray issued a call to all national affiliates and state Councils to send representatives to a conference here called for July 7.

President Murray's call to the conference pointed out that a "tremendous effort is being put forth by the enemies of organized labor to secure the enactment of repressive legislation designed to destroy the effectiveness of labor in America," and this must be met with all possible resistance from the CIO.

The meeting will bring six representatives from each of 43 national and international unions and organizing committees, and two from each of 32 state Councils. It will take place the day before the Connally-May bill is scheduled to go on the House floor. This bill provides for seizure of struck plants, heavy criminal penalties for pickets, a blacklist of striking workers, and other anti-union measures.

Quaker Oats Plant Ready To Bargain

CEDAR RAPIDS, Iowa, July 5—Contract negotiations will soon be started with the Quaked Oats management, following a decisive NLRB election victory for United Cereal Workers Local Industrial Union, Regional Director Ben Henry announced today.

Since the election, which the CIO union carried by a 493 to 214 majority, 75 more employes have joined the union.

SAME OLD AFL

Commenting on disruptive tactics of the AFL, which attempted unsuccessfully to forestall the poll, Henry declared:

"The AFL in Cedar Rapids said that the Quaker Oats workers could not be organized, just as their discredited president, William Green, said that the Ford workers could not be organized. We have had the same experience with the Quaker Oats as the automobile workers had with Ford, only in a smaller way.

"The eyes of other workers in Cedar Rapids have been on the Quaker Oats employes," he declared, "and since the election a lot of enthusiasm is being shown by workers in other plants. We are going into an organizing drive in Cedar Rapids with the thought of making it one of the best CIO towns in the United States."

CANNERY PACT

Los Angeles, July 5 — Largest peach cannery in California, the Sanitary Canning Company, signed a union shop contract with wage increases running from 7½ cents to 12½ cents per hour, it was announced here today by President Elmo Parra of Local 75, UCAPAWA, CIO.

MAN THE BOATS!: When city officials in Tonawonda, N. Y., wouldn't grant United Automobile Workers leaders a sound truck permit for a pre-election campaign at the local Chevrolet plant, the union hired a boat instead. Here are Regional Director Peter J. Zanghi (at the mike) and Intl. Rep. Joe Sayen cruising along the Niagara River and urging "landlubbing" auto workers to vote CIO. They did—by a 2,160-626 margin.

Signs of the Times

CLEVELAND, July 5—The Cleveland Industrial Union Council today moved into its own building—one which had been given up by the local AFL because it could no longer afford the maintenance cost.

The Labor Temple will be formally dedicated on Labor Day, but meanwhile offices of a number of CIO affiliates have been moved into the spacious edifice, which originally was the Moose Hall. The building has no less than 10 meeting rooms, with the largest seating about 2,000 people.

First convention to be held in the new CIO building will be that of the National Maritime Union, which opens July 7.

TORONTO, Ont., July 5—Internment of C. S. Jackson, Canadian vice-president of the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers' Union, along with 14 other union members, on the eve of his trial for "illegally participating in a strike" contrary to the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, aroused the wrath of unions across the Dominion last week.

The day before he was to appear in court, Jackson was taken to a concentration camp for what the Royal Canadian Mounted Police described as "subversive strike activities." Almost at the same time, a millionaire Italian whose support of Mussolini was never disguised was released, after Ontario's labor-hating Premier Hepburn made an appeal on his behalf.

Jackson's internment followed a recent demand by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association that "subversive labor leaders" be interned. In transporting Jackson to "Somewhere in Ontario" without delay, the police violated a promise given by Minister of Justice Lapointe before the House of Commons adjourned several weeks ago. Lapointe agreed to put into effect minor amendments to the Defense of Canada Regulations which provided, among other things, that persons interned should remain in their city until an appeal tribunal had time to hear their case.

Even after the tribunal has heard the appeal, the Minister can still deny freedom, and has done so on many occasions on the basis of evidence submitted by secret papers of the R.C.M.P. and other agents.

SIGN PETITIONS

Ottawa was flooded with protests last week from CIO and AFL unions demanding that he be given a trial on the charges preferred against him, including one of "inciting workers to strike illegally" in Canadian General Electric plants. Hundreds of GE workers have signed petitions denying that he incited them to strike, and pointed out that they took this action themselves after the company refused to bargain collectively.

Jackson was regarded as one of Canada's militant labor leaders, and he was given considerable credit for initiating a campaign exposing Order-in-Council 7440, which freezes wages at 1926-29 levels, even if they averaged 30 cents an hour in that period. The campaign resulted in the measure being condemned by the greater portion of Canadian labor.

WIRE TO CHURCHILL

The day after his internment, 1,000 workers in the Canadian Westinghouse plant at Hamilton took a 24-hour holiday to discuss the situation. UE Local 507, to which the GE workers belong, sent a cable to Prime Minister Churchill protesting "the undemocratic actions of the Dominion government. As the leader in our struggle against Naziism, we strongly urge you to protest against this action on the part of the Canadian government.

"We can only interpret such actions as an attempt to smash the trade union movement in our country. We Canadian workers are determined, with you, to defend democracy by keeping Hitlerism out of Canada," the cable concluded.

Newspaper Guild Orders Referendum Elections

DETROIT, July 5—The American Newspaper Guild wound up its eighth annual convention here last Friday, after resolving to extend the term of its present officers to November 1. Prior to that date the first election of officers by referendum vote will be held. Heretofore officers have been elected at conventions.

President Donal M. Sullivan, Executive Vice Pres. Milton Kaufman and Secretary-Treasurer Victor Pasche were nominated at the convention as candidates for re-election. An opposition slate was also nominated, including Milton Murray for president, Sam Eubanks for executive vice president, and William Rodgers for secretary-treasurer.

The action to retain the present officers pending the results of the referendum was taken by a vote of 91½ to 80½.

VOTE OF CONFIDENCE

Earlier the convention had recorded its confidence in Kaufman by a vote of 90 2-3 to 80 1-3, after charges of Communism against him had been aired on the convention floor, upon his insistence, in a long night session. The only evidence produced was an affidavit by Ferdinand Lundberg, whose charges Kaufman categorically denied.

Kaufman was also upheld by the convention against opposition criticism on account of a wire he had sent assailing the use of troops in the North American Aviation strike and urging support of the workers' right to strike. A motion censuring him was defeated by a vote of 87 to 75.

SUPPORT BRIDGES

The convention unanimously adopted a resolution pledging full Guild support to Pres. Harry Bridges of the Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union in his fight against deportation. Bridges addressed the delegates thereafter, describing the red charges against him as "a lot of hogwash" and asserting that the attack on him was due to his labor activities for higher wages, better conditions and other trade union objectives.

The convention also took a vigorous stand in defense of the right to strike and against all the anti-strike and anti-union measures now before Congress.

MORE CONTRACTS

A report of the International Executive Board to the convention revealed that the number of Guild contracts had increased from 123 in June, 1940, to 133 in June, 1941. The number of shops under contract increased from 149 to 162, and the number of Guild shop (union shop) contracts rose from 55 to 73.

Dues-paying membership was increased by 14 per cent during the year to a total of 17,286, of whom 10,809 are editorial and 6,477 commercial department employes.

Construction Union Wins Three More Elections

By CECIL OWEN

WASHINGTON, July 5—Three smashing Labor Board election victories were won this month by the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee.

Biggest of the polls in which construction workers again chose CIO was in New York City, where employes of nine struck door manufacturing plants voted to be represented by the UCWOC.

Of 421 votes cast by production workers, 304 were for the UCWOC, 87 for an AFL union, one for neither, and 29 challenged. Eight drivers voted for UCWOC, none for AFL, three for neither, and one vote was challenged.

All the firms in the New York poll were members of the Metal Covered Door and Window Manufacturers Association and negotiations are now under way between the UCWOC and the association. For the past month the UCWOC had been conducting a strike against nine firms in this industry.

WIN IN PHILLY

Another important election victory was won by the UCWOC in Philadelphia where employes of the Keystone House and Window Cleaning Co. voted for representation by UCWOC in a poll supervised by the State Labor Board.

Winning of this election makes UCWOC the dominant factor in the porters, janitors and cleaners field, and gives marked impetus to the organizing drive under way among building service and maintenance workers.

The third election victory for the UCWOC came at the Barrett plant of the Harbison-Walker Refactories, Indiana, Pa., where General Organizer Peter Ferrara has been directing organizing efforts. The vote was 87 to 49.

'Sweet Treatment' Flops; CIO Carries Michigan Poll

ST. JOSEPH, Mich., July 5—Employes of the Nineteen Hundred Corp., manufacturers of washing machines and ironers chiefly for Sears, Roebuck & Co., voted 680 to 188 for Local 931, United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers in an NLRB election held here June 26.

A statement issued by the local declared that the election victory "was remarkable in view of stiff opposition on the part of management, local businessmen and labor-hating Congressman Clare E. Hoffman.

"Since the union's petition for certification was filed March 1, the UE was forced to overcome many obstacles planted by management to forestall collective bargaining. An 'independent' union was formed. When the UE exposed this trickery, another line was adopted.

"For the first time in the history of the company, foremen and officials began slapping backs and treating the workers as human beings. Many wage increases and other concessions were granted.

HOFFMAN ON JOB

"Clare E. Hoffman was brought into town to rave against 'outside agitators,' and Hoffman's local stooge, Attorney Ed Brown, was retained by the Corp. to attempt legal trickery in stalling organization."

The anti-union drive reached a climax, the local stated, the day before the election when every employe received a nine-page letter from the president of the corporation explaining how 'nice' the company had been in providing jobs for the workers, and vacation checks were given to the employes on the same day for the first time.

SETTLE STRIKE

Washington — A strike by the United Cafeteria Workers, CIO, at the big S & W Cafeteria, has been won by the union.

Textile Union Wins Polls, Contracts

New York, July 5—A number of important elections won and contracts signed in recent weeks were announced this week by Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers Union. Workers at the Hill Manufacturing Co., Lewiston, Maine, third largest textile firm in the area, voted 744 to 516 for the CIO textile union, and in Philadelphia, the union won an election at the Nicetown Dye Co.

Contracts were signed by the TWU with the Ashland Corp., Jewett City, Conn., employing 850; Ansonia O & C Co., Ansonia, Conn., employing 450; Mays Landing Water Power Co., cotton manufacturers in Mays Landing, N. J., employing 360; P. McGraw Wool Co., Pittsburgh, Pa., employing 300; Lorraine Manufacturing Co., Pawtucket, R. I., covering 1800; and Neidich Cel-Lustra Corp., Burlington, N. J.

Guild Ladies' Convention Notes Gains

DETROIT, July 5—Sustained growth both in number of locals set up and new members organized featured the report of the Women's Auxiliary of the American Newspaper Guild at its third annual convention, held here at the same time the Newspaper Guild held its eighth convention.

The Auxiliary, representing 28 locals and some 600 members, also reported on a year's activities in supporting Guild members in strike struggles in Monroe, La., on the Jewish Day in New York, and in negotiations for wage boosts where Auxiliary members were able by first-hand testimony to convince publishers that living costs were going up.

Recognition of the value of the Auxiliary was made in the report of the Auxiliary Committee of the Guild convention, which pointed out that it is "to their own selfish benefit" for Guild members "to do all in their power to spread the auxiliary movement," and which called for the establishment of auxiliaries in the 50 Guild locals that still do not have them.

RESOLUTIONS PASSED

The Auxiliary convention passed a number of resolutions condemning legislative and employer attacks on labor, opposing conscription of women, use of the army to break strikes, heavy taxation on low income groups, attempts to deport Harry Bridges, and urging passage of anti-poll tax and anti-lynching legislation and similar progressive measures.

Mrs. Katharine Earnshaw of New York was unanimously re-elected president, Mrs. Mary Pond of Dayton, O., corresponding secretary; Mrs. Frances Humphreys of Indianapolis financial secretary, and Mrs. Ida Engeman of Baltimore Auxiliary reporter.

WINS AWARD: Tom O'Connor, reporter for the New York Newspaper PM, who received the Broun Memorial Award offered by the American Newspaper Guild. O'Connor's series on coal mine safety conditions was judged the "best newspaper job in the Broun spirit" by a committee of distinguished newspaper people. Here's the prize winner fitted out in mining costume as he conducted his survey.

Set 40c Pay Minimum In Rubber

Washington, July 5—A minimum wage of 40 cents an hour, effective July 28, was established for the rubber industry this week by Gen. Philip B. Fleming, administrator of the Wage-Hour Division. The rate will raise the wages of 9,900 of some 132,000 workers in the industry.

The majority of some 600 plants covered by the wage order are located in the Central Northeastern and Middle Atlantic states, though recently there has been a considerable increase in the tire producing end of the rubber industry in California.

CIO Foils Boss, Wins Radio Time

Kokomo, Ind., July 5—CIO is on the air weekly here, with resumption of the Wednesday broadcast over station WKMO after a 30-day suspension. The suspension was brought about, according to Hal Denman, by a local factory owner who bought the time in order to keep the CIO off the airways.

The program is sponsored by a local brewery, and will continue indefinitely. It takes the form of a digest of the week's most important labor news.

CIO WINS DECISION

Denver, Colo. — Leaders of the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers today hailed a U. S. Circuit Court decision which outlawed the notorious company union at the Rockefeller-owned Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.'s ore mine at Sunrise, Wyo.

Dyers Strike Against Sweatshop Bosses

HAVERSTRAW, N. Y., July 5—(FP)—Employes of five dye firms located in the open shop fortress known as the Garnerville Terminal Bldg., struck last week for union conditions. The walkout was called by the CIO Federation of Dyers, Finishers, Printers and Bleachers (CIO) which has been trying to penetrate the building for four years.

William F. Larkin, owner of the edifice, not only shelters 17 runaway shops, but also helps them build company unions and keep real unionism out. This was brought out at NLRB hearings. The firms located there have refused to carry out NLRB orders or to negotiate. Wages in the shops are 60% below union scale and the work week is as high as 70 hours.

BOSSES SOUGHT TROUBLE

On the first day of the strike it became apparent that the companies and the building owners were looking for trouble.

Police brought a big case of tear-gas bombs into the building and displayed it prominently. Then a fire engine was stationed at the gate. Next police drove a squad car with sirens screaming back and forth in front of the picket line. Finally the cops ordered pickets away from the main gate and stationed them at a distance from the building.

Shell Oil, Technicians, Sign Pact

SAN FRANCISCO, July 5—CIO technicians today had won their first signed contract in California's petroleum industry.

The Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists & Technicians announced an agreement with the Shell Oil Co. which covers all technical employes in the research, control and analytical laboratories at the firm's Martinez Refinery.

The contract provides for increases in pay from $9 to $20 per month, paid vacations, overtime pay for holidays and emergency work, seniority, grievance machinery and a guarantee against layoffs or demotion for the duration of the agreement.

Best Three Months:

Electrical Union Adds 33,793 New Members

NEW YORK, July 5—The past three months have been the most successful in the history of the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, Organization Director James E. Matles reported to the union's executive board here.

During that period the union reported its fastest growth, adding 33,793 members—more than 10,000 a month. The figure represented a 74 per cent increase over the previous three months and a 234 per cent jump over the same period one year ago.

The UE participated in 40 NLRB elections, winning 32 and losing seven; one is still in doubt. The CIO affiliate received 66 per cent of the ballots cast, and gained sole collective bargaining rights for 10,822 workers.

Wage increases—including those negotiated with General Electric and Westinghouse—brought an additional $37,000,000 into UE members' pay checks, Matles estimated.

N. Y. State CIO Parley In September

New York, July 5—Both the regular constitutional convention and the special meeting of the New York State Industrial Union Council will be held in September at a date to be announced later, according to a statement issued by the Administrative Committee composed of Thomas Kennedy, Gustave Strebel and Hugh Thompson.

This was decided, the committee explained, in order to save both money and time of the delegates. The special convention was ordered by the national Executive Board of the CIO at its Atlantic City meeting last November.

The Committee also announced that per capita dues owed by local unions for the months of October, November and December, 1940, would be waived.

Nova Scotia Miners Win Wage Boost

Stellarton, N. S., July 5—A pay increase of 15 cents a day retroactive to June 1 has just been granted its 1,200 UMW mine workers by the Acadia Coal Company. This brought the general wage level up 45 cents a day higher than the rates prevailing before a new contract was signed early in the year.

Based on the McTague Tribunal report the new contract gave the mine workers a 15-cent increase and a 15-cent increased cost of living bonus.

Estimated to total $60,000 a year the additional 15-cent increase was given by the company under its pledge to increase wages as soon as the company's financial position improved, a statement by General Manager Michael Dwyer to the UMW said.

The increase will apply to all Acadia mine workers, a flat increase to datal men and an increase in the rate to contract men which will net them 15 cents on their average production.

Coal Miners Win NLRB Poll

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., July 5 — The C I O - United Mine Workers today had won one of the most important Labor Board election victories in the South.

William Mitch, union district president, revealed that the UMW had snowed under the AFL at the Tennesse Coal, Iron & Railroad mines near here by a margin of 3,554 to only 758 for the AFL and 50 for no union. The company is a subsidiary of the U. S. Steel Company.

Seamen Meet In Cleveland

NEW YORK, July 5 — The largest meeting of organized seamen in American labor history will begin in Cleveland with the opening July 7 of the third convention of the National Maritime Union, Joseph Curran, NMU president, said here.

More than 450 NMU delegates will be present, plus 50 or 60 seamen representatives from west coast unions and ships. The NMU constitution provides that 90 per cent of the delegates must come from ships, with the balance from NMU branches in Atlantic, Gulf, Great Lakes and inland waterways ports.

Chief issue before the convention will be the setting up of a nation-wide industrial union

JOSEPH CURRAN
President,
National Maritime Union

for all American seamen, which will bring a number of unions on the west coast that are not affiliated with the NMU into one organization.

QUESTION OF UNITY

"The question of unity is becoming more and more pressing," Curran said. "Seamen are coming to realize that craft unions are no longer adequate to cope with the problems of marine labor organizations.

"When we go to negotiate separate agreements, covering wages and working and living conditions aboard ship, we are at a decided disadvantage. The operators, who certainly believe in unity for themselves, try to play off one union against another. They try to play off east coast seamen against west coast seamen.

GREATER STRENGTH

"When it comes to legislation, we are also at a disadvantage. Our experience has been that when all marine unions are united, we can stop passage of unfavorable bills and defend ourselves against legislative attacks. When we are disunited, we can't always do this."

The NMU now has some 65,000 members, including river, harbor and Great Lakes marine workers. Membership in the four west coast unions is about 25,000.

CONVENTION

CIO Calls Conference On Legislation, Fights Tory Bills

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, July 5—Full strength of the CIO is being mobilized to fight anti-union bills pending in Congress, following a call by President Philip Murray to all CIO national affiliates and State Councils to meet in conference here Monday, July 7.

Murray's call asked national CIO unions to send six representatives and State Councils to send at least two for the purpose of working out a campaign to defeat "repressive legislation designed to destroy the effectiveness of labor in America." The meeting will be held in the Mine Workers building here.

"A tremendous effort is being put forth by the enemies of organized labor to secure the enactment of repressive legislation designed to destroy the effectiveness of the labor movement in America," Murray wired to the 43 national CIO unions and 32 state Councils.

"For the past several weeks your legislative representatives have been required to meet with and talk to members of Congress concerning the menacing effects upon labor of such enactments.

"The situation has grown to such serious proportions that I deem it advisable to convene a special meeting of six representatives from each of our international unions and unions and organizing committees and at least two representatives from each of our state industrial Union Councils to convene at the UMW Bldg., Washington, D. C., on Monday, July 7, 1941, at 10 A.M.," he said.

BILLS UP

The call for the special CIO meeting came as Congressional leaders met a sharp setback in the defeat of the wire-tapping bill and as they prepared to bring the Connally-May anti-strike bill on the floor of the House July 8.

Defeat of the wire-tap bill, which had been backed by the Attorney General and other high government leaders came in a 154 to 146 vote that crossed party lines and demonstrated the strength of labor's opposition to anti-union proposals. The defeat was also seen as a setback to the whole Congressional drive for anti-union legislation coming to a head in the Connally-May bill.

This bill, a dressed-up version of the original Connally amendment in the Senate that provided for government seizure and operation of struck plants, has three main provisions:

1. Severe criminal penalties for pickets who try to prevent strikebreakers entering struck plants.
2. Government seizure of plants struck through "subversive influences or otherwise," and government protection for strikebreakers.
3. Denial of wages to workers who lose their jobs through government seizure.

VINSON ON ICE

This bill was planned as the substitute for the Vinson cooling-off plus compulsory arbitration measure, as House Speaker Rayburn explained to newspapers when it was brought out of committee. It was to have the green light from Congressional leaders, Rayburn added, in the hope of quick passage.

In the meantime, the Vinson bill has been laid on ice in favor of the new proposal, but can be brought up again at a moment's notice.

The special CIO meeting came as a climax to a month of steady campaigning by a workers' lobby,

CIO Executive Board To Convene July 16

WASHINGTON, July 5—The CIO Executive Board will meet here July 16, following a call by President Murray sent to all Board members this week.

The meeting will bring some 50 CIO leaders to Washington, since each national and international affiliate and organizing committee has a member on the Board. In addition, the six vice-presidents will also be present.

President Murray also called a meeting of the six vice-presidents for July 15, to meet at the United Mine Workers building. This meeting and the Board meeting will follow a special assembly of CIO representatives from all national and international unions and from state councils called to fight repressive anti-labor bills now up in Congress.

Wire Tapping Bill, Opposed By CIO, Fails To Pass House

WASHINGTON, July 5—Defeat of the wire-tapping bill that would have authorized government snooping on labor unions and individuals, marked a major setback for anti-labor forces in Congress here.

The bill, sponsored by the Attorney-General and other high officials, went down on a roll-call vote of 154 to 146 after CIO opposition was made clear to the Congressmen.

Congressional strategy to slip the bill through centered on a plan to bring the bill up on extremely short notice in the hope that it could be stampeded through the House despite labor's objections. This move was blocked, however, when the CIO and Labor's Non-Partisan League sent representatives up to Capitol Hill to remind the Congressmen that labor was fighting the measure.

As long ago as last February John T. Jones, speaking for the CIO and the League, declared that the bill "would bring back an instrument susceptible to the uses of tyranny, of blackmail and of oppression," and that it "stems from the secret espionage tactics of the dictators."

CIO PRESSURE

CIO pressure also took the form of thousands of letters and wires to Congressmen blasting the bill and the purposes behind it. This campaign, begun when the bill first came into committee this year, was continued up to the time it hit the floor, and is credited with much of the success in defeating it.

In addition, it was pointed out, the defeat of wiretapping would help the CIO in its major campaign against the Connally-May bill and other anti-union measures due to come up within the next few days, since the same tactics of resistance are being used.

Study Shows Tory Ideas All Wet

New York, July 5—(FP)—Opposition to compulsory arbitration, cooling off periods and freezing of existing conditions is expressed in a Public Affairs pamphlet entitled Labor in the Defense Crisis. The booklet is based on a survey by the 20th Century Fund, which is headed by William H. Davis, chairman of the Natl. Defense Mediation Board.

T. R. Carskadon, author of the pamphlet, quotes the fund's report as saying:

"World experience has demonstrated that the cooperation of labor cannot be gained by compulsion. Strikes in democratic countries can be prevented only by agreement between employers and workers—not by law."

Referring to proposals to freeze existing conditions, the pamphlet says: "Such a plan would amount to suspension of labor's right to organize and the stopping of drives now under way."

Another Pact At R. H. Macy's

New York, July 5—(FP)—Local 1, CIO United Retail & Wholesale Employes, has signed a closed shop agreement with the R. H. Macy Co., proprietor of the world's largest department store, covering 611 employes in the housekeeping, elevator and food departments, and in the bureau of standards. This brings the total number of Macy workers under contract to 3,000.

Besides seniority rights, promotion guarantees, grievance adjustments and job security, the 611 workers received wage increases totaling $70,000.

DALLAS, Tex., July 5—Martin Dies, who witch-hunts and union-baits for fancy lecture fees, will not be the next Senator from Texas.

Several hundred thousand Texans—most of them probably subversive, in Dies' opinion—voted for other candidates, leaving the pride of Orange a poor fourth in the election to pick a successor to the late Sen. Morris Sheppard.

Dies polled a mere 80,000 votes. He ran far behind Gov. Lee (Pass the Biscuits) O'Daniel, who was given 175,000 votes, and behind Rep. Lyndon Johnson, who had Pres. Roosevelt's support, but lost out by a margin of 1,095.

Because of the poll tax, only a few hundred thousand of the several million population of Texas were able to participate in the election.

Exploding In His Face

Act Now

A most serious and urgent situation is called to the attention of the whole CIO by President Philip Murray through the medium of the special meeting scheduled to be held in Washington on July 7.

The meeting was called to combat the efforts of labor's enemies "to secure enactment of repressive legislation designed to destroy the effectiveness of labor in America," Murray said.

The danger is an immediate one. Congress may be called upon in a few days to act on one or more of the many anti-labor bills before it.

CIO representatives are doing all in their power to prevail upon Congress not to commit such an act of treason to American democracy as to enact this liberty-destroying legislation.

But their efforts are not enough. They must be backed by every man and woman in the CIO acting now to urge their representatives in Congress to oppose vigorously all these anti-labor measures.

Encouraging

The defeat of the wire-tapping bill in the House of Representatives is a welcome sign of reviving sanity and Americanism in the federal Congress.

It reflects the influence of labor's efforts to stem the hysteria under cover of which so many anti-union bills, striking at our basic democratic liberties, have been introduced.

This victory should encourage labor, and all defenders of democracy, to redouble their efforts against the May-Connally bill, the Vinson bill and the rest of the measures which would abolish the right to strike, hamstring the unions and reduce American workers to the status of industrial serfs.

For let us not forget that this setback to their plans has also led to a redoubling of the efforts of labor's enemies. The week that saw the defeat of the wire-tapping bill also saw the introduction of a number of new anti-labor bills—as if there were not enough already before Congress!

Among these bills are two which would impose governmental regulations on internal union affairs, denying to unions the protection of the Wagner act unless they comply with the regulations. Another bill, introduced by Rep. Walters of Pennsylvania, would outlaw practically all strikes, give the courts jurisdiction over union activities, authorize the use of anti-union injunctions and punish violations by heavy fines and prison sentences.

Meanwhile the May-Connally bill, one of the most vicious anti-labor measures before Congress, is being pushed to an early vote, without any repudiation as yet by administration leaders in Congress. Many usually pro-labor Congressmen are reported to be confused by this situation.

Let us not leave them in any doubt, in these crucial days, as to the position of the CIO and of labor generally. Now is the time to remind your representatives in Congress that labor is firmly and bitterly opposed to all of the measures now proposed to curtail or destroy the right to strike or to undermine in any other way our democratic liberties.

Against Discrimination

The CIO is dedicated to the organization of all workers without regard to race, creed, color or nationality. It steadfastly opposes all forms of discrimination that infringe on the rights of any section of the workers as citizens of industry.

One of the grossest kinds of discrimination that has been practiced in American industry is the refusal of many corporations to hire Negroes.

It is a sad commentary on our democracy that it is the rising demand for labor, on account of the defense program, rather than the injustice of such discrimination, that is at long last leading to some governmental steps to remedy it.

The President's executive order directing that there be no further discrimination against Negroes in training and employment in defense industries and governmental agencies is a welcome step forward.

But it will take more than a mere order to actually end the discrimination that has been so rampant. In the last analysis, the achievement by the Negro workers of the status in industry to which they are entitled will depend upon the strength of the industrial union movement, the CIO, and upon the united insistence of Negro and white workers alike upon equal justice and opportunity for all.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

PEEPING TOM, the guy who just had to take a gander at Lady Godiva when she rode through Coventry in her birthday suit, used to be considered a no-good in our young days.

Youngsters then were brought up with the idea that there was something rotten about reading other people's private letters, eavesdropping, keyhole peeping and other forms of malicious snooping.

But nowadays the Peeping Toms themselves ride naked through the town, splattering mud on decent citizens. And instead of being treated with contempt, or charged with indecent exposure, they are invited to do their slime-swinging before congressional committees, are paid large sums for magazine articles and sent on lecture tours.

The cult of the Paul Pry also shows itself in the current vogue for keyhole-gossip columns. No tidbit of office gossip is too petty or trivial, or too lying or slanderous, that some columnist will not stoop to pick it up from the snooper who retails it.

In these days when the spy, the snoop, the stooge and the stool-pigeon are so glorified, it is encouraging to find that there are still people with a hearty, if old-fashioned contempt for the keyhole arts.

The House of Representatives, in fact, by a vote of 146 to 154, has rejected the wire-tapping bill, which would have legalized wholesale snooping into the private affairs and lives of the American people.

This vote and the discussion which preceded it are significant as well as encouraging. The bill was opposed by all sections of organized labor, and the vote marks a turn in the anti-labor tide which seemed to be sweeping Congress.

The Congressmen who spoke against the wire-tapping bill took their cue from the labor spokesmen who had testified against the bill. They reminded the House of the witch hunts of Mitchell Palmer's days, when labor unions were persecuted after the last war and American civil rights violated wholesale.

They warned against the current hysteria, and against the slander, blackmail and union-busting which the wire-tapping bill and other assaults on American liberties would make possible.

"Unlike the donning of false whiskers . . . wire-tapping is a method of espionage which ruthlessly lays bare the private lives and thoughts of citizens in the home, and in the business, government or union offices," said CIO Legislative Representative John T. Jones, when he testified against the wire-tapping bill. "The innocent suffer with the guilty when the wire tappers are at work."

He pointed out that "real spies are not going to use the telephone to give away their secrets, and real saboteurs are not going to plan or reveal bomb plots by wire."

The same can be said for the current anti-CIO snoop-and-slander campaigns in the press, against which Pres. Murray has warned. The pretense that they are directed against sabotage of national defense wears mighty thin when one realizes that real saboteurs are the least likely to lay themselves open to such types of "exposure."

Another encouraging evidence of American revulsion against stool-pigeonry and cheap slander mongering is the repudiation of Rep. Martin Dies by the voters of Texas. He had hoped to ride into the Senate on the slimy backs of the labor spies and assorted rapscallions whose lies and slanders he had so widely publicized. But instead, he came out a poor fourth when the ballots were counted.

Assailing Dies' labor-baiting awhile back, CIO Pres. Murray pointed out: "It seems strangely significant that your groundless charges against the CIO always come at a time when they can do the most harm." He noted that Dies usually picked on a particular union at the very time it was engaged in negotiations, in an election or in some other critical period.

The same kind of test can be applied to most of the slanderous gossip that appears from time to time in the press.

One does not have to be a Hawkshaw to observe the motives behind the type of snoopery and misrepresentation that is eagerly seized upon by certain columnists. Any piece of trivial and untruthful gossip is picked up and printed, if it tends to undermine confidence in responsible union officials, to create internal dissension, to encourage anti-labor legislation or otherwise to smear the CIO at the time when such smearing can do most harm.

But fortunately the members of the CIO, like all decent Americans, despise snoopers, stool pigeons and slinking character assassins. They prefer the open and aboveboard atmosphere of American democracy, in which the CIO has thrived and grown—and in which it will continue to grow despite all the machinations of its enemies.

Best Plane Pact:

North American Aviation OKs Pact, Lifts Pay By 12c

LOS ANGELES, July 5—A giant mass meeting of the CIO United Automobile Workers membership at the North American Aviation Co.—scene last month of the strike that was broken by the U. S. Army—today had unanimously ratified the best aviation union contract on the west coast.

The contract, worked out at National Defense Mediation Board hearings in Washington by Richard Frankensteen and other UAW leaders, brought a 10-cent blanket increase; a 75-cent minimum for all workers with three months' seniority and a reclassification of all jobs to provide at least a 2-cent additional increase for all employes.

Beginners without experience will start at 60 cents—a 10-cent increase over the former minimum pay rate—and will receive further increases of five cents every four weeks until they reach 75 cents an hour.

Since all the wage increases are retroactive to May 1, each worker will receive fromm $50 to $150 in back pay.

UNION SECURITY

A memorandum agreement accompanying the pact provides that all discharges since May 1 are to be negotiated, with disputed cases going to arbitration.

Recommended by the Mediation Board—and accepted with outspoken reluctance by the company—was a clause providing maintenance of UAW membership as a condition for employment for all employes who have so far joined the union, or who do so in the future.

Other provisions of the agreement, set forth by the Mediation Board and accepted by both union and company, provide for 40 hours' vacation pay for all with one year's service; seniority and grievance systems, and 80 hours' pay for draftees.

Enthusiastic about the terms gained by the union negotiators, the workers gave a vote of confidence to Frankensteen. They also voted to support the international union in its organizing drives at Douglas and at other coast plants.

AFL UNION TO JOIN

A by-product of the agreement was an assertion by Dutch Streurer, head of the AFL machinists' local which lost to the CIO in an NLRB election at North American several months ago, that his whole group will come into the CIO.

The contract was ratified while defense planes zoomed overhead. The crowd cheered as a telegram from CIO Pres. Murray, describing the pact was read. Frankensteen and Leo Krzycki both addressed the meeting.

An interesting sidelight of the ratification ceremonies was the introduction of a motion of confidence in Frankensteen by the same man who had offered a motion attacking the UAW official at a meeting three weeks ago when he urged them to call off their strike.

PRAISED BY HAYWOOD

Allan S. Haywood, CIO director of organization, praised the new pact as "giving a real basis for organization in aviation," and said a big drive is being planned.

"This contract sets the highest wages in the industry," he said. "It will be an inspiration to all aviation workers. Richard T. Frankensteen, Walter Smethurst (director and assistant director of the UAW-CIO aviation division) and the local officers are to be congratulated."

brought to Washington by the CIO and Labor's Non-Partisan League to fight enactment of these bills.

Pressure from this new kind of lobby, consisting of more than 200 CIO union representatives, has already persuaded Congressional leaders to postpone the Connally-May bill from its originally scheduled debate on May 27 to July 8, and has forced them first to revamp the Vinson bill and finally to shelve it in the hope of slipping the Connally-May bill through with less opposition.

CIO and LNPL officials and non-union observers in Washington credited this campaign and the steady barrage of letters and wires of protest with halting the anti-labor offensive to date. They continued to emphasize the need for constant pressure to ensure not only postponement but final defeat of the Connally-May proposal and all other anti-labor bills.

Radio Forum Speakers Hit Tory Bills

Wilmington, Del., July 5 — Current Congressional attacks on the rights of organized labor were severely criticized here by four rank-and-file union members participating in one of a series of radio programs sponsored by the New Castle Industrial Union Council.

Sec. Gene Derrickson of the council urged all listeners to join in the fight for protection of labor's rights, and asked that they send protests against the anti-labor bills to their Congressmen.

In previous programs groups of members of other CIO unions had described what their organizations have done for them in the way of increased wages and improved living standards. The program is one of the most popular in the city.

"DON'T let Congress Put the Clock Back" is CIO's newest leaflet on current anti-labor bills in Congress that would destroy the right to strike, impose compulsory arbitration on workers, and hamstring all unions. The leaflet describes the bills, analyzes their anti-labor clauses, and tells union members how to fight them. Order from Publicity Dept., CIO, 1106 Connecticut Ave., Washington, D. C. Living Costs Show Sharp Increases

WASHINGTON, July 5 — (FP) — Prospects for adequate meals for U. S. workers, as defined by the National Maritime Conference here recently, became more remote as the Department of Labor announced sharp rises in the price of those foods outlined as necessary by the conference.

As recommended by the nutrition conference, the daily diet meeting the "yard-stick" set up includes a pint of milk, a serving of meat, one egg or suitable substitute such as navy beans, two vegetables, two fruits, breads, flour and cereal, and butter.

According to the Department of Labor, egg prices rose in 17 out of 18 cities surveyed an average of 6.7 per cent between May 27 and June 17. The increases ranged from 2.5 per cent in New York to 17.2 per cent in Memphis.

Pork chops averaged a 6.2 per cent increase in the 20 days. Prices increased in all 18 cities.

LARD, BEANS UP

Lard prices also rose in all 18 cities, increasing 8 per cent in Boston and Savannah and 13 per cent in Seattle. The average increase was 4.8 per cent.

Navy beans advanced in 13 cities, remained unchanged in two, and decreased in three. The average increase was 2.8 per cent.

White flour increased on an average of 1.5 per cent in 17 cities.

Coffee continued to advance, the greatest change being shown in Philadelphia with an increase of 6.8 per cent. The average increase was 1.8 per cent.

Bread prices advanced in three cities, remained unchanged in 14, while a decrease of 10.3 per cent in Omaha caused the average to go down 1.3 per cent.

Of the cities studied, Minneapolis showed the greatest average increase in the price of 18 foods, the level increasing 3 per cent in the 20 days. Detroit showed a 2.4 per cent average price rise, Seattle prices increased 2.2 per cent while San Francisco was the only city showing an overall decrease. These prices went down .2 per cent.

Cabbage, listed by the nutrition conference as a necessary green vegetable, showed the biggest jump of any single commodity. In San Francisco the price of cabbage was upped 35 per cent, in Houston it went up to 30.8 per cent and in Memphis, 20 per cent.

Pay Raises Not Cause Of Price Jump

Washington, July 5—Leon Henderson, price supervisor for the Feedral Government, warned this week that the cost of living will continue its upward course in the next few months.

He laid the blame for future price increases on the emphasis in defense production, which lifts purchasing power but does not increase the amount of goods available for consumption. The possible scarcity of consumer goods was noted months ago by CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who advocated the industry council plan as a method of giving labor a voice in defense affairs and as a means of assuring full production in all industries to overcome just such a bottleneck.

UNIT COST LOWER

In discussing the price situation, Henderson made it clear that wage increases in recent months had not been responsible for rising living costs.

Factories have been producing at full or capacity, and as a result the unit cost of their products has been lower than when those plants are operating at a fraction of their capacity. As a result, he said, manufacturers have been easily able to absorb rising wage costs.

Texas CIO Groups Fight Firing At Air Depot

San Antonio, Tex., July 5—Members of Local 101, United Federal Workers, CIO, and the CIO Council here are fighting the discriminatory firing of Robert C. Wicke, Jr., president of the local and a member of the UFWA's Executive Board.

Wicke was fired, the CIO charges, because his union activity irked officers at the San Antonio Air Depot. His chief offense was his leadership in a union campaign to force the Army authorities to pay prevailing wages in accordance with Civil Service Commission rules, which resulted in a $5-per-month increase for the workers.

STAINLESS STEEL...
in the Food Industry

• Purity and quality dictate the selection of equipment used in the preparation of foods. For this reason, many manufacturers of food processing equipment are using stainless steel.

Stainless steel is not attacked by chemical sterilizers, cleansers, and brines. It is immune to practically all types of food acids, and will not affect the taste, color, or keeping qualities of the foodstuffs with which it comes in contact. Equipment used in preparing various foods have shown greatly improved performance when stainless steel has been used for parts subject to rusting or corrosion.

The food industry is rapidly becoming aware of the inherent possibilities of this rustless metal to solve some of its major problems.

Pact Extension Averts N. Y. Subway Strike

LaGuardia Agrees to Deal With Transit Workers Pending Court Decision

NEW YORK, July 5—This city will bargain with the 32,000 members of the CIO Transport Workers Union, ending a deadlock that began when Mayor LaGuardia flatly refused to honor contracts won by the union in 1937 when the rapid transit system was privately owned and that lasted to within three days of a strike deadline voted by the TWU.

The settlement, which provided for continuation of the contracts and for collective bargaining between the union and the Board of Transportation, was hailed by Michael J. Quill, TWU president, as assurance that the workers on the lines and the people using them would not be forced to undergo the difficulties of a strike.

"We are delighted this dispute is being settled peacefully to the benefit of the people of New York and the transit workers," he said.

The settlement, which will be in effect pending a final determination by the courts on the question of the city's right to bargain collectively and to sign union contracts, was won after the union had taken a unanimous strike vote and after President Philip Murray had pledged the full aid of the CIO to the union.

EXCHANGE OF WIRES

The settlement was revealed when an exchange of wires between Murray and Mayor LaGuardia was published. LaGuardia's offer included establishment of a grievance board to handle problems affecting the workers but withheld recognition of the union's right to strike.

Murray's reply took exception to this point, declaring: "With reference to your provision number one (on the right to strike) whe realize that you are firmly of the opinion that the right to strike on the part of transit employes is not existent and cannot be recognized by the city.

"On our part, however, we are just as sure that such a right does exist as a matter of law. We understand further that by entering into this stop-gap agreement, you are not conceding the existence of that right nor are we conceding its non-existence."

BARGAINING BEGINS

The agreement, ratified by the union at a meeting immediately after the publication of the Murray-LaGuardia wires, was followed within a day by the first of a series of meetings between the Board and the union, led by Pres. Quill and other TWU officials and aided by Allan S. Haywood, national director of CIO, who was assigned by Murray to stay with the union until the dispute was settled.

"We are ready now, as we have been for many weeks, to meet with the members of the Board of Transportation to negotiate on wages, hours and working conditions on the basis of our collective bargaining contracts," Quill said.

The Mayor's agreement to bargain followed a period of many weeks in which his previous refusal to concede this right to the union brought New York to the edge of its first citywide transit strike in several years.

Weeks of steady campaigning by the union, featured by an extensive publicity campaign that brought the TWU's case to the millions of subway riders, preceded the agreement. The publicity drive included distribution of millions of leaflets to the public as an answer to the press and radio boycott of the union's side of the case.

Plans to break the possible strike laid by the city included arrangements for housing strikebreakers, 24-hour police mobilization, and other steps intended to intimidate the workers. Full support in the event of a strike was pledged by the New York CIO and by many AFL unions, which announced that their members would refuse to ride on scab trains.

CHEER STRIKELESS VICTORY: Members of the Transport Workers Union in New York give the glad hand to news that Mayor F. H. LaGuardia has backed down from his previous position and agreed to continue TWU contracts covering workers on city-owned subway lines pending a court decision. The mayor and CIO President Philip Murray swapped telegrams agreeing to continuance, which averted a strike scheduled for July 1.

Extend Pact For Parleys

New York, July 5—Following one day after the agreement between the city and the Transport Workers Union to continue contracts covering 32,000 workers, the TWU announced that contracts held with the privately owned Third Ave. Railways System would be extended during negotiations for renewal.

The contract covers about 3,500 workers, and any changes will be made retroactive to July 1. The TWU is asking for a 14-cent wage boost, for improved vacation and sick leave clauses, seniority improvements, and other upward revisions.

The Third Ave. System operates all existing trolley lines in Manhattan and bus and trolley service throughout the Bronx and Westchester and in parts of Queens. The TWU has had a union shop contract since 1937, when it blanked out the AFL in a Labor Board election.

Marine Union Suspends Two Nazi Spies

NEW NORK, July 5—The CIO National Maritime Union today suspended two of its members who this week pleaded guilty to U. S. charges of serving in a giant Nazi spy ring, and held up immediate action in the case of five others arrested by the FBI in its round-up last week-end.

At the same time the NMU pointed out that three years ago it called the attention of the State Department and the U. S. Maritime Commission to the activities of Nazis on board U. S. Lines ships running between New York and Hamburg. The union said it had forward information and documents indicating the presence on board these ships of units of the German Labor Front. But no response was ever received from any official of these government agencies, the NMU declared.

REGRET FBI'S DELAY

In announcing the suspensions, NMU officials said:

"Our union has always maintained a policy of investigating members of the union charged with activities considered detrimental to the interests of our organization.

"We regret that it was necessary for three years to elapse before action was taken on the many requests of this organization for an investigation into this matter."

Record of Violence:

Dissolve Company Union, NLRB Tells Weirton Steel

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

WASHINGTON, July 5—Weirton Steel, one of the rapidly disappearing species of companies still bull-headedly fighting against the right of employes to belong to a union, got a sock in the nose last week from the National Labor Relations Board.

It was ordered to stop discouraging membership in the CIO Steel Workers Organizing Committee at its three plants in Weirton and Clarksburg, W. Va., and Steubenville, Ohio, and to throw out two company unions known as the Weirton Steel Employes Representation Plan and the Weirton Steel Employes Security League.

The Board also ordered the company to reinstate 17 employes with back pay and to stop its practice of "engaging in physical assaults on union employes or inciting others to such action;" to stop spying on union activities and to stop encouraging interference with the right of employes to organize.

LETTER FROM WEIR

The record shows, the Board stated, "that a 1936 letter from E. T. Weir, management spokesman, to the chairman of the Weirton Steel Employes Representation plan, advocates the Plan, attacks the CIO, exhorts the leaders of the Plan to pursue this dual course, and pledges the company's collaboration in promoting the Plan and opposing the CIO."

This action followed news of a CIO organizing drive started in June 1936 in the steel industry, the Board found. "To ferret out employe self-organization activities," the Board said, "the company engaged the espionage services of the Central Industrial Service Company," utilizing these service between March 1934 and May 1937 to obtain information about and frustrate the desire of its employes to organize.

'SECURITY LEAGUE'

Weir first hit upon the Representation Plan as a "very effective method of employe participation" in 1933, and continued it in effect after the passage of the National Labor Relations Act. In 1936 when the SWOC drive began, the Security League and its subsidiary units were formed to forestall outside organization, the Board's records show.

"On numerous occasions employes who demonstrated their interest in the CIO were forcibly evicted from the company's plant," the Board said. "Company police witnessed and in some instances participated in the exclusions."

The Board held that the company instigated these ejections by its "policy of approving riotous action in opposition to the CIO," and by assuring leaders of the Plan that their continued opposition to the CIO would receive the cooperation of the management.

FOREMEN WERE RINGLEADERS

Various supervisory employes, the Board pointed out, were the ring leaders in the groups that evicted unionists. "The company through the supervisory employes prolonged the unlawful exclusions by imposing lay-off penalties upon forcibly excluded CIO sympathizers.

"The company also collaborated in other ways with the evictors in preventing the evictees from working because of their union sympathies, or at least, in conditioning their continued employment upon their desertion of the CIO for the inside organizations."

Store Chain Signs Closed Shop Pact

New York, July 5—I. M. Strauss, president of the Strauss Stores Corp., the largest auto accessories chain in the East and one of the largest in the country, today signed a closed shop agreement with Local 104, United Retail & Wholesale Employes of America, CIO.

The agreement gives to the workers an immediate wage increase of approximately $15,000, the 48-hour week, time and a half for overtime, eight holidays with pay, a week's vacation with pay, seniority rights and protection of the job in the event an employe is conscripted by the government into military service.

Consummation of the union agreement marked the climax of several months of negotiations following a victory of Local 104 in a New York State Labor Board election, in which a previously existing "independent" company union was overwhelmingly defeated by the employes.

NLRB Member Smith Raps Recent Splitting Decisions

DETROIT, July 5—By splitting up large groups of industrial workers into small craft units, as it has been doing increasingly in recent months, the National Labor Relations Board is doing a dis-service to labor, Board Member Edwin S. Smith indicated in a speech here.

"In my opinion the Board, by instituting the device of the Globe doctrine, failed to take account of the realities of the modern relations between capital and labor, and in permitting employes to split off in smaller units has not found the units most appropriate to effectuate the purposes of the (Wagner) Act."

Smith told the Guild delegates that his reasoning in cases involving craft vs. industrial units, should also be applied to units of many plants as against units of one plant only.

Recently, he said, "the majority of the Board has shown signs of retreating to a position of abandonment of the multiple plant unit, even in instances where the Board had formerly declared the broader unit to be appropriate. Notable instances of what I regard as a seriously retrogressive step are the Libbey-Owens-Ford case and the recently decided longshore case on the Pacific coast."

The two cases, decided by the Board on a 2-1 basis, involved the setting up of small units, in one instance separating one plant of a company-wide system, in the other three ports out of the coast-wide Pacific bargaining unit.

"We live in an economic system in which the aggregates of capital are continually growing larger," Smith declared. "The only method by which workers can confront such vested economic power with any pretense of economic equality is by combining together to seek bargaining on the broadest feasible basis.

"The old doctrine of divide and rule holds true in economic as well as political situations."

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

The crisis in the New York Transit situation is, for the time being, bridged over. The permanency of industrial peace now depends upon Mayor LaGuardia.

The first essential is to create a Board, with CIO adequately represented thereon, which will have a sincere desire to work with the union and in the interest of the city. The present members of the Board of Transportation have repeatedly demonstrated that they are antagonistic to the Transport Workers Union. The CIO has brought this to the attention of Mayor LaGuardia on numerous occasions.

Second, the city authorities must decide now to quit fostering other groups which are nothing more than company unions, and must be prepared to accept wholeheartedly the union chosen by the majority of employes as the sole bargaining agency, which is the Transport Workers Union, CIO.

Third, bona fide collective bargaining must prevail.

Fourth, a willingness to consider arbitration on disputed points should prevail.

Fifth, good will between those in charge of operations and the union must be fostered and maintained.

DEAL WITH STOOGE UNION

While the City of New York was resisting recognition of the TWU, which the workers had made their choice by election, the AFL was granted bargaining rights over the city's 10,000 drivers and sweepers in the Department of Sanitation without any election. The New York Sun, noted reactionary newspaper, had the following to say about the event.

"The Joint Council (AFL) is controlled by Abe Kasoff, Elias Shapiro, Anthony Green and Michael Morro, known as the four horsemen, who have been under investigation more than a year by William B. Herlands, Commissioner of Investigation. Before that, they were investigated by a Kings County Grand Jury, which recommended that their organization be disbanded because they were racketeer controlled. This inquiry revealed that the four men seldom reported for work in the department, enjoyed special privileges and dominated their immediate superiors.

"In February, Mr. Herlands said that his investigation of them was about completed and would be handed to the Mayor soon."

UNSAVORY MESS

This unsavory act on the part of the Administrator undoubtedly was done to offset the organizing drive now under way by the State, County and Municipal Workers, CIO, and is an attack upon the CIO.

This whole rotten mess will be brought to the attention of the people of New York and the CIO drive intensified in order to bring assistance to these city employes in getting rid of this yoke and establishing clean unionism that will bring to them the wages and working conditions that a great city owes to them.

Mayor LaGuardia should repudiate this action, grant the CIO appropriate recognition now, and permit a fair election to let the Sanitation Workers vote for the union of their choice.

MORE VICTORIES

Marching On—The UAW won another important election at the General Motors Chevy Motors and Axle plant, Tonawanda, New York, by a vote of 2,160 to 626 for no union.

The coal diggers have won a better than four-to-one Labor Board election, with the United Mine Workers turning up 3,554 votes at the Tennessee Coal and Iron Co. to 758 for the AFL.

Carey Backs Bills for Post-War Planning

Washington, July 5—Support for two resolutions proposing establishment of a U. S. Commission to engage in economic and social planning for the post war crisis period, was voiced here by CIO Sec. James B. Carey in testimony before the House Labor Committee. The resolutions were introduced in the House by Rep. Jerry Voorhis of California.

Carey told the committee that the CIO has long favored a national conference on unemployment at which labor, farm, government and industry representatives could discuss ways and means of ridding the nation of its worst economic problem.

Supplementing that proposal, he added, "the CIO developed the Industry Council Plan as a means for assuring maximum expansion and utilization of industrial capacity in the defense program" and of "maintaining income and employment during the transition period after the defense emergency is ended."

But so far, the CIO seceretary complained, "The Administration has not seen fit either to call the conference on unemployment or to introduce genuine and effective industry planning to replace the present chaotically administered defense program."

Unemployment has continued at a too-high figure, despite the defense efforts, with seven million still remaining jobless, Carey said, and it is now obvious that "the defense program is not going to solve our unemployment problem."

If Voorhis' resolutions "provide the basis" for a national unemployment conference such as CIO leaders have been advocating, "then we feel that the groundwork will be laid for an attack on one of the greatest problems America has to face," Carey concluded.

Keep Civilian Production Up, Murray Urges

NEW YORK, July 5—Curtailment of consumption goods for American civilians is unnecessary for the defense program and aid to Great Britain, and is opposed by the CIO, President Philip Murray wrote this week in The Nation, weekly liberal magazine.

Murray declared he was "not unmindful" of the expanding character of the defense program and of "actual and potential shortages" in certain key materials.

"But," he wrote, "I know that there are still in this country several million jobless men and women who could and should be employed to build additional capacity for the production of armaments as well as consumer goods. I know, too, that our present productive facilities are not being utilized to the full."

RECALLS CIO PLANS

The CIO leader recalled that several months ago he proposed a plan for Industry Councils, "the fundamental purpose of which was to obtain full and efficient use of all our productive resources. These resources include not only plant facilities and man power, but labor's ability to lend practical aid in production problems, as illustrated by the Reuther and steel expansion plans submitted by the CIO.

"Management has no monopoly of brains, and the extensive experience of labor could be used most advantageously to advance the defense program and the nation's well being. Unfortunately, none of these proposals have received the serious consideration which many industrialists and economists, as well as labor men, believe they merit."

Murray warned Americans not to lose sight of the fact "that the 'four freedoms' we are all determined to preserve include economic freedom. This freedom is limited as long as millions remain unemployed. It will be in grave jeopardy if we show any readiness to surrender without a struggle the minimum living standards of our people."

Those who advocate lower living standards at this time, Murray charged, "cling to the discredited notion that our economic welfare requires an economy of scarcity and overlook the fact that the greatest asset of a nation seeking to defend its democratic way of life is a healthy and satisfied people."

CIO Names Spokesman On Priorities

WASHINGTON, July 5—President Philip Murray today informed union affiliates of the creation of a priorities section in the OPM Labor Division, and announced that the CIO has designated Mr. R. R. Brooks as its representative.

The section is headed by J. Douglas Brown, two representatives of organized labor and a staff of labor consultants.

"The object of this branch is to diminish as far as possible the waste of man-power and equipment and the hardship to workers and their communities which result from unemployment caused by shortages of material and equipment arising in the course of the defense production program," Murray said.

OUTLINES PROCEDURE

Murray urged the unions to advise their locals to forward any complaints "growing out of the imposition of priorities" to a designated officer of the organization, who will in turn be in contact with Mr. Brooks in the Labor Priorities Section of OPM.

"Mr. Brooks will receive complaints from CIO unions respecting existing or threatened displacement of workers, advise as to the possibility of securing defense contracts in an attempt to maintain the labor force intact during the transition from civilian to defense production, and assist in any way possible to the members of our various CIO unions," Murray wrote.

Brooks, a professor at Williams College, is the author of a number of books about labor and the Wagner Act.

On Capital Hill:

Labor Pressure Key to Squashing Of Wire Tap Bill

By JOHN T. JONES
CIO Legislative Representative
Director, Labor's Non-Partisan League

Defeat of the Hobbs Wire-tapping Bill in the House of Representatives on Monday, June 30, demonstrates the power of labor's opposition to un-American legislation.

The Hobbs Bill would have opened the way for snooping into the private affairs of individuals and labor unions. From the moment the Hobbs Bill was introduced at the beginning of the present Congressional session, the CIO and Labor's Non-Partisan League have waged a constant battle against this proposal. The official statement of the CIO and LNPL against the bill was made before the Judiciary Committee by the CIO Legislative Representative. Arrangements were made to have other progressive and labor people testify in opposition to this measure.

A special fight was made against the efforts of the proponents of the bill to suppress the testimony of James Fly, Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, who vigorously opposed wire tapping. His effective and informed arguments completely offset the active support given to the measure by Attorney General Jackson.

LABOR ON THE JOB

Throughout the session affiliated organizations have kept informed on the progress of the wire-tapping legislation, and members of Congress have been constantly reminded of labor's opposition. Letters and telegrams from unions and union members have had great effect on the attitude of Congress to this measure. Strong opposition was built up to the granting of a rule on this bill by the House Rules Committee.

Only with this background of opposition was it possible to realize the defeat of wire tapping by a vote of 154 to 146. The bill was brought up for debate unexpectedly and with very short notice. Representatives of the CIO learned of this move immediately, and in the brief time remaining before the debate on the measure began, were able to mobilize strong forces of opposition.

FEARED PUBLICITY

That members of Congress feared the opinion of labor on this measure is illustrated by the attempt of Congressmen to avoid being counted. When the measure was first voted on without a roll call, there were 129 for the bill and 104 against.

When a roll call vote was demanded and taken, the vote changed to 146 for and 154 against. Labor may properly take credit for this victory. It shows that if labor really makes its voice heard by contacting their Congressmen often and effectively, labor's rights will be protected.

WINNING THE FIGHT

The effectiveness of labor opposition has already appeared in the current campaign against other repressive legislation directed at labor's right to strike. The Case-Pace amendments providing compulsory arbitration were killed, the Vinson Bill was postponed until July 8.

While these gains are only temporary, a permanent victory against all these anti-labor measures will be had if labor continues without slackening to oppose such efforts on Capitol Hill.

Laud Steps To End Racial Bias In Jobs

WASHINGTON, July 5—President Roosevelt's recent executive order announcing a policy of no discrimination in the future against Negro workers in defense industry is "a great step forward," which needs "to be implemented by effective Congressional legislation," the National Negro Congress said in a statement released here.

Pointing out that the President's order, while bound to have "a wholesome effect," did not apply to the billions of dollars of U. S. contracts already let and did not contain criminal penalties against violators, the Congress called for an active campaign to push for the enactment of the anti-poll tax bill, the anti-lynching bill, and the anti-discrimination bill introduced by Rep. Marcantonio.

FURTHER EFFORT

"The signing of the order should be the signal to the Negro people to exert every combined effort they have to demand that the President recommend to Congress immediate passage of anti-poll tax and anti-lynching laws, and to demand that Congress pass these laws now," the statement said.

"For decades the Negro people have labored under grave disadvantages through denial to them of economic security or democratic rights. It is for them to insist upon immediate federal aid to education, enlarged low cost housing programs, extended health, child welfare and old age assistance services as the only means by which some of the grave handicaps they face may be removed."

Camden, N. J., July 5—The giant Consolidated Cigar Co. plant here, employing 1,000 workers, is one of the latest additions to the CIO list. Workers voted, 584 to 230, for the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing & Allied Workers at a Labor Board election held June 26.

An organizing drive is now under way at a sister plant of Consolidated Cigar across the river from Camden in Philadelphia, where some thousand workers are employed.

The union is also making headway in the cigar industry in other sections. In Wheeling, W. Va., a new contract has just been signed between August Pollack, Inc., and Local 352, Hand Stogie Makers & Strippers Union, and in Detroit, Local 58 won a Labor Board election among employes of the R. G. Dunn Cigar Co., 239 to 17.

Unions Fight 'Priority Lay-Offs'

Newton, Iowa., July 5—Members of Local 116 are taking steps to protect their livelihood and the prosperity of their city now threatened by a plant shutdown at the Maytag Co. here, due to its inability to get raw materials.

The shortage, caused by the defense program priorities system, has already brought about the lay-off of 115 workers and will cause more, the local points out in a resolution calling for action to give defense work to smaller plants.

The resolution points out also that a few large monopolies have been given the overwhelming majority of government contracts, thus denying work to smaller companies and causing them to lay off men.

N. Y. Sanitation Boss Pulls Company Union Deal With AFL Outfit

NEW YORK, July 5—Old-style Fordism may be licked in Detroit, but it's very much alive in New York.

The latest anti-CIO boss to work hand-in-glove with Bill Green's AFL in a company-union maneuver to block the CIO is William F. Carey, millionaire Commissioner of Sanitation and a La Guardia appointee.

On June 27 Commissioner Carey issued an order "to be read at morning and afternoon rollcall for three consecutive days," declaring that he had recognized the American Federation of State, County & Municipal Employes, AFL, as the bargaining agency for New York's street cleaners and garbage collectors.

The background of this order shows the brazenly anti-CIO stand of the Sanitation chief. On May 25, 1941, 4,000 city Sanitation workers, following an intensive organizing drive, received their charter as Local 333 of the State, County & Municipal Workers of America, CIO. Since that time they had written several times to Commissioner Carey asking for a conference, but received no answer. An SCMWA representative finally got Carey on the phone, at which time he flatly refused to meet any individual or committee of the union to discuss labor relations or problems of the department's employes.

VANISHING MEMBERSHIP

The AFL had asked for recognition only a day or two previous to Carey's order, immediately following the issuance of AFL charters to the four company unions which have existed as the "Joint Council" in the department for 20 years or more, and whose membership has dwindled to the vanishing point.

Commissioner Carey's order made no bones about admitting that it was the same old Joint Council, newly affiliated to the AFL, which he had recognized—all over again, for he has recognized this company union as long as he has been in office. In fact, it is understood that Carey ordered his stooge "union" to affiliate with the AFL.

Allan Haywood, national organization director of the CIO, in New York for the negotiations over the subway contracts of the Transport Workers Union, made this comment on the news of Carey's recognition of the AFL:

"Only a few days ago Mayor LaGuardia was saying he could not recognize the Transport Workers Union as the sole bargaining agency for the subway workers on the theory that the city could not legally recognize any one organization of employes in a department, but must deal with all organizations.

"Now Carey grants exactly that same kind of 'impossible' recognition to the AFL. This is a challenge to the whole CIO. The CIO takes up that challenge."

AFL CORRUPTION

Commissioner Carey's relations with the Joint Council, now recognized by him anew as an AFL affilite, are an almost unbelievable story of corruption and barefaced company unionism. The officers of the Joint Council have for years done little or no work in the department, although receiving full pay as city employes, and at the same time, in violation of civil service laws, have received as much as $500 per week compensation each from their organization, as a Kings County Grand Jury found.

Carey's subordinate officers in the department have directly intimidated the men into paying dues to the Joint Concil when the shop stewards of the outfit were unable to collect dues because the men were so disgusted with the organization. And Carey's officers have even appointed shop stewards for the organization when the men would not elect anyone.

Sharp reaction to Carey's order came from New York CIO circles. The Sanitation Workers Union of Greater New York, Local 333 of the SCMWA, through its Strategy Committee, decided to throw a picket line around Carey's office on Wednesday, July 2, to demand that he see a committee from the union, and to issue a protest leaflet to the public.

"The CIO does not and will not accept the designation of the AFL as the bargaining agent for the employes of the New York Department of Sanitation. To do so would be to betray the Sanitation workers, who asked the CIO to organize them because they were fed up with being victimized by a group of racketeering company unions, the very organizations which were chartered by the AFL this week and immediately recognized, with indecent haste, by Commissioner Carey. . . .

"The success of the CIO in organizing the Sanitation men is the reason why the discredited Joint Council, in a desperate effort to gather to itself some badly-needed respectability and additional strength, has affiliated with the AFL. . . . The AFL has not enabled the leopard to change its spots. To the Sanitation men it is still the Joint Council, and they will have none of it."

FLAXER'S COMMENT

"The affiliation of the Joint Council of Sanitation men to the AFL this week, and the hasty recognization as the bargaining agency for the Sanitation Department, is an act of desperation and dictatorship by this fake union, the Sanitation Commissioner, and the Mayor. . . . Recognizing it as a bargaining agent is laughable. It doesn't know what the word means. It never has and never will bargain.

"Naturally, we do not intend to be stopped by this shabby maneuver. The men have chosen the CIO as their representative, and we will see to it that their democratic right in this respect is enforced. Commissioner Carey cannot carry water on both shoulders, standing forth as a champion of democracy through his participation in the national defense program, and at the same time riding roughshod over the democratic rights of the men in his department."

AFL Wants Scabs, Finks To Vote!

Philadelphia, July 5 — Having signed up scabs and strikebreakers at the Penn A. C., on strike by the CIO Hotel & Restaurant Workers for the past 11 months, the AFL this week asked the State Labor Relations Board for an election.

Martin Coffey, business agent of the CIO union, commented that the AFL's action apparently represents a policy of "digging out and getting new members at all costs. So frantic have they become that they are reaching into the ranks of scabs and strikebreakers for dues-paying members."

Apprentice Jobs On Increase

Washington, July 5—The number of apprentices employed in all industries increased some 28 per cent during September 1940 and March 1941, William F. Patterson, chief of apprenticeship in the Division of Labor Standards, told union research directors at a conference held last week at the U. S. Dept. of Labor.

The increase was attributed to the demands of the national defense program and the combined efforts exerted by the Apprenticeship Unit and the Training-Within-Industry section of OPM.

"Interest in apprenticeship has been accelerated," Patterson said, "to the extent that during the past fiscal year we have obtained results that almost equal our total results for the six previous years. In May alone, records show, apprenticeship field men made more than 6,500 contacts."

LADIES TAKE THE FLOOR: The distaff side was much in evidence in Detroit last week, as the American Newspaper Guild's Auxiliary held its convention while the men folk were meeting for their annual pow-wow. Borax Miners Protest Effort To Smash Strike

LOS ANGELES, July 5—Use of California's new reactionary anti-sabotage law as a device to break the strike of 1,100 workers at the American Potash & Chemical Co. plant, located in the desert town of Trona, brought vigorous protests today from CIO leaders here.

Sheriffs of San Bernardino County helped escort a few scabs through the picket line maintained at Trona by Local 414 of the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, which for the past three months has been seeking to get a decent contract from the joint British-Nazi owned corporation, one of the nation's largest producers of borax.

Earlier, Pres. Reid Robinson of the union had wired Pres. Roosevelt and OPM chiefs that the company was seeking to provoke a bloody fight in the desert town, and asked the government to take steps to avert such a situation. He charged that the company had placed police at the company gates to prevent a union negotiating committee and a U. S. Labor Dept. Conciliator from meeting with the management to negotiate issues involved.

CONTEMPT OF COURT

Having deliberately prevented collective bargaining, the firm is now seeking to promote a back-to-work movement, Robinson charged. The union leader, a CIO vice president, reminded Pres. Roosevelt that the firm's action put it in contempt of a circuit court decree which ordered compliance with an NLRB decision which found the firm in violation of the Wagner Act.

Last week, on the 100th day of the strike, the union decisively rejected the company's first counter-proposal in two months. Members charged that the proffered wage scale was far below that of competitors, and that its union security offer was ridiculous in light of the British-Nazi owned firm's past flouting of labor laws.

District 50 Chalking Up Many Wins

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 5—District 50, the gas, coke and chemical division of the United Mines Workers of America, is driving ahead on many fronts, according to reports reaching here today.

Strkie actions involving 7,500 workers and completed contracts covering 7,400 workers marked the week for District 50.

At the 3,500-man plant of the Dow Chemical Company at Midland, Mich., District 50 this week won a two day strike for the reinstatement of a discharged unionist. The successful strike is expected to carry a vote for CIO over a company union at an NLRB election on July 8.

GYPSUM STRIKE

Meanwhile, 18 plants of the far-flung chain of the U. S. Gypsum Company closed in a strike of 3,000 workers for a master contract covering all plants. Since the strike began Thursday, June 26, three previously unorganized plants have joined the original 14, which account for 75 per cent of the company's productive capacity and about 40 per cent of the nation's production of Gypsum products.

Four strong contracts at major plants have been chalked up this week by District 50. Fourteen hundred employees at the Parke Davis Company will operate under a closed shop contract and will receive wages far above any paid elsewhere in the drug industry. Women will receive a minimum of 68 cents per hour and men a minimum of 85 cents per hour at the Detroit factory.

The new rates, which average $1.05 per hour, are believed to be the highest paid in the chemical industry. Laborers and janitors will receive a minimum of 80 cents per hour after three months employment and mechanics will be paid $1.38 and $1.43 per hour.

The 2,000 workers at the Diamond Alkali Company, Fairport Harbor, O., got an eight cent increase and a union shop in their District 50 contract.

The 2,800 workers of the Brown Company, Barlin, N. H., have a maintenance of membership clause in their CIO contract and a substantial wage increase.

Alabama CIO Opposes Further Funds for Dies; Pres. Mitch Re-elected

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., July 5—Opposing further appropriation for the Dies Committee, the Alabama CIO Industrial Union Council in a resolution passed at the third annual convention held here last week-end, said that the money squandered by Dies could be better spent to aid the unemployed.

More than 400 delegates from CIO unions in coal, steel, textile, rubber and other industries in the state, attended the two-day convention of the State Council, which was opened here June 28 by William H. Crawford, president of the Birmingham CIO Council.

William Mitch, who was unanimously re-elected president of the Alabama Council the second day of the convention, in his address the first day, launched a bitter attack on the Dies Committee for "smearing" union members as reds.

ASK BETTER SECURITY LAW

He also criticized the state's social security law, declaring that it should be junked. "If any state were given a loving cup for the sorriest social security law," Mitch said, "Alabama would certainly win the prize."

Other speakers heard by the delgates included John Brophy, director of industrial union councils; Alton Lawrence, of Labor's Non-Partisan League; Howard Lee, secretary of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare, and Walter Harris, in charge of the CIO Shoe Workers Organizing drive, representing Allan S. Haywood, national director of organization, who was unable to attend.

Under a constitutional change voted at the convention, the office of secretary-treasurer, held by Yelverton Cowherd, regional director, was made appointive instead of elective, as formerly, and Cowherd was appointed by the Executive Board to serve another term.

Noel Beddow, John O. Parsons, J. E. Robinson and Herbert Williams were re-elected as vice presidents and Fred Allen was elected as fifth vice president.

INVITE LEWIS

Delegates voted unanimously to urge Pres. John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers to visit the area.

The convention passed resolutions condemning the poll tax and reaffirming support of the Geyer Anti-Poll Tax bill and the anti-lynching bill.

It also urged unions to fight passage of the Vinson bill; asked for a government investigation of the high initiation fees charged by AFL unions; opposed any changes aimed to break down the Wage-Hour Act; called upon the government to refuse contracts to firms discriminating against Negro workers, and barred from seating as delegates any who belong to Nazi, Bund, Communist or Ku Klux Klan groups.

ANTI-LABOR MAY BILL KILLED BY CIO DRIVE

DECLARE WAR ON ANTI-LABOR BILLS: Some of the 225 representatives of CIO unions and state councils who gathered in Washington last week at the call of Pres. Philip Murray to offer strong resistance to the current flock of anti-labor bills in Congress. Delegates unanimously voted opposition to reactionary measures, later went to call upon Senators and Congressmen.

Office Union Protests WPA Slash

New York, July 12 — A half million more underprivileged Americans face the spectacle of hunger because of the passage of an inadequate WPA appropriation, Lewis Merrill, president of the CIO United Office and Professional Workers, declared this week in a letter to President Roosevelt.

The union president wrote that according to WPA Administrator Howard Hunter, 415,000 WPA workers will be dismissed within two weeks.

"Cuts are being made with special severity on white collar projects," Merrill declared, and suggested "immediate remedy" of this situation.

Merrill cited the statement of the President of the Boston City Council who declared that WPA reductions would hit hardest the "thousands of so-called white collar workers for whom there is no place in the defense program."

CIO Wins Aircraft Poll

BENDIX, N. J., July 12— The CIO United Automobile Workers aircraft division won a National Labor Relations Board election at Air Associates last week.

The poll showed 206 voting for the CIO as against 188 for no union. Approximately 500 workers are employed in this plant.

VISITS WHITE HOUSE: CIO Pres. Philip Murray shown as he left the White House this week after conveying to Pres. Roosevelt the CIO's determined opposition to anti-labor bills now in Congress. CIO delegations also visited Vice-Pres. Wallace and Speaker of the House Rayburn.

220-149 Vote Swamps No-Strike Plan In House

WASHINGTON, July 10—In a smashing 220-149 roll-call vote that directly reflected CIO's political strength, the House of Representatives late today killed all anti-labor sections of the Connally-May bill, passing only the clause lowering the draft age limit to 28.

The vote, coming after two days of bitter debate in which anti-labor Congressmen "charged" the CIO with marshalling labor's opposition, showed the results of intensive mass lobbying by a force of 250 CIO representatives who came to Washington from all parts of the country to fight down the drive against labor's right to organize, bargain collectively, and strike.

By this vote, the House buried proposals that would have meant government strikebreaking through seizure and operation of struck plants, through use of the army to protect strikebreakers, and through heavy criminal penalties against strikers and pickets.

CIO and Labor's Non-Partisan League officials warned however that dangers still remained in the Congressional situation, citing the Vinson bill, the Ball "cooling-off" bill, and other anti-union proposals that could be called up at any time.

Sign Contract

Cleveland, July 12—A one year contract, providing for wage increases from four to 15 cents an hour, was signed between Local 12148, District 50, United Mine Workers and the Glidden Paint Co., Paul Pribish, secretary of the local, announced.

The new pact also includes many other gains, such as time and one-half for overtime and seniority rights. The plant is now 100 per cent organized.

Hit Wage Cut By NYA

New York, July 12—Reduction of wages and increase in hours by the National Youth Administration was protested by the National Maritime Union this week.

The sailors union viewed it as a threat to labor standards in New York City.

ALL IN FAVOR SAY AYE: That sea of upraised hands shows how CIO United Automobile Workers at the North American Aviation Corp., Inglewood, Calif., feel about their new contract. By a unanimous vote the men okayed the 12-cent raise and other features of the pact, negotiated by Richard Frankensteen of the UAW at Natl. Defense Mediation Board hearings. Company was the scene of a strike last month at which the federal troops were called out.

Legislative Conference:

Jones Charges Democrats Direct Anti-Labor Drive

WASHINGTON, July 12—Majority party leaders in Congress and "fair-weather friends" of labor are directing the anti-labor drive through their support of anti-strike and compulsory arbitration bills, John T. Jones, CIO legislative representative and director of Labor's Non-Partisan League, reported to the delegates at the special CIO legislative conference here.

Jones' report was unanimously approved by the 250 CIO representatives present from all CIO affiliates.

Detailing the history of these bills in recent weeks, Jones pointed out that the majority leadership's attitude was clearly shown by "actual promotion of certain anti-labor measures and unspoken but clearly implied support of other measures."

In addition to refusing to speak against the Vinson bill, House Leader McCormack swung his support to the Case amendment at the last moment during the debate of June 9, thereby assuring its passages, Jones charged. The Case amendment, he said, "completely eliminated the right to strike and imposed compulsory arbitration upon all defense industry."

BOTH HOUSES

Following this, the House Military Affairs Committee, by unanimous vote brought out the Connally-May bill, which added even more drastic provisions to the original Connally amendment, including five year jail sentences for pickets, a national blacklist of strikers in seized plants, and army protection for scabs crossing picket-lines. This committee, Jones pointed out, made its unanimous report "at the request of the army."

Jones further said that "support of the administration for the Vinson bill has become increasingly apparent," pointing out that the revised version presented some weeks ago was "drawn with the advice and consultation in several conferences of Sidney Hillman, Harry Millis, chairman of the Natl. Labor Relations Board and Wm. H. Davis, chairman of the Defense Mediation Board."

ANTI-LABOR COURSE

"While professing friendship for labor and claiming labor's political support on the basis of that friendship, the majority leadership has pursued an anti-labor course," Jones said.

"Labor will not be satisfied with fair-weather friends. Those who can justly claim the right to labor's support must defend labor and all of labor's rights, especially in times when it is difficult to do so, when labor's ancient enemies, and the traditionally anti-labor press are howling the loudest for labor's scalp.

"It must be made clear that regardless of what a Congressman's or a party's record may have been in the past, labor will evaluate their friendship on the basis of their attitude toward these present crucial issues.

"I emphasize these matters to you because in my humble opinion they constitute a major consideration if we are to evolve a successful opposition to those elements that would destroy the American labor movement."

CIO Opposes Formation Of 'Advisory' Groups; Murray Urges Council Plan

WASHINGTON, July 12—Opposition to formation of more industry advisory groups by the government was expressed in a resolution adopted at the CIO special legislative conference here. The resolution, adopted unanimously by the 250 delegates, also urged renewed effort to secure adoption of the industry councils plan put forward some time ago by Pres. Murray and endorsed by the last CIO executive board meeting. The resolution said:

"Resolved that the CIO stands opposed to the establishment of any more industry advisory groups and does hereby endorse and approve the CIO defense industry council plan; and that every person here and every union or organization affiliated with the CIO shall work diligently through its own units and through all state and local industrial union councils of the CIO to bring about the establishment of the CIO industry council plan by the government."

PROTECTION FOR LABOR

Speaking on the resolution, Pres. Murray pointed out that the plan was designed "to protect the interests of labor in America," through the setting up of joint industry and labor councils to be presided over by an impartial chairman appointed by the President of the U. S.

"The functions of labor and industry and government in each of these councils would be to provide the proper allocation of goods produced within each industry," Murray said, "to prevent through proper administration the discriminatory practices heretofore exercised by certain governmental agencies in the distribution of business."

Despite CIO approval for the plan, "nothing has happened," Murray added. In its place, the OPM has produced a proposal for more advisory groups which "have been designed to deceive rather than help."

"The OPM has had for the past three months or longer under serious consideration the creation of joint industry labor advisory groups, these joint labor industry advisory groups to merely meet, adopt some kind of resolution, present it to someone and then have nothing done about it."

Murray's criticism of advisory groups was joined by Pres. R. J. Thomas of the UAWA-CIO, Pres. Dalrymple of the Rubber Workers, and Pres. Harry Bridges of the Intl. Longshoremens and Warehousemens Union.

Legislative Parley Hears Pressman Analyze Bills

WASHINGTON, July 12—Anti-labor bills recently brought up in Congress—a total of 11, plus one in preparation—were analyzed in a detailed memorandum presented to the CIO special legislative conference here this week by Lee Pressman, CIO gneral counsel, who told the conference that they boiled down to three main objectives:

Restriction and elimination of the right to strike; imposition of compulsory arbitration and seizure and operation by the government of struck plants, leading to government strikebreaking and denial of collective bargaining to workers.

Another common characteristic of all but one of these measures, Pressman pointed out, was the fact that they were reported out without public hearings or advance notice, several of them tacked on to other bills as amendments in the hope to tricking their way through to passage.

FOUR AMENDMENTS

Discussing the four anti-labor amendments, the Case, Pace and May amendments in the House, and the Connally amendment in the Senate, Pressman pointed out that none of them had been subject to public hearings, despite the serious effect they would have on labor, and that an attempt was made to rush them through to a vote with little or no advance notice.

Of the four, the Case, Pace and May amendments would have provided for a blacklist of strikers in defense plants and would have denied jobs to workers who refused to abide by Defense Board Mediation recommendation for more than 10 days after they were made. These two were passed in the House after support by Majority Leader McCormick, later dropped in the Senate.

The Connally amendment, providing for government seizure and operation of struck plants, passed the Senate as an amendment to the conscription act, and was also shoved through without hearings, Pressman explained.

"It is specifically provided that any such plant taken over shall be returned to its owners whenever the President determines that such plants will be privately operated in a manner consistent with the needs of national defense," Pressman said.

"In other words, as soon as the labor dispute is disposed of by breaking the strike or otherwise, the plant will be returned to the original owners intact. There is no threat to the employers in terms of their profits but the entire burden is placed upon and the sole threat directed against the workers."

More WPA Funds Asked By Delegates

Washington, July 12.—Charging that federal and state relief appropriations are being cut far below the amount needed, delegates to the CIO Legislative Conference this week urged Pres. Roosevelt and Congress to increase the present WPA allotment or otherwise make provision "for increased WPA employment immediately."

The resolution, passed unanimously, pointed out that unemployment is still over the seven-million mark, and that coming scarcities of materials and machinery "will prevent the wiping out of unemployment in the foreseeable future by forcing the replacement of civilian industry by defense industry."

Earlier the conference heard Ralph Hetzel, Jr., CIO director of research, predict that defense production will not reduce the present number of unemployed by "any more than 2½ million during the coming year" and that the "decrease in unemployment will, in all probability, be less."

CITES FIGURES

He quoted official WPA figures to show that only 20% of the U. S. defense orders are being placed in areas containing 80% of the WPA workers. "This means," he said, "that a considerable number of the workers now on WPA cannot, because of the great concentration of defense orders in certain locations, secure employment as a result of the defense program."

Cuts in civilian production, Hetzel said, will further aggravate the employment situation. An anticipated cut of 50% in automobile production "will displace at least 200,000 workers, and less than half this number are expected to secure other employment . . . Many thousands of workers will find themselves the victims of priority unemployment."

NO SCABS IN SIGHT: Officials of the British-Nazi owned American Potash & Chemical Co., located in the desert at Trona, Calif., must have felt terrible when their back-to-work movement, aimed at smashing a strike for higher pay, proved a complete flop. Lots of pickets, members of the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, were on hand, and the scabs were few and far between. Strike against the firm, a veteran flouter of the Wagner Act, has been in progress three months.

CIO Condemns Anti-Labor Bills; Pressure Kills No-Strike Plan

WASHINGTON, July 12—Firm determination to fight all attempts in Congress and government to wipe out labor's rights through anti-strike laws and other repressive acts was voiced by 250 delegates representing five million CIO members at the special legislative conference called here by Pres. Murray on Monday, July 7.

The one day meeting, called to plan national action against the Connally-May bill and other proposals to restrict the right to strike and impose compulsory arbitration, heard Pres. Murray warn that "never in the history of organized labor has there been such a concerted effort on the part of certain of our legislative representatives in the Federal Congress to defeat the aims of labor."

Following Murray's warning, which was underlined in speeches by Pres. John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers and other CIO leaders, the conference unanimously worked out a program to:

1. Defeat the Connally-May bill, the Vinson bill, the Ball bill and all similar measures "which curtail in any way the rights of labor."

2. Condemn the use of troops to break strikes.

3. Oppose wage cuts through systems of forced savings and heavy taxation on workers and other low income groups.

4. Urge government establishment of industry councils as outlined in the CIO defense plan, and to fight the establishment of "labor advisory commissions" being prompted by the Office of Production Management.

5. Secure added WPA appropriations to take care of the seven million who are unemployed despite the defense program.

COMMITTEES SET UP

In addition, the conference voted authority to Pres. Murray to set up three committees to make labor's views on anti-union bills clear to Congressional and government leaders, one to visit President Roosevelt, the second to call on Vice President Wallace, and the third to call on House Speaker Rayburn, Majority Leader McCormack and Minority Leader Martin.

These visits were supplemented by lobbying by the delegates, who visited many of the Congressmen, and by a rush program of wires from affiliates of each of the CIO national and international unions and the State Councils represented at the conference.

FAIR WEATHER FRIENDS

Full responsibility for the current anti-labor drive was placed on Congress leaders and "fair-weather friends" of labor in the House and the government by the conference, in unanimously approving the report of CIO Legislative Representative John T. Jones, who told the delegates:

"While professing friendship for labor and claiming labor's support on the basis of that friendship, the majority leadership has pursued an anti-labor course.

"The majority leaders should, in my opinion, be impressed with the fact that they must choose between labor support on the one hand, and their own support of these anti-labor measures on the other. Labor will not be satisfied with fair-weather friends. Those who can justly claim the right to labor's support must defend labor and all of labor's rights, especially in times when it is difficult to do so, when labor's ancient enemies, and the traditionally anti-labor press, are howling the loudest for labor's scalp."

ANALYSIS OF BILLS

The conference heard an analysis of pending anti-labor bills by Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, who gave a detailed survey of the Connally-May bill, the Vinson bill, the Ball bill, the Reynolds bill, the Ramsay bill, the Disney bill, the Walters bill, and the rejected Case and Pace amendments.

As analyzed by Pressman, these measures boiled down to three main objectives, all of them anti-labor: 1) Restriction and abolition of the right to strike; 2) Imposition of compulsory arbitration in all disputes; 3) Authorization to the government to break strikes through seizure and operation of plants on strike or threatened by strikes, denying collective bargaining to workers.

MURRAY'S SPEECH

Pres. Murray's opening speech stressed the dangers of compulsory arbitration to workers' living standards, which he warned gave to a few men the power to regulate the lives of millions.

"Compulsory arbitration does not merely stop with the figure of what a wage should be or what it will be," he said. "Determination of these wages by boards of arbitration runs deep down into the lives of millions of women and children as well as workers employed in American industry. A board which is given the power to designate wages is given the power to regulate lives or even prescribe death."

LEWIS SPEAKS

Following his opening speech and the reading of the two main reports, Pres. Murray called on John L. Lewis, who told the delegates of the experience of the UMWA with government intervention in the past and in its recently completed contract negotiations, and who urged the CIO to "hitch up its trousers, roll up its sleeves, spit on its hands and get to work" to defeat all attempts to hamstring labor.

Lewis's speech, the first addressed to a national CIO group since

Statement Of Policy On Bills

Organized labor under the leadership of the CIO has made tremendous strides forward in recent years. This onward march is being seriously threatened by repressive and anti-labor bills now pending in Congress. The proposed legislation is aimed at eliminating the right to strike, imposing compulsory arbitration and generally to frustrate organizing efforts among the unorganized workers.

The delegates of all the national, international unions and organizing committees and state industrial union councils assembled in conference today hereby adopt the following program:

(1) All pending bills in Congress which curtail in any way the rights of labor, such as the May and Connally bills, the Vinson bill and the Ball bill are severely condemned. These representatives in Congress who support such legislation must understand that they are assuming a position inimical to organized labor and will be so understood.

(2) The President of the CIO is authorized to designate a committee to call upon the President of the United States, and the of the House, the Vice-President of the United tSates, and the Majority and Minority Leaders of both Houses to present these views of the CIO, and to obtain the assurances of the people's representatives that the democratic and legal rights of labor must and shall remain unimpaired.

Anti-Union Bill Swamped By 220-149 Vote in House

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, July 10—The May-Connally bill, designed to break strikes and hamstring unions, was defeated in all its anti-labor sections today in a 220-149 House vote that clearly demonstrated CIO's mass strength in defense of labor's rights.

The vote came three days after the special CIO legislative conference called by President Murray brought more than 250 delegates from all CIO affiliates to Washington to map action plans against the May bill and other anti-union measures pending in Congress.

The original Connally amendment passed over a month ago by the Senate remained, however, and can still be considered when the deleted May bill goes to conference between House and Senate committee members. This amendment, tacked on to the conscription act, provides for government seizure and operation of struck plants, and could be used to back strikes.

Embittered "charges" by such tory diehards as Rep. Smith of Va. that the CIO workers' lobby was directly responsible for the defeat of the anti-labor sections of the bill were seen as proof of the vigor and effectiveness of CIO opposition, both as shown in the special CIO conference and demonstrated during a period of weeks after the anti-labor bills came up.

An interesting sidelight was the large number of Republican Congressmen who voted to delete all the anti-labor sections of the bill, leaving only the clause lowering the draft age limit to 28. Of the 220 votes for deletion, 94 came from the Republican side and the balance from the Democrats, with one from the sole American Labor Party Representative, Vito Marcantonio. Of the 149 votes to retain, 104 were from Democrats and 45 from Republicans.

Observers noted that the attitude of the House majority leadership, which had previously refused to speak out against the May bill and other anti-union measures, changed after the CIO protest was organized and made plain on a mass basis.

COMMITTEES VISIT

In addition to the mass descent on Congressmen, calls were made on President Roosevelt by Murray, on Speaker Rayburn and Majority Leader McCormack by a committee headed by Thomas Kennedy, secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers, and on Vice-Pres. Wallace by a group headed by John T. Jones, CIO legislative representative and director of Labor's Non-Partisan League.

CIO Leaders Condemn Use of Troops Against Striking Workers

WASHINGTON, July 12—Sharp condemnation of the use of troops to break strikes featured the special CIO legislative conference held here. The delegates voted unanimously to adopt the following resolution:

"Resolved that the CIO approve the stand of President Philip Murray, United Automobile Workers President R. J. Thomas and United Mine Workers President John L. Lewis in emphatically condemning the use of the armed forces to break strikes."

Earlier in the conference Lewis had denounced the use of troops for strike-breaking purposes. He told the delegates that the coal miners knew from experience what a government could do when it undertook to use the armed forces against strikers.

Lewis sharply declared that he was opposed to any party or any politician or other individual who condoned or advocated the "use of the U. S. Army to break strikes with their bayonets in the backs of American workers."

Pres. Thomas of the UAW-CIO declared that he, as well as Murray, had opposed the use of the army in the North American Aviation Co. strike in California. He said the strike could have been settled by the union if it had been permitted a little more time to work out an agreement.

PREVIOUS ATTEMPTS

Lewis reminded the delegates of two attempts to break UMW strikes in this manner, one in 1919 and another in 1922, when first a Democratic and then a Republican Congress had voted such power to the then President; but the miners had won in both instances.

He added that even the most powerful unions were not safe if laws sanctioning this and other anti-union tactics were passed by Congress and signed by the President.

Southern Coal Miners Win Demands In Pact

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, July 12—Southern soft coal mine owners on July 7 signed on the dotted line of a United Mine Workers contract, thereby averting a strike of 150,000 workers scheduled for 24 hours later and bringing the CIO's biggest union to the climax of the greatest victory in its 51-year history.

The pact, signed a fortnight ago by the northern bituminous operators for some 300,000 workers, eliminates once and for all the southern differential in the miners' basic pay, and sets the rate at $7 a day throughout the Appalachian area. Close to a quarter of a million dollars a year will thus flow into the mine workers' pay envelopes. The wage increases are retroactive to May 1, when work was resumed after a one-month shutdown.

The union shop, vacations with pay for the first time in the industry's history, elimination of the "reject clause" under which the miners were frequently cheated out of their wages and practically every other major UMW demand were included in the contract.

Two clauses offered by the UMW to which the southern operators had offered strong objections—in which the operators had been supported by the Mediation Board—were included in the agreement. One gives the UMW the right to "call and maintain strikes . . . when necessary to preserve and maintain the integrity and competitive parity of this agreement;" the other allows the union to designate certain "memorial periods" through which the miners could dramatize mine accidents or arouse more public interest in more efficient safety devices.

Completion of the contract negotiations on the basis of the union's overwhelming victory was a triumph for Pres. John L. Lewis and the UMW's other leaders and negotiators. The agreement was signed in the nation's capital, almost deserted by government workers enjoying their three-day holiday weekend.

LEWIS' COMMENT

As soon as the contract had been signed, Pres. Lewis dictated this statement to newspapermen:

"Mr. L. Ebersole Gaines (chairman of the southern operators' group) and I announced the signing and executing of a joint Southern Appalachian agreement. It represents the work of several months' negotiations and affects vital interests of great magnitude, vital to the welfare and stability of our domestic economy and national defense program.

"We each express our satisfaction in the accomplishment. The

A Signal Victory

"John L. Lewis has won a signal victory. It is perhaps the greatest ever won in industrial history. Never has such a conquest been achieved. The head of the miners' union won 98 per cent of all his demands. The demands he waived were minor in nature."

The above words are not the rejoicing of a labor writer over the great union victory achieved by the United Mine Workers of America in the final consummation of its new agreement. They are the admission of an anti-labor columnist, David Lawrence by name, who views this labor achievement with great alarm.

His fear is that the abolition of the southern differential in the UMWA agreement will lead to the ending of sub-standard wages in all other southern industries as well.

But Lawrence's fears in this respect are labor's hopes. And our delight at the Mine Workers' victory is enhanced by the knowledge that it will be far-reaching indeed in its influence.

After months of negotiations, in which the United Mine Workers made full use of their collective bargaining powers, President John L. Lewis was able to announce an agreement, covering the whole Appalachian area, South as well as North, and embodying virtually all of the union's demands.

In the South as well as North the basic wage is now $7 a day, as against $6 in the North and $5.60 in the South before. Altogether something like a quarter billion dollars will be added to the miners' pay envelopes as a result of the agreements in the Appalachian area.

Vacations with pay are granted for the first time in mining history and dozens of other improvements in conditions are included. Noteworthy in this connection is the fact that the agreement also includes the granting of a number of the miners' demands which the Mediation Board rejected, but which the union won through subsequent negotiations.

For labor generally there is an important lesson in this magnificent victory. It was won only through the full exercise of labor's democratic collective bargaining rights, and by a militant leadership which would not truckle to any form of compulsory arbitration.

The miners depended in the last analysis on their right to strike to make their bargaining power effective. If this right had been taken away or surrendered they could never have achieved so much.

The Mine Workers, under Lewis' leadership, have again set an example to all of labor. Their victory will bolster the claims and aid the efforts of all other unions. It will bring new hope to all the underpaid workers in the South, as well as new protection to Northern workers against undercutting of standards. And finally, it will steel labor's resistance to all current attempts to destroy its collective bargaining rights.

Let's Push Our Plan

Besides recording its active opposition to all bills before Congress, which curtail in any way the rights of labor, the special legislative conference of the CIO also adopted an important affirmative stand by resolving to push more vigorously than ever the industry council plan proposed by President Philip Murray.

This Murray plan became the CIO Defense Plan when it was officially and unanimously endorsed by the CIO executive board six months ago.

Designed to protect labor's interests, to preserve democratic rights, and to give labor more adequate representation, this plan is the constructive contribution of the CIO to a saner and more efficient administration of the defense program.

In fact, it is the only real plan that has been advanced to provide for a fair allocation of government contracts and reemployment of the unemployed; to insure adequate production of consumers' goods as well as war production, and to guard against post-war economic dislocations.

In place of this plan, proposals are now being advanced for industry and labor advisory committees, starting with the aviation, rubber, and aluminum industries.

These proposals, Murray said, are "designed to deceive rather than to help." The committees, he pointed out, would be without any real power and would simply add to the prevailing confusion.

The conference gave its unanimous support to Murray's vigorous attack on these proposals, and called upon every CIO union and council to renew its efforts and its demands upon the government for the adoption of the CIO industry council plan.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

THE SPECIAL legislative conference of the CIO was an emergency meeting, of a kind never called before, to cope with an extraordinary and menacing situation. It was marked by straight talk and quick action.

Though called at short notice, the conference brought to Washington some 250 representatives of every CIO union and most of the state councils. It was as representative as a small convention, though devoted to a single objective.

Some of the highspots of the conference were the frank and revealing report of Legislative Representative John T. Jones; the denunciation of compulsory arbitration by President Philip Murray and his later speech against "advisory committee" substitutes for his industry council plan, and the fighting speech of John L. Lewis against use of troops to break strikes and other repressive measures.

JONES' REPORT, unanimously approved by the gathering, related the damning facts about the shenanigans on Capitol Hill that had placed labor's rights in jeopardy.

He told of the trick methods to slip through anti-labor measures in the form of amendments; of the kidnapping of bills away from the Labor Committee, and of the hysteria to which Congress had been yielding.

Finally Jones pointed to the betrayal of labor by many of its alleged friends in Congress, and to the responsibility of the majority leadership in both House and Senate for the whole situation.

"While professing friendship for labor and claiming labor's political support on the basis of that friendship, the majority leadership has pursued an anti-labor course," Jones said.

"The majority leaders should, in my opinion, be impressed with the fact that they must choose between labor support, on the one hand, and their own support of these anti-labor measures on the other. Labor will not be satisfied with fair-weather friends."

MURRAY MADE a masterful analysis of the trend to compulsory arbitration apparent in all of the anti-labor bills.

He pointed out that compulsory arbitration would (1) "frustrate every legitimate attempt to organize the unorganized"; (2) end any real collective bargaining, since employers would simply refuse all union demands while awaiting the final arbitration decision, and (3) give to a board too much power to regulate the lives of millions by decreeing their wages, hours and working conditions.

Later Murray vigorously criticized the "national hodge-podge setup" for the administration of the defense program, and advanced the CIO industry council plan as the only constructive solution.

He called for outspoken opposition to the OPM proposals for industry and labor advisory committees, which he called "mere tinsel, mere dressing, with no right or power of decision."

LEWIS VOICED an urgent warning against false friends and outright enemies in the political world. He called on the CIO to "continue to be a fighting organization" that does not cringe, or apologize, or yield, but battles right down the line for the workers' interests.

Fresh from one of the greatest victories in labor history, the new United Mine Workers agreement, Lewis noted that this had been won through the firm refusal of the UMW to accept any compulsory arbitration.

After the case had been certified to the Mediation Board, over the protest of the United Mine Workers, he said, the union had rejected those points in the Board's decision which displeased it and had negotiated through to a more satisfactory conclusion.

Lewis lashed out at the politicians elected by Mine Workers' and general labor votes who are now pushing anti-labor measures. He also assailed the "use of the United States Army to break strikes with their bayonets in the backs of American workingmen."

Lewis' position in this respect was unanimously upheld by the conference in a resolution which expressed approval of his stand and that of President Murray and UAW President R. J. Thomas "in emphatically condemning the use of the armed forces to break strikes."

THE UNANIMOUSLY adopted actions of the conference against all the anti-union measures threatening in Congress made their impact felt in Washington at once.

They were communicated to the President, the Vice-President and the majority and minority leaders of both Houses by delegations, and many individual members of Congress were also visited. The CIO served fair warning to all that those who seek labor's support must defend labor's rights when they are so seriously threatened as at present.

industry will now be able to go forward in a program of increasing production, while working out details of the several district agreements which will be taken up in due order and in our judgment represent no difficult task."

Gaines concurred in Lewis' statement.

The threat to shut down the southern mines came late in June when the Harlan County, Ky., Coal Operators' Assn. stubbornly refused to sign the contract, to which the remaining 12 southern associations had already given assent. Lewis warned that failure of the Harlan bosses to get in line by July 8 would result in a strike.

Signing the pact for the UMW were: Lewis, Vice Pres. Philip Murray, Sec.-Treas. Thomas Kennedy, Van A. Bittner, head of District 17; William Turnblazer, head of District 19; John Saxton, District 28, and Sam Caddy, District 30.

COMPLEX PRESSURES

Pres. Lewis guided the UMW negotiators through one of the most complex situations ever facing the powerful mine workers union, and the final victory was a tribute to the fact that both membership and leaders stood fast by their original demands despite powerful outside pressures.

The negotiations opened early in March. Early in the sessions the UMW urged that if no settlement were reached by the contract expiration date on April 1, work be continued with wage increases retroactive to that date. The operators refused that proposal, and when the mines shut down on April 1 the union's offer for continued operations cut through the wave of anti-union propaganda directed at Lewis and the UMW.

PROPAGANDA CAMPAIGN

As the shutdown progressed, the northern operators agreed to the UMW's terms, but the refusal of the southern mine owners—who took their cause to the public through expensive and misleading newspaper advertisements — kept the nationwide shutdown in force. It was eventually ended when the southern operators finally accepted a peace formula suggested by Pres. Roosevelt, under which the men were to return to work and the pay increases would be retroactive to May 1.

At hearings before the Natl. Defense Mediation Board, the UMW and the operators presented their cases. Some time later the Board handed down a 26-page report embodying a number of suggestions favorable to the union—including abolition of the 40 cents a day southern differential — and many points in favor of the operators.

Negotiations were then reopened with the northern operators, who in mid-June signed a contract with the $7 a day minimum wage and other major UMW demands. But the southern operators were still divided, with the Harlan group refusing to accept the contract.

The UMW's international policy committee then called the strike for July 8—at the conclusion of a four-day vacation, the first in the southern coal fields—and directed the executive officers to take any further action deemed necessary. The final capitulation of the southern group removed the necessity of the strike.

With the coal miners now working for the highest wage in their history, and with the infamous southern differential—long an obstacle to industrial stability—the UMW has given powerful impetus to CIO unions throughout the country.

CIO Hits Bills to Curb Unions

his retirement as president last November, was emphatic in denouncing false friends of labor in Congress and in government who sought labor's support only to work and vote against labor in critical times like these.

He also spoke strongly on the use of troops against strikers, reminding the delegates that the coal miners had experienced this kind of strike-breaking on several occasions, and in opposition to compulsory arbitration, which he opposed regardless of what party or what individual advocated it.

All resolutions and actions of the conference were by unanimous veote, following discussion of the points raised. The special legislative conference, first of its kind called in the history of the CIO, brought delegates from all CIO national and international unions and 29 State Councils to deal with the menace to organized labor presented by the anti-union leadership in Congress and in government agencies.

Rap 'Forced Saving' Plan

Washington, July 12 — Plans for wagecuts through forced savings plans and heavy taxes on workers were sharply protested by the delegates at the special CIO legislative conference called by Pres. Murray here this week.

Pointing out that these forced savings plans were being put forward under the alibi of preventing inflation, the resolution declared:

"Resolved, that this conference reaffirm the determination of labor under the leadership of the CIO to improve the wages of American workers either by forced savings or through increased taxation on the working people.

"The CIO program calling for increased industrial and corporate taxes upon the higher brackets, increased excess profits taxes and increased inheritance taxes should be the basis of a real tax program.

"We affirm our conviction that the wage increases sought by organized labor will not cause inflation, but will rather rebound to the benefit of the nation by improving the health, welfare and livelihood of millions of American men, women and children."

During the discussion, it was pointed out that this forced savings and low income taxation plan was the direct opposite of the CIO drive to raise wages and living standards, and that if carried out, it might threaten the successes the CIO has won in increasing wages throughout basic industry.

'Fight Compulsory Arbitration'

By Pres. Philip Murray

I MIGHT say for the information of the delegation that never in the history of organized labor, at least within my memory, has there been such a concerted effort on the part of certain of our legislative representatives in the federal Congress to defeat the aims of labor. I can't remember any time in any session of Congress where any serious consideration had been given to the promotion of legislative enactment designed to impose upon the workers of this nation compulsory arbitration . . .

Compulsory arbitration in the first instance would definitely frustrate every legitimate attempt to organize the unorganized. Because where organizational campaigns were undertaken, the strikes might ensue as a result of the employer's refusal to recognize our right to organize, then the law would become immediately operative; operative through a writ of injunction imposing upon the individuals responsible for the conduct of the campaign of organizing the penalties set forth in the brilliant analysis of the Pace, Case amendments by our general counsel, Lee Pressman . . .

Would Endanger Rights

Secondly, where organizations do exist and where such organizations are recognized, and where the principle of collective bargaining has been definitely established, the promotion of true collective bargaining would also be definitely frustrated for this reason. that the employer at the beginning of the collective bargaining conference need only say "No" to the workers' demands, always looking down to the end of that road where the arbitration board would hear the case and eventually impose its decision. . . .

And thirdly, and perhaps most important, compulsory arbitration gives to a board to much power, entirely too much power. It gives to a board the right to regulate the lives of countless millions of people and it gives to a board the right to regulate hours of labor, conditions of employment and wages; and those three things mean life, life itself to the workers of this nation . . .

I have never known of any time in the history of this country the Congress of the United States to give serious consideration to the enactment of legislation designed to impose upon the workers of this country compulsory arbitration. The potency of labor organizations is gone if compulsory arbitration enters . . .

The powers given a board to establish wages, conditions of employment and hours of labor go too far, because labor is then placed in a position where it must ultimately throw its entire lot into the laps of a group of strange men, men who do not understand their problems; men who do not feel their pulse beats; men who are wholly unacquainted with the conditions under which they live . . .

To give to a board the right to regulate those things and definitely establish those things is giving to human beings too much power. It takes out of the realm of the democratic proceses of true collective bargaining the right of the workers to strike, to secure redress for wrongs that may be perpetrated against them. It definitely stops strikes under any and all circumstances and conditions . . .

Serious Legislation

My friends, this is serious. It is perhaps the most serious legislation that has ever confronted labor in the history of America. This situation is one to which the officers of your organization have been constantly directing their attention for the past several months.

Each time a strike takes place in any given plant in any given industry anywhere in the United States of America to promote the well-being of the workers, to establish collective bargaining, to increase wages and improve conditions of labor, each time a strike of that kind occurs in this country, some Congressman or some United States Senator arises to the floor and presents an amendment . . .

Compulsory arbitration does not merely stop with the figure of what a wage should be or what it will be. Determination of these wages by boards of arbitration runs deep down into the lives of millions of women and children as well as workers employed in American industry.

A board which is given the power to designate wages is given the power to regulate lives or even prescribe death. A board which is given the power to fix the head of a family's wages is also given the power to set forth and establish the condition under which that worker's children must live, their clothing, their food, their medicine, their shelter, their education.

So compulsory arbitration runs very, very deep into the lives of American working men and women and affects very seriously the lives of children in this country of ours . . .

It is time that labor speaks. The CIO is labor in America. Here we have the understanding, the knowledge, the intelligence, the militancy and the constructive leadership to do this job.

Industry Council Plan

By Pres. Murray

THERE is a matter to which I would like to direct your attention. I think it is very important. Some several months ago the President of the Congress of Industrial Organizations presented to the executive committee of the national CIO a program designed to create industry councils.

The plan was conceived to protect the interests of labor in America. It urged the creation of joint industry and labor management councils an dgave to the President of the United States authority to name an impartial chairman to preside over each of those industry councils. The work of the councils was to be administrative in nature, not advisory, rather administrative; each industry council to be charged with the direct responsibility of managing each of the defense industries jointly, that is through both labor and industry and government.

The functions of labor and industry and government in each of those councils would be to provide the proper allocation of goods produced within each industry; to prevent through proper administration the discriminatory practices heretofore exercised by certain governmental agencies in the distribution of business.

No Action From U. S.

Nothing has happened. The industry plan has been scrapped by the federal government. There have been substituted for it some different ones which in the judgment of the President of the CIO have been designed to deceive rather than to help. I come now to what I regard as a very important issue.

The Office of Production Management has had for the past three months or longer under serious consideration the creation of joint industry labor advisory groups, these joint labor industry advisory groups to merely meet, adopt some kind of resolution, present it to some one and then have nothing done about it.

There is no relationship between the industry council plan conceived by the national CIO and the plan of industry labor advisory groups contemplated by the Office of Production Management.

Protest Plans for OPM

The administration at the present time, through the Office of Production Management, has under consideration the immediate establishment of three industry labor advisory groups, notably in the aviation industry, in the rubber industry and in the aluminum industry.

I have made my own personal representations to Mr. Hillman against the creation of any more advisory groups in the federal government. I have suggested to him and I have argued about the establishment of the industry council plan endorsed by the CIO executive committee.

The result is that today and perhaps tomorrow, maybe next week, the Office of Production Management will announce the creation of advisory groups in those three groups; perhaps later on in other industries.

All that I can see in the creation of advisory committees down here in Washington is a furtherance of the jeopardy of our organizations functioning throughout the nation.

I am bringing this matter to your attention in order that you may give it the consideration which it deserves. I have voiced my personal protest against labor advisory groups. I have asked for the immediate institution of our industry council plan. I would like this meeting today, giving voice to its own opinion, to sanction the President of the organization speaking officially for you, to say to the Federal government that insofar as we are concerned we are definitely opposed to and do not want to have anything to do with industry labor advisory groups in the United States of America.

Research Director Ralph Hetzel said in his report that there are seven million able-bodied unemployed in the United States today, despite the fact that the record shows there are more workers employed in American industry today than at any other time.

The industry council plan will give consideration to the proper allocation of businesses, the proper expansion of these industries, that more could be done through the medium of the industry council plan to absorb idle labor in America than through any other source we know of.

From the standpoint of long range economic planning—planning for the downward spiral when it comes—and we believe it will come—that the industry council setup is more adoptable to the needs of American enterprise and American labor than anything ever yet conceived in the mind of man, because the job then would be given to people who know something about the job.

My friends, the industry council plan, if accepted by the Federal government, and we hope it will be in the end, will prove to be a boon to the cause of labor in America because it gives labor for the first time in the history of the country, executive responsible representation in the field of industry and in the field of government.

Would Benefit Labor

I am convinced that if labor is going to fight for forthright representation in industry and government, the best plan that has ever been conceived in the United States, looking forward to the establishment of labor's rights in America, is through the medium of the industry council plan.

The Aluminum Workers are confronted with these industry groups. The rubber industry is confronted with the same problem. The steel industry, through the issuance of priorities will be confronted within a short time with a labor advistory group in that industry, and so on down the lot, from the top to the bottom, industry will be completely polluted with industry labor advisory groups.

These groups are mere tinsel, mere window-dressing, having no right or power of decision and in most instances no right to give advice. And so to you I address this problem this afternoon, asking that you give to it the consideration to which I think it is entitled and the adoption of a program opposed to the creation of advisory groups within industries in the United States of America.

'The Gun At Labor's Head'

By John T. Jones
CIO Legislative Representative

FOR the last six months there has existed a constant danger that one or another of the various anti-labor proposals would be enacted into law. The regular legislative procedures of announcing the introduction of a bill, holding adequate hearings concerning its merits and demerits before the proper committee and providing for adequate debate on the floor of Congress have been largely done away with. Anti-labor legislation has been introduced as amendments and riders to all sorts of legislation. These actions are taken without advance notice, with no hearings, and with little debate.

By these procedures, a gun has been steadily levelled at the head of labor on Capitol Hill. Isolated strike situations, as you know, have been used by all the anti-labor forces of propaganda, to create a state of irrational hysteria. In my opinion those who have succumbed the quickest to this hysteria have been the Congressmen.

While we have had close calls in the past six months, and while there have been times in which it seemed impossible for us to avoid definite Congressional action, we now face a somewhat more critical and challenging situation. I must warn you against interpreting the statement that the Vinson Bill has been shelved as meaning that this danger has been eliminated.

In frankly reporting to you the problems we have faced in attempting to prevent the passage of anti-labor legislation during this session of Congress, I am compelled to emphasize the significance of the attitude of the majority leadership in both the Senate and the House. The attitude of the Democratic leadership to these measures included actual promotion of certain anti-labor measures and unspoken but clearly implied support of certain other measures. Above all, there has been no tendency on the part of party leadership to take an affirmative stand in the defense of labor's basic right. There has been little effort to utilize the party machinery to bring party members in on crucial roll calls or to use the party Whip in the defense of labor's interests.

Majority Position

Perhaps it would be well for me to be more specific and to tell you briefly the action of the majority leadership toward particular issues which have arisen. In the House of Representatives, the Majority Leader, John McCormack is the responsible spokesman for his group. Time and again Congressman McCormack has told representatives of my office that he could not speak against the Vinson Bill. He has used as his excuse the fact that he was Majority Leader. This, in itself, illustrates the lack of a positive position of protection of labor's rights on the part of the Democratic majority.

On June 9, 1941, during the debate on the ten million dollar Army Appropriation Bill, various anti-labor amendments were offered by Congressmen Starnes and Smith. In the course of the debate various votes were called for and it was clear that with the support of the majority leadership, all such proposals could be defeated. However, at the crucial point in the debate on the Smith amendments, Mr. McCormack came forward, announced his unequivocal support of an amendment to be offered by Congressman Case, which completely eliminated the right to a strike and imposed compulsory arbitration upon all defense industry. Mr. McCormack's action completely disrupted the forces that had been opposing the anti-labor measures, with the result that the Case amendment was passed in the House.

Support of the administration for the Vinson Bill has become increasingly apparent. Majority leaders have refused to express any opposition to the measure publicly. Privately, Congressman McCormack has confided that he favors a cooling-off period. More direct responsibility for the revised Vinson bill, however, is to be found in the fact that this revision was drawn with the advice and consultation in several conferences of Sidney Hillman, Harry Millis, chairman of the National Labor Relations Board, Dan Tracy, assistant Secretary of Labor, and William H. Davis, chairman of the National Defense Mediation Board. Congressman Vinson, the sponsor of this bill, was referred by President Roosevelt to these administration representatives for the express purpose of revising his original bill. Indeed, the revised version was written by William Davis, chairman of the National Defense Mediation Board.

The CIO's Attitude

As your legislative representative it is necessary for me to report that given the continued support of these anti-labor measures by the majority leadership in Congress, major pieces of anti-labor legislation will, in all probability, be enacted. While professing friendship for labor and claiming labor's political support on the basis of that friendship, the majority leadership has pursued an anti-labor course. The majority leaders should, in my opinion, be impressed with the fact that they must choose between labor support on the one hand, and their own support of these anti-labor measures on the other.

Labor will not be satisfied with fair weather friends. Those who can justly claim the right to labor's support must defend labor and all of labor's rights, especially in times when it is difficult to do so, when labor's ancient enemies, and the traditionally anti-labor press are howling the loudest for labor's scalp.

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

A significant victory has been achieved by District 50, United Mine Workers of America, in winning an NLRB election at the Dow Chemical plant, Midland, Michigan, which will resound throughout the industry. This firm has been noted for its anti-union policy for years. Plans are now being laid to follow up this success in other chemical plants all over the country.

The United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America have set an enviable record for the months of February, March and April, 1941. In this period they added 33,793 members, 25 existing contracts were renewed and 33 new ones signed, covering altogether 148,400 employes in 84 plants. This union also participated in 40 Labor Board elections during that period, winning 39 (of the total of 40 elections and six certifications) of them involving 10,822 workers, or 84% of all those involved in the elections, and losing only 16% of the employes involved. During these three months 22 new local unions were chartered—and they are still moving on.

LAUNDRY STRIKE

Paul Christopher, CIO representative in Tennessee, reports that a new union of laundry workers in Knoxville successfully concluded a strike at the Dixie Laundry, increasing wages from 14c to 20c an hour, and securing the discharge of all strikebreakers who had been hired to replace the strikers. A general campaign among laundry workers is now under way.

Organizer Charles Duarte of Los Angeles reports organization of 400 workers and conclusion of a successful strike, with a 15c-an-hour increase, vacations, and other improvements in the waste material field. He also reports successful negotiations of contracts including wage increases in numerous other industries; as well as the organization of 500 employes of the Pioneer Flintkote Company, where an election has been ordered.

Regional Director Frank Bender of Maryland reports several elections are about to take place around Baltimore, including the Hagerstown aviation plant, and the U. S. Industrial Chemicals Company.

MORE NEW SHOE LOCALS

Director Walter Harris of the Shoe Workers Organizing Drive reports the establishment of a total of 18 new charters in the months of May and June, since the drive began. Organization is progressing among the employes of the Heel and Rand, Brown Shoe Company and International Shoe Corporation.

Extension of the signed Ford agreement to plants outside of Detroit is moving rapidly. Workers are signing up in every plant throughout the nation.

Robert J. Davidson, regional director in Cincinnati, reports the following victory for the United Construction Workers: in an election at the M. B. Farrin Lumber Company in Cincinnati the vote was 115 for UCWOC, 62 for no union. He also reports an election won by the United Paper, Novelty and Toy Workers at the Maxwell Paper Company, Franklin, Ohio, and the successful conclusion of an agreement with the Axford Miami Paper Company, West Carrollton, Ohio.

VICTORIES IN MIDWEST

Director Neil Beam of Kansas City, Mo., advised that the election at the General Motors Chevy plant at Kansas City was won by a vote of 776 for the UAW-CIO to 214. 2,000 employes of the Ford Motor Company plant there have enrolled with the UAW-CIO. The UAW-CIO has also organized the Chrysler Parts Company plant. Director Beam also reports that the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee has signed an agreement with the Jensen-Salsbery Serum Company, providing for a union shop; and has signed up a majority of the workers in the Railroad Ice Company. The United Retail & Wholesale Employes signed union shop agreements with the Knight Biscuit Company and the Speas Manufacturing Company. The Percy Kent Bag Company signed a contract with the Textile Workers Union, providing a substantial increase in wages.

Regional Director Scholle, Detroit, reports the first charter in Detroit by the United Furniture Workers of America, with two plants already organized and negotiations going on for a contract. He also reports the signing of a contract with the Schulte Optical Company. Organization in Detroit is proceeding rapidly in every industry, following the signing of the Ford agreement.

The United Mine Workers of America completed the job with the Southern Coal Operators under the great leader, John L. Lewis, establishing uniformity of wages throughout the nation and many other improvements. Hats off the United Mine Workers of America!

Marine Convention Urges Seamen's Unity

By RAY TORR

CLEVELAND, July 9—The third biennial convention of the National Maritime Union got into full swing today on an enthusiastic note of unity for all American seamen in one industrial organization.

Chief recommendation in the officers' report, delivered by President Joseph Curran, was that east and west coast delegates to the convention work out a program on which can be used as a basis for bringing members of their respective unions closer together.

As long as seamen and other maritime workers are divided into craft or regional unions, the report argued, just so long will the struggle for higher wages and better working conditions be an uphill fight.

The high point of the convention so far was not action on an organizational issue, however. It was the appearance of Paul Robeson, the world's foremost singer, for whom a demonstration such as is rarely seen in trade union meetings was staged.

PRAISES NMU

Before singing, he praised the NMU for its progress in eliminating prejudice as a shipowner weapon against seasmen.

Shortly before the close of the Tuesday session, the rules were suspended to permit introduction of a special resolution supporting CIO President Philip Murray and UMW President John L. Lewis in their stand at Monday's CIO Legislative Conference against those who are aiding the employers in their present assault on the labor movement.

"John L. Lewis, in exposing the role of these misleaders of labor performed a great and much-needed service not only to the trade union movement but to the American people," the resolution read.

FIGHT FASCISM

In his opening remarks to the convention, President Curran stressed the need for the American labor movement regardless of its own differences, immediately to rally for support of the Soviet Union in its fight against fascism.

Two main problems face the labor movement today, he said:

1. On the domestic front, to make sure that the CIO continues to exist;

2. On the international front, to support anyone who is fighting the one foe of the democratic world—Fascism.

This is, by far, the biggest convention of seamen in the history of shipping. By the end of the first day, 320 delegates had registered—nine-tenths of them from ships, the balance elected by the membership in various coastal, Great Lakes and river ports.

Speakers Ask Marine Drive

CLEVELAND, July 12—A vigorous plea for unity of West Coast seamen with the Natl. Maritime Union in a single national industrial union was voiced by Pres. Harry Bridges of the Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, speaking at the NMU Convention. Earlier the convention had named a committee of 58 from both West Coast and East Coast unions to work out such a program.

The delegates also heard Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers Intl. Union call for a concentrated drive to organize the 65,000 employes of Standard Oil.

The convention pledged continued cooperation with the Oil Workers in a joint drive to organize both tanker and refinery employes, and urged the national CIO to make the Standard Oil campaign a No. 1 task.

"The time has come," Knight declared, "to put John D. Rockefeller along side of Henry Ford as one who must recognize that genuine industrial unionism is here to stay."

BRIDGES HAILED

Bridges was received with a big ovation by the delegates, who had earlier adopted a resolution denouncing attempts to deport him and calling upon Congress "to give full citizenship to Harry Bridges for his contributions to the welfare of the American working men and women."

In his speech, Bridges dwelt on the fight against anti-labor bills in Congress and called for active support of the Murray industry council plan. "With such councils," he said, "I am sure we can do a much better job than the bubbling and fussing around of OPM. They are something we can work with and get something from."

William L. Standard, NMU counsel, in his report warned against the dangers to labor in the present trend to transfer of merchant ships to government or foreign registries. He noted that "with the government slowly taking complete control of the merchant marine," the U. S. Maritime Commission had already taken the position it did not have to observe the Natl. Labor Relations Act.

Standard said the groundwork is being laid for "another ship subsidy scandal" like that exposed by the Black investigation in 1935. "Shipowners," he stated, "are selling vessels to the government and to Great Britain at rather unusual prices."

PROPAGANDA DESCRIBED

The manner in which press propaganda was used to prepare the way for present legislative attacks on labor and other crackdowns on union rights, was described to the convention by Len De Caux, CIO publicity director and editor of The CIO News.

"Following Hitler's technique," De Caux said, "this type of propaganda diverts attention from the real issues by a phony anti-red hysteria, under cover of which anti-union bills are passed, troops are used against strikers and the conscription law is turned into a strike-breaking weapon."

New York, July 12—A union shop contract, establishing the best standards in the retail industry, was announced this week with the signing of an agreement between the CIO United Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Employes and Abe Cohen's Exchange, one of New York's largest retail photographic firms.

Uphold Back Pay Order at 5 & 10

New York, July 12 — (FP) — A Natl. Labor Relations Board order calling upon the F. W. Woolworth Co. to reinstate with $100,000 back pay 140 warehousemen fired for union activity in 1937 was upheld by the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

The union is Local 65, CIO United Wholesale & Warehouse Employes.

Ford Men Flocking Into Union

Detroit, July 12 — Organizing activities by the CIO United Automobile Workers are quickly enrolling thousands of employes of Ford assembly plants into the union as a follow-up to the union shop contract signed two weeks ago.

The transformation from open shop to 100% union enrollment at the Dallas Ford plant took a squad of UAW organizers only a few hours. Working under the direction of Delmond Garst, UAW regional director in St. Louis, they enrolled 1,400 workers into the union.

Dallas newspapers, which gave little space to the bloody story of Ford union-busting as it was revealed in an NLRB hearing a year ago, carried three-column pictures of the union activity.

A similar scene was witnessed at the Ford plant in St. Paul. The UAW expected 400 at a mass meeting in Woodruff Hall. Instead 1,200 attended, forcing union officials to run two meetings at the same time. Some 900 persons signed membership cards.

Honor Haywood, Widman for Aid

Detroit, July 12—Expressing appreciation for advice and assistance in the Ford drive, United Automobile Workers have presented gold watches to Allan S. Haywood, director of organization, and Michael F. Widman, director of the Ford Organizing Committee.

Inscribed on the back of the watches were the words: "In appreciation of a debt which can never be paid—UAWA, 1941."

Protest Firing At Labor Dept.

Washington, July 12—All locals of the United Federal workers, CIO, are fighting the discharge of Helen Miller, chairman of the Labor Dept. local grievance committee, who was fired by Sec. Perkins for allegedly belonging to organizations "dominated" by subversive elements.

Secretary Perkins, who fired Miss Miller without allowing an open hearing on the charges and who refused to give the union the evidence on which the firing was based, told union officials that "there is no such thing as collective bargaining in the government service."

Youngstown Tube Agrees To Bargain

To Check SWOC Cards Vs. Payroll

WASHINGTON, July 12—The Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. today had followed in the steps of Bethlehem Steel and agreed to negotiate a written contract with the Steel Workers Organizing Committee as soon as the powerful CIO union demonstrates it has enrolled a majority of the Youngstown employes. The SWOC claims big memberships in all the firm's plants.

The stipulation, signed by the company and the SWOC, and ok'd by the National Labor Relations Board, calls for a comparison of union dues cards with the company's payroll records of June 1. Plants affected by the agreement are at Campbell, Struthers and Youngstown, Ohio; East Chicago, Indiana, and South Chicago, Illinois, as well as a plant operated by the subsidiary Youngstown Metal Products Co. at Girard, Ohio.

The agreement sets up the Indiana Harbor and South Chicago plants into one unit, and the remaining factories in a second. If the SWOC proves to have a majority in both units, they will be lumped together for collective bargaining purposes. If the union has a majority in one but not in the other, the bargaining unit will consist only of the area where the union is certified as bargaining agency by the NLRB.

Members of the union are to be considered those who were in good standing as dues payers on June 1 of this year.

AGREE TO BARGAIN

Following certification, the company has agreed to "bargain collectively with the union as the exclusive representative of all said employes in the union which the Board (NLRB) shall have determined and certified . . . in respect to rates of pay, wages, hours of employment and other conditions of employment, and, if an understanding is reached on such matters, embody such understanding in a written signed agreement."

Youngstown is one of the holdout Little Steel companies, where the SWOC conducted a bitter strike in the summer of 1937. Acting in concert with Tom Girdler's Republic Steel and Bethlehem, the company was able to hold off the union's contract demands.

Subsequent investigations by the LaFollette Committee showed the company to have incited the use of force and violence against the strikers, and to have been the power behind a citizens' committee in Youngstown that produced reams of anti-union propaganda.

PICKET CITY OFFICIAL: William Carey, New York City Sanitation Commissioner, may have felt he was pulling a fast one when he signed a company union contract with an AFL outfit, but the city's sanitation workers, organized by the CIO, are giving him a headache. Here's a CIO picket line marching around his office. Mass meetings and picket lines are planned until Carey deals with the State, County & Municipal Workers, representing the department's 16,000 employes.

Labor Libraries Suggested

Boston, July 12—Aid to labor unions in establishing their own libraries or deposit stations of public libraries in union halls was voted by the Library Unions Round Table at the Conference of the American Library Association.

The union librarians declared that organized labor has always been a staunch friend of public libraries. It was suggested that more genuine pro-labor publications and books should be placed on the shelves of the nation's libraries.

U. S. To Investigate Newspaper Control Of Radio Stations

WASHINGTON, July 12—The reactionary newspaper industry's growing monopoly ownership and control of the nation's radio stations, which holds the threat of domination of the air waves by the lords of the press, will come in for examination by the federal government starting July 23.

On that date the Federal Communications Commission will open long-anticipated hearings to investigate the present situation and to determine future policy on the granting of radio broadcasting licenses to newspaper owners. Leading figures in the radio and newspaper industries have expressed opposition to the FCC's action, and if expected sensational testimony about past connections between the two branches of the public information business is presented at the hearings, some observes anticipate that the stories will be smothered by both the radio and the papers.

At the present time, some 300 of the country's 800 radio stations are owned by newspapers. Altogether there are 880 radio stations, operating in approximately 700 communities throughout the country.

Newspaper ownership of radio has increased from about 15% ten years ago to over 30% at the present time. Applications for FM broadcasting stations—which some experts believe will supplant the present broadcasting within the next few years—have been coming in 27% of the cases from newspaper owners.

The newspapers at present are by far the largest single industrial or civic bloc-owner of radio stations. The publishers, whose anti-labor bias in their news columns has frequently been pointed out, thus hold a powerful weapon through their growing control of the ether.

In announcing the hearings, the FCC announced its objective would be to determine "whether or not joint control of newspapers and radio broadcasting stations tends to result in an impairment of radio service under the standard of "public interest, convenience and necessity." It added that the "question of newspaper ownership or radio stations has long been debated before the Commission."

ORDER ELECTION

Grand Rapids, Mich., July 12—An election among production and maintenance employes of the Blackmer Pump Co., was ordered by the National Labor Relations Board. The order was issued upon the request of the CIO United Automobile Workers.

Push Hotel Union Drive

Chicago, July 12.—Establishment of a CIO Hotel and Restaurant Workers Organizing Committee in Chicago was announced this week by William J. Joyce, former chairman of the AFL's Local 36, Hotel Clerks and Auditors Union.

The committee was established immediately after the AFL local voted to affiliate with the CIO. Many other AFL locals here have expressed a desire for CIO affiliation. Joyce said that a drive will be conducted to enroll all hotel and restaurant workers here into the CIO union.

Protest Scabbery

Philadelphia, July 12—No trick is low enough for the AFL in its fight against CIO unions, the Philadelphia Industrial Union Council discovered recently.

A resolution adopted by the CIO Council that at the AFL's Hotel and Restaurant International Alliance and Bartenders League of America for stooping so low as to campaign for the applications of scabs and strikebreakers at the Penn Athletic Club where close to 300 CIO members have been on strike for more than 11 months against a 10 per cent wage reduction.

Win Wage Boost At Brass Firm

WATERBURY, Conn., July 12—Within two weeks 10,000 American Brass Company workers will receive $256,000 as their first dividend on the eight-cent-an-hour increase won through the CIO Mine, Mi'l & Smelter Workers.

Eight cents an hour was accepted at morning and night meetings held yesterday by locals in Torrington, Ansonia and Waterbury. Since the rise is retroactive to May 11, and comes on top of a four-cent increase won last November, the total is 12 cents more an hour within a six-month period.

The eight-cent victory brings the ABC basic minimum up to the highest level in Brass Valley: 68 cents an hour for men and 58 for women. Based on a $3.20 increase per 40-hour week, the new wage rates will put at least $167 more in the pocket of each ABC worker annually. With the boost that the new rates will give overtime payments, workers will average well above $200 more per year than they are now receiving.

Weir 'Signs' With New 'Independent'

Weirton, W. Va., July 12.—One week after being ordered to dissolve two old company unions, Ernest T. Weir's Weirton Steel Co. today had signed an exclusive bargaining contract with a mysterious new "independent" union.

The pact with the new union was signed after the company claimed an auditing firm had sworn that "a very large majority" of the firm's employes were members of the new outfit.

The NLRB decision, following one of the largest cases in the Board's history, ordered reinstatement of 17 employes with back pay, an end to discrimination against the CIO Steel Workers Organizing Committee and the dissolution of the Weirton Employe Representation Plan and the Weirton Security League, both branded as company unions.

Steel Pact

Cleveland, July 12 — A new contract has been signed with the Thaw Shovel Co. at Lorain and its subsidiary, the Universal Crane Co. at Elyria, it was announced today by William Donovan, district director of the CIO Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

New increases will bring the minimum rate up to 72 cents an hour and grant pay boosts running as high as 21 cents an hour. In all, the annual payrolls will be increased by $142,000 a year.

Unions Urged To Work With Public Libraries

CHICAGO, July 12—Closer cooperation between labor unions and public libraries was urged by CIO Pres. Philip Murray in a statement published in the CPL Union News, official publication of the Chicago Public Library Employes' Union.

Pres. Murray wrote that labor has always had a paramount interest in public education.

"We feel strongly, as did Thomas Jefferson, that only through such education can the high democratic ideal of equal opportunity for all persons be consummated," Murray wrote.

Murray commended the services of public libraries and suggested that labor look forward to the day when libraries will establish a special "labor service" department just as they now have a business service.

The CIO leader cited an example of how one public library in an important industrial city worked out an arrangement with a labor union whereby a circulating library of labor books was established.

A research committee from the union cooperates with the Readers Counselor of the library to determine the types of books, publications and periodicals which would be of interest to the worker, Murray wrote.

Murray Raps U. S. Pay Scale for Boiler Shops

Washington, July 12 — Philip Murray, acting as chairman of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, last week filed a brief with the Public Contracts Board of the U. S. Department of Labor opposing recommendations of a series of minimum wages by that board for the boiler shop products industry.

Murray's brief charged that the recommendations made by the board on May 22 are inconsistent with the established facts of prevailing minimum wages in the industry and are contrary to the spirit and letter of the Walsh-Healey Act.

He insisted that the recommendations are in conflict with minimum wage determinations made previously by the board in related metal industries and that they are disruptive of the living conditions of the workers as well as of the competitive business conditions of the firms engaged in the industry.

Clothing Workers Push Health, Insurance Plans

WASHINGTON, July 12—Plans for extending a health and life insurance plan, to be financed by a 3% tax on employers' payrolls, to benefit 100,000 persons in the men's clothing industry were mapped here at a meeting of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' executive board.

Jacob Potofsky, acting head of the ACW in the absence of Pres. Sidney Hillman as OPM associate director-general, said that he and Vice-Pres. Frank Rosenblum would head a nine-man committee to work out the insurance agreement with the Natl. Assn. of Clothing Manufacturers.

Each worker in the clothing industry would get $500 worth of life insurance under the plan, Potofsky said, as well as health insurance which would pay 15 weekly benefits of $10 each in the event of sickness. The plan has already been tried out experimentally in Chicago, it was said, and while some employers had expressed opposition, the union felt that the men's clothing trade, "as an enlightened industry," would ultimately favor the insurance system.

The ACW board received reports that the union's membership had increased to 275,000 from 260,000 at the time of the convention a few months ago. Plans were discussed for further intensive organizing work in the laundry industry.

CIO OFFERS ALUMINUM PLAN

WASHINGTON, July 19—A workable plan to lift the nation's aluminum production to three billion pounds, thereby meeting both defense and civilian needs, was offered to the government this week by the CIO and its affiliated Aluminum Workers of America.

Presented after four months of research, the plan had the approval of CIO Pres. Philip Murray and was taken to the White House by AWA Pres. Nicholas Zonarich.

FOR COUNCIL

The union's suggestions, contained in a 26-page report entitled "More Aluminum Today," calls for creation of an Aluminum Industry Council, which would supervise erection of a number of new plants throughout the country. The Council would have power to get priorities on construction materials in order that the metal widely used in airplane manufacture, could quickly be made available in necessary quantities.

Rockefeller Gets 0 Votes, CIO 84

WESTON, Colo., July 19—(FP)—John D. Rockefeller, Jr., has taken a licking in this little community on the southern border of Colorado.

By a unanimous vote, 84 workers on the timber operations of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Corp. selected the Intl. Woodworkers of America (CIO) as bargaining agent. Sec.-Treas. Frank N. Price of the Colorado State Industrial Union Council said negotiations would start as soon as NLRB certification is received.

FAKE UNIONS DEAD

Rockefeller company unions at the mines in Sunrise and at the mills in Pueblo were ordered dissolved by the NLRB early in 1940. The company unions dated from the Ludlow massacre of 1914, when 33 strikers, women and children were massacred by state militia and private cops.

Rockefeller owns, directly or indirectly, 50.38% of the stock of Colorado Fuel & Iron. The company has been active in producing shell forgings for the U. S. and various steel products for Japan.

GOOD ADVICE: Here is one of the series of posters prepared by the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers to carry its message to the employes of the Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Co. and the Harbison-Walker Refractories in preparation for a coming NLRB election in the south.

Auto Union Asks Job Conference

Detroit, July 19—A joint conference representing automobile management, labor and the Federal government to work out a program to avoid "dislocation" of the industry was urged last week in a resolution adopted by the international executive board of the United Automobile Workers.

The resolution called upon the government to call a conference immediately to discuss the proposal of CIO President Philip Murray for an Industry Council along with consideration for the diversion of "steel and other defense materials from non-defense industries on an equitable basis so as to relieve pressure on the auto industry."

The suggested conference would also consider the question of staggering of curtailment of automobile production over a long period, industry-wide coordination of tooling facilities to insure maximum use of skilled help and tool room equipment, the transfers of workers on defense work on a basis of seniority within a community or metropolitan area and a job training program.

81st GM Plant Votes for CIO

Norwood, O., July 19—The eighty-first General Motors plant came into the CIO United Automobile Workers fold with the announcement that workers at the Fisher Chevrolet plant voted 677 for the CIO as against 176 for the AFL in an NLRB election.

New Orleans, July 19—More than 10,000 new members have been enrolled into CIO unions in this area, and twenty new locals were chartered during the past two years, F. C. Pieper, CIO regional director, announced at an annual regional conference.

Pieper also reported that 43 out of 48 Labor Board elections were won by CIO unions and that 19 out of 23 strikes ended in victory for the unions. At the same time, the number of CIO contracts with companies in this area has increased from 11 in June, 1939, to 54 at the present time.

Worried About Future?

Two AFL Top-Dogs Take Corporation Jobs

WASHINGTON, July 19—Job insecurity caused by recent sweeping CIO victories over the AFL was not given as the reason, but——

The high command of the AFL this week found itself minus two of its top-notch CIO-baiters. Leaving AFL ranks for more lucrative positions with private industry were: Francis J. Dillon, personal representative of William Green, and Meyer L. Lewis, west coast AFL organizer.

Dillon accepted a position as labor adviser for Jos. E. Seagram & Sons, Inc., distillers with headquarters at Louisville, Ky., and Lewis will become manager of a west coast cannery.

Dillon is best known to the auto workers. They ousted him as president of the United Automobile Workers at the 1935 South Bend (Ind.) convention. He was later employed by the AFL to disrupt CIO organizational activities. Until recently he was "organizing" workers at Seagram's, where he is now being employed.

Lewis was also given a job by one of the bosses whose workers he was allegedly organizing. Following a career of disrupting CIO organization of cannery workers, he was sent to Minneapolis to fight the CIO teamsters union which recently left the AFL.

Settles Back Pay Claims

WASHINGTON, July 19—Tom Girdler threw in the sponge this week and settled his five-year fight against the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

The Republic Steel Corp., of which Girdler is the top executive, signed a stipulation with the SWOC and the National Labor Relations Board in which it promised to negotiate and sign a contract as soon as the union proves it has a majority in 11 big Republic plants.

At the same time the company offered to settle all its NLRB cases; reinstate with back pay and in many cases with vacation money all workers discharged during or after the 1937 Little Steel strike for union activities; and drop its $7,500,000 Sherman anti-trust law damage suit against the SWOC.

TO CHECK CARDS

Proof of the union's majorities in the 11 plants in Ohio, Illinois and New York is to be determined through a cross-check of union cards against the company's payrolls. All plants where the SWOC has a majority will be lumped into one collective bargaining unit.

Signing of the stipulation marks the fourth and last of the Little Steel companies to come to an agreement with the SWOC, similar action having been taken in recent weeks by Bethlehem Steel, Youngstown Sheet & Tube, and Inland Steel.

The stipulation thus marks "finis" on the union's five-year fight for union recognition from the powerful corporations, which used force and violence in the 1937 strike to withstand the SWOC's demand for written contracts.

Three Big Conventions Scheduled

Washington, July 19 — Conventions of three important CIO affiliates will take place in the next two weeks.

The United Automobile Workers of America and the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers Union will both meet August 4. The auto union convention will be held at Buffalo, N. Y., and the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers at Joplin, Mo.

Economic Outlook:

No Need Seen For Labor Priorities or Controls

WASHINGTON, July 19—No shortages of labor of any character exist to justify proposed labor controls or priorities, the Economic Outlook says in its current issue released today.

Reports of such shortages in certain skills by the U. S. Employment Service are incorrect, since the Service does not "get anywhere near full registration of the available skilled workers, particularly in the skilled work," the Outlook says, despite the fact that Employment Service figures are "headlined in the press as evidence of shortages."

In addition, the Outlook points out, Secretary of Labor Perkins has reversed former statements by admitting that the labor supply is ample.

"This constitutes an important change in the expressed view of the Department, which had for a time set forth an expectation of increases in employment due to national defense work which would have practically wiped out unemployment within the year," the Outlook says.

CIO PROGRAM

Possible shortages "of brief duration in certain places of certain skills" can be met by a program based on the CIO industry council plan and other measures, the Outlook says, in calling for:

Integrated planning of defense production, plus accurate information on labor needs and a planned training program; location of plants nearer to labor supply sources; proper housing for workers in defense production areas; adequate wage rates in defense areas; protection of seniority rights for workers transferring to defense jobs.

Further evidence of ample labor supply is seen in the unemployment figure, set for April by the Outlook at 8,175,000. Future estimates show an expected drop to "something around 6,500,000" by June.

LIVING COSTS UP

Cost of living will show sharp rises "within the next three months," the Outlook says, citing wholesale food price rises of 19.4 per cent between June 1940 and June 1941, farm products increases of 26.5 per cent, raw materials rises of 19.8 percent, and textile rises of 17.5 per cent.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics index shows that prices of 28 commodities have gone up 20 points between January and July, 1941, with food rising 35.7 points. These increases will very soon be markedly reflected in retail prices, as admitted by Price Control Administrator Henderson who said recently: "The cost of living is bound to rise."

"It is agreed in Washington, however, that there is now impending a wave of price increases, which will be, within the next three months, strongly reflected in the cost of living index," the Outlook concludes.

Optical Workers 95 Pct. Union

NEW YORK, July 19—More than 95 per cent of the optical workers here are now working under union contracts, Sebastian Rebaldo, secretary of the CIO Optical Workers Coordinating Committee, announced this week.

The union leader also announced that new local unions have been formed in many other cities, including St. Louis, Mo.; Chicago; Buffalo, N. Y.; Detroit, and Trenton, N. J.

The Optical Workers Coordinating Committee was formed in March, 1940. Thomas Andert is chairman.

SWITCHED FROM AFL

The New York local was in the AFL in 1937, at which time it voted to affiliate with the CIO. The local had only a few members then, but CIO affiliation spurred it into action until now the union is becoming prominent in the national field.

Five new contracts were signed with Detroit optical firms during the past month, Rebaldo announced, and a strike is being conducted against the Taylor Optical Co. of that city.

Toy Union Wins Pact

Wyandotte, Mich., July 19—The CIO United Metal, Toy & Novelty Workers today had signed a contract with the All Metal Products Co., employing over 800 workers.

The contract, negotiated by Regional Director August Scholle, provided for a closed shop, check-off, five-cent hourly increase, vacations with pay and other benefits.

The local is affiliated with the United Paper, Novelty & Toy Workers Intl. Union.

Gotham CIO Backs Murray Council Plan

New York, July 19—Support of the Murray Industry Council Plan was urged by the executive board of the Greater New York Industrial Union Council in a letter to local union affiliates and delegates.

"Adoption of the Murray plan must become one of the CIO's major objectives," the letter declared. It was signed by Joseph Curran, president, and Saul Mills, secretary.

The executive board cautioned that "one of the major reasons reactionary business interests have been able to use the nation's defense machinery in an effort to impede the progress of organized labor has been the lack of proper labor representation in government, particularly in respect to administration of the defense program."

Chicago, July 19—The Labor Board this week ordered the Schlake Dye Works, Inc., to bargain collectively with the CIO Textile Workers Union.

Oil Workers' Head:

Sees Standard Oil Monopoly Grab In Gas 'Shortage'

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, July 19—Talk of a serious East Coast gasoline shortage is being artificially stimulated by Rockefeller's Standard Oil interests to strengthen their already powerful monopoly position, it was charged today by Pres. O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers International Union.

Under cover of an alleged shortage of tankers available for transporting crude oil from Texas ports on the Gulf of Mexico to the huge eastern refineries on the Jersey shore around New York harbor, Standard Oil has these two projects in mind, Knight asserts:

1. Construction of two pipe lines to transport refined gasoline from Texas to New York and to intermediate points in Tennessee, West Virginia, Alabama and Georgia, where Standard hopes to build up its market.

2. The piping of refined gasoline, rather than crude oil, through the new lines, thus putting the organized, high-wage refineries in New Jersey out of business and transferring the work to the low-pay districts of Texas.

WAGE DIFFERENTIAL

The CIO official pointed out that the Jersey refineries will soon be needing extensive modernization, and the company would prefer to invest the money in additional plants throughout Texas. At present a seven-cent differential in wages exists between the Jersey refineries and those in the southwest.

"While the East Coast gasoline shortage, which has received wide publicity in government circles and in the press, is due to transfer of tankers to British registry, few realize that most of these ships are being operated under the English flag by Standard Oil and by Royal Dutch Shell," Knight said. "These ships are competing directly with American companies in the world market."

Shell is controlled by English and German capital, Knight said, and is hauling large amounts of petroleum from the oil fields of the East Indies to Japan for use by the Axis nation's war machine, while considerable Standard Oil is being transported from California to Yokohama.

COULD END 'DROUTH'

Reassignment of these ships from the appeasement oil trade to supplying the United States' eastern coast would quickly overcome the prospective shortage and end near-hysterical talk about gasless Sundays, it was pointed out. In Washington, where the "save our gas supply" propaganda has already started, five motorists were arrested because blue exhaust fumes were escaping from their cars.

The oil union official indicated also that thousands of oil tank railroad cars, which might be used to stem the emergency, are lying idle.

"In one Chicago refinery alone, 4,000 tank cars are lying around the yards of one big refinery," Knight said, "and another 6,000 idle cars are in yards throughout the nation. The companies claim these cars are being held in reserve for some peak period."

NEED FOR ORGANIZING

An organizing drive to bring unionization to Standard Oil's 65,000 employes, and to eliminate the present differential between New York and Texas was strongly recommended by President Knight, who conferred here with CIO officials.

"Standard Oil is taking the lead in attempting to wipe out the 36-hour week which the oil workers won in the old NRA petroleum code and which they have preserved through their organization strength ever since. Already several plants have lengthened hours to 40.

"The companies claim this is due to a labor shortage. This is untrue. There are thousands of so-called helpers who have been doing skilled work for years who could fill all jobs available, and thousands more of unskilled men who could be trained quickly and efficiently if the Rockefeller companies were interested in doing that. But they're not."

In addition to paying lower wages in Texas, the company is practicing the stretchout. While the heaviest load given a still-man in New Jersey is about 10 stills, in Texas many still-men have 21 stills under their supervision, President Knight said.

UNION GROWING

As a result, the field is wide open for organization and quick growth of the CIO union.

Indicative of the growing popularity and influence of the Oil Workers Intl. Union is the fact that it has signed more than 100 contracts in the past six months, with wage increases running into many millions. A nation-wide contract with Sinclair Oil lifted wages by $2,000,000.

Quarry Union Gets Increases In New Pacts

Barre, Vt., July 19—Wage increases were gained in two new contracts signed by the CIO United Stone and Allied Products Workers of America, John C. Lawson, international secretary-treasurer, announced.

The contracts were signed with the Kelley Island Lime and Transport Co., Cleveland, O., and the Coggins Granite and Marble Industries, Inc., Elberton, Ga. The union will also seek to negotiate contracts at two other quarries in Elbert this week.

9 CENTS AN HOUR

Increases of nine cents an hour for hourly employes and 16 per cent for salaried and piecework employes was gained at the Cleveland Quarry. The pact also included one week's vacation with pay for all employes of one year service and over, seniority rights, sole collective bargaining, four hours minimum pay upon reporting to work and other provisions.

Intl. Rep. Lester J. Weyandt, who negotiated the pact, said it covers 121 employes and will be in effect for one year.

In the Coggins agreement the union won a five-cent an hour increase, five-day week, time and one-half for overtime, double time for Sundays and holidays, establishment of a grievance procedure and machinery for arbitration.

CIO Leaders Rap Firing Of Unionist by Labor Dept.

WASHINGTON, July 19—More than 1,000 CIO workers packed a protest mass meeting here in the opening stages of a campaign to reinstate Helen Miller, employe of the U. S. Labor Department.

Miss Miller, an active United Federal Workers officer, was fired by Secretary Perkins with the statement: "There can be no collective bargaining in the government service."

DISCRIMINATION

Robinson told the meeting that the CIO "knows how to fight and does fight for its members, no matter where they are discriminated against or who does the discriminating." A message of support was read from Allan S. Haywood, national CIO director and administrator of the UFWA.

A pamphlet, "Fair Play for Federal Workers," dealing with the Helen Miller firing was distributed at the meeting. Free copies can be obtained from the Washington CIO Committee to reinstate Helen Miller, Room 407, 635 F St. NW., Washington, D. C.

Doctor Orders Murray To Rest; CIO Board Meting Postponed

PITTSBURGH, July 19—CIO Pres. Philip Murray was resting comfortably in Mercy Hospital here, where he has been ordered by his physicians to take a complete rest from his arduous duties. He is expected to remain away from work for several weeks.

As a result of Pres. Murray's indisposition, the meeting of CIO vice-presidents, scheduled for July 15, and the meeting of the CIO Executive Board, scheduled for July 16, were indefinitely postponed.

Republic Steel To Negotiate CIO Contract

WASHINGTON, July 19—Republic Steel—fourth of the Little Steel "bitter-enders" to come to terms—has agreed to negotiate a signed contract and to end all disputes with the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, CIO, headed by CIO President Philip Murray.

The corporation, whose head, Tom Girdler, once said he would retire to dig potatoes before signing with CIO, put its name to a stipulation signed by SWOC and the National Labor Relations Board in a final move that ended more than four years of struggle for union recognition and higher wages.

In addition to a signed contract, the agreement provides for the death of Republic's company unions, for an end to interference with SWOC, for reinstatement with back pay of thousands of workers discharged during and after the Little Steel strike, for a single collective bargaining unit in all plants where a count shows a SWOC majority, and for dropping of a damage suit against the union.

THOUSANDS COVERED

Some 41,630 workers are covered by the agreement, Lee Pressman, SWOC general counsel, who signed for the union, pointed out. Of these, more than 2300 will be reinstated with back pay, most of them with vacation pay as well.

Plants in three cities—Buffalo, N. Y.; South Chicago, Ill., and Monroe, Mich., with over 1100 workers—will see the disestablishment of company unions, cessation of interference with the union, and reinstatement with back pay and vacation money for more than 1100 workers.

At Monroe, where many workers have been displaced through obsolescence of the mill, the workers will receive more than $15,000, to be contributed by the company and distributed by SWOC. In addition, these displaced men will go on preferential re-hiring lists for jobs elsewhere.

OHIO CASES

In Ohio plants, where the U. S. Supreme Court recently upheld a Labor Board order requiring company union disestablishment and an end to interference with the union, all strikers who filed for reinstatement through SWOC will be reinstated with back pay, less amounts earned elsewhere. In addition, some 1200 Ohio plant workers who were locked out before the strike will receive $40,000 in back pay, and an additional sum will go to workers discharged before the strike.

A number of miscellaneous cases elsewhere in Ohio and in Moline, Ill., were also settled in the stipulation. All points in the settlement of Board cases will be subject to review by the Third Circuit Court of Appeals.

SWOC COUNT

Counting of membership cards to establish the single collective bargaining unit will be supervised by SWOC committees, who will aid in checking them with the payroll.

Republic Steel, leader of the Little Steel group, was on the receiving end of a series of Labor Relations Board orders for violations of the Wagner Act during the four years' campaign, and lost a major decision when the Supreme Court upheld the Board in the Ohio cases.

The corporation was also investigated by the LaFollette Civil Liberties Committee, whose disclosures following the Memorial Day Massacre in Chicago in 1937 shocked the nation.

Hosiery Union Authorizes Wage Strikes

PHILADELPHIA, July 19—Members of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, affiliated with the Textile Workers Union, voted 4 to 1 in a referendum vote authorizing the national executive board to declare a strike, if necessary, in the full fashioned hosiery industry.

The national executive board announced the membership's decision at a meeting here last Monday. It was also announced that negotiations begin with the Full-Fashioned Hosiery Manufacturers Association last Thursday in Atlantic City. The union is requesting wage increases of at least 15 per cent and a two weeks' vacation with pay.

The present agreement with the manufacturers association expires August 31. The union announced that negotiations will also begin with individual manufacturers not represented by the association.

Tile Workers Win Increase

Ironton, O., July 19—A five per cent wage increase, the union shop and other gains were scored by the United Stone and Allied Products Workers of America in a contract with the Carlyle Tile Co.

The pact was signed after a Labor Board election in which the CIO received 105 votes over 2 for the AFL. The pact also provided for seniority, time and one-half for Sunday and holiday work, a grievance procedure and machinery for arbitration. International Representatives H. C. Ledyard and William B. Morris conducted the negotiations with the company.

Another Ohio firm, the Toledo Concrete Pipe Co., of Toledo, granted five cents an hour increase in a contract recently renewed with the union.

The National Gypsum Company's plant at Alexandria, Ind., also granted a five-cent raise recently, it was announced.

CERTIFY DISTRICT 50

Washington—The Natl. Labor Relations Board today announced certification of District 50, United Mine Workers, as sole bargaining agency at the Parke, Davis & Co. plant in Detroit.

Loyal Reader!

Rep. Smith Reads CIO News, Learns CIO Defeated May Bill!

Washington, July 19—To its not inconsiderable surprise, The CIO News discovered this week that in Rep. Howard Smith of Virginia, reactionary Democrat, it had an enthusiastic reader.

Smith, sponsor of a number of anti-labor measures, took 15 minutes of the House of Representatives' time to sing the praises of the CIO official organ, and to concede—though in a rip-snorting hostile manner—that the CIO had been fully responsible for the defeat of the May Bill.

A number of Washington politicians, anxious to belittle the CIO's political strength, had ascribed defeat of the bill to a number of causes while trying to ignore the influence of the CIO "labor lobby," whose members contacted every Congressman just before the bill was voted down in the House.

Said the lanky Virginian: "I'm afraid some of those gentlemen (members of Congress) who had not heard that there was any lobbying going on, had not been reading The CIO News as diligently as they should. I take care to see what appears in the paper every week. Sometimes they have something uncomplimentary to say about me, and I enjoy reading it."

House members were told they "ought to know what's going on," and Rep. Smith offered as a cure for their ignorance a reading of the CIO paper. "The CIO News tells you" what "is behind our votes," he said. "I hope you gentlemen in the future will glance over it instead of throwing it in the wastebasket, as I am afraid some of these gentlemen who disagreed with me last week do."

QUOTES JONES REPORT

Smith read to the Representatives at considerable length from the report of CIO Legislative Representative John T. Jones to the July 7 CIO conference, and quoted sections in which "fair-weather friends" of labor were warned that their votes on labor bills would be carefully scanned when the unions make their political endorsements at the next election.

The thought that labor voters might expect Congressmen to live up to their pledges to the workers was apparently too much for Smith, who has been a consistent supporter of every measure that in any way could hamstring labor.

"The fact is that the CIO itself says that we, the CIO, by this lobbying drive, by which we called from all over the United States men to come here and tell the Congress what to do, are the people who defeated this bill."

CIO Offers Plan To Lift U.S. Aluminum Output

WASHINGTON, July 19—The CIO today proposed a plan to lift the nation's aluminum production to its necessary level of 3,000,000,000 pounds a year.

Result of a four-month study, the plan worked out by the CIO Aluminum Workers of America was approved by CIO Pres. Philip Murray and presented at the White House to President Roosevelt by AWA Pres. Nicholas Zonarich.

Pointing out that private industry and the government have completely failed to eliminate the serious bottleneck now existing in the aluminum industry, the CIO union offered a six-point program, calling for creation of an Aluminum Industry Council on which industry and labor would have equal representation, with a government official as chairman; full priorities on construction material to permit rapid erection of badly-needed new aluminum plants, and vastly expanded operation of essential bauxite now under the control of the Aluminum Company of America, where U. S. officials have said production could be increased 500 per cent in four months.

NATIONAL PROBLEM

The report charged that in times of emergency, industrial problems "such as the aluminum shortage, are matters of national concern, not a mere private business worry. Organized labor is not going to stand idly by and watch business fumble and fuss while the industry goes from bad to worse. Instead, organized labor is anxious to help in every way possible to end the distress and confusion in the aluminum industry, and to shoulder responsibilities which high-priced corporate management officials have so woefully neglected."

The program calls for the immediate creation of an Aluminum Industry Council and offers specific recommendations to show how such an aluminum council of labor, management and government could immediately undertake construction of aluminum plants with a capacity of one billion pounds annually.

MAIN POINTS

Other suggestions include:

1. Full priorities in all construction materials to facilitate erection of these plants.

2. Expansion of Arkansas bauxite mining operations, which the Bureau of Mines estimates can be stepped up 300 per cent in two months time and 500 per cent in four months. Private owners of bauxite would be required to sell this mineral in needed amounts to new aluminum producers, as the industry council sees fit. The union also advocates accumulation of stock piles of South American bauxite and greatly intensified research on the commercial use of domestic low-grade bauxite.

3. Rationing of non-defense and luxury uses of power; intercon-

PRESENTS PLAN: Pres. Nicholas Zonarich, of the Aluminum Workers of America, which last week presented a plan for lifting the nation's aluminum production to three billion pounds a year. The plan, four months in preparation, calls for formation of an Industry Council, with equal representation for labor and management.

District 50 Gains 12c Pay Boost

Philadelphia, July 19—The Precision Grinding Wheel Co. signed its first union agreement last week with District 50, United Mine Workers, Edward McCrone, CIO field representative, announced.

The union gained 12½ cents an hour increase, with an additional five cents for workers on the afternoon and night shifts, the union shop and check-off, vacations with pay, seniority rights and bonuses for army draftees or volunteers.

VACATIONS

The pact also includes double time for holiday work, with a guaranteed full pay for seven annual holidays. A one-week vacation was granted for employes of one year's service or over and two weeks for 10-year employes.

Bonus considerations for draftees and volunteers include payment of $50 for employes of six months service, $100 for one year's service, also $25 for every additional six months of employment, with $200 as the limit.

McCrone and Bernard Childs, District 50 representative, aided the local committee in the negotiations.

"Little Steel" Goes CIO

The CIO has won its long battle with the "Little Steel" companies.

It will be remembered that after the dramatic success of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee in winning the United States Steel Corp. agreement in 1937, the so-called independent companies intensified their resistance to the extension of collective bargaining to their plants.

This led to the bitter "Little Steel" strike of that year, the major issue of which was the companies' refusal to negotiate a signed agreement with the SWOC.

The CIO did not win its point in 1937, but it never let down on its efforts to secure for all the steel workers the same collective bargaining rights as it had won from U. S. Steel.

Loyal unionists in the "Little Steel" plants stood by the SWOC through thick and thin in the years that followed. Many were fired or discriminated against for their union activity, but they did not lose faith in the CIO nor in the justice of their cause.

The long, hard job of organizing was continued, more and more workers joined the union ranks, and now at last all of this effort and sacrifice and loyalty has been crowned with success.

The four companies (Republic, Bethlehem, Youngstown Sheet & Tube and Inland Steel) that refused to negotiate with the CIO in 1937, have one after the other now agreed to enter into signed contracts with SWOC, once it is certified as the workers' representative by a cross-check of union membership. Reinstatement of discharged unionists with back pay has been secured and other agreements reached on outstanding disputes.

Completion of the organizing work in the "Little Steel" companies, and the negotiation of the promised contracts, will soon make the whole steel industry nearly 100 per cent CIO.

Our Votes Count

There is food for thought for every CIO member and every friend of labor in the thumping defeat accorded to the vicious anti-labor provisions of the May bill in the House.

Not long ago the labor-haters were riding high in Congress on a wave of anti-strike hysteria. One bill after another was introduced to destroy the right to strike and to bust the unions, until the decision was finally made to concentrate on the May bill.

The CIO fought back against this drive with every means at its disposal. Its representatives in Washington and from the field kept after the members of Congress constantly to leave them in no doubt as to labor's sentiments. Every effort was made to arouse the whole membership to the danger, and one appeal after another was made to them to write in to their representatives.

On the eve of House consideration of the May bill, the CIO made its biggest effort of all. President Murray summoned to Washington, for a special emergency conference, representatives of every union and state council, and some 250 responded.

At this conference, there was plenty of plain talk from CIO leaders about the failure of supposed political friends of labor to defend labor's rights. Delegations communicated to their people back home the gravity of the situation, and themselves spent the next day or two visiting their Congressmen.

Both friends and enemies have agreed that it was the CIO that did most of all to secure the defeat of the anti-union amendments to the May bill.

(1) That eternal vigilance is the price of liberty.

(2) That it takes a strongly organized and alert labor movement to protect labor's rights on the legislative as well as the industrial field.

(3) That no union or individual need think his efforts are wasted when he lets his representatives in Congress know how he feels on legislation affecting labor.

(4) That labor's votes count, and the more evidence Congress can be given of the sentiments of labor's millions, the more favorable its actions will be.

Labor is by no means out of the woods as yet, despite this victory. Many other anti-union measures are under consideration, and new attacks may be launched at any time. But we can take courage from the proved effectiveness of CIO's legislative efforts, as we resolve to mobilize similar or greater efforts to defeat every attack of labor's enemies in the future.

Let's remember we are all entitled to voice and vote in a democracy. Let's make our voices be heard and our votes count!

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

CONGRESSMAN Howard Smith of Virginia is a gentleman who loves labor in the same kind of way the proverbial cannibal loves missionaries.

He is always thinking up new recipes for making hash out of labor unions, and his investigations into labor affairs have had all the tenderness of a butcher at work with a meat axe.

It is therefore with mixed feelings that we find ourselves agreeing with Congressman Smith—like the about-to-be-barbecued missionary who discovered he shared with his captor a preference for rare meat.

The Congressman recently took 15 minutes to prove to the House, with copious quotations from The CIO NEWS, that the CIO was chiefly responsible for defeating the May bill's anti-labor features.

In this respect, he gives credit where the credit is due.

BUT SMITH is indignant that CIO representatives should have visited their Congressmen to explain labor's opposition to the strikebreaking, compulsory arbitration, blacklisting and other union-busting features of this bill.

In an earlier speech he described the CIO visitors as "goon squads." He also accused them of "coercing" and "intimidating" Congressmen, by indicating the preference of union voters for representatives who defend labor's rights in Congress.

Now Smith is a man of rare discernment in some respects. For instance, he caught on in no time to the meaning of another Congressman who described one of his statements as "moonshine." "I took that to mean," Smith told the House after a few days' reflection, "that he doubted the accuracy of my assertion."

But there is another word to whose meaning the Congressman has not yet caught on. That is "democracy." Perhaps that is because he comes from a poll-tax state where they use the word as a label with a capital D, but don't allow it to be practiced.

TO SMITH and any others who do not like the democratic procedures followed by the CIO in promoting or opposing legislation, we commend a study of some of the simpler books which explain our system of government to prospective citizens.

They will find that the constitution of the United States provides for the "right of the people peaceably to assemble and petition the government for a redress of grievances."

It will be explained to them that American citizens have the right to petition and present their viewpoint even to Congressmen; and to vote against those Congressmen who do not legislate to their satisfaction.

That may sound like bolshevism to a Congressman from a poll-tax state, where the common people are not allowed to vote. But it happens to be the American system of government.

IN THE CASE of the May bill, labor was allowed no opportunity to express its opposition at committee hearings. The House military affairs committee just rushed the bill through to the floor of the House, without any public hearings.

The CIO emergency conference and its lobbying activities were urgently necessary to call attention to the character of this and other anti-labor bills which should have been fully aired in committee hearings, under the regular democratic procedure.

In fact, a number of the Congressmen visited by the CIO representatives revealed that this was the first time the true character of these bills had been explained to them.

THERE ARE two kinds of lobbying regularly conducted in Washington.

One is the lobbying conducted by the people who have much money but few votes. This is most discreet—it has to be. It includes lavish parties at which the Congressmen meet such charming people. It includes very private conferences at which a publisher tells how much power his paper wields, or a manufacturer explains how much higher profits would be if it weren't for the "coddling" of labor.

The other kind of lobbying is conducted on behalf of the people who have millions of votes but darned little money. This kind of lobbying, in which the CIO engages, is open and aboveboard. In fact, it tries to get all the publicity it can. It aims to tell the world, as well as the Congressmen, just how the plain people of America feel about bills affecting their wages, their conditions and their democratic rights.

The secret lobbying of the selfish moneyed interests is anti-democratic. It employs improper pressures to seduce the Congressmen into serving the interests of the few at the expense of the many.

The open lobbying of the CIO is 100 per cent democratic and American. It is designed to call public attention to the needs of the many, which their representatives are duty-bound to serve. The only pressure it exerts is the democratic pressure of the votes of the American working people.

New Kind of Lobby:

Workers' Demands Licked May Bill

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, July 19—When Congressman Howard Smith of Virginia said on the floor of the House that the defeat of the Connally-May bill was due to the work of a large and well organized CIO lobby, he didn't mean to be complimentary—but he was telling the truth.

Lobbies are nothing new to Washington. They've been working on generations of Congressmen, aided by lavish entertainment funds, large expense accounts, and sometimes even beautiful girls. Hitherto, most of them were out for special privilege for the big business boys who employed them—and up to now, Congressmen of Rep. Smith's type have not complained.

But the CIO lobby was something new. For the first time in congressional history, a large, efficient and truly representative group of lobbyists came to Congress to demand something in the name of the working people they spoke for — to demand the defeat of the strikebreaking, union-busting May-Connally bill. They got what the people wanted.

WORKERS' LOBBY

The workers' lobby, made up of delegates from all CIO unions, representing more than 5,000,000 members, stayed in Washington for more than three weeks, visiting Congressmen, telling them the facts, arguing when necessary—and always impressing on them the way the voters back home felt about the right to organize and the right to strike.

At its height, more than 200 were on Capitol Hill, plus the 250 delegates who came to the special CIO legislative conference called by Pres. Murray July 7 to map final plans for defeating the anti-labor bill. All 200 of them kept busy during the entire time they were here; their work was organized from headquarters of Labor's Non-Partisan League, headed by League Chairman John L. Lewis.

Each delegate was given a list of Congressmen to see, (with a notation of CIO locals in his constituency). Each name also carried a brief note on previous attitudes on labor questions shown by the Congressman. Each delegate reported at the end of the day on progress. If a Congressman made a clear commitment against the bill, he was checked off the list. If he was unconvinced or evasive, his name was noted for more visits. Coverage was 100 per cent—with many visited more than once.

COURTESY RULED

Congressman Smith called the workers' lobby "a CIO goon squad." He knows better, as do the lobbyists themselves and all the other Congressmen who were visited.

Not one case of discourtesy was reported, either by the CIO representatives or by the other Congressmen themselves. As one of the lobbyists put it, the burden of their message to the Congressmen was this: "We've been sent here by our unions to tell you how our workers feel about this bill. We will tell you—and we will report back to our people."

The workers' lobby was able to do a good job on educating the Congressmen. Much of their time was spent in patiently explaining the facts of industrial life; who causes strikes, how many strikes there have been, what the workers' demands were, and, in some instances, a few simple pointers on the basic rights of the American people.

Powerful backing came from the field. Congressmen really heard from the voters this time—with the largest volume of protest mail ever seen on a labor measure.

And the workers' lobby was the achievement of CIO, and CIO alone. AFL's contribution was one letter to the Congressmen—from William Green, admonishing them gently not to pass the bill. None of the Congressmen mentioned it—not even Smith.

Many Tory Bills Still On Docket

WASHINGTON, July 19—Numerous anti-labor bills are still current in Congress, despite the sharp setback to the labor-haters in the defeat of the Connally-May bill in the House last week, it was pointed out here.

Writing to thank CIO affiliates for their cooperation in the fight against the Connally-May measure, Pres. Murray added a warning that these bills will "demand from our affiliates unceasing vigilance and a continued determination to proceed in the task we have so well begun."

Among such measures still available to labor's enemies are the Vinson bill (HR 4139), which provides for compulsory cooling-off periods, compulsory arbitration, and a revival of the notorious anti-union court injunction. This bill was laid on the shelf due to CIO protests and as an attempted cover-up for passage of the May-Connally bill. It can be brought on the floor at any time.

BALL BILL

The Ball bill also calls for compulsory cooling-off and for anti-union injunctions against workers who strike in violation of the cooling-off period. It is in the Senate Labor Committee, and can be reported out at any time.

The Reynolds bill (S 1579) and another May bill (HR 5190), written at the request of the War Dept., authorizes the President to take over real or personal property whenever he deems it necessary for national defense. This authority could be used to break strikes and to deprive workers of their rights under Federal laws.

ALIEN BAITING

The Disney bill, (HR 5419) makes it unlawful for a non-citizen to become an officer or representative of a union, requires him to have been in the industry for three years, making it impossible for a union to employ an attorney or other outside aid, would require detailed financial statements from unions, and would force them to prohibit strikes for 60 days after a dispute arises.

The Ramsey bill (HR 5035) makes it unlawful for any person "commonly called" a Communist, Nazi or Bundist to be a union member. The Walters bill (HR 5218) would apply severe criminal penalties to unions judged by the courts to be pursuing "other than lawful labor objectives" whose definition is left up to the courts.

Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, in analyzing these anti-labor measures, described them as based on three main proposals; to curtail and eliminate the right to strike, to impose compulsory arbitration and to allow the government to intervene in labor disputes and break strikes.

CORRECTION

A recent issue of The CIO News described a new contract signed by the Caterpillar Tractor Co., Peoria, Ill., as giving exclusive bargaining rights to Local 105 of the Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee.

While the company negotiated the agreement only with the FEWOC local, it contains no specific "sole bargaining agency" clause. However, the company union at Caterpillar is now non-existent and the AFL union in the plant has made no attempt to intervene.

CIO Lobby Changed 100 Votes

Washington, July 19—Study of the House vote on the Conally-May bill, defeated last week, 220-149, shows several points reflecting labor's basic strength in blocking anti-union measures and in making its influence felt in Congress.

According to CIO and Labor's Non-Partisan League observers here, the 250-strong CIO lobby that worked against the bill for more than three weeks prior to the vote changed at least 100 votes from anti-labor to votes against destruction of labor's rights.

This was done, observers pointed out, despite the fact that the attitude of the majority leadership earlier had shown that the bill had their approval and despite the House Speaker's open assertion that that it had the green light for early passage.

LEADERSHIP SWITCH

The leadership, however, voted against the bill in the final count, indicating that the CIO lobby had made its influence felt strongly even on those who had supported the measure.

In addition, 92 of the 220 votes against the bill came from the Republican side again, despite the leadership's approval of the measure. This approval carried through to the vote, in contrast to the switch on the other side.

A fairly straight line division in the majority side's vote was seen in a North-South contrast, with the polltaxers voting almost as a block for the bill and the Congressmen from outside the South more consistently against it.

LABOR BASE

CIO observers pointed out that the 100 or more votes won during the campaign against the bill could become a broader base than labor has had in combating union-breaking laws if the campaign is followed up and if similar volume of labor protest develops whenever labor's rights are threatened by such measures as the May-Connally bill.

They pointed also to the fact that labor cannot be satisfied with "fair-weather friends" who promise to defend labor in Congress in return for labor support at election time, and then vote for labor-breaking bills in the House.

Of such fair-weather friends they listed Rep. Jennings Randolph of W. Va., Faddis of Pa., Lyndon Johnson of Texas, Bryson of North Carolina, Smith of Connecticut and May of Ky., whose name was put on the bill.

CIO Gives Support To Marcantonio's Anti-Discrimination Bill

WASHINGTON, July 19—CIO support for the Marcantonio anti-discrimination bill, HR 3994, which makes it unlawful to deny jobs to workers on racial, national or religious grounds was made public today in a statement sent to the House Judiciary Committee by John T. Jones, CIO legislative representative and director of Labor's Non-Partisan League.

"The CIO is heartily in accord with the aims and principles of HR 3994," Jones said. "We recognize the existence of discrimination against racial, national and other minorities as an evil that threatens not only the security and welfare of millions of our people but also as a threat to the national unity."

Citing the constitution of the CIO, which has as its first objective "the effective organization of the working men and women regardless of race, creed, color or nationality," Jones declared that the CIO is based on "the fundamental principle that all workers are entitled to the right to work and the right to live.

"This principle cannot prevail if a minority, no matter of what origin or what persuasion, is denied the rights and opportunities that are available to the American people as a whole," he said.

ECONOMIC BASIS

The labor movement is no stranger to discrimination, Jones pointed out, declaring that it has been "one of the principal weapons of ruthless employers ever since the labor movement first took shape."

Discrimination against Negro workers and those of foreign origin has its basis not only in prejudice and hysteria, he added, but is also rooted in "the ancient maxim—divide and rule—with a new twist, divide and exploit." For this reason, Jones said, the CIO is determined that job discrimination must be wiped out, since it allows employers to pit one group against another in order to beat down the economic standards of all.

Jones concluded his statement by pointing out that more than statements of policy were needed if the government wants to end discrimination. "The labor movement has had long experience with statements of policy," he said. "As a result of that experience, we have learned to prefer the more certain results that come from specific legislation."

CIO MARINE WORKERS

Jones' statement was accompanied by testimony from the CIO Maritime Union representing all the CIO unions in the marine industry, which pointed to the campaign these unions have carried on against discrimination over a period of years as evidence of their support of the principles of the bill.

"Although we have been to a certain extent successful in eliminating discrimination, we realize that it cannot be totally eliminated except by legislation of the type contained in the proposed bill," the Maritime Committee said.

Murray Hails Conference As 'Magnificent' Display Of Labor's Strength

Washington, July 19—Describing the special CIO conference of July 7 as "a magnificent demonstration both of the power and determination of the CIO to fight against measures destructive of the rights of labor in America," Pres. Philip Murray today sent his thanks to all CIO affiliates that sent delegates to the meeting and that took part in the lobbying against the Connally-May bill.

Defeat of the bill, which would have outlawed strikes, imprisoned pickets, imposed compulsory arbitration on all labor disputes, and blacklisted striking workers, came last week in a 220-149 House vote after more than 250 CIO representatives made clear the opposition of the 5,000,000 CIO members.

'A GREAT VICTORY'

"The defeat of the vicious May amendment to the Selective Service Act in the House of Representatives was a great victory," Murray wrote. "That defeat will greatly strengthen the fight against the Connally amendment which passed in the Senate.

"The CIO unions have once again proved that our movement stands ever vigilant against those who would corrupt the rights of the American people. We have served warning upon the enemies of labor that our people will not be trod upon."

WARNS OF DANGERS

Murray warned CIO affiliates, however, that the defeat of the anti-union May bill by no means guaranteed immunity from further attack on labor's rights in Congress.

"There are many legislative assaults that will still be made upon labor," he said. "This will demand from our affiliates unceasing vigilance and a continued determination to proceed in the task we have so well begun."

CIO Offers Plan To Lift Output Of Aluminum

4. The training of a labor force to operate the projected plants, responsibility for which will be assumed by the union.

5. Promotion of industrial peace through the perfection and extension of sound collective bargaining relations between management and organized labor.

LABOR TRAINING

The program points out that production will not be interfered with if 35 per cent of the present trained personnel in existing plants is replaced by green labor. It would take only about 60 days, it is noted, for this raw material to become sufficiently trained so that it can operate efficiently and economically.

"The scarcity of aluminum is one of the most serious threats in the success of our defense effort," the report says. Besides crimping the shortage has also caused unemployment in the aluminum industry and has caused serious inconvenience to the general public, the union points out.

The Aluminum Workers Union charged that present makeshift plans for meeting the aluminum shortage are adversely affecting living standards and causing unnecessary secrifices by the public.

"Consumers are hard hit, and unjustly so, by the aluminum shortage," the report declared. "They are forced to use 'ersatz' products which are either inferior or more expensive (and sometimes both) than the original aluminum article.

"Either way, the aluminum scarcity is lowering the value of the consumer dollar which is in effect a cut in the workers' real wages and in consumers' purchasing power; or inflation in one of its most pernicious forms.

UNDERMINES MORALE

"When the public is being asked to make very real sacrifices of time and energy in behalf of the total defense effort, these unnecessary sacrifices can only serve to undermine public morale."

"This shortage," the report continues, "can be ended not by systems of priorities, not by 'ersatz,' and not by house-to-house begging for pots and pans.

"The practical question is how many pounds of aluminum will it take to meet the demands of the democratic countries to help defeat the Axis powers, to meet our own defense needs, the needs of Latin American republics and essential civilian needs?

"Very little is known about the required poundage. All we have available are the direct military requirements as estimated by OPM and the military services. They put such needs at 1,200,000,000 pounds annually.

TOTAL NEEDS

"To that figure must be added indirect military requirements and essential civilian needs, which would probably bring the United States requirements up to about two billion pounds per annum.

"The United States must take the responsibility for seeing that the anti-Axis powers outmatch Axis production of aluminum. We must be ready to take up whatever slack occurs in overseas production because of Axis bombings or capture of aluminum plants and resources.

"Considering the scope of these European, Asiatic and Latin-American requirements, and recognizing the gargantuan appetite of modern war, it may be safely estimated that at least another billilon pounds of annual production will be needed, bringing the over-all demand on our aluminum industry to three billion pounds annually."

Pointing out that the two companies now producing ingot aluminum in the United States cannot do that job alone, the report raises the question of "whether or not the nation shall restrict its efforts to encouraging and begging these two companies to expand far beyond the limits of their present projects, or whether the full force of organized labor and government should be used to boost production to the three-billion mark?"

The Reynolds Metal Company is a comparatively newcomer in the aluminum producing business, and it has both a problem of training labor and no source for additional raw materials, the report states.

"The Aluminum Company of America, the other producer, is without doubt the best equipped private company from the viewpoint of tangible resources and experience to undertake the major share of the aluminum expansion," the report states, but "it becomes necessary to evaluate Alcoa's deeds since the inception of the defense program to determine whether Alcoa will shoulder the primary responsibility of providing added production capacity."

DIDN'T AVERT CRISIS

The report charges that Alcoa's record "in the past year indicates that, although it has enlarged its facilities, its efforts have not been sufficient to avert a crisis in aluminum supplies."

Reynold's newness to the industry and Alcoa's limitations wipe out any possibility of depending upon some existing company for the expansion program so urgently needed, it was declared.

"The need is so pressing that we cannot afford to wait until, by chance, some private corporation becomes interested in this industry and builds up an adequate organization for this task.

"The responsibility of immediate expansion beyond present plans unquestionably will require the full united brain power of organized labor, management and government."

CIO Sweeps Western Union Poll

DETROIT, July 19—An overwhelming CIO Labor Board election victory over the AFL's Commercial Telegraphers Union among Western Union employes here has blazed the trail for a nation-wide poll of the company's 43,000 employes, William Burke, international representative of the CIO American Communications Association, declared last week.

The Labor Board election, held last Tuesday, showed the CIO union leading the AFL by 417 to 165. Out of 841 workers eligible to vote, 626 participated. Only seven votes were cast for neither union, 36 votes were challenged and one ballot was declared void.

STIFF FIGHT

The ACA's organizing drive at Western Union was first met by stiff opposition from the Association of Western Union Employes, a company union which was recently ordered to disband by the National Labor Relations Board. The Labor Board also ordered the company union to return all funds collected from Western Union employes as "dues."

Following the disestablishment of the company union, the ACA's drive was hampered by a dual campaign of two AFL unions, the CTU and federal labor unions.

DON'T LIKE AFL

Commenting further on the Detroit victory, Int'l. Rep. Burke stated that the result of the poll "is conclusive proof that Western Union people do not want to be drawn into the jurisdictional war now raging between the CTU-AFL and the AFL federal unions in Western Union."

Burke said that the company will be asked to start negotiations for a contract immediately.

The ACA has a national union shop agreement with the Postal Telegraph and Cable Co.

URGE ONE UNION: Scene at the third biennial convention of the CIO National Maritime Union at Cleveland, where delegates voted overwhelmingly in favor of one national industrial union for maritime workers.

Maritime Union Starts Work On Unity Plan

NEW YORK, July 19—Leaders of the National Maritime Union went to work today on the new plan adopted early this week at the Cleveland convention for uniting East and West Coast seamen's unions into one organization.

Preparations went forward for submitting to the membership of the Marine Cooks and Stewards Union and the American Communications Association, Marine Division (radio operators), a ten-point ballot on affiliation with the NMU on an autonomous basis.

Rank and file delegates from two other West Coast unions, the Marine Firemen, Oilers, Watertenders and Wipers and the Inland Boatmen's Union, informed the convention that they would work for a referendum in their unions on the same question.

The unity program was worked out by a committee of 58, half from the East Coast and half from the West Coast. As soon as it and other convention decisions are ratified by the membership, Frederick N. Myers, National Organizer, will be sent to the West Coast to work with unions there for adoption of the program.

UNITY BIG ISSUE

This program was, by far, the most important achievement of the convention. True, it was overshadowed in the daily press by "L'Affaire Doyle" for a day or so. But to the delegates, unity was the big thing.

As a matter of fact, the only significant thing about the Doyle episode was the completeness of its failure to stir the convention.

Joseph Doyle was a delegate from the S.S. Ancon, owned by the Panama Railroad. He tipped his hand, when he was heard condemning the convention for suspension of Frank Redfern, former member of the William McCuistion shipowner goon squad in the Gulf.

READY FOR PHONIES

He exposed himself completely when he brought in an out-and-out red-baiting resolution prepared by McCuistion and Dan Moriarity, both phonies. Experiences of the seamen in 1938-39, during the days of the Medeiros-Carlucci labor spy gang gave them the schooling which enables them to spot a phoney a mile away.

Finally, last Saturday, two delegates, James Russell and J. Moriarity (Dan's cousin), revealed that Doyle had been meeting with expelled phonies in New York and Cleveland. During the convention, they had put up at the Cleveland Hotel, the only 100 per cent fink hotel in town.

The whole Doyle episode didn't consume more than an hour's time and was quickly forgotten in the working out of a constructive program for organizing seamen. Only the press kept bringing it up.

RESOLUTIONS

Among other things, the convention went on record for immediate aid to Great Britain and the Soviet Union, for complete and unqualified preservation of the right to strike and other civil liberties, and for release of political and labor prisoners railroaded to jail on technicalities.

In his closing remarks, President Joseph Curran warned the delegates to work fast on the unity problem because new and more vicious attacks are going to be leveled against the seamen and other maritime workers.

The convention demanded abolition of the Dies Committee and the setting up of a real committee on un-American and subversive activities.

Political action for trade unionists was endorsed unanimously and formation of a Farmer-Labor party strongly urged.

Crew Mates Repudiate Doyle

New York, July 19—Good union men will not sail with Joseph J. Doyle, ex-Natl. Maritime Union member who tried to disrupt the NMU's Cleveland convention, following a vote by crew members of Doyle's former ship, the S.S. Ancon.

Doyle resigned from the NMU after his attempts to disruption had been exposed on the convention floor by two other delegates who told of his meeting with enemies of the union to plan disruptive moves.

Meet Pal--- Seamen's Mascot

By TED COX

Cleveland, July 19—Pal, a handsome, well-disciplined Alaskan Husky, 100 per cent CIO, was the official mascot of the third biennial convention of the National Maritime Union during its session here.

Probably at heart he always was a union man. Pal first came to the NMU when he jumped ship on his original master during a cross-country trip and wound up listening to the "gab" around the meeting hall at Marcus Hook, Texas.

What he heard seemed to please him enough so that when the original owner came to claim him a few months later there was no dragging him away from the seamen.

When the master saw the powerful ties that were binding Pal to the labor movement, that was that. Pal would go to sea—a union seaman. He did and has since sailed around the world.

PICKET DUTY

During the 1939 Tanker strike, Pal walked out with his buddies. He did his regular stretch at picket duty, marched around with the strikers and carried the message of his union on attractive banners wrapped around his body.

Then things got tough. The police weren't on Pal's side any more; they were taking orders from the boss. They determined to break the strike.

But Pal objected. When the cops began to raise their clubs he leaped in to do his part.

SHOT BY COP

The cop's gun barked and a bullet creased Pal's forehead. That was his first introduction to the brutality of anti-labor forces. Since that time he has been shot at often and has more than one scar to show for his efforts.

A warrant was sworn out for Pal's arrest in Marcus Hook. It was all his fellow workers could do to slip him out of port to Houston where he has been ever since.

New York Bus Drivers Win Increase In Award

NEW YORK, July 19—Wage increases of from two to eight cents an hour were won for 3,400 employes of the New York Omnibus Corp. and Fifth Avenue Coach Co., in an arbitration decision issued by William H. Davis, chairman of the National Defense Mediation Board.

The wage increases are retroactive to March 1, which was the expiration date of the old agreement between the companies and CIO Transport Workers Union. Davis was named arbitrator by Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia after the 12-day-old bus strike which ended March 22.

Along with the increases, Davis also awarded the union busmen time-and-a-half for overtime for work over eight hours and time-and-one-half for special runs. The 48-hour week was also provided, with time-and-a-half provisions for work performed over that period. The workers formerly had a 10-hour day.

"The long delayed award issued by conservative Chairman of the National Defense Mediation Board, Mr. William H. Davis, completely vindicates the position and action of the Transport Workers Union," Quill declared.

Quill stated that the union was compelled to strike the bus systems last March "because the companies insisted upon one-man operations of Fifth Avenue buses, wage cuts, elimination of sick leaves and vacations and general worsening of conditions of the omnibus corporation's employes."

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

The American Communications Association, CIO, won an outstanding victory this week at Western Union in Detroit, beating the AFL by a vote of 417 to 165. This victory will add impetus to the drives going on throughout the country in the various divisions of this giant communications organization.

Regional Director Davidson reports from Cincinnati that at the Chevrolet plant in Norwood, Ohio, the CIO had another smashing victory over the AFL, with a vote of 667 for the UAW-CIO against 168 for the AFL. For more than a year these workers lived with the AFL and got no place.

LOTS OF VICTORIES

In Michigan in the last 30 days the CIO won Labor Board elections over the AFL, including one at the Sash Plant of the Detroit Steel Products Company by a vote of 503 to 167.

Following the victory at the Midland plant of the Dow Chemical Company, the United Mine Workers District 50 won another election at this company's plant in Bay City, Mich.

Sixty per cent of the Optical Workers in Detroit have joined up with the United Optical Workers, CIO.

Regional Director Fullerton Fulton in Wilmington, Del., reports an agreement signed between District 50, UMWA, and the Artic Roofing, Inc., granting wage increases ranging from 6 cents to 14 cents per hour, overtime provisions, pay for conscriptees and vacations.

In another column in this issue there appears a resolution adopted by the Cine-Technicians Union of Great Britain, protesting the use of troops in labor disputes in the United States. This is more than ever significant in view of the fact that they are at war, and yet realize the danger of such a practice.

UNION SHOP AT STORE

The United Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Employes of America report the winning of a great victory in signing a union shop agreement with The Fair store, large department store in Chicago, covering 1700 workers, providing an increase in wages and many other beneficial stipulations.

Tom Girdler said in 1937 that he would dig potatoes or pick apples before signing a contract with the CIO. This week Girdler's Republic Steel Company, as well as Bethlehem, Youngstown and Inland, all companies involved in the Little Steel strike of that year, entered into the following arrangement with the SWOC:

(1) Settled all Labor Board cases involved in the strike.

(2) Reinstated all strikers.

(3) Agreed that SWOC can show by its dues cards, without an election, and the companies, upon such showing, will sign a written, collective bargaining contract.

These achievements demonstrate there is nothing in industry too big for the CIO to tackle and overcome, bringing about recognition of unions and protection for its membership.

USE OF VIOLENCE

Director Walter Harris of the Shoe Workers Organizing Drive reports that on the morning of July 11 a mob attacked union headquarters in Washington, Mo., and beat up Organizers Leo T. Cassidy and Gene Koester; broke the furniture, stole records and money. Workers in the International Shoe Company's plant there left their work, inspired by certain business interests, to do this dastardly, un-American job. This office has lodged a complaint with the U. S. Attorney General's office, demanding that action be taken against these violators of American liberties. No stone will be left unturned to bring these culprits to justice. The organization drive will go on.

I attended two splendid gatherings of CIO members over the week end, one in Detroit, held by the Italian members of the Ford Workers Union—all very enthusiastic over their recent success, and one at Wilmington, Del., presided over by Regional Director Fulton and attended by all the unions in that area. Every one there pledged himself to work together to build up the CIO in this great city of Duponts.

New York, July 19—Summary suspension of Ewart Guinier, acting president of the New York District, State, County and Municipal Workers, CIO, from his post as junior examiner of the Municipal Civil Service Commission is a flagrant attack upon the union, it was charged yesterday by William Spahn, acting secretary-treasurer of the organization.

In his statement Spahn declared that the suspension order, issued by Mayor LaGuardia over long distance telephone from Washington last Friday, was definitely a part of an anti-union drive being made by Commissioner of Investigation William Herlands. He said that the action was "unprecedented."

Spahn's statement follows:

"Mr. Guinier is known to thousands of city employes as an able, honest official of unimpeachable integrity. He is an outstanding member of the Negro community and has, since his graduation from Columbia University, been a leader in the civic and social affairs of his people.

"The Mayor's action, obviously prompted by Commissioner Herlands, is to date the most flagrant anti-union aspect of his current witch-hunting investigation of SCMWA members in the city employ."

Strike Shuts N. Y. Gypsum Plants

New York, July 19—A complete shutdown of all Gypsum plants in the New York area is now in effect with the announcement that the National Gypsum Company's plant at Bronx was struck by members of District 50, United Mine Workers.

Samuel Machlis, field representative, said that 200 workers are involved in the Bronx strike. The workers walked out after the company refused to grant wage increases and the union shop.

Win Wage Boost At Steel Plant

Wilmington, Del., July 19—The Delaware office of the CIO announced today that Local No. 1071, LIU, United Steel Castings Workers had secured increases of five to ten cents an hour for all 110 workers when the wage scale was reopened after six months of the contract had expired due to the rise in the cost of living.

Minimum wages in the plant are now 55 cents an hour. This new increase means that all members of LIU No. 1071 have gained at least 10 cents an hour and 10 per cent on their piecework rates within the last six months.

The Union was represented in negotiations by Jesse Hanna, Hannibal Cooper, Louis Lurd, Robert Cooper, Andy Miller, CIO Field Representative Gene Derrickson and CIO Regional Director Fullerton Fulton.

Ohio CIO Maps Fight On Tory Bills

Columbus, O., July 19—"If some members of Congress are prone to believe that labor unions are unusually aggressive, let it be remembered that we are the only democratic organizations in the nation which must continually expend so much energy and money for the right to exist," Ted F. Silvey, secretary-treasurer of the Ohio Industrial Union Council, declared in a letter to Congressman John F. Hunter of Ohio.

The CIO leader called upon the Congressman to work and vote against the passage of the Vinson and Ball Bills and other anti-labor bills in Congress.

RIGHT TO EXIST

"Organized labor should not have to fight for its right to exist," Silvey wrote. "We should be permitted to coordinate our regular activities and make our contribution to better living standards for all our people without having to protect ourselves continuously from those who stand ready to stab us in the back."

Launch CIO Drive In Delaware

Wilmington, Del., July 19—A state-wide drive to make Delaware "100 per cent" CIO was launched at a conference of CIO delegates here last week.

Delegates from 17 CIO unions met and discussed the problems of organization here. The conference was then topped off by a banquet attended by more than 150 delegates and friends.

HAYWOOD SPEAKS

Speaking at the banquet, Allan S. Haywood, CIO organizational director, urged the unionists to become active in the drive to organize the Delaware chemical industry and "bring Wilmington, the home of the DuPonts, back in the United States."

Haywood offered a detailed report on the CIO's organizing activities throughout the nation. He drew much interest when he discussed the negotiations between the CIO United Automobile Workers and officials of the Ford Motor Co. He termed the Ford pact as labor's "model contract."

Resolutions adopted at the conference included support for the national CIO's campaign against anti-labor legislation and against the use of troops in strike situations; backing to England, China and the Soviet Union in the war against Hitlerism and Japanese aggression; for an end to race discrimination in defense industries, and denounced the attempts to deport Harry Bridges.

Fullerton Fulton, newly appointed regional director here, highly praised the progress made by CIO units during the past year and called upon the delegates for a more intensified organizing drive during the next twelve months.

Union Leaders Send Greetings To Teamsters

By CECIL OWEN

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., July 19—Vigorous CIO support of the efforts of Minneapolis general drivers to obtain release from the strangling craft union setup of the AFL is expressed in scores of messages arriving at headquarters of Local 544-CIO, powerful teamster's union that recently affiliated with the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee.

Topped by wires from CIO President Philip Murray and UMWA President John L. Lewis, messages read at a recent spirited mass meeting, where General Counsel Lee Pressman of the CIO was principal speaker, are spurring the militant struggle of drivers here to establish a strong industrial union under the banner of the CIO.

MUCH INTEREST SHOWN

In addition to expressions of support from CIO unions over the nation, countless inquiries are pouring in from teamsters locals which also want to free themselves from the dictatorial and racket-ridden craft union of the AFL. Scores of other teamster locals are ready to follow the example of 544 as the CIO drive to organize teamsters gains momentum. Two other locals have already joined 544, one here and one in nearby Austin.

Warm expressions of CIO backing of the drivers here from CIO internationals, Regional Directors and State and City Industrial Union Councils, occupy a full page in the current issue of the 544 organ. Wires received included support from S. H. Dalrymple, of the rubber workers, Micheal J. Quill of the transportation workers, Edward T. Cheyfitz of the die casters, Morris Muster of the furniture workers, Donald Henderson of the cannery workers, Lewis Merrill of the office workers, R. J. Thomas of the auto workers, Reid Robinson of the mine, mill and smelter workers, and O. M. Orton of the woodworkers. Virtually every CIO council and regional office and many locals were also represented in the pledges of support received.

RESIST PRESSURE

Importance of CIO assistance is emphasized in a report to Chairman A. D. Lewis of the UCWOC from Frank Barnhart, UCWOC Regional Director on the scene in Minneapolis. Telling of progress since the drivers entered the UCWOC two weeks ago, Barnhart added:

"In spite of pressure by the press, by the employers, by a hostile administration, both state and national, by hundreds of slugging 'organizers' imported by the AFL, the morale of the men is very high. One could not be here as I have been during this time without understanding clearly that the fighting spirit and morale of the men is due in large part to the opinion that the CIO nationally is a democratic and powerful organization and that they will aid in spreading the fight nationally.

"The truck drivers understand, as few workers do, that they are subject to direct and quick pressure not only on the job locally, but in their homes, streets and alleys where their work takes them, and on the broad highways, foreign terminals, and other distant points. They have confidence because they feel that justice for the truck drivers and all of the workers who depend upon them, such as the building trades, can be obtained in making this magnificent fight."

A WELCOME HAND

A welcome hand extended by all CIO unions in areas where 544 drivers deliver materials would go far to halt reprisal efforts of AFL teamsters and speed the organization of drivers within the CIO, Bardhart indicated. He said some AFL teamster outfits were threatening to refuse to handle material hauled by CIO drivers. Many of the 544 drivers penetrate a wide area of the midwest, since this local long ago pioneered in organizing over-the-road drivers.

More than three weeks ago Local 544 filed under the state labor board procedure for an election to let the drivers determine affiliation. Hearings on this request for an election are under way before Alfred P. Blair, personal representative of Governor Stassen.

AFL IS FEARFUL

The AFL, fearful of losing the poll, is using every legal subterfuge to stall the election. Meanwhile AFL strong-arm agents are trying to intimidate 544 drivers by threatening them with bodily injury if they don't remove 544-CIO badges.

Evidence on this is being presented and it is expected there will be an election soon.

To Honor Mine Union Official

Pittsburgh, July 19—A testimonial dinner to honor John P. Busarello, vice president of District 5, United Mine Workers, will be held by Labor's Non - Partisan League, August 2, at the Roosevelt Hotel.

Anthony J. Federoff, CIO regional director and chairman of the Allegheny County league, said that the banquet will be in recognition of numerous demands by Busarello's labor and political associates for an opportunity to express felicitations for his recent elevation to the UMW district's vice presidency.

Win $4,000,000 Boost In Los Angeles in Month

LOS ANGELES, July 19—Total wage gains of nearly $4,000,000 have been won for the CIO memberships of the Los Angeles area within the past 30 days, the Los Angeles Industrial Union Council reported this week.

The most spectacular gains were for the 11,000 North American workers, affiliated to the UAW, who won approximately $2,860,000 a year in additional wages under their first contract.

An 11-day strike in the waste material industry, conducted by CIO warehousemen, brought a master contract with closed shop, union hiring and $600,000 in higher wages.

A new contract negotiated by Local 1549, SWOC, with the Los Angeles branch of the American Can Company brought $175,000, and other SWOC gains for the period total $80,000.

Local 406, UAW, after a three-year strike at the Wilmington plant of Henry Ford, will reap $166,400 in additional wages as the result of the Ford contract.

And the Oil Workers International Union, Local 128, is celebrating the first union shop contracts in the entire industry, with the Union Oil Company, which will bring $100,000 in additional wages.

The council heard a report from the Disney strikers, members of the Screen Cartoonists Guild, and voted to put Walt Disney's famous "Mickey Mouse" and his other screen cartoons on the CIO unfair list. Full support was pledged to the Disney strikers.

The council also voted to send greetings to teamsters Local 544 of Minneapolis, which recently joined the CIO, and offer this new membership its full support.

Murray Hits New York City Union Busting

Asks LaGuardia Order End to Anti-CIO Tactics; Letter Cites Spying, Firings

NEW YORK, July 19—A sharply-worded demand that New York City department executives abandon Gestapo methods against CIO union members and institute a policy of genuine collective bargaining was sent last week by CIO Pres. Philip Murray to Mayor F. H. LaGuardia.

Murray said he had reliable information of "serious discrimination" against the CIO State, County & Municipal Workers. At the very time the SCMWA was asking for bargaining sessions with Commissioner Carey of the New York Department of Sanitation, Carey signed a backdoor agreement with a group of discredited AFL leaders whom the SCMWA has accused of shady practices.

On the other hand when the SCMWA proved it had enrolled a majority of employes in the Department of Welfare, the department initiated a system of collective "negotiations" with all the existing unions, but refused sole collective bargaining rights with the CIO, Murray recalled.

'INCOMPREHENSIBLE'

"This apparently incomprehensible line of conduct pursued by your administration takes on meaning when seen in connection with other facts," LaGuardia was told by the CIO leader.

The other facts included the strange conduct of a probe by the Department of Investigation, allegedly searching for subversive activities in the Department of Welfare.

That investigation, Murray charged, "is proceeding along commonly established lines . . . to wit, the maligning and the attempted discrediting of democratically elected leaders of a legitimate trade union."

But though the Department of Investigation is committed to investigating corrupt practices in the Department of Sanitation, Murray said he understood that "when members of the CIO union . . . pressed for speedy investigation of these corrupt practices, these people were called in and grilled with respect to their CIO affiliation, making them feel as though they were the subject under investigation rather than those who were corrupt."

ANTI-UNION PRACTICES

Intimidation, firing of union members and sharp anti-union practices have been frequently employed by reactionary businessmen, Murray told the Mayor, adding that "although we have grown to expect the application of this formula at the hands of such men as Ernest T. Weir and Martin Dies, we still look toward government as an employer to eschew these methods.

"Finally, it is most surprising and alarming to find these methods employed in a local government headed by yourself, who are also chairman of the National Civil Defense Administration. It is most alarming because a policy pursued in your City Administration, Mr. Mayor, must necessarily give the lead for all other state and local administrations, for you are the head of the National Civil Defense Program.

"I cannot believe, therefore, that this anti-CIO policy emanates from you within the City of New York. That would hardly be the best way of rallying behind the National Civil Defense program."

Win Five-Week Strike In N. Y. C.

Long Island City, N. Y., July 19—A five-week strike at the Laboratory Furniture Co., involving 85 workers, ended when the company granted a seven and one-half per cent increase, one week's vacation with pay and the union shop.

The pact was signed by Local 76-B, United Furniture Workers of America. It also included an arbitration clause for wage increases at the end of one year. The pact was signed for a two-year period.

Firm Told To Obey Law

Salt Lake City, Utah, July 19—apolis-Honeywell Regulator Co. was ordered to cease discouraging membership in the CIO United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America in an order issued by the National Labor Relations Board last week.

The company was also directed to reinstate six employes with back pay, and to award remedial wages to two others, who were discharged or laid off and refused reinstatement by the company.

Miners Ban Sliding Scale

Salt Lake City, Utah, July 12—A new contract abolishing the old sliding scale system under which Utah metal miners' wages were tied to the price of metal, and a 50 cent a day increase in pay, were won in a new statewide pact covering 6,000 members of the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers throughout the state.

Union officials estimated the increase would give the men an additional three-quarters of a million dollars a year.

The Upper Crust

"He managed to survive the Ford contract, but when Tom Girdler decided to recognize the CIO—well, that was just too much for the poor soul."

Canadian Electrical Workers Flay Mounties' Anti-Labor Actions

TORONTO, Ont., July 19—Condemnation of "Gestapo-like" visits by Royal Canadian Mounted Police to home of Canadian General Electric workers who will again face trial this week on charges of participating illegally in a strike contrary to the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, was voiced by the District Council of United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers' Union in a statement.

The meeting unanimously passed a resolution protesting to federal police authorities against the action of the RCMP in "this gross attempt to intimidate workers on the eve of their trial, contrary to all the rules of British justice." The same RCMP officers who had spirited C. S. Jackson, Canadian vice-president of the union, away to an internment camp, knocked on the workers' doors seeking evidence on which to base their prosecution, union officials said.

Union officials branded "the attempt in this instance to use the RCMP as an industrial spy agency failed miserably." Union members informed the Council that the RCMP had called at their homes, asking how many workers were in the union, whether they had been incited to strike and if they had been intimidated during the nine-day holiday, etc.

QUESTIONED JANITOR

One chief steward reported that the officers had visited his home and questioned the janitor about his habits and whether he ever held meetings there at night. The trial of the 14 workers involved is expected to resume this week.

Reaffirming their confidence in and loyalty to C. S. Jackson, the District Council re-elected him Canadian vice-president of the union. Wires were ordered sent to Premier King and Minister of Justice Lapointe demanding his release.

Other developments on the Canadian labor scene included:

Charges voiced before a conciliation board at Halifax, N. S., that Halifax Shipyards, Ltd., discontinued the check-off for a benefit society because it would permit the workers' union, Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, to enjoy the same right. Under Nova Scotia's trade union Act, check-off for union dues can only be permitted if it is being done for benefit societies.

SWOC Executive Director C. H. Millard wired Labor Minister McLarty to order the Waterloo Mfg. Co. to stop firing union members while a conciliation board report was pending. Although a majority of workers in the plant chose SWOC as bargaining agent, the company has refused to recognize the union and signed an agreement with an employes committee.

"Action by the management in this case, as in other similar cases, is not only creating resentment, through the refusal to recognize the collective bargaining agencies endorsed by the employes involved, but has given rise to a much graver situation," Millard said. "That is, the workers in these plants are becoming convinced that uninterrupted production is a secondary consideration to the determination to keep the unions out."

Organizer Escapes Lynch Mob

CAMBRIDGE, Md., July 19—Charges of terror through employment of thugs against union organizers were made this week against the Phillips Packing Co. by an organizer for the CIO United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing and Allied Workers of America.

Bob Himmaugh, the organizer, said that he and his wife were told to leave the city under threats of physical violence on June 21. Two days later, when he came back to town alone, a company thug, whom Himmaugh identified as Curtis Thomas, warned him that he "had better leave the Eastern Shore, or else . . ."

Himmaugh was again threatened several days later when he was ordered to stop his car by two armed company watchmen and the business agent of the Dorchester Workers Union, a company union. After cursing him and threatening to beat him up, Himmaugh said, he was permitted to go on his way.

When the union organizer parked his car last week, three company thugs ran into it with a truck and informed him that "this is a warning".

POLICE CHIEF 'DEAF'

Appeals for protection to the chief of police and the county sheriff have fallen on deaf ears, Himmaugh said.

The Phillips Co. is the largest unorganized cannery in the country. It employs more than 3000 workers. Two other CIO organizers were threatened with violence last year here.

Ask U. S. Curb High D. C. Rents

Washington, July 19—The House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was asked this week to "give the single Federal worker a break" by providing adequate housing facilities for single workers in the Washington area.

The plea was made by Bertram M. Gross, president of the United States Housing Authority Local of the CIO United Federal Workers of America.

Gross criticized present plans which call for the building of 1,000 defense housing units here. He called for at least 10,000 units in the Washington area.

The union leader charged that under present housing conditions here, rooming houses "have the spaciousness of beehives and the sunnyness of catacombs." He hit at plans to make the new defense housing units for women only.

"We think the girls should be taken care of," he said, "but what about equal rights for men? Why draw a double standard when it comes to housing?"

Workers on Railroads Before 1937 Should File for Benefits

Washington, July 19—The Railroad Retirement Board today asked all persons with railroad service prior to 1937 to file statements immediately with the Board or their last railroad employer to establish eligibility for retirement payments when they reach retirement age. The Board estimated that 230,000 out of 1,200,000 individuals entitled to credit for service before 1937 have not yet submitted statements of service.

By submitting these statements now, Murray W. Latimer, Chairman of the Railroad Retirement Board, emphasizes, railroad workers can get the full annuity amounts to which they are entitled, with a minimum of delay, when they reach retirement age. They will also guard against destruction or loss of records proving their service.

An individual may count railroad service before 1937 toward his annuity if on August 29, 1935, he was working for an employer subject to the act or was on furlough, leave of absence, or was absent on account of sickness or disability in accordance with an applicable rule or practice in effect on the employer.

Employers covered by the act include interstate railroads, companies owned or controlled by such railroads which perform service in connection with rail transportation, sleeping-car and express companies, railroad associations and the standard railway labor organizations.

Statements on service prior to 1937 should show when, where and for what railroads the individual worked, Latimer states. A special form for this statement (AA-15) may be obtained directly from the Board or any of its field offices, or from any railroad or other employer under the act, including railway labor organizations.

British Union Raps Use Of Troops in U. S. Plane Strike

WASHINGTON, July 19—The CIO was informed today that the General Council of the Association of Cine-Technicians, a British union, had gone on record deploring the use of troops in the North American Aviation strike in California last month. Text of the resolution:

"The General Council of the Association of Cine-Technicians, noting recent events in the United States of America, deplores the use of troops in an industrial dispute and expresses its sympathy for the measures which organized labor in the U. S. A. may find it necessary to take in order to preserve the right of collective bargaining and industrial organization.

"This resolution is to be sent to the United States Embassy, to the Trades Union Congress with a request that it be kind enough to forward a copy to the American Federation of Labor and to the Congress of Industrial Organizations."

In a letter of thanks to George H. Elvin, secretary of the association, Allan S. Haywood, CIO director of organization, extended "our good wishes for the success of your organization and the whole British labor movement in this great crisis."

CIO Unions In Protest at 50% Auto Cuts

WASHINGTON, July 26.—CIO unions are up in arms over the threat to the jobs of hundreds of thousands of workers in the auto and allied industries, if the government proposal to cut auto production actually goes into effect.

R. J. Thomas, president of the United Automobile Workers, said that there is serious doubt if a "sharp cut is necessary or advisable at this time." George F. Addes, UAW secretary-treasurer, called the proposed cut "a crime and an unnecessary crime at that."

Indignant wires protesting such a drastic cut without consideration for the workers thrown out of jobs were sent to President Roosevelt and other government officials by scores of CIO unions, in response to telegrams sent out by Allan Haywood, director of organization, to all CIO affiliates.

Governor Murray D. Van Wagoner of Michigan declared that the proposed curtailment would bring calamity to the state's leading industry and Pres. C. C. Carlton of the Automotive Parts & Equipment Manufacturers Association estimated that more than 173,000 automotive workers in Michigan alone would lose their jobs.

Many CIO officials expressed the belief that the crisis in defense production used as an excuse for the 50 per cent curtailment proposal could have been avoided if the industry council plan advanced by CIO Pres. Philip Murray had been heeded.

Holdout Hosiery Co. Goes CIO

Bangor, Pa., July 26—One of the last outposts of anti-unionism in the hosiery industry joined in collective bargaining with the CIO American Federation of Hosiery Workers this week.

The Kayser Silk Hosiery Co., employing 1300 workers in its Bangor plant, finally succumbed to a 10-month organizing drive of the CIO union when it signed a pact with the AFHW last Monday.

GAINS WON

The contract provides that all members and future members of the union must remain in good standing as a condition of employment and machinery for arbitration of grievances was established. It provides for negotiations for wage rates upon completion of present negotiations with the Full-Fashioned Hosiery Manufacturers Association.

Board Orders Textile Firm 'Cease and Desist'

Washington, July 26—The American Textile Company, Pittsburgh, Pa., was ordered to cease discouraging membership in the CIO in an order issued by the National Labor Relations Board.

The textile firm was also ordered to reinstate Dorothy Olup, union member, with remedial wages, to a position she held at the plant prior to October 24, 1940.

The company agreed to reimburse 14 employes, including Dorothy Olup, for loss of pay. The sum of $1,100 was paid to the Pittsburgh regional director of the Labor Board to be distributed by him pro rata among the workers affected.

Mine Workers Win Raise In Drug Firm

Lynchburg, Va., July 26—Some 404 workers at the Mead Corporation, Heald Division, received a four-cent hourly increase and two per cent of their last year's earnings as a vacation bonus in a contract signed by District 50, United Mine Workers.

OTHER GAINS

The pact also includes seniority rights and an arbitration clause. It is also provided that all employes who are now members, or will become members should remain in good standing as a condition of employment. Only about 35 of the workers have not signed union applications yet, but they are expected to join shortly. Ray Thomason, CIO regional director, aided in the negotiations.

CIO Wins Poll At Harvester

Springfield, Ohio, July 26—Workers at the truck plant of the International Harvester Co. here voted last week 1589 to 1129 for the United Automobile Workers, defeating an independent union that has held bargaining rights at this plant for three years.

Paul Miley, UAW regional director, said the election "was a real victory for the workers, and the UAW-CIO committee will start immediately to correct some of the conditions the employes in this plant were forced to accept."

F. L. Innis, international representative said that 317 new members signed up with the UAW the day after the election, and that he expects the plant soon to be 100 per cent CIO.

Regional Director Paul Miley reported that the winning of this plant is most important to auto workers as it was one of the plants that kept the truck industry from being 100 per cent organized.

CIO Meet Asked to N. Y.

New York, July 26—An invitation to hold the fourth annual convention of the CIO in New York City was extended to President Philip Murray and other national officers this week by the Greater New York Industrial Union Council.

The Council pointed out that a large section of the CIO membership is organized here and that the people of New York would welcome the opportunity to be hosts to the "leaders of the main body of the country's dominant labor organizations. . . ."

SHOW APPRECIATION

The CIO group here also declared that it has always been the aim and desire of the New York CIO unions to demonstrate their "appreciation to the national officers and the main body of the CIO for the tremendous gains for American labor achieved by the CIO. . . ."

CIO Not Resting On Achievements, Carey Declares

Lorain, O., July 27—Pointing to the recent huge organizational and wage gains made by the CIO recently, James B. Carey, CIO secretary, today told a large mass meeting of members of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee that the CIO's problem is not only the problem of organizing the unorganized.

"We have also the problem of protecting what has already been won, the problem of maintaining and extending our gains in other fields," he declared.

The CIO secretary substituted for CIO Pres. Philip Murray here. Pres. Murray was unable to speak because of illness.

"Only a few days ago the CIO met and defeated a concerted attempt on the part of anti-labor forces in the Congress of the United States to destroy the right to organize, to bargain collectively and to strike," Carey asserted.

He referred to the defeat of the Connally-May amendment to the Selective Service Act in the House a fortnight ago. The May-Connally amendment, if passed, would have established compulsory arbitration, restricted and destroyed the right to strike through imposition of enforced "cooling-off periods" and would have subjected labor to rigid government control at every step, Carey said.

CIO NOT RESTING

"The Connally-May amendment was defeated. This does not mean that the CIO can rest on this achievement, any more than it can rest on the organization of 5,000,000 workers it has brought under contract to date," Carey declared. He warned that labor still faces the threat of the Vinson and Ball bills, both which include many of the anti-labor features in the Connally-May amendment.

"The coal industry, after weeks of evasion on the part of a minority of operators from the Southern regions, has signed with the United Mine Workers, founder and keystone of the CIO," Carey asserted.

"This contract, won under the leadership of CIO's original driving spirit and first president, John L. Lewis, marks the greatest forward step yet taken in the organization and liberation of Southern workers, in freeing them from the unfair wage differential," the CIO secretary declared.

He recalled a statement made sometime ago by Tom Girdler of the Republic Steel Co., who said that he would retire to dig potatoes rather than negotiate a contract with the CIO.

He also pointed to Bethlehem Steel and Ford regarding their decision to deal with the CIO.

CIO Pact Ups Pay

Philadelphia, July 26—Wage increases of 25 cents an hour were gained for 100 workers employed by Broad Motors, a Ford Agency here, in a contract signed with the CIO.

The pact also includes vacations with pay, seniority rights and improved working conditions, George Craig, CIO regional director, announced.

MORE INCREASES

Craig also announced that a CIO pact with the Armstrong Cork Company in nearby Camden, N. J., brought wage increases of 10 cents an hour for 293 workers. That contract also included vacations with pay and other union provisions.

Last week District 50, United Mine Workers, won wage increases of 12½ cents an hour for 200 workers at the Precision Grinding Wheel Co. That pact also provided for five cents additional for night workers and included handsome bonuses for Army draftees or volunteers.

By WALTER PETERS

WASHINGTON, July 26—The American Newspaper Publishers Association this week defied the authority of the Federal Communications Commission's right to subpoena four newspaper executives as witnesses in the government's investigation into newspaper ownership of radio stations.

Refusing to appear to testify were James G. Stahlman, former president of the publishers association and of the Nashville (Tenn.) Banner; William A. Thomson, director of the association's advertising bureau; Arthur Robb, editor of Editor and Publisher, and Edwin S. Friendly, business manager of the New York Sun.

The association's attorneys filed a statement challenging the commission's right to investigate newspaper control over radio. The attorneys declared that a questionnaire submitted by the commission to newspapers was inquiring "into the newspaper business."

INVESTIGATOR TESTIFIES

James L. Fly, chairman of the commission, did not indicate what action would be taken to compel the presence of the subpoenaed men.

The hearing was ordered by the commission in an attempt to determine future policy in granting radio broadcasting licenses to newspaper owners.

During the first day's hearing, Allen W. Saylor, supervising investigator for the commission, testified that 298 radio stations in the nation were owned by newspapers. He presented a table showing that although income from newspaper advertising is twice that of radio's, the advertising gains made in radio during the past 10 years were spectacular.

It was shown that newspaper control in radio has doubled during the past 10 years and that 27 per cent of the applications filed for FM radio broadcasting permits came from newspaper publishers. Radio experts believe that FM will eventually take the place of present broadcasting methods.

The publishers have opposed the hearing from the very beginning. Their opposition first began with an accusation that such a hearing was a violation of the rights of a free press. It finally ended with the establishment of a huge war chest to fight the hearing.

Thomas, UAW Head, To Broadcast

Buffalo, July 26—R. J. Thomas, president of the United Automobile Workers, CIO, will speak over a coast-to-coast network of the Columbia Broadcasting System on Sunday, August 3, from 1:45 to 2.00 p. m., Eastern Standard Time. The speech will be made on the eve of the UAW convention in this city.

Seaway Threat To Labor, Industry, Kennedy Declares

WASHINGTON, July 26—Development of the St. Lawrence Seaway Project would have a devastating effect on 100,000 workers employed in the anthracite industry, testified Thomas Kennedy, secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers, before the House River and Harbors Committee last week.

Kennedy stated that the anthracite industry is confined to the northeastern part of Pennsylvania and that several million people are wholly dependent upon the industry for their existence.

DEPENDENCE

"This dependence is not confined to the man or woman who labors, but runs to the existence of banks, business institutions, municipal government, school systems, the professions, and those who derive their livelihood therefrom," Kennedy said.

The mine workers' leader testified that at one time anthracite coal sales to Canada totaled 5,000,000 tons, equal to $40,000,000 in order. But this business has shrunk to a point below 2,000,000 tons a year, with exports from England, Wales, Russia, Germany and French Indo-China taking a good share of the business. The war has eliminated some of this competitino, Kennedy stated, but development of the St. Lawrence Seaway would ultimately end the Canadian business.

Kennedy estimated that in 1917 the industry employed 156,148 men. Today only 91,041 remain working. And until recently, the remaining group has averaged about a three-day work week, he said.

Kennedy said that if the St. Lawrence is made navigable to ocean liners that America would lose Canadian business because foreign coal "will come right into our own back yard and undersell our American product."

He also testified that the domestic market would be menaced along the southern border of the St. Lawrence River. This would happen because "it would not be difficult for our State Department experts to find some excuse—legally, diplomatically or politically, to once more permit them (foreign nations) to come within our borders and further cripple American coal."

Publishing Firm Signs With CIO

New York, July 26—Wage increases of from 14 to 42 per cent were secured for employes of the R. R. Bowker Co., publishers of the Publishers Weekly and other trade journals, in a contract signed by the Book and Magazine Guild, CIO United Office and Professional Workers affiliate.

The firm is one of the oldest in the publishing business. The agreement covers all employes in the editorial, advertising, office, mailing and delivery departments.

MINIMUM WAGE

Further raises will take effect next January 1, at which time the minimum salary for professional work will be set at $30 a week, while minimums for office assistants will be established at $25.

Other provisions in the pact include a five-day, 35-hour week, thus replacing the 39-hour week, severance pay up to 10 weeks pay for nine years service and three weeks annual vacations for employes of 10 years service. Workers of one year employment will receive two weeks vacation.

Retail Food Prices Jumping, U.S. Says

WASHINGTON —(FP)— Retail food prices rose by 3.7% from mid-May to mid-June in the most rapid and widespread advance since the outbreak of the war, the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics reported here. Preliminary reports for the last half of June indicate a further advance.

The rise in food prices, which began last November, has brought food costs to wage earners in American cities up 10.4% in seven months. They are now 13.3% above the comparatively low level of August, 1939, and are almost as high as at their peak in 1937.

"The price rise from May to June affected all groups of foods and was reported from all parts of the country," the report said. "The greatest increases were in prices of pork and lamb, lard and other shortening, eggs, and onions, potatoes, and apples. Dairy products and certain canned goods also advanced."

Advances of more than five percent were shown for five cities—Detroit, 6.3%; Louisville, 5.7%; Birmingham, 5.4%; Milwaukee, 5.3%, and Richmand, 5.2%. In all of these cities very sharp increases were reported for onions and potatoes, pork and lamb, lard, navy beans, and eggs. In Detroit fresh milk prices also increased.

Compared with a year ago, food costs are now higher by 10% or more in 14 cities, by from five to 10% in 35 cities, and by less than 5% in only two cities.

Since last year at this time, total food costs have risen 7.7%. Advances for fresh pork and pork products have been particularly marked, with prices for pork chops and bacon now more than 30% and lard 40% above last year. Butter, eggs, evaporated milk, sugar, navy beans, cabbage, bananas, and green beans ranged from 10 to 34% higher this June than last.

CIO Hospital Union Seeks Bargaining

Detroit, July 26—Gov. Murray D. Van Wagoner of Michigan was asked this week to make an effort to bring about collective bargaining at the Harper Hospital here. The State, County and Municipal Workers of America wrote the governor after making attempts to persuade the hospital authorities to bargain with the union.

MAJORITY IN CIO

It was pointed out that more than a majority of the hospital workers have joined the CIO union and that a refusal on the part of the hospital authorities to meet in collective bargaining with the union is a violation of the Michigan State Labor Mediation Act.

The union charged that the hospital is one of the worst exploiters in Detroit. Workers are receiving as low as $50 a month for a 72-hour week, it was charged.

The union informed the governor that it does not wish to strike, but that unless the hospital officials agree to bargain a strike notice will be served.

CIO Construction Drive Under Way In Minneapolis

Minneapolis, July 26—Establishment of a 30-man committee to coordinate the organizing drive of the United Construction Workers in the Minneapolis-St. Paul area was announced this week by A. D. Lewis, chairman of the UCWOC, from his Washington office.

Lewis stated that the committee would formulate plans "whereby the cooperation of all CIO affiliated unions may be most effectively utilized in our drive to organize Motor Transport Workers and other workers falling within the jurisdiction of the United Construction Workers."

The committee will be headed by Frank Barnhart, regional director and international UCWOC representative. Other members are from such key CIO unions in the packing, electrical and machine and auto. Representatives of local and the Minnesota Industrial Union Council are also included in the committee, as well as members of District 50, UMW, United Fur and Leather Workers and American Communications Association.

Great numbers of letters and wires in support of the teamsters' switch from the AFL into the CIO are still coming into local CIO headquarters here, it is reported.

CIO Hits New Anti-Strike Bill

CIO Fights 50% Cuts Threatened In Auto Production

WASHINGTON, July 26—Protests against the government's proposed plan for a 50 per cent cut in production in the automobile industry, which would throw some 200,000 auto workers out of jobs, are pouring in from CIO unions in response to an appeal from President R. J. Thomas of the United Automobile Workers who has vigorously denounced the proposal.

In a wire sent to President Roosevelt, Thomas said: "We are wholly for national defense but seriously doubt sharp cut is necessary or advisable at this time, before machinery and manpower made idle can be utilized for defense production."

George F. Addes, UAW secretary-treasurer, called the proposed cut "a crime and an unnecessary crime at that. The crime, which may throw 200,000 UAW members out of work, could easily have been prevented if the OPM had followed the CIO policy proposed as early as last November by President Philip Murray."

In telegrams sent to all CIO affiliated international unions, state and city councils and regional directors, Allan S. Haywood, CIO director of organization, endorsed UAW President Thomas' request for support in protesting the cut.

The wires were sent out in response to a telegram Thomas sent to CIO President Murray declaring that "this drastic order curtailing production will result in throwing out of work 200,000 of our members and affect thousands of others likewise, without any provision for their re-employment.

ASK CONFERENCE

"I have proposed gradual reduction as defense orders make necessary and provisions are made for re-employment of displaced workers on National Defense Work," Thomas said.

In a wire sent to OPM Directors Sidney Hillman and Knudsen, "on behalf of 500,000 auto workers who will be most vitally affected by proposed further curtailment of automobile production", UAW Pres. Thomas requested the right to have union representatives take part in OPM-industry conferences on the question.

"I am sure," Thomas wired, "that you will not wish to deny labor its right to make constructive suggestions toward avoiding unemployment among the auto workers of this country."

In his stinging attack on the proposal UAW Secretary Addes said:

"The UAW-CIO is as loyal and patriotic as any organization in the country, and what is more, it does not have to explain away things, as the Wall Street experts have to do. Its record is clear.

"But the record of the government in this matter is not clear. Its blindness and refusal to listen to Pres. Murray's proposals are bringing unemployment to a great mass of auto workers, adding to the 8,000,000 American workers already without jobs.

UP TO GOVERNMENT

"In this emergency there seems to be one immediate remedy and only one. It is up to the government to find jobs for these men and women who are idle solely because the government listened to Wall Street instead of to the CIO."

Lewis Merrill, president of the United Office and Professional Workers in a wire sent to Pres. Roosevelt and OPM leaders, protested that "this drastic cut would throw 200,000 auto employes out of their jobs and affect many thousands of office workers in these plants."

The Utility Workers Organizing Committee wired the President and other government officials that the 50 per cent curtailment plan "will create chaos, throwing hundreds of thousands of workers out of jobs without provision for their re-employment."

Pete Mosele, CIO regional director in New York and New Jersey in a wire to Leon Henderson, Civilian Supply Administrator, said: "Six hundred thousand CIO members in

Action Urged Against Report Of Conferees

WASHINGTON, July 26—Strenuous CIO opposition to the new sugar-coated version of the Connally-May proposals for governmental strikebreaking and compulsory arbitration, was expressed today by John T. Jones, CIO legislative representative, in wires addressed to all CIO affiliates, urging action to defeat it.

The new bill is a supposed compromise recommended by Senate and House conferees, after the Senate passed the Connally amendment to the draft act, and the House passed the May bill lowering the draft age without the anti-labor provisions opposed by the CIO.

The House-Senate report, which now goes to both Houses for a final vote, would authorize the President to take over a plant whenever production for defense is "impeded or delayed."

"Joint House-Senate conference committee reported out S-1524 with sugar-coated anti-labor Connally amendment which authorizes government to take over and resume production in any plant where production is interrupted.

"This in effect permits use of the army and navy to break strikes and could be used to force compulsory arbitration on labor. Both are contrary to CIO policy.

"Urge your unions immediately wire their Congressmen and Senators to oppose this revised Connally amendment and to support S-1524 as passed by the House."

As recommended by the conferees, the Connally amendment gives the President power to take over a plant during the existence of the unlimited national emergency proclaimed May 27, 1941, whenever he finds after investigation "that there is an interruption of production at such plant, that the national defense program will be unduly impeded or delayed by such interruption and that the exercise of such power and authority is necessary to insure production at such plant in the interest of national defense."

It is further provided in this section of the amendment "that with respect to any plant of which possession shall have been taken under the provisions of this paragraph, such plant shall be returned to its owners whenever the President determines that such plant will be privately operated in a manner consistent with the needs of the national defense."

'Reign of Terror'

Charge 'Gestapo' In U. S. Agencies

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, July 26—Charges that open terror and "gestapo methods" are being used by high government officials against Federal government employes throughout the country were made in a letter addressed to CIO affiliates by Eleanor Nelson, secretary-treasurer of the United Federal Workers, CIO.

These methods, Miss Nelson wrote, have been employed most notably in the summary firing of Helen Miller, UFWA local officer, by Secretary Perkins of the U. S. Labor Dept. and by officials of the War and Navy Depts. in mass firings in Navy yards and other government establishments.

FBI agents are subjecting Federal workers to long grillings, including sharp questioning on their private lives, Civil Service Commission officials are holding inquisitions behind locked doors with witnesses and union representatives barred, and a general campaign of intimidation, including displays of armed force, is being waged on a national scale, Miss Nelson declared.

REFUSE HEARINGS

Open hearings in the Miller case have been refused by Secretary Perkins, who flatly declared that "there can be no collective bargaining in the government service." Miss Miller, who has worked for seven years in the Department, winning consistent promotions, was summarily dismissed last week on vague charges of being "subversive." Pressed for an open hearing, the Secretary replied by ordering one of her own subordinates to conduct a one-man review of the case.

The UFWA statement declared that "mass suspensions and dismissals are taking place in Gestapo fashion, with armed guards or Marines with fixed bayonets going through the yards and arsenals, tapping employes on the shoulder, marching them out through the most public passageways, so that all employes may see, stripping them of their badges, and dismissing them with no reason being given for the discharge."

Typical questions asked of those subjected to the FBI and other official probers include such items as these, Miss Nelson declared: "What mail do you receive from unions? Is Mr. A—— an officer of the union? Do you belong to the Communist Party, the Nazi Bund or the CIO? What do you think is going to happen in the Balkans? What books have you read in the past year?"

Such summary firings, always done "with prejudice" are a severe injustice to the workers involved, the UFWA pointed out, since it amounts to blacklisting on whatever government or private jobs the worker might apply for.

Quoting CIO President Murray's recent warning on "the national hysteria which has prevailed for some time and in the face of which the future existence and wellbeing of labor unions and millions of their members are being gravely threatened," the UFWA urged CIO affiliates to send protests to President Roosevelt, the Secretaries of War, Navy and Labor, and to the Civil Service Commission.

'Property Seizure' Bill Passed In U. S. Senate

WASHINGTON, July 26—The U. S. Senate this week passed the "property seizure" bill (S. 1579) giving the President power to take over property which in his judgment is needed for national defense.

The bill passed the Senate without an amendment designed to safeguard labor's rights, as suggested by CIO Pres. Murray, who wrote to all Senators urging them to include a clause guaranteeing that labor protective laws regarding collective bargaining, safety, employment standards, etc., would be safeguarded.

"In these times it has become evident that the full protection of labor's rights is essential to national defense," Murray wrote. "It means that we will prosecute our defense efforts with free men, cherishing their rights and eager to defend them."

AMMENDMENT URGED

The amendment urged by Pres. Murray read:

"Nothing herein nor any action taken hereunder shall be deemed to render inappliable or otherwise impair or nullify any existing federal or state laws or bona fide collective bargaining agreements concerning the health, security, safety, employment standards, self-organization and collective bargaining rights of the employes employed in such property prior to its requisition, nor shall such employes become employes of the government or any agency thereof by virtue of the provisions of this act or any action taken thereunder."

Following this bill, the Senate passed another measure setting up a separate armed force to be used at the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy to ferret out and punish alleged "saboteurs" and other elements.

This measure, which passed 41 to 14, was described by Senator Norris, veteran Nebraska liberal, as setting up a "Gestapo" in this country. Sen. Norris was joined in denunciation of the measure by Sen. Danaher of Connecticut, who also criticized it sharply.

U. S. Army Training For Strikebreaking Widely Reported

WASHINGTON, July 26—Reports of many instances of United States troops being trained for strikebreaking duty against American workers were current this week, stirring apprehension in labor ranks and many protests.

Wide publicity was given to incidents arising at Camp Edwards, Mass., when three men had to be sent to camp hospital for treatment of cuts, following maneuvers in which 400 soldiers of the First Battalion of the 101st Field Artillery were drilled in hand-to-hand fighting with 100 other soldiers supposed to be "rioting strikers."

PROPAGANDA TOO

Reports received by the CIO from Coleman, Tex., also told of troops being trained for strikebreaking duty at an encampment of 20,000 near there. One division was said to have been given two months intensive training in strikebreaking, including jui jitsu and other methods of handling union pickets.

The course is also reported to include propaganda to supply moral justification for possible use of the troops against American strikers.

The weekly news-letter "In Fact" also reported documentary evidence of many instances of new soldiers being trained in how to deal with labor disputes and occupy mines, factories and towns. It cited the following examples:

Camp Stewart, Ga.—large-scale anti-labor maneuvers; Fort Hancock, N. J.—machine gun prac against "strikers"; Fort Meade, Md.—intensive training in riot duty; Camp Edwards, Mass.—suppression of strike; Fort Ord, Cal.—strike training; Fort Bragg, N. C.—use of bayonets to break strikes; Camp McClellan, Ala.—lectures on "domestic disturbances."

"Camp Stewart's first troops to handle a 'strike' situation today were prepared for action.

"The 101st Separate Battalion was set to move out early tomorrow morning to put down a sham strike at a theoretical aluminum company, supposedly employing 700 men.

"In the maneuver and field problem, first of its kind to be staged at Camp Stewart, the 101st troops will act out the parts of workers, strikers and soldiers in complete detail. Picket lines, clubs, placards and soap-box speeches will all be part of the show."

The Not So Reluctant Dragon

What CIO Plan Would Avoid

A glaring example of the type of situation which CIO President Philip Murray sought to avoid with his Industry Council Plan, has arisen in the sudden and arbitrary proposal for a 50% cut in automobile production.

This curtailment of production threatens to throw 200,000 workers out of employment, leaders of the CIO United Automobile Workers Union point out. It is being widely protested by the whole labor movement.

In place of such an abrupt and drastic curtailment of automobile production, the UAW-CIO proposes a carefully planned gradual reduction as defense orders make necessary, with provisions for reemployment of displaced workers on defense work.

Reductions in production of consumers' goods, due to defense priorities, have already caused considerable unnecessary unemployment in other industries as well, and more is threatened.

Such arbitrary and bungling edicts by government officials encourage monopolistic practices by profiteering corporations, and create artificial shortages in consumers' goods and higher prices, besides causing layoffs and unemployment. They are certainly not conducive to the efficient prosecution of the defense program.

The CIO Defense Plan, initiated by President Murray, on the other hand, would provide for equal representation of labor and management, in the planning of production for each industry. The workers' interests could thus be protected by their representatives, while expansion of defense production was planned in such a way as to maintain maximum employment and maximum production of consumers' goods.

A Flank Attack

Following defeat of the frontal attack on labor unions, which was embodied in the May proposals, labor's enemies in Congress are now attempting a more subtle flank attack.

It takes the form of bills ostensibly directed against "subversive elements." The staunch Americanism of the labor movement is well-known, so the attempt is now made to camouflage union-busting proposals behind appeals to labor's opposition to any subversion of our democratic institutions.

But the CIO is not deceived by this camouflage. It opposed the Bland bill, recently passed by the House, because it recognized that its loose wording would make possible the firing of any active unionist whom company stool-pigeons might choose to denounce. It it preparing to fight this bill even more strenuously in the Senate.

The CIO also opposes the Ramsey bill to blacklist any worker "commonly called" subversive. There is hardly a union organizer or active member who has not been "commonly called" such names by anti-union employers at one time or another.

Similarly the CIO opposes the proposal in the original Vinson bill, whose reintroduction is now threatened as a separate measure, to allow employers to fire workers whom they consider subversive. This would in effect destroy the Wagner Act, allowing union-fighting bosses an easy loophole to discharge leading unionists.

All such proposals are nets to catch loyal Americans guilty only of labor activity, while spies and saboteurs would easily slip through their meshes.

The CIO Spirit

John L. Lewis had a mouthful to say about the responsibilities of labor leadership in his recently reported speech before the policy committee of the United Mine Workers.

"I have no patience," he declared, "with the form of union organizations that were merely organized and operated and administered to furnish a lot of soft jobs for a lot of officers to lead an easy life at a substantial salary, with many emoluments, and to act as a police patrol for the employers to keep the workers in subjection."

The CIO was formed in revolt against that conception of union organization. It has shot ahead of the AFL because the workers have recognized in it their own fighting organization, ever pushing forward to advance their interests, and never sinking to the level of a job trust for slothful labor leaders or a personnel agency for the employers.

That is the spirit of the CIO, which its founder and first president did so much to inspire. And in that spirit the CIO will continue to grow.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

ONE of the best ways to appreciate the benefits of democracy is to think over what its loss means to ordinary people like ourselves. Following are some actual cases:

In a democracy post offices are just places for sorting and delivering mail. But at the city of C, the post office functions as a spy agency. The citizens do not know it, but clerks are told to keep secret lists of those who receive various periodicals.

Miss X is a government employe with a high record of efficiency, who has been active, as a representative of her fellow employes, in handling their grievances through the recognized channels.

Suddenly Miss X is called before her superiors and made aware that she has long been spied upon. She is confronted with testimony from stool-pigeons that in their opinion her ideas are radical. She is grilled for hours about what she thinks, what she reads, what ideas she has about labor organization. Nothing is proved against her, but she is summarily fired on suspicion of harboring "dangerous thoughts."

Mr. Y is a hard-working mechanic, law-abiding, loyal and efficient. But without his knowledge the secret police have been spying on him, because he is known to have ideas about improving labor conditions. One day, while at work, he is tapped on the shoulder. He turns around and is seized by soldiers with fixed bayonets who march him through the plant, strip off his working badge and throw him off the job without giving any reason.

Mr. Z is a labor representative, elected by a large group of workers among whom a strike has occurred. Suddenly he disappears. The authorities will not tell his friends where he is, but admit simply that he has been put in a concentration camp. The charges against him are kept secret.

Under a tyrannical regime, a main function of the armed forces is to keep down the common people. At Camp E soldiers are drilled to fight their unarmed fellow-countrymen. Civilians learn of this, when maneuvers in a mock fight against "strikers" send some of the soldiers to hospital.

In a democracy people are free to think, speak and believe as they choose provided they break no laws. But under the B regime, regulations are devised whereby a worker can be deprived of his livelihood if at any time he has been suspected or charged by stoolpigeons with thinking, speaking or handling any papers dealing with certain vaguely worded ideas; or if his employer considers him radical; or if he is "commonly so-called."

Think over these cases, fellow American, and thank your lucky stars you live in a country whose constitution provides for freedom of speech and belief and for fair and open trial; and where people are not in constant terror of spies and secret police.

But wait a moment. We have not yet revealed where the above true incidents occurred.

The city of C, where postal employes are reliably reported to be under instructions to spy on citizens receiving certain publications, including a CIO union paper, is Charleston, S. C.

Miss X is Helen Miller, an officer of the United Federal Workers, recently fired, under the circumstances related, by the U. S. Dept. of Labor.

Mr. Y is one of a dozen union members so treated at the Navy Yard in Philadelphia, Pa.

Mr. Z is C. S. Jackson, Canadian vice president of the United Electrical, Radio & Marine Workers, one of a number of labor leaders spirited away to concentration camps without trial.

Camp E is Camp Edwards, Mass., where 400 fully armed soldiers were put through maneuvers of fighting 100 other soldiers designated as "strikers" and armed with only clubs and branches.

As for the B regime, that is none other than the Congress of the United States, where the Bland bill just passed the House, to provide for revoking the license of any union radio operator who can be "reasonably inferred" to have had any one of the most vaguely worded ideas; where the Ramsey bill has been introduced to deprive of employment anyone "commonly called" a radical; and where proposals have been made to abrogate the Wagner act by permitting employers to fire workers whom they consider subversive.

But, despite such instances, we can still be thankful for our democratic rights. For through our unions and the CIO we still have the right and the power to defend our freedom. The CIO is making vigorous protest against all the reported incidents; is demanding reinstatement of the individuals spied upon and fired for their union activities; and is lobbying in Congress against all the vicious bills designed to victimize active unionists.

Lewis Wires Full Support of Miners To Gypsum Strikers

WASHINGTON, July 26—Three thousand workers now on strike in 17 plants of the U. S. Gypsum Company this week were promised the full support of the United Mine Workers by President John L. Lewis. The strike is being conducted by District 50, Gas, Coke and Chemical Division of the UMW.

Pres. Lewis wired the striking locals, assuring them of the backing of the UMW and in a letter to Sewell Avery, chairman of U. S. Gypsum, called on him to join in personal efforts to work out a solution to the strike which started June 26.

75% DOWN

Union officials estimate that the strike has affected 75 per cent of the company's production of gypsum plaster and wallboard and 40 per cent of the total national production of these products. Sixty per cent of the company's output is for defense purposes.

In his letter to Avery, Lewis said: "Your responsibility and mine, in this situation, to our organizations, to the public, and to the National Defense program, in my opinion, no longer permits us to avoid devoting our immediate and personal attention to the problem."

The gypsum workers' strike, the largest and most extensive now in progress, is led by Pres. Martin Wagner of District 50 and R. W. Hanson, national director.

The union is demanding a wage increase of ten cents an hour and a national contract covering all struck plants. Union officials charge that in the past the company has played the workers of one plant off against those of another, whenever they tried to obtain their demands.

Lewis' telegram to the striking locals reads:

"The International Union has observed with pride the courageous battle being fought by U. S. Gypsum workers for the traditional security of system-wide negotiations. We have authorized Pres. Wagner to use all legitimate means to support you in your 100 per cent walkout. You have the support of the International Union. This strike must be won."

Plants closed by the strike are located in Jersey City, N. J.; Staten Island, N. Y.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Boston, Mass.; Farnams, Mass.; East Chicago, Ind.; Oakfield, N. Y.; River Rouge, Mich.; Alabaster, Mich.; Fort Dodge, Ia.; South Bend Ind.; Falls Village, Conn.; Genoa, Ohio; South Gate, Cal.; Bronx, New York City, and Harrison, N. J. A mine in Oakfield, N. Y. is also on strike.

Last week, workers of the New York City plant of the National Gypsum Co. also joined the strike. Union officials charged that this company was using its plant to fill orders formerly produced at the U. S. Gypsum plants.

Plan To Meet Lay Off Threat

NEW YORK, July 26—An all-union program devised to prevent layoffs threatened by proposed reductions in production of consumer goods was announced this week by the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

The program proposes specific procedure for protecting the jobs of employes, opposes any arbitrary reductions, and asks President Roosevelt to call an immediate national conference to take up the problem.

Julius Emspak, secretary-treasurer of the union, who announced the program, said it was being sent to all locals and district organizations for immediate action.

SIX POINTS

The six points proposed are:

1. Opposition to any arbitrary reduction in production of consumer goods, including washing machines, refrigerators, radios, and other home appliances.

2. Before any reductions are instituted, the government must give to those companies affected enough primary contracts and subcontracts to take up the slack.

3. If workers are laid off in spite of these steps, then they must get first claim on jobs with other companies in the community working on government contracts.

4. Elimination of excessive overtime on government contracts in order to provide employment for those workers laid off, and maintenance of the present total wages of employes is called for.

5. Administration of the program by joint and bona fide union-government-industry cooperation.

6. A national conference of labor, agriculture, government and industry to be called by the President to administer the program, and "compel the giant corporations to stop fleecing the nation and its citizens by monopolistic practices."

Harvester Workers Win Pay Raise

CHICAGO, July 26—An hourly pay increase of five cents has been granted to all employes of the International Harvester Co., the CIO Farm Equipment Workers announced this week.

Grant Oakes, chairman of the Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee, said the wage increase was "a notable victory that was won by the CIO members in International Harvester."

The increase was won, Oakes said, 10 days after the AFL representatives refused to join the CIO union in asking the National Defense Mediation Board to recommend a boost in pay.

AFL vs RAISE

"Under such conditions the Board deferred action on any recommendations," Oakes stated. "The position of the AFL representatives was that a recommendation for a wage increase would injure their cause in the McCormick run-off election.

"We consequently entered into direct negotiations with the Harvester plant managements in the Tractor Works, West Pullman and East Moline Works, where we are certified bargaining agent. Our plant committees are accepting the increase with the understanding that negotiations will continue on their request for further wage adjustments."

Shoe Pacts Win Wage Increases

Parkersburg, W. Va., July 26—A union shop contract, together with a general 10 per cent wage increase, was won for the workers at the Grossman Shoe Company here by the CIO United Shoe Workers of America.

The contract was negotiated by Intl. Pres. Frank R. McGrath and George Martin, field representative, together with a local negotiating committee.

Other gains in the pact include time and one-half pay for Saturday work, minimum pay of two hours upon reporting to work, dues check-off, seniority rights and a system for correcting grievances.

It was also provided that workers will be classified according to their skill for hourly pay rates.

Earlier last week, the USWA won a union shop contract, also with substantial wage increases and other provisions, at the Godman Shoe Co., Logan, O. The pact was signed after a five-day strike.

CIO Fights 50 Pct. Cut In Autos

Telegrams of protest were wired to Washington by Pres. Irving DeShetler and Secretary-Treasurer Peter Vidmar in behalf of the Federation of Glass, Ceramic & Silica Sand Workers whose membership covers automobile accessory manufacturing.

The wires suggested "continuance of automobile production at near current levels with an immediate large-scale construction of steel, aluminum and other defense material plants to bring to normal the production necessary for civilian use."

August Scholle, president of the Michigan CIO Council, wired that "the suggestion that 200,000 willing and able workmen be thrown out of work peremptorily would be absurd if it would not carry such tragic connotations for them individually and for the country in general.

"It is my opinion that the general welfare clause of the Constitution of the United States should be utilized fully by the public authority in its carrying out of the national defense program."

Joseph D. Cannon, chairman of the Distillery Workers Organizing Committee wired the President and other officials urging a gradual curtailment "making provision for displaced workers."

CIO PLAN

Peter J. Flynn, executive secretary of the New Jersey CIO Council, wired the President: "We believe that the adoption of the national CIO formula can bring about peaceful transition without disturbing economic standards of workers who are vitally necessary in our defense industries."

Sidney Katz, secretary-treasurer of the Maryland and District of Columbia Council wired a protest to Pres. Roosevelt "on behalf of tens of thousands of CIO members in Maryland the District of Columbia, more than 2,000 of whom are automobile workers."

"We know that thousands of our members throughout the nation," Katz said, "would lose their jobs without any opportunity at this time for prompt re-employment. The skills of these valuable defense workers are necessary for the successful prosecution of our national defense program."

The proposed cut in auto production has also aroused a storm of protest from manufacturers, national, state and local government officials and the public.

OPM Director William S. Knudsen warned that an arbitrary cut would dislocate the industry, and declared that any steps toward curtailment would be taken only after consultation with labor and management in the auto industry.

BUDGET CUTS

Gov. Murray D. Van Wagoner of Michigan said that "the change over from automobile to defense production will create a serious unemployment problem unless it is sensibly and gradually made.

"It is likely to cost the state millions in sales tax revenues and gas and weight tax collections. That of course would throw the state budget out of balance and create new and unexpected problems for us to solve."

'Anti-Subversive' Act Seen Blow At CIO Marine Unions

WASHINGTON, July 26—Passage of the Bland bill (H. R. 5074) by the House of Representatives was described by the American Communications Assn., CIO, and by other CIO maritime unions as "a union-busting salvo at organized radio operators" in statements issued here after the bill went through the House without a record vote.

The bill, which ostensibly is aimed at curbing "subversive elements" in the marine radio industry, actually is aimed at destroying all maritime labor organizations, the CIO groups declared, pointing out that it provided for the dismissal and blacklisting of radio operators whom the Federal Communications Commission suspects of being "subversive."

"Under the terms of this bill, the FCC is empowered to deprive of his license, and therefore of his job, any operator upon report, hearsay or rumor," Joseph Selly, president of the CIO Communications Assn., said. "No proof of guilt is necessary—the bill requires only that the Commission believe that there is 'a reasonable probability' that the accused is a 'subversive' individual."

URGE SENATE DEFEAT

Joseph Curran, president of the Natl. Maritime Union, urged the U. S. Senate to vote down the bill when it came to the Upper House, writing to all Senators:

"Every good union man is sooner or later accused of subversive activities. In the employer lexicon, the word 'subversive' is a synonym for trade unionism. Organization is, per se, subversive in the eyes of men who profit from low wages.

"Our industry is a case in point," Curran added. "As long as seamen, marine radio operators and other maritime workers were content to work 12 hours a day for low wages . . . there was not a peep out of anyone about their being subversive. It was only when they organized into trade unions, and demanded the right to live and work like human beings—it was only then that they became subversive."

DANGEROUS THOUGHTS

The bill can be compared to the system in Fascist Japan for punishing people for "dangerous thoughts," Selley said, adding that the bill was rushed through without hearings and went through the House almost without debate.

Bjorne Halling, secretary of the CIO Maritime Committee, declared the bill was "the culmination of a long attack on the radio operators which, as a small craft union, has been the focal point of the drive of shipowners and anti-labor forces. H.R. 5074 is part and parcel of the attack on organized labor contemplated by the Dirksen bill, the Vinson bill, and other such legislation."

CIO Members Buying U. S. Bonds—Carey

Washington, July 26—There is no more intensely patriotic group of citizens than the workers in the CIO "and I know the results of the bonds and stamps drive in our organization will prove it," James B. Carey, secretary of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, declared last Tuesday over a round-table forum on Defense Savings Bonds and Stamps over a coast-to-coast network of the Columbia Broadcasting System.

REPRESENTS MURRAY

Carey represented CIO Pres. Philip Murray who was unable to be present because of illness. The discussion on Defense Bonds was led by Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, Jr. Other participants included William Green, AFL president; James A. Phillips, chairman of the Railway Labor Executive Association; Walter D. Fuller, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, and Albert Hawkes, president of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce.

Carey pointed out that CIO unions have already shown active interest in the sale of the Defense Bonds. He cited, as an example, the action of many auto locals that voted to have their employers set aside a percentage of their pay each week toward buying Defense Bonds.

Drug Industry Drive Mapped

New York, July 26—A drive to enroll 1800 workers in the drug industry by next December was launched by District 50, United Mine Workers.

The union is concentrating its organizing efforts on the drug industries "big four" here. Included are E. R. Squibb & Sons, Charles Pfizer & Co., New York Quinine and Chemical Works, and Harriet Hubbard Ayer, Inc. A total of 3,500 workers are employed by the four firms.

Labor and the Law

By LEE PRESSMAN, General Counsel CIO

All too frequently, by a majority of two to one, with Board Member Edwin S. Smith dissenting, the Natl. Labor Relations Board has recently been reversing previously established policies.

An extremely important reversal which may seriously threaten CIO unions in the basic and mass production industries occurred in the last three weeks, in the N. Y. & Porto Rico S.S. Co. and the N. Y. & Cuba Mail S.S. Co. cases. An employer, because of coercion exercised by some of his employes, dismissed certain other employes because of their membership in another labor organization. The employer did not have a closed shop contract with the group of employes who exercised the coercion. The employes who were discharged because they had belonged to a rival labor organization filed charges with the Labor Board.

The Labor Board heretofore had consistently followed the policy that in the absence of a closed shop contract with a union representing a majority of the employes, an employer may not discharge any of its employes because they either belonged to a rival organization or did not belong to any union.

IN LINE WITH ACT

This policy was in line with the express provision of the National Labor Relations Act which provided an employer may not discriminate against any employe for membership or non-membership in a union unless a union, on the basis of a majority, has obtained a closed shop contract with the employer.

In this recent case the Board, with Board Member Edwin S. Smith dissenting, held that even though the employer had violated the Wagner Act, because of the coercion which caused the employer to discharge the men, the Board would not order the employer to reinstate the discharged employes or to award them back pay. The Board merely ordered the employer to cease and desist from the unfair labor practices which the Board found that the employer had technically committed.

The order of the Board is obviously meaningless because if the incident were to occur again and the same result arrived at, the cease and desist order of the Board has no practical meaning.

MEANING TO CIO

The practical application of the new precedent established by the Labor Board can be best visualized in terms of the problems that several CIO unions have encountered in the mass production and basic industries. Frequently a CIO union has organized a plant and has attempted to obtain a contract with the employer because it represents a majority of the employes of such plant. However, the AFL unions in the construction industry or otherwise have threatened to boycott the material manufactured by such plant if the employer grants a contract to the CIO union.

Heretofore the Board has held that an employer under such circumstances must nevertheless enter into collective bargaining with the CIO union since it represents a majority of the employes of his plant. Failure to do so would have subjected the employer to the charge, under the Labor Act, of permitting an unfair labor practice.

Furthermore, if the employer in the mass production plant had as a result of the threatened AFL boycott, discharged any of the CIO members, such discharged employes would have cases under the Wagner Act for reinstatement and back pay.

ACT REVERSED

Under the recent decision of the Labor Board, this entire policy is reversed. Now, under this decision, where an AFL union threatens to boycott the materials of a certain plant unless the employer of that plant denies recognition to the CIO union, even though the CIO union represents a majority of the employes of such plant, the employer can refuse to bargain with the CIO union.

If the employer also goes further and discharges the CIO men because their presence might bring into operation a threatened AFL boycott of the materials, such discharged employe will have no relief under the Wagner Act.

BENDIX strikers start off for picketlines around plant of Air Associates, Inc., at Bendix, N. J. Shortly after this, the United Auto Workers (CIO) strikers were attacked by police with tear gas and pistols. Six were injured in the police effort to get scabs into the plant.

CIO Auto Workers Near 500,000, Report Shows

DETROIT, July 26—Membership in the United Automobile Workers Union is near the half-million mark and income for the fiscal year ending April 30, 1941, has increased more than 87 per cent over the previous year, Secretary-Treasurer George Addes declares in his annual report to be submitted to the convention which opens in Buffalo, N. Y., on August 4.

Paid up membership for April 1941, final month of the report, was 458,413, Addes said. Since then a union shop now in effect in all Ford plants has brought membership figures still higher. The report declared that about 200,000 workers have joined the UAW or been readmitted during the year.

Warning that the economic and social situation "in which we are now working is bound to change within the not far distant future," Addes calls in his report for the building up of a $5,000,000 reserve fund.

"Today millions of workers are employed in war industries. Today the financial resources of organized labor are expanding," Addes said. "This is not likely to be true when the present emergency has passed. Then we shall face industrial depression, with mass unemployment.

"A reserve fund of $5,000,000 built up during the present period of prosperity, is indispensable for the protection of workers in the auto industry. This is by no means excessive. It is an essential step if the UAW-CIO is to develop financial power even remotely equivalent to its present numerical power."

The union's total income for the fiscal year ending in April was $1,543,189.26, Addes reported, an increase of 87.38 per cent over the income of $1,025,219.65 for the preceding year. He estimated that for the present fiscal year ending April 30, 1942, the union's income would amount to about $2,029,000.

"The increase in our revenue enabled us to expand our organizing staff," Addes reported, "and the results are readily apparent in the negotiating of better contracts for those already organized, the large number of new charters issued during the year, our overwhelming victory in the recent NLRB Ford election and the remarkable growth of our membership.

200,000 NEW MEMBERS

"During the year 118 new charters were issued and approximately 200,000 workers initiated or readmitted to membership."

The report urges immediate action to bring unionism to 500,000 aircraft workers and to clear up organization problems still existing in the tool and die division, parts plants and the farm equipment field.

"As a basic section of this historic CIO movement," the report concludes, "we must support its drive for 10,000,000 and lend our power, influence and financial support to other unions in need of help, as generously as our own organizational drives have been supported in the past."

What Do You Read? —The Postoffice Wants to Know

CHARLESTON, S. C., July 26—You read what the U. S. Postmaster likes in this Southern city and if you don't, your name goes down on a confidential list according to the periodicals you receive through the mails.

This startling example of Gestapo tactics in the U. S. Mails was seen in a time-clock notice posted in local postoffices by J. G. Thomas, superintendent of mails, which read in part:

"All employes at this office, Station A, and the Navy Yard Branch are requested to keep a very careful watch on the following newspapers, and to furnish me with the names and complete addresses of all persons receiving copies of any of the papers.

"This information should be treated as confidential and under no circumstances should the addressees be advised that this list of subscribers has been recorded. As soon as the information is obtained, it should be sent to me under cover."

The three periodicals that earn you a place on Mr. Thomas's blacklist are: The Pilot, organ of the Natl. Maritime Union; The Southern News-Almanac, a liberal paper published in Birmingham, Ala.; and the Daily Worker.

TIMELY: CIO's three recent pamphlets have a timely message for all workers warning of the threat to labor's rights in proposed bills and other measures restricting the right to organize, bargain collectively and strike. Despite defeat of anti-labor May amendments to Selective Service Act, dangers still remain. Pres. Murray's speech on wages and profits should be standard in all CIO libraries. Order from Publicity Dept., CIO, 1106 Connecticut Ave., Washington, D. C. Write for price list on these and other CIO publications.

Latin-American Unions Support CIO Campaign

MEXICO CITY, July 26—Labor south of the Rio Grande, through its organizational link, the Latin-American Confederation of Workers (CTAL), has announced its solidarity with labor in the U. S. A. and especially the CIO in the fight against the attempt by certain groups in the U. S. to put over anti-labor legislation.

The point-by-point analysis of this attack recently made public by CIO President Philip Murray has been given wide publicity in Latin-American labor circles and the CTAL has distributed Murray's statement to each one of its member organizations.

"I believe that this matter should be spread among the working-class of Latin America. Apart from the significance of Murray's declarations in regard to the United States, they have tremendous importance for Latin America, where certain anti-democratic regimes base their attacks against labor on actions of the United States Government.

"What takes place in the United States now may have repercussions in those Latin American countries where labor's rights are in a crisis, countries which may think they have found moral support in the actions taken against United States Labor.

ALLIANCE OF PEOPLES

"If the same type of action on which Murray refers to should take place in Latin America, the entire program for continental union against Fascism will fall to pieces. For this reason we have insisted in saying that continental defense cannot be a simple alliance of governments, but essentially must be an alliance of peoples, spontaneous and enthusiastic, so that the masses of the Western Hemisphere will be defending rights which they enjoy."

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

The Bethlehem Steel campaign in Bethlehem, Pa., is making good progress, reports Representative Lee Hall. The election will take place very soon, and to date they have collected highest dues payment since the SWOC was established. The SWOC expects to have 7,000 paid-up members by July 31st.

Regional Director George Craig of Philadelphia advises that Broad Motors, a Ford Agency in that city, has just signed a contract with the UAWA-CIO, Local 585. This is the first contract of its kind of Ford agencies in Philadelphia covering all service employes; it provides for an increase in wages of 25 cents an hour, vacations with pay, seniority rights, a service clause for draftees, and other improved conditions.

Pact at Armstrong Cork

A contract has also been signed with the Armstrong Cork Company, Camden, N. J., covering 400 workers, containing an increase in wages of 10 cents per hour, vacations with pay, seniority rights, and other benefits.

The Precision Grinding Wheel Co., Philadelphia, has just signed a contract with the CIO, covering 200 men. It provides for an increase of pay of 12½ cents per hour, seniority rights, overtime pay, vacations, etc. It also provides that conscriptees who have been employed for six months or more by the company, shall receive a bonus of $50, and for each additional six months of continuous service, $25 more, up to the total of $200. Those in the U. S. service will continue to receive one week's vacation with pay while in the service of the government.

PWOC Wins Poll

Regional Director James Robb, Indiana, reports the winning of an election at the Kingan Packing plant in Indianapolis, by a vote of 1096 for CIO, 847 for AFL, and 44 for neither union. The AFL previously had a contract at this plant.

The first collective bargaining agreement with a chain drug store in Indiana was signed on July 16 with the Hook Drug Company. The pact covers the South Bend and Mishawaka Drug Stores. It is a closed shop contract and provides for substantial wage increases, seniority rights, vacations, and protection for draftees.

LIU 193, Indiana, has renewed an agreement with the George J. Mayer Stamp Company, providing for a 5-cent-per-hour general increase, and other benefits for our members.

Win Utility Vote

Director Harold Straub of the Utility Workers' Organizing Committee reports election returns at the Philo Power Plant of Ohio Power Company, as follows: UWOC—160; No Union—50; IBEW and Independent Union withdrew from the ballot. Another victory for CIO!

The strike of 400 shoe workers of the H. C. Godman Company, Logan, O., has been satisfactorily settled, advised Representative DeNucci. The United Shoe Workers obtained a closed shop contract and check-off of dues for the duration of the agreement.

He also reports that the strike of 1,200 workers of the Heller File Company, Newcomerstown, O., is still on, with a Labor Board hearing scheduled for this week. The strike is 100 per cent effective, and the only thing holding up a settlement is the AFL, which refuses to consent to an election.

Progress in Brass

During the past few weeks, the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers has made considerable progress in its organizing drive in the famous Brass Valley of Connecticut, heart of the nation's brass fabricating industry.

At the American Brass Company, giant Anaconda Copper subsidiary, a general 8-cent-an-hour raise was won for 10,000 employes. This will mean an estimated $2,000,000 a year extra for workers in the CIO organized plants of this company at Waterbury, Ansonia and Torrington, Conn.

The CIO's victory will also put another $1,500,000 in the pockets of 6,000 unorganized workers in ABC plants in Buffalo, N. Y., Kenosha, Wis., Toronto, Canada, and Detroit, Mich.

As a result of this victory, the campaign to organize the other large Waterbury brass companies, Chase Brass and Copper and the Independent Scovill Mfg. Company is making headway.

A contract has also been signed with the Waterbury Clock Company, providing for a union shop.

Union Shop at Murray Body

Following the Ford agreement, the UAW-CIO Local 2, proceeded to negotiate a contract with the Murray Body Corporation in Detroit, providing for a union shop, check-off and other benefits. Participating in these negotiations were Intl. Rep. Richard Frankensteen, President Jones of Local 2 and a committee from the plant. This means a total of 31 cents an hour in wage boosts won by CIO for aviation workers, 13 cents for auto workers.

The march to complete organization of the auto industry is on—other large companies plan to follow the example of the Ford Motor Co.

Don't Write –Protest

New York, July 26—Don't write to Secretary of Labor Perkins or the G-men will get you—

That's what James Kennedy, an orderly in the Northport Veterans Hospital and president of the United Federal Workers, CIO local union there, found when he wrote to the Secretary of Labor demanding that she give a fair trial to Mrs. Helen Miller, who was fired from the U. S. Department of Labor on alleged charges of being a communist.

CIO PROTESTS

Six days after Kennedy mailed his letter he was told by the manager of the hospital that the FBI discovered he was a "communist." The charge was hastily withdrawn when the union firmly protested. Kennedy is a World War veteran. He went over the top in France on seven different occasions.

His letter to Madame Perkins requested that Mrs. Miller be given the same treatment as would be expected by the Secretary of Labor if the positions were reversed.

CIO Clerks Win Strike

Knoxville, Tenn., July 26—A three-day strike of retail clerks at the mine commissary of the Tennessee Consolidated Coal Co. in Palmer, Tenn., has ended with a union shop agreement, Paul R. Christopher, secretary-treasurer of the Tennessee CIO Council announced this week.

"This is the second agreement won by the United Retail Wholesale & Department Store Employes in the state," Christopher said. "It provides wage increases ranging from $5 to $30 a month; one week's annual vacation and seven holidays with pay."

Canadian Workers Fined in Smear Trial

TORONTO, Ont., July 26—Fourteen members of the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers were fined $20 a day for each of the seven days that they were out on strike against the Canadian General Electric Co. by a magistrate here this week.

The union members were charged with participating illegally in a strike contrary to the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act. The workers walked out last month when the company refused to bargain with the union.

Members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police were scattered in the courtroom throughout the trial. J. L. Cohen, union attorney, argued that the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act was passed 34 years ago to cover railway collective bargaining and that it does not apply to differences between workers and an employer who refuses to bargain with the union.

Cohen pointed out that the Canadian GE refused to bargain with the union one year after the government enacted Order-In-Council 2685 which establishes provisions for employers to bargain with genuine trade unions.

The entire trial was marked by a smear campaign against the union. Union literature was termed subversive and at one point when the prosecutor waved a union pamphlet entitled, "A Buck A Day Increases," and called it subversive, the magistrate asked: "What's wrong with that?"

C. S. Jackson, Canadian vice president of the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, is still interned in a concentration camp. He was interned without even receiving a trial. Canadian workers in the CIO and AFL unions issued strong protests against Jackson's internment. He was re-elected vice president by Canadian electrical workers recently.

N. Y. CIO Bans Disney Films

New York, July 26—CIO members in New York City have been asked by the Greater New York Industrial Union Council to boycott Walt Disney's new movie, "The Reluctant Dragon."

The Council has placed all Disney films on its unfair list because of Disney's refusal to bargain with the Screen Cartoonists Guild, union of his employe's choice. This includes all neighborhood movies where Disney films may be shown.

Requests that Disney bargain with his employes in accordance with the law of the land have been sent by many local unions to Disney in Hollywood, and to George J. Schaefer, president of RKO-Radio Pictures, in New York.

CIO Certified

Washington, July 26—The CIO United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers was named sole bargaining agent for the workers at the General Electric Company, Cleveland Wire Works Plant, Euclid, O., in a certification order issued by the Labor Board.

Part of the big San Pedro, Calif., deep sea fishing fleet of hundreds of vessels at anchor. Ships in this fleet work all along the Pacific Coast, along the West Coast of Mexico and in the waters of Panama and the Galapagos archepelago. Such sturdy ships — 60 to 110 feet long—can stand any kind of sea storms. Their huge brown nets—2,000 feet or more long—are piled on the stern and a big dory atop that. Men watch from the crow's nest for tuna, sardines, albacore and other fishes.

Organizing the Unorganized:

Pacific Coast Fishermen in CIO

By Gordon L' Allemand
(Special to CIO News)

SAN PEDRO, California, July 26—America's pack of tuna, sardines and salmon comes from the Pacific coast. From Alaska to San Diego over 20,000 fishermen and cannery workers are enrolled in the International Fishermen & Allied Workers of America of the CIO—the overwhelming majority of such workers in the industry.

"The international on the West Coast has had bitter opposition and strike breaking for years from the AFL, the cannery owners and Japanese and Italian groups," said George Ivankovich, secretary-treasurer of San Pedro Local 33. "But we see not far ahead as clear a dominance of the fishing and fish cannery field as the UAW has in the automobile field.

"Alaska's 4,000 salmon fishermen and cannery workers are practically 100% CIO. Washington state is 85% CIO. California runs about 60% CIO organized, with the AFL fishermen's union a poor second and fading. Recently the CIO won a Labor Board election in the nation's biggest fish cannery—Van Camps—in San Diego. CIO, 540 votes; AFL, 90."

In the fishing field AFL leadership has consistently sided with cannery owners in balking fish price conferences, in refusing to fight for better conditions, in spreading confusion within labor ranks. But the CIO victory at Van Camps in San Diego has broken the back of the opposition.

"Italians in the AFL union in Monterey and San Francisco, California, are very dissatisfied," declares Pete Padovan, international organizer for the IF & AW in San Pedro. "They've been calling to us for help. We're letting them stew in their juice a while. Soon we'll move in and take over for the CIO."

Fish prices, while not satisfactory, are not bad at present. Canneries are paying $130 a ton for tuna (should be $150), sardines, minimum, $15.00 per ton, mackerel $27-30 per ton. Fish cannery workers under AFL contracts do not have a bad setup. But it could easily be much better.

Five hundred fishing boats are roving California and Mexican waters. But 1940 is a poor year for tuna—and fishermen. Cannery owners are taking advantage of war hysteria to keep fish prices down. The U. S. Navy is buying up tuna ships for mine sweepers and throwing men on the beach out of work.

In San Pedro area alone the Navy has paid $1,150,000.00 for 23 big tuna ships—about 33 percent above actual building cost value. Cannery owners, who hold mortgages on most of the fishing ships, and other owners are gleefully selling without regard to fishermen they are throwing out of work. Since each man has a contract for the season's work with a certain boat, and he gives a month's time free to painting the ship, working on her nets and getting her ready for sea, he has a vital stake involved. The fisherman is paid no salary, but a percentage of fish caught.

Several hundred fishermen in the California area alone have thus been thrown on the beach. A few younger ones are now in the army. But the majority of the others, untrained in mechanical trades, are out of work. (Continued on Page 8)

A recent California court decision stipulated that men thrown out of work by having their ships sold should be paid $250.00 by the owner for the man's contract. The CIO had demanded $1,000.00. Interestingly enough 90% of the tuna ships bought by the Navy have been cannery-mortgage-owned with CIO organized crews. Only two or three AFL organized ships have been bought.

"We feel that by 1941 remaining members of the AFL union in the West Coast fishing industry will come over to the CIO," states Jeff Kibre, California administrator for the International Fishermen's Union.

Roaming the ocean for tuna and sardines can be exciting, very colorful, and at times make a good living for the men. At other times it is poor pay. But it is always hard work. Let's go out with a tuna purse seiner and see what these men are like—these CIO'ers who provide the nation's canned fish. Mostly foreign born — Yugoslavs, Bulgarians, Italians, Japanese. The men are fine American citizens—democratic and patriotic. They read their union papers and understand economic and social forces.

Captain Tony Marinkovich of the 73-foot tuna ship Wm. F. Wood waves a salute as we approach his high-bowed purse seiner. She is just like the hundred others tied up in rows here in fisherman's wharf at San Pedro, the port of Los Angeles. A half-mile long net heaped on her stern, and her ship's boat atop that. A high bow. A single mast surmounted by the crow's nest. All around we see a maze of rigging and masts, see men moving about the decks at their work. Flocks of sea gulls float overhead. There is the tang of the salt sea air and the pleasant stench of oil from nearby refineries, the throaty rumble of diesel engines.

CREW OF 10

Jerry the cook shouts a greeting from the galley where he is getting lunch. We meet the 10 members of the crew—courteous, laughing fellows in their old ship's clothes. In a few minutes the ship is swinging around in the anchorage and we are chug-chugging out of San Pedro harbor, past the light-

Practically all the men working on the tuna and sardine fishing boats of the Pacific Coast are American citizens—or taking out their citizenship papers—that is with the exception of the Japanese.

Mending the long purse seine nets between trips to sea is the day off occupation of the men who earn their living by providing the nation's canned fish. Deep sea fishing has considerable leisure at times—but when work comes it requires great skill and back-breaking labor. The men are swell fellows and excellent trade unionists.

To port are several black freighters — Danish — taken over by the U. S. government. To starboard a line of lean grey fighting ships of the U. S. Navy moving slowly north.

By mid-afternoon we are 25 miles at sea and snugly tied up in a little landlocked bay on the seaward side of Catalina Island. No tuna fishing this afternoon; the sea is too rough to see the elusive schools break surface. So we eat, sleep, listen to the radio, or visit aboard other tunamen tied up alongside us. On the Black Orion a score of men are discussing union problems, their job-hunting comrades now on the beach, the great CIO victory at Henry Ford's, and, of course, the war.

OUT TO SEA

By eight p.m. it is dark—a moonless night. Yellow lights gleam from a dozen tuna ships nearby. It is every ship for herself now. Our diesel rumbles to life. We cast off and move out to sea as Big Anton climbs to the crow's nest to watch for tuna on the surface of the sea. All lights are doused. We're soon out of the bay and headed northwest for Santa Cruz island.

All hands to the rails or on the upper deck flanking the wheel to watch for tuna. On this moonless night they will look like living flames against the jet black surface of the sea. Hour after hour Captain Tony heads northwest. But no tuna. Anton's cigar blinks red in the crow's nest. These men and hundreds of other tuna boats have been hunting tuna for weeks now and found scarcely anything. The schools are wary. They have not come north yet. Much rough weather when ships had to stay tied up in island harbors. Grey days too when the water was too cloudy to see the fish. No fish, no money earned.

TUNA AHEAD

Long after midnight the tireless Anton sights a school out to starboard. The crew rushes aft to ready the derrick for easing our huge flat-bottomed boat off the stern into the sea. Pulleys squeal, Mike and a couple of others scramble over the mountain of brown net and the boat slides aft into the ship's wake. Captain Tony is swinging the ship in close to the tuna school—that broad, milky area just ahead.

The stern of a big tuna ship at sea. Her half-mile long net has surrounded a many-ton school of tuna, the purse line pulled through the rings in the bottom of the net (drawing it together like a sack and trapping the thousands of fish) and these men are shortening the net by dragging it aboard and stacking it down. When the fish are milling alongside the ship in a mass a boom will be lowered and a huge scoop net used to lift them aboard and into the hold.

Dragging aboard a wet net nearly a half-mile long, filled with a school of tuna, is back-breaking work of hours. Cork floats and air bladders hold the top edge of the net on the surface.

The men in the small boat take one end of our half-mile net. The ship moves ahead with her men paying out the net—moving in a circle to surround the school. Cork and air bladders along the top edge of this great net will keep it afloat. It will hang vertically 250 feet. In a while the ship has circled around to the boat. The net is now around the school.

A winch starts rumbling and hauling in a long rope that runs through eyes in the lower edge of the net. This will draw the bottom together like a purse mouth—trapping the tuna.

We get out of the way amidships where we can see. Smoothly the men carry on. A bunch on the stern ready to haul in net. This is a small school—maybe 6,500 fish averaging 30 pounds. The ship is ablaze with lights. Vincent has lowered a waterproof electric light overside and down 250 feet. By jiggling it he scares the fish up so that they won't sound and escape.

At Captain Tony's command the stern men start the back-breaking job of hauling in net and stacking it down, reducing the size of the compound to bring the tuna school milling alongside the ship. For an hour this goes on. Hard work, but these men can take it. Many of the tuna are dying. They die when they touch the net.

The tall boom has been swung overside with its great scoop net that will hold hundreds of pounds of fish. Lights gleam in the hold through the hatch. Two men are down there to spread fish.

SHARKS ATTACK

Jack grabs the long handle of the scoop and drives it deep into the mass of fish throbbing against the ship's hull. The winch rumbles and up comes the scoop net sagging with silver treasure. Over and into the hold it goes. A chain is pulled, the scoop bottom opens and the fish cascade onto the floor. It will take hours to get the 10 tons of fish aboard.

Pres. Murray On Anti-Jim Crow Committee

Washington, July 22—Pres. Philip Murray of the CIO was this week named by President Roosevelt to a committee to investigate job discriminations against Negroes in defense industries and the government.

The President created the committee June 25. CIO unions and the CIO nationally have taken a strong stand against employer discriminations against Negro workers.

Conciliation Part Of Bargaining, CIO Economist Declares

Silver Bay, N. Y., July 26 — The process of mediation, conciliation and arbitration are part of the fabric of collective bargaining and their essence is the voluntary use by both parties, Ralph Hetzel, CIO economist, told delegates to the Industrial Service National Conference of the YMCA's here this week.

Hetzel warned that "once the element of coercion enters into these processes, they are in reality perverted into instruments for the destruction of collective bargaining.

The CIO economist declared that this is a distinction still not understood in many high places in the nation. "It is a distinction, however, that lies at the very heart of labor's attitude," he said.

CIO CONTRACTS

He pointed out that almost all of the contracts covering the 5,000,000 CIO members include provisions for mediation and arbitration.

Arbitration is agreed to by joint agreement and mediation; and conciliation by agencies that are accepted by both sides are part of the process by which labor has traditionally settled its disputes with management, he said.

"The numerous proposals recently made for various kinds of compulsory arbitration, mediation, waiting periods, etc., come in the main from those who fail to understand the processes of collective bargaining.

"These compulsory proposals are vigorously opposed by labor and, in the main, by industry. Both of these groups understand that the introduction of coercion or compulsion into these processes changes them from beneficence to instruments for the destruction of industrial good-will and free collective bargaining," Hetzel declared.

Hetzel stated that successful industrial relations are all the more imperative in this critical period, and that they must "arise out of intensification of the voluntary bargaining processes, not out of their perversion."

No Need For Labor Controls, CIO Declares

WASHINGTON, July 26—"There is absolutely no need for labor priorities or any coercive measures for the shifting of labor," James B. Carey, CIO secretary, testified before the Select Committee to Investigate the Inter-State Migration of Destitute Citizens last week. Carey submitted the testimony of CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who was unable to attend because of illness.

Murray's statement declared that all necessary shifts of labor can be accomplished through the cooperation of organized labor and through providing wage rates, proper housing and transportation facilities.

MILLIONS UNEMPLOYED

Murray stated that "there is no general shortage of labor. Actually there is a real and continuing problem of unemployment." He pointed out that according to CIO economists there were 7,184,000 unemployed in May. He said that the present defense program would not wipe out unemployment.

The cry of a labor shortage has often been used by those who would advocate the establishment of some kind of compulsion in the labor market . . . ," Murray stated.

He declared that there should be no fear about a general labor shortage and that whatever shortages of a special nature may exist now can be corrected over a reasonable period of time by sound planning.

ISSUES WARNING

He stated that additional employment during the next year, due to national defense production, would at best provide only two and one-half million jobs.

Murray warned that the failure to make adequate use of the labor supply will result in freezing the national income production far below its maximum which will cut down the supply of consumers goods. This, he said, would force a lowering of real wages, probably through rising costs of living.

He declared that the only answer to such a situation is to increase material supplies to the point of making full employment possible. He said it may be necessary to divert some of the purchasing power into new channels, but that they should not be channels "which raise the standard of living, not lower it."

AGAINST FORCED SAVINGS

Murray emphasized that the CIO is fundamentally opposed to forced savings for wage earners "or taxation upon wages in the face of continued unemployment."

He warned that "perhaps the greatest crisis in the nation's history will come in the repercussions which follow the cutting off of enormous defense expenditures.

"The demobilization of our armies and our defense workers and their absorption into a productive peace-time economy will face the nation with a challenge it must meet."

Adoption of the CIO Industry Council Plan, as proposed originally by President Murray, was recommended to meet production shortages.

Bridges Brief Filed; Report To Come Later

San Francisco, July 26—Attorneys on both sides of the Harry Bridges deportation case have exchanged briefs and have two weeks in which to prepare rebuttal briefs. The briefs will then be presented to Trial Examiner Charles B. Sears, who is expected to take about three months before arriving at a decision.

UERMW Certified

Washington, July 26—The United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers was certified sole bargaining agent for the employes of the Cleveland, O., plant of the General Electric Supply Co. by the Labor Board.

CIO Hosiery Workers In Negotiations

Philadelphia — Negotiations between the CIO American Federation of Hosiery Workers and the Full Fashioned Hosiery Manufacturers of America, Inc. resumed at the Bellevue-Stratford hotel here July 25 after a six day recess from the initial meeting, July 18 and 19 at the Brigantine Beach Hotel, Brigantine, N. J.

The AFHW presented its demands for a 15 per cent wage increase in the new national hosiery contract, vacations with pay and other provisions improving the present contract covering most of the full-fashioned union shops in the nation.

Members of the manufacturers subcommittees will carry on the July 22 and 23 to consider the demands and draft a reply to be presented at the meeting here.

Two fifteen-man committes participated in the first meeting, but sub-committees will carry on the conferences until a decision is reached, according to President Alexander McKeown of the AFHW.

Glove Workers Win Pact

New York, Aug. 2 — Wage increases ranging up to 19 per cent were gained for glove workers in the Greater New York area by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers in a pact reached between the union and the Consolidated Glove Association of Greater New York.

The pact also provides for a closed shop, 40-hour week, time and one-half for overtime work and eight legal holidays with pay, according to Louis Fuchs, manager of the ACW's glove department.

Fuchs said that the agreement provides that the question of wages can be reopened at the end of six months. This week the ACW chartered a new operators local here known as Glove Workers Local 92.

CIO Scores Again In Defeat Of Anti-Strike Amendment

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2—Hard campaigning by CIO and Labor's Non-Partisan League this week knocked out the anti-strike amendment to the Selective Service Act as proposed in the Senate-House conference report following the earlier defeat of the May proposals three weeks ago.

The vote, 255-144, showed organized labor's strength in fighting to preserve basic American rights and demonstrated that a large section of Congress is alert to the need to defend the basis of U. S. democracy. The vote came despite majority leadership reluctance to go down the line with labor.

As the bill now stands, the anti-labor features tacked on to the original proposal to amend the Selective Service Act by lowering the draft age to 28 have been eliminated, though they can still be revived and though other anti-labor measures are still in the offing.

The vote was hailed by Allan S. Haywood, national director of the CIO, and John T. Jones, CIO legislative representative and director of Labor's Non-Partisan League, as "most gratifying."

CIO Auto Pact Ups Pay $4,000,000

Washington, Aug. 2—Wage agreements bringing a total of from $3,500,000 to $4,000,000 a year in increased wages to 12,500 workers have been concluded with manufacturers of cushion springs for the automobile industry, Melvin Bishop and Robert Stone, international representatives of the United Automobile Workers, announced here this week.

The agreements were signed in Washington with seven companies operating 14 plants, after six weeks of negotiating. The increases average around 18 cents an hour.

DIFFERENTIAL KILLED

"This is the first section of the automobile industry in which agreements have been negotiated on a national scale covering the whole industry, with a view to eliminating differentials that make unfair competition," declared Bishop, who is director of the Competitive Shops Dept. of the UAW.

"We hope to extend the same principle to all other branches of the industry, until wage standards are levelled up for the benefit of the workers and to stabilize conditions for the industry itself."

All companies granted a blanket 10 cents an hour increase retroactive to June 16, with additional increases of 5 cents an hour, effective July 28, granted in five plants. Further increases ranging from 5 to 16 cents were agreed upon in six plants, effective Oct. 27.

CIO Farm Equipment Workers Win 'Most Important' Election

CHICAGO, Aug. 2—Workers at the McCormick plant of the International Harvester Co. staged an uproarious pow-wow here this week in celebration of the victory won by the CIO Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee in the run-off election conducted July 30 by the National Labor Relations Board.

The vote was: CIO, 2,806; AFL, 2,564; challenged, 109. Officials of the CIO Farm Equipment union hailed the victory as "the most important in the union's history."

The key position of the McCormick plant, a statement issued by the union declared, "places the FEWOC in a commanding position in International Harvester with bargaining rights now won for more than 17,000 of the company's workers."

CIO SUPPORT

Grant Oakes, national chairman of the FEWOC, told workers that "this victory means we can now go out and get the kind of contracts International Harvester workers want. And I would like to say to you that your victory would have been impossible without the support given by CIO President Philip Murray and by John L. Lewis."

More than 5,000 of the 6,092 eligible voted in the run-off in the four-year fight for union recognition which seemed hopeless a few months ago when 1,400 Chicago police escorted hundreds of scabs through the picket lines.

Jubilant workers staged a long parade around the plant in celebration of the victory and held a burial service for the AFL with a coffin marked "company union."

At an open air mass meeting following the parade, FEWOC national officers paid tribute to the courage and devotion of all the union officers and members which had made the victory possible.

Secretary-Treasurer Gerald Fielde said: "This is victory No. 1. The next victory will come when every man in this shop is signed up with the CIO regardless of past affiliations."

PARADE of United Mine Workers, CIO, at Mollenauer Mine No. 3, near Pittsburgh, marks the end of the coal vein that means closing of the mine, end of local jobs for miners. The mine had operated 40 years.

Labor and the Law

Employers Obliged To Bargain in Faith

By LEE PRESSMAN,
General Counsel

Under the National Labor Relations Act employers are obligated to engage in collective bargaining with unions representing a majority of their employes. Interpretation of the extent of this obligation has been the subject of a number of decisions of the Labor Board, and upheld by the courts. The obligation is not merely to meet with the union but actually to engage in bona fide collective bargaining.

The failure on the part of an employer to fulfill such obligation subjects the employer to a charge of violating the provisions of the Wagner Act.

In a recent case involving the Rapid Roller Company (NLRB No. C-1624) the Labor Board ruled that under a collective bargaining agreement between a union and an employer, the employer has the obligation to bargain with the union regarding the interpretation of certain provisions of the contract which have come into dispute. The failure of the employer to do so in that case was held to justify the issuance of an order of the Board charging the company with having committed an unfair labor practice.

IMPORTANT DECISION

This decision of the Board is an extremely important one. As collective bargaining is extended between employers and unions and the contracts become more numerous, disputes will arise under such contracts as to the interpretation of specific provisions.

In those cases where the collective bargaining agreements have arbitration provisions, no problem can arise where the parties become involved in a dispute as to the interpretation of any of the provisions or their application. Such matters can be referred under the contract to the arbitration procedure.

EMPLOYES' DUTY

However, in many cases, employers refuse to accept arbitration provisions in the collective bargaining agreements. A dispute thereupon arises between the employer and the union as to the meaning of certain provisions of the contract. Under this recent decision of the Board, the employer has an obligation and a duty to listen to the union's contentions with an open mind and to discuss them with a view to arriving at an amicable understanding if there is any basis for it.

Where the employer doesn't fulfill this obligation, the union has the right to file a charge with the Labor Board on the ground that the employer has not complied with his obligation to bargain collectively in good faith with the representatives of its employees.

CIO at the Polls

CIO's Score Double AFL in Elections Won

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2—CIO unions won 50.3 per cent of the Labor Board elections as against 25.8 for the AFL and 6.5 for independent unions during the three-month period ending June 30.

The percentages are estimated on the number of elections in which the various unions have participated. Actual number of votes cast for CIO unions, in almost an equal number of elections, show the CIO leading with 147,230 votes as against the AFL's 75,478.

CIO unions participated in 454 elections during the last quarter and won 296, the AFL participated in 454 and won 294, and independent unions participated in 120 and won 62, with 19,040 votes.

CIO unions won more than half of the elections in such production industries as auto, building and construction, electrical equipment, glass, leather, meat packing, retail and rubber.

Armour Case to Board

WASHINGTON—One of the biggest cases yet to come before the National Defense Mediation Board, ranking in importance with the United Mine Workers and the General Motor disputes in number of workers involved, will be heard here August 5.

A threat has been made by the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee to strike the 14 major plants of Armour and Company. Some 30,000 workers in the Armour chain are demanding a wage increase, closed shop and eight-hour day, 40-hour week. Another point at issue is the union's demand for one master contract covering all PWOC Armour plants.

TURNED DOWN

PWOC Chairman J. C. Lewis has informed Secretary of Labor Francis Perkins that negotiations with the company were broken off following talks lasting from April 1 until July 11. Mr. Lewis advised the Secretary that company representatives had turned down a union offer to arbitrate the dispute.

Armour and Company, in common with other packers, has big government orders for army rations as well as "lend-lease" aid to Britain.

Armour plants involved in the strike threat are located in Chicago, St. Paul, Milwaukee, Sioux City, Mason City, Ia., Omaha, Kansas City, E. St. Louis, Denver, Los Angeles, Birmingham, Indianapolis and New York City.

Four CIO Conventions In August

Washington, Aug. 2—Defying the hot weather promised for August, four CIO organizations are holding conventions this month. On Aug. 4 two international unions—the United Automobile Workers and the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers—convene. The Auto union meets in Buffalo, N. Y., the MMSW in Joplin, Mo.

August 14-16 the Iowa-Nebraska Industrial Union Council convention will be held at Ottumwa, Ia., and Aug. 29-30 the Minnesota CIO Council meets in Hibbing.

Convention calls for September, according to information received at the national CIO, include:

Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, Atlantic City, Sept. 23.

Transport Workers Union, New York City, Sept. 24.

New York State Industrial Union Council, Utica, Sept. 26.

Missouri Industrial Union Council, Jefferson City, Sept. 27.

Win 5c Raise At Lyle Tenn.

Knoxville, Tenn., Aug. 2—A general five-cent hourly increase was granted to 279 employes of the Tennessee Products Corp., Lyle Tenn., as a result of two days of negotiations between a 25-man committee of Local 314, Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers.

Homer Wilson, international representative, announced that the increase was retroactive to July 16 and is in addition to a 5½-cent raise obtained last March. The company also agreed to make payment twice monthly. The raise and date of payment provisions are supplementary to an agreement entered into previously.

Union conditions at this plant, including the union shop and check-off, are now prevailing after several years of struggle, including a number of strikes. Wilson said that under the agreement workers are now enjoying job security and grievance adjustment procedure that guarantees steady production and full union participation in labor-management problems.

It Didn't Hurt

"The wage increase of 10 cents an hour made by United States Steel Corporation effective April 1 was almost wholly absorbed by the increase in volume of business between the first and second quarters of 1941, the quarterly report issued yesterday shows."—New York Times. While pay rolls were up $22,000,000, the paper notes, operating results were up $20,000,000.

Remember the dire predictions that were made when the CIO put forward this 10-cent wage increase demand? It is much the same every time increased wages are asked in any industry. And then months later, little inconspicuous items like the above are printed, showing that the higher wages won haven't hurt business one bit.

Mexican Leader Urges Solidarity vs. Hitler

Chicago, Aug. 2—Solidarity of the people of the Western Hemisphere in the defense against Hitler and fascism was urged by Alejandro Carrillo, a member of the national executive board of the CTM (Mexico's national federation of labor unions), before a mass meeting at the headquarters of the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee last month.

Sr. Carrillo, who is a leader of the labor bloc in the Mexican legislature, was guest of honor at a luncheon arranged by the PWOC. He pointed out that the idea of cooperation between Latin Americans and people of the United States is nothing new to the labor movement.

PRAISES CIO

He asserted that organized labor was the first great movement to point to the danger of fascism and urged "a great peoples' conference" to include labor, professional and youth organizations. This conference, he said, should organize an uncompromising fight against Hitler abroad and the "fifth column" at home.

The Mexican labor leader paid tribute to the CIO and to John L. Lewis, who, he said, first developed an active policy of close cooperation between the CIO and Latin American labor.

Sacrifice Bonus To Vote CIO

Toronto, Ont., Aug. 2—Hundreds of workers stood in line and sacrificed their bonus to cast a vote for the Steel Workers Organizing Committee in a Department of Labor election held at the Screw & Gear Co. here.

The final tabulation showed 1,524 votes for the SWOC as against 160 for no union. SWOC leaders asserted that the plurality would have been even greater had more adequate voting facilities been available.

While the Screw & Gear workers rolled up a 10 to 1 vote for the SWOC, workers at the National Steel Car Co., at Hamilton, voted to strike unless the federal officials, who are in charge of that plant, meet with the union for the purpose of signing an agreement.

The decision to strike the plant was made after no results were effected from the several meetings held with the plant controller. The SWOC recently won an election at National Steel by a three to one vote.

The Canadian Congress of Labor urged the government to put teeth into Order-In-Council 2685 so that both government and private controlled corporations recognize collective bargaining.

The Congress also demanded that Order-In-Council 7440 which freezes wages be amended to provide that wages below $25 weekly be considered depressed and that cost-of-living bonuses be paid to all workers irrespective of wage levels.

Bendix Strike Settled

Bendix, N. J., Aug. 2—Settlement of the labor dispute which closed down the plant of Air Associated, Inc., on July 14, was announced this week by Loren J. Houser, regional director for the aircraft division of the United Automobile Workers. Some 500 workers engaged in making airplane parts were involved.

The union accused the company of firing employes for union activity, and demanded their reinstatement.

The National Defense Mediation Board opened hearings on the case July 22 and after two days recommended a settlement which was accepted at once by the union. The terms called for:

1. Prompt return to work of all employes without discrimination.

2. All questions involving back pay to be submitted to an arbitrator to be appointed by the Board.

3. Immediate negotiations for a contract and if agreement is not reached by Aug. 9, submission of the dispute to an arbitrator.

4. All decisions of the arbitrator to be binding.

The company on July 27 wired its refusal to accept the provisions concerning arbitration, and the strike continued.

Two days later, following further conferences, company officials gave in and virtually agreed to the program suggested by the Board, Houser said.

Sign Contract

Newark, N. J., Aug. 2—After negotiations lasting six weeks, the Koppers Co. signed a contract this week with District 50, United Mine Workers covering 600 employes in its Seaboard plant. Terms include a 10 cent hourly increase, union shop, check-off of union dues, paid vacations and seniority rights.

Shipbuilders Vote CIO

New York, Aug. 2—Workers at the Robins Dry Dock & Repair Co., Brooklyn, cast 756 votes for the Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, CIO, to 129 for the AFL in a recent election held by the Labor Board.

FLOAT entered by the CIO Packing House Workers won honorable mention in parade at Albert Lea, Minn., in honor of town's founder.

CIO Hits Gag On Tax Bill Amendments

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2—Sharp protest against granting of a "gag rule" shutting off amendments to the proposed tax bill was expressed by John T. Jones, director of Labor's Non-Partisan League and CIO legislative representative, in a letter to Rep. Sabath of the House Rules Committee this week.

Jones was emphatic in criticizing the secret methods used in preparing the tax bill, which lays heavy new taxes on consumers' goods and allows excess profits to escape almost untouched, as well as in his protest at the gag rule which prevents effective debate.

BURDEN ON WORKERS

"This tax bill has been framed in executive session by the 25 man Ways and Means Committee," Jones wrote. "Even within the committee there was sharp division, indicated by the filing of a minority report by 10 members, and split votes on many major taxation issues.

"The committee proposals go lightly on tapping the extreme profits being made by many corporations in the defense program, while consumers are subjected to the heaviest taxation in the nation's history."

Other criticism of the pending tax bill pointed to large loopholes that left huge estates and gifts comparatively untouched. The proposal that husbands and wives could make separate tax returns was described as permitting the top income group to escape taxation through claiming double exemptions.

'Witness' In Firing Of U. S. Employe Repudiates Charges

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2—Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins' principal witness for her charges of "communism" on which she fired Helen Miller, active leader of the United Federal Workers, CIO, has repudiated statements against Mrs. Miller used in his name this week.

The witness, Jacob Baker, former UFWA president, declared that there were "two major errors or distortions" in the Secretary's use of a purported statement by him to the effect that Mrs. Miller "followed the party line," and that she was a member of "front organizations."

Baker's repudiation was made in an interview with Eleanor Nelson, secretary-treasurer of the UFWA, who commented: "Mr. Baker's statement throws a new and ugly light on Secretary Perkins' refusal to have the case publicly investigated by an impartial board before which her 'witnesses' could be cross-examined.

"The Helen Miller case now transcends even the paramount concern of organized labor throughout the U. S. It becomes a matter of vital concern to every thinking citizen. It becomes a matter that demands the immediate attention of President Roosevelt himself."

Meanwhile, the UFWA had another similar case on its hands, in the summary dismissal of Esta Diamond, active member working in the Civil Service Commission. Of the two reasons given here—that she had not worked for a certain employer and that she had advanced her age in her application—one quickly collapsed when the UFWA presented an affidavit from the employer and the other was "taken under advisement" after UFWA protest.

Henry Rhine, national organizer for the UFWA, led the delegation protesting Mrs. Diamond's summary firing. She was sharply grilled by the Commission, Rhine said, which was particularly interested in the fact that she had been editor of the Federal Record, union paper.

Plans for a wide campaign to block attacks on the rights of Federal employes and to raise wages and improve conditions were laid at a week-end union conference attended by more than 213 delegates from Washington.

Says Cuban Labor Has Great Interest in CIO

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2—Cuban labor follows CIO developments in the United States with close interest and sympathy, declared Jaime Gravalosa, secretary of the youth commission of the Confederation of Cuban Workers, who visited CIO headquarters here.

He reported a high degree of union organization in Cuba, saying that the Confederation, to which all unions are affiliated, now has some 500,000 members. The Cuban labor body is an affiliate of the Confederation of Latin American Workers, headed by Vicente Lombardo Toledano.

The main purpose of the youth commission, of which Gravalosa is secretary, he said, is "to aid the unions in attracting young people to their ranks.

PROTECT YOUTH

"We work for laws to protect the interests of working youth," he declared, "asking for guarantees of work for young people in all industries, protection of apprentices, minimum wages and maximum hours.

"We also promote cultural activities, workers education and sports, and try to make each local union's headquarters a place where young people will like to go in the evenings."

In this connection, Gravalosa particularly praised the cultural and social activities of Local 65, United Retail & Wholesale Employes, CIO, in New York City. This organization, he found on his visit to New York, has made its headquarters a regular social center crowded by members who go there for education and recreation as well as for union business.

Gravalosa said that the industrial form of organization is favored by the workers in Cuba, and where industrial unions do not already exist craft unions are working toward the industrial form by joining together in federations for each industry.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray and John L. Lewis are well known to the Cuban workers, Gravalosa declared. "There is not so much talk about William Green," he added, "because most of the organizing work and all the big struggles seem to be conducted by the CIO. We admire the militancy and progressiveness of the CIO." The recent victories of the United Mine Workers and of the UAW at Ford's had made a particularly strong impression in Cuba, he said.

Cuban labor, according to Gravalosa, has many struggles to make employers comply with the new Cuban constitution and with the country's progressive social legislation, which sets minimum wages and maximum hours among other things.

GRATIFYING: Congress' refusal to OK the use of troops to break strikes as provided in Connally amendment is described as "most gratifying to CIO" by Allan S. Haywood, national director of organization.

Strike Ban Killed By 255—114 Vote After CIO Protest

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2—Organized labor protest, mobilized by the CIO and Labor's Non-Partisan League against attempts to legislate armed strikebreaking, again stopped a Congressional amendment this week that was designed to put the U. S. Army in charge of plants where workers were on strike.

The defeat of these strikebreaking plans came in a smashing 255-114 House vote rejecting the conference report on the original Connally amendment to the Selective Service Act, which would have authorized the government to seize and operate plants where production was held up or threatened with a stoppage. It followed the vote of three weeks ago that defeated the anti-labor May amendments to the Selective Service Act.

The vote followed an active campaign by CIO and Labor's League forces to reject the conference report. The report, coming after the original May amendments were defeated, left the Connally amendment, passed earlier by the Senate, still in effect.

The week's campaign against the report was led off by a letter to all Congressmen by CIO Pres. Philip Murray, which declared that the report meant that "profits of management are not to be disturbed, but the rights of labor are to be abolished."

"GRATIFYING"

The overwhelming vote in the House against the strikebreaking features of the report, in which the majority of Congressmen showed a determination to respect labor's rights, was hailed in a joint statement by CIO Director Allan S. Haywood and Labor's Non-Partisan League Director John T. Jones as "a most gratifying response to the urgings of CIO and LNPL that no legislation be adopted to destroy labor's rights under the pretense of aiding national defense."

"The CIO and the League have consistently opposed all attempts to pass measures restricting the right to organize, bargain collectively and strike," the statement said. "The House-Senate conference report would have permitted the use of the Army and the Navy to break strikes and could have been used to force compulsory arbitration on labor."

VOTE BREAKDOWN

Of the 255 who voted to reject the report, thus defeating the anti-labor features of the original bill to amend the conscription act, 138 were Republicans, 113 Democrats, three Progressives and one (Rep. Marcantonio of N. Y.) American Labor Party. Of the 114 who voted to retain the report, 113 were Democrats. Rep. Healey of Massachusetts put the motion on the floor to reject it.

Murray's letter opposing the report put the finger on the attempt to sugarcoat its anti-labor bias by pointing out: "Although the revision of the language of this section of the bill does not specifically mention strikes and labor relations, it impairs the basic right to strike by permitting occupation of plants and the use of the Army and the Navy to break such strikes as the President may designate.

"This gives by law to the executive branch of the Federal government the effective power to impose compulsory arbitration on American labor.

"It should be noted that the authority of the President granted under this bill is not to requisition the plants but merely to take possession. This means that the bill is not intended to exercise any compulsion against management, but only against labor. A vote for this bill is a vote to destroy organized labor."

Gypsum Co. Defies Conciliation Dept.

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 2—The strike of 3,000 workers which has been in progress at 17 of the U. S. Gypsum Company's plants for five weeks was swelled this week when the 550 workers of the important Gypsum, O., plant walked out in support of the program of District 50 of the United Mine Workers of America.

Meanwhile, the company maintained a stubborn defiance toward the efforts of Mine Worker and U. S. government officials to settle the strike. Company officials refused to appear in response to a conference call by Federal Conciliator Steelman. Sewell Avery, chairman of the U. S. Gypsum Company, left unanswered a letter from John L. Lewis, UMWA president, suggesting a personal meeting to seek a strike settlement.

STRIKERS INJURED

Company efforts to break the strike sent three District 50 pickets to the hospital with serious injuries but failed to break the nation-wide unity in support of the demand for a common contract covering all struck plants. The union seeks a blanket 10 cents per hour increase, a provision for arbitration of disputed grievances and an improved vacation plan.

Injuries to District 50 pickets resulted this week when R. D. Hess, superintendent of the Fort Dodge, Iowa plant, drove his car at full speed into a picket line of 100 men in an effort to clear a path for two other cars containing 10 scabs. Robert Schultz, struck by Hess' car, suffered a broken and crushed vertebra and is now in a serious condition at the hospital.

Other pickets struck by the strikebreakers cars were James Deaton who suffered a broken back, and James Maddox whose arm was broken. One of the pickets, Jess Fisher, was caught on the radiator of one of the scab's cars and was carried for over 2 miles before the scabs stopped and made for safety.

An indictment by a Special Grand Jury of Hess is expected and civil suits for damages totalling about $100,000 are being entered by the injured pickets.

Only the intervention of local union leaders saved Hess from a severe beating at the hands of incensed pickets. The back-to-work movement at Fort Dodge was joined by only 10 scabs out of the 230 normally employed. Back-to-work movements at other plants have been similarly unsuccessful.

The strike has the full support of John L. Lewis and the international union.

Reports from building supply dealers indicate that gypsum stocks are completely exhausted. In a circular letter to dealers, the company has confessed that it can make no promises on future deliveries.

MURRAY: The CIO President is reported resting well in a Pittsburgh hospital, where he has been ordered by physicians to take a complete rest from the arduous duties which have raised the CIO to new peaks of strength under his leadership. Countless messages of esteem, wishing him a speedy recovery, are received from all sections of the movement.

Furniture Union Wins Pay Raise

New York, Aug. 2—Sixteen parlor frame employers granted a 37½ hour week, a $4 wage increase, and five legal holidays with pay in an agreement signed with the Furniture Workers Union, Local 76-B.

Organized in the Parlor Frame Manufacturers' Association, about thirty or more employers have agreements which expire August 1 and September 1, all of whom are expected to sign on the same basis.

The Tax Bill

The CIO has protested vigorously against the undemocratic procedure of railroading the tax bill through the House without permitting amendments from the floor.

The only exception to this gag rule was made in connection with the joint income tax return proposal, which adversely affects only some 150,000 of the wealthiest families. The parts of the bill to which the CIO objects, on the other hand, and to which no amendments were permitted, adversely affect nearly all the rest of the American people.

In line with the CIO tax program presented to Congress by President Philip Murray, the CIO makes the following objections to the tax measure reported out by the House Ways and Means Committee:

(1) It does not provide for sufficient taxation of excess profits, and allows many loopholes for war profiteers. In Britain, there is a 100% tax on excess war profits, but here the very maximum proposed is only 60% of the extra and surplus swag coined from the slaughter.

(2) Estate, gift and other taxes that chiefly affect the overrich also leave too many loopholes for exemptions.

(3) On the other hand, an excessive burden is placed on the poor through the lowered exemptions from income tax, and through increased excise taxes on consumers' goods.

The CIO has made a number of constructive proposals to avert the proposed "wage cuts by taxation," and to insure that the tax burden is fairly distributed. It hopes for more democratic consideration of its position in the Senate.

Two Great Unions

Two important CIO unions, each headed by a national vice-president of the CIO, open their conventions this week, with reports of progress that would be considered miraculous in any other organization than the CIO.

But in the CIO, which has organized five million workers in five years and changed the whole face of industrial America as with a wand, miracles of organization are almost taken for granted by now.

Even by CIO standards, however, the records of the United Automobile Workers and the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers are something to brag about.

Pres. R. J. Thomas of the UAW-CIO, for instance, nonchalantly reports a paid-up membership of 528,413, a 93% increase in the past year. Union contracts now cover 982 plants and 703,760 workers, and have raised wages most handsomely.

Pres. Reid Robinson of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers represents an older union operating in a widely dispersed industry, without the huge concentrations of manpower that mark the auto industry.

But his convention report is also outstanding. It tells of a 58% increase in dues-paying membership, three times as great a rate of increase as the year before; an increase of 28% in the number of signed contracts, and more than $16,000,000 in higher wages.

To its Vice Presidents Thomas and Robinson and their unions, the whole CIO sends cordial convention greetings, in the firm conviction that their great organizations will continue in the CIO tradition to perform the now expected miracles of organization and service to their members.

Public Servant

No act of Congress has been subjected to more vicious attack by all the enemies of labor than the National Labor Relations Act. The act was intended by Congress to protect the right of American workers to organize and bargain collectively. The motives of its attackers are therefore obvious and understandable.

These same enemies of labor have attacked Edwin S. Smith, member of the National Labor Relations Board, with equal viciousness and for equally understandable reasons. They are now demanding that President Roosevelt do not appoint him to the Board at the expiration of his present term.

CIO President Murray, in urging the reappointment of Board Member Smith, notes that he is under attack precisely because "he has refused to engage in any appeasement at the expense of the workers but has courageously continued to enforce the mandate of Congress."

If legislation to protect labor is to be properly enforced, it requires outstanding public servants of the type of Edwin Smith to administer it—men who do not flinch before the attack of labor's enemies, who do not engage in finagling or compromise under political pressure, but who perform the duties assigned to them at no matter what risk to their personal fortunes.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

THE HOUSE has again refused to give its approval to the use of the United States army and navy to break strikes.

That is the meaning of the thumping vote of 255 to 114 against the House-Senate conference report recommending a sugar-coated Connally amendment, which would have authorized the President to take over plants for strikebreaking purposes.

There is something in the soul of a free people that revolts against the use of bayonets to drive workers back to the job. That is why so much trickery and camouflage has been used in attempts to slip over legislative proposals for the use of American troops against American workers.

An artificial hysteria was first created by the anti-labor forces every time workers struck for better wages, through "red scare" stories and all the usual devices. The Connally amendment was rushed through the Senate, with only seven dissenting votes, as one of a series of blows simultaneously struck against labor from behind this smokescreen. It was intended to back up the President's use of troops to break the North American strike.

This Connally amendment was tacked on to an unrelated bill lowering the draft age. It specifically authorized the President to take over plants and use the troops for the purpose of breaking strikes.

In the House similar proposals were incorporated in the May bill—with equal disregard for the bill's initial purpose to lower the draft age.

In both Houses, in other words, the maneuver was adopted of trying to slip over anti-labor measures as amendments to unrelated bills, instead of exposing them to the hearings and committee scrutiny that should have been given them if they had been introduced as separate bills.

The emergency CIO legislative conference that unanimously condemned the use of troops to break strikes, and the lobbying activities that were so successful in defeating the anti-labor provisions of the May bill, are now history.

But this did not end the danger to labor. For the Connally amendment had passed the Senate, and the House-Senate conferees recommended a supposed compromise which would have given the President the power to use the troops to break strikes just as effectively as did the original Connally amendment.

The CIO and Labor's Non-Partisan League were still on the job, however. Pres. Philip Murray immediately wrote all Congressmen, objecting to the conferees' report, and Legislative Representative John T. Jones wired all affiliates to protest.

The friendly Congressmen who spoke and voted against the anti-labor provisions of the May bill were not caught napping by the camouflage of the conferees' report. They rallied immediately to labor's support, and the report was rejected with an even bigger vote than before.

REP. HOWARD SMITH stands alone in his uncomplimentary references to CIO lobbyists as "goon squads." Every other Congressman who has testified on the subject has been favorably impressed with the CIO unionists, whose arguments were so effective in defeating recent anti-labor legislation.

One Congressman, for instance, wrote an unsolicited testimonial to Pres. Murray to praise the "frank, intelligent and courteous manner" of the CIO lobbyists who visited him. He said that other members of his state delegation shared his views.

Peter Edson, Washington correspondent for a string of important papers, considers that the CIO and the League did "the neatest job of lobbying that Washington has seen in a long time."

Far from being a "goon squad," he says, the CIO lobby "was made up of the best-looking, the smartest, and the highest type of labor representatives that the CIO unions could find."

Maybe Howard Smith was just jealous of the good looks and swell personalities of the CIO boys. Or maybe, according to another story, he felt neglected because none of them thought it worthwhile to lobby him, except some fellows who poked their heads in at his office "just to see what a 100% anti-labor Congressman looks like."

EVERY time the AFL building trades leaders make one of their periodical agreements to end all strikes, news items about new jurisdictional strikes break out like measles all over the same papers that editorially praise their pious proclamations.

The recent collusive agreement between the AFL craftsmen and the OPM (directed against the CIO) was no exception. This so-called "stabilization agreement" provided that "there shall be no stoppage of work on account of jurisdictional disputes, or for any other cause."

No sooner was it signed than thousands of AFL craft members were out on strike, from Key West to New York, St. Louis and points west.

Mine, Mill Union Reports Highest Gains in History

JOPLIN, Mo., Aug. 4—Delegates to the 38th convention of the International Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, CIO, which opens here today are scheduled to hear a report of dramatic gains during the past year which have made the union stronger than ever before in its history or that of its great predecessor organization—the Western Federation of Miners.

Detailed in the annual report of International President Reid Robinson, these gains will show on the credit side of the 1940-1941 ledger such outstanding performances as:

GAINS LISTED

1. A 58 per cent increase in dues-paying membership, three times as great as last year's rate of increase. The number of new members inducted into the CIO union in the past year is as great as its total membership in 1939, when the current organizing program was launched.

2. Increase of 28 per cent in the number of signed contracts and a boost of 14 per cent in the number of members covered by union contracts.

3. An extra $16,023,969 placed in the pockets of workers in the industry through wage raises and NLRB and wage-hour back pay awards won by the union. This is an incomplete figure which would certainly be swelled if exact figures were available from all the local unions.

4. Victories in 18 out of 21 National Labor Relations Board elections during the past year. The Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers received 68 per cent of all votes cast. AFL unions which opposed it in these elections received only 4.5 per cent of all the votes cast.

Pointing out that, since the union has reached this peak in membership with the momentum of its progress only just gathering strength, workers can be confident that if the same straightforward and correct program and policies are continued, further and even greater gains will be made during the coming year, President Robinson suggested adoption by the convention of the slogan:

"One hundred thousand members in good standing by next convention."

Notable advances which do not lend themselves to dollar-and-cents estimate but which were termed by President Robinson of utmost significance, include:

WAGE VICTORIES

1. Successful claim of a 50-year fight for dollar-to-dollar computation of working time in the underground metal mining industry. The Wage-Hour Administration has officially interpreted the workday in metal mining as eight hours, collar-to collar, following hearings at which union spokesmen argued for that interpretation.

2. Spreading of vacations with pay to many sections which have not enjoyed that advantage in the past, especially in the field of mining.

3. Elimination of the sliding scale as a basis of computing wages in several contracts, notably in the state-wide agreement in Utah. Recommendation that the sliding scale, based on fluctuations in metal prices, be junked was made by the last convention, which characterized it as a loaded-dice arrangement for the employers, even before the fixing of metal prices made its continuation suicidal for the workers.

Good news on the financial side was the disclosure in the presidents report that streamlining of the International Union's organizing program has produced economies which are stretching the membership's dollars. It was shown that whereas in 1940 it cost the IUMM&SW $9.96 for each new member organized, that cost dropped to $2.39 for each new member inducted this year.

FIGHT FASCISM

This year, as the year before, a major portion of President Robinson's report was devoted to the effects of World War II upon organized labor in the United States and an appraisal of the course which labor must chart for itself and the nation during the coming period.

Reiterating the long-standing opposition of the IUMM&SW and the CIO to Fascism, both abroad and at home, and the continuing desire of the American workers for a real people's peace, the report took note of the new phase of the war which, President Robinson declared, at one and the same time increased the danger to the American way of life and bettered the prospect of crushing Fascism all over the world by destroying its spearhead—Hitler.

HIGHEST gains in history of the union are described by Reid Robinson, president of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, in his report to the 38th annual convention, opening August 4 at Joplin, Mo.

93 PER CENT gains in United Auto Workers, CIO, membership in the past year are listed by Pres. R. J. Thomas in his report to the UAW convention opening August 4 in Buffalo, N. Y. Thomas also reported more than 700,000 workers under UAW-CIO contract.

BUFFALO, Aug. 2—R. J. Thomas, international president of the United Automobile Workers, CIO, in his report to the union's sixth annual convention which opens here Monday (August 4th) declared the union has a paid-up membership of 528,413, that its contracts cover 982 plants and 703,760 workers, and that the union has won every major labor board election held in its jurisdiction during the last 12 months.

The union's current paid-up membership, said Mr. Thomas, represents an increase of 93 per cent over that of a year ago. The 703,760 workers under contract today compares with 398,377 covered by UAW-CIO agreements a year ago.

The automobile union head, in a section of the report devoted to the Ford Motor Company, declared:

"The establishment of the union shop in the Ford Motor Company sets a pattern for the industry which, we are determined, will be universally adopted before the end of another year.

"Ford's agreement with our union has removed the greatest remaining obstacle in the path of the forward march of American labor. It has eliminated the proudest exhibit of the labor baiters and it has presented to unorganized workers everywhere an inspiring indication of the invincible strength of our labor movement."

The report indicates that the UAW-CIO now holds sole bargaining rights covering 83 General Motors plants, as compared with 60 a year ago. The report lists 81 labor board victories for the union in GM plants from July 1st, 1940, to July 1st of this year. A supplement to the report lists two additional labor board election victories in GM plants for the union since July 1, 1941.

The 10-cents-an-hour wage increase negotiated in General Motors plants, said Thomas, paved the way for similar raises for Chrysler and other workers. UAW-CIO membership in GM and Chrysler plants is reported to be at the highest peak in the history of the organization.

Marked progress was reported by Mr. Thomas also in a section of his report referring to the aircraft industry. The union, he said, has enrolled many thousands of aircraft workers in the east and the west, as well as in plants located in the interior of the country.

He asserted that the union's objective is to make aircraft wages comparable to those which now prevail in the automobile industry. The report gives full endorsement to the course taken by the union's aircraft department, under direction of Richard T. Frankensteen, in the unauthorized strike at the North American Aircraft Corporation at Los Angeles.

WAGE GAINS

The report, citing contract gains, declares that the average wage of automobile workers in May, 1941, was $1.014 an hour, as compared with 94 cents in May, 1940. Since May, 1941, however, several hundred thousand workers, including those employed by GM, Chrysler, Packard, Hudson and other companies, have obtained increases ranging from 10 to 8 cents an hour through the union's efforts.

Twenty-seven per cent of the union's contracts now include union shop provisions, Thomas said, as compared with 13 per cent a year ago. Fully 58 per cent today, as compared with 34 per cent a year ago, provide for vacations with pay.

Referring to problems created by the national defense program, Thomas' report was severely critical of proposals to cut automobile production by 50 per cent before provision is made for jobs for the workers who would be displaced.

The report is also critical of failure of management and governmental agencies to press for application of the CIO'S proposals for mass production of defense aircraft in automobile plants, and for increasing the output of steel. He charged that, "by and large, the CIO's defense plans were brushed off with kind words."

UNEMPLOYMENT

"Today we are paying for this attitude,," said Thomas. "We have lost many valuable months during which we might have supplied greater aid to Britain; and we are faced with the prospect that we shall have many thousands of unemployed during a period when man-power on the industrial front is needed to win the war.

"Belatedly and piecemeal, the national defense agencies and private industry are turning more and more to the CIO's plans. However, we cannot be certain that they will be utilized to the fullest extent, regardless of whose toes may be trod upon, unless labor and the CIO are given an adequate voice in the determination of defense policies."

While praising the work of William H. Davis, chairman, and other members of the National Defense Mediation Board, Thomas declared that the union stands opposed to compulsory arbitration of labor disputes.

"Our membership," said Thomas, "is wholeheartedly behind the efforts of our government to insure the triumph of democracy and the defeat of totalitarianism. Our union believes the fight for democracy must be waged on two fronts—at home and abroad. The performance of our union in raising the standards of life for almost three-quarters of a million workers and their families is a contribution also to national morale and to faith in democracy at home."

Workers Ignore AFL Threats

Chicago, Aug. 2—The CIO Steel Workers Organizing Committee won an election at the Cyclone Fence Division of the American Steel & Wire Company despite an AFL threat that building tradesmen would boycott the erection of Cyclone fences if the CIO won.

Oakley H. Mills, SWOC representative, reported the election results showed 156 votes for the SWOC, 75 for the AFL, and 32 votes for no union. Forty-five workers did not vote.

The election resulted from a controversy as to whether a national master agreement between the SWOC and the company also affected the North Chicago plant. The company excluded the North Chicago workers from the benefits of the agreement. Then the AFL entered the situation, which resulted in the Labor Board election.

Map Drive In Tobacco

Philadelphia, Aug. 2—A drive to organize 17,000 tobacco workers in the Philadelphia area was announced this week by the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing & Allied Workers. George Craig, CIO regional director, who met with representatives of the United to plan the campaign, said that the tobacco workers were now receiving miserably low pay. About half of them are women.

Cemetery Votes CIO

New York City, Aug. 2—Workers in the Elmont Cemetery voted 100 per cent for the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing & Allied Workers of America in a Labor Board election held here. The vote was 41 to 0 for the CIO union. Some 22 cemeteries in various parts of the country have signed contracts with UCAPAWA locals.

Job Practice Group To Meet Weekly

Washington, Aug. 2—The six-man Committee on Fair Employment Practice, appointed by President Roosevelt to investigate and act on discrimination in defense employment will meet here regularly once a week "until the job is done," Chairman Mark Ethridge announced.

The committee held its first meeting last Monday. CIO Pres. Murray, who is a member of the committee, was unable to attend because of illness.

GET TOGETHER

Ethridge said that the first meeting was only a "get together," but plans to combat discrimination will be mapped out at a future meeting. He also reported that an executive secretary will be appointed shortly to act on complaints.

The President authorized the formation of the committee after receiving many complaints that defense industries were discriminating against Negro workers. Many CIO unions took up the fight against discrimination a long time ago.

CIO Union Plans Exhibit

New York, Aug. 2—An exhibition of the work of Robert Josephy, outstanding American book designer, will be on view in South Hall at Columbia University here through August and September. The exhibition is similar to the one shown at the headquarters of the CIO Book and Magazine Guild last spring.

A course in book designing, now a popular feature of the Guild's craft school, of which Josephy is president, was originally presented as part of the curriculum at Columbia.

Reappoint Smith To Labor Board, Murray Urges

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2—Reappointment of Edwin S. Smith to the Natl. Labor Relations Board was urged on President Roosevelt by CIO Pres. Philip Murray in a letter sent to the White House this week.

Murray's letter to Roosevelt, which praised Smith as "an able and effective member of the Board," was followed up by a circular letter to all CIO affiliates urging them to pass resolutions and send letters to the White House with the same request.

Pointing out that Smith has honestly and effectively administered the Wagner Act as it was passed by Congress, Murray declared that he had "refused to engage in any appeasement at the expense of the workers but has courageously continued to enforce the mandate of Congress," despite "the most vicious attacks from anti-labor groups."

ANTI-LABOR FORCES

These anti-labor forces—including notorious labor-haters in Congress such as Reps. Smith, Cox, et al, "certain newspapers which have fought the Labor Act because of their refusal to permit their own employes to organize" and the craft union AFL leadership which would rather see the Act destroyed than see workers organized—have been the spearhead of the continuous barrage against Edwin Smith, Murray wrote.

"The public record of the opinions of Mr. Edwin S. Smith as a member of the Labor Board clearly evidence his forthright integrity in upholding the basic principles of the Act in order to guarantee in accordance with the law the maximum protection of the workers," Murray said.

This is shown, Murray wrote in his letter to the CIO, in Smith's vigorous opposition to attempts by other Board members to carve up industrial bargaining units into craft units. Two outstanding cases—the reopening of the certification of the CIO Longshoremens Union and the certification of the Glass Workers—in which Smith fought against attempts to carve up the unions into craft splinter groups—were cited by Murray.

At the same time Murray criticized other Board members, declaring: "Mr. Edwin S. Smith, during his entire term, has fearlessly fought for the enforcement of the Act regardless of the criticism and complaints that have arisen from employers merely because they are being compelled to comply with the law of the land. Unfortunately this has not been the attitude of other members of the Board."

DANGERS TO LABOR

Failure to reappoint Smith would result in a serious blow not only at the Wagner Act but at the administration of all labor laws, Murray pointed out, since it would be a warning that public officials administering these laws as they were intended by Congress would be courting political suicide.

"It is essential that Edwin S. Smith be reappointed for two reasons," Murray wrote. "In the first place, it is necessary that the type of administration represented by Mr. Smith be continued.

"In the second place, the failure to reappoint Mr. Smith would be the equivalent of a proclamation that public officials who administer labor legislation in a manner consistent with its basic policies are simply assuring their political demise. Nothing can be more harmful to the workers and prejudicial to decent administration of public affairs."

IMMEDIATE ACTION

Murray's letter called for "immediate action" by all CIO members on Smith's reappointment, concluding:

"The reappointment of Edwin S. Smith will assure the continuation of the Natl. Labor Relations Act as a living instrumentality for the protection of the workers. The failure to obtain such reappointment may well mean the destruction of this Magna Charta of labor."

Seaway Would Displace 50,000, Lewis Warns

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2—The methods of intimidation being employed by the sponsors of the St. Lawrence Seaway Project "are designed to enlist and force patriotic pressure to wilt the opponents, alleging that our foreign foes, real or imaginary, must not learn of any disunity in the great preparedness program," John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, declared last week before the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The United Mine Workers leader asserted that the project was rejected in 1934 as being "totally unnecessary for either power or commerce." He said it was brought up again "in new dress—patriotism and wartime defense."

Lewis pointed out that "The St. Lawrence waterway will be an invitation, a new peril, in the barter game, for other countries to unload whatever they have for whatever price or trade agreement that can be negotiated in order to maintain exchange money and rates.

"Let's not mistake this certainty," Lewis warned.

Lewis declared that there was a "great hue and cry" about the two million man days alleged to have been lost in defense industries during the first six months of 1941. "What about the loss of 13-million man-days if our Canadian coal markets are lost for good?" he asked.

BETWEEN WARS

He continued: "Will those same anxious folks who publicly criticize now, these same folks whose concern about the public welfare lies dormant for the most part between wars, be as insistent and appealing in the cause of employment for the men who stand to lose from five to 50 million man-days if the St. Lawrence turns out to be all that its sponsors prophesy?

"Shall we purposely plan to increase unemployment?" Lewis asked. "Shall we provide the makings to multiply the woes of the workingman when the war is terminated?"

Lewis urged that now is the time for government, business and labor to evolve a plan to meet the crisis of unemployment resulting from the cessation of wartime production.

He reiterated previous testimony given by Thomas Kennedy, UMW secretary-treasurer, that the project would have a devastating effect on workers employed in the anthracite field. Lewis estimated that the project would ultimately "displace 50,000 and maybe more American workingmen."

CIO Official Sues Co. Goons

Jefferson City, Tenn., Aug. 2—A suit for $20,000 damages was filed against the Johnson Spring Co., Inc., at Chattanooga, by O. S. Baxter, SWOC sub-regional director, who charged that he was beaten up and "run out of town" by hoodlums organized by company officials.

Baxter went to Jefferson City Dec. 7, 1939, after two Johnson employes were discharged for joining the SWOC. He telephoned John E. Johnson, president of the company, for an interview, but Johnson refused to talk to him.

Baxter accused Johnson's son and son-in-law of organizing a gang who subsequently beat him up, threatened to kill him, and finally forced him to leave town.

CIO Fishermen Net Pay Raise

San Francisco, Aug. 2—Here's a fish story that's true:

Several years ago when sardine and mackerel fishermen wanted to earn more money they would depend on their luck for big catches. And the catches had to be big because the prices paid for the fish by the canneries were very low.

Last week through the CIO International Fishermen and Allied Workers Union the fishermen made the biggest catch of the year. Instead of getting $10.50 a ton for sardines as they did last year, the sardine fishermen are now getting $16.50 a ton from the canneries.

Mackerel fishermen at San Pedro were able to get a $6.50 increase when the union persuaded the canneries to up their price from $27.50 a ton for Pacific mackerel and $22.50 for Spanish. Previously the prices were $21 and $16.

"ABLE and effective" was used by CIO Pres. Murray to describe Edwin S. Smith, whose reappointment to the Natl. Labor Relations Board was urged on Pres. Roosevelt. Murray also asked all CIO affiliates to write Roosevelt with the same request, declaring Smith's reappointment essential to honest administration of the Wagner Act.

CIO Film Shown

Clinton, Tenn., Aug. 2—Films showing workers voting at elections held by the National Labor Relations Board were shown at a meeting here of Branch 125, American Federation of Hosiery Workers. Paul Christopher, secretary-treasurer of the Tennessee CIO Council, and Myles Horton, director of the Highlander Folk School in Monteagle, Tenn., exhibited the motion pictures, which were made by the union.

CIO Wins Poll

Knoxville, Tenn., Aug. 2—Another important victory for the CIO in Tennessee was won by the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers in an election among employes of the Universal Exploration Co., U. S. Steel subsidiary, Paul R. Christopher, secretary-treasurer of the State CIO Council reported this week. The vote was 171 to 13.

'Best Pact' Signed By Distillery Men

LEECHBURG, Pa., Aug. 2—Wage increases from 10 to 13 cents an hour were gained for 600 workers at Jos. S. Finch & Co., distillers of Schenley products, in a renewed agreement with Local 3, CIO United Distillery Workers.

The pact, which also included the best features of the previous one, including the union shop and check-off, was hailed as the best in the industry by Joseph D. Cannon, director of the Distillery Workers Organizing Committee. Cannon said that the contract couuld well be emulated by workers in other industries.

OTHER GAINS

Besides the wage increase, the contract provides for time and one-half for Saturday, Sunday and holiday work and double time for Christmas Day. All employes will receive a 15-hour break in between shifts and a guarantee of eight hours work is provided upon reporting to work.

Two weeks vacation with pay is provided for workers with four years of accumulated service and one week for employes with two years seniority. A minimum of one month's work is provided for employes having worked a minimum of 10 calendar days in any particular month.

A unique feature in the pact is a provision for a rest period with pay for women workers. A ten minute rest period is provided during the first and second half of a working shift. During May 1 and Oct. 1 the rest period is increased to 15 minutes.

PAY BOOSTS

The wage increases included a general 10-cent raise for women workers, establishing a 60-cent minimum, and 10½ cents for women workers in the labor department where the minimum was established at 75 cents per hour.

All male department employes were granted a 13-cent raise and a 77½-cent minimum was established. Adjustments of wage rates for certain classifications averaged approximately 17 cents on the hour.

The pact also included seniority guarantees to volunteers or draftees and provided a minimum of 80 cents an hour for trade apprentices for the first six months, 93 cents an hour after six months and $1.03 for apprentices with services of 12 months. Should a vacancy occur among skilled tradesmen, the pact calls for the elevation of the pay of apprentices of 12 months service to $1.17.

W. Va. CIO Meet Lists Gains, Maps Fight for Rights

BLUEFIELD, W. Va., Aug. 2—Vigorous and forceful denunciations of all efforts to curtail the civil liberties of American citizens under the guise of national defense were shouted in no uncertain terms here by the 736 delegates attending the fourth annual convention of the West Virginia Industrial Union Council.

"You can no more outlaw strikes than you can outlaw drought," Van A. Bittner, high-ranking CIO official, told the delegates as they roared their approval.

"We stand with the United States of America today, tomorrow and every other day," the veteran CIO chieftain declared. "Every man and woman stands for Roosevelt against Hitler.

"But while fighting for freedom against foes from without, we must always remember that the maintenance of the rights which are ours—freedom of speech, freedom of worship, freedom of assemblage and the right to strike—is the responsibility of labor.

"We are not going to give up our freedom. We are deadly in earnest when we say we will fight every foe of liberty and freedom here in the United States."

SPEAKERS

On the opening morning of the convention John B. Easton, president of the State Council, and John Brophy, CIO director of Industrial Unions Councils, were the principal speakers. President Easton in his annual report to the delegates warned of the letdown that will follow the present business boom and said that labor must be alert to keep its gains intact.

In his talk on "Defense and Democracy," Brophy declared that the CIO "stands foursquare for the defense of the democratic cause both at home and abroad. This is no time for ambiguous phrases, for doubts and reservations.

"This is a time when fundamental things must be made crystal clear. There should be no untertainty among us whatsoever as to our position in the international struggle. We stand for aid to the defenders of Great Britain and all the countries resisting totalitarian aggression."

CIO GAINS

The keynote of the entire convention was one of high jubilation at the gains won by the CIO in the state in recent years. Delegates took note of the fact that Bluefield in Mercer County, is in the heart of the former stronghold of anti-unionism where thugs of the Baldwin-Felts Detective Agency reigned supreme during the twenties in Logan, McDowell and Mercer counties.

Condemning profiteering during this time of national emergency; upholding the right to strike; urging the passage of a national anti-lynch bill; favoring the elimination of the vicious poll tax system; opposing any changes weakening the Labor Relations Act; and favoring the Wagner Health Bill and cooperative credit unions.

A sharp protest against the persecution of Harry Bridges, president of the Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union was expressed in one resolution passed, and in another all congressmen who voted in favor of the current group of anti-labor bills were denounced.

On the last day of the convention Council President Easton was re-elected by acclamation. He first took office as president of the old Federation of Labor in 1924 and has held the presidential chair ever since.

The convention also took a vigorous stand against the proposed St. Lawrence waterways opposed by President John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers and condemned all forms of communism, fascism and naziism. Discrimination against colored citizens both on defense projects and in the Army and Navy were denounced.

Contempt Case Thrown Out

San Francisco, Aug. 2—Labor unions cannot be punished for contempt of court, Judge McWilliams ruled in dismissing two suits brought against the CIO Int'l. Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union by the Euclid Candy Company.

The suit arose from an alleged violation of an injunction order restraining picketing in the 1940 warehouse strike. Another suit, directed against Donald Maguire, acting local president, is still pending.

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

A great victory for the CIO. A repudiation of the AFL. The workers of the International Harvester Company's large plant at Chicago, Ill., cast their votes in a NLRB election, as follows:

FEWOC-CIO	2806

This victory is significant in view of the fact that the AFL during a recent strike for wage increases, embraced a company-dominated so-called union and led a back-to-work movement, scabbing on the strikers, with all the blessings the International Harvester Company could give them and with the assistance of an army of Chicago police. They even carried their dastardly work so far as to oppose granting of a wage increase before the National Mediation Board, which the CIO was fighting for. The records of the company showed at the time they had trebled their profits in 1940 over what they made in 1939.

This inexcusable betrayal of these workers was led by the two Gold Dust Twins of William Green—Francis P. Fenton and Irving Brown. The latter has been repudiated by the auto workers in Tarrytown, New York; Baltimore, Maryland, and everywhere he has attempted to mislead them.

Powers Hapgood represents the CIO in this great fight and with Chairman Grant Oakes and associate officers and members of the Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee is to be complimented on the fine job done. It is a great victory and a repudiation of those who took part in this attempt to deceive the McCormick workers and frustrate their just claims.

Regional Director Davidson of Cincinnati, Ohio, reports the following election won recently by the UAWA-CIO—this following the Chevrolet victory makes the score in Auto in Cincinnati—UAWA-CIO, 100 per cent; AFL Nil.

Victory in Congress

Another splendid victory in the Nation's legislative field was recorded this week when the House by an overwhelming vote rejected the conference report which recommended the anti-labor Connally amendment to the Selective Service Act, which would have permitted the use of the Army and Navy to break strikes and could have been used to force compulsory arbitration on labor. John T. Jones, Labor's Non-Partisan League's representative, worked hard and untiringly to bring about this result.

James Robb, regional director in Indianapolis, reports signing of a closed-shop agreement with many improvements at the Kingnan Packing Company's Indianapolis plant, where the CIO recently won an election over the AFL.

Regional Director George Craig in Philadelphia reports a drive to organize all the tobacco and cigar workers. The UCAPAWA and the Regional Office have mapped out a program to organize the unorganized 17,000 cigar workers in Philadelphia and vicinity.

Regional Director Yelverton Cowherd in Alabama reports an election won among the office workers of Sloss-Sheffied Steel & Iron Company with a vote of 43 to 31 in favor of the UOPWA.

An application for a charter to set up a CIO Industrial Union Council in Cadillac, Michigan, has been approved and plans are being formulated to set the same up.

On Capitol Hill

Congress Rejects No Strike Plan

By JOHN T. JONES
CIO Legislative Representative
Director of Labor's Non-Partisan League

Government strikebreaking through use of bayonets to settle industrial disputes was again voted down, 255-114, by the House in another great legislative victory for labor, which had exposed new efforts to obtain this un-American power.

On the roll call, 138 Republicans, 113 Democrats, three Progressive Party and one Labor Party Congressmen voted on the side of labor. Virtually all the poll taxers were lined up against labor. Of the 114 who voted against labor, 113 were Democrats and one Republican. The debate was short and to the point and left the proponents of government strikebreaking without a leg to stand on.

This vote was on a revised Connally amendment which was included in the House-Senate conference report on S.1524. It came two weeks after the House defeated the same type of amendment (more sharply worded) which had been sponsored by Congressman May, chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee.

Despite the earlier House rejection of the May amendment, May continued to support the similar provisions reported out by the conferees. Conferees appointed by him to iron out the differences between the Senate and House bills were stacked against labor, and the bill as reported out included—in slightly changed form—the Connally anti-strike amendments. This bill would have imposed the following conditions on labor:

1. It would have authorized the Federal Government, by order of the President, to take over temporarily and operate struck plants.
2. It would have permitted the use of the Army, the Navy or any other power of the Government, to keep open and resume production in struck plants.
3. It would have required return of plants to private owners after full operation is resumed—in other words, after the strike is broken.
4. This Government power to break strikes could have been used to force upon labor compulsory arbitration.

CIO President Philip Murray pointed out in a letter to the House 24 hours before it voted, that this legislation "is not intended to exercise any compulsion against management, but only against labor." Murray explained: "This conclusion must be reached because the bill aims solely at breaking strikes and thereafter returning property to management. In other words, profits of management are not to be disturbed, but the rights of labor are to be abolished. A vote for this bill is a vote to destroy organized labor."

Not one Administration spokesman took the floor against this proposal which was opposed by CIO-LNPL and AFL labor forces. In debate, members of the Committee stated that at least two War Department officials, Undersecretary Patterson and Labor Advisor Edward F. McGrady, told the House-Senate conferees that power to do what the Connally amendment authorized was desired. House Democratic Leader John W. McCormack voted for the proposal.

The vote demonstrated that labor has some staunch friends in Congress whom it may count on to defend its interests even against Administration pressure. Rep. Arthur Healey, D., Mass., who sponsored the motions that twice defeated this type of anti-labor legislation, was an outstanding leader in the fight against this Fascist proposal. Another who battled valiantly with labor was Rep. Raymond S. McKeough, D., Ill. There are many more whom space forbids mentioning here.

Though it is true that labor has scored heavily in twice defeating these proposals with the help of its stout friends in Congress, it would be living in a fool's paradise for labor to assume that its troubles in Congress are now at an end. Of those who voted with labor on this vital issue, there were Congressmen whose motives were mixed. Not all voted against the proposal because of its anti-labor character. Some saw dangers in it to business as well as to labor, others considered their action simply an anti-Administration vote.

Says Pearson, Allen Story Is 'Falsehood'

Indianapolis, Ind., Aug. 2—Drew Pearson and Robert S. Allen, authors of Washington Merry-Go-Round column, were declared to have made an "absolutely false and utterly absurd" report on alleged statements of Ora Gasaway at the Indiana State Industrial Union Council convention, in a letter addressed to the columnists by James Robb, CIO regional director in Indiana. The letter follows:

"As CIO regional director in the state of Indiana and due to the fact that I presided over the recent convention of the Indiana State Industrial Union Council in Muncie, Indiana, where Mr. Ora Gasaway represented President John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers of America, I listened very carefully to the address given by Mr. Gasaway, and after a further check on the verbatim minutes of his speech, the report you give in your column of July 23 and the inferences to be gathered therefrom, are absolutely false and utterly absurd.

"Your article certainly gives the impression that someone has been giving you a ride on the merry-go-round of mis-information.

"In the interest of common decency, may I ask that you not only retract your statement, but issue a denial and make known the names of those who gave you this erroneous information reported in your column."

'Reappoint Edwin S. Smith'

by Pres. Philip Murray

Following is the full text of CIO Pres. Philip Murray's letter to all CIO affiliates urging them to take action "to seek and obtain the reappointment of Edwin S. Smith as a member of the Natl. Labor Relations Board."

The National Labor Relations Act is one of the most important legislative enactments now outstanding. The fundamental policies of this legislation reflect the basic aspirations of the workers. A wise and vigorous administration of this Act can continue to prove to be useful and helpful.

On the other hand, if its administration falls into the hands of individuals who are not sympathetic with the declared policy of the legislation, it may yet prove to be highly dangerous to organized labor.

A very grave question is pending as to the future of this legislation. The term of office of Mr. Edwin S. Smith, a member of the National Labor Relations Board, expires the latter part of August, 1941. The question is whether Mr. Smith will be reappointed to such position by the President of the United States.

"ABLE AND EFFECTIVE"

Mr. Edwin S. Smith has consistently fulfilled his obligations as a public servant. He has demonstrated his ability as an able and effective member of the National Labor Relations Board.

In the face of the most vicious attacks from anti-labor groups against the National Labor Relations Act, he has refused to engage in any appeasement at the expense of the workers, but has courageously continued to enforce the mandate of Congress as expressed in the legislation.

There has been a perfect identity between those who have attempted to destroy the legislation and its effective administration and those who have directed criticism against Mr. Edwin S. Smith as a member of the Labor Board.

This criticism has emanated from such representatives in Congress as Congressmen Smith and Cox, the most vitriolic anti-labor members in Congress; from certain newspapers which have fought the Labor Act because of their refusal to permit their own employes to organize into a union of their own choice, and from the AFL craft union leadership which preferred to eliminate the Act to permitting unorganized workers to organize into powerful industrial unions.

"FORTHRIGHT INTEGRITY"

The public record of the opinions of Mr. Edwin S. Smith as a member of the Labor Board clearly evidences his forthright integrity in upholding the basic principles of the Act in order to guarantee in accordance with the law the maximum protection to the workers. For instance:

(1) In one of the early cases before the Board the issue of craft versus industrial unionism arose. Mr. Edwin S. Smith took the position that the National Labor Relations Act, which sought to create the maximum economic strength for the employes through collective bargaining between unions and employers, necessarily demanded the development of the industrial form of union organization.

He has continued to maintain this position and has not failed to enter his dissents where a majority of the Board, with increasing frequency, have carved up industrial labor unions for the purpose of appeasing the claims of the numerous craft unions.

The same issue is involved where unions request that the bargaining unit embrace all of the plants of a single employer or the several employers operating through an employers association. While Mr. Smith has steadfastly upheld the right of the workers to choose the larger bargaining unit in order to assure to the employes a maximum of economic strength, a majority of the Board, in an effort to appease the anger of employers, has stricken down such attempts. The most recent glaring examples of this abuse occurred in two recent cases.

"SMITH DISSENTING"

In one case a majority of the Board, with Mr. Smith dissenting, reversed an earlier opinion of the Board and destroyed the single bargaining unit established by the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union covering all of the longshoremen on the west coast.

In another case, again with Mr. Smith dissenting, the single collective bargaining unit covering all of the plants of the Libbey-Owens-Ford Corporation as requested by the Federation of Glass Workers Union was denied and the several plants established as separate bargaining units. This action was taken by the Board in spite of the fact that only a few days before the Supreme Court of the United States upheld an earlier opinion of the Board which had established at the request of the same union a single bargaining unit for all the plants of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company.

(2) Mr. Edwin S. Smith, during his entire term, has fearlessly fought for the enforcement of the Act regardless of the criticism and complaints that have arisen from employers merely because they are being compelled to comply with the law of the land. Unfortunately this has not been the attitude of other members of the Board.

"EFFECTIVE REPEAL"

The unfair labor practices provisions of the Labor Act can be made meaningless through a weak administration. Every union appreciates the difference between a vigorous enforcement of the Act as against an administration that seeks to show a smaller and smaller number of cases in its annual report. Through adverse administration, there can be as effective a repeal of legislation as through direct enactment by Congress.

This dangerous development is evidenced in recent reversals by a majority of the Board of earlier established precedents. In two such outstanding recent cases, Mr. Edwin S. Smith entered dissents.

In one case a majority of the Board held that scabs, hired by the employer during a strike, are entitled to vote in an election held by the Board. A premium was thereupon placed by the Board upon strikebreaking by employers and the hiring of scabs. The larger the number of scabs hired, the greater would be the chances of the employer in defeating the union.

In the other recent case a majority of the Board permitted an employer to evade his responsibilities under the Act where he discharged men at the request of another union which threatened to boycott the employer. Under this case where industrial unions have organized the employes of an employer, a "threatened" boycott by outside unions of the materials of such employer would create the justification for either refusing to bargain with the industrial union or discharging the members of such union.

These specific examples are cited merely to demonstrate the importance to organized labor in securing an effective administration of the basic principles of the Act as they have been carefully worked out with judicial approval.

"AFFECTS EVERY MEMBER"

This question involving the reappointment of Mr. Edwin S. Smith as a member of the National Labor Relations Board affects every member, every local union, and every national and international union and organizing committee of the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

It is essential that Edwin S. Smith be reappointed for two reasons: In the first place, it is necessary that the type of administration represented by Mr. Smith be continued.

In the second place, the failure to reappoint Mr. Smith would be the equivalent of a proclamation that public officials who administer labor legislation in a manner consistent with its basic policies are simply assuring their public demise. Nothing can be more harmful to organized labor and the interests of the workers and prejudicial to decent administration of public affairs.

It is therefore of the utmost importance that the Congress of Industrial Organizations and the millions of its members evidence their determination to seek and obtain the reappointment of Edwin S. Smith as a member of the National Labor Relations Board.

This should be carried out through the adoption of resolutions to this effect by the national and international unions and organizing committees, local and state industrial union councils, and local meetings.

These resolutions, together with messages of individual members throughout the nation, should be forwarded to: (a) the President of the United States; (b) their Senators in the United States Senate; and (c) to Harry A. Millis, chairman of the National Labor Relations Board, Washington, D. C.

The reappointment of Edwin S. Smith will assure the continuation of the National Labor Relations Act as a living instrumentality for the protection of the workers. The failure to obtain such reappointment may well mean the destruction of this Magna Charta of labor.

Immediate action is of the essence.

Illinois CIO Leads In Legislative Drive

Chicago, Aug. 2—The CIO in Illinois played a major role in securing enactment of important labor and social legislation and in defeating every single anti-labor proposal, Ray Edmundson, CIO state director, declared in a report sent to CIO President Philip Murray this week.

Some of the main legislative measures the CIO was instrumental in getting passed are:

Improvements in the Employment Compensation Act increasing the maximum weekly benefits from $16 to $18 and extending the maximum from 16 to 20 weeks.

A $16,000,000 appropriation for aid to dependent children, half to be paid by the Federal government. Until the CIO launched its vigorous campaign for such a provision, the measure was considered dead by all its proponents, Edmundson said.

WAGE LAW

A wage guarantee law demanded by the United Mine Workers for almost 50 years was finally passed. A bill drafted by the CIO requiring industrial operators of leased property to file bonds securing the payment of wages was enacted into law and approved by the governor.

A CIO drafted bill calling for further protection of the employment status of men in military service was embodied in the Service Men's Job Tenure Act.

A law requiring employers advertising for help during a strike or lockout to state in their ads that such a strike or lockout exists.

An unwilling tribute to the effectiveness of the CIO in obtaining the labor legislation its seeks, was paid by the AFL State Federation of Labor in its Weekly News Letter, which complains that "the first bill to pass the present session of the Illinois legislature . . . is a CIO bill," while an AFL bill was "slaughtered." The Illinois legislature "seems to prefer" the CIO to the AFL, it wails.

Strikers Bring Case To Public

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2 — Striking workers at the Arcade Sunshine Laundry Co. brought their case before the people this week when the company published a number of misleading statements about the strike in local papers.

The strikers pointed out that they walked out July 2 after their employer refused to bargain collectively and discharged union members.

Firm Signs After CIO Beats AFL

Indianapolis, Ind., Aug. 2.—CIO Director James Robb announced last Thursday that the Kingan Packing Co. signed a union shop agreement with the CIO Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee.

Full details were not known at press time, but it is understood that substantial improvements over the company's previous contract with the AFL Amalgamated Meat Cutters have been written into the PWOC pact. The CIO union defeated the AFL union in a Labor Board election July 17.

Asks Injunction —Gets Enjoined

Birmingham, Ala., Aug. 2—The tables were turned on one employer here who sought to get a court order enjoining a union from picketing his plant.

Judge Leigh Clark granted the Birmingham Linen Supply's request for an injunction all right—but the order restrained the employer from interfering with the union's right to picket the company's plant.

At the same time the judge's order prohibited the union from engaging "in violence or trespassing." The order is unique in Southern labor history.

URGINGS of CIO and Labor's Non-Partisan League prevented passage of anti-union amendments to Selective Service Act, John T. Jones, League director and legislative representative of CIO, said when 255-114 vote was counted. Jones paid tribute to labor's friends among Congressmen who worked and voted to defend labor's rights.

Trust Responsible For Spread of Trichinosis

By GORDON L'ALLEMAND
Federated Press

Trichinosis, the disease caused by almost miscroscopic worms burying themselves in the muscles, is the greatest hidden disease menace in the U. S. today. In 1938 the U. S. Public Health Service estimated that 16,000,000 people are infected—about 1 in every 7.

Yet this incurable disease is seldom recognized by physicians. Dr. Maurice Hall of the Public Health Service says: "I am sure that 99 per cent of the acute trichinosis cases are missed by the diagnosticians. This strange disease is variously mistaken for at least 40 other diseases."

What Causes It?

How do people get it, and what can be done about it? The answer to the first question has been known for decades. The tiny white worms come from undercooked pork butchered from infected hogs.

Source of infection for the hogs is garbage. When hogs are raised on ordinary farms, they are almost entirely free of trichina spiralis. But about 50 per cent of the American cities of 15,000 population or more sell their garbage to hog raisers. This practice is responsible for the U. S. leading the world in its trichinosis rate.

The greatest danger of contracting trichinosis comes from eating the ordinary hamburger. Quite commonly the meat is part pork, and it is almost never cooked enough to kill the trichina spiralis.

No Cure Found

Once in the stomach, the larvae are freed from their cysts and travel to the small intestines. Rapidly reaching maturity, they mate within five days; in a 6-week period the females produce from 1,000 to 1,500 young. These enter the blood stream and travel to nearly all the voluntary muscles. Science has found no way of killing or removing them.

Autopsies have disclosed as many as 1,000 worms in a single gram of human diaphragm (1/25 ounce). The heart muscles may be riddled. Symptoms include fevers, weakness, sweating and influenza.

Near Los Angeles is the great Fontana Hog Farm, which produces 13,000,000 pounds of pork yearly—most of it for nationally known packers. This farm buys 600 tons of garbage daily from the city of Los Angeles, paying $80,000 a year for the hog food that may infect many thousands of consumers.

Now, here's the vital point: Whatever garbage the hogs don't eat is carefully collected by Fontana workers and spread out on concrete floors to dry in the sun. It is then pulverized, sacked and sold as a fine orchard and field fertilizer at $6.50 a ton.

From this business Fontana realizes $125,000 a year, or better than 50 per cent more than the cost of all the garbage.

Threat to Fertilizer Trust

This suggests the most practical answer to the problem of trichinosis. Instead of making fertilizer out of only part of the garbage, all of the refuse should be used for this purpose.

So far, however, important business and political interests have strangled every attempt to curb the practice of garbage feeding. For one thing, a change would dislocate the minority of hog farms using garbage.

Maritime Union Signs Tankers

New York, Aug. 2—An agreement with the Pure Oil Co. providing wage increases, paid vacations and an increase in manning scales for 100 men on three tankers was annuonced this week by the National Maritime Union. The pay increase —$7.50 for all hands—is retroactive to the opening of negotiatons in April.

Wage scales now range from $77.50 to $127.50 in the deck department, from $87.50 to $187.50 in the engine department and from $77.50 to $152.50 in the stwards department.

Negotiations with Cities Service

are now under way, and a Labor Board election is scheduled to be held this month on Atlantic Refining. Still to be signed up are Standard Oil of New Jersey, Socony-Vacuum and Tidewater.

In addition to wage increase, Pure Oil crews will receive 10-day paid vacations twice a year and one extra man will be placed in the steward's department. Also included in the contract is the union's standard grievance machinery for adjustment of disputes.

The company has agreed to recognize ship committees and the right of the crews to hold meetings aboard ship.

CIO's leaflets and pamphlets keep you up to date on vital issues. Every worker should read and study Pres. Murray's testimony on taxation, "The CIO Tax Program—Tax Wealth, Not Wages;" his speech, "Wages and War Profits," and "The Right to Strike—Keystone of Liberty." Striking Toy Union Wins Aid

BUFFALO, Aug. 9—Striking toy workers of Kane, Pa., appreciated the solidarity of the CIO when they sent a delegation to visit the convention of the powerful CIO United Automobile Workers. Enthusiastic expressions of support and financial assistance were immediately forthcoming from the big brother union and its delegates.

The delegation represented Local 309 of the United Paper, Novelty & Toy Workers, which has been on strike for several weeks against the Holgate Brcs. Toy Co. It was headed by President Melvin Legters and Secretary Valborg Johnson.

The CIO union won an election last May by a vote of 321 to 127 over the AFL, but company stalling of negotiations and refusal of the workers' demands finally forced them to walk out.

Present wages run as low as 30 cents an hour for women and 35 cents an hour for men, and the union is asking a 20-cents-an-hour wage increase and the union shop.

Although the company president, J. E. Henretta, is a business big shot of the community, the townspeople of Kane are evidencing hearty sympathy for the strikers' reasonable demands and helping to supply the strike kitchen.

Despite company and AFL attempts at strikebreaking and the arrest of some of the pickets, the walkout has proved most effective and the strikers' ranks are remaining solid and enthusiastic, with good prospects of a union victory.

The company manufactures educational toys, hair brushes and wood novelties.

Better Than Walking!

DULUTH, Minn., Aug. 9—Oh to be a sailor!

Avoiding the necessity of picket line duty on hot summer sidewalks, striking members of the National Maritime Union encircled the steamship Jupiter, in port here, with seven row boats to help enforce demands for union recognition.

"The row boats will remain on the picket line until the strike is settled," Ed Salo, NMU official, declared. The ship is owned by the Jupiter Steamship Co., of Cleveland.

(See Stories On Inside Pages)

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9—Conventions of two major affiliates of the CIO, meeting during the past week, heard reports of tremendous organizational gains during the past 12 months, and pledged their redoubled efforts towards further progress in the year ahead.

In Buffalo, about 1,000 delegates of the United Automobile Workers resolved to intensify their organizing activities in the aircraft industry, and to mop up the few remaining non-union plants in the automobile and related industries.

At Joplin, Mo., members of the Intl. Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers heard a report from Pres. Reid Robinson that the number of dues paying members had jumped 85 per cent during the last year. The convention delegates were working, as the week closed, on plans to bring the union's membership up to 100,000 during 1942.

To the auto workers, Pres. R. J. Thomas and Sec.-Treas. George Addes revealed that plants under UAW contracts have zoomed from 491, employing 398,000 workers, to 892 plants with 700,000 workers.

Win Election

East Greenwich, R. I., Aug. 9—The Textile Workers Union won an NLRB election at the Greenwich Mills here, it was announced by Pres. Emil Rieve. The TWUA gained 192 votes, to 70 against. Contract negotiations will start immediately.

CIO Transit Union Backs Council Plan

NEW YORK, Aug. 9—Full support for the industry councils plan of the CIO proposed by Pres. Murray was reaffirmed by the Transport Workers Union executive board meeting here, and was coupled with a protest against the proposed 50 percent cut in auto production.

"Labor's representatives in government have been all too few and poorly selected, and this has seriously hampered the national defense effort," the resolution said in calling for adoption of the CIO plan.

In addition, the TWU pointed out that the 50 per cent auto cut "focuses attention on the lack of unified planning that has characterized the national defense leadership" and further points to the need for the industry councils setup.

METAL MINERS MEET: Scene at the Hotel Connor in Joplin, Mo., as the CIO Intl. Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers opened its 38th annual convention. Pres. Reid Robinson, a vice-president of the CIO, is addressing the delegates from the platform under the banner. Delegates heard that the past 12 months have brought a 58% increase in the number of dues-paying members.

Announce Bronze Drive

Cleveland, Aug. 9—A drive to organize the thousand workers at the big plant of the National Bronze Co. here has been announced by the National Association of Die Casting Workers.

A volunteer organizing committee comprised of members of Local 55, at the U. S. Aluminum Co. plant, and three full time organizers are at work on the National Bronze drive. The company produces aluminum castings.

Guild Sweeps Election At New York Times

NEW YORK, Aug. 9—Climaxing an organizing campaign of several years duration, the New York Newspaper Guild last week by a decisive margin won a Natl. Labor Relations Board election conducted among the 587 members of the editorial department of the New York Times.

The Guild gained 295 votes, to 202 for the AFL American Newswriters Association, and 38 for neither.

Earlier this year the Guild won an election in the Times commercial department, and later negotiated a contract that lifted wages for 720 workers by more than $100,000 a year.

TO SEEK PACT

"The Newspaper Guild of New York is now the recognized exclusive bargaining agency for 1300 employes of the Times, "it was pointed out by Pres. Monroe Stern of the New York Guild. "We shall immediately ask the management of the Times to set a date for the beginning of negotiations to cover editorial department employes."

By agreement with the management during Labor Board proceedings which led up to the elections, it was agreed that if the Guild won the elections in both commercial and editorial departments, the two units would be combined into a single bargaining unit, thereby creating the largest bargaining unit in the nation's newspaper industry.

Stern said the local Guild will now devote all its efforts to completion of organization at the Herald-Tribune, one of the two major metropolitan newspapers not yet under Guild contract.

Milton Kaufman, executive vice-president of the American Newspaper Guild, hailed the election results as a defeat for AFL splitting tactics.

"These employes chose the Guild in spite of a deplorable effort of the American Federation of Labor to divide them along craft lines. The New York Times employes deliberately chose the industrial form of union because the proven record convinced them of the Guidl's ability to advance the economic interests of newspaper employes.

"The Guild's achievement in 1940 of national union shop recognition on 13 Hearst papers firmly established the Guild on the chain newspapers of the United States. Today's victory will facilitate the completion of organization of the large institutional independent daily newspapers of the United States.

"Our Labor Board victory should answer with finality any doubt that the Guild can and does organize and represent faithfully the working press of the United States."

Charge Bias Against N. Y. NLRB Head

New York, Aug. 9—Charges of anti-CIO bias were made by the CIO Council here against Mrs. Elinore Herrick, Natl. Labor Relations Board regional director, in a letter to Board Chairman Harry A. Millis demanding an impartial investigation of Mrs. Herrick's activities.

CIO unions in the New York area "generally feel that Mrs. Herrick is favoring employers as against them, is favoring the AFL as against them, and is denying them their full rights under the law," Joseph Curran, Council president, wrote to Millis.

The Council suggested that a number of cases be studied by an impartial board or other agency, pointing out that Council affiliates "have from time to time made serious complaints to the Board concerning Regional Director Herrick's handling of particular cases" and that the Council has received "no satisfaction from the Board."

KEARNEY, N. J., Aug. 9—Charging continued stalling by management, 16,000 CIO workers at the big Federal Shipbuilding & Drydock Co. struck today to gain contract demands suggested by the Natl. Defense Mediation Board.

The union, Local 16 of the Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, said that the company had rejected recommendations of the Mediation Board to which the workers had already agreed. The strike action was authorized at a membership meeting in Newark on August 3.

Work on a number of naval and commercial vessels was halted by the walkout, but union officials said they would supply a work crew for the launching of the cruiser Atlanta, scheduled for Aug. 9, if the management requested it.

PARLEYS STARTED JUNE 3

Negotiations with the company, which holds close to a half-billion dollars in defense orders, started June 3, with the local presenting demands for a union shop and reclassification of many jobs.

When the parleys reached an impasse, the dispute was sent to the Natl. Defense Mediation Board. That agency recommended adoption of the union shop and establishment of grievance boards to take up the question of reclassification. of work.

FIRM TO BLAME

The management of the Federal company has arrogantly refused to accept our fair and legitimate proposal," a union statement charged.

"In the face of this stiff-necked attitude of the company, we are convinced that they have not shown a real earnest effort to resolve these outstanding differences in the democratic, American way."

Recalling that the union had been "subjected to all manner of provocation" during the negotiations, the statement noted that the strike had been undertaken to "awaken the company to its obligation to the defense effort of this nation and also to this union, which has shown its earnest desire to engage in a collective bargaining program which would insure an uninterrupted and speedy flow of production."

CALLED TO PARLEY

Officials of the union and the company were called to Washington several hours after the strike got under way to confer with OPM Associate Director General Sidney Hillman and other U.S. officials. After the conference, which lasted about an hour, Pres. John Green of the union hurried back to the strike scene, while NDMB officials hinted the dispute might be taken to the White House.

Earlier in the day Green released a statement from his Camden, N.J., office accusing the company of "dollar patriotism." His statement:

"Under the stablization program sponsored by the OPM the government agreed to repay the ship-builders the cost of wage increases granted to the men. In return the union and the employers agreed to settle all differences by mediation and arbitration.

"Federal, however, refused to accept the mediation board's recommendation. Federal is therefore violating its agreement with our government.

'NO RECOURSE'

"There is, therefore, no recourse left to our members but to refuse further work until the government compels Federal to honor its obligation. So far as our members are concerned, they will return to work the minute Federal keeps its solemn promise to abide by the decision of the mediatory and arbitrational bodies set up by the government."

Shipyard union officials recalled that the company had flatly turned down the Mediation Board proposal for the union shop, and would give no approval to a plan for "maintenance of union membership" to prohibit employes belonging to the union from leaving it.

The union also said the company refused to arbitrate the question of reclassifying jobs, as desired by the union. It was pointed out that Federal's stand against arbitration placed at stake the whole east coast shipbuilding stablization plan, which went into effect a few months ago. The plan provided for arbitration of disputed issues.

AFL Sluggers Busy:

CIO Pickets, Organizer Wounded by Attacks

Philadelphia, Aug. 9—A savage attack by AFL thugs caused severe injuries to three CIO union pickets in front of the Lorraine Hotel here.

Roy Grant, one of the members of the CIO Hotel & Restaurant Local Industrial Union, was knocked unconscious during the attack, and was taken to the hospital suffering from possible skull fracture. Martin Coffey, local business agent, also required hospital treatment, while a third union member had several teeth knocked out.

Witnesses charged that the assailants arrived on the scene in the car of an international representative of the AFL hotel workers union, and that one of the thugs was Bobby Burns, ex-pugilist who is now a business agent for the AFL local.

PICKET FOR JOBS

The CIO members were picketing the Lorraine Hotel in protest against their dismissal, in breach of a contract, after the AFL "put the heat" on the management.

Backing up the CIO union, Local 184 of the State, County & Municipal Workers attacked the "scabbing and strikebreaking" of the AFL union, as well as its notorious raiding tactics.

Cleveland, Aug. 9—J. R. Robertson, CIO representative here, was attacked by three plug-uglies who struck him with iron bars and blackjacks as he was going into his home at night, it was reported at CIO headquarters.

CIO leaders believe that the attack on Robertson is part of a campaign of terror being conducted against the CIO by certain AFL agents. Four newly painted homes of members of the CIO United Construction Workers were daubed with mahogany enamel earlier in the week, and other acts of violence have been perpetrated on CIO members.

Robertson who was unable to identify his attackers in the darkness, said he was struck on the head, arms and shoulder, but dodged the blows and escaped serious injury.

A. E. Stevenson, secretary of the Cleveland Industrial Union Council, called the attack a "further effort to try to stop the CIO from organizing."

CIO Wins Illinois Steel Poll

NORTH CHICAGO, Ill., Aug. 9.—Overcoming a slanderous AFL propaganda campaign, the Steel Workers Organizing Committee scored a 2-1 NLRB election victory at the Cyclone Fence Division of the American Steel & Wire Co. here. The company is a subsidiary of U. S. Steel.

Oakley H. Mills, SWOC representative, announced that the CIO affiliate had received 156 votes to 75 for the AFL, and 32 for no union.

AFL's TACTICS

Workers at the division were not covered by the master contract signed by SWOC and U. S. Steel earlier this year. The AFL, hoping to take advantage of the situation, threatened and tried to intimidate the workers, and even suggested a boycott of the company's products.

But their threats failed to swerve the workers from their loyalty to the SWOC.

"The workers in Waukegan and Lake counties are determined that wherever they are challenged they will meet the challenge—and not permit the AFL to organize any plant that should come under the jurisdiction of the CIO," Mills said.

CIO Official Raps Anti-Union Statements

Detroit, Aug. 9—Recent statements by Attorney-General Herbert J. Rushton that strikes against the government amounted to rebellion were sharply criticized by August Scholle, CIO regional director, in a reply issued here.

"This is one instance where a public official shows his complete ignorance of the principles on which the very state for which he is legal advisor is founded," Scholle said.

"A strike of public employes is not, as the Attorney-General claims, a form of rebellion. It is the protest of workers who are held by a group of public officials in a species of slavery that is frankly un-American."

STRIKE UP THE BAND: Led by a CIO band, a parade escorted eight reinstated workers back to their jobs at the Minneapolis Honeywell Heat Regulator Co. after an NLRB victory which carried an award of more than $16,000 in back pay. This sample of union protection has started a boom in the Honeywell drive of the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

Walkout Brings Pay Boost to 800

Camden, N. J., Aug. 9 (FP)—It took just one day for 850 striking fur workers to persuade the John R. Evans Co. to boost its payroll by $160,000 a year.

Negotiations had dragged for eight weeks. The CIO Intl. Fur & Leather Workers proposed arbitration; the company said No. Then the employes walked out.

What amazed company officials was that the union, without consulting them, sent in 40 men to prevent spoilage of $50,000 worth of goods in soak. Strike leaders explained that they preferred to save the money for the general 7½ cent hourly increase.

FREE BOOTS

IFLWU Vice-Pres. Meyer Klig said another important feature of the union shop contract was a provision for free rubber boots, aprons and gloves, which normally cost workers about $15 a year. The union has won this clause in most of its 1941 contracts.

Wage rates will be reopened if the Bureau of Labor Statistics reports an increase of 5% or more in the cost of living.

Workers Kill 'Incentive' Plan

Fairfield, Ala., Aug. 9—Denouncing an incentive plan proposed by the Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Co. as "man-killing, wage-cutting and union busting", Local 2122, Steel Workers Organizing Committee, flatly rejected it at a recent meeting held here.

CIO workers in TCI mills are up in arms over changes made in wages and working conditions under the "incentive plan" which they term "a thinly veiled attempt of the company to get back the ten-cent hourly increase won recently by SWOC", and have instructed their committee to turn it down.

APPOINTED: The United Mine Workers this week announced an organization committee to direct its District 50 and to speed a union drive in the important gas, coke and chemical industry. Shown with UMW Pres. John Lewis are members of the committee: Charles Fell; John J. Mates; John Kmetz; O. E. Gasaway, new president of the district; and Martin Wagner, named to the UMW's international executive board. Not present when the picture was taken was Miss Kathryn Lewis (at left) who was named District 50 Secretary-Treasurer.

Auto Union Zooms Drive In Aircraft

BUFFALO, Aug. 9—Making organization of the aircraft industry a No. 1 task, following achievement of nearly complete unionization of auto plants, the convention of the CIO United Automobile Workers voted to change the union's name in line with its expanded activities.

The new name adopted by the 1,000 delegates attending the convention is "International Union, United Automobile, Aircraft and Agricultural Implement Workers of America (UAW-CIO)."

Meeting in the huge Buffalo Memorial Auditorium, the delegates celebrated a year of unparalleled union progress, which has brought the Ford Motor Co. under a CIO contract, raised average hourly wages to nearly double what they were in 1933, and brought dues-paying membership to a total of 528,413.

Symbolic of the union's victory over the last big holdout of non-unionism was a CIO union label Ford car displayed in the entrance to the auditorium. The brightly uniformed Ford workers 85-piece band added to the color and enthusiasm of the occasion.

The reports of President R. J. Thomas and Secretary-Treasurer George Addes revealed the union in the soundest condition in its history, with many record-breaking achievements to its credit. They warned, however, of the serious dangers of wholesale layoffs as a result of the proposed 50 per cent cut in auto production, unless the union's plans for gradual transference to defense production are adopted.

AIRCRAFT DELEGATES

In his opening speech President Thomas reported that more than 50,000 union aircraft workers were represented at the convention.

The number of plants covered by UAW-CIO contracts has been increased from 491 employing 398,000 workers at the time of last year's convention to a present total of 982 employing more than 700,000 workers, he said.

The union has won every major Labor Board election it has participated in, and "120,000 Ford workers have won for themselves industrial democracy."

Thomas declared that he favored "material aid to Great Britain, Russia and China," but wanted it understood that this was "not an endorsement of the Communist party."

"To further clarify the issue," he added, "I don't want to see any reverting back to the days of Homer Martin, who used to take the position that everyone who disagreed with him was a member of the Communist party."

Thomas predicted the union's organizing drive in the aircraft industry during the coming year would parallel the success of the Ford drive.

CREDENTIALS REPORT

The convention got off to a slow start due to a prolonged debate on the report of the credentials committee, affecting the representation of Allis-Chalmers Local 248 at Milwaukee, where a long and widely publicized strike occurred.

The committee recommended against seating the local's delegates on the grounds that the constitution had been violated by nominations and election taking place at the same meeting instead of a week apart. A minority report recommending seating of the delegates was finally defeated by a roll-call vote of 1243 to 1737.

Following this action, a practically unanimous vote authorized President Thomas to appoint a committee of three to proceed to Milwaukee and conduct a new election of delegates. Thomas named three Detroit delegates, Leon Pody, James Jennings and Charles Bioletti, for this assignment.

The convention reaffirmed the clause in the union's constitution which declares its purpose to be "to unite in one organization, regardless of race, creed, color, political affiliation or nationality, all employes under the jurisdiction of this international union."

MURRAY WIRES

CIO President Murray wired his regrets that confinement to hospital prevented his attendance at the convention.

"The organizational and collective bargaining accomplishments of your union reflect great credit upon its officials, its members and the great CIO movement," Murray wired. "March onward toward the unionization of the great aircraft industry and the eventual establishment of complete collective bargaining relationships with aircraft empolyers."

A committee recommendation to delay the holding of the next convention to April, 1943, was unanimously voted down by the delegates, after a discussion revealed strong rank-and-file sentiment in favor of continuing to hold annual conventions.

Another committee proposal to introduce classifications in the organizing staff into "international representatives, regional representatives and organizers" was also voted down.

Miners To Push District 50 Organizing Drive; Gasaway, Miss Lewis Named To Posts

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9— Appointment of an organizing committee to handle administrative affairs of District 50, United Mine Workers, and to speed its organizing campaigns in the gas, coke and chemical industries was announced this week by UMWA Pres. John L. Lewis, Vice-Pres. Philip Murray and Sec.-Treas. Thomas Kennedy.

Named to the committee were five UMWA officials: O. E. Gasaway, John Kmetz, John J. Mates, Martin Wagner and Miss Kathryn Lewis.

"Mr. O. E. Gasaway will act as presideent of District 50 and Miss Kathryn Lewis will act as secretary-treasurer," the announcement said. "Mr. Martin Wagner will represent District 50 on the International Executive Board. For a temporary period, Mr. John J. Mates will be the acting secretary-treasurer of District 50, pending the return of Miss Kathryn Lewis, who is on leave of absence."

The UMW leaders pointed out that "additional facilities will be furnished District 50 by the International Union to expand its organization work and increase its services to our membership."

"The officers of the International Union," the statement continued, "are gratified at the progress hitherto made by District 50, but are confident that under this new arrangement still greater progress can be made. Each of the new executive officers of District 50 are fully qualified, have had substantial experience and should inspire the full confidence and support of every member of our organization."

To Mediate 'Big Gyp' Walkout

NEWARK, N. J., Aug. 9—A strike of several thousand CIO workers at 17 plants of the U.S. Gypsum Co. was certified this week to the Natl. Defense Mediation Board, following company refusal to meet with representatives of the U. S. Dept. of Labor.

One of the last of the big open shoppers, U. S. Gypsum (it's known as Big Gyp in industry circles) has been organized in recent months by District 50, United Mine Workers of America.

SOUGHT INCREASE

The strike started June 26 when the company turned down union demands for a 10c increase, vacations, and arbitration of grievances. Wages in unionized plants are as low as 52½ cents an hour, while in some of the company's southern properties, the pay scale drops down to 40 cents.

Last year the firm's profits amounted to $7,052,974, an average of almost $900 per employe.

A number of bloody episodes have occurred during the walkout as the company made unsuccessful efforts to import scabs into the plants.

Insurance Agents Vote CIO, 3-1

BOSTON, Aug. 9—Casting a vote for security through unionism, industrial agents of the Boston Mutual Life Insurance Co. today chose by nearly 3-1 the CIO United Office & Professional Workers as their collective bargaining agency.

In a series of NLRB elections throughout Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New Hampshire and Maine, the Boston Mutual employes voted 258 to 71 for Local 41 of the UOPWA. Thirty-three local offices of the company were involved. The Boston Mutual is the second largest industrial life insurance firm in Massachusetts.

RE-CERTIFIED

A week earlier the UOPWA had been re-certified as sole bargaining agency at the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co. in the Greater Boston area. The count, based on a cross-check of union application cards against company records, showed that 375 of the 580 agents were members of the union.

Pres. Lewis Merrill of the UOPWA predicted that the "Boston Mutual victory will encourage further gains and will facilitate the extension of organization to other companies and other states."

The "magnificent victory," he added, "is another important stride in the union's progress toward organization of the insurance industry. Negotiations, scheduled to begin shortly, will bring the benefits of collective bargaining to these agents, and the union is prepared to back up the agents' demands with its full resources."

ALCOA Parleys Break Up

Washington, Aug. 9—Conferences between a union committee headed by Pres. N. A. Zonarich of the Aluminum Workers of America and officials of the Aluminum Co. of America called by the Office of Production Management broke up here this week without any agreement being reached on the union's demand for an end to a wage differential between Alcoa plants in the north and the south.

Negotiations on the issue will be resumed next Tuesday in the company's Pittsburgh offices, Pres. Zonarich announced. The union is asking that the pay rate in southern plants which is around 18 cents lower be brought up to the level of pay in northern plants.

Insurance Agency Signs With CIO

New York, Aug. 9—The largest Insurance Counsellor firm in the U. S. has signed a contract with the CIO, according to an announcement by the Insurance Employes Guild of the United Office and Professional Workers. The contract is also the first in this particular field of insurance.

The contract includes arbitration of wages, paid vacations, a shorter work week, grievance machinery, severance pay and sick leave. Seven workers fired for union activity will be reinstated with back pay.

R. I. CIO Wins State Labor Act

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Aug. 9—CIO unions in Rhode Island attained a major goal in their 1941 program when the Rhode Island Legislature passed an Act creating a State Labor Relations Board.

The act will protect the worker from discrimination in his right to join a union and bargain collectively with the employer, said Joseph Mayor, assistant CIO director for New England.

Adelard Gingras, president of the state CIO council, has received an appointment as labor member of the board. Board members will be paid a maximum of $1,000 a year for 40 days of work. Since Rhode Island is a small state it is expected that part-time personnel may be sufficient.

Fishing Season Open Early; Union Gets Credit

San Francisco, Aug. 9—For the first time in six years, the sardine season here opened August 1, the International Fishermen and Allied Workers stated this week. In previous years the season opened October 1.

"Everyone close to the situation agrees that the union was primarily responsible for this history event," the IFAW said. The agreement under which the fishermen are working calls for a price of $16.50 a ton without deductions of any sort, an increase of $6 over last year's price and an all-time high for the industry.

The union also won many protective clauses in this year's agreement, including a check on the dispatching of boats by a Sardine Pool, and a complete closed shop for all crew members.

With the season starting two months earlier, fishermen expect to have a good chance of exhausting the legal quota of some 200,000 tons for San Francisco plants.

CIO Wins Raises In Alaska

KETCHIKAN, Alaska, Aug. 9—A petition supported by the CIO Industrial Union Council here for a pay increase for all street department employes brought results recently, Orvel Holum, secretary-treasurer of the Council has announced.

A ten-cent hourly raise was granted after the City Council and Mayor heard the petition. The minimum pay was 75 cents an hour before the increase was granted. Time and a half for overtime was also approved.

Ready For The Hook

Protect Your Wages

"Labor is faced with a growing drive to cut wages by taxation, while the cost of living is rising with increasing rapidity," warns Pres. Philip Murray in a letter to all CIO affiliates on the new tax bill.

That is why the CIO has been following all tax proposals so closely and why it has advanced a constructive tax program of its own. And that is also why Pres. Murray is now urging opposition in the Senate to the wage-cutting and other bad features of the new tax bill just passed by the House.

The House bill, Murray points out, "increases the burden on working class incomes." At the same time, while big industrial combinations are reaping enormous profits from war industry, he says, the bill "has failed to establish the kind of excess profits tax, along with high income and estate taxes, which would effectively reach war profits and excessive private fortunes."

The one feature of the House bill which the CIO found praiseworthy—namely the requirement for joint income tax returns for husbands and wives—was cut out of the bill in the House. The adoption of this proposal, which would close a loophole through which many wealthy taxpayers have avoided paying the proper taxes, should be urged.

Other CIO proposals call for repeal of excise and sales taxes that bear upon workers' incomes; raising of income tax exemptions again up to $2,500 for married couples and $1,000 for single persons; and levying of all new taxation on high individual incomes, estates and growing corporation profits—including an effective excess profits tax and higher inheritance and gift taxes.

To protect wages against reduction through taxation, all CIO unions and their members should study the CIO tax program and urge their Senators to embody its suggestions in the new tax bill.

No Further Excuse

When CIO President Murray advanced his Industry Council plan last December, he predicted a number of unfortunate results if planless bungling continued in defense administration.

He pointed to the bottlenecks and delays resulting from the improper allocation of contracts, warning that this would result in unemployment and the unnecessary holding up of production.

Murray predicted that failure to adopt his plan would result in curtailing production of consumers' goods, which in turn would mean layoffs and higher living costs.

The Murray plan, adopted by the CIO as its program, was designed to give labor an equal voice with industry in planning the expansion of defense production, in such a way that idle plants and idle workers might all be put to work without curtailing the production of consumers' goods.

When Murray made his predictions, it could have been argued that some of them might not materialize, that somehow the defense administration might muddle through without adopting the CIO plan and without too dire results.

But now everyone can see that the CIO warnings were only too well founded. Defense production is not expanding as rapidly as it should because of the red tape surrounding the allocation of contracts and their improper distribution.

At the same time production of consumers' goods has been drastically curtailed by priorities, wholesale shutdowns are taking place in the silk industry, and the jobs of tens of thousands of automobile workers are threatened by orders to cut auto production in half.

Not only does this situation result in needless unemployment, when everyone's labor is needed to expand production, but it also means shortages in consumers' goods and serious price increases which will lower American living standards.

Basic to the CIO plan is the idea that labor has so much at stake that it is entitled to real representation in the administration of the defense program; and furthermore, that the country needs labor's brains and its active assistance if any real planning is to be done.

The CIO gets no pleasure in saying, "We told you so," now that Pres. Murray's predictions are coming true, for labor is the chief sufferer. It merely points out that no further excuse can be advanced for the rejection of the CIO plan and for the continued refusal to grant labor proper representation in the planning of the defense program.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

IF you want to rub shoulders with really successful, self-made men and women, the place to go these days is a CIO union convention.

The kind of "successful" men you might meet at an exclusive club or a $25-a-day resort are "made" by the labor of others. But not so the CIO unionists. They have overcome by their own efforts what looked like impossible odds. They have achieved success, not just on an individual basis, but on a mass-production scale.

Visit the convention of the CIO United Automobile Workers, for instance. The city of Buffalo this year welcomed a thousand delegates from that union, representing more than half a million of the country's most successful labor unionists.

There is a definite independence, if not swagger, to these delegates. Through the caps they wear, through brightly emblazoned shirts and other union emblems and uniforms, they tell the whole world they are CIO—and mighty proud of it.

In the convention hall, they are the most vigorously democratic, most vocal and least repressed crowd of free Americans you could hope to meet.

There used to be quite a school of writers who predicted that the conveyor system and other mass-production factory methods would make robots out of human beings. But they reckoned without the CIO.

For through union organization, human nature has to a large extent triumphed over the machine. And the exuberant independence, initiative and assertiveness of these CIO unionists is all the more marked because of the deadening forces of suppression over which they have triumphed

THE rise of the UAW-CIO is one of the most magnificent stories of human achievement ever to be recorded. It is one of the greatest success stories of the CIO—a story of the vision and leadership of John L. Lewis, Philip Murray and the others who founded a new labor movement to do just such jobs as this, and whose unions threw their whole weight behind the infant auto workers' union.

It is a story of the dauntless leadership that rose from the auto workers' own ranks and built one of the world's greatest labor unions where practically no organization existed before.

But it is also, and above all, the story of the hundreds of thousands of auto workers themselves—men and women with the light of freedom in their eyes, who rejected the slavery of company unionism; who defied industrial autocrats with a virtual life-and-death power over their jobs; who were unafraid of company spies and thugs and unfooled by anti-union propaganda; who were willing to strike and sacrifice, if necessary; who overcame disruption and factionalism, and who finally won out against some of the biggest and most anti-labor corporations in the world.

THE amazing achievements of this CIO union are recorded in the reports of Pres. R. J. Thomas and Secretary-Treasurer George Addes.

Dues-paying membership has been increased from a few thousands before the CIO was formed in 1935 to a present total of 528,413.

At the South Bend convention of the UAW in 1936, only a few shops on the outskirts of the industry were reported under union contract. Today the industry is nearly 100% organized, with 982 plants and more than 700,000 workers covered by CIO agreements.

As for benefits won through this organization, the union has raised average hourly wages of automobile workers from 56c in 1933 to slightly more than $1 an hour in May 1941—and since then further increases of from eight to 10c an hour have been won for hundreds of thousands.

In March 1941 the wages of the average automobile worker had been raised by his union to $40.64 for a work week which averaged 41.4 hours.

Besides raising wages and shortening hours, the union has won vacations with pay, seniority rights, more job security, fairer handling of grievances and other benefits too numerous to list.

All of this success has been achieved in less than half a dozen years against tremendous odds. The auto industry used to be one of the most spy-ridden and autocratic in the country. Its big employers, with tremendous financial resources and political power, boasted they never would deal with a labor union.

IT is fitting that the task of organizing the fastest-growing and most modern of the new American industries, the aircraft industry, should be assigned to this fastest-growing of the modern CIO unions.

Employment in the aircraft industry is expected to increase from 204,000 in October 1940 to 600,000 in October 1941. The Aircraft Division of the UAW-CIO has already a solid base and many achievements to its credit. Now watch it grow!

TEXTILE UNION PLAN:

Rieve Urges Jobs for Hosiery, Silk Workers Hit By Embargo

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9—A program for the immediate relief of 175,000 textile and hosiery workers threatened with loss of their jobs by the silk embargo, was presented by Emil Rieve, president of the Textile Workers Union, at a conference called by the Office of Production Management at his request.

The conference was attended by representatives from labor, government and the rayon industry.

Rieve's proposals, based on making the United States self-sufficient in synthetic fibers, and entirely independent of Japanese silk, call for:

1 Putting into immediate operation all idle equipment for production of synthetic yarns.

2 Government assistance for individual companies' expansion.

3 Immediate expansion of facilities for nylon production.

4 Granting of priorities to producers of synthetic yarn and producers of machinery for making this yarn.

LIMIT WORK HOURS

5 Limiting the working hours to a five-day week, eight-hour day.

6 An immediate inventor of all rayon yarns now in hands of processors.

7 A stoppage of the manufacture of hosiery equipment and diversion of that material to manufacture of synthetic yarn producing equipment.

QUICK RELIEF

TWU Pres. Rieve also made the following specific proposals for the immediate relief of workers thrown out of their jobs by the silk embargo:

Sufficient funds should be made available at once to guarantee these workers the maintenance of their status pending development of plans on their behalf. They would be given preference in all new hiring in their areas.

Defense plants and projects should be constructed and developed to absorb these jobless workers. Sub-contracts should be allocated wherever possible to the machine shops of idle silk mills.

Re-training programs at good wages should be started to prepare them for new defense industries, and the government should finance their transportation from silk areas to areas of defense production where they are needed.

MUST BE PROTECTED

"These men and women must be cared for," Rieve declared. "The union is in full accord with the national foreign policy, and insists that the workers affected thereby should be fully protected.

"Furthermore this pool of skilled labor must be utilized. At a time when more labor is needed in defense production, the sudden supply must not be allowed to stagnate."

ISSUE WITH McNUTT

Rieve took exception to a statement made by Administrator Paul V. McNutt of the Federal Security Agency that unemployment compensation in every state "will help these workers to bridge the gap between the old job and the new one with a minimum of hardship."

Asserting that unemployment compensation is not sufficient, Rieve declared that the wages of the silk workers "must be maintained at their accustomed levels." The unemployment insurance system was not intended, Rieve said, "to meet a situation involving such sudden and wholesale unemployment. The issue is not one of unemployment caused by industrial conditions.

"In the interests of national defense we have been compelled to shut down plants almost over night. Until the workers in these plants have been able to resume their normal jobs or secure others, all of those engaged in the industry should be paid the full amount they were receiving before the emergencies of defense compelled the adoption of policies threatening their jobs."

Hearings Due On Discrimination Measure

Washington, Aug. 9—Further hearings on the anti-discrimination bill sponsored by Rep. Marcantonio of N. Y. will be held very soon, it was learned here. Earlier hearings, which lasted two days, brought statements and testimony favoring the bill from the CIO, the Natl. Negro Congress, and other organizations.

CIO backing of the bill was expressed in a statement by John T. Jones, CIO legislative representative and director of Labor's Non-Partisan League, who declared it was essential to national unity that the bill be passed.

The bill provides heavy fines for government contractors who discriminate against workers seeking jobs on grounds of race, religion, or national origin.

Toland's At It Again

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9—Edmund Toland, who was chief braintruster for the Smith smear committee that tried to bust the Wagner Act for two years, has got a new job—counsel for a struck laundry plant here, where CIO workers walked out in protest against starvation wages.

Toland's new fink job goes along with his post on the Vinson committee set-up ostensibly to probe national defense, in reality to attack the labor movement. Representative Vinson, who comes from the polltax state of Georgia, put his name to the Vinson bill that would outlaw strikes and unions.

Incidentally, Toland's new employers have just had a contempt of court charge threatened for their refusal to obey a recent National Labor Relations Board order.

Seamen Ask Second Term For Smith

New York, Aug. 9—The National Maritime Union today asked Pres. Roosevelt to reappoint Edwin S. Smith to another term as member of the National Labor Relations Board.

Writing shortly after receipt of a letter from CIO Pres. Philip Murray which urged all affiliates to back a movement for Smith's reappointment, NMU Sec. Ferdinand Smith paid tribute to the "impartiality" and "fairness" of the NLRB member's decisions.

"He has always attempted, in our opinion, to carry out the spirit as well as the letter of the Wagner Act," the NMU official wrote.

"Recent developments within the NLRB make it absolutely imperative that Edwin S. Smith remain a member. At present, his is the only authentic voice of the true spirit of the Wagner Act."

Ask Overtime For Uncle Sam's Employes

Washington, Aug. 9—Prompt passage of a bill (HR 5639) providing overtime pay for government workers was urged by its sponsor, Rep. Coffee of Washington state, at a mass meeting called by the United Federal Workers, CIO, here.

The bill provides for time and a half for overtime during the week, double time for Sundays and a 15 per cent bonus for night work. At the present time Federal employes get no compensation at all for overtime work, though a great amount of overtime is being put in due to defense needs.

The UFWA also announced a victory for a further reduction of compulsory withholding of pay for "quarters, subsistence and laundry" now in practice in some 350 U. S. institutions. These deductions, made whether or not the employe uses the housing, the laundry or eats the food, have been a major grievance for several years.

Quarry Union Signs Pacts

Barre, Vt., Aug. 9—Six contracts covering work in Massachusetts and West Virginia were signed by the United Stone and Allied Products Workers, CIO, this week.

Five of the contracts cover stone companies in Fairmont, W. Va., and were won following a lockout that began May 1 and lasted through July. These agreements contain a five per cent wage raise, the check-off and closed shop, seniority and other improvements.

The sixth agreement, signed at Cape Ann, Mass., contains the union shop, a five cent increase, a 55 cent minimum, and other gains.

Textile Union Gets 2-1 Lead In Election

New York, Aug. 9—Culminating a bitter two-year feud with an AFL union, the CIO Textile Workers Union this week won a Labor Board election at the A. D. Juillard Co., Stottsville, N. Y., by a 2-1 margin.

TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve announced that the CIO union had gained 426 votes to only 228 for the AFL and 14 for neither. In 1939, the Textile Workers Union won an election at the plant by a majority of only 11 votes.

TO SEEK PACT

The union will proceed immediately to negotiate a new contract with the company, Robert W. Gaffney, local TWUA representative, declared.

Another plant of the company—the Atlantic Mills in Providence, R. I.—is under contract with the AFL, but the large weaving department and several other divisions are represented by the CIO textile union.

A precedent-breaking court decision was recently handed down in a conflict between the two unions at the Providence mill, Rieve said. A jury awarded 16 CIO members damages of $20,600 against the AFL union and its heads for "maliciously procuring" the discharge of the 16 men. They were employes in the maintenance department who had resigned from the AFL to join the CIO union.

STAINLESS STEEL...

in the Automotive Industry

• The major use of stainless steels in the automotive industry is for trim which will not rust or tarnish. This metal is also used to a large extent for certain parts, such as pump shafts and valves, which are subject to corrosion and heat.

Stainless steel meets these requirements perfectly because it is easy to keep clean and bright. It resists hot corrosive fumes and gases. Its smooth hard surface resists denting and scratching, and can be washed as easily as glass. In addition, its deep drawing and forming properties make it a suitable material from the point of view of the manufacturer.

Efficient, trouble-free performance and long life may be confidently expected from products made of stainless steel.

Metal Miners Hear Quill Stress Need For United Action

JOPLIN, Mo., Aug. 9—Organization and independent political action are the answer to problems besetting the common people of the U. S. today, Michael Quill, president of the Transport Workers Union, told the cheering delegates at the 38th annual convention of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers union being held here.

"If you are to go back to San Francisco in 1944, if your international union is to become more and more powerful; if you are to do justice to the men and women who have died struggling to build up the union; if you are to keep the memory of Joe Hill and Frank Little, you must between now and your next convention fulfill that pledge of 100,000 members for your international by the 1944 convention."

Quill was followed on the speaker's platform by Powers Hapgood, CIO representative, who spoke in the absence of Allan S. Haywood, national director of organization, who was unable to attend.

Quill spoke movingly of the misery he had seen in the tri-state area, especially in the zinc mines of Oklahoma, where the union has been fighting for organization for several years, meeting the hard-fisted opposition of the employers and the outright treachery of the AFL.

"Last night we went out to a gold mine, a virtual gold mine—a lead and zinc mine out here several miles. I forget the name of the place, but I never could forget the faces of the people; and, by God, if there is a just need to establish democracy in any land, there is need in Oklahoma.

"It is a small town, and there we saw what the monopolies have done to the people. There in the lead and zinc mines we noticed what they had done; the dumps, or whatever you call it—the chat piles. In order to make their profits they have dragged human beings down to level of jungle slaves.

POLITICAL ACTION

The means of ending these horrible conditions lie in the hands of the common people, Quill said, in calling on the delegates to give leadership in the struggle for social and economic progress through independent political action.

"Your local city, state and federal governments are not ready, and never will be ready until you have a party composed of the working people of this country; until you will elect men and women who will make laws for all the people and not for the Natl. Association of Manufacturers; until such time as we are awakened politically we will not have achieved the first step of our goal."

Quill warned the delegates that unity and determination were endangered when red-baiting was used to smear progressive leadership, pointing out that red-baiting was a favorite weapon of the employers and their agents. He cited the bus driver's strike in New York, when the Transport Workers Union was denounced in the employers' newspapers as "communist" for demanding 90 cents an hour for bus drivers instead of 48 and for demanding two weeks paid vacation.

In closing his hour-long speech, Quill paid tribute to the membership of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers Union and to its president, Reid Robinson. Said Quill:

"I say to you, President Robinson, members and delegates, you are doing an excellent job, a job that we are proud of. And the delegates of your organization should be proud of the fact that out of the 44 internationals, yours was picked as one of the six to give to the CIO national movement one of the ablest vice-presidents, Reid Robinson. This is an achievement everyone of you should be proud of."

CAMPAIGNING: Members of the American Newspaper Guild on the editorial staff of the New York Times got together for a bit of last minute campaigning before the recent NLRB election. The CIO won by a 3-2 margin, will start contract negotiations soon.

Canadian Soap Workers Swing to CIO

Toronto, Ont., Aug. 9.—Employes of Lever Bros., one of the largest soap manufacturers in the U. S. and Canada, today had voted to join the CIO Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee.

In a referendum conducted among members of an independent union at the local plant, the PWOC affiliation move won by 300 to 50. F. W. Dowling, PWOC field representative, said immediate steps would be taken to negotiate a contract for the new CIO members.

Urges Labor Back Bill To Save Forests

Philadelphia, Aug. 9—Labor support for the Pierce Bill (H.R. 3849) which provides a democratic form of regulation over private forests, was urged today by Pres. Earl J. Rogers of Local 9, United Federal Workers of America.

"The progress of destructive logging from the eastern seaboard to the western seaboard has taken place in less than one hundred years," he recalled. "Under the 'cut out and get out' policy pursued by most lumber companies, the forests were destroyed and the lands denuded of protective cover.

"Under proper management these waste lands would have continued to produce timber and provide work in the forest, in mills and in construction activities. Tourists, sportsmen and recreationists would secure healthful recreation and provide additional income to local residents."

Electrical Workers Win Million

Evansville, Ind., Aug. 9—A cool million dollars in wage increases today made the summer heat more bearable for employes of four electrical manufacturing firms in this city.

The CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers said that negotiations with the Servel, Sunbeam, Faultless Caster and Hoosier Lamp & Stamping Cos., had ended successfully with the granting of wage boosts.

House Tax Bill Soaks Poor, Goes Light on Wealthy

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9—The House of Representatives passed a tax bill this week by a vote of 369 to 40, after gagging debate on amendments and defeating the clause making joint returns by married couples obligatory. The bill now goes to the Senate, where it is expected to be taken up in the next few weeks.

The House bill, earlier described by Pres. Murray as increasing "the burden on working class incomes," also left large loopholes in the excess profits and estate and gift tax sections and made no attempt to fill in a $300,000,000 hole left by the elimination of the joint return. This clause, which would have prevented wealthy families from taking advantage of double exemptions, was stricken out of the bill as originally proposed.

URGES PROTEST

Pres. Murray's description of the bill, contained in a letter and an anlysis sent to all CIO affiliates, urged members to write and wire their Senators demanding a sound, progressive tax program to place the burden of financing defense and other government functions on those best able to meet it.

"The bill increases the burden on working class incomes," Murray wrote. "At the same time it has failed to establish the kind of excess profits tax, along with high income and estate taxes which would effectively reach war profits and excessive private fortunes."

Murray also emphasized the danger of more direct forms of taxation on the workers, pointing out that the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee in charge of the bill had openly declared the committee was planning a general sales tax for next year and an extension of the income tax to all incomes, no matter how small.

"Thus labor is faced with a growing drive to cut wages by taxation, while the cost of living is rising with increasing rapidity," Murray wrote. "At the same time, the most powerful industrial combinations of the country are successfully reaping enormour profits from war industry."

The analysis of the tax bill also contained an outline of CIO proposals made by him in earlier testimony before the House Ways and Means Committee. This program is based on three main points:

1. Repeal of all excise and sales taxes which bear on the goods workers buy, and no additional sales taxes to be enacted.

2. Income tax exemptions to be returned to $2,500 a year for married couples and $1,000 for individuals, with no taxes below that level.

3. All new revenue to be collected from increased taxes on big incomes, estates and corporation profits, plus extension of taxes to reach excess profits, undivided profits, tax-exempt securities and inheritances.

WAGE CUTS

"The chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee has stated that the committee proposes to lower the income exemptions to such an extent that everyone will have to pay income taxes. This proposal will join that for a general sales tax in the consideration of the next bill. The purpose of both these proposals will be to cut into the income of the working people."

Slight increases in the excess profits tax in the bill are more apparent than real, the CIO analysis pointed out, since it allows corporations to deduct excess profits taxes from their income in figuring normal tax, rather than deducting normal tax from income in figuring the excess profits tax. This amounts to "a statistical transfer of over $500,000,000 from normal taxes to excess profits taxes and does not represent a real increase in corporate taxation."

In addition, the bill keeps the allowance of so-called "normal profits," which permits many corporations to escape excess profits taxes altogether. Leaving undivided profits free of taxation is still another loophole, since corporations can pile up "reserves" to any point they like in order to avoid taxes.

Jalopy Policy

LANSING, Mich., Aug. 9—(FP)—A 1904 Reo is being hauled around town to publicize a CIO strike against the Lawrence Bakery.

On it is a sign saying that the company's wage policy dates back to the year the old jalopy was made.

New Textile Contract Includes Preferential Health Insurance Plan

NEW YORK CITY, Aug. 9—A preferential health insurance plan for union members has been included in a contract signed between the Textile Workers Union of America and the Industrial Rayon Corp. covering the company's plant in Covington, Va., TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve announced this week. This is the first agreement in the textile industry to provide such a plan.

The contract which covers 1100 workers, is the first signed by Industrial Rayon with a union, although the TWUA and the company have bargained collectively since 1937.

TWO-THIRDS OF PAY

The plan provides that only union members in good standing shall be eligible for health benefits which shall be two-thirds of their pay for a maximum of 12 weeks a year in case of sickness. Benefits will start after four days of illness.

Both the union and the company will contribute toward the fund, the union paying 10 cents for each member, and the company paying whatever additional funds may be necessary.

Other terms of the contract call for an hourly wage increase of 3 cents for men and 2 cents for women, arranged in May; a week's vacation with pay; time and a half on holidays; a minimum wage of 40 cents an hour; full pay for all time lost due to sore eyes from fumes; seniority rights and re-employment for drafted or enlisted men.

The administration of the health insurance fund will rest in the hands of a committee of five, of whom three must be officers of the union, and two appointed by the company.

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

Two great unions of the CIO are meeting this week, to report progress made during the time between conventions and map out new drives for even greater gains in the future.

Both these unions have plenty to be proud of in the record. The United Automobile Workers, meeting this week in Buffalo, N. Y., can report a 93 per cent membership gain, bringing them to a paidup membership of over 500,000, a doubling of the number of workers under contract to over 700,000, and victory in every major Labor Relations Board election held during the past year.

The Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers Union, meeting in Joplin, Mo., has a similar record of progress to report. This union's rate of growth, reported at three times as great as during the past year in contracts won, Labor Board election victories, and great benefits achieved its members mark it as one of the most successful affiliates of the CIO.

UNDER THE BANNER OF CIO

These two unions are living examples of the strength and validity of CIO principles of organization. Both of them have shown that industrial unionism, vigorously and consistently applied, can meet all obstacles.

The UAW-CIO can boast of an agreement with the Ford Motor Co. that mops up the last stronghold of the open shop in an industry that was open shop from its very beginnings. The Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers has dealt with employers formerly just as tough as Ford, and has brought them to sign agreements with the CIO.

Like every other CIO union, these two affiliates have had plenty of opposition to battle within their progress toward organization of the unorganized. The Auto Workers have had to deal with some of the biggest money powers in the nation—General Motors, Chrysler, Ford—with all the resources that these great monopolies have at their disposal. The Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers have had other tough setups to cope with in their campaigns.

I have had the honor to address these two great unions at their conventions during the week. I can report to all readers of THE CIO NEWS that far from resting on their achievements, these two unions have pledged themselves to go ahead to still greater gains in the immediate future.

This pledge—to keep on with the plan of organizing in industrial unions until all workers have the protection that only CIO can bring—is the best guarantee that democracy and progress will continue to live and flourish in our country.

Our enemies, both abroad and here in our own country, should watch these CIO conventions. They would see that nothing can stop our organization, that all their efforts to block the CIO are doomed to failure.

NEWS FROM OTHER FRONTS

Substantial progress in organizing newspaper workers is reported by the American Newspaper Guild. Outstanding is the Labor Board victory in the election among employes of The New York Times, where the workers chose the ANG as their bargaining unit after a hard fought election campaign.

The American Newspaper Guild also reports good progress in organizing newspaper workers in Baltimore, where a strong unit has been built up in a short space of time through the system of resident organizers recently set up by the Guild. Successes in Baltimore are shown by the action of the owners of the Sunpapers in granting unsolicited raises—a familiar trick that employers use in the hope of staving off further organization.

MANY UNION GAINS

Utility Workers Field Representative Leroy Winwood reports winning an election held at the Philo Power plant of the Ohio Power Co. . . . Paul R. Christopher, CIO field representative in Tennessee reports a smashing victory at Jefferson City, where the workers at the Universal Exploration Co. voted 171 to 13 for the CIO Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers. . . . George DeNucci, Ohio CIO field representative, reports two more victories, one at the Boyertown Casket Co., Columbus, where the workers voted 35 to 11 for the SWOC, and another at Mount Vernon, where workers voted 177 for the CIO Paper, Novelty and Toy Workers to 115 for an "independent."

Representative DeNucci adds to this report another outstanding victory in which the AFL was for all practical purposes blanked out in an election at the Heller File Co. in Newcomerstown, where the SWOC won 801 votes to the AFL's 20. This was won despite the fact that the AFL was in the field there for more than five years—or perhaps because of that fact.

Union To Continue Fight For Fired U. S. Employe, Despite Perkins' Decision

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9—Continuation of the fight to reinstate Helen Miller, CIO United Federal Workers member arbitrarily fired by Labor Dept. Secretary Frances Perkins, was pledged by UFWA leaders here, despite the Secretary's statement that "my decision is made and it is irrevocable."

Miss Miller, who was dismissed "with prejudice" and was refused an open hearing before an impartial board as requested by the union, has the support of the entire CIO in Washington, which has been enlisting support from CIO affiliates throughout the country.

Secretary Perkins has said that "there can be no collective bargaining in the government service" in a brief interview with UFWA officials, who charged that she is seeking "to smash the union in the government by her fierce, dictatorial attack on one of its most effective leaders."

OTHER AGENCIES

Other government agencies, such as the Dept. of Agriculture, allow for impartial hearings in such cases, the UFWA pointed out, and President Roosevelt has stated that collective bargaining can and does exist in the government service.

Miss Miller has categorically denied charge of "following the party line" on which her dismissal was based. These charges, Secretary Perkins said in a brief supporting the dismissal, were "necessarily" based on opinion.

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9—Details of a desperate effort by American newspaper publishers to place severe restrictions on radio broadcasting of news, despite a recognized and widespread demand by the public, were brought to light here through documents entered into the record at the Federal Communications Commission's recent hearings on newspaper ownership of radio stations.

The campaign reached its climax late in 1933 when two major networks, the three largest newspaper wire services and the American Newspaper Publishers Association agreed to limit radio news broadcasts to two five-minute periods a day, sent out on the airways at times when they would offer minimum competition to the newspapers.

Throughout 1934 the publishers managed to limit news broadcasts on most of the nation's stations to the watered-down bulletins of their subsidiary organization, the Press Radio Bureau. But by the end of the year an independent news service—Transradio Press—had made so much progress in supplying news to stations that the monopoly effort broke down.

In 1935 United Press and International News Service commenced selling their bulletins to stations for commercial programs, and last year the cooperatively-owned Associated Press took similar action.

PUBLISHERS CYNICAL

Minutes of the executive committee of the Press Radio Bureau, and the annual reports of the Publisher Association's radio committee show a cynical disregard of the public's interest in the news of the world.

Similarly, in the privacy of the committee hearings, the publishers admitted the power of advertisers over the press—an influence which they strenuously deny in public.

POWER COMPLEX

An interesting sidelight on the publishers' power complex was the constant reference throughout the minutes to Transradio Press as an "outlaw," though its only crime was that of business competition, a doctrine to which the newspapers have paid allegiance in thousands of editorials.

To enforce its ban against use of Transradio news broadcasts, the publishers association threatened to refuse space to list the programs of offending stations. But occasionally, as in the case of WOR, Newark, N.J.—which carried frequent news programs—this threat broke down.

STORE HAD INFLUENCE

The reason was stated bluntly by Joseph Connolly of Intl. News Service:

"The New York newspapers continued to print the programs of WOR, which ignores this agreement, and they continue to print the publicity of WOR. It is pointed out that there is an embarrassment in this particular situation, because WOR is owned by Macy's (largest New York department store). . . .

"The same is true in Boston, where the Sheppard stores (Yankee network) ignored the Press Radio Bureau and are chiefly responsible for the support of the new radio news gathering enterprise."

NO BETTER SERVICE

The Hearst executive admitted that "the suggestion of giving a better news service, so that WOR would drop its present service, may be the solution." He hastened to add, however, that "this would not accomplish the aim of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, which is to protect the sale of newspapers."

In order to carry out this aim, the Press Radio Bureau's morning broadcast could go out no earlier than 9:30 a. m. (in order not to compete with the morning papers) and no earlier than 9:00 p. m. (in order to protect the afternoon papers).

That led to difficulties for the commentators, who were prevented from discussing news events until the Press Radio Bureau had announced them. Since the commentators usually spoke around dinner time, they were frequently prevented from discussing even Presidential messages to Congress until the following day!

'TALKS TOO MUCH!'

One such situation developed in March, 1934:

"Mr. Mason (of Natl. Broadcasting Co.) told the committee of meeting H. V. Kaltenborn, a CBS commentator, on the platform of the Union Station in Washington. Mr. Kaltenborn was on his way, Mr. Mason said, to protest against the restrictions of news and the fact that he could not comment on an important Presidential message . . . Mr. Mason thought that CBS should intercede with Mr. Kaltenborn and persuade him not to do so much talking."

PUBLIC WANTED NEWS

In setting up the monopoly apparatus the newspaper owners met what they admitted were highly complex factors. Thus, the publishers committee reported early in 1934 with some horror that it had to deal with "a large listening public accustomed to some form of news broadcast, which had been led to believe that it was entitled to the news over the air."

Obviously outraged, the publishers noted that "the practice of broadcasting news promiscuously had been carried to the point where the listening public at almost any hour of the day or night could find some station which was broadcasting news."

PUBLISHERS FAVORED BAN

A year earlier, at the Publishers Assn. 1933 convention, the "public-be-damned" attitude was even more candidly expressed.

"With the listeners in favor of a continuation of the broadcasting of news, and with a large proportion of the publishers of the United States in favor of a ban on news broadcasts, but vested with no power to enforce such action in its entirety, the publishers are confronted with a problem of no mean proportion," the radio committee reported.

"It therefore becomes the duty of the Committee to point out the dangers of an attempt on the part of the newspapers to deny the public all broadcasts of news and to make certain recommendations for the consideration of the publishers. . ."

The committee report sought to develop a contrast between the allegedly "pure" news of the papers and the "unreliable news sources" of the radio, and dwelt heavily on the danger of commercially sponsored news programs. But a year later United Press and Int. News Service, fearing the continued growth of the "outlaw" Transradio, changed its policy and sold its news releases to the stations for use in commercial programs.

Support UMWA

New York, Aug. 9—Support for the strikers at the U. S. Gypsum Co.'s 17 plants throughout the U. S. was announced by the Greater New York Industrial Union Council. The Council called for mass picketing in front of the Staten Island plant of the company.

Rubber Workers Negotiate

Cumberland, Md., Aug. 9—Negotiations for a contract with the Kelly-Springfield plant management are under way, Local 26, United Rubber Workers, reported here.

Adopting the slogan "thirty days the limit" as the concluding period in which a signed contract was to be negotiated, union representative declared that if at the end of this time an agreement had not been reached, "any action to be taken will be taken on a national basis." Kelly-Springfield is one of the Goodyear plants.

Local 26 officers reported a steady gain in membership since negotiations opened.

'LITTLE STEEL' UNION LEADERS TO MEET

'Important Policies' On Agenda

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 9—The Steel Workers Organizing Committee today announced that a meeting of all local union presidents at plants of Republic Steel Corp., Inland Steel Co., Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co., and Bethlehem Steel Corp., would be held in Pittsburgh, August 14.

David J. McDonald, SWOC secretary-treasurer, estimated that approximately 65 local union presidents from mills throughout the nation would be present. In addition, SWOC sub-district directors and field representatives supervising the "Little Steel" locals, will be present. The meeting will probably last for two days.

In sending out the call for the meeting, McDonald declared that "policies of great importance must be outlined at this meeting."

REPRESENT 150,000

The local presidents and SWOC leaders will represent approximately 150,000 steel workers at the various plants, enrolled in 38 locals at Republic, seven locals at Youngstown Sheet & Tube mills; four Inland Steel locals, and 16 locals at Bethlehem Steel mills.

McDonald pointed out that the "policies of great importance" to be planned during the conference would deal with recent developments in the "Little Steel" segment of the industry—the last major section of Steel not yet under SWOC contract.

These developments in "Little Steel" include agreements by Bethlehem, Sheet & Tube and Republic Steel to negotiate and sign SWOC contracts after the steel union can prove a majority membership.

WON ELECTIONS

The SWOC already has won Labor Board elections at six plants of Bethlehem Steel, in Lackawanna, N. Y.; Johnstown, Leetsdale and Rankin, Pa.; and two mills in Los Angeles. Elections at other plants may be held in the near future.

Republic Steel and Youngstown Sheet & Tube have signed stipulations with the SWOC, negotiated through the Labor Board, under which the companies agreed to sign a union contract to cover all plants where the steel union can prove a majority membership. The majority will be established through a cross-check of union membership records and company payroll records.

Both Republic and Sheet & Tube also agreed to settle all Labor Board cases under the stipulations.

McDonald said regional SWOC directors, including Clinton S. Golden, northwestern region; Van A. Bittner and John Doherty, midwestern region; William Mitch and Noel R. Beddow, southern region, and General Counsel Lee Pressman, will be present.

MESSAGE TO DOWN UNDER: Reactionaries in the U. S. would like to send Harry Bridges, head of the longshoremen's union, back to his native Australia, but American seamen think they could use a few more Australian leaders. At least, that's the tenor of this message, inscribed on the side of the S.S. Yomachichi as she sailed for "down under" a few days ago.

Typical!

ROUYN, Quebec, Aug. 9—Organization of 5,000 gold miners of northern Ontario camps into the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers has finally spurred the AFL into seeming activity in this adjacent gold mining area.

Opening an organizational meeting here last week, the AFL representative was introduced to the workers by the president of the local chamber of commerce.

Living up to his introduction, the AFL organizer did not promise that the miners would achieve wage increases under the AFL banner!

'Chutists Can Drop In CIO 'Chutes

Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 9 (FP)—If they have time to think about it, American or British parachutists will know that they're dropping earthwards in union-made 'chutes from the Irving Air Chute Co.

Faced with a threatened strike, the firm signed a contract with the CIO United Automobile Workers providing wage increases from 25% to 30% and vacations. New basic scales are 50c for women and 65c for men.

The UAW organized the plant after women machine operators staged a temporary sitdown in protest over low wages and the discriminatory firing of a unionist.

Canadian Steel Workers March Back To Jobs In Victory Parade

TORONTO, Ont., Aug. 9—Two thousand workers in National Steel Car plant at Hamilton marched in a SWOC victory parade last week after their week-long strike compelled the Canadian Government to agree to live up to its Order-in-council 2685 setting out that industries should bargain with genuine unions.

SWOC won its first triumph last April when the Government placed a controller in charge of the plant who immediately reinstated the union president.

The controller, a business man with a reputation for uninon-busting, refusesd to negotiate with a committee of SWOC officials. He finally agreed to this during the strike and then refused to go any further, declaring that the Governmen could not sign an agreement with the union.

WILL NEGOTIATE

A hurried trip to Ottawa and a conference with Prime Minister King and Labor Minister McLarty brought assurance that representatives of the department of labor and munitions would be in Hamilton this week to negotiate a contract. King told C. H. Millard, SWOC executive director, that he didn't know about the situation until he received the SWOC brief prior to the conference.

Shortly after the strike began, soldiers of a trade school, away from barracks after hours, jostled with pickets, who retired rather than aggravate the situation. The unexplained absence of the soldiers at midnight is now being investigated after condemnation by the commanding officer.

The other most significant news on the Canadian labor scene this week was the passing of an Order-in-council allowing the use of the army "to prevent or suppress riots, disturbances of the peace and other actions likely to impede or obstruct the production or delivery of munitions or supplies." This measure expressly exempts "a strike or peaceful picketing" but it was put into effect and used at a work stoppage at a giant aluminum plant at Arvida, Quebec, news of which was surpressesd for five days.

A more favorable sign was the negotiation of a six-cent hourly wage increase for 1,000 members of the Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilders at Halifax, N. S. Workers also received a retroactive "cost of living bonus" totalling $60.

Several thousand Canadian autoworkers, members of the UAWA, are faced with loss of jobs, at least temporarily, by action taken this week to reduce production of domestic cars to 44 per cent. The curtailment is much more abrupt than in the U. S. and no consultations were held with trade union representatives before this drastic step was taken.

Must Issue Passes

New York—(FP)—Steamship companies must grant union delegates passes to board ships. So ruled the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals in upholding an NLRB order directing the Cities Service Oil Co., Pure Oil Co. and Texas Oil Co. to issue passes to delegates of the CIO National Maritime Union.

Union Asks Removal Of Southern Postmaster For Keeping Blacklist

NEW YORK, Aug. 9—Removal of J. G. Thomas, the Charleston, S C., postmaster who started a blacklist of residents getting the Natl. Maritime Union paper, The Pilot, and two others through the mails was demanded by the NMU in a letter to the Postmaster General and to President Roosevelt.

Thomas ordered postoffice clerks to keep a list of names of all people receiving The Pilot, the Southern News-Almanac and the Daily Worker, instructing them to keep the list confidential and that "under no circumstances should the addressees be advised that this list of subscribers has been recorded."

GESTAPO ACTION

"If betrayal of confidential postoffice information isn't a violation of the law, it certainly is a violation of the spirit of American democracy," the NMU said. "Here, on the one hand, is the U. S. Government pledged to the defeat of fascism in Europe and, on the other hand, government officials carrying on fascist activities in this country.

"Spying on our readers by postoffice employes is an insult to the membership of the NMU and a direct threat to the rights of American citizens.

"We cannot believe that the activities of Mr. Thomas, or those outside elements for which he may be operating, have the approval of his superiors. These activities are comparable only to those of the Nazi Gestapo."

Volunteers Aid N. Y. CIO Drive

NEW YORK, Aug. 9—Some 100 volunteer organizers wearing big red white and blue buttons urging letter-shop employes to "Join the CIO" scattered through the city this week in the opening of a drive to improve working conditions in one of the largest unorganized industries in New York—direct mail advertising.

The drive is being conducted by the United Office & Professional Workers, as part of a national organizing campaign in the letter-shop field. "We will not rest until every employe in the direct mail advertising industry enjoys the protection of a CIO contract," UOPWA Pres. Lewis Merrill said in announcing the drive.

There are more than 20,000 employes in the industry in New York City where the main effort of the national campaign is being concentrated.

The union recently signed contracts with R. L. Polk & Co., covering 1700 employes in New York and Detroit. The terms provide vastly improved working conditions for the "envelope stuffers", giving them such things as paid vacations for the first time.

Demand Transit Poll in L. A.

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 9—A drive to secure at least 100,000 signatures of Los Angeles residents to a petition demanding an impartial election among employes of the L. A. Railway and L. A. Motor Coach systems to determine the collective bargaining agency was being conducted by the Los Angeles Industrial Union Council this week.

The petition campaign seeks to offset a threatened lockout of transit company workers by the companies, which have signed a backdoor contract with a company union and are now attempting to swing this organization into the AFL Amalgamated Association of Street Carmen.

Michael J. Quill, international president of the Transport Workers' Union, is in charge of the campaign of Local 156, TWU, which claims a majority of the transit workers, who are signing CIO pledge cards by the thousands.

THREATEN STRIKE

In spite of public demonstrations and a unanimous vote at a transit workers' mass meeting authorizing a strike, if necessary, the companies still refuse to consent to an election. Four federal conciliators, however, are attempting to secure the election, and public pressure of all sorts is being brought on the companies in an effort to secure a peaceful solution to the controversy.

Other CIO developments here:

After two previous CIO organizing attempts had failed, 900 workers at the National Supply Company, Torrance, voted by better than two and a half to one for Local 128 of the Oil Workers.

A one-day work stoppage by Cleaners and Dyers Local 268, ACWA, brought a 10 per cent wage increase and a six-hour reduction in the work week for 600 workers in 20 wholesale cleaning and dyeing shops.

CIO WINS REPUBLIC STEEL "POLL"

Auto Union Sets Million Member Goal

AUTO WORKERS CONVENE:

Scene at the huge Memorial Auditorium in Buffalo, N. Y., as the CIO United Automobile, Aircraft & Agricultural Implement Workers met for their sixth annual convention. Delegates heard reports of unprecedented progress during the past year, mapped plans for further campaigns in the months ahead. (STORY ON PAGE SIX).

Members of the CIO industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, shown as they formed a giant picket line around the plant of the Federal Shipbuilding Corp. at Kearny, N. J. CIO is asking governmental action against the U. S. Steel subsidiary, which gave the cold shoulder to union demands.

Teamsters Win Strike

Uniontown, Pa., Aug. 16—Strike action by the CIO United Construction Workers Organizing Committee today won 30 per cent wage boosts and other union demands for several thousand drivers who haul timber products to coal mines in the tri-state area of Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Maryland.

The drivers, who are employed by several hundred small truck operators, were receiving extremely low wages—as little as 20 to 35 cents an hour—and putting in excessive overtime, sometimes working up to 12 hours a day.

Unable to make ends meet in the face of rising living costs, the drivers contacted the UCWOC and decided to strike for decent pay standards. Word was spread among all drivers to stop hauling, and picket lines were established along the highways.

MINES WERE CLOSED

During the 15-day walkout, nine coal mines were forced to close down for lack of timber. Efforts of some truck operators to use strikebreakers were balked when coal miners in the districts supplied by the truckers refused to use scab timber in the mines.

Steel Union Majority 70%, NLRB Finds

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16—The CIO made another important advance this week in its whirlwind campaign to unionize Little Steel, as the Natl. Labor Relations Board announced in a preliminary report that the Steel Workers Organizing Committee had a majority in 17 plants of the Republic Steel Corp.

The count, conducted through a comparison of union membership cards with the company's personnel records, showed that more than 28,000 of the 40,000 workers in the 17 plants are members of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, headed by CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

When formal certification is made by the NLRB, the 17 plants will be lumped into one bargaining unit. Republic, abandoning its ancient anti-union position several weeks ago, promised to negotiate and sign a contract with the SWOC if it proved to have a majority.

Meanwhile the Board announced two more Little Steel elections. On Aug. 20 and 21, some 20,000 employes at Pottstown and Bethlehem, Pa., plants of the Bethlehem Steel Corp. will vote for or against the SWOC. The union has already won elections at six of the company's properties.

CIO COMES TO NEWCOMERSTOWN; NOW EVERYBODY WANTS TO JOIN

NEWCOMERSTOWN, Ohio, Aug. 16—Citizens of this community whose only knowledge of the CIO was what they got from hostile propagandists, had a great surprise when the Steel Workers Organizing Committee called a successful one-month strike at the Heller Bros. plant early in July.

During the walkout the citizens of this town of 4,000 changed their minds completely about the CIO. Expecting—on the basis of reports and rumors— that the strike would bring violence, destruction and suffering, they witnessed a strike marked with peace, cooperation and gayety.

Every day, according to SWOC Field Representative I. W. Abel, and CIO Representative George de Nucci, hundreds of pickets reported for duty and amused themselves in card games, horse shoe pitching contests, photography or story-swapping. Evenings they turned out by the score for nightly entertainments and dancing in the company parking lot and tennis court.

EFFECTIVE STRIKE

But though there was plenty of fun, the picket line was 100 per cent effective and only the two Heller brothers, who own the plant, were admitted on to company property.

The strike started when the company, trying to head off the SWOC, signed a two-year "contract" with a handful of AFL officers. The pact brought no gains to the workers.

40-1 VICTORY

Two weeks after the strike started NLRB hearings were held, and a fortnight later the SWOC cleaned up the election by a 40-1 margin—801 votes for the CIO union, only 20 against. The night before the poll more than 500 cars participated in a union parade through the town. At the head of the line was a sound truck playing funeral dirges for the AFL, which was represented by a rough box draped with wreaths and flowers.

A day after the election SWOC organizers and local union officials met with the management and negotiated a contract which lifted minimum wage rates 10 cents an hour and boosted the pay of all piece workers 5 cents an hour.

Also provided were vacations with pay, seniority and grievance systems, and safety and health clauses.

EVERYBODY JOINING

The strike settlement was a victory not only for the Heller employes but for other workers in the town. Since the pact was announced, filling station employes, barbers, store clerks, mechanics and about everyone else who works for a living have been contacting Abel and deNucci to learn if there's a place in the CIO for them.

Textile Union Wins Poll, 5-1

Rockville, Conn., Aug. 16 — Employes of the largest unit of M. T. Stevens & Sons, one of the biggest manufacturers of woolens and worsteds, voted 1,209 to 267 this week for the Textile Workers Union in an election conducted here by the National Labor Relations Board, TWU Pres. Emil Rieve announced today.

Out of a total number of 1,672 workers eligible, 1,513 cast ballots. Pres. Rieve said the union will now ask a joint contract covering the three plants of the company.

Hosiery Union Discusses Silk Crisis

Hendersonville, N. C., Aug. 16—The silk crisis in the hosiery industry was the main topic taken up at district conference and educational institute held by the American Federation of Hosiery Workers last week end at the Southern School for Workers now in session here.

The conference, which was the fourth to be held annually at the school, was attended by 30 hosiery workers from the Carolinas. The institute was planned by Lawrence Rogin, AFHW educational director, and Cedric Stallings, N. C. representative, in cooperation with the Southern School's staff.

Reporting on a conference of union officials and hosiery manufacturers called by the Office of Production Management early in August, Edward F. Callaghan, second AFHW vice-president, said that silk will be unavailable to the hosiery industry for an indefinite period.

CIO Demands U. S. Rescind 'Work Or Fight' Order

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16—Full rescinding of the order cancelling draft deferments of strikers was demanded of General Lewis B. Hershey, head of the Selective Service System, in a letter sent to him by Allan S. Haywood, organization director, in the name of the CIO and of Pres. Philip Murray.

The order was originally issued June 9 during the North American Aviation strike, and has been in effect since then. "Its operation bears out the position of Pres. Murray that it establishes the Selective Service Act as a device to impair labor's rights as set forth in federal law and as generally recognized in the nation," Haywood wrote.

This was clearly not the intent of Congress in passing the act, he added, reminding Hershey that labor "was continuously assured that the act would not be used for the destruction of labor's rights" while it was being debated.

AIDS EMPLOYERS

"The order encourages employers to feel that they need no longer bargain with their employes; that the weight of the Selective Service will be placed in support of their refusal to work out agreements with their employes should such failure result in a strike," he declared.

It also runs counter to the Wagner Act, Haywood pointed out, since it deprives strikers of their status as employes. "This is a principle fundamental to the existence of a democratic labor movement," Haywood wrote.

"Otherwise, employes who sought to better their conditions would be faced with the loss of all rights if they were forced to take strike action."

In addition to demanding rescinding of the deferment cancellation order, Haywood also urged Hershey to instruct local draft boards not to interfere in strike situations.

CIO Quarry Union Wins Polls, Pacts

Barre, Vt., Aug. 16—The CIO United Stone & Allied Products Workers today announced two further election victories in its rapidly moving organization drive.

Sec.-Treas. John C. Lawson revealed that the union had gained a majority vote over both the AFL and an independent union at the Johns-Manville plant in Alexandria, Ind. The US&APW received 200 votes, to 110 for the independent union and 43 for the AFL.

At the Elberton City Quarry Co., Elberton, Ga., the CIO affiliate won an 11-1 victory in an NLRB poll, with contract negotiations due to open this week. Request for certification at the Royal Blue Quarry Co. is being sought by Rep. Pike of the union.

Meanwhile it was announced that a two-day strike at the Riverton, Va., Lime & Stone Co. brought a three-cent hourly increase and a modified union shop. Tile workers employed by the Junction City, Ohio, Tile Co., gained 10 cents hourly increases.

AFL Craft Raid in Steel Scotched by Labor Board

Pittsburgh, Aug. 16—Efforts of two AFL craft unions to muscle into the Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corp., U. S. Steel subsidiary which has functioned under a CIO industrial union contract for the past four years, have ended in failure, the Steel Workers Organizing Committee revealed this week.

The SWOC called attention to a unanimous decision by the Natl. Labor Relations Board dismissing petitions submitted by the AFL's electrical and machinists unions to establish craft units at the company's Charleston, W. Va., plant.

VITAL TO INDUSTRY

"The case was vital to labor relations in the steel industry, in that the action of the Labor Board spiked the first attempt to split the industrial union organization of the SWOC into craft unions at plants of Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corp.," the CIO steel workers union commented.

The AFL claimed that a number of jobs in the machine shop and among maintenance and repair electricians and substation operators, "should comprise bargaining units entirely separate from the plant-wide unit recognized under the SWOC contract with Carnegie-Illinois," the SWOC declared.

38 OF 360

In turning down the AFL petition, the Labor Board commented: "In support of its claim to represent 360 employes in the department, the IAM (Intl. Assn. of Machinists) submitted 38 cards of employes whose names appear on the plant payroll of June 7, 1941."

The NLRB also found that the machinists and electrical workers couldn't agree—in typical AFL fashion—which employes should be in which union. Eight workers claimed by the electrical workers union were also claimed by the machinists!

The Board pointed out that the craft units demanded by the two AFL groups "overlap" and went on to cite that "the SWOC has bargained successfully with the company for its members on an . . . industrial basis."

U.S. Court Upholds Cannery Union In 'Bloody Salinas'

CHICAGO, Aug. 16—Migratory workers in the Salinas, Calif., lettuce sheds have won a victory over the Grower-Shippers Assn., powerful organization of lettuce shed employers, the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing & Allied Workers announced here. The Association has worked closely with Associated Farmers, nationally known anti-union outfit, the union stated.

An order issued by the National Labor Relations Board in July, 1939, calling for reinstatement of workers who had been denied jobs since the 1936 strike and an end of intimidation of unionists has been upheld by the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Charges against the Grower-Shippers were originally filed with the NLRB during a two months' strike in the Fall of 1936 when everything "from tear gas to spies" was used to break the strike, the union said.

A "Citizens Association" and a local branch of the Associated Farmers were organized and served as a mouthpiece for the association, although they pretended to speak in the name of citizens and farmers. Stockades were built, picket lines were attacked by tear-gas brigades and wholesale arrests were made.

The NLRB summed up this activity by reporting that "the impression of these events . . . is one of inexcusable police brutality, in many instances bordering on sadism."

"Innumerable false arrests were made, many without a shadow of evidence," the Board reported. "Large numbers of persons were kept in jail for four or five days without having any charges brought against them."

The NLRB order, upheld by the court, required the Association to pay full back wages, less any amounts earned in the meantime to ten workers and to offer reinstatment to all others denied jobs since the strike.

The Board's finding that the Association had failed to bargain collectively was not upheld by the Court.

CIO Agents' Union Calls Strike At Insurance Firm

DETROIT, Aug. 16—CIO strikes at the Detroit and Philadelphia offices of the National Life & Accident Insurance Co. of Tennessee today were gaining rapidly-growing support from workers in other offices of the corporation.

The strikers, members of the United Office & Professional Workers' Industrial Insurance Agents' Union, are backing up demands for job security, two-week vacations with pay, and a 5 per cent increase in the commission on collections.

In addition to the two cities where the walkout is being pressed, picket lines have been set up at offices in Chicago, Pittsburgh, Baltimore and Harrisburg, Pa.

HAVE MAJORITY

Local 102 of the union was certified late in July by the Michigan Labor Mediation Board as having as members 91 of the 130 employes of the Detroit office.

"The union has consistently attempted both here and in other cities to sit down with the management and in a spirit of cooperation work out an agreement that would be satisfactory to both the agents and management," Jerome Shore, UOPWA mid-west representative, declared.

"Unfortunately, however, it has met with an arrogant and destructive attitude on the part of the company representatives, who not only denied every one of the fair and reasonable proposals made by the union, but threatened the men with the loss of their vacations this year."

Closed Shop Pact

Detroit—The first closed shop and checkoff contract for designers and draftsmen in the automobile industry went into effect at the Murray Body Corp. late last month, it was announced by the Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists & Technicians.

Cereal Union Gets Pay Boost

Joliet, Ill., Aug. 16—Members of the CIO Cereal Workers Industrial Union No. 11 today had gained pay raises ranging up to five cents an hour in the fifth contract renewal signed with the Northern Illinois Cereal Co. and the Illinois Macaroni Co. at Lockport.

In the cereal division the men gained the nickel raise, and the women 2½ cents an hour, with the minimum rate for men being lifted to $5 a day. In the macaroni division both men and women got 5c an hour additional, together with one week's vacation for employes with more than five years' service.

The companies have been under contract with the CIO union for the past five years, according to Albert Krzywonos, sub-district director of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, who assisted the union negotiating committee.

Chrysler Engineers To Vote

NEW YORK, Aug. 16—Chrysler engineers have won their right to an NLRB election to select the Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists & Technicians as their bargaining agency through a decision handed down by the National Labor Relations Board in Washington, Marcel Scherer, vice-president of the union, announced today.

"The Chrysler Corp. has stubbornly resisted for the past two years the demands of its engineering staff for recognition of their union, the Society of Designing Engineers, Chapter 201 of the FAECT," Scherer said.

OFFERED PROOF

"Time and again we offered to submit proof of the fact that a majority of the engineering staff was organized into our union and finally we petitioned the NLRB on March 1 for certification. The Chrysler Co. flatly refused to agree to a consent election and resorted to every possible subterfuge to prevent one."

At hearings held by the NLRB on June 23, the company persisted in its refusal. In a decision given by the Board recently to which all three members of the Board agreed, an election was ordered to be held within 30 days at both the main Chrysler plant at Highland Park, and the main Dodge plant in Detroit.

Union Raps ALCOA Stall Strategy

Pittsburgh, Aug. 16—Conferences between the Aluminum Workers of America and the Aluminum Company of America on a dispute over a wage differential discriminating against workers in southern plants broke off this week without a settlement, AWA Pres. N. A. Zonarich announced today.

"The company flatly refused to show or give any reasons why a wage differential should exist between northern and southern workers," Zonarich said. "The union has even offered to arbitrate the issue but the company refused to do that.

"We have notified the government of this arbitrary refusal and it is now up to the Government to avert a strike in the industry."

Win Raise In Philly

Members of Local 116, CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers accepted a settlement under which the eight-cent raise was handed out immediately, with provision that another three cents be granted in six months. Earlier the company had sat tight on a proposal to increase pay only 6½ cents an hour.

A special clause in the contract stipulated that the wage question will be opened for further negotiations when and if the U. S. cost of living index rises five points from its present level.

Weaving Firm Must Bargain

Washington, Aug. 16—The Covington Weaving Co., a division of the Burlington Mills Corp. at Covington, Va., was ordered this week by the NLRB to stop interfering with the rights of its employes to belong to the Textile Workers Union or any other labor organization.

The company was charged with questioning the employes about their union membership, in violation of the Labor Relations Act.

CIO BEAUTIES: Miss Anne Sullivan (fourth from right) won the beauty contest at the Ohio state CIO annual picnic recently, but the judges had a tough time reaching a decision—and wouldn't you? Some 20,000 who attended the outing at Cedar Point heard CIO Sec. James B. Carey urge governmental adoption of the Murray Industry Council plan for increasing defense production.

CIO Wins Colt Arms Poll 7—1

HARTFORD, Conn., Aug. 16—Sole bargaining rights for more than 5,000 workers at the Colt Patent Firearms Manufacturing Co. were won by the United Electrical Radio & Machine Workers in a National Labor Relations Board election held here last week.

The vote was 3,878 for the CIO union, 573 for an "independent" company union and 429 for no union.

The company makes machine guns for the United States and Great Britain.

Negotiations for a signed contract will be requested immediately, said Sidney W. Gunning, president of the UERMW local.

Shipyard OKs Union Shop

Camden, N. J., Aug. 16—The CIO Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers today hailed a new union shop contract with the N. Y. Shipbuilding Co. here as the handwriting on the wall for the open shop in Atlantic Coast yards.

"We've broken up the open shop policy of the shipbuilders in this country, and we don't intend to stop until we have all of them under agreements," Pres. John Green declared.

The union official described the agreement as the "best . . . in the shipbuilding industry in the country," adding that it was "in keeping in every way with the provisions of the stabilization agreement" worked out several weeks ago by leaders of the union, the industry and the government.

Carey Asks U.S. Protect Workers At Shipyard

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16—The CIO today charged the management of the strike-bound Federal Shipbuilding Corp. with "open, deliberate, premeditated . . . defiance of the government's defense program," and demanded that before federal officials take any action in the case they call a conference at which the shipbuilding workers may be represented.

In a letter addressed to Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox, Secretary James B. Carey of the CIO charged that "the plain fact of the matter is that the management of this corporation is refusing to cooperate in the defense program of the government unless it is relieved of its obligations under the National Labor Relations Act and the recent decision of the National Defense Mediation Board."

MISREPRESENTED ISSUES

Carey said that the defense contract-laden U. S. Steel subsidiary had "misrepresented" the issues involved in the walkout at the big Kearny, N. J., shipyards.

The strike of 16,000 workers started more than a week ago when the company climaxed a long series of stalls in negotiations with the Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers by refusing to accept U. S. Mediation Board proposals for union security and job rate classifications. It was pointed out by Pres. John Green of the union that the company haughtily turned down every CIO proposal for peaceful compromise of the issues at stake.

WANT COMPLIANCE

The CIO official said the union seeks nothing more than the company's compliance with the Mediation Board decision, which called for men now in the union to continue in that status during the life of the contract. The company, on the other hand, has been trying to convince the public that the issue is the closed shop, Carey told Secretary Knox.

Pointing out that the Atlantic coast stabilization agreement signed by representatives of industry, labor and government some time ago, calls for negotiation of local contracts with the individual companies, Carey said:

"No local contract has yet been signed, and it is ridiculous to claim, as the company has done, that the men are on strike in violation of a contract."

VOICE AT PARLEY

The company's conduct makes it "imperative," the letter continued, that the CIO Shipyard Workers be represented at a joint conference to be held before final action is taken by the government, in order that there can be "no misunderstanding in the future on the fundamental issues and policies involved."

If the government should assume control of the company properties, Carey declared, its action "should be accompanied by guarantees in accordance with the policy of the Selective Service Act, that the employes will retain their rights of collective bargaining and concerted action now guaranteed them by the law of the land."

Labor Board Survey Finds Big CIO Majority At Republic Steel

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 16—Three major developments in the rapid-moving CIO drive to "mop up" the corporations in the industry's "Little Steel" bloc were reported today by the CIO Steel Workers Organizing Committee:

1. A preliminary report by the Natl. Labor Relations Board revealed the SWOC had gained sweeping majorities in 17 plants of the Republic Steel Corp., where the NLRB has been comparing union membership cards with company personnel records.

2. The SWOC made preparations for two more elections in large plants of the Bethlehem Steel Corp., second largest in the industry, with polls scheduled for Bethlehem, Pa., on Aug. 21 and at Pottstown either on Aug. 20 or 21.

3. Leaders of SWOC locals in all Little Steel companies met together with ranking officials of the union and discussed what Sec.-Treas. David McDonald described as "policies of great importance."

ALL 17 PLANTS

The NLRB's payroll study at Republic showed that the CIO union had a heavy majority in every one of the 17 plants included in the agreement worked out by the Board, the company and the SWOC a few weeks ago.

The union, the government agency found, had 28,482 members in good standing as of August 1, out of a total employment of 40,585. Upon certification by the Board, the 17 plants will be lumped in one bargaining unit, and, under its stipulation, the company will proceed to negotiate, reduce to writing and sign a contract with the SWOC.

20,000 TO VOTE

Election victories at the Bethlehem and Pottstown plants of Bethlehem Steel will bring almost 20,000 workers under SWOC protection. Some 18,000 workers are employed at the Bethlehem mill, scene of a strike last spring, while another 1,500 work in Pottstown.

In the Bethlehem elections to date, 18,683 workers have voted for the CIO union and only 5,249 against. The company has agreed to negotiate and sign a contract upon request by the SWOC.

Little Steel Victory

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—Following is the strength of SWOC membership at 17 plants of the Republic Steel Corp., as reported in preliminary findings by the National Labor Relations Board after a comparison of union membership cards and corporation personnel records:

Cannery Workers Announce Election Victories, Pacts

CHICAGO, Aug. 16—Within eight months the United Cannery, Packing, Agricultural and Allied Workers of America, CIO, has won 14 Labor Board elections, increased the number of contracts by 20 per cent to a total of 189, and chartered 17 new locals. Sixty-nine per cent, or seven out of every ten workers voting in the elections chose UCAPAWA.

"Since the Third Convention last December, UCAPAWA has witnessed its most rapid growth and success in organizing new plants and in increasing the number of workers protected by union contracts," according to the report of Donald Henderson, union President, in the August issue of UCAPAWA News. Henderson disclosed that progress "has been particularly extensive in the food processing and tobacco industries."

STREAMLINED DRIVE

These gains are seen as the first fruits of the streamlined organizing campaign for which the groundwork was laid by the International convention of the union last December.

Close direction of the work by the International office, concentration on key cities and key plants and building active support for the organizing drive in every local are the chief features of the new organizational setup.

Henderson indicated that substantial as this progress has been, UCAPAWA looks on it as only a beginning of the part it intends to play in "the tremendous organizational upsurge which is sweeping the country throughout the entire CIO."

SWOC Ready For Little Steel Parleys

Pittsburgh, Aug. 16—The Steel Workers Organizing Committee is prepared to begin negotiations with four "Little Steel" companies for signed contracts, covering some 170,000 employes.

After an all-day conference of 75 local union presidents and representatives from mills of Bethlehem Steel, Republic Steel, Youngstown Sheet & Tube and Inland Steel, it was announced letters will soon be addressed to those steel firms to open negotiations.

HAVE MAJORITIES

In contrast to the situation in 1937 when signed contracts were then sought and refused—resulting in the so-called "Little Steel" strikes at that time—all these companies have already agreed to sign contracts with the SWOC. These are all in the form of stipulations signed by the companies, the Labor Board and the Union.

That the SWOC has the majority of workmen in the plants of these "Little Steel" companies in the Union was shown in these figures from a report to the conference made by David J. McDonald, SWOC secretary-treasurer, who presided in the absence of Philip Murray.

The Labor Board has already found SWOC majorities at Republic and Bethlehem. At Inland Steel, in the same kind of card check, the NLRB found the SWOC to have 8700 out of 11,800.

At the Youngstown Sheet & Tube plant in Youngstown, the SWOC has 8828 out of 12,738; and a preliminary check of the same company at their two Chicago plants shows the Union to have 6800 out of 8500.

Auto Workers Hail Murray, Send Messages To CIO Leader In Hospital

Buffalo, Aug. 16—The convention of the United Automobile Workers was marked by many expressions of sympathy for CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who was unable to attend on account of being confined to a hospital in Pittsburgh, and much praise and support for his leadership.

The delegates, early in the convention, sent flowers and a convention message of best wishes for speedy recovery; and a prolonged ovation greeted mention of the CIO President's name, when Secretary James Carey brought his personal message of greetings to the convention.

Later the convention adopted a resolution declaring that "the CIO has taken tremendous steps forward in the past year under the sterling leadership of Philip Murray," and instructing its delegates to the national CIO convention "to unanimously support the re-election of Philip Murray as president of our great organization."

STEEL AND COAL

An earlier resolution, unanimously adopted, had also praised the leadership of Murray in the steel industry, coupling it with that of John L. Lewis in the coal industry, and declaring that "the tremendous gains of the miners and steel workers . . . are due very much to the sterling leadership of John L. Lewis and Philip Murray" and have "contributed great initiative and drive to the successes of labor everywhere."

Carey in his speech described Murray as "a man whose calm, understanding spirit and profound intelligence have given us the guidance we needed in many difficult days. . . . He is known to the entire nation for his policies of industrial peace and his constructive proposals to promote national defense," he said.

Pres. Philip Murray

The CIO secretary reported that "Phil is getting well, his condition is improving and it will be only a short time until he will be back with us in the front line trenches of our great battle."

PRESS STORIES HIT

Later the convention, by unanimous vote, roundly condemned and denied "false stories" and "vicious propaganda" in the press that "seek to create the fake impression that we are divided on the basis of support of either Philip Murray or John L. Lewis as against the other."

The resolution declared that "we publicly express our conviction that Philip Murray and John L. Lewis are united in the furtherance of the policies of the CIO and declare we are in turn united in support of both of them in their common endeavors to carry out those policies to the advancement of our interests and the benefit of the people of our country."

Renew Drive To Free Coast Labor Martyrs

San Francisco, Aug. 16—Renewed activity for a full pardon for Earl King, E. G. Ramsay and F. J. Conner has been getting under way here, led by the King-Ramsay-Connor Defense Committee. Hearings on the case came up August 27.

The three labor prisoners, all prominent union leaders before they were imprisoned, were locked up in 1936 on a frame-up murder charge involving the death of one George W. Alberts, chief engineer of the steamship Point Lobos.

The death of Albert took place at a time when west coast unions, particularly those in the maritime industry, were going through a period of intense struggle for their right to exist and to bargain collectively for their members.

Flying From The Storm

Club Over Labor

The conscription act was not intended to be a club over the heads of American workers to coerce them into working against their will and to destroy their right to strike.

A clause in the regulations governing operation of the act specifically states that "there shall be no discrimination for or against any person because of his race, creed or color, or because of his membership or activity in any labor, poltical, religious or other organization."

The CIO warned, however, that attempts would probably be made to use the act against labor. And what it warned against came true on June 9 when Selective Service Director Lewis B. Hershey issued his infamous order directing local draft boards to re-examine and cancel deferments of strikers.

CIO President Murray at once denounced this order as "a flagrant abuse of the conscription law and an open breach of faith with labor."

Two months have now passed since this order was issued, and there have been many cases of local draft boards reclassifying strikers from deferment — even though many of the strikes have been against companies violating the Labor Act or rejecting official proposals of the Mediation Board.

Allan Haywood, CIO director of organization, has now written General Hershey calling upon him to withdraw the order of June 9 and to direct local boards not to interfere in industrial disputes.

"The order," Haywood says, "encourages employers to feel that they need no longer bargain collectively with their employes; that the weight of the Selective Service will be placed in support of their refusal to work out agreements with their employes should such failure result in a strike."

Induction into the armed forces is supposed to be a call to defend the United States and its liberties. Every patriotic American will resent its perversion into a form of punishment and a club to beat down these liberties.

What Of Profits?

Whenever an overdue wage increase is demanded by a union, plaintive cries arise from the employers that this will rob them of the opportunity to make a fair profit.

During the first six months of 1941, CIO unions won substantial wage increases for their members in many industries, adding an estimated total of $650,000,000 to workers' annual incomes.

So the poor companies were thus robbed of their profit-making opportunities by the grasping unions, were they? Well, not exactly.

During those same six months of 1941, some 350 leading companies showed an increase in profits, after tax deductions, of approximately 20 per cent, as compared with the first half of 1940, according to a tabulation of the Natl. City Bank of New York.

The CIO Economic Outlook further notes that 27 machinery companies have a profit rate of 24.2% in 1941. And that ain't hay!

The profit rate of nine automobile companies is 21.1%; of 19 auto equipment companies, 24%; and of 14 electrical equipment companies, 14%. Twenty-three leading iron and steel manufacturing companies showed an increase of 100% in first-half profits of 1941 over 1940.

Referring to the wage increases won by the CIO in these industries, the Outlook conservatively remarks: "It would appear, generally speaking, that those wage increases did not impair the profit-making capacities of the industries involved." It certainly would.

A New Chapter

There is no further room for questioning who represents the employes of Tom Girdler's Republic Steel Co.

A preliminary pay-roll check by the Natl. Labor Relations Board reveals that the CIO Steel Workers Organizing Committee has 28,482 members in good standing out of a total of 40,858 employes in 17 Republic plants.

Under the law this entitles the SWOC to certification as exclusive bargaining representative of the Republic workers. And under a recent agreement, the company is pledged to negotiate a signed contract with the SWOC once it is so certified.

So ends a dark chapter of industrial autocracy and anti-unionism, and so begins a new era of industrial democracy and collective bargaining, won by the Republic workers through the CIO.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

THERE is an old story, dating back to horse and buggy days, that has some bearing on the tax question of today.

The owner of an ailing horse was advised that the way to administer medicine to his steed was to put it in a tube and blow it down the horse's throat. The next time he saw the horse-doctor, he began to bawl him out violently.

"Did you follow my instructions?" the vet asked.

"I certainly did," the other replied, "but the horse blew first."

Taxes are medicine that nobody likes. But a dose that would have a most healthy effect on a big bloated horse of an excess-profiteer, would just about kill the ordinary little fellow, if the horse got in the first blow, as it is now doing in Congress.

Talking of horses reminds us of the Gallup Poll—a so-called Institute of Public Opinion run by big business newspaper publishers to convince themselves the public really swallows their propaganda.

On the basis of a recent survey on the tax question, the Gallup Poll announces with generous condescension that "far from being venal, the masses demonstrate an amazing sense of fairness."

It bases this conclusion on survey results showing that if "the masses" wrote the tax bill, they would soak the poor (with income taxes even on a family of four earning less than $1,000 a year), and relieve the rich.

An amazing sense of "fairness" indeed! The low-income groups already pay far more than their share of taxes, whether they know it or not. More than half of federal tax income now comes from consumption taxes, which bear heaviest on the poor, while less than half comes from ability-to-pay taxes. And the new tax bill would greatly increase the burden on low-income groups.

Yet the Gallup Poll's idea of "fairness" is to add to the load of the already overburdened, to relieve the profiteer!

If this Gallup Poll reveals anything, it is the success of the propaganda designed to cover up wage-cutting taxation, such as the CIO is now fighting in the present tax bill.

The little fellow is taxed every time he turns around—when he pays his rent, when he eats his meals, when he rides to work, when he buys at the store. But he does not "see" most of these taxes in the same way as he sees the amusement tax when he goes to the movies or the gasoline tax.

So there may be some "little fellows" who think it fair that even the lower-paid workers should "do their share" by paying income tax. But if there are, they are just suckers who are letting the profiteers' lobby "blow first."

More likely, however, the opinion polls produce phony results, for reasons previously cited in this column—such as their control by moneyed interests, the way questions are phrased, and the aversion of low-paid workers to being questioned by snooping strangers.

Expert confirmation of such suspicions comes recently from Harold F. Gosnell, associate professor of political science at Chicago University. Speaking recently to a group of experts he declared that "public opinion" polls fail to represent fully the opinions of low-income groups.

"Persons in the lowest income groups have the highest job insecurity," he said, "and they tend to be suspicious of strangers. They are afraid they might say something which might endanger their jobs."

One of the phoniest arguments in favor of some of the wage-cutting tax proposals passed by the House and now before the Senate, was exploded by Ralph Hetzel, director of the CIO Economic Division, before the Senate committee.

This argument is that additional taxes on the consumption of wage earners and low income groups are necessary to prevent inflation. The theory advanced is that, by lowering the purchasing power of workers, such taxes will reduce their demand for goods and so prevent prices from rising, when demand increases more than supply.

Hetzel pointed out that such price rises as have occurred are the result of shortages of certain essential materials, monopoly control of prices, price speculation and unplanned public purchasing. They are not the result of higher wages.

The average wage earner's family spends 65% of its income on food, clothing and rent. Only about 5% goes to buy the kind of goods whose shortage threatens inflationary price rises.

To tax wages through increased sales taxes, etc., as is proposed, would simply mean lowering the living standards of already ill-fed, ill-housed and ill-clothed workers, and lessening the demand for farm products, without affecting the real causes of inflation.

Higher Cost of Living Threatens Nation

an "Economic Outlook" chart

ON THE "UP AND UP": This CIO Economic Outlook chart shows conclusively that the cost of living is headed in one direction only—upwards. Index of wholesale prices (shown by dotted line) had risen 10 points since January 1, jumped almost 20 per cent since war started in September, 1939. A group of so-called "sensitive commodities," whose prices show the greatest fluctuation, jumped about 25 points in a zooming upward flight. Cost of living (represented by heavy line) is moving steadily upward, and will soar even faster since retail prices always follow shortly after advancing wholesale price trends. Which means that your dollar is going to buy less bread and butter in the months ahead.

CIO Economic Outlook Cites Danger to Standards; Unemployment Still High

WASHINGTON, Aug. 17—A new and serious situation threatening the wages of American workers is now developing due to the rapidly rising cost of living, to proposals to cut down purchasing power and to tax proposals that bear most heavily on the workers and other low income groups, according to the Economic Outlook, monthly publication of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, issued today.

Living costs are already six per cent above 1939 and three per cent above June of this year, the Outlook says in citing U. S. Labor Dept. figures admitting the increase. Rises in the wholesale price index of more than 18 per cent since 1939 and more than 10 per cent since January, 1941, will be very quickly reflected in retail costs.

ANOTHER THREAT

"The second threat to real wages is a group of proposals for deliberately cutting down consumer purchasing power," the Outlook says.

"These measures are based on the theory that more wages are being paid out than can be spent in buying all available consumer goods."

This theory has been rejected by the CIO, the Outlook adds, warning that it leads to "taxes on wages or forced savings plans," and that "there will undoubtedly also be attempts in Congress to establish wage controls along with price control legislation."

Discussing the pending tax program, the Outlook points out that it is a threat to wages through the heavy burden of sales taxes it lays on the things workers buy and through its failure to taxe wealth and profits.

DEFENSE LAGGING

Delays in allocating defense contracts are responsible for slowing down the program and for tying up huge sums that have been appropriated but not put into use; the Outlook declares, pointing out that only 24 billion of the 47 billion dollars authorized has been actually let out. If the present rate of allocation continues, it will take from five to seven years to complete the defense program as planned now.

Unemployment, set at 7,184,000 for May, 1941, is bound to rise sharply due to shortage in materials, the Outlook says, pointing to proposed cuts in automobiles, aluminum, silk and other goods as a warning. These cuts, the Outlook says, "promise to throw thousands out of work."

PROFITS STILL UP

Profit figures continue to show sharp increases, despite "loud outcry about the disastrous effect of wage and tax increases," the Outlook declares, citing National City Bank figures showing a 20 per cent profit increase in the first six months of 1941 even after large deductions for taxes were made by the corporations.

These tax deductions are always set very high by the corporations in the attempt to disguise profit increases, it adds, urging unions to keep this practice in mind when examining profit statements for purposes of negotiating wage increases.

Chemical Workers Win Raises

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16—Leaders of District 50, United Mine Workers, while preparing today for mediation hearings on the union's long strike at 17 plants of the U. S. Gypsum Co., today announced substantial gains in other sections of their jurisdiction.

The Gypsum strike, nearing its second month, has effectively limited the company's production, despite an effort by a handful of AFL stooges at the South Gate, Calif., factory to promote a back-to-work movement under the guise of a back-door "agreement" with the management.

Gains reported by the union:

1. Ten minutes before a strike deadline, the Spencer Kellogg Linseed Oil Co., Edgewater, N. J., signed a contract renewal which brought wage increases of 12 cents an hour to all employes, and an additional five-cent raise to 75 workers. The union shop clause was retained, as well as vacations with pay, grievance and seniority systems.

2. The Celotex Corp., Metuchen, N. J., renewed a contract for 250 workers which boosted pay by ten cents an hour. The pact provides for vacations with pay and six holidays per year.

3. The American Rock Wool Corp., South Plainfield, N. J., signed its first pact renewal and granted increases ranging between five and ten cents an hour.

4. Following up a recent NLRB election victory, District 50 signed its first contract at the Koppers Seaboard plant in Hudson County. The 600 employes ratified a pact granting 10-cent-an-hour wage advances, union shop, check-off, and vacations with pay.

Consumer Head Hits Profiteering

Washington, Aug. 16 — (FP) — Many retailers and wholesalers of hosiery and other silk products are deliberately taking advantage of the prospective shortage in these articles to gouge the public with unjustified price increases, it was charged by Harriet Elliott, associate administrator of the Office of Price Administration and Civilian Supply.

"Many of the nation's retailers and wholesalers have patriotically refrained from raising the price of silk products on the basis of the raw silk shortage," Miss Elliott said.

"But many others are deliberately taking advantage of the situation to reap windfall profits for themselves and do an injustice to their consumers by raising prices although the cost of their existing stocks has not changed in the slightest."

Miss Elliott advised consumers not to pay higher prices for silk hose, urging that they buy hose for current needs only and protest vigorously over higher prices.

'Startling Increases'

Rent Jumps Up to 100% Found In WPA Study

WASHINGTON (FP), Aug. 16—Rents increased in a large proportion of dwelling units and in some instances more than doubled in small industrial cities and camp towns during the year since the defense program was inaugurated, according to a summary of WPA rental studies released here by WPA Commissioner Howard O. Hunter.

More than half of 58 communities surveyed showed rent increases for more than 30 per cent of their rental dwellings. In half of the places surveyed the average increases were more than 20 per cent of the rent paid in March, 1940.

FEW VACANCIES

A summary of another series of studies, on vacant dwellings available in defense areas, disclosed that in 90 per cent of the areas the vacancy rates in recent months were well below 5 per cent level which is considered normal. In two out of every five of the areas the housing situation was found to be "critical," with fewer than 2 per cent of the dwelling units vacant.

"In a number of areas the rent increases have been truly startling. They are hardest, moreover, on the families who are least able to pay, because in most instances the increases have been relatively greater on the poorer and cheaper dwellings," Hunter said.

UP 33 PER CENT IN IOWA

In Burlington, Ia., the study showed, more than half of the rents had been raised and the average increase was 33 per cent. In Leesville, Ia., almost three-fourths of the rents had been raised, the average increase amounting to 109 per cent.

More than three-fourths of the rents in Brownwood, Tex., were up, and the average increase was 64 per cent. In the small town of Starke, Fla., near Camp Blanding, seven-tenths of the rents had been raised an average of 101 per cent.

1,600 Face Job Loss From U. S. Priority Order

Washington, Aug. 16—Worried and indignant over a statement made by company officials that some 1,600 out of 2,470 workers employed by the Borg-Warner Co. in Muncie, Ind., were to be laid off this week due to a government priority order on iron and bronze, a union delegation from Local 287, United Automobile Workers, arrived in Washington last Friday to protest to the Office of Production Management.

The three members of the Local 287 delegation, all employed in the company's Warner-Gear division in Muncie, were Jack Reed, president of the local; Leo Myers, chairman of the negotiating committee; and Owen Stark, trustee.

100% Union

The delegation said the local was 100 per cent organized. The company signed the first contract with the local four years ago following an election won by the UAW-CIO.

Three months ago the agreement was renewed for the fifth time, with a pay increase raising the minimum wage from 70 to 80 cents. The average pay is now $1.13 an hour.

The company which makes transmission and other parts for Ford, Studebaker, Hudson, Nash and other auto firms, has three plants in Muncie.

Auto Union Sets Million Members Goal By 1945

BUFFALO, Aug. 16—A goal of one million members by 1945 was set by the rapidly growing CIO United Automobile Workers union at its convention here, to continue the record membership gains already reported. Most of the further increases are expected to come from the expanding aircraft industry.

At the same time the convention adopted a well-rounded program to cope with the threatened curtailment of automobile production. Central to this program is CIO President Murray's industry council plan, which was unanimously endorsed by the convention.

Opposing any curtailment of auto production unless shown necessary for national defense, the program calls for full union participation with government and management in joint conferences on the problem; use of the Murray steel plan and the Reuther plan to utilize fully all available production facilities; gradual transference from auto to defense production in such a way as to prevent layoffs; and other measures to insure maximum production without injury to labor.

Murray's CIO defense plan was also emphasized when CIO Secretary James B. Carey addressed the convention. The message of greetings he carried from Murray, confined to hospital in Pittsburgh, touched off a prolonged ovation for the CIO president.

Carey, in his speech, dwelt upon the great progress made by the CIO and upon the inadequacies of the defense program due to failure to adopt Murray's proposals as embodied in the CIO defense plan. He also warned that "we must now prepare to meet the post-emergency problems.

"We can win the war and lose the peace," Carey said, "if a depression hits us, because the billions of defense orders decline and nothing is done to keep up production and jobs for peacetime needs."

Despite enormous defense expenditures, the CIO secretary noted, "we still have vast pools of idle machines and idle men. There is something terribly wrong with our defense policies when factories in the basic industries must close down instead of running at capacity.

SELFISH POLICIES

"The wrong lies in the short-sighted selfish policies of monopoly business and the failure of the government to plan."

Carey argued strongly for adoption of the Industry Council plan for labor representation in the defense program and for "full utilization of our natural, human and mechanical resources."

Among the actions taken in the concluding days of the convention was a unanimous vote to urge reappointment of Edwin S. Smith to the Natl. Labor Relations Board; vigorous condemnation and a call for impeachment of anti-labor Judge Arthur Tuttle of the District Court in Detroit; and the authorization of steps to be taken for the big newly organized Ford local to elect its own officers.

WIDMAN THANKED

A resolution of commendation and thanks to Director Michael Widman and others who helped the Ford organizing drive was adopted by the convention.

Proposals to create two vice presidencies, in addition to the president and secretary, were dropped during the course of the convention, as was also an alternative proposal for one vice president. An additional executive board member from the eastern region was added, and a new voting system adopted for the board under which each member will have one vote for each 1,000 members in his region.

Vigorous support for the CIO United Construction Workers in their drive to organize teamsters was expressed. FBI persecution of the leaders of Minneapolis Local 544 was denounced, during the discussion, as a move against the CIO secured by AFL leader Daniel Tobin from the administration in payment of a political debt. A resolution on the teamsters was sent back to the committee to be strengthened in this direction.

Much time in the first week of the convention was devoted to discussing two issues of major controversy—the North American Aviation Co. strike and the representation of Allis-Chalmers Local 248 at Milwaukee.

NORTH-AMERICAN STRIKE

The first report on the North-American situation upheld the actions taken by CIO Pres. Philip Murray, UAW Pres. R. J. Thomas and Aircraft Director Richard Frankensteen; described the strike as a "wildcat" and unauthorized; hit at "Communist interference;" deplored the use of troops; and criticized the actions of Regional Director Lew Michener.

It recommended that the California region "be placed under direction of the International Executive Board until such time as the board feels the region can properly administer its affairs."

This report was rejected by the convention after prolonged debate, some delegates arguing that it did not provide sufficient penalty for Michener, others objecting to the proposed administratorship and raising of the red issue, and yet others calling for more facts.

THREE REPORTS

Three days later the committee returned with three reports—a majority report, a minority report and what was dubbed a "super-minority" report, signed by one committee member only, Jack Schuller.

All three reports upheld Murray, Thomas and Frankensteen and the general characterization of the situation in the first report. But the majority report called for the barring of Michener for one year from any elective or appointive office in the union. The minority report proposed his expulsion and the appointment of an administrator. The "super-minority" or Schuller report called only for Michener's disqualification for election to the Executive Board at this convention, urging also reconsideration of the cases of the international representatives discharged for supporting the strike, and efforts to secure reinstatement of the eight workers fired for their strike leadership.

A day's debate was devoted to the section of the reports dealing with Michener, who took the floor in his own defense. The discussion also brought speeches from Wyndham Mortimer, one of the discharged international representatives, and Frankensteen, who answered him.

Finally, the recommendation of the Schuller report affecting Michener was adopted by a roll-call vote of 1,558 to 1,460.

The Allis-Chalmers case presented the convention with some of its most dramatic moments, after the convention committee appointed to conduct a new election of delegates returned from Milwaukee with a report denouncing Harold Christoffel, Local 248 president, and declaring he had insulted the convention and failed to cooperate so that a fair election could not be held.

Christoffel was observed in the visitors' gallery while speaker after speaker was denouncing him, and was finally challenged to take the platform if he could defend himself. Booed at first, Christoffel swayed the convention with a defense of his position which developed into a vigorous attack on his critics and won much applause.

He was answered by Regional Director Nordstrom and others who assailed his administration of his local. But the convention finally voted to reject the committee's report and to send it back, with four additional members, to conduct the election of delegates.

The election conducted by the committee resulted in a more than three-to-one vote for Christoffel and the rest of the original delegation. They were then seated by unanimous vote and accorded an ovation when they entered the hall. The convention also voted to pay all expenses incurred by the Allis-Chalmers local as a result of the dispute over its delegates' credentials.

ORGANIZING DRIVE

The goal of 1,000,000 members by 1945 was set by the convention in a resolution adopted on organizing the unorganized. With the big auto plants almost completely organized, the resolution called attention particularly to the unorganized in the aircraft and agricultural implement industries and the "long-standing menace of "open-shop competitive plants, run-away corporations and mushroom growth of alley job shops." The Chicago and New York areas were declared to be major objectives in this campaign.

The unionization of 70,000 unorganized white-collar office workers in the industry was also included in the program.

Both Negro and white delegates participated in a vigorous discussion of discriminations practiced against Negro workers in hiring, promotions, transfers, etc., in the auto, aircraft and defense industries.

The convention unanimously adopted a resolution for equal rights, which called for: (1) hiring of Negro workers in all departments of auto, aircraft and defense plants; (2) equal opportunity for transfers, promotions and training in such plants; and (3) transfer into aircraft and defense plants of Negro and white workers displaced by curtailed auto production, solely on the basis of their seniority in the auto plants.

FAECT Convention

New York—The sixth national convention of the Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists & Technicians, CIO affiliate, will be held in Detroit, Mich., October 10, 11 and 12, it was revealed here.

ON THE PICKET LINE: Pres. Daniel Deans (in white shirt) of Local 16, CIO Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, gives some of the boys the final once over as they step onto the picket line at the Federal Shipbuilding Corp. in Kearney, N. J. The men are striking for job reclassifications and union security, both recommended by the mediation board and turned down by the company.

Tax Bill Spells Wage Cuts, Senate Group Told By CIO

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16—The tax bill just passed by the House and now up before the Senate not only fails to meet labor's demands for sound and just taxation but also means "more wage cuts and less wages than before," Ralph Hetzel, CIO economic director, told the Senate Finance Committee in testimony on behalf of the CIO this week.

None of the three basic points in the CIO's tax program are met in the present bill, Hetzel pointed out, citing earlier testimony before the House by Pres. Murray calling for:

1. Repeal of all excise and sales taxes that bear on workers' incomes most heavily; 2. return of income tax exemptions to the old levels of $2,500 and $1,000, with no income taxes below those marks and, 3. new revenue to be secured from increased taxes on the rich and on profit swollen corporations that are now let off very lightly.

CONSUMER TAXES

The present bill, Hetzel declared, "adds a tax system composed of less than three-fourths ability to pay and more than one-fourth consumption taxes, to a federal tax system that was already composed of 54 per cent consumption taxes and 46 per cent ability to pay."

This means that the "weight of taxation on consumption has substantially increased," leading to "more wage cuts and less wages than before," he said.

This situation has become progressively worse in the past 10 years, he pointed out, showing that while sales taxes in 1930 accounted for 32 per cent of federal revenue, with 68 per cent coming from taxes on wealth and profits, by 1940 sales and wage taxes had risen to 53.7 per cent, and taxes on the rich had fallen to 46.3 per cent.

INCOME TAXES

Citing Pres. Murray's earlier testimony, Hetzel declared that income taxes below the $2,500 and $1,000 levels "are, in substance, cuts in the standard of living. For wage earners, they mean real wage cuts."

He quoted from the minimum decency budget of $2,200 prepared some time ago by the Heller committee of San Francisco in support of this demand, pointing out that taxes below these levels would seriously impair the health and living standards of the vast majority of the American people. This is particularly acute now, he added, as living costs have advanced rapidly since the study was made and are due to advance even more rapidly in the immediate future.

Continuing unemployment and growing shortages in materials due to defense priorities knock out the argument that sales taxes are justified by the need to cut down civilian consumption, Hetzel pointed out.

"These shortages are most serious," he said. "First, they provide a most serious hindrance to effective defense production. Second, they will be the cause of shocking economic dislocations which will smash literally thousands of businesses and throw hundreds of thousands of men out of work. And third, they will prevent the production of certain types of goods for which there will be a demand."

LACK OF PLANNING

Hetzel put the blame for such shortages squarely on the lack of foresight and planning and refusal of monopoly to consider the public welfare. In addition, he declared, taxes on so-called durable consumers' goods would not decrease workers' consumption of these goods, since the great part of their income goes for food, clothing and shelter.

"It would be a most serious mistake to cut wage earners' low incomes in the hope of cutting down wage earners' demands for the five per cent of consumers durable goods which they may use. . . . It seems perfectly clear that until every possible penny of tax income is taken from the upper brackets of income and from corporation profits, no penny should be withdrawn from families where it will mean less to eat or wear."

TAX WEALTH

Hetzel concluded his testimony by urging the Senate to work out a program based on increased taxes on the rich, on tapping excess corporation profits now left almost untouched, and on taxing huge estates and on transfers of money by the rich.

"The CIO believes that now is the time to strengthen the fundamental fiscal structure of the nation," Hetzel said. "We believe that now is the time to set up a tax program calculated to meet the nation's needs not only in terms of revenue, but also in terms of economic stability."

Win 'Best Plane Pact'

DETROIT, Aug. 16.—A new contract providing the highest wages in the aircraft industry has been signed with the Murray Corp., the Aircraft Division of the United Automobile Workers reports.

Wage increases totaling 31 cents have brought the average hourly scale up to $1.09, "the highest in the country," according to Pres. Lloyd T. Jones of UAW Local 2, who signed the agreement for the union together with Richard T. Frankensteen, CIO national aviation director.

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

Certification of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee in 17 plants of the Republic Steel Corp. will follow very soon after the Natl. Labor Relations Board count this week showing the SWOC in the majority in each plant. This achievement ranks as one of the great victories of the CIO. The groundwork was laid more than four years ago, when CIO started to organize the open shop industry. A long and bitter strike, the refusal of Republic to bargain, the death of many workers and the firing and blacklisting of thousands did not stop the CIO.

After the certification of the SWOC the negotiation of a written contract will be next. Thus the full cycle of CIO organization in Republic will be completed. Other employers who may think of imitating Little Steel's original policies of fighting the CIO should take note. CIO has a habit of bringing such corporations to terms.

CIO policies have scored again in the white collar field, according to United Office and Professional Workers President Lewis Merrill, who reports a four to one election victory in the John Hancock Insurance Co. and a three to one victory at the Boston Mutual Insurance. These gigantic insurance companies rank with the steel corporations in importance in their fields, and the UOPWA seems to be able to handle them as SWOC handles steel.

The roll of CIO election victories continues. The United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers reports an outstanding victory at the Colt Mfg. Co., where the CIO union won 3,878 votes, the "independent" 573. CIO Field Representative Cappellini reports another victory at the Wickwire Co. in Cortland, N. Y., where the SWOC chalked up 678 to 200 for no union. In Michigan, according to Detroit Regional Director August Scholle, the CIO timber workers have won six elections in the upper peninsula, with the AFL totalling just 15 votes in all six camps. The UAWA-CIO at Monroe, Mich., got 223 votes in the Monroe Steel Casting Co. to 29 against.

RAILWAY WORKERS WANT CIO

The railway workers are showing a decided preference for the CIO, judging by the number of requests coming in for organization. Two charters have already been granted, one in Michigan and the other in Connecticut. The charters allow enrollment of all workers who are not members of the four Railroad Brotherhoods unaffiliated with the AFL. Marked progress can be looked for in organizing these workers.

UAW-CIO CONVENTION

The UAW-CIO convention in Buffalo, where the writer has been present, has moved along splendidly. The entire delegation visited the big Curtiss-Wright aircraft plant here in a demonstration of solidarity with the unorganized workers. Plans for complete organization of aircraft workers were formulated, and workers in this industry will soon be coming under the banner of CIO.

Marked progress is reported from CIO affiliates in Michigan, where Regional Director August Scholle writes that Local 15 of the CIO Intl. Woodworkers of America has signed one contract and is negotiating a half dozen others. A majority of the workers at the Northern Canning Co. in Sault Ste. Marie have signed with CIO.

The CIO Hotel and Restaurant Workers have won a closed shop contract with Trainor Bros., a large box lunch concern. The Retail and Wholesale Employes announce that 82 per cent of the Montgomery Ward workers in Detroit have joined the CIO. Also in Detroit District 50 of the United Mine Workers have signed a contract with the Nelson Baker Drug Co., and is negotiating with three others.

COUNCIL ESTABLISHED

Following the CIO policy of setting up Industrial Union Councils wherever they are needed to coordinate CIO activities, a new group has been established in Monroe, Mich. Seven CIO affiliates have already joined the new council and others will be in shortly.

A mysterious stranger who wandered around the Sault Ste. Marie area recently questioning workers about the CIO has been reported to the authorities, Scholle adds, who replied that he had no official connections. The name of the mysterious stranger is known, and when caught up with he will be prosecuted to the limit. Sault Ste. Marie workers were not impressed by this crude effort at intimidation, since they turned out by the hundreds to a recent mass meeting there.

Laundry workers in Detroit are making progress, according to ACW official Jack Ellstein, who reports that Pioneer Laundry, one of the last big holdouts, has just signed, joining all the remaining large laundries in the city.

PICKET LINE DELUXE: Many a striker would give his eyeteeth to serve in a picket line such as this, being conducted by the CIO Natl. Maritime Union on Lake Superior at Duluth, Minn. The pickets, comfortably ensconced in rowboats, are circling the struck S. S. Jupiter.

CIO Unions' Plans Help Unravel U.S. Defense Housing Snarl

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16—Development of union housing projects for defense workers has followed on the heels of the failure of government officials to provide sufficient low rent housing for defense workers, it was reported here by the Federated Press, labor news service.

At least 1,600 dwelling units have been started and money for another 2,250 units has been earmarked under plans developed by the unions. In all instances the workers will own the houses after a certain period of rent paying.

The basic idea being pushed by the union is one worked out by the CIO Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers and launched originally in Camden, N. J.

The plan calls for establishment of a corporation of which residents of the homes will be stockholders. The corporation, usually sponsored by or closely linked to the sponsoring union, enters into a contract with the government for the construction of the units. The government provides all the funds necessary and retains management of the corporation until it is assured that the risk is sufficiently secured.

WORKERS BUY STOCK

Workers who occupy the homes buy a specified amount of stock each month which constitutes rent as well as payment on the purchase price, and within several years establishes a stake in the house which they can convert into cash at some future time, if so desired.

Houses in the Camden project rent for about $30 a month. Five hundred families are already occupying units. In Kearney, N. J., another shipyard center, 500 similar homes are being constructed.

Money has been set aside for 1,000 units in Philadelphia as the result of activity by the city's CIO Industrial Union Council, for 500 units at Alcoa, Tenn., for members of the Aluminum Workers of America, for 250 units at South Bend, Ind., for members of the United Automobile Workers.

AUTO UNION PLANT

UAW officials are reported to be negotiating with C. F. Palmer, Defense Housing Coordinator, for adaptation of the Camden plan to meet requirements in Detroit and other auto centers.

The UAW plan calls for establishment of a housing corporation by a local union. The international has agreed to buy $15,000 to $20,000 worth of stock and an equal amount will be sold to the member applicants.

This money will be used to buy a large plot of land upon which the community will be constructed, and financing will then be undertaken with a local bank under provisions of the Federal Housing Authority.

FORM ASSOCIATION

Local 459 of the UAW at Muncie, Ind., has already formed a Muncie Housing Association. Each applicant for a house buys a $10 share of stock for each $1,000 of the value of the house that constitutes the down payment on the house.

Auto Ladies' Group Meets; Gains Match Those of Union

BUFFALO, Aug. 16—While the big Auto Workers' convention was in session here, the union's women-folk were also holding a convention of their own in a nearby hall, the third annual conference of the UAW-CIO Women's Auxiliaries.

Big membership gains were reported to the 103 delegates to the conference, who came from all sections of the country. During the year, membership rose by 345 per cent, bringing the total into five figures, and 13 new auxiliaries were chartered.

The Women's Auxiliaries have played a big part in the rapid growth and many struggles of the UAW-CIO, by aiding in bringing new members, joining picket-lines and conducting strike kitchens, and maintaining union morale in countless other ways.

ASK HEALTH PROGRAM

Resolutions adopted at the Buffalo conference called for an extensive union health program, a union policy to regain jobs for married women in the defense program, educational propaganda for housewives, support of the USO, democracy in public education, and drastic steps to check the rising cost of living.

Faye Stephenson of Cleveland was re-elected chairman of the National Coordinating Committee of Women's Auxiliaries and Helen Goldmann of Detroit, secretary.

Other members of the committee are Catherine Gelles of Detroit, Jennie Bennett of Michigan, Dorothy Heine of Rockford, Ill., Angie Hanley of New York, and Mary Frances Leonard of Indiana.

Indiana CIO Backs Smith For NLRB

Indianapolis, Aug. 16—A circular letter calling attention to the excellent record of Edwin S. Smith, member of the National Labor Relations Board whose term expires Aug. 24, has been sent out to all Board members and affiliates of the Indiana CIO Council, Walter Frisbie, secretary-treasurer announced this week.

"There has been a drive by our Tory congressmen and others to oust Smith or at least to keep him from being reappointed," the letter stated. "This drive has been less spectacular, but hardly less dangerous to the Labor Movement than the recently defeated drive to handcuff organizing."

Unions were asked to write to Pres. Roosevelt and other government officials concerned asking for the reappointment of Smith.

Strike Shuts Mack Truck Factory

ALLENTOWN, Pa., Aug. 16—With the Mack Truck Co. plant here strike-bound for the first time in nearly three decades, CIO union and management representatives this week were to meet with the U. S. Conciliation Service in Washington.

Some 3,000 members of Local 677, United Automobile Workers, walked out in a dispute over the length of time to which a recently-negotiated wage increase should be made retroactive. The plant has large defense orders for tank transmission housings.

Responding to a request from Undersecretary of War R. F. Patterson, Local Pres. Joseph Sandy said the union would permit shipment of finished products in order not to retard tank production throughout the nation.

Metal Miners Urge Fascism's Defeat In U.S., Abroad

JOPLIN, Mo., Aug. 16—Defeat of fascism abroad and in the U. S. is the keystone of a six-point declaration of policy on national defense adopted in the closing hours of the 38th convention of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, CIO.

"It is our considered judgment that there can be no peace in this world—that there can be no lasting peace and democracy even for our nation—without a smashing and final defeat for fascism," the program said.

The six-point program, adopted unanimously, called for aid by the U. S. government to the people of Great Britain and the Soviet Union "in their fight against fascist aggression," a cessation of all supplies of "oil, copper, iron ore and other such materials for war to Japan, Germany and Italy," and "no compromise with appeasers of fascism."

On the domestic front, the program called for an end to "the labor-baiting and reactionary attacks upon the people's fundamental civil liberties," for effective checks on "war profiteering by monopoly corporations," and for recognition of labor's demand for representation on all policy-making bodies of the government, "equal in number and in authority to representatives of industry."

This program, the convention declared, is in line with labor's constant opposition to fascism "before it became 'fashionable' to be anti-fascist," pointing to labor's support of the people of Ethiopia, Spain and China and to its long struggles with the advocates of fascism in the U. S.

In addition to the six point program, the convention hit sharply at the use of armed forces in strikes, voted support of Harry Bridges, west coast CIO leader and president of the Longshoremen's & Warehousmen's Union in his fight against a second exile threat, and was critical of Associate Director Sidney Hillman of the OPM.

"We emphatically condemn the use of Federal troops in breaking labor strikes as un-American and contrary to the best interests of national defense," the convention declared.

On Bridges, the resolution said: "This international union calls on the government of the U. S. to quit persecuting Harry Bridges," and in addition reiterated "wholehearted admiration and support for the courageous and militant leadership" of the west coast CIO leader.

Criticism of Hillman centered on a charge that he "has presumed to represent labor in government without official designation by the labor movement," that he had brought about certification of the Trona strike to the Defense Mediation Board, resulting "in prolongation of the strike for an additional three months, with added hardship for the workers as the only result," and that he had tried to get around the union's opposition to labor advisory committees to secure local representatives "as window dressing for the bosses' program in the copper industry."

Merge With NMU

New York, Aug. 16—The Scandinavian Seamen's Club has merged with the Pan American Dept. of the National Maritime Union, officials of both organizations announced.

Miners Win Long Fight On Pay Issue

Birmingham, Aug. 16—Full vindication of years of struggle by the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers to establish the principle of pay for all hours spent by miners underground was given in the ruling of the Federal District Court here upholding a Wage Hour Division order requiring payment "from collar to collar," including time spent traveling underground to the mine face.

The Wage Hour Order, won by the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers some months ago, was chal- as it was announced. Thousands of lenged by the employers as soon miners will benefit by the court's ruling, a large proportion of whom used to spend an hour or more a day traveling to their work places without pay.

LONG A GRIEVANCE

The Wage Hour order was won after argument by Reid Robinson, union president, Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, and Ben Riskin, research director for the union. The former practice of not paying wages for time necessarily spent in getting to the work place has been a union grievance for many years.

The court ruling was hailed by Robinson and by Pressman as one of the most important legal victories labor has had in recent years. "The verdict completely sustains the position of the union that time spent reaching the mine face should be paid for," Pressman said, "thus establishing a principle of the utmost importance and value to the miners affected throughout the nation."

Federal Union Wins Rehiring Of Members

Washington, Aug. 16—Reinstatement of two navy yard workers who were summarily fired some weeks ago was announced by the United Federal Workers, CIO, as an important victory in their campaign to protect federal employes from arbitrary firing and other discriminations practiced in certain government agencies.

At the same time, the UFWA took further steps in its drive to win reinstatement for Helen Miller, active union member who was fired by Labor Secretary Frances Perkins with the statement "there can be no collective bargaining in the federal service."

In the Miller case, the Secretary has not only refused to permit open and impartial hearings on charges of "communism" which she has admitted are "based on opinion," but has also refused to meet with CIO union officials in this city.

Coast Dockmen Rap Army's Use of 'Labor Battalions'

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 16—A new $400,000 wage raise for employes of the Southern California Gas Co., gained by the Utility Workers' Organizing Committee, and assistance to the Longshoremen who face replacement on Pacific Coast docks by military labor battalions, engaged the attention of the Los Angeles Industrial Union Council last week.

Danger of the labor battalions, which the secretary of war proposes to put to work on army transport docks, was clearly outlined by Eugene Paton, district secretary of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union.

Paton pointed out that these battalions, working at army pay, would replace longshoremen who have performed this work for many years.

"It would be but a step to replacing the regular longshoremen on all the docks," said Paton. "There is no more reason to replace civilian longshoremen on the army docks than there would be to replace civilian workers in aircraft plants and other defense industries."

The utility workers' gains came under the wage reopening clause of the contract they recently negotiated with Southern California Gas. They got a blanket raise of $7.50 per month for all employees, and retain the right to reopen the contract again whenever rising living costs require during the life of the contract. The company, on the other hand, is foreclosed from cutting wages.

Total wage gains for the utility workers throughout the Southern California gas system are now $2,500,000.

Cafeteria Union Wins Pay Boost

Lynn, Mass., Aug. 16—A contract granting 4 per cent wage boosts and providing for further 1 per cent increases with each 1 per cent rise in the cost of living, was gained here by CIO United Food Workers, Local 701, for 174 employes in the Huntt chain of cafeterias.

Pres. Harold Paige of the local said the wage increase was the second this year, a two-day strike in February having gained a 7 per cent raise at that time, with a provision that the wage scale be reopened when living costs had increased 4 per cent.

Book Firm Signs, Raises Pay 11%

New York, Aug. 16—A 11 per cent pay increase and a closed shop are among the terms of a contract negotiated with the Oxford Book Co., the Book & Magazine Guild announced this week.

The other provisions call for Saturdays off during eight months of the year; severance pay for draftees and sick leave.

Terms of the agreement are now in effect with wage increases retroactive to July 21, although the contract will not be signed until September 1.

WHERE PRICES ARE HEADED: Leon Henderson, U. S. Price Administration director, shows a Senate banking committee where prices are headed unless immediate control legislation is passed by Congress. Cost of living has already jumped, is due for further increases.

CIO Wins 10c Raise At Armour

By LES O'REAR

CHICAGO, Aug. 16—An estimated 20,000 packinghouse workers in 15 plants of Armour & Company will be covered by a master contract between the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee, CIO, and Armour & Company, according to a formula worked out last week by the National Defense Mediation Board and accepted by both parties.

The formula also calls for a 10 cents an hour flat increase above wage schedules in effect April 1 of this year, thus bringing the basic rate to 72½ cents per hour. This is an estimated $5,000,000 annual increase. Direct negotiations between the union and Armour will proceed on other points at issue such as the union shop, military service and hours of work.

OTHER PACTS

Simultaneously, PWOC Chairman J. C. Lewis took steps to bring two other big meat packers under blanket contract with the union. Both the Cudahy Packing Company and Wilson and Company have been formally requested to open contract negotiations covering all their plants in which PWOC locals have bargaining rights.

Chairman Lewis, who headed the PWOC delegation during the two days of negotiations before a panel of the Mediation Board, expressed his appreciation of the assistance rendered his committee by CIO.

"Particularly helpful," said Mr. Lewis, "was the assistance of Allan Haywood, General Counsel Lee Pressman and Research Director Ralph Hetzel, Jr."

Hit Gimbels' 'Double-Cross' In Parleys

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Double-dealing broke down a settlement reached last week with the Gimbel management, the United Department Store Employes Union reported here.

A threatened strike was averted by a stipulation providing for an extension of negotiations to work out the terms of a contract.

"We granted this extension after the management had signified its desire to continue negotiations in the same equitable relationship that has always existed between the two bodies," a union statement declared. "We found during today's negotiations that the management was double-dealing and bargaining in bad faith."

"While pretending to negotiate with our committee the management at the same time was preparing to knife us in the back by attempting to sign a separate contract with our warehouse unit. This deliberate violation of all existing agreements with the union is an obvious attempt to split our union.

DESCRIBE MANEUVER

"This contract was signed with two of the warehouse malcontents over the heads of our members. During ten weeks of negotiating not once was this question raised. This contemptible maneuver provided for a two-year contract with a clause providing an opening after 15 months for a wage and hour arbitration."

The union committee broke off negotiations after discovering that the management had secretly signed a separate agreement covering warehouse employes, who previously had been represented by the Department Store Employes Union.

The membership of the Gimbel chapter of the union voted full strike authority to the negotiating committee at a special membership meeting.

"We are now determined that any new negotiations will be held only on the terms of a 40-hour, five-day week, closed shop and a two-dollar wage increase," said Walter Michelson, president of the union.

Steel Union Wins Poll At Bethlehem

BETHLEHEM, Pa., Aug. 23—Continuing its fast-moving organization campaign in the strongholds of the long anti-union Bethlehem Steel Corp., the CIO Steel Workers Organizing Committee today had rolled up a 2-1 majority in a National Labor Relations Board election here.

The results:

SWOC	11,535
Independent Union	5,095
Neither	839
Total Votes Cast	17,745

Results of an election at the smaller Pottstown, Pa., plant were not available as this paper went to press, but it was believed the SWOC would score another decisive victory there.

The SWOC has already won six plant elections at Bethlehem properties, and the only sizable remaining plant where a poll is still to be held is at Sparrows Point, Md. Elections and cross-checking of union membership cards with company records have already indicated CIO majorities at Republic Steel, Inland Steel and Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co.

Got 'Raise,' Now They Can't Find It

WATERBURY, Conn., Aug. 23.— A now-you-see-it-now-you-don't act by the non-union Chase Brass & Copper Co. here left workers asking this week what happened to an 8 cents an hour raise the company announced.

The raise was granted to help prevent organization by the Int'l. Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, who had just forced a like amount from a competitor, the American Brass Co.

Chase workers thought they were getting a "free ride" until they discovered that although the firm had raised the hourly rate it had reduced the bonus an equivalent amount.

This Strike Is Up In the Air!

Chattanooga, Tenn., Aug. 23— This strike's up in the air—but the strikers really like it!

The CIO Chattanooga Guide Assn. is picketing Rock City Gardens, a commercially sponsored scenic attraction atop Lookout Mountain, because the management uses advertising that discriminates against employment of guides.

The guides for many years had been conducting tourists free through the Federal park here, and then, for a percentage of the admission fee, through some of the commercial attractions. The Rock City Gardens' operator not only refused to pay the percentage but posted highway signs saying guides were not needed.

$1,500 SMILE: Helen Post, Clarksburg, W. Va., sported the winning smile when she got word that a U. S. court had directed the Clarksburg Exponent & Telegram to give her $1,500 back pay. Miss Post, a member of the CIO American Newspaper Guild, was found by the Labor Board to have been fired for union activity.

Negotiate Toy Strike Issues

Erie, Pa., Aug. 23—Negotiations marked the second week of a strike of 500 toy workers at Holgate Bros. Co., at Kane, Pa., the United Paper, Novelty & Toy Workers Union reported this week.

Meanwhile, Union demands continued strong for a 15 cents an hour raise of wages that have been as low as 30 cents an hour for women and 35 cents for men, and for a union shop. The company offered three cents.

Postal Telegraph To Get CIO Wage Raise Demand

New York, Aug. 23—A negotiating committee of 35 delegates from locals of the American Communications Association, CIO, with a combined membership of 14,500 workers throughout the country, met here this week with officials of the Postal Telegraph Co. to bargain on the terms of a new contract.

The CIO delegates were led by Joseph P. Selly, ACA president.

Declaring that the rising cost of living made a wage increase imperative, the union's negotiating committee indicated that this would be the major demand. President Selly said that "the wages of Postal Telegraph workers have for years been at a bare subsistence level and far below that paid for similar work in other communications companies.

"Now the rising cost of living has resulted in a cut in real wages for our members and makes it practically impossible for them to maintain a decent living standard of living."

Tobacco Stemmers Gain Better Pact in Richmond

Richmond, Va., Aug. 23—One thousand two hundred tobacco stemmers and laborers this week won protection under a modified union shop contract signed with the Export Tobacco Co. here by Local 350, United Cannery, Agriculture, Packing and Allied Workers of America.

An organizing committee from this local and four others in the State is planning an intensive Fall drive to organize several thousand tobacco workers in Richmond and vicinity during the busy season, Organizer Bob Himmaugh said.

CHICAGO, Aug. 23—(FP)—Reinstatement of 448 workers at the local plant of the Republic Steel Corp., scene of the 1937 Memorial Day Massacre, was ordered here by the National Labor Relations Board.

The order, made public by Acting NLRB Regional Director I. S. Dorfman, upheld the findings of an NLRB trial examiner. It also called upon Tom Girdler's firm to offer back pay to 38 additional workers and to dissolve the Steel Workers Union of America, a company union.

Iowa-Nebraska Council Hails CIO Policies

OTTUMWA, Ia., Aug. 23—The fourth annual convention of the Iowa-Nebraska CIO Industrial Union Council opened here Aug. 14 with 120 delegates from CIO affiliates throughout the state in attendance. Jack Woodrow, president of the Ottumwa Council opened the first day's session and Mayor David A. Nevin, a former Iowa coal miner, gave the welcoming address.

The gavel was then turned over to Lewis J. Clark, president of the two-state Council. Powers Hapgood, representing the national CIO, gave an address on the third day which was broadcast over a local station.

Among the other speakers were Frank Wilson, international board member of the United Mine Workers; Gen. Philip B. Fleming, Wage-Hour administrator, and a number of other national and state government officials.

HAIL MURRAY, LEWIS

Delegates voted to commend CIO Pres. Philip Murray and other CIO leaders for their fight against reactionary legislation and to commend John L. Lewis and the United Mine Workers for the great service rendered the labor movement.

The convention went on record in favor of the reappointment of Edwin S. Smith as a member of the National Labor Relations Board; condemned government officials responsible for the use of armed forces to break strikes and picket lines, and protested against anti-labor policies of the Draft Board.

SUPPORT COUNCIL PLAN

Other resolutions recommended the passage by Congress of a national reconstruction highway bill; urged change in the state unemployment compensation law: called for the repeal of the Iowa Criminal Syndicalism law and endorsed Pres. Murray's plan for labor and industry councils. The program advanced by Emil Rieve, head of the Textile Workers Union, to aid workers thrown out of employment by the silk shortage was also approved.

ELECT BEN HENRY

Ben Henry of the United Mine Workers and former secretary-treasurer of the State Council, was elected president and T. B. Hadden, United Packinghouse Workers, was chosen secretary-treasurer.

The following vice presidents were also elected:

Elmer Warren and Joseph Clark, Steel Workers Organizing Committee; Orvel Champ and Jennie Shuck, Packinghouse Workers; Alex Barbour, United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers; Don Pinkston, Siux City Council; Edith Daniels, Des Moines Council; Lawrence O'Neill, United Rubber Workers; John Keith, Farm Equipment Workers; George Fillman, Mine Workers; Al Fees, Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers and Wayne Knight, Hosiery Workers.

Alabama CIO Urges Joint Parley

Washington, Aug. 23—Leaders of the Alabama Industrial Union Council, following out instructions from the state CIO's recent convention, have urged CIO national leaders to suggest a meeting between heads of the American and British labor movements.

John Brophy, CIO director of Industrial union councils, announced receipt of the resolutions from President William Mitch and Secretary-Treasurer Yelverton Cowherd of the Alabama council. The resolution suggested that the international labor parley discuss "American aid to Britain short of war, on joint economic and political defense, and on war aims and the long-range purpose of the democratic cause."

Los Angeles, Calif., Aug. 23—The Los Angeles Industrial Union has gone on record in support of aid to Great Britain and the Soviet Union in their fight against the Nazi German machine.

Threaten Strike At Shell Oil

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 23—Possibility of a strike by 2,500 employes at California Shell Union Oil properties loomed this week, it was revealed here by Pres. O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union.

Cause of the walkout threat, the union leader said, was the company's sudden announcement of a longer work week, coupled with a flock of layoffs and the firm's refusal to grant seniority rights in negotiations which began last February.

The men are employed at three refineries, at four production fields and on the Shell pipeline.

LONGER WORK WEEK

Several months ago the union granted the company temporary permission to increase the work week from 36 to 40 hours, Pres. Knight pointed out, with the stipulation that such an increase must be shown to be a necessity, that no men must be laid off, and that the 36-hour week be resumed after the emergency.

"There is no noticeable labor shortage in the oil industry," Knight declared. "Present production and refining capacity are ample."

He added that the company's lay-off action is felt by the CIO union to be "a move by Shell Oil to institute a permanent increase in hours, which will result in a 10 per cent cut in employment in the industry.

BIG U. S. CONTRACTS

"Shell Oil has 42 per cent of U. S. contracts for aviation gasoline despite the fact that it is a foreign-owned corporation, the head of whose parent company, Sir Henry Deterding of Royal Dutch Shell, once made a $5,000,000 gift to the Nazi Hitler government.

"Shell has been busily engaged in shipping oil to supply the Japanese war machine, and has shown a fine profit both for last year and for the first six months of this year."

NLRB Files Charge Against Stations

New York, Aug. 23—A complaint charging the Greater N. Y. Broadcasting Corp., operator of station WOV, with unfair labor practices, has been issued by the Labor Board, the American Communications Association announced here.

The Board accused the company of having refused to bargain with the union, on the basis of facts brought out in a nine months' investigation.

'AYE' FOR UNION SHOP: Members of the CIO Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers give their O. K. to a union shop contract negotiated with the New York Shipbuilding Corp. of Camden, N. J. The contract, first of its kind in the east, broke the shipbuilders' united stand for the open shop.

Electrical Union Convention Opens Sept. 1

NEW YORK, N. Y., Aug. 23—The CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers of America will open its seventh International convention on Labor Day, September 1, at the Hotel Walt Whitman in Camden, N. J. More than four hundred delegates are expected to attend. The convention will probably last five days.

Members of Local 103, the "biggest radio local in the world," consisting of 14,000 employes of the Radio Corporation of America, will be hosts at the convention. Joseph Mitton, Camden, is president of the Local.

GAINS IN YEAR

At the national office of the union here, a spokesman for the UE said the Convention would receive official reports "showing membership gains, new contracts signed, old contracts renewed, maintenance of harmonious relationship with employers, wage gains and other union benefits won during the past 12 months surpassing the record of all four previous years combined." The UE was founded in March, 1936.

It was said that the UE now has 583 plants under contract, covering 316,000 employes in the electrical and machine manufacturing industry.

NEW CONTRACTS

Outstanding developments for the year include: the first signed contract with Westinghouse Electric, second largest firm in the industry; renewal of the contract with General Electric, largest firm in the industry, with many gains; first signed contract with General Motors (seven plants in GM's electrical division); first signed contract with Phelps Dodge Products Corporation (three plants); and other similar advances in collective bargaining.

BOARD TO MEET

The UE's General Executive Board, highest body of the union between annual conventions, will meet the day before the convention opens. Members of the Board are:

James B. Carey, Washington, D. C., General President (Mr. Carey is also Secretary of the CIO); Julius Emspak, Tuckahoe, N. Y., General Secretary-Treasurer; James J. Matles, New York City, National Director of Orangization; Harry Block, Philadelphia, Pa., General Vice-President for District 1; Albert J. Fitzgerald, Lynn, Mass., Vice-President for District 2; Leo Jandreau, Schenectady, N. Y., for District 3; James McLeish, West Orange, N. Dyers Win 7 Hour Strike

Derby, Conn., Aug. 23—A seven-hour strike at the Housatonic Dyeing and Finishing Co. here ended with a complete victory for some 300 workers employed at the plant, officials of the Dyers' Federation, announced this week.

Several hours after the workers walked out, the company agreed to recognize the union as bargaining agent and to sit down with union representatives to negotiate a contract. The agreement was drawn up and signed without further delay, and later ratified unanimously by the workers at a special meeting.

UNION SHOP

It sets up a 100 per cent union shop, and provides for wage increases ranging from two to five cents an hour.

The management also agreed to maintain sanitary working conditions; to use the union label; to hold jobs open for drafted workers and to abide by other protective clauses for a Federation contract, including recognition of a shop committee and arbitration of unjust discharges.

Jobless Silk Workers Get Priority For New Positions

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 23.—Employment priority will be granted jobless silk workers thrown out of work by Government's demands on civilian industry, it was agreed here this week at a joint meeting of Labor, Industry and Government.

An estimated one-third of 2,500 to 5,000 workers suffering from "priority unemployment" are skilled enough to take defense jobs. Others who must be trained for new employment will be paid during the training period, according to the plan, which was proposed by the Office of Production Management.

OPM officials said this will insure displaced workers employment as soon as they are referred to defense jobs.

Estimated need for new workers in this area for the next month in defense industry is 1,700. Unemployed silk workers will be given "A-1-A" priority for these jobs.

OPM officials spoke hopefully of extending the plan to other industries dislocated by the defense program, such as rubber, diecasting and auto.

CIO union representatives present included:

Alexander McKeown, national president, American Federation of Hoisery Workers; William M. Leader, president, AFHW Branch No. 1; Philip H. Van Gelder, secretary-treasurer, Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers.

Victor Pasche, News Guild Secretary, To Retire From Post

New York, Aug. 23—Sec.-Treas. Victor Pasche of the American Newspaper Guild this week announced he would not seek re-election to office in the Guild's forthcoming election referendum.

His withdrawal assured the election of William B. Rodgers of Washington as secretary-treasurer.

The retirement of Pache and the withdrawal of four other candidates for General Executive Board on the so-called "Administration" slate was proposed by leaders of that group to its supporters two weeks ago. Acceptance of the plan was announced here Aug. 15.

In remaining election contests, Pres. Donal Sullivan of Boston will be opposed by Milton Murray of Detroit, and Executive Vice-Pres. Milton Kaufman by Sam Eubanks of Seattle, Wash.

Rodgers, the next secretary-treasurer, is a former president of the Washington Newspaper Guild and of the Washington, D. C. Industrial Union Council.

Certify Strike To Mediators

The firm's 1,100 employes, members of the United Automobile, Aircraft & Agricultural Implement Workers, walked out July 10 in a dispute over piece rates.

1,500 Strike At Gimbel's N. Y. Store

NEW YORK, Aug. 22—Negotiations continued today looking toward a settlement of the CIO strike at Gimbel's, one of New York's largest department stores, while a modish picket line of several hundred sales clerks and other employes kept thousands of pickets out of the block-long emporium.

Principal issues involved were the five-day, 40-hour week and increased wages, demanded by the CIO United Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Employes. The strike was the first in a major New York department store, and its effectiveness was apparent from the outset.

EFFECTIVE WALKOUT

While the strike was under way in New York, President Samuel Wolchok and Secretary-Treasurer John Cooney of the international union conferred in Washington with Louis Brodio of Gimbel's, President John Lewis of the United Mine Workers, and Allan S. Haywood, CIO director of organization.

Union leaders reported that all but eight of the 1,500 members of the local answered the strike call.

Effectiveness of the strike was confirmed by the New York paper PM: "A walk through the vast Thirty-third Street store gave you the impression that business was unusually dull, even for a rainy day. At 11 a. m., for example, at the basement soda fountain, visible from the tunnel connecting the BMT and IRT subways, not one of the 30 seats was occupied. By noon somebody had covered the soda fountain window with brown wrapping paper so subway passengers couldn't look inside."

FEW ARRESTS

New York police were out in numbers around the store, but found little trouble in handling the good-natured crowd of pickets. They nevertheless managed to find excuses for arresting seven of them the first day.

Inside the store, which was manned by bewildered substitutes, business had fallen off to a fraction of the usual rate. The peaceful quiet contrasted sharply with the days before the strike when the management had brought in 2,000 substitutes to work along with the regular sales force.

The resulting confusion, according to irate shoppers made a buying trip to Gimbel's an experience not soon to be forgotten.

Not permitted to picket Gimbel's entrances to the subway lines, the union solved the problem by placing groups of "window shoppers" at the doors, who commented in loud conversational tones about the strike whenever a prospective customer appeared.

The CIO affiliate has contracts with a number of other department stores in New York, but has never before had to use the strike weapon. Possibility of averting the strike faded last week when the union accused Gimbel's management of a last-minute "double-cross" in a proposed agreement.

How Papers Handled Store Strike

NEW YORK, Aug. 22—The CIO strike of 1,500 employes at Gimbel's, big New York department store, was a major headache for the metropolitan newspapers, from whom Gimbel's purchases advertising space running into hundreds of thousands of dollars each year.

Neatest solution for the harassed big business press was worked out by the Heart Journal & American, which managed to devote two-thirds of a column to the walkout without ever mentioning the word "strike." Hearst readers were treated to a mysterious tale of "picketing" and "demonstrating" and to the management's side of the case.

The Times, which says it prints all the news fit to print, devoted seven inches with a small headline on page four to the strike of 1,500 people on the city's main stem. Hearst's Mirror managed to find space for four inches on page 16.

ON MOVIE PAGE

The News tucked the story away on page 48 in a spot flanked by movie ads. The Post and the World-Telegram both had routine stories which stressed the fact that the store remained open for business. The ultra-conservative Sun had a long yarn, most of it devoted to the management's statements.

Fairest treatment appeared in the Herald-Tribune, which had a long story balancing off the union's and the management's statements, and in PM, the paper which sells no advertising, which carried several pictures and stories of the strike.

Auto Union Re-Elects Pres. Thomas, Sec. Addes

BUFFALO, N. Y., Aug. 23—The CIO United Automobile, Aircraft & Agricultural Implement Workers wound up its lively two-week convention Aug. 16 by re-electing Pres. R. J. Thomas and Sec.-Treas. George Addes.

Thomas, who is a vice president of the CIO, was unopposed and was re-elected unanimously.

Addes received 1,759 votes, to 1,307 for Richard Leonard of Detroit, a member of the UAW-CIO executive board.

Elected to the executive board were the following:

Michigan: Melvin Bishop, Richard Frankensteen, Richard Leonard, William McCauley, Walter Reuther, Carl Swanson and L. L. Smith.

Indiana: Arnold Atwood.

Wisconsin: George Nordstrom.

Missouri: Delmond Garst.

California: Jack Montgomery.

South: Thomas Starline.

Eastern Area: Charles Kerrigan and Alex McGowan.

Canada: George Burt.

NEW VOTE SYSTEM

Thomas and Addes are ex-officio members of the board. Under a constitutional change adopted by the convention, the vote of the board members will be weighted in accordance with the number of dues-paying members in their regions. The president and secretary will cast votes equal to the largest of any individual board member.

Earlier the convention adopted a resolution excluding Communist, Nazi and Fascist members or followers from holding office in the union.

CONDEMN "ISMS"

The resolution, one of three brought out by groups on the resolutions committee, was submitted by Harvey Kitzman, committee member from Racine, Wisc. It provided that "no member of any local union shall be eligible to hold any elective or appointive position in this international union or any local union in this international union if he is a member of or subservient to any political organization such as the Communists, Nazi or Fascist organizations."

In its final day the convention reiterated its opposition to "the entrance of the United States into foreign wars," but called for aid "to those people who continue to fight against Hitler and his allies."

AID TO ANTI-NAZIS

The convention's resolution noted that "the democratic way of life, which allows the full development of free trade unionism," is endangered "by the war machine of the Nazi and Fascist aggressors." In recommending aid to foes of Hitlerism, the union stated that the granting of such assistance "does not imply any approval of the form of government of those people," nor does passage of the resolution "change the position of this international union or imply any approval of the philosophy or form of governments of those peoples" who receive aid from the U. S.

Before adjourning the delegates recommended that the 1942 convention be held in Chicago if suitable accommodations can be arranged.

Win Store Poll In Chicago

CHICAGO, Aug. 23.—Further progress in the CIO drive to organize State Street, Chicago's big department store district, was reported this week.

Ernest B. Pugh, CIO regional director, announced that the United Retail & Wholesale Employes gained a 7-to-1 victory in a Labor Board election among employes of the Boston Store.

Vote was 723 for the CIO affiliate, only 135 against.

Union Demands Shipyard Accept Mediation Plan

With the company refusing to accept a Mediation Board proposal that all members of the union be obligated to retain their membership for the duration of the contract, the union remained adamant that the firm, a subsidiary of the U. S. Steel Corp., bow to the wishes of the union and the government.

Possibility that the government might take over the plant was seen here by some observers, and it was rumored that legal papers necessary to such a move by the federal government have been prepared for several days.

MORE PARLEYS

Emerging from a White House conference with President Roosevelt and other U. S. officials, Green declared:

"The President requested our organization, and me in particular, to explore immediately the possibility of further negotiations with the company. The government does not want to take the plant over."

Green said that though previous conferences with the Shipyards had been fruitless, the parleys would continue. He expressed the belief that the matter could be quickly settled by the company's acceptance of the Mediation Board proposals, adding that "in my humble opinion, this matter ought to be got over quickly and the men ought to be at work next week."

OFFICIALS ATTEND

Attending the White House meeting with the President and Green were Secretary of the Navy Knox, OPM Associate Director General Sidney Hillman, Chairman William Davis of the Natl. Defense Mediation Board; Myron Taylor, former chairman of the board of U. S. Steel; Pres. Kornsdorf of the company; and Judge W. P. Stacy of North Carolina, a Mediation Board member.

The strike was called Aug. 7 when the company turned down the maintenance of membership proposal and a suggestion for reclassification of the wage rates on a number of jobs. At that time the union sharply criticized the company's arbitrary rejection of work-

Another Win In Plane Drive

DAYTON, Ohio, Aug. 23—Making further progress in its aviation organizing campaign, the UAW-CIO scored a 3-1 NLRB election victory at the Standard Aircraft Products Co. here, Paul R. Miley, UAW regional director announced today.

Hugh Ritenour, union international representative, said that as a result of the victory aircraft workers in Dayton are joining the CIO in increasing numbers.

LABOR & POLITICS

No one can observe the legislative record of our times without recognizing that virtually all the gains won by labor through its trade unions may be taken away through repressive anti-labor legislation. . . .

I shall not catalog here all the threats contained in proposed state and national legislation. It is sufficient that we recognize that the actions of our elected representatives in all branches of the Government are of greatest importance to the well-being of the people in our labor and farm organizations. It is plain that in paralleling industrial organizations there must be developed strong and effective political organization. It is time that we in the labor movement abandon the old-fashioned 19th century prejudice that labor should not become involved in politics.

In the days when the only issue was a choice between Tweedle-dum and Tweedle-dee, this whole attitude may have had some merit. Today, when political issues profoundly concern the most fundamental interests of labor, farm and progressive groups throughout the country, this "splendid isolation" from politics can no longer be allowed. It is time for labor, it is time for the small farmers to build their political strength.

We must use this strength against all the forces which in their own special selfish interests, in their greed for profits, and in their efforts to preserve positions of power and wealth, have always opposed those men, movements, and proposals which would bring to the masses of our country greater well-being and a greater measure of participation in the democratic process . . . Facing this common opponent, all progressive groups are called upon to join themselves together in genuine co-operative political activity for the pursuit of their common objectives.

END UNEMPLOYMENT

The first objective clearly must be the full operation of our economy with full employment, with full realization of that high degree of material well-being which our great resources, in man-power and material make possible. I need not tell this gathering of American workers and farmers of the devastation levied on the lives of our people by the tragic waste of unemployment.

I think it is time to recognize that an administration and a Congress that is incapable of dealing with the problem of unemployment at the height of a defense boom will be utterly incompetent to deal with the gigantic unemployment problems of a postwar period. But we cannot expect to fill the Congress with men capable of formulating an adequate policy to meet this problem after the unemployment arises.

Now is the time for us to use our political influence that we may have some measure of confidence in the judgments of our Government when the deluge is upon us. To wait until the postwar economic crises has broken to build our political strength will be too late. We must build now for the solution of the problems of today.

DEMOCRATIC FREEDOMS

The defense of the democratic way of life must be rooted in the operation of the processes of democracy in the daily life of our people. These democratic rights —freedom of thought, freedom of the press, freedom of assembly—are the targets of these elements in our society who value lightly these democratic freedoms. They are attacked especially by those who are afraid that the full and vigorous operation of democracy will jeopardize their special positions of privilege and power. Just as we have had to fight to establish freedom, we are compelled today to fight to retain it. Political action on the part of labor and the farmers will seek as a major objective to strengthen and extend these basic elements of the American way.

We have all observed the attempts of those enemies of democracy to use the defense program as an excuse for attacking civil liberties which in reality they have always opposed. Only recently in Congress, the CIO and LNPL with other progressive groups, defeated by a close vote the efforts of the administration to clamp wire-tapping on the American people and thus invade the citizens' privacy of thought and communication.

* * * *

For organized labor, progressive political action has certain special objectives. As the bulwark of the progressive movement, trade unions are constantly under attack.

Labor cannot be blinded to the fact that this repressive legislation was given the tacit and, in all too many instances, the outspoken approval of administration forces. In spite of all our efforts, we have been unable to get from the majority party any effective defense for labor's rights.

The Vinson anti-strike bill was stream-lined by the highest labor spokesman of the administration at the suggestion of the President. The May-Connally proposal to authorize the use of troops to break any defense strike at the discretion of the President had the vigorous and stubborn support of administration representatives.

The opposition to these proposals was found to consist jointly of Republican and Democratic members of Congress, with the leaders of neither party playing a role in the defense of labor's rights. The victory over this repressive legislation has truly been an independent, non-partisan victory.

Preservation of these rights of American trade unions has been temporarily assured by labor's present political power. The establishment of these rights beyond all threat of repeal or revision must be a major aim of progressive political action.

Some Planning's Needed

FARMERS' CONDITIONS

The objective farmers seek by progressive political action is simply the attainment of a decent standard of living under conditions of security for themselves and their families. It is a needless tragedy that the farmers of America have not enjoyed such conditions. The standard of living of the agricultural population has been depressed between the pincers movement of high prices for the things farmers buy and low prices for the products they sell.

The progressive forces of labor have always given support to legislation in the interests of the small farmers. There is nothing contradictory in the efforts of the wage earner to improve his conditions of employment on the one hand, and the farmer to add to his well-being on the other hand. The old device of "divide and rule" has been used to separate and antagonize farmers and laborers by those who oppose the best interests of each group.

* * * *

BUILD DEMOCRATIC DEFENSE

Finally, in these days when National Defense is the first order of the day, the political influence of labor and farmers must be directed to the realization of a democratic defense program.

The complete lack of planning which has characterized our defense effort is now being reflected in the shortages of basic materials which threaten the shut-down of vast proportions of our productive capacity. More than two million men are expected to be thrown out of employment due to this lack of foresight. The housing needs of defense workers have been criminally neglected. A temper exists in Washington not to be concerned with these inefficiencies because "the consumer can always be made to tighten his belt."

A policy of appeasement of the big business interests that have always opposed labor has been followed in the establishment of the defense set-up. Control of the defense program has passed to those representatives of industry that have fought the advances of labor and the enactment of progressive social legislation throughout the past decade. Control has passed to Wall Street! The reward for capitulation and appeasement of these reactionary interests was supposed to be national unity, the co-operation of business which would be reflected in efficient conduct of the defense program. But instead, what has been the result?

* * * *

THE CIO'S PROPOSALS

From the outset, labor has protested the mounting shortcomings of the defense program. Labor has protested the betrayal of the New Deal by putting Wall Street back in the saddle.

Constructively President Murray of the CIO has submitted time and again a proposal known as the Industry Council Plan. The essence of this proposal is the active and effective participation in the determination and administration of the policies of the Defense Program by ALL groups concerned, including farmers and labor representatives, as well as industry and Government. Months ago this plan was urged as a practical way to meet the impending shortages of such material as steel and aluminum, and to deal with such problems as the unemployment threatening the automobile industry. For months President Roosevelt and others in positions of responsibility have flaunted with utter disregard these progressive, constructive proposals of labor. The result speaks for itself.

Labor demands participation in these problems involving labor's interests. Farmers demand participation in the solution of those problems concerning farmers. Yet, such representation as labor has had in the Defense Program has been utterly inadequate. Mr. John L. Lewis well-described the situation when he said recently: "It is true that there are some individuals from labor in the set-up. But they do not represent labor in Government; they represent the Government in labor. Their business is to chloroform labor so that it will be voiceless and supine and go along with any policy . . . in the interests of those who would make a financial killing in this emergency."

The experience of the last year has established the fact that the financial representatives of industry who sit behind a desk are incompetent to direct the Defense Program. In the interests of efficient production of defense goods, and in the interests of protecting the well-being of the people in the conduct of that program, progressive groups must continue to urge fuller participation in the affairs of Government on the part of the industrial workers and the farmers.

You and I are not interested in old reactionary political alignments, even though they may be dressed in the superficial raiment of newness and independence. In the industrial field we have had the experience of wll-recognized company unions popping up again with a new name, with new faces out in front, but with the same old reactionary masters. We will not tolerate that subterfuge in the political field.

Our interests lie with the co-operative political alignment only of those genuine progressive elements in our society which give unqualified devotion to principles and programs which minister to the welfare of the great masses of the people, and harbor no reservations out of concern for those in special positions of power or privilege. In these critical days when the issues are sharply drawn between reaction and progress, it will not be hard for us to point out our enemy and separate the false friend from the true.

Lawyers Group Warn Against Sales Tax, Low Income Levies

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23—The American tax system must be designed to enhance our national unity and must not literally tax away food from millions of underfed families at a time when our national existence is emperiled, Martin Popper, secretary of the National Lawyers Guild, warned this week.

Popper submitted to the Senate Finance Comittee an eight-point Guild tax program, which opposed taxes on sales and consumer necessities, and urged "an effffective excess profits tax of 80 cents on profits above 5 per cent of invested capital," among other proposals.

TWO MEASURES

"To those who fear that industry will refuse to accept defense contracts or will sabotage the defense program if profits are limited to 5 per cent, and the type of excess profits tax here being advocated is adopted, it should be pointed out that there are two effective weapons—conscription of industry and government operation of defense plants, which it is already in a very large measure financing," Popper told the Senate Committee.

Popper declared that current financial reports indicate that industry is duplicating if not bettering the exhorbitant wartime profits exposed by the Nye Munitions Investigating Committee after the first World War.

PROFITS SOAR

"The National City Bank letter for August shows that 360 leading companies engaged in manufacturing, mining, trade, service and construction showed combined net profits, less deficits, of approximately $785,000,000 after taxes in the first six months of 1941, an increase of 20 per cent over profits for the companies the first six months of 1940."

Pointing out that taxation of low income groups not only reduces their living standards drastically during a period of rising prices, Popper declared also that taxing further the 33,000,000 consumer units in the nation that earn less than $2,000 annually would "dry up the well that feeds the industrial machine."

"Those who think that defense orders may keep industry moving at top speed, regardless of the extent to which the buying of consumers is cut, will soon discover their error," Popper said.

POOR PAY MOST

He declared that those who earn as little as $500 a year pay 20 per cent of their incomes in city, state and federal taxes, and that this holds for those who earn up to $2,000 a year.

Additional points on the Lawyers Guild tax program call for: Restoration of $1,000 personal exemption for single persons' payment of income tax and $2,500 for married persons and family heads; mandatory joint income returns; stricter corporate, estate and gift and capital gains taxes; and taxation of income from all government securities.

Little Luther

(By Federated Press)

"Father," said Little Luther, "why is everybody giving aluminum to the government?"

"Because there is a serious shortage and aluminum is a vital metal in defense industries."

"Why can't all the alumium companies make more aluminum?"

"It happens that there is only one principal producer, and I might say that that firm is doing the very best it can."

"How long has this company been making aluminum?"

"Since 1888, as I recall."

"And why can't other companies make aluminum?"

"Well, now, Luther, there is no reason why they shouldn't. But it has just happened that the Aluminum Co. of America has been very efficient in its operations, and there isn't any other firm that has been efficient enough to be a successful competitor."

"I don't get it, father. You mean that after 53 years this company is so efficient it can't produce the aluminum we need?"

"There is no reason to single out the Aluminum Co., my boy. We are also facing a shortage of steel."

"I don't see how we could, father. Wasn't it only a few months ago that Mr. Gano Dunn and the steel companies reported that plant capacity was entirely adequate?"

"Possibly they did not foresee all of the contingencies that have arisen."

"I thought they got those $300,000 salaries because they could foresee more than anybody else."

"Now, Luther, even our great leaders of industry occasionally make mistakes."

"Well, pop, it looks to me as if they have picked the worst possible occasion for making the biggest mistakes of their lives."

Pay A Visit
To Your Congressman

Congress is in recess until after Labor Day. Most Representatives are in their home communities feeling "the pulse of the people."

This is the time for union men and women to have a chat with their Representative. Let him know how you feel about anti-labor bills, tax proposals and other measures of interest to the working people. And let him know how you feel about his vote on the May-Connally anti-strike bill; praise him if he voted against it, let him know your disapproval if he voted for that measure to ham-string organized labor.

In other words, let your Congressman know he's being watched by labor!

House Group Reports on Bridges Bill—6 Months Late

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23—A curious six-months' delay in a House Immigration Committee report this week loomed as a new threat toward the deportation of Harry Bridges, California CIO director.

The Committee reported out to the House on August 14 a Bill that on February 4 it had approved H. R. 1644, similar to the Senate-killed Allen Bill that called for immediate deportation of Bridges to his native Australia.

The CIO Maritime Committee noted the curious delay of the report on the Bill, apparently timed for discussion next month, when the decision of Judge Charles B. Sears on the second Bridges deportation hearing is expected. Bridges was accused of belonging to an organization that sought overthrow of the government. He denied it.

The CIO Committee warned that labor should be alert for a possible House attempt to jam through H. R. 1644 if the Sears decision is adverse, on the strange theory that instead of "wasting time" appealing the case to the Supreme Court, Bridges should be deported at once.

Smith's NLRB Term Expires This Week; Unions Pour in Re-Appointment Demands

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23—Expiration of the term of Edwin S. Smith, progressive member of the National Labor Relations Board, moved closer toward its August 27 deadline today with no indication from Pres. Roosevelt that Smith would be named to another term.

CIO unions throughout the country have deluged the White House in recent weeks with requests that Smith, a consistent friend of labor and an able public servant, be rewarded with reappointment to his office.

Early this month CIO President Philip Murray wrote to President Roosevelt praising Smith for his refusal to "engage in any appeasement at the expense of the workers." He added:

"The public record of the opinions of Mr. Edwin S. Smith as a member of the Labor Board clearly evidence his forthright integrity in upholding the basic principles of the (Wagner) Act in order to guarantee in accordance with the law and maximum protection of the workers."

Since that time numerous CIO international unions and state and local CIO councils have written similar letters to the White House.

ers' suggestions for the new contract.

The company holds national defense orders valued at nearly half a billion dollars.

Big picket lines have surrounded the shipyards throughout the strike, with the New Jersey State Industrial Union Council mobilizing large delegations of visiting pickets from other CIO affiliated unions.

Pres. Irving Abramson of the Council said the mass picketing was an answer to reactionary suggestions by the head of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce.

In accepting the challenge of the Chamber's accusation of "lack of patriotism by the workers, Abramson declared, "we feel sure that the government of the United States of America will not be bludgeoned into submission by big business, but wil stand on its decision and arrange for the continuance of the vital defense work of the Kearny Shipyards under the terms of its awards."

Committee Hits FBI's 'Evidence'

New York, Aug. 23—Last-minute protests to the U. S. Attorney General against possible deportation of Harry Bridges, California CIO director, were urged here this week by three members of the Citizens Committee for Harry Bridges—Herman Shumlin, theatrical producer; the Rev. John Howard Melish, rector of the Church of the Holy Trinity, Brooklyn; and John Hammond, music critic.

The three recalled that Dean James M. Landis at the first Bridges hearing found he was not a member of the Communist Party. They said the parade of crooks and stool-pigeon witnesses in the second hearing resembled those discredited by Landis in the first.

Strike 3½ Weeks, Gain Wage Boost

Chicago, Aug. 23—Victory in a three and a half week strike brought eight to 10 cents an hour wage increases and the union shop at the American Stove Co. plant at Cicero, Ill., this week to the 590 workers, covered by a Steel Workers Organizing Committee contract.

The pact includes an automatic two cents an hour wake increase, effective at each five-point rise in the cost of living.

PLANTERS NUT & CHOCOLATE CO.

WASHINGTON—Under gag-rule procedure, the House Ways and Means Committee has jammed through another soak-the-consumer tax bill.

On the question of procedure, Director John T. Jones of LNPL protested that failure to allow amendments from the floor was, in effect, "taxation without representation." He pointed out that this bill of such vital concern to all was framed behind closed doors by the committee which was itself sharply split.

"The Committee ignored," Jones added, "requests from the Administration and other sources for increased taxes on excess profits. Its proposals go lightly on tapping the extreme profits being made by many corporations in the defense program, while consumers are subjected to the heaviest taxation in the nation's history.

CIO President Philip Murray released an analysis of the bill, just before the House vote, which exposed it as increasing the burden on working class incomes while failing to keep to President Roosevelts pledge of "no war millionaires. Murray hit especially at heavy consumer taxes and committee hints that next year it would propose a general sales tax.

VIGILANCE NEEDED

Taxation is highly complex and thus it requires the most careful vigilance on the part of labor, Murray added, "to make sure that taxes are not used to destroy wage gains and to lower the wage earners standard of living."

In this statement, President Murray brought home to labor the vital importance of taking action on the question of taxes. In the current era of heavier and heavier taxation, labor's income faces sharp cuts through taxation. It is, therefore, incumbent upon labor to defend its interests when tax bills are being drafted in secret committee sessions on Capitol Hill.

Burden on Consumers

Sales or so-called excise taxes are increased $880,000,000 under the pending bill which is now before the Senate for final action. Among these are a $5 tax on every automobile, taxes on tires and tubes, matches, soft drinks, etc.

Contrasted with its unyielding attitude toward labor's demands for lighter consumer taxes, the committee relaxed its gag rule only to allow the House to remove the joint returns feature. Thus, it permits a continuance of the practice of wealthy individuals escaping taxation by dividing incomes between husband and wife with a separate return for each.

Effective gift and estate taxes were avoided by the committee, though it slightly increased the rates on estates and gifts. As the tax now stands, there are exemptions which allow some $140,000 to be passed on without taxation.

Close analysis of the bill shows that corporation taxes were actually increased only about $700,000,000, or less than the increase in consumer taxes. The committee also failed to act on the matter of undivided profits, a method resorted to by corporations to hide fantastic profits.

Defense Profits

Examples are the Goodrich Company with an increase of 478 per cent in net profits for the first six months of 1941 over last year's similar period; the Crucible Steel Company, with a net increase of 61 per cent; Republic Steel, with a net increase of more than 100 per cent; and U. S. Steel, with a net increase of 70 per cent.

Even these soaring profit figures do not tell the whole story. These, like many other corporations, have set aside vast sums in reserves and contingent funds before figuring profits for tax purposes. Thus, U. S. Steel set aside in one fund for depreciation $38,000,000, and in a so-called contingency reserve an additional $9,000,000, or a total set aside of $47,000,000 out of six months' earnings.

Similarly, Republic Steel set aside $2,000,000 in its contingency reserve fund, plus other sums allegedly for unforseen tax.

These sums are obviously excessive to cover normal depreciation and any known taxes and are, in effect, hidden profits.

Salaries Zoom

Even before the defense pie many an executive has cut himself a nice big chunk of salary. Newspapers report latest salary figures released by the Treasury for 1939 showing a fellow with a mere $100,000-a-year paycheck to be just small time.

One big businessman, Thomas J. Watson, president of International Business Machines, got $442,000. George Washington Hill, president of American Tobacco, received $420,000. Four other officials of that company took $230,000 each.

William S. Knudsen may have got only $1 from Uncle Sam but he drew $372,000 from General Motors while six other GM executives drew in excess of $200,000 each. And so on through a full newspaper page as reported by The New York Times and other dailies.

To Pay $5,000

Baltimore, Md., Aug. 23—Payment of $5,000 in back wages to 300 employes of the Elkton Textile Co., Elkton, Md., was ordered this week in a consent decree in District Court. The Court found that the firm had violated the Wage-Hour Law.

'Frisco CIO Raps Army's Labor Battalion Plan

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 23—A strong protest against proposed use of Army labor battalions for longshore work was made this week by the Industrial Union Council here.

The council said that a CIO investigation exposed War Department plans for training 600 Negro draftees at Fort Mason, Calif., for "use any time or anywhere."

"They will be used to replace regular civilian longshoremen, whenever, in the opinion of the military authorities, it is necessary to do so," the Council warned, in opposing a plan to train the $21-a-month draftees.

The Council pointed out that the Int'l. Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union has "for years furnished competent longshoremen to the United States Army Transport Service at Fort Mason," and has never inconvenienced the Army, whose officers have stated in writing their satisfaction with the service.

"There are more than enough competent civilian longshoremen available to do all the necessary work, considering that there are still millions of unemployed in this nation; the same can be said as regards any other industry where the use of draftees may be contemplated," the Council stated in a resolution.

The Council pointed out that use of $21-a-month conscripts in place of civilian employes getting Union-scale wages would be detrimental to the defense program and would disrupt the community economy.

Armed Thugs, Deputies Run Wild in Ohio Town During Strike

BY TED COX

CLEVELAND, Aug. 23—CIO leaders from all over Ohio today had joined in demands that the U. S. Department of Justice restore civil liberties in company-owned Gypsum, Ohio, and nearby Port Clinton, where the U. S. Gypsum Corporation instituted a vigilante reign of terror in an attempt to break the strike of CIO workers.

The plant was closed by District 50, United Mine Workers, in cooperation with employes of 17 other Gypsum factories to enforce their demand of a national contract. Continued strikebreaking efforts by the corporation and company-owned officials brought brother CIO members from Cleveland and Toledo to the aid of the gypsum picket line.

At the same time, Ottawa County officials deputized 175 thugs, who attacked the pickets.

Edward Lamb, CIO attorney, reported to U. S. District Attorney Emerich Freed and U. S. Attorney Francis Biddle that the armed mob, led by a drunken sheriff, attacked the picket line, shooting their new pistols and rifles into the air.

At the orders of the sheriff, they then fired on the CIO sound truck and wrecked it. Union leaders in the truck were not hit by the shots but were beaten by the thugs. For three days, 33 unionists were held in various jails incommunicado.

LAWYER THREATENED

When Lamb went to the courthouse he was threatened by an armed mob of half-drunken deputies who told him he'd never get out of the county alive, Lamb said. In the meantime a number of nervous scabs inside the plant kept smoke coming out of the factory chimneys but failed to produce goods.

Food was dropped into the plant by airplanes.

'Gyp' Strike Continues

Washington, Aug. 23.—The U. S. Gypsum Co. this week rejected a National Defense Mediation Board formula for settlement of a two-month-old strike involving 3,000 workers in 17 plants from Massachusetts to California.

The formula was approved by District 50, United Mine Workers Union, for the workers, and would have brought management and union officials from each of the 17 plants to Washington for discussion of union demands for a master contract, 10 cents an hour wage increases, liberalized vacation provisions, arbitration machinery for grievances and provision for union security.

New Excuse:

'Her Eyes Were Too Close Together'—So Boss Fired Her!

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23—The Washington Newspaper Guild today undertook to win reinstatement for an employe of the Times-Herald whom the Guild leaders said was fired for union activity. The boss had lots of other excuses, however.

The writer, Una Franklin, has long been active in local Guild affairs. She was fired shortly after appearance of one of her stories in a New York publication which described Washington's many closed-up mansions while thousands of low-paid government workers seek desperately for better housing.

Mrs. Eleanor Patterson, Times-Herald publisher, has just such a mansion. Miss Franklin was quickly fired.

MANY 'REASONS'

Guild leaders, becoming active in the case, found, however, that much more than the one story was involved in the dismissal. Mrs. Patterson admitted she "wouldn't fire anyone else on the staff for the same story," commented critically that Miss Franklin's "eyes were too close together," and showed a peeve because the reporter had once asked for overtime and had included 75 cents for a pair of stockings on her expense account.

Crux of the case, Guild leaders decided, after conferring with the publisher, was that Mrs. Patterson considers Miss Franklin a "subversive influence" and that she's still mad because Miss Franklin moved for a strike vote at a Guild meeting two years ago when a number of jobs were threatened by a merger.

The Washington Guild has appointed a committee to push the fight for reinstatement.

LEND A HAND: Members of the United Shoe Workers join with groups from other CIO unions in New Jersey to help along the picket line of the Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers at the Federal Yards, Kearny, N. J. Strike started after the company, rich with defense contracts, spurned union and Mediation Board proposals for a "maintenance of union membership" clause in a new contract.

CIO Wins First Hawaiian Sugar Plant Contract

CHICAGO, Aug. 23—The first union contract ever signed in the sugar industry of Hawaii has just been concluded between the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing and Allied Workers and the McBryde Sugar Co., Ltd., it was announced today at the CIO union headquarters here. The agreement covers some 400 workers.

Terms call for use of camp halls on plantation property for union meetings; use of company bulletin boards and the right of union representatives to go on company property to investigate grievances. All plantations had previously prohibited "outsiders" from entering company property.

PREDICTS MORE GAINS

Edward Matsuki Arashiro, president of the Hawaiian local union, was reported as saying that the contract means the beginning of complete organization of the Hawaiian sugar industry.

"Our job has just commenced," he said in his report to headquarters. "The rest of the industry needs organization and we are proceeding to that task at once."

Sweep Poll

Chicago, Aug. 23—The CIO by 139 to 52 this week won a National Labor Relations Board election at two plants of the Aluminum Products Co. at LaGrange and Lamont, Ill.

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

Two big strikes of CIO unions have been very much in the news this week, but other activities of our organizations which have received less attention are again indicating the broad sweeping advances of the CIO in every section of the country and in every industry.

The Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers have been waging a militant walkout at the Kearny, N. J., plant of the Federal Shipbuilding Corp. The company, a subsidiary of the United States Steel Co., has been trying to duck out of a Mediation Board decision which provided that every union member must remain in good standing for the life of the contract. That is fair enough, since every worker gains by the union's accomplishments, and should contribute to its maintenance and strength.

I have had a number of conferences with President John Green of the union and hope that a settlement can soon be reached so that these workers may return to their jobs.

RETAIL STORE SUCCESSES

President Wolchok and Secretary Cooney of the United Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Employes and I had several long conferences with the executives of Gimbel's, and as this is being written, it seems that a settlement which will meet many of the union demands, will soon be reached.

The URWEA, though busy in New York, hasn't been forgetting the nation's second largest city, either. At the Boston Store in Chicago's busy loop, the union this week won an NLRB election by a vote of 723 to 135 opposed. Right after that the URWEA polled 227 votes to only 47 against at the Walter H. Johnson Candy Co. in Chicago. The Fair Store, one of Chicago's most important, is already under contract, and organizing work is moving fast at the biggest of them all, the Marshall Field Store. That's good work!

President Ravitch of the United Paper, Novelty & Toy Workers reports that 1,300 members marked time on the picket line at the New Haven Clock Co., New Haven, Conn. The strike was called when foremen and managers tried to interfere with Local 459's organizing work. An NLRB election is scheduled there this week.

PROGRESS IN TENNESSEE

The Steel Workers Organizing Committee continues its zooming progress in Tennessee, according to Paul Christopher, CIO regional director. There are now 12 SWOC locals chartered in Memphis. The AFL took it on the nose again down there, Christopher reports, when the CIO Int'l. Woodworkers of America won an election at the Nickey Bros. Lumber Co., 203 to 91. At the Turner-Day and Woolworth Handle Co., the CIO licked the AFL 46 to 12. The Nashville plant of the company is already under contract with United Handle Workers 203, and it looks as though Memphis will pretty quickly join the CIO parade of contracts.

The United Automobile, Aircraft & Agricultural Implement Workers (they've changed the name but kept the initials as UAW-CIO) wound up its convention in Buffalo with a fine spirit of solidarity and a determination to go on to future gains. The UAW's progress in the last year has been tremendous, and we feel sure that under the capable leadership of President Thomas and Secretary-Treasurer Addes the next 12 months will bring still further advancement.

Up in the timber country of the Pacific Northwest, the CIO is winning elections just as handily as it is in the East and Middle West. Adolph Germer, director of organization for the Int'l. Woodworkers, announces four more victories:

Long-Lake, Spokane, Wash.	CIO	236	AFL	127
Westfir	CIO	239	AFL	172
Winton, Coeur d'Alene	CIO	135	AFL	61

NEWSPAPER STRIKE WON

Notes From Here and There: The New York Newspaper Guild has won its long strike at the Jewish Day in New York, winning reinstatement for six fired employes and restoration of terrific pay cuts for six others . . . Negotiations for a new contract with the Postal Telegraph are being started by the American Communications Ass'n. . . . Two more steel plants of Bethlehem Steel are scenes this week of NLRB elections. The SWOC has already won polls in a number of the corporation's units. Very shortly, shipyard workers at the Bethlehem yards in Sparrows Point, Md., will have their chance to vote for CIO . . . All the signs point to one of the greatest Labor Day celebrations in years. CIO unions and councils in scores of cities are making plans for picnics, parades and mass meetings.

On Strike Six Years, To Get Jobs

JOPLIN, Mo., Aug. 23— Six years on strike, 180 members of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers Union this week won reinstatement to their old jobs or equivalent positions at the Eagle Picher Lead Co. and the Eagle Picher Mining & Smelting Co. here.

The companies, which fought the case through the National Labor Relations Board and the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, finally gave in, after previously giving notice that they would appeal to the Supreme Court.

UNION PLEASED

Company announcements in the employer press said that they have immediate plans to comply with back pay provisions of the NLRB award but that these "may" be carried to the higher court.

Hailing the reinstatement, Mine, Mill and Smelter officials said it "coincided with the holding of the IUMM&SW's greatest convention in the Tri-State area to signal the fact that the dark day of the blue card union and of pick-handle parade violence are definitely behind and that the Union is on the high road to organization of the area and improvement of its lead and zinc workers' conditions."

Broadcasters Sign, Lift Wage Scale

New York, Aug. 23—Pay increases and contracts with radio stations WBAX, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., and WWDC, Washington, D. C., were won this week by the Broadcast District of the American Communications Assn.

The WBAX industrial pact won for 17 workers pay increases up to $4 a week, the closed shop, vacations, unlimited sick leave and a ban on firings without ACA permission.

The WWDC agreement brought benefits totaling $300 a year each to 12 technicians, including 8 to 11 per cent salary increases, and sick leave.

Call One-Day Holiday At Shipyard

Brooklyn, N. Y., Aug. 23—A one-day holiday of the 6,000 employes of Bethlehem Steel's Morse and Crane shipyards here was called last week as a protest against the Company's stalling in negotiations for a master Atlantic Coast contract and in support of the negotiating committee of Local 13, Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers.

Union representatives said the walkout was 100 per cent effective and hoped it would speed negotiations.

The Upper Crust

"Gracious! What are we going to do? I hear the government may order a one-third cut in the use of oats!"

Furniture Workers Raise Wages, Win NLRB Elections In Many Parts of U. S.

NEW YORK, Aug. 23—The United Furniture Workers of America is keeping pace with the CIO program of organization and winning benefits for the workers in the union.

In Rockford, Illinois, Furniture Local 707 has won $300,000 wage boosts for 2,000 workers in 18 plants under contract with the union. Raises ranged from 5 to 10 cents an hour in the plants reported Business Manager Joseph C. Kennedy.

Additional pay boosts were secured for hundreds of workers in individual adjustments of wage rates.

MUNCIE LOCAL WINS

Local 603 of Muncie, Indiana, with the assistance of other CIO locals in town, won a Labor Board election at the Hager-Moore Companies and signed a contract covering the 256 employes.

Gains included wage increases, paid vacations, union shop and other standard union clauses.

VOTES CIO

Workers of the St. John Table Co. in Cadillac, Michigan, selected UFWA Local 417 as their bargaining agency by a vote of 124 to 46. Union officials have begun negotiations for a contract. The NLRB election victory follows successful NLRB elections in Petoskey, St Ignace and Ionia, Mich. The UFWA drive in Michigan has swung into high gear.

MUSTER TOURS COUNTRY

International President Morris Muster, who recently completed a tour of the South and West Coast, reports a flat 5c-an-hour wage boost for the 1450 workers of the huge Doernbecher Co. of Portland, Oregon, secured by UFWA Local 1090 in recent negotiations.

Organization of furniture workers on the West Coast, reports Muster, has brought in hundreds of new members, with particularly brilliant success in Los Angeles where Local 576 has supplied effective leadership.

Stops made by Pres. Muster on his trip included Atlanta, Georgia; Ft. Smith, Ark.; St. Louis, Mo.; Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle and British Columbia.

Use Ancient Law Against Unionists

Baltimore, Aug. 23—The ancient common law offense of "riot, rout and unlawful assembly" threatened CIO organization here for the second time in a year this week when five members of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee were accused of the crime as a result of a disturbance at Bethlehem Steel's Sparrows Point plant.

With another SWOC member charged with a lesser offense, the five were released from jail only after posting $2,500 bond apiece. The six, with several hundred other SWOC members, participated in picketing that followed one-day pipe and wire mill stoppages in protest against "various kinds of intimidation and threats to union men by sub-bosses and company police," according to SWOC Director Nicholas Fontecchio.

Last October six members of the Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers were charged with "rioting" in a Bethlemen strike. They received fines and suspended sentences.

Clockmakers Strike, Take Time Off!

New Haven, Conn., Aug. 23—The plant of the New Haven Clock Co. stopped ticking this week when 1,700 employes struck for recognition of their union, Local 459, United Paper, Novelty & Toy Workers, CIO.

Cause of the strike, according to President Alexander Ravitch of the union, was interference by foremen and other representatives of management with the union's organizing campaign. Workers were being advised by the strawbosses not to vote for the CIO in the coming election.

In Washington Ravitch conferred with NLBR officials and won a promise that the poll would be conducted within 48 hours.

The firm has large defense orders for time-bomb fuses.

Union Seeks Surplus Food For Share Croppers

CHICAGO, Aug. 23—Launching of a compaign to get surplus foods to hundreds of thousands of undernourished share croppers and cotton pickers in the South was announced this week by the CIO United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing & Allied Workers.

The campaign will open with a drive for 100,000 signatures on a petition addressed to President Roosevelt, Secretary of Agriculture Claude R. Wickard, Milo Perkins, administrator of the Surplus Commodities Corp., and to all members of Congress.

The petition calls for immediate steps to be taken to supply surplus foods "under some modified form of the food stamp plan which can meet the pocketbooks of these shamefully exploited workers."

SEEK WIDE SUPPORT

Labor unions and all other groups who want to support this fight of agricultural workers for a democratic American standard of living are being asked to support the petition.

The drive for food for undernourished and starving Southern workers was planned at a meeting of the Union's Southern States Council held in Harviell, Mo., last June.

PART OF PROGRAM

Delegates from the agricultural locals drew up a program for improving working conditions in rural areas of the South, which included wage standards for cotton picking, better schools, abolition of the poll tax, and medical aid for farm tenants, sharecroppers and day laborers.

Sharecroppers and other workers who make only three or four dollars a week are denied surplus commodities, the union stated, because they are not on relief.

Get Back Pay

Chicago, Aug. 23—$8,600 in back pay was awarded this week in a National Labor Relations Board decisions to 102 employees of the Durand Mfg. Co., all members of the United Paper, Novelty & Toy Workers Int'l. Union.

Canadian Gold Miners Fight Fake Union

One-Day 'Holiday' Stops Production; Men Vote 24-1 Against Phoney Proposal

TORONTO, Aug. 23—Five thousand Kirkland Lake gold miners, members of the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers union, demonstrated their flat rejection of a Government-sponsored company union proposal last week by a one-day holiday which completely closed down 12 mines.

They carried a strike vote by 24 to 1 to impress the Government with their demand for a conciliation board. The final vote was nearly 2,600 in favor of a strike and 100 opposed, a considerable number not being able to vote because of the jam at the union polling booths.

Despite charges by mine operators that the holiday would cause a loss of $86,000 in production and $24,000 in wages, they reluctantly agreed to the proposal of the miners to work on Sunday as they have done when the companies arranged picnics in the past. Union officials, commenting on the operators' figures, noted that it worked out to a profit of $12 daily on each miner's work.

WIN PAY BOOST

Pickets paraded through pouring rain carrying signs reading, "No Company Union Need Apply," "Down With Hitler," "We Want Conciliation Board" and "Increase Gold Production." Shortly before the vote, mine operators announced an increase in the weekly cost-of-living bonus from $1.50 to $2.78.

Although operators claimed that the holiday was "illegal," a strike vote is necessary to obtain a conciliation board. The request for a board was made several weeks ago.

CONFLICTING POLICY

Further evidence of the Government's attitude to collective bargaining was seen in the National Steel Car situation at Hamilton, where SWOC representatives were scheduled to resume discussions with a plant controller this week under the shadow of a conflicting policy enunciated by Munitions Minister Howe. SWOC was chosen bargaining agent in the plant by a vote of more than three to one.

After a National Steel Car Employes Assn. conferred with Howe at Ottawa, the minister issued a statement declaring that two or more organizations would be recognized in the plant. The Employes Assn. has never had any meetings and its membership is negligable.

Howe's department is overrun with $1-a-year business men who have opposed unions in their plants. Labor Minister McLarty said that only one union would be recognized.

FIRM MUST BARGAIN

A unanimous recommendation by a concilation board recommending that Acme Screw & Gear Co. bargain with SWOC on behalf of 3,000 workers was received this week. The workers in the plant chose SWOC by a 10 to 1 vote more than a month ago.

One thousand munition workers in Trenton, N. S., members of SWOC, ended a one-day strike this week and returned to work. They announced they would strike again if a wage settlement was not reached in six days.

Officers of United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers Union expressed satisfaction this week with the continued response by U. S. unions to their campaign to release their Canadian vice-president, C. S. Jackson, who was interned several months ago.

NAM's Idea

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23.—A proposal to hit the income of lowly paid workers by a general sales tax and lowering of income tax exemptions was advanced today by Livingston W. Houston, a representative of the Nat'l. Ass'n. of Manufacturers, before the Senate Finance Committee.

Pritchett Seeks Office In Canada

Vancouver, B. C., Aug. 23—Harold J. Pritchett, former president of the CIO International Woodworkers of America, this week announced here his candidacy in the coming Provincial elections for the Legislative Assembly, from the Vancouver Centre constituency.

Pritchett is the first candidate entering the field on a straight Labor ticket, and will conform to the legislative program of the Canadian Congress of Labor—protection of civil liberties and labor's rights, social security for the people, adjustment of taxation, including repeal of the sales tax and imposition of a 100 per cent excess profit tax, and rehabilitation of soldiers and veterans.

P.S.—He Got His Job Back

Vancouver, Wash., Aug. 23—The CIO re-wrote a version of "The Constant Companion," by the Aluminum Co. of America here, and saved the job this week of George A. Starr, temporary president of Local 22, Aluminum Workers of America.

The company assigned a foreman to accompany Starr from the plant gate to and from his job after AFL workers had charged him with distribution of CIO literature and had threatened to "beat hell" out of him.

A day later he was given a new job, and became sick from nauseating fumes in a poorly ventilated room. He asked to be transferred, but the plant general foreman refused and listed him on a discharge card as "quitting."

CIO protests won the next day not only Starr's reinstatement but withdrawal of his foreman escort.

Freedom Asked For Connor, King, Ramsey

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 23—Freeing of three California maritime union murder frame-up victims, Earl King, Ernest Ramsay and Frank Connor, this week was urged on Governor Culbert L. Olson by the Los Angeles Industrial Union Council, which asked all affiliated organizations to endorse the request.

The three were charged in October, 1936, just prior to the West Coast maritime strike, with the murder of George W. Alberts, chief engineer of the S. S. Point Lobos, who had been stabbed to death on the ship five months before as she lay berthed across the bay from San Francisco.

OLSON'S OWN WORDS

The CIO Council urged Governor Olson to consider his "own public statements in respect to this case" which the Council listed as "the best evidence that King, Ramsay and onnor should no longer remain in prison."

Following an interview in prison last October with King, who headed the Marine, Firemen, Oilers & Watertenders Union Ramsay, union patrolman and organizer for the Fish Reduction Workers Union, and Connor, MFOW delegate aboard the Point Lobos, Governor Olson said:

That he was seriously considering pardoning them; that there was "a slim thread connecting the men with the crime;" that the trial evidence was "largely conflicting and impeached," and that "it is difficult to conceive motive."

The Council pointed out that no evidence was introduced in the trial directly linking any of the three with the murder, nor was there proof that they had been near the scene when the killing occurred.

The trial jury was composed of retired businessmen and elderly women drawn from a list proposed by three banks and various business and industrial firms. The jury's guilty verdict in January, 1937, resulted in 20-year sentences.

SHIPOWNERS' CASH

Pointing out that the frame-up occurred at a critical time in the life of the maritime unions, the Council accused West Coast shipowners of spending thousands of dollars to purchase false testimony that clinched the case for the prosecution, headed by the notoriously anti-labor Earl Warren, then District Attorney of Alameda County.

The Judge, who was allowed by California law to comment on evidence, had been a deputy district attorney in Warren's office, was his warm personal friend, and had been appointed to the bench on Warren's recommendation.

Possible reason for Democratic Governor Olson's pardon delay is pressure brought by Warren, State's attorney general and the only Republican in the State Administration. Also a factor is employer pressure on the State legislature, which might bring impeachment proceedings against Olson.

Mine Union Paper Official Killed

Hazelton, Pa., Aug. 23—An auto wreck this week caused the death of Peter C. Flaim, 58, business manager of the Anthracite Ttri-District News, official United Mine Workers Union publication of districts 1, 7 and 9.

The driver of the car, R. F. Carroll, national advertising director for the publication, was hospitalized with injuries.

New Pay Boost At Viscose Co.

NEW YORK CITY, Aug. 23—Wage increases totaling $140,000 annually for some 1,000 workers at the plant of the American Viscose Corp. in Front Royal, Va., have been negotiated by the Textile Workers Union of America, Herbert W. Payne, director of the synthetic yarn division announced this week.

The pay raises are in two parts. The first, ranging from two to four cents an hour becomes effective Aug. 24. A further increase of two to four cents will go into effect Feb. 1, 1942. These two increases are in addition to an hourly raise of five cents for men and three cents for women which went into effect last April.

Steel Strike Brings Pay Increase

Huntington, W. Va., Aug. 23—A 12½ cents an hour wage increase and time-and-a-half for all overtime, including Saturdays, Sundays and holidays, this week marked a strike settlement pact between the Steel Workers Organizing Committee and the American Car & Foundry Co. here.

The contract also won a 10 per cent raise for piece workers, the right of the union organizer to enter the plant at any time on union business, and the right of workers to grievance committee hearings before they can be fired.

Sign Warehouse Agreements In New York City

New York, Aug. 23—Nine new contracts covering 350 workers in this city and Brooklyn were signed this week by Local 65, United Wholesale & Warehouse Workers Union.

The pacts brought wage increases of from $2 to $5 a week, and minimum guarantees of $18, $19 and $21 and of 52 weeks employment. Also gained were the closed shop, vacations of one to two weeks with pay and sick leave with pay.

Two Get $4,200

Chicago, Aug. 23—It cost the Marshall Field Department Store here $4,200 to fire two employes, Anice Swift and Georgia Kelly, 14 months ago. That sum in back wages was awarded the girls this week by the National Labor Relations Board, CIO officials said.

Auto Union Wins Poll In Cleveland

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Aug. 23—An election victory for the United Automobile Workers at the West Side plant of Lamson Sessions, makes UAW Local 217 the bargaining agent for all the company's Cleveland plants, Paul E. Miley, UAW regional director, reports this week.

Local 217 recently defeated a company union 333 to 203 in a poll conducted by the NLRB.

116,000 Members Join Electrical Union in Year

CAMDEN, N. J., Aug. 27—Delegates from all sections of the country and Canada were heading for this city today for the seventh annual convention of the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers. The convention opens on Labor Day, with an executive board meeting scheduled for Aug. 31.

JAMES B. CAREY
President, CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers

The delegates will hear a report which will outline the union's tremendous progress during the past 12 months. The report will be signed by Pres. James B. Carey, Sec.-Treas. Julius Emspak and Organization Director James Matles.

In New York, where the UE maintains headquarters, a spokesman for the union said that at the end of the UE's fiscal year on July 31, the union had won written contracts with 575 plants covering 316,000 workers. The figures represented an increase of 198 plants and of 161,261 workers during the past year.

221% INCREASE

The spokesman said the union had signed up and received initiation fees during the same fiscal year from 116,123 new members. Compared to the 36,119 new members last year, the figure represents an increase of 221%. Sixty-five new locals were chartered in the 12 month period, and wage increases of $63,500,000 were gained.

During the year the UE won 120 Labor Board certifications covering 51,679 workers and lost 19 covering 4,774 workers.

The union convention is expected to last about a week.

Electrical Union Wins Pacts, Polls

7-1 Margin

Chicago, Aug. 27—A revamped company union at the Foote Bros. Gear & Machine Co. called the Union of Industrial Workers was defeated 555 to 76 by the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers in an election held by the NLRB earlier this month.

12½c Increase

Emeryville, Cal., Aug. 27—A 12½ cent hourly increase was won here by Local 1412, United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers for employes of the Gardner Electric Co., after several months negotiations. The increase is retroactive to Aug. 1, date of expiration of previous contract.

Win Election

Bayonne, N. J., Aug. 27.—The open shop plant of the International Nickel Co. here has been turned into a CIO union shop, the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers reports. A Labor Board election held after a whirlwind union drive led by UE Representative Neil Brandt, was won, 65 to 45, by the CIO electrical union.

15% Increase

Erie, Pa., Aug. 27—Pay at the Erie Corrugated Box Co. here went up 15 per cent as the result of a contract covering 250 employes won by the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

Vote 6-1 for CIO

West Warwick, R. I., Aug. 27—Workers at the Saybrooke Manufacturing Co. voted 68 to 12 for the Textile Workers Union in an NLRB election held here.

Dead Duck!

Washington, Aug. 27—Another company union "bit the dust" this week when the National Labor Relations Board ordered disestablishment of the Textile Workers of Newton, N. J., at the Sussex Dye & Print Works, Inc.

The Board found that the company-controlled "union" prevented organization by the legitimate CIO Federation of Dyers, Finishers, Printers and Bleachers of America.

CIO Marks Holiday In Big Celebrations

WASHINGTON, Aug. 27—Big CIO celebrations, picnics, parades and mass meetings are on schedule for Labor Day in large cities and small towns throughout the nation, it was indicated today.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray

Still confined to a Pittsburgh hospital, Pres. Murray was reported this week by physicians to be doing "splendidly." Unions throughout the country are sending Labor Day greetings to the popular CIO president, and expressing hope for his quick recovery.

Pointing out in his Labor Day Message that the year has been "especially marked by the extension of the right of collective bargaining by the CIO to companies whose anti-unionism had become historic," Pres. Philip Murray made this confident assertion:

"The CIO will continue to move forward to extend collective bargaining to new millions."

BIG GAINS

There will be ample reason for celebration in CIO communities. In Detroit, labor's marching ranks will be joined for the first time by the organized men of Ford, whose history-making strike and subsequent union shop contract was the high mark in a year of CIO union progress.

In the mining communities of a dozen Appalachian states, members of the United Mine Workers will be noting the gains won by Pres. John L. Lewis in hard-fought negotiations over a period of months: abolition of the hated southern differential and a general $1 a day increase in wages.

In scores of cities and towns members of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee will be recalling their 10 cents an hour wage increase and the tumbling flight of Little Steel towards the ranks of the country's unionized corporations.

Chemical Pact Hikes Pay $500,000

FAIRPORT HARBOR, Ohio, Aug. 27—A cool half million dollars in wage increases were won by 1,700 workers of the Diamond Alkali Co. here in the first contract signed recently between the firm and Local 12,321, District 50 United Mine Workers Union.

The pact is one of the best in the chemical industry, officials said. It provides a general eight-cents-an-hour increase, plus wage adjustments ranging from four to 32 cents an hour, and a minimum rate of 70 cents and a plant average of 92 cents an hour.

All benefits are retroactive to May 20, when the company signed an agreement ending a 23-hour strike which was called to protect the firm's refusal to meet with union representatives.

The contract provides three cents an hour differential for night workers and the check-off system of dues payments. All workers who signed membership cards must pay dues. Practically all have signed.

Employes of one to four years standing will receive one week's vacation with pay and those of more than four years will get two weeks.

Labor Men At College Institute

Williamstown, Mass., Aug. 27—An avowed aim to make this world a better place to live in is the primary theme of the Institute of Human Relations, meeting here this week at Williams College.

The Institute, sponsored by the National Conference of Christians and Jews, is discussing subjects such as: the role of citizens, workers, patriots and Americans in the world we want to live in.

Labor, business and industry round-table meetings are providing free exchange of views on practical problems of achieving cooperation between workers and employers.

Bridges Out-Wits FBI Wiretappers In N. Y. Hotel

NEW YORK, Aug. 27—Outwitting two agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Pres. Harry Bridges of the CIO Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union this week exposed a month-old wire-tapping plot in his room at the Hotel Edison here.

Labor people in New York are having a good laugh at the expense of J. Edgar Hoover's FBI, now revealed to be participating in one more of its fantastic efforts to "get the goods" on the California CIO director and deport him to his native Australia.

Working with a reporter and a photographer from the newspaper PM, Bridges enjoyed talking for the FBI record and making life difficult for the listeners, who occupied an adjoining room in the hotel. The listening apparatus was a highly sensitive microphone placed in the telephone box in Bridges' room.

HARRY BRIDGES
Outwits FBI Hawkshaws

Special Agent Evelle J. Younger and a colleague carried out their instructions of listening to all conversations in Bridges' room and of cutting in on all the union leader's phone calls. What they heard won't do the FBI or anti-union employers much good, for Bridges was aware of the plot from the beginning, and cautioned all his friends against discussing important union afairs.

PAPER GOT 'NEWS'

Once Bridges laid a trap to determine whether the Hoover agents were passing along their data to employers. He "discussed" an important local strike in his room and announced his "intention" of marching on the picket line. Two days later the Scripps-Howard New York World Telegram carried a story predicting Bridges' appearance on the picket line!

To check up on the sleuths' activities, Bridges tore a piece of paper into strange sizes, tossed them into his wastebasket, and left his room. He dashed to the room of Leon Goodelman, reporter for PM, in a hotel across the street, and through telescopes watched the detectives in their room trying to put the scraps of paper back together again!

Another sport was to call Bridges' room from Goodelman's quarters. Each time the CIO official's phone rang, the two agents could be seen dashing to the floor in a corner of their room, just opposite Bridges, telephone box, where their listening apparatus was located.

GREW SUSPICIOUS

Two events first raised suspicion in Bridges' mind. One was the insistence of the Hotel Edison management that he occupy Room 1027 even though it cost a dollar more than he wanted to pay, the hotel claimed no others were available and cut the rate on 1027. An anonymous phone call by Bridges to the hotel soon proved that the management was lying.

When, shortly afterwards, Bridges heard queer sounds next door, and found that his telephone had temporarily gone dead, he was on to the supersleuths' plot. For some two weeks Bridges toyed with the agents, to the amusement of friends who were in on the game.

The farce ended at 2:30 a.m. on Aug. 22. A few hours earlier Bridges and the PM staff reporters had yanked a tiny, super-sensitive dictograph out of the telephone box in Bridges' room. A cable led to the adjoining room.

PHOTOGRAPHS READY

Outside the FBI men's room, a PM photographer waited, flash-gun ready. Bridges called the hotel manager, who seemed to be pretty embarrassed by it all. He said he would telephone the people in the next room, but he refused to use Bridges' phone for his message.

At 2:30 a.m. a man believed to be FBI Agent Younger made a sudden dash from his room, and the photographer caught his picture just as he rounded a corner in the corridor. In the room were carbon copies of two of his reports.

"He was running like a scared rabbit," Bridges commented later.

"We chased after him, but he went down the fire escape."

WARNS AGAINST HOTEL

"I saw and heard enough in the Edison Hotel to convince me that every union conference in that place is tapped," Bridges told Federated Press, labor news service. "And I would like to say this: I am ready to cooperate with the FBI in making a national broadcast of all the conversations they recorded while I was at the Edison, or I'll o. k. a complete release to the newspapers.

"What the labor movement should know is that the FBI definitely proved in this instance that it is helping to break strikes by passing along information to employers."

FBI: 'No Comment'

Washington, Aug. 27—The FBI Information Service doesn't know a thing about the tapping of Harry Bridges' telephone wire in New York's Hotel Edison.

Asked for a comment by the CVIO NEWS, a Mr. Tracy claimed he hadn't seen the two-page story in the New York paper PM. He added:

"We never make any comment either confirming or denying any alleged investigating activities."

Unions Fight Frame-Up Try In Indiana

Indianapolis, Ind., Aug. 30—A conference to take up the question of aid for some sixty persons still under indictment in cases growing out of the strike called by the Farm Equipment Workers at the Richmond plant of International Harvester last Spring will be held in Richmond, Sept. 7. The conference was called by the Richmond Defense Committee of the Indiana CIO Council.

Charging that the cases are a frame-up, the Committee declared that "union leaders, sympathizers and relatives of union people were arrested and indicted for everything from assault and battery to disorderly conduct and attempted murder."

Skilled Toy Makers Fight $12-a-Week, Boss's 'Paternalism'

KANE, Pa., Aug. 27—This is a story of backwoods unionism; of workers sick of wages that once hit a 12-cents-an-hour low; of a company 152 years old that never before had a strike, largely because it is located in this Alleghany mountain town of 6,000 population, 60 miles from the nearest city.

The company is Holgate Bros., manufacturer of brush handles and a famous line of educational toys, founded by Cornelius Holgate in Philadelphia the year of George Washington's first inaugural, 1789.

Holgate Bros. workers, last May in a National Labor Relations Board election, voted 321 for the CIO United Paper, Novelty & Toy Workers Intl. Union, 127 for the AFL, and 127 against both.

LONG SERVICE

Sixty per cent of the workers were paid less than $17 a week. They read with interest a company toy catalog, which said:

"The art and skill of the Holgate workers in wood is widely known throughout the nation. A number of the employes have been in the service of the company 20, 30 and even 40 years.

"In a word, Holgate toys are made by a company that has a large number of highly skilled workmen, the finest mechanical equipment, long years of experience in woodworking. . ."

'HIGHER LABOR COST'

They saw a slip pasted in the catalog announcing price increases, effective July 15, of 7 to 20 per cent, "owing to advance in the cost of both lumber and labor."

They took stock of their wages, of the $12 a week minimum, and decided to ask for more.

Through their CIO union, they demanded the union shop and increases, totaling some $200,000 a year. The company offered 1½ to 3 cents an hour raises and bluntly refused the union shop.

On July 26, the five Holgate buildings, bordering U. S. Highway 6, were crippled by a strike of 450 workers, who firmly believe that men employes should get at least $24 a week after six months' work and women at least $20.

WIDE SUPPORT

The strike has won wide community support despite the fact that the president of the company, which moved here in 1884, is a controlling power in the town.

He is James E. Henretta, ex-school principal, who owns a number of homes rented to workers and is an officer in the building and loan association which handles mortgages for workers who purchase homes.

Ignoring possible economic reprisals, the townspeople have contributed as much as $60 a day to support the strike, according to Int'l. Representative William H. Griesshober. Food and meeting quarters have been given.

The predominantly first-time pickets are encouraged by the warmth of the town's support and are determined to make Holgate Bros.' wage scale as modern as some of the firm's toys.

U. S. Army 'Grateful' To CIO

WASHINGTON, Aug. 27—"Profound gratitude" for the patriotic manner in which CIO members are responding to the needs of the national defense program, was expressed today in a telegram sent to CIO Pres. Murray by Under Secretary of War Robert Patterson.

Text of the message:

"On this Labor Day, in 1941, the War Department is anxious to have you extend to the millions of CIO members throughout the nation its profound gratification over the patriotic manner in which they are rising to the needs of the present emergency.

"Labor has most at stake in the preservation of democracy. America can only hope to survive the real and imminent dangers confronting it today if every American worker makes himself a committee of one to refute the agents of discord and defeatism in our midst, to awaken our nation to its perils, and to increase production to the level that modern armament demands. Best wishes for your speedy recovery."

Union Hails U. S. 'Seizure' Of Federal Shipbuilding Co.

KEARNY, N. J., Aug. 27—Work was resumed at the Federal Shipbuilding & Drydock Co. here today as the government for the second time since inaugurating the national defense program took over a struck plant.

The company, a U. S. Steel subsidiary holding nearly a half-billion dollars worth of defense orders, was shut down by the CIO Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers when the management refused to accept a U. S. Mediation Board proposal for "maintenance of union membership" during the life of the contract.

Using different procedure from its action in the North American Aviation walkout several months ago, the government employed no armed forces in taking over the big shipyard. Pres. Roosevelt's Executive Order, signed at Hyde Park, N. Y., on Aug. 23, directed Sec. of the Navy Frank Knox to "take possession of and operate the plant." The order pointed out that the strike originated in the company's refusal to accept the Mediation proposal that all members of the union retain their membership under the contract.

Rear Admiral H. G. Bowen, named by Knox to operate the plant, conferred almost immediately with company officials and Pres. John Green of the union. Shortly afterwards, the union officially ended its 17-day walkout.

'COMPLETE VICTORY'

Green was quoted as describing the outcome as a "complete and final victory for the union because we have been assured that every recommendation of the National Defense Mediation Board will be put into effect." The company, in full page advertisement inserted in metropolitan newspapers grudgingly admitted its willingness to comply with the government order, but once again tried to blame the strike on the union.

Whether the government will buy or lease the company's property, or merely supervise operations, was not made clear in the Executive Order. Admiral Bowen also failed to shed light on that question.

Wages, hours and working conditions are not in dispute, having been established on a coast-wide basis by the recently signed Atlantic Coast Shipyard Stabilization Agreement, underwritten by the companies, the union and the government.

TO NEGOTIATE

In his first press conference, Admiral Bowen said the question of maintenance of union membership would be negotiated between the union and the government.

When the President's Executive Order was first made public last Saturday, Pres. Green of the union said his organization "views as most unfortunate the decision of the Federal Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. to abdicate its duties and its rights.

"The interests of honest, fair industrial relations and the welfare of the nation in its great defense effort called for the continuance of the relationship of amicable cooperation of many years' standing between the company and our union.

"The union officials are confident that every individual member of the union will do his utmost to back up the union in the fulfilment of this pledge.

"In turn, of course, we expect that arrangements will immediately be made whereby not only will the mediation board's decision be vindicated, but all rights and procedures of collective bargaining will be preserved for our union and its members at Kearny."

'The CIO Will Move Forward'—Pres. Murray

WASHINGTON—Following is the 1941 Labor Day Message of Pres. Philip Murray of the Congress of Industrial Organizations:

Labor Day this year is the occasion for the celebration of great progress for the millions who compose the CIO.

The year was especially marked by the extension of the right of collective bargaining by the CIO to companies whose anti-unionism had become historic. Hundreds of thousands of American workers who have for years labored under the desperate fear of anti-unionism, now can stand together like free Americans and express their needs through the democratic procedure of collective agreement. The day has come when the Ford Company and the Bethlehem Steel Corporation sit down around the table with the representatives of their workers.

Great Steps Forward

This Labor Day marks a great forward wage movement, a wage movement that has brought to the workers under the CIO in the last six months more than $800,000,000 a year in wage increases. These wage increases mean food on the table of the American workers, carpets on their floors, clothes upon their backs, radios in their homes—real fruits of a successful labor movement.

Within the year the CIO has shown again its ability to contribute leadership on the national scene. Its proposals, the Industry Council Plan and others, for the establishment of effective national production for civilian and defense needs have been about the only major constructive proposals offered to the nation in this period of stress. We have shown that labor has the brains and public spirit to take its place as a responsible participant in the national defense effort. As yet, labor's offer of effective participation has not been accepted. We will not cease, however, in our determined effort to see that labor takes its rightful place.

Stemmed Hysteria

The year has seen a wave of anti-labor hysteria arise in Congress, which brought for the first time in American history serious consideration of compulsory arbitration and federal criminal penalties of great harshness for organizing activity. The CIO has been responsible for stemming the flood of this legislation. Its prompt and vigorous action has saved all American labor from vicious and un-American oppression.

Those who would use these critical days to pursue their purpose of destroying the organized labor movement will not rest. There will be new proposals and new false hysterias. I am convinced, however, that the growing strength of the CIO is an ever-stronger guarantee that labor's rights will be maintained.

The CIO will continue to move forward to extend collective bargaining to new millions.

CIO Moves Ahead

The way is not easy. In a period of war production the real wages of American workers will be beset on all sides. They will be threatened by rising costs of living, by wage taxation and by all kinds of schemes for forced saving. They will be placed in jeopardy by our nation's failure yet to make use of its great productive facilities and of its vast manpower. But the CIO is well aware of these dangers and it will steadfastly meet them.

It is in these efforts to improve the economic and physical strength of the nation that the intense and vigorous patriotism of the workers in the CIO expresses itself. It is the determination of the CIO that this nation shall be a land worth defending with every effort.

CIO Prepares Big Holiday Celebrations

WASHINGTON, Aug. 27—CIO's millions of members will celebrate Labor Day, 1941, in parades, mass meetings, and picnics throughout the country.

Behind them lies a year of solid organizational gains, sharply increased membership, wage increases running close to a billion dollars and a legislative campaign that has brought defeat to a flock of proposals aimed at hamstringing the nation's organized workers.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, convalescing from a recent illness in a Pittsburgh hospital, will be unable to address any Labor Day gathering.

Only CIO official to appear on a national radio network on the holiday will be Sec. James B. Carey, who will speak from Camden, N. J.—where the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers are opening their annual convention. Carey's speech will be one of several on a trans-Atlantic hookup arranged by the U. S. Office for Emergency Management.

A number of presidents of CIO international unions are scheduled to address meetings throughout the country. Allan S. Haywood, CIO director of organization, will speak at a big meeting in Cleveland, while Michael Widman, Jr., CIO assistant director of organization, will journey to New Orleans for the celebration in the Louisiana city.

JONES FOR BALTIMORE

John T. Jones, CIO legislative representative and director of Labor's Non-Partisan League, will give Baltimore CIO workers an insight into political affairs in the nation's capital, while in Cumberland, Md., Edwin S. Smith, former member of the NLRB, is scheduled as the main Labor Day speaker.

John Brophy, director of industrial union councils, will speak at the Minnesota CIO convention.

Powers Hapgood, veteran CIO representative, will address a Rockford, Ill., meeting, while Ernest Pugh, CIO regional director in Chicago, will appear at Elkhart, Ind. James Robb, CIO director in Indianapolis will speak in St. Louis at a meeting arranged by the Industrial Union Council; Frank Bender, regional director in Baltimore, will appear in Birmingham; and Walter Harris, director of the CIO midwest shoe campaign, will be on the speakers list at the Des Moines CIO holiday affair.

CLEVELAND PARADE

One of the largest of the celebrations will be in Cleveland, where more than 10,000 CIO members are expected to march down Euclid Avenue behind CIO banners. High point of the day will be the dedication of the CIO Labor Temple in the evening, with speeches and dancing. The building was formerly owned by the AFL, which found its decreasing membership couldn't support it.

Several thousand will march in Detroit's Labor Day parade, where the past 12 months have seen the Ford Motor Co. join the fold of union firms. Symbol of the new order will be a marching band from Ford Local 600 of the UAW-CIO. Tracy Doll, city CIO head, predicted the parade will

The Congress of Industrial Organizations this Labor Day celebrates a year of unparalleled progress.

The Ford Motor Co., the "Little Steel" companies and scores of other industrial giants have been organized in a nationwide drive which in a few months brought more than a million new members into the CIO and is still continuing.

In all the basic industries, the CIO has won substantial wage increases, adding more than $800,000,000 a year to the pay envelopes of American workers in the last six months alone.

On the legislative front, the CIO has been successful in fighting off one of the biggest and most threatening drives yet launched to hamstring the unions through a series of anti-labor bills.

At the same time, the CIO has shown patriotic and constructive national leadership by promoting Pres. Murray's industry council plan for national defense, and special plans for major industries.

It is a brilliant year's record, of which American labor may well be proud.

But the CIO has never yet been known to rest on its oars. Nor can labor afford to be lulled into a sense of false security.

Pres. Murray warns that the anti-labor drive in Congress has been checked, but not ended; that there will be "new proposals and new false hysterias."

In a number of industries widespread layoffs are threatened, or already taking place, due to bungling maladministration, which the CIO plan would avoid.

The wages of American workers are threatened by rising living costs, by wage taxation and by schemes for forced saving.

Against such dangers working people have but one basic protection, and that is the strength of labor organization.

Labor Day 1941 therefore finds the CIO and its members not only celebrating past progress but grimly resolved that there shall be no let-up in this progress.

Organizing the unorganized and strengthening our unions still remain the basic task of the CIO, upon which the maintenance of our present conditions and liberties and all future gains depend.

Soaking the Poor

There is only one real issue before the Senate in its consideration of the new tax bill. That is, whether the greatly increased tax income necessitated by the defense program is to be obtained from the surplus wealth of those best able to pay, or to be squeezed out of the wages and lowered living standards of those least able to pay.

The bill passed by the House does the latter. As CIO Pres. Murray pointed out, it "increases the burden on working class incomes" while "failing to establish the kind of excess profits tax, along with high income and estate taxes, which would effectively reach war profits and excessive private fortunes."

It was hoped that the Senate would remedy this injustice and place the tax burden where it belongs. But the action of the Senate finance committee in recommending lower income tax exemptions, while rejecting compulsory joint returns for rich married couples, threatens to make the bill even worse than it was in the House.

Instead of raising income tax exemptions up to $2,500 for married couples and $1,000 for single persons, as asked by the CIO, the Senate committee actually proposes to lower them still further to $1,500 for married couples and $750 for single persons.

That means taxing wages that are insufficient even for a minimum health and decency standard of living. Every dollar thus levied on the lower paid means less food, less clothing and less of the other necessities of life for millions—and this at a time when war profits are soaring to dizzy heights.

There is little time left to combat these Congressional plans to coddle the rich and soak the poor. So every CIO union and every patriotic American should act at once, to impress upon the Senate the American people's opposition to its committee's proposals.

Resolutions should be passed without delay and letters and telegrams should be sent at once to your Senators, urging a raising and not a lowering of income exemptions; repeal of excise and sales taxes that bear upon workers' incomes; and the levying of all new taxation on high individual incomes, estates and growing corporation profits—including an effective excess profits tax and higher inheritance and gift taxes.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

THE RAIN beat against the club windows in impetuous fits and starts, as if indignant at being balked of its prey so comfortably ensconced within. And comfortable they looked, those five men relaxing there—pillows of comfort and pillars of respectability. But there was murder in their hearts.

"Mighty uncertain weather," said the Industrialist, as he pulled his armchair closer to the cheerful blaze in the fireplace. "Around last Labor Day everything was fine and peaceful. But since that damned CIO got started, even the elements are in revolt. You just can't tell what's going to happen."

"I can tell you what's going to happen," said the Publisher, gulping his highball and setting down the glass as sharply as if he were crushing an insect. "If this Menace isn't nipped in the bud, you'll have blood flowing in the streets instead of rain. Red riot and rebellion, that's what it is."

The Banker chewed the end of his cigar reflectively. "That sounds like a quote from one of your editorials," he said "to scare the simple-minded."

"I'm not so much concerned about riots as I am about the Menace to the balance sheet. If it makes any headway, the unions will go hog-wild on their wage demands. And as for you, my friend," he said, turning to the Industrialist, "they'll be taking over your business, if you ever give in one inch."

"That I never will," the captain of industry replied. "I'd sooner sign with the devil."

At this point, the Politician spoke up: "We're not going to allow it to enter our state. We're going to maintain law and order, even if it means bloodshed. And I think we can rely on safe and sane labor men, like our friend here, to help us."

The AFL leader cleared his throat. "You gentlemen are unduly alarmed," he said. "The AFL does not tolerate dual unionism and rebellion. The Menace is grave, I agree, but if you will cooperate with us, in a year or two it will be only a memory."

Five men with murder in their hearts, in that September of 1936. They went their several ways, each bent on the destruction of the same Menace.

The Industrialist used spies and thugs and gunmen. The Publisher drew terrible word pictures of violence, riots, rebellion, anarchy, etc. The Banker used all the powers of his control of credit. The Politician raved and blustered and called on the troops. The AFL leader used collusion and scabbery.

And in the course of time the Menace disappeared. No bloodstained body was found down an alley, no corpse was washed up on a riverbank. It simply was no more.

Five years later, on the eve of Labor Day, 1941, the same five men happened to meet in the same club.

"So you signed with the devil, did you?" the Banker joshed the Industrialist. "A closed shop too—how cosy!"

"Well, the financial pages don't bear out any of your predictions about the effects of wage increases, Mr. Wizard," the other growled.

The Publisher for his part did not wait to be kidded. "Nothing so dead as yesterday's papers," he said defensively. "The real menace today is. . . ."

But the Politician wouldn't listen. "I always said I favored collective bargaining and safe and sane labor leaders. The CIO in my state is a power which has to be reckoned with. It is something more than the 'memory' which my AFL friend here predicted."

"I still say," the AFL man replied, but no one listened any more to what he was still saying.

In the five years between Labor Day 1936 and Labor Day 1941, a Menace has been done to death. Some say it was worked to death; others that it was talked to death. Others have just forgotten.

But no man in his right mind can see any Menace today in an organized labor movement of five million American men and women, banded together in the CIO to advance their economic interests by democratic means—a movement which has brought freedom from fear and a better living to millions.

The biggest industrialists in the land, men who swore they never would sign with the CIO, have one by one signed CIO agreements. Their businesses have not been taken over thereby. They have had to grant wage increases, it is true, but their profits have actually increased under union conditions.

Those governors, mayors and other politicians who raved about the CIO Menace have seen the CIO grow and spread all around them. It has become a great community and political force in their territories, and there is not one of them now that does not seek the support of CIO voters.

The solution to this Mystery of the Missing Menace is to be found in the five men first mentioned, and their kind. Each for his own selfish reason, they created an imaginary Menace. It was bound to disappear eventually, for it never existed. ..

CIO Goes Forward

A Labor Day Message

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD
CIO Director of Organization

Labor Day, 1941, is a memorable occasion for the five million workers who belong to the great unions of the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

For in the past 12 months the CIO has made mighty strides in its constant forward march to better the working conditions and living standards of a great segment of the American people, and to insure protection for its millions of members from deprivation and insecurity.

During the past 12 months the CIO has demonstrated its capacity to progress toward the ten million membership goal outlined by John L. Lewis at our 1939 convention, and under the wise leadership of Pres. Philip Murray has toppled over scores of anti-labor bastions once believed to be impregnable.

Widespread Successes

CIO successes have been so widespread throughout the country, occurring in so many diverse industries, that one scarcely knows where to start in listing CIO's great accomplishments.

Ford, who for years defied labor and the government, has bowed to the CIO, and signed a UAW contract that is a model for the automobile industry. The United Mine Workers, led by Pres. Lewis, abolished the long-hated southern differential and raised wages $1 a day throughout the bituminous mines of the country. The Steel Workers Organizing Committee's negotiators, under the direction of Chairman Murray, forced U. S. Steel and the rest of the industry to grant 10 cent an hour increases, and thereby led a movement that spread throughout industrial America to the resounding benefit of millions of wage earners. And Little Steel, whose thugs and gangsters wrecked the lives and homes of many innocent workers in 1937, has agreed to negotiate CIO union contracts.

These are the highlights of a brilliant year for labor. But in thousands of other factories, in hundreds of other towns and cities, the unions of the CIO have patiently and magnificently applied themselves to their one principal job—the organization of the unorganized, and the protection of their members.

The Aluminum Workers have wrested sizable wage increases from ALCOA, that mighty monopoly which controls an entire industry. The Clothing Workers have signed contracts bringing benefits to scores of thousands. The Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, whose convention meets on Labor Day, have gained improved national agreements with the largest firms in their industry.

For the men who go down to the sea in ships, or who ply the inland waterways of our nation, the maritime unions of the CIO have lifted wages and improved standards to the highest mark in history. Throughout the metal mines of the Rocky Mountain States and in the smelters of the east; in the great meat packing plants of the mid-west, and in textile mills of the east and in the exploited areas of the south, workers have come to know that CIO alone represents them and their interests.

White collar employes; rubber workers in Akron's busy factories; harassed clerks in the great department stores of the big cities; lumbermen at work in the distant reaches of the timberland; youngsters pouring into the booming aircraft plants which dot the nation; busy shipyard workers turning out new vessels for defense; and veteran oil workers in the refineries and turret-dotted oil fields —all of these are united in one common aspiration, to improve their own standards and that of their nation. All have one organization which helps them do it, the CIO.

CIO Defies Its Foes

The path has not been easy. In sleezy, anonymous leaflets, and fancy, allegedly impartial picture magazines, the CIO has been attacked for its service to America's working people. Government officials too frequently have forgotten their promises and turned on the people whose trusting votes put them in office. All sorts of spokesmen for reaction have "looked with alarm" at our great movement.

Their attacks bother us not a bit. Confident in the outstanding ability of our elected leaders, sure of our own increasing strength, proud of the fortitude and common sense of our members, we look ahead to future growth for the CIO. We shall not be deterred from our goal. Let all who try to thwart the will of America's demoncracy-loving working people remember: the CIO is here to stay, the CIO will go forward.

Councils Hit Stride

A Labor Day Message

By JOHN BROPHY
CIO Director of Industrial Union Councils

The members of the Congress of Industrial Organizations may well look back with satisfaction at the accomplishments of their unions and councils during the past 12 months.

Throughout the year since last Labor Day, our unions have made gratifying progress in the field of collective bargaining, extending improvements to hundreds of thousands of new members, and vastly improving the conditions of workers organized in recent years. At the same time, the industrial union councils of the CIO in states and cities and towns throughout the nation have shown similar progress in protecting the interests of CIO members in state legislatures and in the legislative bodies of their communities.

Defeated Bad Bills

Labor's enemies have been disturbed to see CIO grow, and in innumerable ways these opponents of our unions' progress have sought to impede our advance. State legislatures considered literally hundreds of reactionary anti-labor bills; through the valiant work of our state councils a large proportion of these were eliminated before they could do the damage their sponsors so earnestly expected. In many cases we have been able to turn the tables on our foes and to write into the legislative records new laws and statutes to protect the rights and interest of our members.

During the past year, too, the Industrial Union Councils of the CIO have become more established in the communities of the nation, where an ever-growing majority of people are coming to realize that it is the CIO that speaks for American industrial labor.

Meet New Problems

Problems of defense housing have engaged many of our councils. With defense industrial growth suddenly producing tremendous strains on housing facilities, CIO groups have responded quickly with plans and suggestions for meeting the crisis situations. Many cities and towns can be thankful to the CIO for the wisdom and ideas of its members in working out the solution to community problems.

The CIO councils have taken a leading position in bringing defense industry to the smaller cities and towns of the country. They have participated in community surveys, and contributed out of their wisdom to improving the living conditions in the towns where they reside.

For despite the propaganda of our foes, the CIO is an American institution, whose ideals coincide with those of our democratic way of life. Through their councils, the CIO-organized workers of this nation have provided a forum for free discussion; and out of those meetings have come a steadily increasing flow of demands for government adoption of CIO proposals aimed at making our defense program truly efficient and beneficial to all the people.

Back CIO Plans

Pres. Philip Murray's brilliant industry council program, which would open up wide new fields for industrial democracy, has received an overwhelming vote of support from the councils. So, too, have the Reuther plan for increased airplane production, the Murray plan to bring greater democracy and greater production to the steel industry, the proposal of the Aluminum Workers to remove the dangerous monopoly-controlled bottleneck in the light metal so vital to our whole defense program.

It has been the CIO, the enlightened workers of our nation, who have supported these progressive suggestions; and the opposition has come from the traditional foes of labor, who almost automatically criticize each idea and each proposal and each action of the organized working people.

By building their councils, by strengthening their voice in the local community, by playing an active and intelligent role in the political life of their states, our unions are making a vital contribution to the CIO. I feel certain that Labor Day, 1942, will show still further progress for our Industrial Union Councils.

CIO Prepares Big Holiday Fetes

be the biggest in Detroit Labor Day history.

ALABAMA PICNIC

Down south in Alabama, more than 15,000 CIO members and their families are expected to gather for the Labor Day picnic at Praco, where Local 5829 of the United Mine Workers will play host to the visiting throngs. A full-sized program, requiring three masters of ceremonies from the labor ranks, will unfold during the day. A number of union leaders, including Pres. William Mitch of the UMWA, will speak.

Toledo plans for a big CIO parade, while in Duluth, Minn., CIO Vice-Pres. Reid Robinson heads the list of invited speakers. West Coast cities—Los Angeles, San Diego, San Francisco, Portland and Seattle—will anticipate big CIO celebrations to mark a year of major accomplishment west of the Rockies.

SMALLER TOWNS

The Labor Day turnouts won't be limited to the big cities, for numerous smaller towns have well organized programs scheduled. The Utah Industrial Union Council predicts its most successful celebration in years with a parade and picnic at Murray City. Furniture and glass workers, together with members of other CIO unions, will have a get-together at Fort Smith, Ark.

Beauty contests, games and entertainment will be on tap at Morgantown, W. Va., during the annual Tri-County Labor Day Celebration, being run under CIO auspices. Sen. Kilgore of W. Virginia and Pres. Ora Gasaway of District 50, United Mine Workers, head the list of invited speakers.

In Wilmington, Del., the New Castle County Industrial Union Council will mark a year of unprecedented gains with a picnic at which an estimated 10,000 members of CIO, AFL and brotherhoods will be present.

TYPICAL SENTIMENT

Typical of CIO feeling around the nation was this statement by Sec.-Treas. Gene Derrickson of the New Castle CIO:

"Our membership is very enthusiastic about this celebration because they realize that if we are able to get across to the public, particularly to the unorganized workers, the idea that labor is the best guarantor of the national defense of America, we will have made great strides in winning new friends who are potential members of the CIO."

U. S. Workers Aid 'Save Gas' Campaign

Washington, Aug. 27—Aid to the Federal Government's gasoline conservation program on the Eastern seaboard was promised this week by the United Federal Workers of America.

The executive committee of the UFWA's Labor Department Local 12 set up a special committee to prepare a transportation plan that would permit sharp curtailment of the amount of gas used by the nearly 2,000 employes of the Department.

Plans will be laid to have several employes travel to work in the same car. The extent of the saving is considerable, for there are 180,000 government employes in the District of Columbia.

Poor to Make Up for Taxes That Rich Escaped

WASHINGTON, Aug. 27—When the House of Representatives, acting on a suggestion from Pres. Roosevelt, threw out provisions for compulsory joint tax returns by wealthy married couples, it created a 300 million dollar gap in tax revenue that had to be met some other way.

This week the Senate Finance Committee, by a 2-1 vote, came through with its proposals: a soak-the-poor and middle income families to the tune of 303 million dollars—the amount the rich escaped.

Instead of forcing the rich to abandon their loop-holes in the tax structure by filing joint returns, the Senate group dropped the exemption for married couples from $2,000 to $1,500, and lopped $50 off the exemptions for single persons.

CONSIDERABLE BURDEN

Considerable of the burden of providing the 300 million dollars will fall on couples with an income of from $1,500 to $2,000, it was predicted here. One observer here commented that "the committee's decision means that 95 per cent of the income tax payers will pay higher taxes so 5 per cent of the richest can continue to enjoy this privilege" of filling out two tax blanks instead of one, and thereby paying less money to the government.

A proposal by Sen. Arthur Vandenberg of Michigan for a general sales tax was voted down by the Committee. Throughout the deliberations, Progressive Sen. Robert La Follette of Wisconsin took a consistent position for taxation based on ability to pay, rather than on soaking the poor.

As the tax bill now stands, estimates predict it will bring in about 3½ billion dollars to the government. But changes may still be made.

Know Your Congressman!

WASHINGTON, Aug. 27—A booklet showing how each Congressman voted on the May-Connally Bill, key piece of anti-labor legislation in the current session of Congress, has been prepared by Labor's Non-Partisan League.

Copies of the pamphlet, which every unionist should have, may be obtained by writing to LNPL, 1037 Earle Bldg., Washington, D. C. Prices: 5c a copy, 100 for $3.00.

CIO Strikes Republic In Gadsden

GADSDEN, Ala., Aug. 27—This town, where once it was almost worth a union organizer's life to appear on the main street, has witnessed its first successful strike—a three-day walkout by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee at the Republic Steel plant.

Noel Beddow, SWOC regional official, said the strikers were "demanding pay rates somewhat approaching that of steel mill workers in the Birmingham district."

Only a few years ago Pres. S. H. Dalrymple of the United Rubber Workers required hospitalization after he had been attacked by armed thugs whose job it was to "take care" of union officials. A similar attack on an URWA official occurred several months ago.

BIG MAJORITY

Meanwhile, Bill Dunn, SWOC representative here, said the steel union has a majority of the Republic employes signed up and paying dues, and that it was anxious for an NLRB election to prove its majority.

"Employes of Republic at Gadsden appear determined to show Girdler that they are entitled to a contract on the same basis as the 17 plants for which he has agreed to negotiate," Dunn said. He referred to a recent agreement by Republic to negotiate and sign a pact with the SWOC for 17 northern plants. A recent NLRB survey showed the CIO union to have a strong majority in all the 17 factories, and they have been lumped into one bargaining unit.

Order Poll In Lakes Shipyards

Camden, N. J., Aug. 27—The CIO Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers today forecast victory in an approaching NLRB election at six plants of the American Shipbuilding Co. located on the Great Lakes.

The elections mark the climax of an organizing campaign at the company's plants, which have been under charter with the AFL. Shortly before the agreement was to expire, the CIO affiliate notified the company of its claim to a majority of the more than 2,000 employes, and warned of the consequences of signing a new contract with the AFL before giving the shipyard union a chance to show its strength.

The company then petitioned for the election. Under the NLRB order, all six yards are included in one bargaining unit.

OPM's Bungling, Servitude To Industrialists Exposed In 'Business As Usual'

BUSINESS AS USUAL by I. F. Stone. Modern Age Publishers, New York. $2 a copy.

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

There is an old axiom in advertising offices that repetition is the most effective method of getting an idea across to the public. That principle has been applied by the big business interests and the professional labor haters—with the same intensity that they plug XYZ mouth wash on the radio, in the newspapers and on billboards—to saturating the country with a fancy, 1941-model argument that labor is responsible for all the sins and omissions of the national defense program.

With the defense program just 15 months old, I. F. Stone, Washington correspondent of the Nation magazine, has thoroughly deflated that argument in his new book, Business as Usual, a review of defense's first year.

It will probably be voted the least popular work in its class by the people who run the huge corporate monopolies of this country, and by the seven score and ten dollar-a-year men who stooge for them at the Office of Production Management. But to the millions of people who work for a living, who read in the papers that their demand for a living wage is heresy if not treason, Mr. Stone's book will be a welcome tonic and an arsenal of facts.

For it shows that big business—and not labor—has been responsible for our lagging defense program. It throws light on the attitudes of our native monopolists, who are firmly committed to the principle of low production and high profit. It exposes the sit-down of big business which held up aircraft production six months while the corporations waited for the government to guarantee them super-profits. And it points to the Murray plan and the CIO airplane, steel and aluminum plans as workable solutions for our defense production tie-up, Mr. Knudsen to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. Stone blames many of our currently distressing shortages on the failure of the business leaders in OPM to use common sense planning methods. The case of raw materials is a good example.

"'Progress was made during the year,' the Office of Production Management reported vaguely in 1941," Stone points out, "'in building up stockpiles in most raw materials vital to defense.'

"OPM statements tend toward the candor of the patent medicine salesman who explains that he makes no exaggerated claims; his mineral water is of no help in cancer or syphilis, it will cure only rheumatism, sinusitis, Bright's disease and fallen arches. Progress was made, but it does not seem to have progressed quite as far as it might have. The OPM is more anxious to place the blame—elsewhere—than to be frank about shortcomings," he charges.

Close examination of the actual situation soon revealed that the encouraging stockpile reserves of raw materials were in many important instances either non-existent or considerably less than claimed.

ALCOA'S TACTICS

Stone's book pays close attention to that wondrous organization, the Aluminum Company of America, which controls all but a small fraction of our aluminum production and has close financial tie-ups with European aluminum producers.

"If a monopolist fails to expand production on the eve of war, he may endanger his country but he does not risk his monopoly," Mr. Stone points out in discussing ALCOA's behavior in the last two years. "He can deny the shortage as long as possible, and keep production restricted. Restriction of production does not restrict profits.

"It is true that the country's demand for planes was a desperate one; that only made the oportunity the more tempting. In no other field were Aluminum Company's profits higher than in that of aluminum for planes. To quote the staid language of the brief filed by the government in December, 1940 in its long drawn-out anti-trust suit, "the highest rates of profit . . . were realized on sheet of 24S and XA 24S alloy, both of which are used very extensively in aircraft construction for the fabrication of airplane wings and fuselages, as well as other parts.'"

ALCOA's 1940 net profits were almost 45 million dollars; that was about a 16% return on its 250 million dollar capitalization!

DENIED SHORTAGE

From the same court records Mr. Stone quotes I. W. Wilson, ALCOA vice-president, in statements made only a year ago but which sounding aluminum shortage. Wilson, under oath, predicted that his company could supply all U. S. defense aluminum requirements, and that there would be a substantial surplus for sale abroad.

The reason for Wilson's optimism was clear. Admission of possible future shortages might lead to private competition, even to government intervention.

In months following, would-be competitors discovered another example of ALCOA's far-reaching power: "the OPM did not intend to finance competition with the aluminum monopoly." Only recently has the government, through the RFC, given aid to one potential competitor of ALCOA, and that company's production will be comparatively trifling for years to come.

BUSINESS CONTROLS OPM

Big business has its tenterhooks in OPM, Mr. Stone makes clear, and is running roughshod over those public servants who think the needs of a democratic nation are superior to the monopoly interests of a handful of super-profit makers. They have succeeded in hiding shortages, in belittling criticism, in stifling competition against the monopolies, and in pigeonholing the CIO's plans for democratic planning of industrial needs.

BACKS CIO PLANS

"The problem in defense is to get the monopolists out of control, but to do so without depriving the defense program of the cooperation and the ability of our business men, big and small," the book points out. Stone calls for industry councils, as suggested by the CIO, and democratic planning looking toward a reorganization of our economy "essential to a successful struggle against Hitlerism abroad and at home."

Churches' Labor Day Message:

Industrial Democracy Applies True Christian Ideals

The CIO NEWS herewith publishes the annual Labor Sunday Message of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America:

The Christian concern for democracy, based on Jesus' teaching of the dignity and essential brotherhood of all the children of God, long an influence in political institutions, has more recently begun to find expression in economic and industrial relations. This concern supports the right of the common man to a voice in determining the conditions under which he works. The labor union movement, like political democracy, has its imperfections; yet it is the major expression of the democratic principle in industry. Employers in increasing numbers are freely granting to labor the right to organize and are working out contructive relationships with unions on the basis of mutual confidence. In many industries, the men and women who work with their hands and tend machines are no longer a struggling minority seeking recognition and a just share of the profits of industry. They have become a great organic movement, involved directly in the worldwide struggle for the preservation and growth of democracy.

In countries where liberty and equality prevail as ideals of human relations, there the labor movement is strong. Where they are not applied to industrial relations, there unions are few and weak. Where democracy has been discarded, as in the totalitarian states, there the independent labor union movement has disappeared. The existence of these contrasting situations is not a mere coincidence. Democracy, by the very law of its nature, must extend into industrial and economic as well as political relations. Totalitarianism, by an equally inherent law of its nature, must destroy an independent labor union movement. Industrial civilization must either extend more democratic control to those who produce and to those who consume economic goods and services, or it must center total power in a political state. There seems to be no other alternative. If we cannot have the spirit of Christian democracy in industry, all democracy is jeopardized.

It is well that church members face this fact and come to terms with it. A new missionary opportunity presents itself. The churches should urge the further application of the Christian principles of democracy to industrial and economic relations. If this new missionary call is heeded, the Christian forces will play a vital part in the era just ahead. If it is ignored, they are likely to have little part in solving our most urgent social problems and infusing spiritual life into society.

The fundamental religious concern with industry has to do with its spirit and purpose. If we are to develop an economic order which will express the spirit of Christ, who came "not to be ministered unto, but to minister," the primary test of production and distribution must be not a private advantage but the common good. A Christian spirit must find appropriate economic forms to fulfill its basic purpose of the greatest service to human need.

In the area of industrial relations the churches must make clear not only that labor has the right to organize, but also that the principle of such organization is socially sound. At the same time as labor grows in power, it must assume the moral responsibility which power entails. Organized labor can command public support only as it deals effectively with various elements in its ranks which weaken confidence in its integrity. It must live up to the Christian spirit which is essential to democracy. It must itself practice democracy in control and, where necessary, put its own house in order. It must, also, refrain from discriminating against any workers because of color or creed. Many unions have led the way in fair interracial relations in their own membership and have set a worthy example to civic and religious organizations. Others have yet to accept and to practice this Christian democratic principle.

This hour of crisis calls for a Christian movement which has renewed its spirit and clarified its vision of the wider implications of its Gospel, and for a labor movement which has purified its practices and set its eyes on the farther goals of true democracy. All groups are summoned to work together for a better ordering of society upheld by religion on the one hand, and by the productive labor of hand and brain on the other.

Smith's NLRB Term Ends With Criticism Of 'Back-Track' Policy

WASHINGTON, Aug. 27—Edwin S. Smith, progressive member of the National Labor Relations Board, completed his term in office last night with no public indication from the White House whether he would be reappointed or who his successor may be.

Termination of Smith's service on the NLRB leaves the agency with only two members, William Leiserson and W. H. Millis, who have frequently voted together in reversing a number of previous precedents of the Board.

Smith, a former personnel manager for the Filene's department store in Boston, and later a state labor official in Massachusetts, was first appointed to the Board for a one-year term in 1935, when the NLRB was created. He was reappointed to the five-year term in 1936.

Smith's belief—re-inforced by hard-hitting decisions—that labor must be organized into the largest possible bargaining units in order that it may meet as an equal with modern large corporations, won him wide support from progressive unionists, but produced irate statements from certain industrialists and a few craft-minded officials of AFL unions.

BACKED BY CIO

Early in August CIO Pres. Murray urged Pres. Roosevelt to reappoint Smith to the Board, and CIO unions and councils throughout the nation have taken similar action.

Smith and J. Warren Madden, former chairman of the NLRB who is now a judge on the U. S. Court of Claims, formed a frequent majority team on the Board. Following the appointment of Prof. Millis of the University of Chicago to the Board, Smith found himself a frequent lone dissenter in a series of decisions which have aroused fear in many labor quarters that the NLRB is pulling in its sails and retreating from the staunch position it once took in defending labor's rights.

RECENT DECISION

One recent example of that trend was a 2-1 decision involving the CIO United Automobile, Aircraft & Agricultural Implement Workers and the Clayton & Lambert Mfg. Co. of Detroit.

With Smith dissenting vigorously, the NLRB majority ruled that members of a union shop committee do not constitute a collective bargaining representative group within the meaning of the Wagner Act. Leiserson and Millis accordingly ruled that the company did not violate the Act by demanding, as a condition to reopening its plant and signing a contract with the UAW, that the contract provide for the election of new men to supplant previous members of the union shop committee.

SMITH'S DISSENT

"The respondent's (company's) admitted motive in limiting the field from which shop committeemen might be chosen by the employes was its desire to rid itself of four militant union leaders whose activities as representatives too zealously protected the rights of their fellow employes to the inconvenience of the respondent," Smith charged in his dissent.

He accused the majority of the Board of engaging in "specious reasoning," of "doing" violence to the plain words of the (Wagner) Act, and of overlooking "without specifically reversing" a number of court decisions.

"The facts in the record are not seriously in dispute," Smith continued. "They reveal plainly a campaign by the respondent to dictate the choice of employe representatives and to oust from employment the representatives of the employes' own choosing . . .

"I submit that I am unable to understand the findings of the majority that shop committeemen are not representatives of employes for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection as guaranteed by the Act."

Back Anti-Nazis

New York, Aug. 30—Support for a program of all aid to Great Britain and the Soviet Union in their fight against Hitler as "the greatest enemy of peace and civilization" was voted in a resolution passed by Dist. 3 Joint Council of the United Furniture Workers here.

Demonstrate At Quaker Oats Plant

CEDAR RAPIDS, Ia., Aug. 27—A demonstration by 700 workers at the big Quaker Oats factory here, largest cereal plant in the world, was staged this week to express disapproval of a compromise wage increase offer made by the management.

The workers belong to the new local of the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing & Allied Workers. The union charged that the company's offer of pay increases ranging from two to ten cents an hour for new employes and excluding all employes who had worked at the plant two or more years, was "a clumsy anti-union move."

TO PUSH DRIVE

A statement issued by the union declared that this move would "only serve to strengthen the drive of the local union for its first contract with this traditionally open-shop company."

During the demonstration, the workers staged a snake dance around the big plant which covers 360 acres.

"This orderly and effective show of strength," said Ed Nix, union organizer, "should convince the Quaker Oats management at Cedar Rapids that the workers are not going to take 'no' for an answer on a long over-due wage increase and a satisfactory union contract."

The local was originally organized as a CIO Local Industrial Union in March, 1941, and later transferred to the UCAPAWA.

Steel Union Wins Election At Pottstown

Pottstown, Pa., Aug. 27—The CIO continued its winning streak in Bethlehem Steel elections this week.

Workers at the local Bethlehem plant voted by a large majority for the Steel Workers Organizing Committee. They cast the lucky number of 777 votes for the CIO steel union. An AFL outfit received 214, and 264 voted for neither.

The election victory sets the SWOC as sole bargaining agent in all Bethlehem plants except the big mill at Sparrows Point, Md.

STORE STRIKERS: Members of the CIO United Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Employes voice their determination to continue the strike at Gimbel's New York store for 5-day, 40-hour week and wage increases. The strike, highly effective in cutting the store's sales, is in its second week.

NYA Work Centers Give Youngsters a Background Of Industrial Democracy

WASHINGTON ,Aug. 27—A new kind of youth is entering the labor movement. They are the young men and women between the ages of 17 and 24 who received work experience at work centers of the National Youth Administration.

In the Connecticut River Valley, where there is a large demand for workers to man the defense industries, many of these young people are being employed in plants with which the United Automobile Workers of America have contracts. Within several weeks of their employment they either have signed applications for membership in the union or have already become members.

The process of joining a union is almost a natural function to many of the young people who have spent from six months to a year in an NYA workshop.

Large numbers of them are sons of union fathers. In the New Departure Company plant at Bristol, a division of General Motors which has contractual relations with the UAWA many of the workers with NYA workshop experience come from homes where the fathers are members of the United Mine Workers, Oil Workers, Lace Workers, Leather Workers and Steel Workers. They not only sign UAWA applications willingly but anticipate the approach of a union representative.

LOSE PREJUDICES

The significant factor which makes these youth different from other young people entering industry is the background of their NYA workshop experience. In those shops young people of all races, color and religions rub shoulders and learn to understand each other better. Many of the prejudices and that includes prejudices against unionism, common to the varied racial and social groupings of our society, are worn down pretty thin by the time these youth are ready to find employment in private industry.

Their stay in NYA work centers develops social attitudes essential to labor and national unity.

MANY FUNCTIONS

Work centers conducted by the National Youth Administration, according to the present program, are expected to turn out about 95,000 young men and women every three months for employment in defense industries. But while this is a very important function, it is only a part of the total activities of NYA. Every month NYA workshops give work experience to an additional 200,000 youth who have also never had a job, to learn the uses of tools and to develop regular work habits.

The National Youth Administration also sponsors a program of work for about 500,000 young people every year who are attending public school and college to enable them to continue their education. While receiving this work experience youth are paid from $17 to $24 a month on the out-of-school programs, and from $3 to $20 to those still at school.

PUBLIC BENEFITS

All of the work performed at NYA projects is for community, state and national institutions, such as schools, libraries, hospitals, recreation centers, the coast guard, army and navy and for other entirely public purposes. The National Youth Administration gives youth, most of them coming from workers' families, some financial support either to continue their studies if they are in school or college, or an opportunity to learn work habits and gain some work experience to enable them to obtain jobs quicker in private industry, if they are out of school.

Labor is generally co-operating closely with the National Youth Administration, realizing that the youth employed on NYA projects are labor youth who will have a definite influence on the labor movement when they enter private industry. Some unions come to NYA work centers for new recruits for their industries. Others take some NYA young people for apprenticeship training in the skilled crafts.

Note Progress In Tobacco Campaign

Chicago, Aug. 27—Great strides have been made during the last six months in organizing the tobacco industry, Donald Henderson, president of the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing & Allied Workers reported this week

Since jurisdiction over all sections of the tobacco industry was turned over to the UCAPAWA by the National CIO last February, Henderson said, 15 locals have been established with a total membership of between three and four thousand, and contracts have been signed with 55 companies covering about 3,500 workers.

GOMPERS' OWN LOCAL

Sam Gompers' old local in New York City, which formerly belonged to the AFL Cigar Workers International, is among the CIO tobacco locals in the Tobacco Division of UCAPAWA.

Organizing campaigns are now under way in a number of big cigar plants including those owned by the five largest firms, Henderson said. The Big Five in the cigar industry are Consolidated, Bayak, General, American and Diesel-Wemmer-Gilbert Corp.

Carey Asks Hull Intervene For Spanish Republicans

WASHINGTON, Aug. 27—A plea that Sec. of State Cordell Hull act to save the lives of former labor and liberal leaders of Republican Spain, now residing in unoccupied France, was voiced today by Sec. James B. Carey.

In a letter to Hull, the CIO official said "disturbing news has reached me of an impending round-up of labor and liberal leaders in unoccupied France," and mentioned the arrest and detention of Ventura Gassol and Pedro Terradellas, members of the last Republican Cabinet of Catalonia.

The two men were seized, Carey told Hull, "as they were boarding ship for America and held for deportation to Spain, where they will doubtless be executed." The action, he continued, "appears to be only the first move of the Vichy government in this direction."

"It is our deep conviction that tyrannical acts of this sort, wherever they may occur, are direct blows at the security and welfare of organized labor and democratic institutions in all countries."

He urged Sec. Hull to make representations to the Vichy government in order that the lives of Gassol and Terradellas may be spared and that "the threatened extension of such attacks against other labor and democratic leaders may be forestalled."

E. T. Weir Subsidiary Signs With CIO

PARKERSBURG, W. Va., Aug. 27.—The Steel Workers Organizing Committee this week signed a contract with the Ames-Baldwin Tool Co., subsidiary of Ernest T. Weir's Natl. Steel Co.

The pact is the second to be signed with a subsidiary of the anti-union company. The first contract was with the Great Lakes Steel Co. of Ecorse, Mich.

CIO Hits 'Soak-the-Poor' Tax Bill

LABOR DAY, '41:

Symbols of CIO's amazing gains in the past 12 months were the Labor Day celebrations in scores of cities and towns throughout the nation. Hundreds of thousands of union members marched in parades, feasted at union picnics and heard speeches by CIO leaders. Shown here are scenes from celebrations in two of the country's largest cities. At top, a group from the UAW - CIO's big Ford Local 600, march in the Detroit parade. At left, part of the crowd of 160,000 who marched in the Los Angeles parade. Senate Measure 'Relieves Rich', Murray Charges; LaFollette Files Dissent

WASHINGTON, Sept. 5—The Senate today had voted approval of a "soak-the-poor" tax bill which will gouge heavily into the incomes of the nation's lowest one-third, while giving wide exemptions to the fortunate few in the top income brackets.

The bill was passed as a quickly-assembled CIO "people's lobby" was trying to convince members of the Upper House to reverse the action of the Senate Finance Committee and give their approval to a more equitable bill.

Earlier, CIO Pres. Philip Murray had sent a letter to all Senators pointing out that the measure would "result in relief for the rich at the expense of the poor". He urged instead a bill with an effective excess profits tax; strongly increased taxes on the upper income brackets; higher taxes on large estates and the plugging of loopholes in the law; and reduction of taxes on low-income families.

Federal Workers Map Fight Against Anti-Unionism

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6—Raising of a $25,000 fighting fund and a nation-wide organizing drive on the part of 200 local unions were voted by the executive board of the United Federal Workers, CIO, as the best answer to recent attacks on Federal workers and a number of arbitrary firings of active CIO members in the government service.

The board voted to ask the help of Pres. Murray, "as soon as his health permits," in bringing the facts of these attacks to President Roosevelt. Intimidation of union members has ranged all the way from discharges at bayonet point in navy yards to Secretary of Labor Perkins' action in summarily firing Helen Miller, union leader, on vague charges of "Communism" that the Secretary has refused to air in an open and impartial hearing.

NEGRO DISCRIMINATION

The board also called on President Roosevelt to issue an Executive order stopping discrimination against Negro workers in the government, similar to the order issued for private industry, and urged that a genuine promotion from within policy be established in the Federal service to give U. S. workers the first chance at better jobs.

On its opening day, the UFWA board voted full support to the defense program and to the defense program of all aid to "Great Britain, the Soviet Union, China and other nations fighting against aggression."

Quarry Workers Win Pay Boost in Vermont and South

Barre, Vt., Sept. 6—After ten months of company unionism for which they voted last November, the employes of the Blair Limestone Co. of Martinsburg, W. Va., voted 41 to 16 for the United Stone and Allied Products Workers of America in a recent election.

The first "closed shop" contract in Elberton, Ga., granite quarries was obtained in negotiations with the Elberton City quarries. Five-cent hourly raises, seniority, time and one-half and double time for overtime were also conceded.

The contract requires that the company shall provide such protective devices as may eliminate industrial disease and silicosis. The contract runs to July 1, 1943. Provision is made for reopening on wages.

In Graniteville, Vt., in the "Barre granite belt," five quarry companies granted a 3-cent an hour general raise to some 550 employes. The rates run from 58 cents for common labor to 91 cents for skilled help.

Gimbel's Strike Continues

New York, Sept. 5—Negotiations and picketing continued to mark the strike of 1,500 CIO members at the big Gimbel's store as the walkout went into its third week.

A number of conferences between Louis Broido, Gimbel's executive, and CIO leaders, have been held in both New York and Washington, with Allan S. Haywood, CIO director of organization, lending assistance to officials of the United Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Employes.

Members of a number of CIO unions in the city marched on the picket line to help the strikers, while a number of the Gimbels strikers picketed Broido's Park Avenue home.

Economic Outlook:

Installment Buying Curb Aids Wealthy,-Cuts Standards of Workers

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6—Regulations for reducing installment buying "will have the effect of rationing the products affected in favor of the people who have the most money," according to the current issue of the CIO Economic Outlook.

The regulations recently issued, requiring higher cash payments and shorter periods of repayment, "will make it more difficult for working people to get even their pre-war percentage of automobiles, refrigerators, radios and the like," the Outlook declared.

"It would not be impossible to devise a system of cutting down the purchase of such goods in a way that the lower income groups will not be discriminated against simply because they cannot afford high cash payments."

The Outlook also referred to "the conspicuous failure of the Federal Government to do an effective job of defense housing." It warned that there are already bottlenecks in materials and transportation, predicting that applications for FHA insured mortgages soon will decline sharply, and that before the end of the year "housing above $6,000 in non-defense areas will dry up completely."

Vigorous opposition was expressed to tax proposals of the Senate Finance Committee, in an analysis of the House tax bill and the Senate Committee's report.

TAXES ON WORKERS

Opposing proposals for lowering income tax exemptions and imposing more extensive excise taxes, the Outlook declared:

"It seems perfectly clear that until every possible penny of tax income is taken from the upper brackets of income and from corporation profits, no penny should be withdrawn from families where it will mean less to eat or wear."

The CIO publication urged that the mandatory joint return should be put back into the bill to close a serious loophole. "It would collect revenue in the higher income brackets and among persons who can well afford to pay," the Outlook states. "No family whose income is below $4,000 would have to pay any increased tax under the joint return. If the bill were passed without this provision it would be a shocking defeat for an effective tax policy."

The CIO has proposed bottom limits of $1,000 for single persons and $2,500 for families, for application of income tax, "because these annual incomes are an absolute minimum for the decent livelihood of American working people," the Outlook stated.

ANSWERS ARGUMENTS

The argument that taxes on the consumption of low income groups are necessary to prevent inflation, is met by the assertion that the real causes of price rises are shortages of specific essential materials; monopoly control of prices; price speculation and excessive accumulation of inventories; and unplanned public purchasing. Only about 5 per cent of the wage earner's income goes to consumer durables and scarce materials, the Outlook pointed out.

The CIO publication urged that all new tax income should be collected from increased taxes on high individual incomes, estate and growing corporation profits, including taxes on excess profits, undivided profits, tax-exempt securities and inheritances.

Chemical Drive Moves In Jersey

BOUND BROOK, N. J., Sept. 6—As part of the national CIO drive to organize the chemical, coke and gas industries, District 50 of the United Mine Workers this week launched a campaign to sign up 30,000 workers in the great chemical industry of central New Jersey.

Mass distribution of union literature at the Sherwin-Williams plant and at the Calco Division of the American Cyanamid Co. opened the drive, which is being conducted by District Representative David Brown and District 50 Regional Director R. W. Hanson.

Leaflets explained the campaign was linked with the "great national and state drive" of the United Mine Workers "to bring to the workers the first legitimate trade union to adequately represent the interests of the 500,000 employes of the chemical, coke and gas industries.

"In the short time since the drive was initiated under the sponsorship of John L. Lewis, the union has made tremendous gains for the organized chemical, gas and coke workers.

"It has brought the low pay scales of the workers in these industries to the highest level in history, and to a point where they compare favorably with the great gains made by the CIO in other industries."

Kress Does Anti-Labor Hula, But Can't Wiggle Out of Case

Washington, Sept. 6—Two stores of S. H. Kress & Co. in Honolulu and Hilo, Hawaii, have been found guilty by the National Labor Relations Board of unfair labor practices.

The NLRB said the company had discouraged membership in the CIO United Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Employes at its Honolulu store and had discharged the union president and five other union members.

The Board also found that the company had discouraged membership in the unaffiliated United Retail Workers of Hilo, had caused a strike in December, 1938, by refusing to bargain with the Hilo union, and had refused to reinstate 26 strikers after the Hilo strike.

The company was ordered to stop discouraging membership in both unions or any other labor organizations; to give back pay to the six Honolulu employes and to reinstate four who want to return to their jobs.

At Hilo, the company was ordered to reinstate 25 strikers with back pay, give back pay to the 26th and bargain collectively with the Hilo union.

Testimony Bears Out Union Head's Charge of Profit Plot In Eastern Oil 'Shortage'

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6—The East Coast "gasoline shortage," first labeled as a phony in mid-July by President O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union, was revealed in clear outline at Senate committee hearings this week as a part of a scheme by the big oil companies to expand their already high profits.

Testifying before a Senate group, J. J. Pelley, head of the Association of American Railroads, confirmed what Knight had charged in an interview in The CIO News of July 21: that the shortage could be quickly circumvented by use of oil tank cars.

PLENTY OF CARS

Pelley told the committee that 20,000 railroad tank cars are available for immediate haulage of some 200,000 gallons a week of gasoline and other petroleum products from the oil fields of the southwest to the heavily-populated, heavily-industrialized centers along the Atlantic seaboard.

Last July Knight told The CIO News that "in one Chicago refinery alone, 4,000 tank cars are lying around the yards of one big refinery, and another 6,000 idle cars are in yards throughout the nation. The companies claim these cars are being held in reserve for some peak period."

WANTED NEW MARKET

Knight also pointed out that the main purpose of the oil companies' talk of shortage was to force government permission for construction of pipe lines from the Texas-Oklahoma area to the east. The lines, he charged, would open up new markets for the monopolistic Standard Oil interests.

The conflict between the oil companies, with their plans for construction of pipe lines, and the railroads, with thousands of tank cars available for use, was sharply high lighted by Pelley at this week's Senate hearing.

"Between 500,000 and 750,000 tons of steel will be required to construct the pipe lines," he said. "Are priorities going to be arranged so that much steel can be diverted to that purpose? The railroads are as essential as any other agency to national defense, and they imperatively need enough steel to build 15,000 new cars."

One effect of the so-called shortage, which threw a scare into eastern motorists for over a month, has been an increase in the wholesale price of gasoline, to the advantage of the producers and refiners. A further increase may be in store if the railroads and the oil companies arrange for tank-car haulage of petroleum products, since tank-car transportation is considerably more expensive than either pipe lines or tanker ships.

The "shortage" scare developed after the government transferred 50 tanker ships from domestic trade to the British flag. The CIO Oil Workers official declared in mid-summer that many of these boats were being used by British Standard Oil interests for commercial use, rather than for hauling petroleum to the British Isles.

His accusation was borne out in part by a recent article in the Wall Street Journal, financial organ, which estimated that even before the transfer of the American tankers, Great Britain had a considerably larger number plying the sea routes than before the war started.

Widman Tells Need of Oil Campaign

Houston, Tex., Sept. 6—Michael F. Widman, Jr., Assistant Director of Organization, visited here Sept. 2 and 3, following a visit to New Orleans, where he was a speaker at the Labor Day celebration of the CIO in that city.

A luncheon was given in honor of Widman by the Regional Office of the CIO and the Texas Industrial Union Council, in the Lacquer Room of the Rice Hotel. Those present at the luncheon included active labor leaders throughout the state. Widman was guest speaker.

In his talk, Widman stressed the importance of an organization drive in Texas concentrated on the oil industry, which is the basic industry in Texas.

At an open meeting in Pasadena, Tex., Sept. 3, Widman spoke to a large gathering of the CIO membership in the Houston Area, giving high lights of the Ford drive and outlining a plan for organization of the oil industry in Texas.

Owen Young to Probe Demands on Gypsum

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6—Three thousand members of District 50, United Mine Workers, were back at the job today at 17 U. S. Gypsum plants after ending a two-month strike, while a government investigating commission looked into the union's demands.

Chairman William H. Davis of the Mediation Board, which offered the plan for the investigation, announced appointment of Owen D. Young, retired chairman of the Board of General Electric Co., to head the probe.

Acceptance of the plan by the union and the company followed rejection by the U. S. Gypsum management of a plan whereby it would simultaneously negotiate in Washington for agreements covering each of its 17 struck factories. That proposal, aimed at meeting management objections to company-wide bargaining, was accepted by District 50 but rejected by U. S. Gypsum.

WILL REPORT

Under the new Mediation Board scheme, Young will hand down a report to be used as the basis for settlement of the long-standing dispute. To be covered in his investigation will be union demands on wages, vacations, arbitration of grievances and union security.

Workers went back to their jobs in the far-flung Gypsum empire with spirits and morale high after having withstood repeated back-to-work attempts and a number of vigilante attacks on their organization.

Electrical Union Elects Fitzgerald; Hits Freeze-Out Of Labor In Defense Set-Up

CAMDEN, N. J., Sept. 6—Albert J. Fitzgerald of Lynn, Mass., was elected international president of the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers of America at the union's seventh convention here. James B. Carey, Secretary of the CIO, running for re-election to the union's presidency was defeated by Fitzgerald by a vote of 635 to 539.

Julius Emspak, general secretary-treasurer, and James J. Matles, director of organization, were both re-elected by unanimous vote without opposition.

Pres. Fitzgerald was an international vice president and president of the union's District 2 previous to his election to the international presidency. He has been president of Local 201 at General Electric, Lynn, Mass., for three years and secretary-treasurer of the Massachusetts State CIO for the same length of time. He is 34 years old, married, and has one child.

The convention, attended by some 400 delegates, celebrated a record year of organizing progress, which has brought the number of workers covered by UE contracts to 316,000, and has been marked by the winning of national agreements with Westinghouse, General Motors Electrical Division, General Electric and other giant corporations in the electrical and machine tool industries.

The most debated issue at the convention was decided on the third day, with the adoption of a resolution reiterating "vigorous opposition to any person who acts or works against the interests of the United States of America and of this union," and declaring that "any person guilty of such acts can have no place whatever either as member or officer in this union."

AGAINST DISCRIMINATION

At the same time the resolution stated that "any good-standing member of the union is entitled to all rights and privileges without discrimination, unless such member be proved guilty of acts against the nation or against the union in accord with the procedure set forth in our constitution." The resolution also rejected "any outside interference in the affairs of this union."

A ruling was made by Carey from the chair that part of the resolution was not in order, but should be referred to the constitution committee as involving such constitutional questions as whether a local might bar Communists, Nazis or Fascists from office. His ruling was appealed and was rejected by the convention by a roll-call vote of 714 to 450.

A long debate then followed on the issue of including a condemnation of Communism, Nazism and Fascism in the resolution. A motion to refer back the resolution, with such an inclusion in mind, was defeated by the convention, and the original resolution was finally adopted by a substantial majority.

Earlier the convention, without debate and by a standing vote, with five delegates opposing, adopted a resolution declaring that "the defense of the United States requires that all possible aid be given to Great Britain, the Soviet Union, China and all other nations directly battling against Hitlerism" and urging that the President and Congress "do everything possible to strengthen the cooperative relationship" between the United States and these countries.

ONE OF FIVE LARGEST

The report of the general officers, signed by Carey, Emspak and Matles, declared that the United

Win 12 1-2 Pc. Pay Boost At Campbell's

Chicago, Sept. 6—A one-day work stoppage at the plant of the Campbell Soup Co. here won a 12½ per cent pay increase for the company's warehousemen, the United Cannery Agricultural, Packing & Allied Workers announced today. Some 3,000 workers are employed at the plant, which operates under contract with Local 194.

Workers left the plant in support of the warehousemen and other workers who had been given a run around on a wage increase agreed to by the company last March. Warehouse workers walked out previously but went back pending further negotiations.

When no satisfactory offer was made by the company, the entire plant walked out in support of the warehousemen and picketed until the company agreed to grant a 12½ per cent plant-wide pay increase. Work was resumed immediately after the settlement.

Postal Wages Upped Half Million

NEW YORK, Sept. 6—A half million dollars in wage increases will go to adult employes of the Postal Telegraph Company as the result of the signing of a new agreement between the company and the American Communications Association, CIO.

Signatures were affixed to the new contract in the presence of New York's Mayor and the nation's Director of Civilian Defense, Fiorello H. LaGuardia in a ceremony which took place at the Summer City Hall on Long Island. Joseph P. Selly, ACA president, headed the 35-man ACA negotiating committee.

Under the new pact, some 9,000 adult employes will receive a $1 per week increase.

FLEW FROM CAPITAL

Mayor LaGuardia stepped into the picture when negotiations, which had begun on August 18, reached a deadlock. Acting in his capacity as Civilian Defense chief, the Mayor flew in from Washington to attend a conference of company and union representatives called by him and held at the LaGuardia Airport.

The wage clause in the existing agreement was the only one in which a change was made. Both parties agreed to keep all other sections of the present closed shop pact intact.

'Relief For Rich':

CIO Condemns 'Soak-The-Poor' Tax Measure

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6—The present tax bill as reported by the Senate Finance Committee and debated during this week is "a serious breach of faith with the common people of the country" and results "in relief for the rich at the expense of the poor," Pres. Philip Murray told U. S. Senators in urging them to vote against it and to work out a tax program based on ability to pay.

Despite Murray's urging, which was based on repeated CIO demands for a program to cut already high taxes on workers and increase the present low rates on the wealthy, and despite a minority report by Senator LaFollette that the bill "soaks the poor while confirming, protecting and entrenching the corporate wealth and power," two test votes on the bill as THE CIO NEWS went to press showed that it would go through as planned by the Senate majority.

These two votes were on a motion by LaFollette to knock out the lowering of income tax exemptions, which was beaten by 40 to 23, and another motion to plug large loopholes in the sections on estate and gift taxes, which was also defeated, 20 to 47. Following these two votes, observers conceded that the tax bill would go through as prepared by the Senate Finance Committee.

CIO PROGRAM

The CIO program, as reiterated by Murray in a letter to Senators earlier in the week, called for a four point tax bill to:

1. Impose "an effective excess profits tax, which would really prevent the creation of war millionaires."
2. Sharply increase income taxes in the upper brackets, plus the imposition of compulsory joint returns to prevent tax evasion by wealthy couples, and taxation of now tax-exempt securities.
3. Increase taxes on large estates and gifts and the closing of loopholes by which large estates now escape taxation.
4. Reduce taxes on low income levels through restoration of the income tax exemption levels of $2,500 and $1,000 and elimination of sales taxes on goods workers and people in low income groups have to buy.

"The CIO is profoundly concerned over the tax bill now pending before the Senate," Murray wrote. "The House version of the bill was unsatisfactory in many ways. The measure as revised by the Senate Finance Committee, however, constitutes a serious breach of faith with the common people of the country. Practically every revision made by the committee would result in relief for the rich at the expense of the poor."

Debate on the tax measure in the Senate was unusually listless, observers commented, pointing out that a large section of the Senate was absent and that most of the members seemed content to let it go through without any attempt at extended discussion.

During the debate strong hints were thrown out that a general sales tax was already being considered for next year's bill, a step that was not taken this time due to fear of its political repercussions. Pressure by the CIO was credited with making this fear an active factor in preventing such a step this year.

Model Pact Lifts Pay

Jones Hits 'Unfair' Tax Bill

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6—History repeats itself in the current tax bill which taps lightly huge defense corporation profits while digging into the low incomes of workers and farmers just as in World War I, Director John T. Jones, of Labor's Non-Partisan League, warned in a radio talk over the Columbia Broadcasting System Saturday evening.

This, the biggest tax bill in American history, is also the most unjust, Jones said. He exposed the bill as having one rule for the rich and another for the poor. It is contrary to the principle of ability to pay and also to the oft-repeated pledges of "no war millionaires."

"The American people are prepared to make sacrifices for the preservation of their liberties," Jones said, adding, "but the American people are not prepared to see their sacrifices go toward swelling the war profits of big corporations."

MANY LOOPHOLES

Telling of loopholes in the bill which enable wealthy individuals and corporations to escape their fair share of the tax burden, Jones asserted:

"In passing this bill, Congress has listened to the voice of the monopolists and war millionaires. It has turned a deaf ear to the workers, the farmers, the professional people, and the small business men."

Even the advice of U. S. Treasury officials was ignored by Congress which wrote a bill on the principle of "plucking the goose that squawks the least," he continued. As a result of the enactment of this bill on 1941 incomes, Jones said:

POOR ARE POORER

"Every industrial worker, every farmer, every professional man, every small business man, is poorer tonight than he was a week ago.

"Every monopolist, every wealthy individual, every big corporation, every war millionaire, is richer tonight than he was a week ago.

"That is the true story of the 1941 tax bill that has now passed both House and Senate. It is the biggest tax bill in American history, and also the most unjust. It will place direct taxes on individuals earning as little as $15, on married people whose income is only $30 a week on the one hand, while on the other hand it will allow a huge industrial corporation such as General Motors to clear $210,000,000 annually before it begins to pay one cent of surplus taxes."

Alabama Coal Mines Shut Down As Union Hits Stalling

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Sept. 5—Angered by months of stalling on the part of Alabama coal mine operators, 25,000 members of the United Mine Workers cancelled their temporary statewide agreement yesterday and closed down the mines.

Officials of the union said there had been "unreasonable delay" on the part of the owners in reaching agreement on a two-year contract based on the Appalachian pact negotiated by Pres. John L. Lewis several months ago.

The temporary agreement in force throughout the state provided for wage increases to be retroactive to April 1, expiration date of the old contract. Union officials pointed out they had abided by Mediation Board proposals for settlement of the dispute that tied up the mines early in the spring, but that the operators' stalling and "dilly-dallying" had forced the shut-down action.

'Hey, Bud, You've Got the Wrong Hog'

Truth On The Tax Bill

The truth about the profiteers' tax bill has now been told, not only by the CIO, but also by eminent members of the Senate.

It is "a vicious assault on the rank-and-file taxpayer . . . conforms to no standards of justice or fairness . . . soaks the poor while confirming, protecting and entrenching the corporate wealth and power engendered by the defense program . . . a hodge-podge of inconsistencies . . . it 'plucks the goose that squawks the least.' "

These are some quotations from the minority report of Senator LaFollette on the tax bill, which also declared:

"The pending tax bill if enacted into law will impose even greater burdens upon the great masses of the people who have the least ability to pay.

"Taxes which mean a reduction of an already unconscionably low standard of living are proposed to be levied, while fat profits from defense spending get off with only a relatively minor share of the total burden."

In face of such a report, with detailed analysis of the vicious injustice of the bill, in face of a debate which should have left no Senator in doubt, and in face of the storm of labor protest organized by the CIO, the Senate went steadily ahead last week to approve all the worst features of the bill.

The bill passed by the House seemed about the worst that could be devised. But instead of remedying this bill, practically every Senate revision "would result in relief for the rich at the expense of the poor," CIO President Murray has pointed in his letter to all Senators.

When the Senate completes its dirty work of robbing the poor to fatten the profiteer, the tax measure will have to go to a joint conference committee of both Houses for final drafting.

There should therefore be no let-up in labor's protest while there is still even a bare chance that Congress may be shaken awake to its duty to legislate in the interests of the whole people and not in the sole interest of a selfish minority of war profiteers.

Priorities Unemployment

Labor and the country have suffered from every kind of unemployment for as long as we can remember. There has been depression unemployment, technological unemployment, unemployment due to under-production, over-production and to almost every other cause under the sun.

Every kind of unemployment means misery and starvation for the workers and the robbing of the country of the contribution which these workers can and should be making.

Every kind of unemployment is artificial and unnecessary, from labor's viewpoint. Nothing should be allowed to stand between the worker and his right to a decent living earned by the labor he is qualified to perform. And the CIO has consistently advocated the planning of a real program to eliminate unemployment.

But of all forms of artificial and unnecessary unemployment the present "priorities unemployment" seems to fly most of all in the face of all common-sense, justice and sane planning.

This is unemployment deliberately created by arbitrary government action, at a time when more production is needed than ever before both for defense and for consumers' goods.

Nearly every CIO union today is fighting threats to its members' jobs through "priorities unemployment." All of them are advancing concrete plans to keep their members working while transference is made from peacetime to defense production where this is necessary; and to prevent arbitrary layoffs before new jobs are found.

But the problem goes deeper than any single industry, to the roots of the whole present maladministration of the defense program. It can only be solved, in the last analysis, by adoption of the CIO industry council plan, with its provisions for full labor representation in industry-wide planning for full consumers' as well as defense production, and for the complete elimination of such a tragic absurdity as "priorities unemployment."

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

AROUND Labor Day each year, it is customary for editors, politicians and assorted orators to say that labor is noble, that the laborer is worthy of his hire, that industrial peace is wonderful—and to say it in hundreds of thousands of words.

These effusions are usually accompanied by much condescending advice to labor as to how it should behave, the general purport of which is that unions would be just ducky—

If they never asked for higher wages—

If they were "reasonable" when asked to make concessions—

If they were not "greedy" or "selfish" but always offered the employers first bite at the fruits of industry—

If they were not critical, assertive or militant—

And, of course, if they never, oh never, went on strike.

One post-Labor Day editorial gravely reproves CIO President Murray for "striking a jarring note" when he said that the defense emergency should not be used to destroy labor's hard-earned gains for the benefit of vested interests.

The CIO, it seems, just won't fit into the Little Lord Fauntleroy role which such editors would like to see labor playing.

It keeps on striking "jarring notes" whenever and wherever workers are robbed of their rights or of decent wages.

If it failed to do so, it would be untrue to itself, untrue to the workers it represents and untrue to our country.

Director Allan Haywood emphasized this thought in his CIO Labor Day broadcast, saying:

"The labor movement must be true to itself and to the workers it represents if it is to make the full contribution of which it is capable. It must fight for the day-to-day interests of the workers. It must resist attempts to deprive them of their democratic rights. And it must expend its full efforts to maintain and improve American living standards.

"A militant and progressive labor movement which does these things, as the CIO is doing, is not thereby interfering with the defense program. On the contrary, it is acting as the true representative of the people who are most concerned with the success of this program."

Some of the things which a union can achieve for its members and for the general welfare by being true to the basic CIO principles outlined above, are outlined in the report of the general officers of the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers to their recent convention.

Table after table in this report illustrates the hundred-thousand gain in union membership; the hundreds of new contracts; the scores of millions of dollars in higher wages; and the increased benefits won in vacations, seniority rights, night bonuses and numerous other improvements.

The union has won these gains, the report emphasizes, "through its own efforts, through the efforts of its own elected officers, elected shop stewards and committeemen, through the cooperation and understanding of its own members."

Such gains are not only a contribution to the greater welfare and happiness of hundreds of thousands of workers and their families; they are also a solid contribution to the welfare of the United States by raising general living standards and promoting a fairer distribution of wealth and a healthier national economy.

They were won by a militancy and assertiveness depending in the last analysis on the right to strike. But less than 12,000 workers had to go on strike during the year, and only two-tenths of one percent of the total man-days worked were consumed in such stoppages.

The report stresses the patriotic duty of labor to be true to itself if it would be true to its country, in another respect.

It presents a masterful analysis of the big business control of Washington's "super-government" and of the unfortunate results of this control not only for labor but for the defense program itself.

The top defense agencies, it points out, are run by "a veritable social register of big business," with labor denied any real representation.

The incorrect, selfish, pro-employer policies that result from such a set-up lead to disruptive attempts to weaken labor and destroy its rights; they also lead to the numerous inefficiencies, blunders and bungling so often pointed out by Pres. Murray.

In insisting that labor be given real representation, as outlined in the CIO Defense Plan, the CIO is not only being true to itself and its members, but is also exhibiting its patriotism along the lines on which it can make its greatest contribution to the nation's welfare.

Unions Show Strength On Labor Day

Carey, Haywood Tell U. S. Of Aims, Accomplishments

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6—The CIO showed its strength on Labor Day, and in hundreds of communities throughout the land the public had an opportunity to see at first hand the impressive gains rolled up by CIO affiliates in the past 12 months.

In Eastern cities and along the West Coast, in the mining areas of Alabama and the manufacturing cities of the Ohio Valley and of all other industrial areas millions celebrated.

Additional millions heard speeches broadcast by CIO Sec. James B. Carey and Director of Organization Allan S. Haywood, relayed to the nation over coast-to-coast networks. Pres. Philip Murray, still convalescing in a Pittsburgh hospital, was unable to participate in the Labor Day celebrations, but scores of union leaders throughout the country paid tribute to his leadership of the CIO.

Carey spoke from Camden, N. J., where his union, the United Electrical Radio & Machine Workers was holding its annual convention, and his speech—along with those of government leaders—was heard on both sides of the Atlantic in a special broadcast.

GREETINGS FROM MURRAY

Pointing out that "we in the CIO represent the vast army of workers in the industrial arsenals of this nation," Carey brought the greetings "and warm good wishes of a man whom all of us in the CIO respect and love: Pres. Philip Murray."

Murray "is a true democrat, born and bred," Carey said. "He has been a consistent champion of the democratic rights of labor and the plain people."

While pledging full support to the defense effort, Carey also expressed the "firm resolve" of the CIO "that the emergency shall not become the occasion for the destruction, on behalf of vested interests and under the pretext of patriotism, of all the hard-earned gains which organized labor, the organized farmers and average men and women in all walks of life have wrested from industrial autocracy here and abroad in recent years."

HAYWOOD CITES GAINS

From Cleveland, where he was attending the CIO celebration, Allan S. Haywood broadcast over the NBC blue network. In a half-hour speech the Director of Organization reviewed the CIO's membership and wage gains during the past 12 months, and discussed some of the problems today confronting American labor.

"The CIO is proud to report a brilliant record of progress," Haywood said. "The soundness of its form of organization and the effectiveness of its efforts to advance the interests of American workers are attested by the tremendous increases in CIO membership during the past year.

"In Labor Board elections, the CIO has come out far ahead, with a record of victories that indicates beyond question the democratic preference of American workers for a modern and progressive labor movement, whenever they are permitted to express their wishes by a secret ballot."

IMPROVED WAGES

He noted that "all this organizing work is not an end in itself, but a means to the end of achieving higher wages, better working conditions, greater security and a larger degree of industrial democracy for the workers employed in these indutries." Wage gains in all the industries in which CIO unions flourish were cited as proof that the organization is functioning in behalf of its membership.

The CIO is mindful of its "duties and responsibilities to the whole country," Haywood continued, since "labor has perhaps more to lose than any other group from the forces of Fascist imperialism which are rampant throughout the world. . . . That is why the CIO has from the first thrown its wholehearted support behind the national defense program."

He called for more adequate labor representation in government, and adoption of the industry council plan recommended by CIO Pres. Murray as a means of increasing defense production and strengthening industrial democracy.

The CIO, Haywood concluded, "is acting as the true representative of the people who are most concerned with the success of this program. It is averting the disturbances which arise when exploitation and repression run rampant. And it is providing national leadership through which the working people can make their influence felt in national affairs."

Confusion!

SIOUX CITY, Ia., Sept. 1—Labor Day was just a big headache from the veiwpoint of AFL officials.

In the first place, the CIO paraders outnumbered the AFL marchers by two to one in a double-jointed parade over the same downtown route.

In the second place, three of the four available musical organizations, scheduled to march with the AFL, somehow got into the CIO line of march.

And finally, to finish an imperfect day, three judges, employed by the AFL to judge their marching units and floats, made the big mistake of giving first places to CIO entries.

"How were we to know?" screamed the judges, as they made hasty revisions in the awards.

Detroit, Los Angeles Stage Huge CIO Parades

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6—Great turnouts of CIO members made Labor Day celebrations in many cities the most colorful in years.

In Detroit close to 100,000 unionists paraded through downtown streets, their ranks augmented by the men from Ford's River Rouge plant, who this year gained the protection of CIO industrial democracy for the first time.

The Ford marchers stopped on signal every so often and sat down in tribute not only to the historic sitdowns that gave the UAW-CIO its start as a mass industrial union in GM and elsewhere, but also to the informal sitdowns of brief duration that put the heat on the Ford Motor Co. negotiatiors in the ironing out of wage classifications in the new contracts.

160,000 IN LOS ANGELES

In Los Angeles the open shop interests are reportedly still reeling under the terrific public impact of organized labor's unified parade.

Even the newspapers acknowledged that 160,000 persons marched in the line, to the cheers of three-quarters of a million spectators. The parade, in which both CIO and AFL unions participated, took six hours and 10 minutes to pass a given point.

"Labor Day, 1941, marked the death knell of the Los Angeles open shop tradition," one observer commented. "The town has definitely gone union."

HOLLYWOOD TOUCH

The CIO floats had a true Hollywood touch. The larger ones were 16 feet high, prepared by famous artists and decorated by cartoonists at the Disney studio. CIO paraders were a singing crowd. Each unit sang a new CIO song, "Sing Out the Answer, Join the CIO."

Labor Day "Oscars"—statuettes modeled on the annual movie academy awards—were handed out to unions with the best displays, at a CIO dance in the evening.

Though the demonstrations were smaller in other cities, none lacked enthusiasm over CIO accomplishments. Four parades were on tap in northern California; Utah CIO staged a big Labor Day parade; Duluth's celebration drew thousands. Sixteen thousand marched in Toledo.

In San Antonio, Tex., Archbishop Robert Lucey told workers they had both a moral and a material obligation to join unions and that a living wage was necessary for both spiritual and material well being. In the afternoon, 2,000 bottles of soda pop were given out in about as many seconds, and the crowds heard speeches by Maurice Dineen, CIO regional director, and by Vice Pres. Clyde Johnson of the Cannery Workers.

Some 12,000 CIO-ers attended a picnic near Birmingham and heard Frank Bender, CIO director in Baltimore, deliver the address of the day. Michael Widman, jr., CIO assistant director of organization, spoke in New Orleans.

In West Virginia celebrations were conducted in scores of mining communities. Van A. Bittner, United Mine Workers district president, spoke over a statewide radio network, while John Easton, state CIO head, spoke to a Charleston radio audience. Largest celebration was a tri-county picnic at Morgantown, with Pres. Ora Gasaway of District 50, UMW, as one of the principal speakers.

Many parades and picnics were sponsored by CIO groups throughout the coal and steel areas of Pennsylvania and Ohio. In Cumberland, Md., Edwin S. Smith, former NLRB member, was chief speaker, while John T. Jones, CIO legislative director, addressed a Baltimore meeting.

Smith, Ex-NLRB Member, Tells CIO To Preserve Labor's Democratic Gains

CUMBERLAND, Md., Sept. 6—Cumberland CIO Labor Day celebrators heard sharp criticism of recent back-sliding policies by the National Labor Relations Board from Edwin S. Smith, former NLRB member whose term expired on August 27.

At the same time, they heard a warning that labor must work valiantly to preserve its hard-won gains from reactionaries who would put the clock back using "patriotism" and the defense program as their alibi.

Declaring that defeat of Hitlerism is the number one task of the democratic peoples of the world, Smith said that at the end of this war "the system of imperialism which gave it birth" should be "annihilated for once and for all."

"We cannot afford and we cannot tolerate another Versailles peace," the former NLRB official declared. "No other fascist system must be allowed to rear itself as it was reared in Germany after the last war on the despair of a deluded people . . . All imperialism, our own included, must go, once and forever."

The United States can never fill a role in the world as a liberator of the oppressed if on the domestic scene labor is robbed of its gains, he counselled the CIO unionists.

LABOR'S PROBLEM

"I have spoken of the need for labor putting forth its utmost for the sake of winning the war," Smith declared. "Does this mean that labor should sacrifice all economic gain while industry profits, that labor should abandon its civil rights while others take advantage of the right thus afforded them to oppress labor and to flout and imperil our democratic traditions? The very absurdity of the question provides its own answer.

"Democracy . . . cannot be put on and off like a cloak, dropped for the war and donned again when the bells ring for peace. American labor must indeed be wary that in the name of American defense or defeat of Hitlerism, it does not yield ground which, once lost, would stultify the results of the war effort."

Turning to a discussion of recent trends in the Labor Board, Smith expressed regret that "in certain recent decisions the Board has, in my opinion, fallen away seriously from established principles which were of great importance to labor in making a vital reality of the protections written into the statute."

The majority decision in the Wurlitzer case, through which strikebreakers were allowed to vote in an NLRB election, "seriously diluted" the employer's obligation to deal with his striking employes, Smith declared. In the recent New York & Cuba Mail Case, he added, the NLRB majority has opened the way for employers to pass off responsibility for Wagner Act violations on to stooge unions and thereby escape penalties under the law.

He stressed the belief that only through the largest possible bargaining units can labor meet with industry as an equal, and criticized recent decisions setting up craft unions or breaking down company-wide units, as harmful to labor's cause.

"Labor has perpetually the task to see that statutes enacted for its protection do not in course of time and with changing administration, lose their force and become instruments not of emancipation but of oppression," Smith told the CIO group. "The National Labor Relations Act offers no exception to this general need for vigilance on labor's part in regard to the administration by government of labor legislation."

Invade Open Shop

Bemidji, Minn.—Invading the so-called "Paul Bunyan country," long a stronghold of the open shop, Local 320 of the CIO Intl. Woodworkers of America gained a closed shop agreement with the Kenfield Box Factory here. The pact provides wage increases and vacations with pay.

Unions Act Fast To Meet Mass Lay-Off Threat

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6 — A number of CIO unions were moving quickly this week in an attempt to forestall widespread "priorities unemployment," which many observers predict will become increasingly severe during the next few months.

Officials of the United Automobile, Aircraft & Agricultural Implement Workers were following up a strongly-worded convention resolution with demands for protection of workers to be affected when the auto industry makes its production cuts in coming months.

The UAW-CIO convention demanded full and official participation for the union in government conferences looking toward a solution of the problem, and adoption of the Murray plan for steel and the Reuther plan for aircraft as a means of increasing production and averting widespread unemployment.

A cardinal point in the UAW platform calls for "the staggering of any curtailment of automobile production over a long period so as to permit completion of required tooling necessary to shift from automobile production to defense production."

ALUMINUM

With thousands of workers manufacturing aluminum consumer goods already out of work as the nation's aluminum supply goes directly into defense production, the CIO Aluminum Workers of America is still awaiting an official reacton from OPM to the union's plan for an industry council and a doubling of national aluminum production. So far, nothing has been heard from OPM about the plan.

In Denver, meanwhile, the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers announced it was taking "steps to meet the effects which priorities will have on our industry and to protect the union's membership." All local unions are being polled for further information about the priorities job crisis.

PLANTS CLOSING

The union said that reports showed a number of smaller plants have already been closed down because of inability to obtain copper or zinc for fabricating purposes.

Pres. Reid Robinson urged all locals to contact the managements of factories in their jurisdiction and determine the future job outlook.

"I need hardly repeat that the critical nature of this situation warrants the most immediate attention of our organization to this problem," Robinson declared. "Our union must take vigorous steps to protect the jobs and the welfare of the workers of our industry."

RUBBER WORKERS

The United Rubber Workers, after a conference with OPM officials in Washington last month, urged a many-point program aimed at allocating rubber to factories in order to diminish as much as possible the harmful job effects of priority rationing, and to give the widest possible security to workers whose jobs are threatened in the near future.

One point in the recommendations called for preferential hiring of laid-off workers for new positions in defense industries, and suggested that these people be given new work as close as possible to their present homes in order to avert new housing and migration problems.

FARM IMPLEMENT

Leaders of the CIO Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee indicated satisfaction with a government order permitting increased materials for the farm implement industry. Earlier Chairman Grant Oakes had suggested a conference of government officials, the union, the industry and the farmers to consider the entire problem.

Pointing out that in the near future "thousands of workers in the farm implement industry face the bleak, inevitable prospect of being laid off indefinitely because of an alarming shortage of essential material," Oakes added:

"We can't conceive of farm workers being laid off in an industry which should be going full blast night and day to help feed the population, to supply army requirements for tractors and other equipment."

In Dayton ,Local 801 of the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machinery Workers took the initiative in calling a conference to discuss problems created by government priority rulings that may cut out 8,000 jobs in the city.

Scheduled to attend the parley were representatives of the union, of industry, the Chamber of Commerce, U. S. Army Corps officers from Wright Field, the Council of Social Agencies and the State Employment Bureau.

The UE's national program, calling for gradual replacement of consumer production with national defense work, and the establishment of definite guarantees against rising living costs, were to be thoroughly discussed at the Dayton conference.

The union's campaign has won high praise from public and civic officials.

Ford, UAW Confer on Jobs

DETROIT, Sept. 6—Representatives of the CIO United Automobile Workers and Ford officials were reported here as conferring to work out a formula to prevent widespread unemployment in the industry under OPM's order for 50 per cent curtailment in production of passenger cars.

"I don't know what we'll work out, but we'll pool ideas with the union and see what develops," Harry Bennett, Ford personnel director, was reported as saying.

Electrical Union Elects Fitzgerald

Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, "born only five years ago, with perhaps 15,000 members, is today one of the five largest international unions of the CIO."

It reported that 116,123 new members have joined the union during the year, and that the union now has 575 plants employing 316,000 workers under contract, as compared with 387 plants employing 154,744 workers a year ago.

Annual wage increases totaling $63,500,000 were won in contracts signed in two months alone, not including the monetary gains represented by overtime, vacations, night bonuses and other improved contract provisions. Vacations with pay are provided in contracts covering 289,473 workers.

All of these gains were won, the report emphasizes, with a minimum of strikes and stoppages, in which only 11,823 workers were involved during the year.

"SUPER-GOVERNMENT"

The report included a vigorous criticism of big business control of the "super-government" constituted by the OEM, OPM and other defense agencies.

The men who comprise this super-government constitute a veritable 'social register' of Big Business," it stated, citing a long list of corporation executives holding leading positions in OPM.

"Labor was virtually excluded from this Super-Government," the report added. "True, here and there, certain officials of labor unions would be invited into the less important bodies of this super-government. But these were allowed no part in formulating policy.

"The labor representatives were not full partners in the firm, nor even junior partners; they were glorified office boys given a few errands to run from time to time."

The report also criticized the National Labor Relations Board for failing to enforce the Wagner Act as it should, by not proceeding against cleverer employer coercion methods or AFL collusive contracts, and by favoring craft units as against industrial units.

Board Member Edwin S. Smith was commended, however, for "standing up honestly for strict and loyal enforcement of the Wagner Act."

The report, unanimously approved by the convention, called for adoption of the Murray Industry Council plan and advocated independent political action by labor.

"Labor has already proved its ability to defeat notoriously anti-labor candidates," it said. "Now we must take the next step to elect pro-labor candidates."

New Hosiery Pact Increases Pay

By TRAVIS K. HEDRICK

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 6—Wage increases of ten to eighteen percent have been negotiated for the closed shop, unionized section of the full-fashioned hosiery industry with a week's vacation with pay, Alexander McKeown, president of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, announced today.

McKeown said the increases mean an annual payroll boost of approximately $6,500,000 and would serve as a great organizational stimulant in the open shop unorganized sections of the South. The negotiations were between the Hosiery Union and the Full Fashioned Manufacturers of America, Inc., representing more than 35 of the most important mills of the country, and the two committees have agreed upon uniform piece rates in a two-year agreement with the paid vacation clause.

VACATION CLAUSE

Under the vacation clause, McKeown explained employes who have been in the service of a manufacturer for nine months or more are eligible to participate in the vacation plan.

From a strictly financial standpoint he said the vacation clause amounts to two percent of the previous twelve months' earnings of the union member.

Concerning the annual wage increase figure, McKeown declared that the union agreement directly covered 30,000 workers, of whom 10,000 are in Philadelphia and 4,500 in Milwaukee. On a 50-week work year, he said these workers would get $4,500,000 more in wages under the new agreement, on a minimum basis, and an additional 15,000 workers, the majority of whom are in the Reading area, would get $2,000,000 more, to make the $6,500,000 figure under the proposed contract.

There is a cost of living clause, he said, in which unionized workers would be protected in event of changes. If negotiations fail to bring about a satisfactory adjustment of the wages under this clause the matter may be referred to a wage tribunal.

A flat 10 percent increase is provided for miscellaneous time workers in a special clause of the proposal. This covers porters, sweepers, and others who are not classed as productive workers. A conscription clause protects jobs and seniority of draftees and enlisted men and their positions can be filled on a temporary basis.

BETTER CONDITIONS

The contract sets a guarantee of four hours' wages to those workers who may be called in to work and then sent home through a fault of the employer. Special consideration for seamers was obtained in that they will recapture all reductions taken since September 1, 1938, and will in addition receive a five percent increase.

In many cases this will mean a 22 percent increase for full fashioned seamers.

By returning to uniform piece rates the proposed agreement carries into effect the purpose of many resolutions introduced at the conventions of the AFHW in 1939, 1940, and 1941, in which New Jersey, the Middle West and many Eastern Branches pressed for uniformity.

Bridges Counsel Ask New Hearing

San Francisco, Sept. 6—Attorneys for Harry Bridges, CIO California leader now awaiting word on the verdict of his second deportation hearing, announced here that they had filed a petition asking for a new hearing on the case.

The petition was based on an expose of the role of the FBI in wire tapping on telephone and other conversations by Bridges in the Hotel Edison at New York during a recent stay by Bridges there, and asked the new hearing to discover how much of the evidence presented by the FBI at the previous trial had been secured in the same illegal way.

The FBI snooping was discovered by Bridges and a newspaper reporter in the hotel, when he found G-men in the next room complete with listening-in apparatus. Wire tapping has been repeatedly condemned by Congress and the courts, and has been described by U. S. Supreme Court justices as "a dirty business."

Attack FBI Wire Tapping

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6—Labor spying through the use of wiretapping was practiced by the U. S. Dept. of Justice on Harry Bridges, leader of the CIO in California and head of the Longshoremen and Warehousemens Union, it was charged here by Virginia Gardner, secretary of the Citizens Committee for Harry Bridges.

Miss Gardner, who appeared as an individual, charged that the illegal wiretapping was carried out by two FBI agents who snooped on conversations held by Bridges with CIO Pres. Murray and other CIO officials. The wiretapping took place at the Hotel Edison in New York, and was first exposed by Bridges and a newspaper reporter last week.

The charge was made at hearings before the Senate Judiciary Committee on the appointment of Francis T. Biddle as Attorney-General. Biddle was acting Attorney-General when the FBI wiretapping was carried out.

Biddle had no comment to make at the time the wiretapping was exposed in New York newspapers, though full news stories were printed and despite the fact that Bridges asked for the arrest of the two agents, who were seen and photographed at their snooping job in the next room to Bridges.

"DIRTY BUSINESS"

At the hearing, Biddle declared in response to questions from Senate committee members that he believed "all rights must bow to the rights of the community, and these are bad times," and that the nation has abandoned civil rights before and has managed to preserve them from permanent harm.

Biddle told the committee that he had not authorized wiretapping this time or any other time, adding: "I see no difference between wiretapping and other kinds of espionage. Of course it's a dirty business."

'CIO Benefits Nation' . . . . . Carey

It is a privilege to address the world-wide radio audience, in celebration of Labor Day, as spokesman of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, and in company with this distinguished panel of statesmen and labor leaders.

I bring you first, the greetings and warm good wishes of a man whom all of us in the CIO respect and love: Philip Murray, President of the Congress of Industrial Organizations. Of all men, Philip Murray most fully embodies in his own person the principles in whose name the CIO was built and for which it stands. He is a true democrat, born and bred. He has been a consistent champion of the democratic rights of labor and the plain people generally.

The CIO, under his leadership, stands united against Fascism and all it represents here and abroad. We stand united likewise in our support for the defense program of the United States, and our national policy of aid without stint to Great Britain and all nations resisting the aggressions of the Nazi tyranny. In hundreds of defense plants throughout the length and breadth of the North American continent, members of the CIO toil to produce the munitions of war without which our democratic institutions and our democratic hopes cannot survive.

In Basic Industries

Our unions have their membership in the vital defense industries, including coal, steel, aluminum, rubber, glass, automobiles, chemicals, aircraft, electrical machinery, metal mining, shipbuilding, and maritime transportation. We, in the CIO, represent the vast army of workers in the industrial arsenals of this nation. Our ranks extend also to the essential industries of textiles, clothing, shoes, meat packing and retail and wholesale trades.

The CIO has advanced on several occasions, detailed and constructive programs dealing with fundamental problems of production in industries such as automobiles, steel and aluminum, and involving crucial products such as airplanes. We have offered and we stand ready to assume our full share of responsibility for the execution of such programs, and to contribute freely of our detailed and specific knowledge of industry and our devotion to the common cause.

We offer to the nation likewise, our firm resolve that the emergency shall not become the occasion for the destruction, on behalf of vested interests and under pretext of patriotism, of all the hard-earned gains which organized labor, the organized farmers, and average men and women in all walks of life have wrested from industrial autocracy here and abroad in recent years.

Post-War Security

We believe that victory in this war—in order that it be real victory—must be based upon the establishment of a sound system of security and peace throughout the world, in which all nations and all peoples may participate in equal terms.

There can be no nobler cause to which Americans and the people of all the democracies can commit themselves on this occasion, Labor Day, than the achievement of complete victory and a just peace. A just peace must be one in which the democratic rights of the men and women who fight the battles of the war are guaranteed for all time throughout the world.

It must be one in which they are secure against economic and political oppression, safe against the ravages of war, industrial depression, insecurity and poverty. It is for such ends that we have committed ourselves to this battle. It is for such purposes that we will see this struggle through.

'CIO Protects Labor' . . . . Haywood

Following are excerpts from the speech of CIO Director of Organization Allan S. Haywood delivered at the Cleveland Labor Day celebration and broadcast over a nationwide hook-up:

On this Labor Day it is fitting that the American people give thought to the important part played by organized labor in national defense. It is also fitting that we in labor's ranks give thought to the responsibilities we shoulder, not only as guardians of the vital interests of the millions of wage earners and their families, but also as participants in a great democracy and defenders of the American way of life.

The CIO is proud to report a brilliant record of progress since last Labor Day. The soundness of its form of organization and the effectiveness of its efforts to advance the interests of American workers are attested by the tremendous increases in CIO membership during the past year.

In Labor Board elections, the CIO has come out far ahead, with a record of victories that indicates beyond question the democratic preference of American workers for a modern and progressive labor movement, whenever they are permitted to express their wishes by secret ballot.

Tremendous Gains

The union shop agreement signed between the Ford Company and the CIO Automobile Workers Union was truly an epoch making event. This outstanding victory was won by the CIO union after an organizing campaign which resulted in an overwhelming majority of the workers voting for the CIO in a Labor Board election.

No less historic is the achievement of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, headed by the President of the CIO, Philip Murray, in organizing the plants of the Republic Steel Company, the Bethlehem Steel Company and other independent corporations in that basic industry.

I could cite numerous other instances of the progress of CIO organization during the past year, in organizing many great plants in the electrical, aircraft, shipbuilding and many other industries. But the record is too long to give in full at this time, and I need only say that the advances referred to are typical of similar organizing progress in every other industry.

All this organizing work is not an end in itself but a means to the end of achieving higher wages, better working conditions, greater security and a larger degree of industrial democracy for the workers employed in these industries.

In achieving these ends the CIO has been as successful in the past year as it has been in its organizing work. I need only cite the outstanding example of the new agreement won by the United Mine Workers of America, under the leadership of John L. Lewis. This agreement established a minimum wage of $7 a day throughout the Appalachian area, bringing wage increases of a dollar a day in the North and even more in the South, where the differential of lower regional wages was abolished for the first time. The abolition of this Southern differential is a historic achievement which will have far-reaching effects in raising the general wage standards in the South and in removing from the Northern workers the fear of having their wage standards threatened by low wage competition.

In the steel industry the Steel Workers Organizing Committee won wage increases of 10c an hour for hundreds of thousands of workers and established a generally higher standard of wages which has been followed in numerous other industries.

Everywhere that the CIO is organized, in fact, the workers have won higher wages in the past year. These bring them measurably closer to labor's goal of an American standard of living which shall provide the working people and their families with the kind of living and the kind of opportunity for their children to which they are entitled in a country so rich as the United States.

Fought Hysteria

All of these advances have been achieved in the face of the most determined opposition on the part of reactionary financial interests and their political agents. These interests have sought to make huge profits for themselves from the defense program, while denying to their employes a decent standard of living. They have also sought to create a condition of anti-labor hysteria by falsely attributing to labor the sabotage of national defense in which they are themselves the chief offenders. Behind the smokescreen of such propaganda they have moved to serve their own selfish interests and to hamstring the labor movement, by promoting a whole program of the most vicious kind of anti-labor legislation.

The CIO is well aware that the job of advancing labor's interests is not completed when improved wages and conditions have been won through union agreements. We know only too well that wages can be indirectly cut by rising living costs and by unfair taxation just as well as they can be directly cut in industry.

At the present time, the danger of wage cutting through taxation is particularly acute, on account of the new tax legislation passed by the House and now under consideration in the Senate. The tremendous expenditures of the defense program have, of course. made necessary the obtaining of increased tax income. But the CIO has taken the position that this increased tax income can and should be obtained from the surplus wealth of those who are making huge profits at the present time, and that it should not be squeezed out of the wages and lowered living standards of those who are least able to pay.

This is soaking the poor with a vengeance, at a time when it is proposed to coddle the rich. War profits are rising to dizzy heights, but no effective excess profits taxation has yet been advanced to check this war profiteering and to get the increased tax income that is needed from the surplus wealth of those best able to pay.

Up to this point, I have spoken of the achievements of the CIO in advancing labor's interests and of its struggles to defend the democratic rights and living standards of all the common people. But we of labor do not forget that we are also a part of a great democracy, with duties and responsibilities to the whole country as well as to our own membership.

The CIO represents millions of patriotic Americans who share with the rest of the American people a deep concern for the welfare and defense of their country. Labor has perhaps more to lose than any other group from the forces of Fascist imperialism which are rampant throughout the world and which threaten our own beloved country and the democratic institutions we cherish. Labor shares with all other patriotic Americans the same aversion to the forces of dictatorship and totalitarianism and the same determination to preserve in this country the American way of life.

That is why the CIO has from the first thrown its wholehearted support behind the national defense program. It is not only prepared to resist foreign aggression with all means at its disposal, but it is also determined to resist those forces which would undermine our democratic institutions from within.

The position of the CIO on national defense has been outlined in the defense plan drafted by President Murray and adopted by the CIO as its program. This plan represents about the only major constructive proposal that has been offered to the nation for the more effective prosecution of the defense program. It shows that labor has the brains and public spirit to take its place as a responsible participant in the national defense effort.

The CIO defense plan is designed to insure full production of armaments without disturbing the adequate production of consumers goods. Its adoption would remedy the present situation of bottlenecks and shortages on the one hand, with lay-offs, unemployment and unused facilities on the other. It would do this through an administrative set-up of industry councils, in which labor would be represented equally with management and through which expansion of production could be planned on an industry-wide basis.

Industry Councils

Finally the CIO defense plan envisages the immediate study and drafting of plans through the industry councils, to guard against a chaotic breakdown of our domestic economy when the national defense program is completed. War booms like the present have always ended in post-war economic collapse and depression. Labor at least is far-sighted enough to realize that now is the time to take thought, and to enlist the best brains of labor, industry and management, in preparation for maintaining employment and cushioning the depression which otherwise will put millions of Americans on the breadline when the present boom ends.

The CIO is the labor movement which represents the workers in the defense and basic industries of this country. Its members are the people who toil day and night at the heaviest and most essential work of national defense. Their Americanism, their patriotism and their devotion to democracy are beyond question. They deeply resent the attempts that are made by profiteers, reactionary politicians and big business publishers to slur and smear their unions, when they perform their legitimate function of protecting the workers' interests and defending their democratic rights.

They know that these slurs and these smears are the stock-in-trade of the people who are seeking to make a financial killing in this emergency and who care nothing for our democratic rights and liberties, but on the contrary are seeking to undermine them from within for their own selfish purposes.

The labor movement must be true to itself and to the workers it represents if it is to make the full contribution of which it is capable. It must fight for the day-to-day interests of the workers. It must resist attempts to deprive them of their democratic rights. And it must expend its full efforts to maintain and improve American living standards.

CIO's Contribution

A militant and progressive labor movement which does these things, as the CIO is doing, is not thereby interfering with the defense program. On the contrary, it is acting as the true representative of the people who are most concerned with the success of this program. It is averting the disturbances which arise when exploitation and repression run rampant. And it is providing national leadership through which the working people can make their influence felt in national affairs.

Transit Union Wins 5-Million Pay Increase

NEW YORK, Sept. 6—With $5,296,628 in annual increases won for the 27,000 employes of the New York City Transit System here, members of the CIO Transport Workers Union have further proof that it was wise and practical for them to have conducted that splendid fight for collective bargaining with the Board of Transportation last spring.

The campaign last May and June, in which the TWU was assisted by CIO affiliates throughout the country, culminated in the Murray-LaGuardia agreement which averted a threatened tie-up of the city-owned transportation system and resulted in resumption of collective bargaining between the commissioners and union officers. CIO President Philip Murray guided the struggle of the Transport Workers for its entire duration.

PUSHED UP FIGURE

On June 30, when the first conference was held, TWU officers presented their demands to the Board of Transportation. The only offer on record by the commissioners was a proposal to adjust wages to a total annual cost of a million and a half. Through two months of patient negotiations the TWU committee pushed that figure up first to $3,240,153, then to $3,569,890 and by the end of August the board agreed to total annual increases of $5,045,628.

$1,000,000 SHORT

Chairman John H. Lelaney of the Board of Transportation published the new rates on August 27 despite TWU insistence that it was still about one million short of the union's rock-bottom demands.

An additional $251,000 was granted by the City when TWU officers accompanied by CIO Organizational Director Allen Haywood protested to Mayor La Guardia that the sum granted by the board was not fairly distributed among all categories of employes.

MEMBERS RATIFY

An enthusiastic membership meeting in Manhattan Center held the following day hailed the TWU victory and the fruits of collective bargaining while expressing sharp protest over the union's demands not granted by the commissioners. The members were especially resentful over the board's failure to make the raises effective as of July 1, 1941, when the old TWU contracts expired and the city took them over subject to new wage fates and working conditions to be negotiated with the union committee.

President Murray, on request of the TWU, sent a wire to LaGuardia protesting the board's failure "to provide for wage increases to be retroactive to the date following expiration" of the old scales.

MURRAY'S WIRE

"I am astounded," Murray stated in his wire, "that such position has been taken, which is contrary to accepted practices in private industry, and if persisted in, will destroy confidence in wage negotiations and impair ability of anyone to have workers continue on pending conclusion of negotiation."

MORE TRANSIT PAY: Members of the Transport Workers Union in New York vote acceptance of a $5,000,000 pay increase negotiated by the union and city officials, but protested failure of the Board of Transportation to meet their full demands in the face of rising living costs.

Gotham Warehouse Union Gains

New York, Sept. 6—With 3,500 members organized since June 1 of this year, the half-way mark has been reached in the "7-in-7" organizing drive of Wholesale and Warehouse Workers Union, Local 65, CIO, the union announced today.

The current drive, which opened in June, called for organization of 7,000 new members in seven months. With the half-way mark already reached, the campaign is running far ahead of schedule.

200 Attend Minnesota CIO Parley

Hibbing, Minn., Sept. 6—Some 200 delegates representing 60,000 CIO members throughout the state attended the four-day convention of the Minnesota CIO Industrial Union Council held here last week.

President Frank Ellis of Austin and Secretary Leonard Lageman, Minneapolis, were re-elected unanimously the last day of the convention and six vice presidents representing the state's six districts were chosen for the incoming executive board.

The number of CIO councils in the state has almost doubled during the past year, Secretary Lageman declared in his annual report, increasing from 33 a year ago to 60 today. An organizing committee of representatives from the various national unions was set up by the convention to direct and coordinate future organizing activity and to work to expand union membership in unorganized industries.

BROPHY'S ADDRESS

In an address given earlier in the convention, John Brophy, CIO director of Industrial Union Councils, discussed the international situation and the role of labor in the defense program.

"It is important that there be a progressive clarification of our aims to the end that the sacrifice and agony of this war shall not prove, with the peace, to have been in vain," Brophy declared.

Commending the action of CIO Councils in backing the government's policy in opposing the aggression of the Nazis and Fascists, Brophy said: "The CIO councils are on record continuously these days as being in full support of our national defense program. No section of the nation can afford to remain unconcerned with international affairs in this day and age when democratic institutions are at stake in the world."

OTHER SPEAKERS

John Bernard, former congressman from this district, in a speech given later, stressed the importance of putting forth every effort to defeat Hitlerism. Emil Costello, CIO leader from Wisconsin, was the principal speaker at a banquet for the delegates on the opening night.

Resolutions were passed petitioning the OPM to make the Twin-Cities a defense area; asking all out aid to all countries fighting Hitlerism; endorsing CIO Pres. Philip Murray's Industry Council plan for defense production; opposing all anti-labor legislation; asking repeal of the state labor relations act; opposing wage ceilings and condemning war profiteering.

Win Poll

Harrisburg, Pa., Sept. 6—By a 4-1 margin, the Harrisburg Newspaper Guild gained sole bargaining rights on the Patriot-News here in an election conducted by the Natl. Labor Relations Board.

The poll of editorial employes showed 34 in favor of the Guild, nine against. All but two eligible voters cast ballots.

Contract negotiations are under way.

Mine Strikers Get Mascots

Rosiclare, Ill., Sept. 6—Striking members of the United Mine Workers at the Lead & Fluorspar Mining Co. have some striking "mascots."

The men have been on strike at the largest spar operations in the world since August 11, trying to secure a contract with the company which will provide a decent wage scale and better working conditions.

On August 23, local newsboys went on strike against the Rosiclare newsdealer asking an increase in wages. They had been receiving 75 cents a week for delivering on their respective routes, and they wanted an increase of a quarter a week or 3 cents a paper. The boys are still out, and the newsdealer is making delivery himself. Many of the patrons have ordered the delivery of the paper to their homes stopped.

"While of course the boys are in no way connected with the fluorspar strike, yet most everyone who speaks of it associates the two together," says McElroy Trout, special representative of UMW District 12.

Pres. Ray Edmundson of District 12 reports that steady progress has been made in the fluorspar organizing campaign, with several mines already signed up.

NEWSBOYS STRIKE: Everybody's getting wage boosts, so why not us? That's the question asked by these kids in Rosiclare, Ill., and their answer was a strike against the local newsdealer. The boys' walkout has been "adopted" by members of the United Mine Workers who've been conducting a walkout of their own at the Rosiclare Lead & Fluorspar Co. since August 11.

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

This year's Labor Day, as last year's, showed again that the CIO's progress is continuous and strong. Just as last year's Labor Day celebrations, picnics and mass meetings, brought an outpouring of hundreds of thousands of CIO members, so did this year's—with additional thousands marching in the CIO ranks.

I had the pleasure of taking part in the CIO demonstration in Cleveland, where twice as many CIO workers marched as last year. The parade, with members from a dozen or more CIO affiliates, impressed the people of Cleveland with CIO's strength and discipline—even the newspapers were moved to comment favorably on the CIO's showing.

Cleveland, of course, was only one community of scores throughout the nation that saw the CIO parading its members in the streets and at open air meetings.

TRANSPORT WORKERS

The Transport Workers are carrying on negotiations with the City of New York for pay increases, with the heart of the problem in the question of making the increases retroactive to the expiration of their contract. The CIO is again supporting this union in its entirely legitimate demand for full payment from the expiration of the agreement. This practice is standard in all contracts with private industry, and there is no reason why it should not be standard in agreements with city governments. The retroactive pay clause has been recognized not only by industry but by high U. S. Government agencies, including the Natl. Defense Mediation Board.

Incidentally, these negotiations, conducted in the usual sane and orderly fashion of CIO unions, should help to end a current fiction that municipalities cannot bargain collectively or sign union contracts. This fiction, broken down a hundred times in communities of all sizes and shades of political control, seems to persist in the minds of newspaper editorial writers and even of some officials. It is more than time it was laid to rest in the wastebasket of antiquated ideas.

The Transport Workers won a major victory affecting the future of hundreds of thousands of municipal workers when New York agreed earlier in the year to talk business with the union. That victory was won with the help of the entire CIO and with the active leadership of Pres. Murray. Success in the current talks with the Board of Transportation will clinch that victory—and will prove the sincerity of the city officials who agreed to deal with the union at that time.

ELECTRICAL WORKERS

One of the CIO's largest affiliates, the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, began its convention this Labor Day. The report of the officers of this union showed a phenomenal increase in membership and economic gains won for the workers. This growth, 887 percent over last year's sizeable increases, ranks the UERMW as one of the fastest growing affiliates of the entire CIO. Wage increases of $63,500,000 were chalked up during the year—one of the surest signs of union health and vigor.

American workers who learn of these achievements by CIO unions realize what they mean in terms of dollars and cents and a better living standard for themselves and their families. That is why they are joining the CIO in constantly increasing numbers—and that is why they are not fooled by newspaper columnists and high-priced editorial writers who make a profession out of smearing the labor movement.

Congratulations go to the CIO workers at the Cannon Electric Co. in Los Angeles for their achievement in winning a strike on the union's terms. The victory was won despite tear gas and other police brutality used against the workers, and will include reinstatement of all strikers and especially of four shop stewards fired for union activity. A Labor Board election scheduled to follow the settlement will undoubtedly be won by the CIO union.

On the other side of the country, the New York area shows a string of victories in the past few days. Two elections were won by SWOC, one at the Burnham Boiler Co. where the SWOC blanked the AFL by 29 to zero, another at the Lord Burnham Co. where the CIO got 77 votes, the AFL 49. In Newark, N. J., SWOC has won a contract covering 150 workers at the American Chain and Cable Co., and in Brooklyn, American Can Co. has just granted an eight cent increase—largest ever secured from this firm. The fourth largest building in the world, also in N. Y., will shortly be CIO operated, following a 289 to six vote for the CIO Building Service Workers.

CIO Strikes Southern Paper

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Sept. 13—First strike of editorial and circulation workers against a Scripps-Howard newspaper closed the Post down tight here when members of the American Newspaper Guild, CIO, walked out after the management flatly rejected demands for a pay raise and the Guild shop.

Printers and pressmen refused to walk through the picket lines, and the management announced after a few hours of attempting to put out a scab paper that publication would be suspended "until further notice."

The picket line was joined by United Mine Workers and CIO steel workers. The Guild is seeking a $10 weekly raise for editorial workers and other increases in the circulation departments of the paper. Present minimum for editorial workers is $40 a week.

Rally Aid To Frame-Up Victims

RICHMOND, Ind., Sept. 13—Nationwide labor and progressive support for the 65 defendants in cases rising from police and company thug attacks on the CIO picketline during the Int'l Harvester strike last spring here is being rallied by the Richmond Defense Committee, endorsed by the Indiana CIO Council.

Trial of the defendants began September 10, on charges ranging from assault and battery to conspiracy to commit murder. The defendants are workers who were attacked with clubs and guns while on the picket line.

The pickets, who were viciously beaten by police and armed thugs, were charged immediately after the assault. At the same time, strike headquarters were wrecked and union property destroyed.

HEAR WIRE TAP CHARGE: Maybe it was the Washington heat, but members of the Senate Judiciary Committee maintained fine judicial calm and showed little curiosity when they heard charges that the FBI had tapped telephone wires of Harry Bridges, CIO longshoremen's head. Charges were aired at hearings on confirmation of Francis Biddle, to the post of Attorney-General. Testimony was presented by Virginia Gardiner, former Chicago newspaper woman who is secretary of the Citizens Committee to Aid Harry Bridges.

Pact Covers 15 Plants, Lifts Wages

(See Story Page 6)

CHICAGO, Sept. 13—Signing of the first master contract with Armour and Co. brought one of the biggest firms in the packing industry under agreement with the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee, CIO.

The contract covers 15 plants of Armour and Co. throughout the nation. In addition to substantial wage increases, the pact improves grievance adjustment machinery, extends the 32-hour work guarantee to a wider group of workers, and brings many other improvements.

CIO President Philip Murray, United Mine Workers President John L. Lewis and National CIO Director Allan S. Haywood joined in congratulating Packinghouse Workers Chairman J. C. Lewis who signed for the union.

PWOC Chairman Lewis described the pact as one of the best signed in 1941, and as a forerunner of other master agreements that will soon cover the entire industry.

How Times Do Change!

GADSDEN, Ala., Sept. 13—Praise for the CIO in Gadsden is news in any man's newspaper, and worker readers rubbed their eyes here when they saw an editorial in the local Tribune lauding the Steel Workers Organizing Committee for its "fine spirit" in the quick settlement of a brief walkout at the Republic Steel plant.

As the local paper pointed out, the speedy agreement was "a far cry from the conditions which prevailed here a few years ago when union leaders were beaten unmercifully."

William Mitch, SWOC regional director, conducted the negotiations. As Yelverton Cowherd, Birmingham, (Ala.) CIO director pointed out, "Gadsden, the untouchable, has at last been touched by the CIO."

CIO Sweeps Eight Polls In Gotham Lettershops

NEW YORK, Sept. 13—Sweeping victories in eight Labor Board elections among lettershop workers were announced by Lewis Merrill, president of the United Office and Professional Workers, in which the AFL was decisively defeated.

The eight elections were won after a strenuous campaign by the Direct Mail Organizing Committee of the UOPWA. Success of the drive is shown by the fact that the CIO received 80 per cent of the votes cast and 89 per cent of those for CIO and AFL.

"Lettershop workers have shown again by their votes that the CIO is their union," Merrill declared, "and that they are out to win better conditions through the CIO. They have decisively repudiated the splitting tactics of the AFL. These election victories will give fresh impetus to the CIO drive for 100 per cent organization in the direct mail field."

Barge Workers Win

New York. — More than 1,000 Lines and Mississippi River Barge Lines will get a monthly pay raise of $19.

Canadian Steel Union Gains Major Victory

TORONTO, Sept. 13—Canadian steelworkers won a tremendous gain for collective bargaining this week when an agreement signed with the Acme Screw & Gear management provided exclusive bargaining rights for the Steel Workers' Organizing Committee for the duration of the war. More than 2,500 workers were involved in the 10-day strike, but the size of the plant may shortly be doubled.

The strike was settled after the Federal department of labor put pressure on the management, an innovation in policy. In the last SWOC strike at National Steel Car, Hamilton, the Government said two organizations would have bargaining rights, SWOC and an employes' association which sprung up overnight.

HAILS VICTORY

Executive Director C. H. Millard of SWOC hailed the victory as the dawn of a new day for the organization. Meanwhile, a SWOC conference declared that NASCO workers have not obtained collective bargaining, having been "tricked" into ending their second and last strike within a few months.

The Acme agreement provides that all changes in working conditions will be retroactive. The strike was caused by the management's refusal to accept the unanimous recommendation of a conciliation board and negotiate after the workers voted for SWOC 10 to 1. Negotiations will be resumed and disagreements will be referred to arbitration.

Another outstanding action taken by SWOC this week was a unanimous demand by a SWOC national conference that Order-in-Council 7440 freezing wages be abolished and a Canadian Labor Act be established. The conference was a prelude to the second annual convention of the Canadian Congress of Labor at Hamilton this week to which CIO unions in Canada are affiliates.

Win Contract On Labor Day

Steubenville, O., Sept. 13—Local 1190, Steel Workers Organizing Committee, celebrated Labor Day not only with the traditional parade but with the announcement of a substantial victory in the local plant of the Wheeling Steel Corp.

Under the agreement won by the local, the Wheeling firm agreed to pay time and a half for overtime to workers on tonnage, piecework, and hourly rates. The dispute began when the corporation refused to pay overtime for work on July 4, though this was written into the contract.

TAX ARGUMENT: This chart from the CIO Economic Outlook shows that 65 per cent of a worker's income goes for food, clothing and rent. Of the remainder, only about 5 per cent goes to durable goods made of scarce materials. This chart punches some holes in the argument for soaking low-income groups.

OPM Accepts Labor Ideas On Silk Emergency

WASHINGTON, Sept. 13.—Six recommendations aimed at easing the effects of priority unemployment among the nation's 175,000 silk workers, who were seriously affected by the nation's embargo on Japanese silk imports, have been accepted by the OPM's emergency Silk Labor Committee, Sidney Hillman, OPM associate director general, said today.

Leaders of the CIO American Federation of Hosiery Workers who attended the parley said that the committee's suggestions, together with the OPM's so-called "Buffalo plan" for job replacement, would greatly cushion the effect of priority joblessness and shorten the period of unemployment.

RECOMMENDATIONS

Recommendations call for government allocation of synthetic yarn to processors of silk if a free and fair flow of rayon doesn't develop; government allocation of 1½% of U. S.-held rayon immediately to silk processors now in distress; further conferences on retaining and placing idle silk workers in six industrial centers; and development of a national program for placing workers affected by priorities unemployment.

Attending the meeting were Pres. Emil Rieve and Board Member Herbert Payne of the Textile Workers Union; Carl Holderman, Jersey Joint Board manager of the TWUA; Solomon Barkin, TWUA research director; and Pres. Alexander McKeown and Vice-Pres. Alfred Hoffman of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, a TWU affiliate.

KENOSHA CONFAB

The OPM Labor Division announced, meanwhile, that labor and management groups will meet with government officials in Kenosha, Wisc., on Sept. 15 to discuss the priority unemployment situation resulting from shutdown of a large silk mill and the impending reduction of employment at the Nash-Kelvinator factory there.

Illinois CIO to Form Council

Springfield, Ill., Sept. 13—Several hundred delegates from a score of CIO unions will meet here Sept. 19 to create an Illinois Industrial Union Council.

Call for the meeting was sent out recently by Ray Edmundson, temporary convention chairman and president of the Illinois district of the United Mine Workers, and by Harry Deck, secretary of the convention committee. Formation of the council will mean that every important industrial state in the nation now has a central body for CIO affiliates.

Among the larger groups of delegates at the Springfield meeting will be the United Mine Workers, the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee, the Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee, the Electrical and Radio Workers, the Rubber Workers, Fur Workers, Retail Employes and Newspaper Guild.

Oil Union Meets In South

BATON ROUGE, La., Sept. 13—Delegates from locals of the Oil Workers Intl. Union will meet here Sept. 15 for the union's 12th annual convention with a record of wage increases, Labor Board election victories and new contracts.

It is expected that considerable discussion will be devoted to plans for organizing the big Standard Oil corporation, which has become one of the largest non-union companies in the nation.

In a recent referendum election, the OWIU reelected its national officers: President O. A. Knight, Vice-Presidents Sam Beers and A. R. Kintsley, and Secretary-Treasurer E. C. Conarty.

Textile Workers Call Rent Strike

Lawrence, Mass., Sept. 13.—Millworkers here have gone on a rent strike in protest against unreasonable increases demanded by local landlords. The workers, who are members of the CIO Textile Workers Union, have appealed to the Fair Rent and Price Committee of the union for aid.

The strike was provoked when the landlord suddenly demanded increases up to $1 a week, following this with eviction notices after he had collected the original rent.

Rubber Union Membership At Peak As Parley Opens

By ROBERT CRUDEN

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. Sept. 13—The biggest convention of the six-year old United Rubber Workers, will open here Monday happy over $22,000,000 in wage increases won by the Union during the past year.

Topping its previous high mark in 1937, the URWA now has more than 82,000 members in good standing—an increase of 28,000 over the last convention.

The new members come largely from the Goodyear plants—center of an intensive joint CIO-URWA drive during the past year—other major companies, and from open-shop territories where CIO unionism has broken through for the first time. To establish itself in these new areas the URWA had to fight 25 NLRB election campaigns—of which it won 23!

The growing strength of the rubber union was also indicated by its increasing number of contracts. These increased 36 during the last year—from 91 to 127.

GOODYEAR DRIVE

The drive on Goodyear also brought that last major hold out into the URWA-CIO dugout. The Akron Goodyear plant signed two partial agreements with the union, and is now negotiating on a complete agreement, embracing all matters relating to hours, wages and working conditions—the first such contract Goodyear has ever negotiated!

DALRYMPLE REPORTS

In his report to the delegates Pres. Dalrymple cautions them against any letup now.

"While these facts are a great source of satisfaction to us, we must not rest upon our achievements," he warned. "Indeed, our accomplishments this past year should rather spur us on to greater victories, for they show that what seem insuperable obstacles can be overcome if we set our minds to it."

The rubber union president also emphasized the identity of interest between democracy and labor.

"No doubt, we shall see serious attempts made during the coming year to impose drastic restraints upon labor through legislation," he said. "Reactionary campaigns this last spring and summer failed in their objective because of an aroused labor movement. But the reactionaries will come back again and again.

"It is, therefore, necessary that labor be ever vigilant. Labor must keep an eye on Washington and the state legislatures at all times lest some of these attacks upon us succeed."

Maintaining that "our freedoms have already been attacked by the ruthless war machine of Nazism," Genl. Secy-Treas. Frank Grillo told the delegates in his report that, "It falls upon the shoulders of organized labor to take a firm stand on the question of whether or not the preservation of freedom is worthwhile fighting for."

In his report Pres. Dalrymple insisted upon protection of the rights of labor during the defense program.

"As before, the United Rubber Workers of America is committed to full co-operation with the defense program," he said.

"We want to see that program carried through successfully to the end that our nation be made strong and serve, in the words of Pres. Roosevelt, as an 'arsenal of democracy' the world over. It is our opinion that the defense program can be best carried through with the full maintenance of the rights of labor and adequate protection of the standards of living of the American people."

LAUDS, MURRAY, HAYWOOD

Dalrymple expressed the gratitude of his union for CIO assistance during the past year, especially to Pres. Philip Murray and Organization Director Allan S. Haywood.

"To the CIO must go the credit for the mobilization of public opinion which resulted in the stalling of the anti-labor blitzkrieg in Congress," he added.

Thomas F. Burns, the URWA vice president, has been on full-time leave of absence during the last year as labor consultant to the OPM.

Rap Proposal To Blacklist CIO Chemists

New York, Sept. 13—A call to American chemists to mobilize all possible forces to preserve unity in the struggle against aggression was issued to the American Chemical Society by Lewis A. Berne, president of the CIO Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists, and Technicians.

Berne's call went to the Chemical Society at its annual meeting in Atlantic City, and dealt with reports that the secretary of the society had been urging a blacklist of all CIO members of the profession.

"We have recent evidence of the introduction of Hitlerian methods of attempted totalitarian control of employe chemists, Berne wrote.

"We refer to threats of blacklisting union chemists made by the national secretary of the ACS recently in an article printed in your official journal.

"Such blacklisting is threatened for all chemists who in the exercise of their constitutional rights of independent thought desire to band together in economic association and bargain collectively."

RE-ELECTED: Secretary - treasurer of the Minnesota Industrial Union Council is Leonard Lageman, who was re-elected at the council's convention in Duluth a week ago.

2,500 Back Cotton Oil Strikers

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Sept. 13—Rallying to the support of 1,100 striking workers, a mass meeting of members of the CIO Cannery & Agricultural Workers staged a mock funeral for the company union at the anti-labor Buckeye Cotton Oil Mills in Memphis.

The company, a Proctor & Gamble subsidiary, has long maintained an open shop, and has been using the stooge outfit in the hope of breaking the walkout, according to William Haber, UCAPAWA representative.

The Buckeye workers, Negro and white, illustrated their feelings for the company union by shouting their slogan: "Born a mouse and died a rat."

RECITE PLEDGE

Climax of the mass meeting came when the 2,500 workers present raised their right hands and solemnly recited a pledge that they and their families would fight to keep the scale for picking cotton at 10 per cent of its market price, instead of allowing landlords to hold the pickers in peonage and to dictate starvation wages with whip and gun.

Speakers included Brother Clady, Negro president of the Buckeye local; William duBerry, who organized the Buckeye plant; Frank Bruno, of the maritime union; Bethed Judd, of the auto workers, and Robert Pittman, of the steel union.

Ben McCullough, a Ford worker who received three vicious beatings in 1937 during efforts to organize the Ford plant in Memphis, drew a rousing round of applause from the meeting.

Win Iceland Bonus

New York.—The Natl. Maritime Union has won a $45 bonus for seamen sailing to Iceland, it was announced here. Two ships owned by the Merchants and Miners Transportation Co. are covered.

RECUPERATING: CIO President Philip Murray, shown here with his secretary, Miss Mercedes Daugherty, has just left the hospital in Pittsburgh. He is now convalescing, preparatory to resuming his heavy load of duties. Meanwhile Miss Daugherty, who is President Murray's niece, has herself been in hospital. Their many friends are encouraged by the reports of their rapid and steady recovery and are looking forward to seeing them both on the job again in the near future.

Rapid Progress:

Union Shop, Label Won In Contract At Plane Plant

WASHINGTON, Sept. 13—American military planes are going to be powered by motors with the CIO union label.

That fact was disclosed here today by Richard T. Frankensteen, director of the UAW-CIO aircraft campaign, as he announced signing of the aviation industry's first union shop, check-off, union label contract—signed this week with the Consolidated Motors Corp. of Detroit. The firm manufactures engines for two big plane producers.

Described as the best agreement in the aviation industry, the pact provides an 85c minimum and an average wage of $1.10 an hour—higher than the rate in any automobile company. Frankensteen said the company is now employing 2,500 workers, with the number expected to reach 4,000 in a month and 8,000 in six months.

The aviation organizing director said the Consolidated contract was a symbol of the UAW-CIO's rapid progress in the nation's fastest growing industry. A squadron of organizers are being placed in key spots and are reaching maximum efficiency in their union campaign.

DEFEATED AFL

At the Sikorsky plane plant near Bridgeport, Conn., the UAW-CIO beat out the AFL in a Labor Board election requested by the federation affiliate. The UAW-CIO organizing work was done in only 10 days, Frankensteen said. In the election, the CIO union polled 1132 votes, to only 997 for the AFL, while some 1,300 cast their ballots for no union. The union is seeking a run-off election.

On the West Coast, the organizing drive at Douglas is making rapid headway, and negotiations for wage boosts at Ryan and Vultee are expected to bring millions of additional dollars to UAW-CIO members in the two companies.

New York CIO Barbers May Strike

New York, Sept. 13—Some 7,000 CIO barbers in New York City may be on strike by the middle of next week.

In two meetings held here, the Executive Board of the CIO Barbers and Beauty Culturists of America set a strike deadline of Sept. 16 for the 7,000 barbers and 1,000 manicurists employed in 3,000 Manhattan shops, it was announced by Adolph Rosenbaum, strike chairman and secretary-treasurer of Local 1.

"We intend to do two things in the course of this strike, the first in four years in the industry," Rosenbaum declared. "First, we intend to fight for a living wage for our barbers and manicurists, a wage commensurate with the rise in the cost of living.

"Secondly, we want prices to be stabilized in the shops to a decent level that will insure for each customer high sanitary standards and skilled workmanship."

LIST DEMANDS

Major union demands on individual proprietors call for a minimum of $25 for a 48-hour week, one week's vacation with pay, and commission of 50% over $40 for barbers. The union is seeking a $12 minimum for manicurists and 50% over $16.

Price cutting among the shops has resulted in journeymen barbers working for a "starvation wage," Rosenbaum said, while most manicurists are paid as little as $4 a week, with the rest of their income deriving from tips.

Some manicurists receive no salary at all, he said. "In many of these cut rate shops, a manicure is thrown in free with a shave and a haircut."

A pre-strike meeting is scheduled to be addressed by Rosenbaum, Pres. William Mikades of the local, Sec-Treas. Saul Mills of the Greater New York Industrial Union Council and Jack Lawrenson of the Natl. Maritime Union.

Teamsters Swing to CIO

Ottumwa, Ia., Sept. 13. — More teamsters are breaking away from AFL domination to join the CIO, according to reports from the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee. Latest group to apply for UCWOC affiliation is a large teamsters local in this city.

The new Construction Workers Local 388, was set up following a mass meeting at which only two votes were cast against the CIO affiliation.

In Detroit, Mich., CIO Regional Director August Scholle announced that the CIO forces of the entire state would concentrate on aiding teamsters and similar workers to join the CIO. Scholle denounced the AFL Teamsters for repeated attempts to make deals with employers with the purpose of preventing bona fide organization in the CIO.

House Seen Last Hope To Improve 'Soak-Poor' Bill

WASHINGTON, Sept. 13—Passage of the tax bill by the Senate was followed this week by meetings of the conference committee composed of Senate and House representatives to smooth out differences between the two versions of the measure.

Some hope was held out by observers here that the House conferees would insist on restoring the income tax exemption rates to the House level, set at $2,000 for married people and $800 for single and reduced in the Senate bill to $1,500 and $750.

The bill, strongly opposed by the CIO and Labor's Non-Partisan League as a measure to relieve the rich at the expense of the poor, was expected to go through with few if any other changes between the two versions.

League officials urged workers and other low-income groups groups who will be hit most severely by the bill to write to their Congressmen and Senators protesting its passage and urging changes in the conference committee.

CIO PROGRAM

Speaking on the bill over a national radio hookup last week John T. Jones, CIO legislative representative and director of Labor's Non-Partisan League bluntly charged that it made "every monopolist, every wealthy individual, every big corporation, every war millionaire" richer while making "every industrial worker, every farmer, every professional man, every small business man" that much poorer.

He pointed out that the present bill provides for only 7 per cent of U. S. revenue from excess war profits taxation, as compared to 45 percent in the 1920 tax program, while increasing consumer or sales taxes 300 percent over the first World War period.

Quoting the CIO program for taxation according to ability to pay rather than its reverse as represented in the present bill, Jones said:

"As CIO President Philip Murray has pointed out, the wage earners and farmers of America are already paying a tremendous share of the tax burden. The Temporary National Economic Committee has shown that 26 percent of all taxes imposed by Federal, state and local governments were in 1939 paid by persons whose incomes were less than $1,000 a year.

"The present tax bill is a shocking betrayal of the American people by those whom their votes elected to public office."

Two More Bethlehem Plants Go CIO

Washington, Sept. 13—CIO unionism this week spread through two more plants of the big Bethlehem Steel interests.

At Staten Island, N. Y., the Bethlehem Shipyard Co.'s Sisco plant voted by a 3 1-2 to 1 margin for the Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, thereby sewing up for the CIO affiliate all the company's yards in New York harbor.

The IUM&SW received 2,193 votes to only 625 for no union.

The local thus enters the bargaining unit of several Bethlehem plants, and will be covered by the master contract with Bethlehem Shipyards now being negotiated.

SWOC GETS 85%

Meanwhile, the CIO Steel Workers Organizing Committee won its ninth straight NLRB election victory at Bethlehem, polling 85 per cent of the votes cast at the San Francisco steel plant.

The SWOC received 651 out of 806 votes cast.

Charge Knudsen Gave Aid To Fake Union

Detroit, Sept. 13—Charges that OPM Director - General William Knudsen interfered with procedure of the Natl. Labor Relations Board and showed favoritism towards a company union at the Curtiss-Wright plant in Port Columbus, Ohio, were made today by leaders of the UAW-CIO.

Pres. R. J. Thomas asserted that if "Knudsen considers it his duty to load the dice against bona fide unionism and to strong-arm the NLRB, he is in extreme need of enlightenment." Richard Frankensteen, UAW-CIO aviation director, commented that "if the NLRB succumbs to strong-arm methods in this way, it might as well abdicate and let Mr. Knudsen be the acknowledged dictator over American workers as Mr. Hitler is over the workers in Germany."

FILED CHARGES

The UAW - CIO filed NLRB charges against the company on Aug. 19, charging it with maintaining "The Aircraft," a company union. A week later, the fake outfit, to preserve its hide, threatened a strike. Kriegbaum, company union head, admitted that he talked on the phone to Knudsen, who asked him to withhold "strike action" for 72 hours—to which the company union agreed.

During the 72-hour period, the NLRB suddenly dismissed the charges "before the investigation, which was very damaging to the company union, had been completed," Thomas said.

The company union was established in Curtiss-Wright plants in Buffalo and Port Columbus on the so-called Hamilton plan, which was specifically outlawed by the NLRB on April 17, 1939.

Distillery Union Head Flays Unfair Tax Bill

WASHINGTON, Sept. 13.—Sharp protest against the tax bill now before Senate and House conference committee members was expressed by Joseph D. Cannon, chairman of the Distillery Workers Organizing Committee, CIO, in a letter to Congress.

"The necessity of raising largely increased income is recognized," Cannon wrote. "The money must be raised, but by no means should it come from those least able to pay as is provided in the 'sock the poor' measure now menacing the nation at the hands of what seems to be a subservient Congress.

"In equity, taxes should not be levied on those whose livelihood can ill afford the burden. Such levies come out of the bread and butter of many whose incomes provide at best a substandard living.

TAX ON POOR

"This tax measure is a tax on babies unfortunate enough to be born into our working-class families, a tax on their food, on their high chairs, on their baby carriages, on their nursing bottles; but so far, there is no direct tax on mother's milk. . .

"The poor are socked on earnings as low as $15 a week. DuPont's General Motors will pay no surtax on its profits until they reach $210,000,000 per year. Some clouds, it seems, have a gold lining."

Ask Funds for U. S. Pay Boosts

Washington, Sept. 13 — Rising living costs are bringing serious hardships to hundreds of thousands of government workers on fixed wages, Eleanor Nelson, secretary-treasurer of the United Federal Workers of America, CIO, told U. S. Budget Director Harold D. Smith here.

Miss Nelson urged Smith to ask needed appropriations to put the recently passed Federal pay raise bill into effect. The bill was passed after a long campaign by the CIO union.

"We believe that since it was the intention of Congress that a uniform pay increase plan be adopted, the request for funds should be made immediately. Further, we believe that if any supplementary funds are needed at a later date they can be arranged for through a deficiency appropriation."

Congratulations

Two of the major unions of the CIO are holding their annual conventions concurrently this week—the Oil Workers International Union in Baton Rouge, La., and the United Rubber Workers of America in Indianapolis, Ind.

Both alike report splendid progress in increased membership, higher wages and many other improvements won for the workers.

The Oil Workers won a 10c-an-hour increase, on the eve of their convention, at the East Chicago refinery of Cities Service, after winning similar concessions from the Sinclair and Socony-Vacuum refineries there.

They report the same kind of results from their far-flung organizing activities, in a long series of wage increases, new contracts and Labor Board election victories in all parts of the country. And the union is now getting ready to bring collective bargaining to the giant Standard Oil Corp.

The United Rubber Workers report a peak membership of 82,000 in good standing, an increase of 28,000 members over the time of their last convention.

This organization has increased the number of its contracts from 91 to 127 and has won as much as $22,000,000 in wage increases during the past year. It was victorious in 23 out of the 25 Labor Board elections in which it took part.

The Oil Workers were one of the founding unions of the CIO and the Rubber Workers one of the first to join. Both exemplify the industrial union principles for which the CIO stands. The whole movement joins in congratulating them on the progress reported to their respective conventions and in wishing them continued and even greater success in the years that lie ahead.

It Has Been Done

Chairman J. C. Lewis of the CIO Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee sees in the winning of the first master agreement with Armour & Co., largest corporation in the industry, a challenge to "Doubting Thomases" and to "those faint-hearted individuals who made the claim that it couldn't be done."

The winning of this the first master agreement in the packinghouse industry, covering 15 plants and 20,000 employes, and bringing substantial wage increases and other improvements, is a signal victory not only for the PWOC but for the whole CIO.

It proves once more the validity of the CIO slogan that "it can be done."

In congratulating the PWOC on this great achievement and pledging continued support until the full benefits of collective bargaining are extended to the whole industry, all unions of the CIO will draw great comfort and encouragement from this further shining proof that no organizing task is so great that it cannot be accomplished in the spirit of the CIO and through applying its modern methods of industrial organization.

Independent?

Their place is now taken by so-called "independent" unions, whose promoters are usually neither pure nor simple.

The purpose of these "independents" is to contest the right of the bona fide CIO unions to represent the workers, and to keep just "within the law" so they may not be ruled off the ballot.

The name "independent" is entirely misleading in these cases. For at best such organizations are weak bodies confined to a single company and without the bargaining power that comes from association with a really independent labor movement like the CIO. And at worst they are disguised company unions, completely dependent upon the employers.

The Labor Board is frequently remiss in not ruling so-called "independents" off the ballot when their company union character is clearly demonstrated. But the workers themselves usually see through the thin disguise, and election results have shown an increasingly overwhelming majority for the really independent industrial unionism of the CIO as against the phoney "independents."

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

A labor editor receives many letters that make him long for a labor press at least equal in size and circulation to the business-controlled press.

They come from all sorts of people. A printer, for instance, will send in a number of clippings, saying: "We're sick of setting up this kind of anti-labor drivel; wish you would take after this guy."

A housewife will pen a letter, "just to get if off my chest," telling about family problems, what the union has done in raising wages etc., and usually asking in one way or another why we don't get after the papers more for lying about the CIO.

An AFL member from one of the more racket-ridden crafts will write in about exorbitant initiation fees and other tyrannies and crookednesses. "I know this would make good material for Westbrook Pegler," he says, "but I won't let him have it, because he's just as much against the clean unionism of the CIO, which is what we really need in our field."

Editorials, columns and other articles retailing the stale shibboleths of anti-labor propaganda are sent in from all parts of the country, with indignant comments written over them or with requests that the CIO "do something about this."

Through most of such letters there runs a feeling of frustration about getting any fair treatment for labor from the millionaire press, and of hope that somehow the CIO can do something about it.

Particular goat-getters, of course, are the syndicated columnists, since it is easier to get mad at someone you know than at an unsigned editorial.

The ponderous conservatism of a Mark Sullivan or the open employer propaganda of a David Lawrence cause little excitement, however. There is no disposition on the part of the people who write in to deny to employers the right to have their point of view expressed in the press.

What does "burn them up" is the failure of most of the press to offset this propaganda with equal space for the views of labor and the common people.

They feel particularly betrayed, as a rule, by such columnists as have from time to time made a pretense of being liberal or pro-labor, but who nowadays specialize in the most malicious and inaccurate keyhole-gossip slanders against the CIO.

Typical of the current evolution of "liberalism" into anti-laborism is the T.R.B. Washington column in the New Republic. From red-baiting and factional slandermongering it has rapidly progressed to an attack on Pres. Murray and virtually the whole CIO.

The general purport of this attack is identical with that of the whole anti-labor and avowedly conservative press, namely that labor is selfishly hampering the defense effort.

The profiteers, the monopolists and their governmental and political accomplices; the anti-union employers who have provoked industrial disturbance, and all the other real saboteurs of national defense, are not even mentioned in this piece.

All its venom is reserved for the movement which represents the workers who bear the real brunt of every production program; and for constructive proposals like the CIO Defense Plan, designed to give labor the representation it has been denied and to end the current sabotage of both defense and consumers' production.

Typical of another of the most common kinds of anti-labor propaganda we are asked to answer is a column by a former Congressman, Samuel B. Pettengill, signing himself "The Gentleman from Indiana."

This column sheds crocodile tears about the imaginary fate of some worker who might be deprived of his job under a "maintenance of membership" or other union security clause.

It has no tears to shed for the countless workers who are thrown out of work by arbitrary discharge, layoffs, etc., where they have no union to protect their seniority and other rights to their jobs.

No, the Pettengills, Peglers and the countless other writers of the same ilk consider it "tyranny" that workers should be required to pay their share for union protection, just as a citizen must pay taxes for governmental services and protection.

But they have nothing to say against the real tyrannies and wage-cutting exploitation from which the unions protect these same workers.

To counter the many slanders and attacks against labor in the press is not an easy matter. A factual correction to a column, for instance, usually rates at best an inconspicuous line or two that is little compensation; or else is used as a springboard for new slanders and attacks.

One of the most effective methods is to write letters to local editors and express organized protest whenever such anti-labor propaganda is printed. Another is to expand and circulate labor's own press, and to promote more persistently the positive presentation of labor's real aims and activities.

Electrical Union Hits Lack Of Defense Planning

CAMDEN, N. J., Sept. 13—Demands for more efficient management of the defense program, and support of the Murray industry council plan, featured closing sessions of the seventh annual convention of the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers here.

Union officials, in discussing the defense program, said that more than 50,000 UE members engaged in the production of radios, refrigerators, washing machines and other electrical appliances, are in danger of losing their jobs because of shutdowns resulting from material shortages.

Conduct of the OPM in handling the "priorities crisis" was sharply criticized by both Pres. James B. Carey and Vice-Pres. William Sentner of St. Louis. They said the OPM policy has been directed by corporation executives more interested in preserving private outfits than in defense, and that there has been a lack of planning for the switch over of industry from civilian to defense production.

UNION ON JOB

Citing the case of a small midwestern factory that faced closing, Sentner said OPM had been told of the situation more than a year ago but had taken no action. The company "asked us to put the pressure on if we wanted to keep our members on the job," Sentner said.

"We're not going to Washington about it," he added. "We're going straight to the big manufacturers who have orders and who have first call on materials and we're telling them to dish it out fast to those little fellows who are able to take over some of the work."

Earlier, the convention went on record in support of the re-election of James B. Carey as CIO secretary, after having elected Albert Fitzgerald of Lynn, Mass., his successor as president of the union. Fitzgerald, who was elected by a margin of approximately 100 votes, will take office Nov. 1.

Before adjourning the several hundred delegates voted down a proposal sponsored by Carey that local unions be allowed to bar from office members who are Communists, Nazis or Fascists. Instead, they adopted a resolution suggested by Pres.-Elect Fitzgerald under which members could be kept from holding office only after having been found guilty of "acts against the nation or against the union." The convention favored the latter proposal by a vote of 789-377.

In a final address to the convention, Carey urged full support for his successor and urged that the "differences expressed here must not be carried over into the work of the organization. Every member should give every bit of loyalty and cooperation to the new president."

RESOLUTIONS

Final resolutions passed by the delegates called for a conference of labor, farmers, industry and government to keep defense unemployment at a minimum, and for a national conference todiscuss post-war adjustments of the country's economy. The convention called for abolition of the Dies Committee, reappointment of Edwin S. Smith to the NLRB, and opposed any curtailment of labor's right to strike.

PRESIDENT: Albert J. Fitzgerald of Lynn, Mass., who was elected president of the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers at the union's recent convention. He'll assume office on Nov. 1.

Armour Signs First Master Agreement

CHICAGO, Sept. 13.—Armour and Company, one of the Big Four in the packing industry that defied organization for many years, has signed a master agreement for all certified locals of the CIO Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee. The contract covers 15 plants throughout the nation.

The agreement provides wage increases, retroactive to August 11, of five cents an hour for men and six cents for women, with a clause allowing this union to reopen negotiations for a further increase on 30 days notice.

The agreement was hailed by United Mine Workers President CIO President Philip Murray, by John L. Lewis, and by CIO Director Allan S. Haywood as an outstanding achievement ranking with the great victories of the CIO in organizing the unorganized.

Wiring his congratulations to packinghouse workers Chairman J. C. Lewis, President Murray described the agreement as "a great step forward to the stability so badly needed in the packing industry," while Lewis joined in declaring that it "ranks with any of the great accomplishments of the CIO." Director Haywood, commenting on the pact, described it as "one more of those jobs that doubting Thomases said could not be done."

OTHER GAINS

Other important provisions of the agreement include the strengthening of the 32-hour work guarantees to cover employes laid off after the first day's work in the week, greatly improved grievance adjustment machinery, and other gains.

The contract, signed by Chairman J. C. Lewis for the PWOC and by F. D. Green for the company, was described by Chairman Lewis as "one of the best signed in the year 1941," and as a promise of further successes to be won in the packing industry in the future.

Chairman Lewis indicated that the PWOC would press for similar master agreements with other big packers. "To those faint-hearted individuals who made the claim that it couldn't be done," he declared, "we now ask that they join us in the fight to enlist the packinghouse workers and if they cannot do that, to stand aside and let those fight who can."

Time Brings All Things:

News Magazine Gets 'Scoop'—Strikers Wanted More Dough!

New York, Sept. 13.—Readers of Time magazine who believe that all strikes are "red plots" were given a dose of disillusionment this week.

The weekly news magazine commented that observers who expected Hitler's invasion of Russia would somehow cause an automatic stopping of all American walkouts, "were bewildered" by continuance of strikes throughout the nation.

Said Time: "The not-so-simple answer was that 1941's labor troubles sprouted out of the U. S. economy. Majority of demands were belly demands. Money poured out of Washington, manufacturers' profits-before-taxes soared, and labor wanted more of it than it got."

Clothing Union Donates Gift To University

Chicago, Sept. 13—Receipt of the 6,649th gift to the University of Chicago Fiftieth Anniversary Fund —$1,000 from the Chicago Joint Board of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America—was announced today by George A. Ranney, chairman of the University's Citizens Board of Sponsors.

Presenting the gift, which raised the total subscribed by Chicagoans toward the Fiftieth Anniversary Fund to $2,365,000, Samuel Levin, manager of the board, declared:

"We of the Amalgamated owe a special debt of gratitude to the University. During the struggles of our early years, many public-spirited members of the faculty took an interest in our cause and came to our aid with advice and encouragement.

"Their names would fill a long roster, but outstanding among them are Professors Charles H. Merriam, Paul Douglas, Edith Abbott, and James Meade. These and many others are revered in our memories."

Union Wins Strike At Gimbel Store

New York, Sept. 12—CIO members at the big New York Gimbel's store voted yesterday to end their three-walkout, and prepared immediately to cast ballots on two alternative wage and hour proposals worked out by the management with union and CIO officials.

Under the terms of the settlement formula, the workers were to decide whether they wished the 5-day, 40-hour week with no immediate wage increases; or the 5½-day, 42-hour week, with an increase of $1.50 a week. The first of the two proposals stipulates that the current wage schedules would be open for revision on June 10, 1942, while under the second, wage discussions would start on August 1, 1943.

WIDMAN TELLS DETAILS

Details of the two plans were presented impartially to a mass meeting of the strikers by Michael S. Widman, Jr., CIO assistant director of organization. Joseph Curran, CIO vice-president and head of the New York City CIO council, and Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers Union addressed the meeting, urging the workers to vote for the 40-hour week plan.

The agreement to end the strike was signed by Widman, Pres. Samuel Wolchok of the United Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Employes, Pres. William Michelson of the local and Louis Broido, Gimbel's executive. Participating in the negotiations in Washington was Allan S. Haywood, CIO director of organization.

Haywood and Wolchok, in a joint statement, pointed out that the strike involved "no question of union recognition or willingness to bargain collectively."

Pointing out that Gimbel's was the first store in the country to enter into a CIO agreement, the two leaders said the company "has had a sound, liberal and progressive labor policy . . . we believe that the Gimbel New York store is deserving of the support and patronage of all persons interested in the cause of labor."

Testimony On Wire Taps Destroyed

Washington, Sept. 13—Records of the Senate Judiciary Committee hearing at which charges of FBI wire tapping on private conversations by Harry Bridges, CIO west coast leader, have been destroyed, it was learned here. Ordinarily, testimony is printed and made public after the hearings.

The destroyed testimony dealt with an expose of FBI snooping on Bridges and also raised the question whether Francis T. Biddle, U. S. Attorney General, had authorized it. Wire tapping is illegal, and was condemned by Congress in the defeat of a bill to legalize it earlier this year.

Following the expose and the hearing, Bridges defense counsel asked Judge Charles B. Sears, presiding officer at the second Bridges deportation trial, to reopen the trial on the ground that evidence presented then had presumably been secured through wire tapping also. Judge Sears announced that he would hear arguments on the motion to reopen at the convenience of the Attorney General's office.

STAINLESS STEEL . . .
in the Railroad Industry

• Speed, safety, and economy—all are achieving new meaning since the introduction of streamlined stainless steel trains.

Stainless steel—with its inherent advantages of high strength-weight ratio and corrosion resistance —makes possible the transfer of valuable pounds from dead load to pay load—saves pounds of paint by eliminating the need for surface coatings of any kind—and permits the construction of full streamlined articulated trains of less weight and less horsepower, but which operate at greater speed and surprising efficiencies.

Utilization of the unique combination of properties inherent in stainless steel marks an important step in the progress of railway engineering and design.

Vigilantes On the Job

Wilson, Ark., Sept. 13.—Armed vigilantes at the Missco Farm Security project here forcibly prevented a meeting called by Harry Koger, president of the CIO Cannery and Agricultural Workers Union Cotton Council, to consider wage demands for the current picking season.

The vigilantes prevented the meeting being held in the project hall, despite Farm Security Administration pledges that the hall would be available.

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

True to form, the CIO's Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee headed by J. C. Lewis has taken on another giant, just consummating a master agreement covering approximately 20,000 workers in 15 major plants with Armour Packing Company, which provides for substantial increases in wages. One particular clause is significant—applicable to the South where wages are lower—a guarantee is given that no worker will receive less than 10 cents per hour and a protective clause against rising living costs. The wage, working hours and military clauses can be reopened on a 30 days' notice. A 32-hour work week is guaranteed. Some workers will obtain increases of 26 per cent.

Pete Campbell, CIO Regional Director in Louisville, reports the settling of the Henry Vogt Machine Company obtaining increased wages, vacations with pay, etc., a 9-cents-per-hour increase for all employes receiving less than 70 cents an hour and an 8-cents-per-hour increase for those receiving 70 cents per hour and more. All piece-work rates increased 15 per cent over the old rate. Union security and checkoff of dues are included.

CONTRACT IN UTAH

Frank Bonacci, Acting CIO Regional Director in Utah, during Brother Morgan's illness, reports consummation of an agreement with the Carbon Dioxide and Chemical Company employes, members of District 50, UMWA, with a 12½-cent increase per hour and other beneficial provisions.

Yelverton Cowherd, CIO Regional Director, reports the strike of the SWOC in Gadsden has demonstrated to this reactionary controlled city that the workers there are awakened and determined to have their rights. This town is known notoriously for its attitude toward union members in the past.

The United Rubber Workers won an election at Master Tire, Findlay, Ohio, with 216 for URWA and 128 against.

The Hosiery Workers met this week in Charlotte, N. C., for the purpose of intensifying their organizing drive throughout the South.

CIO Field Representative Sam Macri reports the signing of a contract at the United Cork Company, South Kearny, N. J., establishing a minimum of 60 cents per hour, vacation with pay, seniority, conscription clause and a general wage increase.

ILLINOIS ELECTIONS

CIO Regional Director Pugh reports the winning of a labor board election at two plants of the Aluminum Products Co., in LaGrange and Lamont, Ill., last month with a victory for CIO of 139 against 52. He also reports the winning of an election by the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers at the Foote Brothers Gear Works, where 800 employes were involved, with a vote of 10 to 1 in UE favor.

The ability to repeat by the UAWA-CIO is demonstrated again in the NLRB election at Chrysler Corporation's Army tank arsenal in Detroit where CIO won by 1645 as against 95.

Labor Day parades throughout the nation showed gains for CIO. In Detroit, the most impressive sight of the parade was the number of Ford workers parading. The same was true in New Orleans. Their parade was such that nearly all the bands were employed by the CIO. In this city Ford workers also paraded, which was the first time in their history that they did so.

Los Angeles, Cleveland and many other cities throughout the country reported successful affairs.

New Auto Union 'Photo-History' Tells Ford Story

DETROIT, Sept. 13—"V-8 Victory," a breezy, picture-laden pamphlet describing the day-by-day history of the UAW-CIO's sensational Ford organizing campaign has just been issued by the union, Richard Deverall, UAW-CIO educational director, announced today.

(V-8 Victory—the Story of the Great Ford Strike of 1941. Published by the Education Department, UAW-CIO, 281 W. Grand Boulevard, Detroit, Mich. 25 cents per copy).

Using reproductions of newspaper headlines, front pages, and union pictures, the publication brings the reader along from January 1, 1941—when Ford's anti-unionism was at its peak — through the history-making April strike to the epochal union shop contract of June 20.

Pictures of union organizing, rank-and-file workers, company and UAW officials and effective strike scenes combine with the newspaper headlines to give the reader a feeling of the true drama of the big labor story of 1941.

Deverall said the "photo-history" has been distributed to every Ford worker in the country. It is the first book of its kind to be issued by the UAW-CIO, and will be of great interest to organized workers in all other industries.

New Songs Give Spirit of CIO

Los Angeles, Sept. 15—Two new songs have been added to labor's repertoire by the CIO Council here—"Sing Out the Answer, Join, and the CIO", and "Defense is Built Upon the Union." The songs were written especially for the Council, the first by Jay Gorney, with lyrics by Henry Myers and Edward Eliscu, the second by K. and G. Bassman.

They were first presented at the Council's Labor Day parade, when thousands of copies of the words and music were distributed to the watchers who lined the city's streets. As the parade marched along, runners went ahead to distribute the words, so that the people could join in by the time the parade reached them.

Both songs have been recorded, and can be obtained by writing the Council, CIO Bldg., Los Angeles, Calif.

Renew Attack On 'Work or Fight'

Washington, Sept. 13.—Renewed demands from local unions here for abolition of "work or fight orders" issued to draft striking workers last June by Selective Service Director Lewis B. Hershey were urged by Sidney R. Katz, state CIO secretary-treasurer.

Katz also urged protests against the tax bill just passed in the Senate and urged demands for carrying out of the aluminum production plan presented to the government by CIO President Philip Murray.

Members to Vote

Denver, Colo.—Members of the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers will vote within the next month on seven amendments to the international constitution as proposed at the union's recent annual convention in Joplin, Mo.

STRIKE'S OVER: Pres. Morris Muster of the United Furniture Workers (seated, center) signs the contract which brought victory to 500 striking Negro workers in three plants of the Spring Products Co. The men gained a 10 per cent wage boost and vacations with pay.

Negro Furniture Strikers Give Real Lesson In Unity

BY HAROLD PREECE

LONG ISLAND CITY, N. Y., Sept. 13—"This ain't Atlanta where a boss can draw a gun on a colored man and make him work for $12 a week. Henry Ford is a bigger man than Sam Marcus, but Henry Ford had to sign up with the CIO."

Tom Williams doesn't make a practice of using strong language. But along with 400 other striking Negro workers of the Spring Products Corp. in this city, Williams feels that men who make furniture for the nation's homes should make enough money to keep their own homes going.

"If we had wanted to keep on starving and being pushed around, we would have stayed down South and sharecropped," Williams told a correspondent of the CIO News last week. "But we are not under the chain gang and poll tax up here. We are members of a CIO union—Local 91 of the United Furniture Workers—and we are staying on strike until we are sure of at least $16 to take home to our families on payday."

And they did, too. For last week, the United Furniture Workers signed a contract with Spring Products that lifted wages and made the union more secure than ever before.

Last week, Marcus, head of the firm, tried to get Williams and Leroy Clark, treasurer of Local 91, to scab on their union brothers. When they refused, the boss drew a gun and told them to "get to hell" off his premises. The two Negro workers walked out of his office, picked up picket signs, and started walking the line.

HEADACHE FOR BOSS

That picket line, marking the second strike in three years at the plant, was a big headache to Sam Marcus. This time, even his foremen and clerks joined the strikers leaving him to run his own typewriters, and his own lathes if he expects any production.

Three years ago, the company sent its finks out to different Negro communities and enlisted young boys—many of them fresh from the South—to work as scabs. Most of these youths saw the lay of the land and signed CIO cards.

"I always thought a strike was just like a man quitting his job because he didn't want to work at it any more," one of these youths, now walking the picket line, declared.

"But when I talked to some of the strikers, I realized that they were mad as we used to be mad back home when we worked all year to make a cotton crop and then saw the landlord take all of the money but a few dollars to run us through the winter."

Shop Chairman John Smith said that "Spring Products hires only Negroes in its shops because they have had less union experience than white workers and can therefore be persuaded to work for starvation wages much easier."

"But the CIO," he continued, "is organizing Negroes who are ready to fight in an American way for an American standard of living.'

The workers made slight gains during the 1938 strike which was slowed up when Marcus had the leaders arrested and jailed on frame-up charges of assaulting "scabs." "We want a whole loaf and not a crust," declared Clark. "We are trying to avoid the trouble we had three years ago, but we are not going to go back until we get the minimum raised from $12 to $16 per week."

QUICKLY ORGANIED

Local 91 came into existence originally as a spontaneous movement of the workers in the Spring shops. They had been discussing organization—and a group of them decided to see the CIO. A delegation dropped in one morning to CIO regional headquarters in New York saying that 300 Negro workers were ready to sign up.

Skeptical officials gave them 350 UFW cards; 250 of them were signed and returned the same day.

Differential!

Flint, Mich., Sept. 13 (FP)—Wages of 83½c an hour established by the UAW-CIO at Standard Cotton Products in Flint for cotton processing compare with 32½c an hour at the West Point Mfg. Co. of Fairfax, Ala., where there is no union in the cotton plant.

Seamen Negotiate On New Pact

New York, Sept. 13—Negotiations for a new contract covering 30,000 seamen were opened between the Natl. Maritime Union, CIO, and the American Merchant Marine Institute here this week.

Negotiations opened with a statement by NMU President Joseph Curran offering to continue ship operation on the old contract if renewal was not completed before expiration time. This offer was made, Curran said, out of the union's concern with the flow of national defense materials. Any agreement arrived at should be retroactive to expiration date, Curran pointed out.

Wage demands were not presented at the first meeting, but the NMU did present a list of demands calling for wiping out certain inequalities now in practice.

Federal Workers Assail Race Bias in U. S. Bureaus

WASHINGTON, Sept. 13—Discrimination in jobs against Negro workers employed by the government, long protested by the United Federal Workers, CIO, the Natl. Negro Congress, and other organizations, was criticized and corrective measures were ordered in a letter from Pres. Roosevelt to all Federal agencies released this week.

President Roosevelt ordered all departments and agencies to "make a thorough examination of their personnel policies and practices to the end that they may be able to assure me that in the Federal service the doors of employment are open to all loyal and qualified workers regardless of creed, race, or national origin."

"It is imperative that we deal with problems speedily and effectively," the President wrote. "I shall look for immediate steps to be taken by all departments and independent establishments of the government to facilitate and put into effect this policy of non-discrimination in Federal employment."

SINCE CIVIL WAR

Describing the letter as "a long step toward ending discrimination" in the Federal service, the Federal Workers pointed out in a radio broadcast that discrimination had existed in one form or another in the government since the Civil War.

The great majority of Negro Federal workers, about 25,000 in all, are employed at low paid and futureless jobs such as running elevators, cleaning, and the like, the UFWA pointed out.

The UFWA broadcast also cited testimony of CIO Legislative Representative John T. Jones on the Marcantonio anti-discrimination bill which would require employers to give Negro workers equal treatment in hiring as evidence of CIO opposition to discrimination against minority groups.

In conclusion, the UFWA thanked President Roosevelt for sending the letter and urged him to make it more effective by issuing an executive order to the same end.

CIO Plan For More Aluminum 'Acknowledged'

NEW KENSINGTON, Pa., Sept. 13—CIO President Philip Murray has received a letter from President Roosevelt concerning the CIO aluminum plan drawn up by the Aluminum Workers of America, AWA Pres. N. A. Zonarich announced this week.

Acknowledging receipt of the plan, called "More Aluminum Today," the President said, "I welcome the suggestions embodied in this program drawn up by an organization representing workers in the aluminum industry, and I am thankful for their sincere desire to be helpful."

REVIEWS OPM'S WORK

In a brief review of what OPM has done and plans to do to relieve the serious problems of aluminum shortage in the defense program, Pres. Roosevelt said he had been informed that the present rate of aluminum production is 600,000,000 pounds a year, "exclusive of secondary production and imports, which will bring the total up to an aggregate of 855,000,000 pounds."

"OPM has made the necessary recommendations for the construction by the government of seven new aluminum plants," the President wrote. "These new plants, together with expanded output in existing plants, will permit production of 1,400,000 of primary aluminum a year."

Imports from Canada will amount to 160,000,000 pounds in 1942, the President declared, and secondary aluminum may account for an additional 225,000 pounds. Proposals for further production facilities are now being considered by OPM, he said.

ALCOA TO HELP

"The OPM has already entered into an arrangement with the Aluminum Company whereby it has agreed to cooperate in the training of technical staffs for operation of the seven new aluminum plants," the President's letter stated. "In addition, programs have been developed for training aluminum workers both within and without the industry.

"The OPM has made arrangements for a Defense Labor Advisory Committee, Defense Industry Advisory Committee, and a government group consisting of a commodity chief and a representative of Army, Navy, Labor, Production and other interested groups."

W. Va. CIO Auxiliaries Hold Confab

Fairmont, W. Va., Sept. 13—The second annual conference of the West Virginia CIO Council of Women's Auxiliaries representing 26 groups, held a two-day meeting here Aug. 29-30 devoted mainly to working out a program for helping build National Defense through improved living standards.

At a trade union conference on the high cost of living held in coopeartion with the Marion County Industrial Union Council, the group discussed rising prices, health and housing; need for free textbooks; and improved transportation as a part of the gas conservation program.

Mrs. Julia Katz, secretary of the National Coordinating Committee for CIO Women's Auxiliaries, reported on the successful functioning of such programs in various parts of the country.

RESOLUTIONS

The conference passed resolutions pledging 100 per cent cooperation to Gov. Neely's State Anti-Profiteering Committee; asking full support to Britain, Soviet Russia and China in their fight against aggression; urging protection of the civil liberties and standards of the American people; asking free text books for school children in the state and recommending that the government institute a nationwide system of socialized medicine.

Mrs. Madalyn Brandon, of Fairmont, was elected president by acclamation. Mrs. Ruth V. Allen was chosen secretary, and Mrs. Lillie B. Thornton, treasurer. Six vice presidents were also elected, and two delegates were chosen to attend the National Conference of Womens' Auxiliaries to be held in November.

Win 12-Hour Walkout In Coast Plant

Los Angeles, Sept. 13—A dramatic victory climaxed the 12-hour strike of CIO workers at the Cannon Electrical Development Co. here—during which pickets withstood a vicious tear gas attack by police and kept their lines intact.

Members of the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, attending a mass meeting called to chart progress of their walkout, cheered an announcement that the company had consented to an NLRB election, guaranteed no loss of pay to the strikers and agreed to reinstate four fired shop stewards.

Settlement followed a five-hour conference attended by UE leaders, representatives of the company, the NLRB and the Navy, whose defense contracts make up almost the entire production of the firm.

Union Education Confab Planned in Tennessee

BY BETTYE GOLDSTEIN

MONTEAGLE, Tenn., Sept. 13—Plans for an educational conference of representatives of all Southern locals of the CIO United Automobile Workers were made at Highlander Folk School this morning by members of the building committee of the Memphis Ford Local and Richard Deverall, UAW-CIO Educational Director.

Deverall spoke to the students of Highlander Folk School and visitors from the miners, clerks, cannery and other Tennessee unions last week. Taking part in the discussion were Memphis Ford workers, who came on the invitation of their fellow worker, Theodore Vanlandingham, holder of the Eleanor Roosevelt scholarship at Highlander this term, and of the Highlander staff, to work out an educational program for their own local with Mr. Deverall.

SLATED FOR MEMPHIS

The Conference is to be held at Memphis before the first of November. Representatives from Atlanta, Louisville, Dallas, Jacksonville, and other Southern locals will be invited by the Memphis group. Mr. Deverall will speak as will seven other International Representatives. UAW moving pictures will be shown.

The meeting this weekend was part of Highlander Folk School's regular program of weekend institutes held for the benefit of industrial workers from all over the state, as well as for the resident students of the school.

Mr. Deverall's speech yesterday evening stressed the fact that the entire UAW educational program is carried out by the workers themselves. Credit unions, consumers research, ball teams, musical revues, choral groups, art projects, classes in economics and parliamentary law, are organized by the workers themselves and worked out on an extensive scale, without calling in professional assistance.

Only in this way, said Mr. Deverall, can you have real industrial democracy—"when the workers do it themselves." He also stressed the fact that through workers education unionism becomes "more than another ten cents in the pocket—but a whole way of life for the members."

About Time!

St. Louis, Mo., Sept. 13—The convention of the AFL's Intl. Hod Carriers, Building & Common Laborers Union, scheduled here for Sept. 15, should be quite an affair.

It's the first one since 1911.

3,000 Celebrate On Mining Range

Ironwood, Wich., Sept. 13—A crowd of 3,000 iron miners turned out at Piave Park here in the largest Labor Day celebration ever held along the Gogebic range.

Speeches were delivered by John Gerzan, president of Local 1922, Steel Workers Organizing Committee, and by John Sabol, pro-labor member of the Michigan House of Representatives. A baseball game wound up the picnic.

Strikes Shut Southern Hosiery Mills

Charlotte, N. C., Sept. 13 —(FP)—Two strikes which closed mills in Clinton, Tenn., and Wadesboro, N. C., were the initial response of southern hosiery workers to a regional conference held here Sept. 6 to demand a 15% wage boost plus paid vactions.

The managements of the two mills were the first to turn down the proposals of the CIO American Federation of Hosiery Workers and the workers went through with the "or else" provision in their earlier declaration.

The conference here delivered an ultimatum to hosiery manufacturers throughout the South—either raise wages and grant vacations or face immediate strike action.

Miss du Pont Greets CIO In Delaware

Wilmington, Del., Sept. 13.—The first Labor Day celebration in this capital of the duPont duchy in a quarter-century proved to be a 100 per cent success, local CIO officials reported today.

More than 2,500 workers marched in a parade under auspices of the New Castle County Industrial Union Council, and the orderly progress of their procession symbolized the steps taken by CIO to convert this one-time open shop into a union stronghold.

BANNERS AND FLOATS

Banners and floats gave color to the parade. At a mass meeting afterwards, the crowd heard speeches by Rep. McGranery of Philadelphia and by Hugh Thompson, CIO regional director in Buffalo. Locals o fthe United Rubber Workers and the Fur and Leather Workers won prizes for the best entries.

In a letter to the council, Miss Zara duPont, Cambridge, Mass., liberal, pro-labor offshoot of the big industrial monopoly family, offered regrets at inability to attend the meeting in her home town. She expressed, however, "deep admiration for your courageous efforts to organize in the face of powerful opposition."

FEW OPPOSE PROGRESS

Miss duPont added that a few people "place their profits above everything else in the world. They oppose every progressive move . . . and always on the ground that it will break up the family, destroy religion, and deliver the country to red ruin and anarchy.

"They said it about the eight-hour day, they said it about free education in the public schools, they said it about equal rights for the Negro and for women. They have said that . . . and more . . . about the CIO."

Big Parade In New Orleans

New Orleans, La., Sept. 13—Six thousand union members marched down historic Canal Street here last Monday with flags and banners flying, in the CIO's first Labor Day parade in this city. The event will go down in Louisiana labor history as one of the most powerful demonstrations of labor ever held in New Orleans.

Marching six and eight abreast, the CIO columns, representing 24 local unions, stretched down the street for 20 blocks. Outstanding among the colorful floats, many of which equalled or excelled those of the famous Mardi Gras, were those of the National Maritime Union and the United Tobacco Workers, according to F. C. Pieper, CIO regional director.

WIDMAN, KRZYCKI SPEAK

After the parade Michael Widman, CIO assistant director of organization, and Leo Krzycki, vice president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, addressed a mass meeting held on the banks of the Mississippi river.

The AFL, which had held no parade of its own in the city for 15 years, also marched but were forced to parade under the banners of the CIO which were strung along the entire length of Canal Street. The AFL contingent was far smaller than that of the CIO.

Strike Shuts 'Captive' Mines

WASHINGTON, Sept. 20 — Refusal of the owners of captive coal mines throughout the Appalachian area to meet United Mine Workers demands for a union shop today had forced a strike of 44,000 men and shut down the mines.

The captive mines are wholly owned by steel companies, and their entire production is used in the manufacture of steel.

UMW Pres. John L. Lewis pointed out that there is no reason "for affording the steel companies any different form of agreement than has been given to all the rest of the coal industry."

THREE CHEERS: Striking workers at the New York Gimbel's store looked mighty pleased as they ended their three-week strike and went back to work on a 5-day, 40-hour week basis. The strike, called by the CIO United Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Employes, was settled in negotiations in which union and national CIO leaders participated.

Steel Union In Parleys With 4 Firms

PITTSBURGH, Sept. 20—Little Steel, long a stronghold of anti-unionism, this week entered contract negotiations with the CIO.

Representatives of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee met with officials of the Bethlehem Steel Corp., the Republic Steel Corp., the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. and the Inland Steel Co. in separate conferences at New York, Cleveland, Youngstown, Ohio, and Indiana Harbor, Ind.

Already certified as sole bargaining agency in more than 30 properties of the companies, the SWOC has gained NLRB stipulations from the corporations that they will sign written contracts with the union.

Chief demands include equalization of wages with those of union firms, the union shop and the checkoff.

Philly Paper Lifts Pay, Averts Strike

Philadelphia, Sept. 20, (FP)—Faced with a threatened strike of 570 editorial and commercial employes, the Philadelphia Inquirer agreed to $50,000 in annual wage increases, a boost in severance pay schedules and 3-week vacations for employes with more than five years of service. The agreement, announced by the American Newspaper Guild (CIO), was expected to be ratified.

Despite merit increases handed out by the management in the hope of preventing the strike vote from carrying, the workers had voted 180 to 163 for strike action.

Under the new management it is understood that the guild will have a big say on how the $50,000 boost will be distributed. Workers earning less than $35 a week will get 9% to 10% increases, whereas those getting more than $35 will receive a 5% boost, guild officials estimated. The ANG demanded a 10% raise.

Seek Better Pay for Sugar Beet Workers

Chicago, Sept. 20—The CIO Cannery & Agricultural Workers union is going to bat to protect the wages of workers in the sugar beet fields of the United States and on the sugar plantations of Hawaii.

The union's sugar beet executive board, representing workers in four western states, met here last week and adopted a program to raise the present wage scale for topping of sugar beets. A resolution addressed to Sec. of Agriculture Wickard pointed out that under the U. S. Sugar Act, he has the sole authority to revise wage scales in the beet labor contract.

District 50 Wins Long Fight, Gets Dow Chemical Pact

MIDLAND, Mich., Sept. 20—(FP)—A 4-year campaign to organize the Dow Chemical Co., one of the biggest anti-labor firms in the industry, ended Sept. 16 with the signing of an agreement by Dist. 50, United Mine Workers. The contract covers 3,750 workers.

Under its terms the infamous Bedeaux speed-up system together with the company's bonus setup were eliminated. An agreement provides 10c to 39c hourly raises, with an additional 5c increase at the end of six months and another nickel raise at the end of a year. The increase will total $1,373,000 annually.

The new hourly minimum is 75c. Other terms of the contract include the check-off, improved vacations, seniority and a shop steward system.

The firm has a long anti-union record. It lost a tussle with the NLRB when a U. S. circuit court of appeals last February upheld a board order for reinstatement of 25 fired unionists with $112,000 back pay. The court was unimpressed with the argument that firing of workers said to be planning a sitdown strike is justified.

The Court also upheld that part of the board order calling for dissolution of the Midland Chemical Mine Workers Assn. No sooner had the firm complied than a new company union setup appeared, the Bro. of Dow Employes. The new stooge outfit was formed last spring shortly after the UMW intensified its drive at the plant.

WON POLL

The drive was successful and the UMW won an NLRB election in July by 1,572 to 1,318. Negotiation of the UMW pact followed.

Commenting on the agreement, UMW Rep. Martin Wagner said: "This contract represents one of the major milestones in the organization of the chemical industry."

Union Shop Sought at RCA Wireless

New York, Sept. 20—Demands for a union shop and "substantial wage increases" were placed before officials of RCA Communications, Inc., this week by leaders of the CIO American Communications Assn.

The company, a subsidiary of the Radio Corp. of America, is now operating under an agreement that expires Oct. 31.

ACA Pres. Joseph Selly and Vice-Pres. O. M. Salisbury, who head the union's 10-man negotiating committee, said that granting of the union shop provision "would establish a relationship . . . whereby employe-managment problems may be ironed out with the greatest efficiency and dispatch.

"Our demand for a substantial increase in wages arises out of the rapidly mounting cost of living and the tremendously improved financial position of the company."

The firm, engaged in transmission of commercial messages by wireless and cable, employs 1,200 persons in principal American cities and in Hawaii.

ON THE DOTTED LINE: Negotiators for the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers sign the first contract with Colt's Patent Fire Arms Mfg. Co., one of the oldest gun-making firms in the country. UE won an election last month, and the pact brought wage increases of two million dollars a year. Standing are members of the union negotiation committee. Seated, left to right: Robert Mintz, UE organizer; Vice-Pres. B. F. Connor; Sidney Gunning, local union president; and D. G. Phelps, H. A. Stevens and G. R. Porter, company vice-presidents.

Base Pay Set

Washington, Sept. 20—A 40-cent hourly minimum in interstate truck transportation has been recommended in a report filed with the Wage-Hour administration by the Property Motor Carrier Industry Committee.

If approved, the minimum will raise the wages of more than 70,000 workers employed by some 40,000 trucking concerns.

Strike Shuts Two Hosiery Mills

Charlotte, N. C., Sept. 20—Strikes for pay increases and paid vacations closed down two southern full-fashioned hoisery mills recently, it was announced at headquarters of the American Federation of Hoisery Workers here.

The Wadesboro Hosiery mill, at Wadesboro, N. C., and the Magnet Knitting Mills at Clinton, Tenn., were struck following refusal of the companies to consider demands for a pay increase.

Unemployment Confab Adopts CIO Suggestions

CHICAGO, Sept. 20—Meeting to consider the devastating effects of priorities unemployment, which is spreading distress in a number of midwestern states, representatives of labor, management and several hundred city governments set up an emergency organization here to handle problems growing out of material shortages and curtailment of production.

The conference, called by the mayor of Evansville, Ind., was attended by 1,500 delegates from communities scattered through Kansas, Michigan, Missouri, Iowa, Oklahoma, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Indiana, Illinois, Nebraska and Ohio.

80 FROM UNIONS

Attending were some 80 laborites from 50 cities and seven states. More than 50 came from the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, whose membership is being particularly hard hit by priority layoffs. Others came from the United Automobile, Aircraft & Agricultural Implement Workers, and from AFL groups.

CIO Sec. James B. Carey, who retires as president of the UE on November 1, was labor spokesman at the meeting.

3-POINT PROGRAM

A three-point program won unanimous support from the delegates. It called for:

1. A complete national survey of available materials, and production and labor facilities.

2. All possible steps to avoid serious dislocations in non-defense industries while the survey is being conducted.

3. Allocation of materials with an eye to maintaining local employment at a maximum while industries are being converted from non-defense to defense production.

The meeting called for full labor participation in the regional contract service to be established by Vice-Pres. Wallace, head of the Supply Priority & Allocation Board.

SENTNER ELECTED

Elected to the conference's 7-man continuation committee was William Sentner, UE vice-president from St. Louis, and Fred Johnson of Kalamazoo, Mich., an AFL official.

Carey's speech, one of the highlights of the meeting, stressed the need for full labor participation in all defense production agencies.

"Labor cannot agree that management has the corner on all the brains," he said. "Labor wants and will have its active participation in winning the battle of production in America."

He called for immediate increases in the production of raw materials, and hailed the Murray Industry Council plan as the best idea yet suggested for reaching desired production goals.

Shipyard Union Wins Coast, Gulf Polls

CAMDEN, N. J., Sept. 20—Two major Labor Board elections were won by the Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers this week at San Pedro, Calif., and New Orleans, La., "marking the further rout of the AFL from the industry," the CIO union declared.

"In San Pedro, Local 9 swept the election at the Bethlehem Shipyard by one of the most one-sided majorities in the history of the union," a statement issued at the CIO Shipbuilding Workers Union declared. "In a poll from which the AFL was barred because it could not prove any representation among the employes, the Industrial Union obtained 1367 votes to 67 for no union."

At the Todd-Johnson Drydock in New Orleans, Local 29 defeated the AFL 1060 to 373, the IUMSW reported. Both elections were held Sept. 16.

"For the past four years, during the period in which Bethlehem did not sign agreements with bona fide labor organizations," the CIO union stated, "its San Pedro plant operated under the local's port-wide agreement with other yards, including hiring from the union hall. This oral agreement will not be supplanted by a written agreement."

The victory in New Orleans was the second repudiation of the AFL by the workers in the Todd-Johnson Drydock, subsidiary of the huge Todd Shipyards Corp. As a result of the first election held early last year, Local 29 was certified as sole bargaining agency and signed a collective bargaining agreement which has been in effect up to the present.

Declaring that the results of the second election repudiated the AFL by even a larger majority that last year, Local 29 announced that it would reopen negotiations with the shipyard immediately for a new contract.

N. Y. State Meeting Postponed

Washington, Sept. 20—The convention of the New York State Industrial Union Council, originally called for September 27 and 28, was postponed until a full report could be made to the CIO National Executive Board, on action of Thomas Kennedy, secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers and administrator of the state CIO body.

Describing meetings with "both sides of the controversy" over the convention date, Kennedy wrote to the N. Y. state affiliates that he had changed the original decision to hold the meeting in September after "an exhaustive examination and analysis of all the facts in the matter."

"It is impossible to have such a convention at this time," he said. "To hold a convention with a substantial majority of organizations not represented would, in my judgment, be disastrous and would accomplish nothing."

Kennedy was appointed administrator at the 1940 convention of the national CIO in Atlantic City. Hugh Thompson, CIO regional director in Buffalo, and Gustav Strebel of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers were appointed as co-members of the committee with him.

Burden On Poor:

THE TAX BILL

By JOHN T. JONES
CIO Legislative Representative
Director, Labor's Non-Partisan League

The tax law passed by Congress last week is one of the most unfair in the history of the country. It places an extremely heavy burden on all persons with low incomes, but taxes only lightly the enormous incomes of wealthy corporations and individuals.

In approving these taxes, Congress disregarded every principle of justice and fairness, it disregarded every suggestion for a more just tax system made by labor, and it disregarded even the mildly progressive suggestions made by the U. S. Treasury.

For the first time in our history, individuals earning $15 and married people earning $30 a week will be forced to pay Federal income taxes. Workers and farmers with such low incomes are already paying in indirect taxes about 20 cents out of every dollar they spend. In the present law, Congress is greatly increasing their tax burden not only by imposing direct income taxes, but also by increasing many sales and excise taxes which are paid largely by low-income families.

Congress placed this tax burden on the poor in order to provide special exemptions and loopholes for the rich. This can best be illustrated by a few examples:

1. Both the Senate and the House voted against compulsory joint returns by husbands and wives, and by doing this enabled 150,000 wealthy families to escape paying 300 million dollars in taxes. Then, in order to make up this amount, both houses voted to place an income tax on six million persons earning between $15 and $30 a week. The CIO supported the compulsory joint tax returns.

2. Both the House and the Senate voted extremely light taxes on inherited wealth. As a result, a single person earning $22 a week will pay more in taxes than a wealthy individual will pay on an inheritance of $41,000. The CIO urged much heavier taxes on inheritances.

3. Big-profit corporations received by far the most favored treatment from Congress. Under the excess-profits-tax provisions of the new law, wealthy corporations will be permitted to make a clear profit of 25%, 30% and even more before they begin to pay one cent in excess profits taxes.

The Coca-Cola Company, for example, will be able to clear 42% on investment without paying one cent on excess profits. This is made possible by a special loophole which permits corporations to figure as "normal" profits the average earned in the four years between 1936 and 1939, and requires surplus taxes only on earnings above such so-called "normal" profits.

Without this loophole, General Motors would have to pay at least 42 million dollars more in taxes than it will actually pay. As it is, this corporation will be permitted to make a clear profit of 210 million dollars before it begins to pay surplus taxes. The CIO favored heavier surplus profits taxes.

The extent to which Congress has been shifting taxes from corporations on to the backs of the American people is shown clearly in the minority report on the Tax Bill submitted by Senator La Follette. It shows that whereas in 1920 excess profits taxes provided 45% of Federal revenue, in 1942 they will provide only 7 to 15% of such revenue.

Another illustration of the same trend shows that the total amount of corporation taxes under the 1940 law was no more than the total they paid in 1920, whereas total consumer taxes were three times as much and total income taxes twice as much as in 1920. Under the present law corporations will actually pay a smaller percentage of the Federal tax bill than in 1940, even though the dollar amount will be greater.

These unfair taxes were passed without any serious opposition from the so-called "friends" of labor and farmers in Congress. The House accepted a "gag rule" which permitted only one change in the bill drafted by the committee—and that change (on the compulsory joint returns) was made in favor of the rich.

Later the House accepted, with practically no debate, the Senate provision for taxing six million low income persons never taxed before. In the Senate many of labor's "friends" voted against proposals to increase taxes on wealth while supporting heavier taxes on the poor. Information on the record of congressmen on this legislation can be secured from the national office of the league.

The action of Congress on this bill and the fact that many Congressmen are already talking seriously of a Federal sales tax which will fall heavily on low income will fall heavily on low-income need for greater activity on the part of labor and farmers on tax legislation.

Fairer taxation will be secured only if workers and farmers let their Congressmen know that they will hold to accounting those who impose heavy tax burdens on the poor while protecting the swelling profits of wealthy corporations and individuals.

Vote 40-Hour Week At Gimbel's

NEW YORK, Sept. 20—Employes of Gimbel Bros. big department store here voted overwhelmingly last week for the five-day, 40-hour week when offered the choice between this and a continuation of the 42½-hour week with a $1.50 weekly pay increase.

The balloting on the two plans was conducted in accordance with the terms of a settlement reached between national CIO officials, Local 2, United Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Employes and the company, ending a strike called Aug. 19.

Out of a total of 962 votes cast, 822 were for the plan calling for a 40-hour week and continuation of the present wage rates until June 10, 1942, when the contract may be opened for revisions in pay. Under the rejected plan offering an immediate weekly increase of $1.50, wage discussions were scheduled for Aug. 1, 1943. Terms of the final contract guarantee a union shop.

ISSUE STATEMENT

In a joint statement issued by CIO National Director Allan S. Haywood and URWDE Pres. Samuel Wolchok, the company was commended for its "sound liberal and progressive labor policy and its attitude toward the union and collective bargaining procedure."

25% Boost Asked for Draftsmen

New York, Sept. 20—An immediate increase of 25 per cent in the pay of marine draftsmen employed in U. S. Navy Yards was proposed today by the CIO Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists & Technicians.

In a letter to Sec. of the Navy Frank Knox, FAECT Pres. Lewis Allan Berne charged that "Navy Yard draftsmen are not being paid the prevailing rate of pay, although this has been the pronounced policy of the Navy Dept.

CIO Teamsters Get Pact After 3-Week Campaign

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Sept. 20—Less than three weeks after the first man joined the newly formed transport truck drivers' local of the CIO United Construction Workers Organizing Committee in Memphis, and before the charter was installed, employes of the Dealers Transport Company ratified a CIO-negotiated contract which is believed to be one of the most all-inclusive union agreements in this field in the South.

Some 125 convoy drivers and mechanics are covered by the pact, which provides for the union shop, check-off seniority, steward system, arbitration of disputes when grievance adjustment machinery fails to settle any controversy, ten days' paid vacations, holidays, leaves of absence, military service clause, wage increases, shorter hours, free uniforms and numerous other substantial improvements in working conditions.

WON INCREASES

When the UCWOC launched its drive among these workers in spite of threats from Tobin's Teamsters that any union organized by the CIO would be wrecked, the drivers were receiving only 4½c per mile on four-car convoy hauls, 4c on three-unit trips and 3c when two cars were on board.

They were required to pay $42.00 yearly for a uniform, dropped skids free of charge, enjoyed no seniority rights and were at the mercy of the dispatcher for assignments which would enable them to earn a living annual wage. These men have never before been organized, although the AFL Teamsters have been established in Memphis 25 years.

Led by B. T. Judd of the United Automobile Workers-CIO here to assist Local 903 of Ford workers, and Paul R. Christopher, State CIO Secretary, the workers rallied to join the CIO under the banner of the UCWOC's new Transport Drivers' division, and had held meetings, elected officers and chosen a Negotiating Committee in two weeks from the time leaflets were first distributed, and applied for a UCWOC Charter with more than 100 charter members.

GIRL STRIKERS: Thirteen hundred cigar makers, most of them girls, have been on strike at the Consolidated Cigar Co. and the Siegel Cigar Co. in Camden, N. J., since August 13. Members of the CIO Cannery & Agricultural Workers, they're seeking badly-needed pay increases. Labor groups in Camden are backing up the girls with both moral and financial support.

Seek Union Shop In 'Captive' Mines, Little Steel Firms

WASHINGTON, Sept. 20—No reason exists for "affording the steel companies any different form of agreement than has been given to all the rest of the coal industry," John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, said here in describing the strike of 44,000 UMW members in the captive mines of U.S. Steel and other steel firms.

The strike was caused by the refusal of the steel concerns to concede the union shop as contained in the agreement signed by the union with all other coal producers, Lewis explained, adding that negotiations had been going on since July 5.

POINTS TO BIG STEEL

This refusal, Lewis made clear, originated with U. S. Steel, which employs 27,500 of the miners on strike, and was the reason why other steel companies hesitated to sign the agreement that governs all the commerical mines in the country.

"The steel companies have adduced no reason why they should receive special treatment," he said, "except their own disinclination to sign the commercial agreement. The issue is whether U. S. Steel will conform to the ordinary relationships of the rest of the industry."

PROTECTIVE CLAUSE

The situation has "great potentialities," Lewis said, pointing to a clause in the commercial agreement that allows the UMWA to withdraw its members from the mines in the event it becomes necessary to protect the integrity of the contract. The UMWA "hopes to confine the dispute to its present limits," he added.

The National Defense Mediation Board met early in the week to consider possibilities of settlement, but no recommendations had been made at the time THE CIO NEWS went to press. A plan for putting the miners back to work was offered by Pres. Lewis at one of the Board's meetings, but details had not been made public at the time.

Meantime, a special committee was at work in an attempt to smooth out certain difficulties the companies were reported to be raising about the wording of a Defense Board recommendation.

The strike was 100 percent effective, Mine Workers officials declared, even in those places where the steel concerns had set up company unions. All production from the captive mines, owned by the steel companies, goes directly to steel plants, which are dependent on it for their fuel.

PITTSBURGH, Sept. 20— In four scattered cities the heads of Little Steel this week sat down to negotiate contracts with the CIO.

Climax of years of outspoken anti-unionism, the parleys with the Steel Workers Organizing Committee follow elections and surveys which showed the SWOC had overwhelming majorities in the plants of Bethlehem Steel, Republic Steel, Youngstown Sheet & Tube, and Inland Steel.

Included in the SWOC demands, which had been worked out at a Pittsburgh conference last month, were the union shop, the check-off, elimination of wage inequalities, grievance and seniority systems and other improvements.

Chairman Philip Murray of the SWOC, who guided the union in its long five-year fight for recognition among the four companies, was still recuperating from a midsummer illness and was unable to participate in the negotiations. All four committees were comprised of representatives of the locals to which each company's employes belong, with each committee headed by a national SWOC officer.

NEGOTIATORS

Approximately 170,000 workers are employed by the four corporations, and the National Labor Relations Board has already found that a high majority belong to the CIO steel union. It is expected that the Bethlehem Sparrows Point, Md., plant—only big property of the company where a poll has not yet been held—will vote SWOC in an NLRB poll Sept. 25.

All four companies have signed stipulations that they will nego-

Warehouse Local Wins Strike

New York, Sept. 20—A five-week strike at the Wiz Novelty Co. has ended with a closed shop contract providing wage increases, reinstatement of the regular workers and the ousting of scabs, Wholesale & Warehouse Workers Local 65 announced here.

The pay boost includes a general $4 raise and brings up the minimum from $12 to $18 a week.

WPA to Check Birth Records

Washington, Sept. 20—A nationwide program to accelerate the flow of workers into defense industries by speeding up the issuance of required birth certificates was undertaken by the WPA here this week.

The project will put WPA employes to work checking birth records which are required of most defense workers, since most of them are required to be American citizens and proof must be produced. Requests for such records have been coming in at as high as 1,000,000 a month. According to the U. S. Census Bureau, at least 60,000,000 Americans were not registered at birth.

Support Murray Plan

Pittsburgh, Sept. 20—CIO President Philip Murray's plan for Industrial Councils giving labor representatives an equal voice with government and industry in defense production was endorsed by some 250 delegates to the Lawrenceville-North Side District convention of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee held here early this month.

Delegates also voted to support the tax program proposed by Pres. Murray and urged that the government take steps to curb profiteering and price raising.

Another resolution expressed appreciation to the United Mine Workers and its officers—Pres. John L. Lewis, Vice-Pres. Murray and Secretary-Treasurer Thomas Kennedy, for aid given to the SWOC, which had made it possible to organize half a million steel workers.

Ford Lumber Workers Get Union Shop Pact

L'ANSE, Mich., Sept. 20—CIO unionism spread this week to another section of Henry Ford's industrial empire.

The union shop contract covering 1,500 men in 14 logging camps of Ford jobbers was signed last week by the Intl. Woodworkers of America as the climax of an organizing campaign launched right after Labor Day. Union officials said the pact would break down the last important barrier to complete unionization of Michigan's upper peninsula.

Anxious for the protection and benefits of the CIO, the workers in the Ford camps, where the average wage is 33 cents an hour, signed up in the union almost to a man.

Meanwhile organization of workers in the southern part of Ford's timber empire in Michigan is reported forging ahead.

GAIN CHECK-OFF

In addition to the union shop, the lumbermen won check-off of dues, union camp conditions, job protection and seniority. Wage rates are to be established shortly, and the union is seeking a substantial increase.

Ernest Tomber, IWA Midwest District Council president, said that wages in the Ford lumber camps have averaged only about 33 cents an hour.

"To the workers in the woods, the myth of Ford's high wages has been a myth and nothing more," he said. "But the workers are demanding a real increase in pay and the IWA-CIO intends to see that they get it.

Wage negotiations will be conducted directly with the main office of the Ford Motor Co. in Detroit. Bargaining is already going on there to set the wage scales for the Ford mill in Iron Mountain, Mich.

Wage increases for the 1,400 workers in this mill are for the same scale that prevails in the company's Detroit plants, $7.20 per day. The settlement will have a direct bearing on the scale the wood workers will secure.

Congress Back, May Consider Anti-Labor Bills

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, Sept. 20—Congress will be back at work again this week after a brief recess, with the tax bill, described by the CIO and Labor's Non-Partisan League as "a shocking betrayal of the American people" out of the way and decks ready for action on other measures affecting the welfare of workers and their organizations.

These measures of concern to labor include a series of bills ostensibly designed to help labor by cleaning out "subversive elements," by putting aliens in concentration camps and making it unlawful for them to join unions, by setting up a one-man controlled industrial police force, and similar moves that actually would hamper and restrict unions in their normal activities.

Of these, the Bland bill (HR 5074) is the first to come up for action, with hearings before the Senate Commerce Committee scheduled this week. This bill allows the Federal Communications Commission to revoke the license of any marine radio operator where it finds "reasonable probability that such person is a subversive individual."

POINT TO DANGERS

CIO unions in the maritime industries have pointed out the dangers of this bill, citing the fact that the suspected operator has no protection whatever during the hearings on his right to hold a license—and consequently make a living at his job.

No checks are placed on the hearings under the bill, and only the vaguest definition of "subversive" is given. The Bland bill passed the Lower House last July, without a record vote, and is now being prepared for presentation on the Senate floor.

VINSON AGAIN

Despite CIO's blocking of the original Vinson no-strike bill, the Georgia poll taxer is back with another measure that he openly boasts will apply the technique of the Bland bill to all workers. This bill has not yet been revealed to the public in all its details, but the Congressman is sure it will do what he and his anti-labor backers want done.

Another bill in this group, the Ramsey bill (HR 5035) makes it illegal for anyone "commonly called" a communist, bundist, etc., to be a union member or to be employed by the government. This bill, in effect, makes criminals of union members who may be the objects of common gossip and slander. Its uses against thousands of active union leaders and members would be obvious.

ALIEN BAITING

Alien baiting, another favorite weapon of anti-union forces, is well represented in the Hobbs concentration camp bill (HR 3), the Allen bill (HR 4861) and the Disney bill (HR 5149).

Of these, the Hobbs bill would put non-deportable aliens in concentration camps indefinitely and would deport or jail noncitizens acting in behalf of "any foreign political party or group"—which would include non-citizen members of unions having locals in Canada.

The Hobbs bill has been consistently fought by the CIO since it was presented to Congress over three years ago. It is matched by the Allen bill, which would deport noncitizens belonging to a long list of organizations. Allen, its sponsor, was the author of the original bill to deport Harry Bridges. The third of this group, the Disney bill, combines alien baiting with enforced cooling-off periods by for-

Glass Union Wins Wage Increase

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Sept. 20—Four independent glass companies whose plants have been completely closed by a strike for eleven days, yielded finally this week to the demand of the Federation of Glass, Ceramic & Silica Sands Workers and agreed to a general five cent hourly increase, retroactive to Aug. 21.

Immediately after the settlement was reached the night of Sept. 16, arrangements were made to open the companies plants for operation at midnight, reports Peter J. Vidmar, secretary-treasurer of the union.

The walk-out in protest against the refusal of management representatives to agree to the five-cent raise shut down seven plants of the four companies involved:

Three plants of the American Window Glass Co. in Arnold, Belle Vernon and Jeannette, Pa.; a plant of the Harding Glass Co., Fort Smith, Ark.; a plant of the Adamston Glass Co., Clarksburg, W. Va., and a plant of the Rolland Glass Co., also at Clarksburg.

PARLEYS BROKE DOWN

Negotiations between the union and the independent companies started Aug. 18, breaking down after four days during which the companies steadily refused to agree to the five-cent increase. They offered a counter proposal for an increase ranging from two to 4½ cents an hour for certain groups comprising only about one-third of those employed.

The union flatly rejected this and issued an ultimatum giving the companies until Sept. 5 to agree to the five-cent increase or a strike would be called.

Steps were taken by the conciliation Service of the U. S. Department of Labor to settle the dispute after the workers had been on strike a week, and a conference of union and company officials was held in Pittsburgh, Sept. 15, at the request of the Dept. of Labor conciliator.

The companies continued to hold out the first day, and on the second day offered a three-cent general increase which the union committee rejected. Late that night the company finally gave in completely to the union's original demands and agreed to a five-cent general increase retroactive to Aug. 21.

The increase brings the minimum hourly rate in the independents' plants up to 71 cents an hour.

By Len De Caux

THE WOLF in the story of Little Red Ridinghood was a genius at disguising its intentions as compared with the anti-union employers and their newspaper stooges who are now filling the press with arguments that they are protecting the rights of American workers by opposing the union shop.

They are even trotting out again the old slogan of the "right to work," which originally found favor as a strikebreaking slogan during the first big sweep of CIO organization. But when unemployment spread and the workers really needed the right to work, the slogan was dropped like a hot potato.

Now this slogan is being revived again as the "right to work—without paying union dues."

But anyone with eyes in his head can see behind this propaganda the wolf-teeth of would-be union-busters who want to get the workers at their mercy, by playing off non-unionists against union members and finally depriving all alike of union protection.

WHY all this press hullaballoo on the subject at the present time? There is nothing new about the union shop. It is almost as old as the labor movement itself, and it has proved its fairness and usefulness for decades in many industries.

Well, there was nothing new about union organization when the CIO first launched its big organizing campaigns in the mass-production industries. But when certain major corporations decided on a policy of trying to "stop the CIO," they were able to fill the press with propaganda representing established union policies and procedures as if they were a diabolical and newfangled revolution.

Today the simple background fact is that certain financial interests have dictated to the corporations they control a policy of resisting demands for the union shop and refusing even to compromise on it.

So the anti-labor press takes up the slogans obligingly supplied by the corporation press agents—and a campaign is on to kid the public and the workers into believing that these corporations are patriotically and altruistically resisting a new and dangerous form of tyranny.

WHEN the Federal Shipbuilding & Drydock Co. at Kearny, N. J., refused to accept a Mediation Board recommendation, not for the union shop, but merely for a "maintenance of membership" clause, a terrific propaganda campaign was launched against union shop or union security agreements.

This propaganda is now being revived and intensified to combat the perfectly reasonable demand of the United Mine Workers that the "captive" coal mine companies comply with the union shop procedures in effect in all the rest of the industry.

It is noteworthy that the backbone of the resistance to the union shop for the captive coal mines is the United States Steel Corp., whose subsidiaries employ most of the miners involved and another of whose subsidiaries is the Federal ship company.

It is further worth remarking that the union shop is one of the demands of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee in its current negotiations with the independent steel companies.

WHOEVER else may be kidded by the anti-union shop propagandists, they are certainly not kidding the workers involved where the issue arises.

The justice and practical advantages of the union shop are so obvious to the men and women who work in industry that they hardly need to be argued in a union publication.

One of the most natural and understandable grievances of union members, where the union shop does not prevail, is that they have to carry on their shoulders the hampering weight of non-unionists who profit from improvements won by the union but do and pay nothing to win or maintain them.

The only fair arrangement, it seems obvious, is a union shop under which everyone pays his fair share and no one gets a free ride at the expense of his fellow workers.

The union shop also means relief from a continual struggle for existence against recurring attempts to undermine or split an organization. While the workers thus benefit through union security and the greater bargaining power that comes with complete organization, the industry also profits through improved employe morale and more stable industrial relations.

The term "closed shop" is often loosely used, even in labor circles, as synonymous with "union shop." It is also deliberately misapplied by anti-union propagandists to all kinds of union security provisions that fall far short of either a union shop or a closed shop.

Actually there is a definite distinction between these terms. Under the closed shop, an employer may hire only union members. Under the usual union shop contract, he may hire whom he pleases, but after the worker becomes employed he must join the union.

Tax Bill Lessons

Noting that "millions of persons in the low-income group who were not heretofore taxed directly are going to have to kick in part of their pittance to the government" under the new tax bill, the AFL official press service declares that "it's about time."

The CIO feels differently. It recognizes the need for greater tax income to finance national defense, but it strenuously opposed the provisions of the present bill that place the burden on the pittance of the poor while exempting the war profiteers and the super-rich from paying their fair share.

The constructive proposals advanced by Pres. Murray of the CIO to raise the necessary money from those best able to pay, instead of by lowering lowest living standards, were rejected by Congress.

John T. Jones, CIO legislative representative and director of Labor's Non-Partisan League, reports that this defeat for labor was due (1) to failure of most of labor's friends in Congress to act effectively; (2) to failure of Congressional leaders of both parties to support even the moderately progressive proposals of the U. S. Treasury; (3) to numerous parliamentary maneuvers; (4) to inadequate pressure by labor and other progressive groups; and (5) to effective operation of the big business lobby.

But the battle on the tax issue is not over. New and heavier taxes on the poor are soon to be considered in Congress. The CIO is not going to give up the fight for a fair tax system. But the lessons of the recent defeat must be learned and greater efforts made, if Congress is to change its attitude.

When a fair tax structure is achieved, along progressive lines, then and not until then will the CIO say that "it's about time."

Special Privilege

This is no time to ask for special favors at the national expense, we are frequently told. But that is precisely what the steel companies have done in bringing about the present stoppage in their "captive" coal mines.

The United Mine Workers of America has been extremely patient in dealing with these companies. Although it won the union shop throughout all the rest of the industry some time ago, it permitted the captive coal mines to operate under a temporary contract to allow time for an agreement to be reached which would bring them into line.

It continued negotiating for months with the steel companies until it became obvious that their obstinate insistence on enjoying a preferred status left no alternative but a withdrawal of labor. And even then Pres. John L. Lewis at once advanced proposals to make possible a resumption of production.

The only issue, as Lewis points out, is the insistence of these companies on "holding themselves above the ordinary forms of procedure established in the industry."

The union, he says, can see no reason why it should offer the steel companies "any different form of agreement than has been given the rest of the industry"; and they on their part have advanced no logical reason for such "special and favored treatment."

The financial interests that have dictated the companies' present fight for special privilege are placing anti-union "principles" ahead of national defense. That is how the situation stacks up.

Seamen Get Hungry Too

Why is a jobless seaman any less out of a job than any other unemployed worker? The answer is obvious: he isn't.

Why then are seamen discriminated against, by being excluded from the benefits of unemployment insurance which cover all other major industrial groups?

The seamen know of no good reason for this, and neither does the CIO. At its last convention, the CIO declared that "the exemption of seamen has no logical basis" and called for passage of an unemployment insurance bill for seamen.

Hearings on such a bill (HR 5446, introduced by Rep. Schuyler O. Bland) are scheduled to begin on Sept. 30, and it is being backed by all the CIO marine unions, as well as by the CIO itself.

The maritime workers need the support of labor generally to win passage of this bill. They urge all unions to pass resolutions and send letters on behalf of unemployment insurance for seamen to their own Congressmen and to Congressman Bland, chairman of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee.

It's Here! THE NEW 1942 WILLYS AMERICAR

A car for the people!

PRICED FOR THE MILLIONS—GOOD ENOUGH FOR THE MILLIONAIRE

FOR OVER TEN YEARS, since all "used-to-be" lowest-priced cars began to go "high hat", with showy, oversize bodies, extra cylinders, and needlessly increased horsepower, there has been no one strictly people's car, designed to furnish dependable transportation at lowest cost.

Now the pendulum has swung the other way. Under present defense-time conditions, people with ordinary incomes don't want to pay for unnecessary "show-off" features.

And they don't have to. For, to meet these extreme conditions, there is once again a strictly people's car—a low-price, full-family-size quality car that those who make $20, $30, $40 a week and even more can really afford to own and drive.

It's a smartly styled car, with a new, luxuriously equipped and tailored interior. It performs like a dream and already holds amazing world's records in fuel economy and durability.

Rubber Workers Hear Plea To Save U. S. Democracy

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Sept. 20—Calls to American labor to take aggressive action in defense of democracy highlighted the early sessions of the sixth annual convention of the United Rubber Workers of America, CIO, in this city.

In a stirring address, CIO Organization Director Allan S. Haywood lashed the "brutal, beastly aggression" of Hitler. Haywood urged the delegates to drive forward to build and strengthen their organization because "a strong labor movement is the best guarantee we have to preserve our liberties."

CIO FOR DEFENSE

The CIO leader emphasized that the "CIO is for defense—absolutely," in contrast to industrialists who have "taken advantage of the nation's effort to defend themselves" and to amass huge profits.

Haywood demanded that labor's rights be properly maintained during the defense emergency and that labor be given more representation in defense agencies.

"There's got to be organized planning for national defense," he told the convention. "It can't be done by the employers alone—they will commit hari-kari and take the nation with them!"

Drew Pearson and Robert Allen, newspaper columnists, drew Haywood's fire for recent stories on the CIO. "Here and now I brand these two gentlemen as liars," the stocky Yorkshireman declared, as he documented his case against the writers.

DALRYMPLE HITS NAZIS

Pres. S. H. Dalrymple of the rubber union, endorsed Pres. Roosevelt's "shoot on sight" orders and declared: "I am confident when I do this that I speak the sentiments of the United Rubber Workers as a whole."

"The Nazi drive is a threat to our democratic institutions and our democratic way of life," the veteran president declared. "We will do everything possible to destroy the Hitler machine."

"We are doing it solely to protect our democratic way of life," he emphasized. "We oppose all forms of totalitarian government. I say this without reservation because I know I speak for the overwhelming majority of the members of the URWA and the CIO."

Vice-Pres. Thomas F. Burns, senior labor consultant in OPM, told the convention that he would not be a candidate for re-election.

HILLMAN SPEAKS

Sidney Hillman, associate OPM director, praising the record of the URWA in building a strong union of 82,000 members in six years and its cooperation in the defense program, warned the delegates:

"At this moment, both our cause and our country are imperilled by the world threat of Hitlerism. It is a challenge more menacing than any we have ever faced before."

Hillman pointed to the fate of trade unionists in Norway and other Nazi-conquered countries and called upon his listeners to "dedicate themselves to the cause of freedom."

"Now is the time to win the war," he said. "If we allow the British, Russian and Chinese forces to go down to defeat today we in the Americas would be left with only a small fraction of the potential manpower available to the Axis alliance. Our whole creative power and energies would have to be spent in forging barriers of steel and concrete to safeguard this vast hemisphere. We would be an armed camp—not for one year or for two years or for several years—but for decades."

MEMO TO ROY HOWARD: Members of the American Newspaper Guild, CIO, picketing offices of the Birmingham Post, are reminding heads of the Scripps-Howard chain that the union means business in its demands for $10 increases and the Guild shop. Strike, which has closed the paper, is drawing widespread support from other unions in the Alabama city.

Oil Union Asks CIO Aid Standard Drive

BATON ROUGE, La., Sept. 20—Decision to create a $200,000 organizing fund and invite the CIO to name an organizing director for the oil industry on a similar basis to the set-up in the Ford campaign was unanimously made at the 12th national convention of the Oil Workers Intl. Union here.

The resolution followed a report by Pres. O. A. Knight which stressed the fact that organization of the Standard Oil Co. is the No. 1 job facing the union. The report described Standard as the nation's "one great open shopper" and pointed out that the OWIU can gain a "proper degree of effectiveness" only when Standard's 65,000 employes have been brought into the union fold.

Knight suggested that the all-out organizing campaign be concentrated in five key areas: Bayonne and Bayway, N. J.; Whiting, Ind.; San Francisco or Richmond, Calif.; El Secundo, Calif.; and the Texas Gulf Coast. The union urged appointment of Michael S. Widman, Jr., CIO assistant organization director, to head the drive.

BIG WAGE INCREASES

Addressing the 200 delegates from all sections of the country, Pres. Knight pointed out that through efforts of the OWIU, negotiations for wage increases totaling $156,000,000 will soon be completed.

Dime-an-hour increases were recently gained by Local 210, Hammond, Ind., Knight said, "and that 10c per hour has started to spread throughout the U. S. Several companies have given the 10c increase to all off the refineries and some of them have increased the wages 5%. . . . I think through the militant action of this organization an additional ten cents per hour will be brought to all the workers in this nation's oil industry."

Reports from Knight, Vice-Presidents Beers and Kinstley, and Sec.-Treas. E. C. Conarty showed the CIO oil workers organization to have made considerable progress during the past 12 months. In a 10-month period, the reports revealed, the union has won 64 new contracts covering 15,000 oil workers who previously had not enjoyed the benefits of industrial unionism.

A major accomplishment of the union was to halt efforts by the big companies to extend the work week from the 36-hour level first gained in NRA days, to 40 hours.

"We as an organization have determined that we shall not attempt at any time to take advantage of national defense in order to promote our own welfare," Pres. Knight told the convention, "by the same token we are determined that the industry shall not take advantage of the national defense program to retard our progress, to take away our conditions or to make employment scarce in this oil industry of ours."

In his speech the union official devoted considerable attention to the recent "artificial shortage of petroleum and petroleum products on the East Coast." A study by the OWIU showed, he said, that behind the "shortage" lay the hopes of Standard Oil to get permission for a long-refused pipe line from the Gulf of Mexico through many southern states to Norfolk, Va.

QUESTIONS "SHORTAGE"

At the same time he questioned need for our transferring oil tank ships to the British Empire when England and the Dominions "have 500 tanker vessels, a goodly number of which are being used by the oil companies to carry on 'business as usual' and for the profit of British-owned and British-controlled oil companies."

The union's opposition to the proposed pipe lines (which defense officials in Washington last week refused to sanction) stems from the fact that they would immediately cause curtailment of jobs among American seamen employed on the tanker fleet; and that in the long run, they will cause unemployment for thousands of Eastern refinery workers without corresponding re-employment in other sections of the country.

Other speakers at the convention included Fred C. Pieper, CIO regional director in New Orleans, who praised the union's recent gains as being in harmony with CIO national progress; and a number of state and city officials.

TO NLRB: Gerald Reilly, Solicitor of the U. S. Dept. of Labor, who was appointed by Pres. Roosevelt to succeed Edwin S. Smith as a member of the National Labor Relations Board. Appointment must be confirmed by the Senate.

Canadian Labor Group Urges More Democracy

HAMILTON, Ont. Sept. 20—Demand that the federal Government outlaw all company unions "as being anti-democratic and pro-Hitler" was voiced by the Canadian Congress of Labor, representing 125,000 workers, in convention here last week. The resolution declared that "open recognition of a company union set-up at Hamilton plant of National Steel Car is distinctly of advantage to the employers and a blow at organized labor."

Other resolutions approved condemned Order in council 7440 freezing wages and not profits to the 1926 level, and steps "on the basis of established procedure for the release of C. S. Jackson, Canadian vice-president of United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers' union and other interned trade union leaders." The convention heard an address by CIO Organization Director Allan S. Haywood.

Support for the 10,000 miners of District 26, Nova Scotia, in their efforts to obtain better wages, was voiced by the convention. Proposals were made for settlement of the dispute without interfering in the internal affairs of United Mine Workers.

Another resolution passed declared that Canada should join with Great Britain "in establishing and co-ordinating all necessary forms of relationship with Russia, to the end a more effective prosecution of the war against Hitler be conducted."

INDUSTRIAL CONSCRIPTION

Conscription "of first, all the material and financial resources of the nation; second, all the manpower of the nation, but that the physical resources of the country be conscripted before that of manpower, so that there may be real equality of sacrifice and the successful termination of the war hastened" was urged in another resolution approved. Request that the federal Government take over the entire banking system "and operate it in the interests of the people of the country," was also made.

President A. R. Mosher was re-elected in a contest with Nigel Morgan, Intl. Woodworkers of America by a vote of 283 to 175.

A. McAuslane, Vancouver, was elected vice-president over George Burt, Canadian director of UAW by 264 to 193. Pat Conroy, United Mine Workers, District 18, was elected secretary-treasurer over Harold Pritchett, secretary Vancouver Labor Council by 281 to 170.

HAYWOOD'S ADDRESS

Declaring that the CIO was "arming America to the teeth, to resist Hitler", Allan Haywood, director of organization for the CIO, told the convention that he hoped no Canadian statesman would object to American labor leaders coming to Canada to work with the CIO.

His statement that he hoped the CIO and the Canadian Congress of Labor would exchange delegates and co-operate in a maximum effort to win the war, was loudly cheered. He had no intention of interfering with the Congress but wanted to find out how best he could co-operate.

Urging the Canadian Government to take greater cognizance of labor, he declared that "if the labor movement was not represented in the British Government, the Germans might be there now. You can't fight unless you have confidence.

UNIONS AND DEMOCRACY

"In the United States we have asked and will continue to ask that labor be given further recognition. It must be allowed to help lead this crusade. Unionism is the bulwark of democracy."

Seek Union Shop At Little Steel

tiate contracts in writing with the SWOC, in sharp contrast with their refusal to do so in 1937 at the time of the famous "Little Steel" strike.

LIST DEMANDS

In its statement of policy adopted Aug. 14 at a meeting of union representatives from the four companies, the SWOC demanded exclusive bargaining rights, the 5-day, 40-hour week and wages equal to those in unionized steel firms.

"SWOC has definitely established throughout the industry its responsibility and ability to carry out its obligations under collective bargaining agreements," the statement said. "In order to further the objectives of true collective bargaining and to permit the SWOC to discharge its obligations under its agreements with the steel corporations, and to avoid any unnecessary stoppages of work or interference with production, provision must be made for:

"A. The establishment of a union shop, wherein management will retain complete authority to hire employes from any source, but that all employes of the corporation must after an initial trial period, become and remain members in good standing of the SWOC.

"B. The corporations shall check-off from the wages of their employes the dues and initiation fees owing to the SWOC which shall be voluntarily authorized by the employes."

BIG MAJORITIES

The NLRB surveys and elections showed these SWOC majorities in the Little Steel sector of the industry:

INLAND—9,590 out of 12,759.

BETHLEHEM (eight plants)—30,995 out of 42,656.

Tory Bills On Docket

bidding noncitizens to represent unions and requiring a 60-day no-strike period in union constitutions.

The Walsh bill (S 4671) authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to set up a special police force for the Navy yards, with no checks on its use. This bill passed the Senate last July and now comes before the House. Only recently the Navy Dept. used armed marines to forcibly remove active CIO members from their jobs in the yards, drawing a protest from CIO Director Allan S. Haywood to the Secretary.

CONCERTED EFFORT

These are a few of the bills and proposals Congressional reactionaries have in storage ready to be pulled out and applied against organized labor. As CIO Pres. Philip Murray pointed out at the CIO legislative conference of July, called to map defeat of the May-Connally proposals:

". . . never in the history of organized labor, at least within my memory, has there been such a concerted effort on the part of certain of our legislative representatives in the Federal Congress to defeat the aims of labor."

CORRECTION

A story in the Sept. 15 issue of The CIO NEWS described a new closed shop contract won by the aircraft division of the UAW-CIO as having been signed with the Consolidated Motors Co. of Detroit. The name of the company was in fact the Continental Motors Co., and the contract was described by Richard T. Frankensteen, UAW-CIO aviation director, as a "model agreement."

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

Six important conventions are taking place this week and next; the United Rubber Workers at Indianapolis, the Illinois state CIO at Springfield, Ill., the Transport Workers Union at New York City, scheduled to begin September 24; the Oil Workers International Union at Baton Rouge, La.; the Marine and Shipbuilding Workers at Atlantic City; and the State, County and Municipal Workers in Lansing, Mich.

The Rubber Workers are holding their biggest convention to date. Highlights of the officers report show a recort of achievement that any union can be proud of. Topping the list of gains during the past year is the increase in membership of 28,000 to a new high of 82,000, with wage gains of more than $22,000,000.

The Illinois state convention is meeting for the purpose of setting up a CIO state industrial union council. The services it can perform to the members in working on legislative problems, coordinating various union activities, and in giving them the protection of a strong, united state organization make its establishment imperative. The setting up of an Illinois council brings the number of state CIO bodies to 29.

The Transport Workers Union meets after a hard and successful struggle to maintain the right of collective bargaining on the New York City subway lines, and can report a more than $5,000,000 increase for its membership. The State, County and Municipal Workers, a union that has a similarly difficult struggle to establish the principle of collective bargaining in the minds of some city and state officials, can also report successes.

The Oil Workers Union is undertaking the biggest job of its career—the job of organizing one of the greatest monopolies in the country, Standard Oil. This gigantic firm has a long record of resistance to union organization. So did Ford, General Motors, U. S. steel, and others the CIO has won contracts from. The Marine and Shipbuilding Workers has completed a year of growth, will lay plans at its meeting for further progress.

CANADIAN LABOR

The convention of the Canadian Congress of Labor, where the writer spoke at Hamilton, Ont., last week, had double the number of delegates present last year. Canadian labor faces all the difficulties that come in time of war, and its just and reasonable demand for more participation and more representation in the war effort should be heard by the government—as it has been heard in England. Full CIO representation was present at the convention, with delegates from a score of Canadian CIO affiliates.

OTHER ACHIEVEMENTS

The Utility Workers have won an election at the Colfax plant of the Duquesne Light Co. in Pennsylvania. The vote was 157 for CIO, 69 for the "independent" and six for no union. R. G. Davidson, reporting from Cincinnati, lists an 87 to 28 victory for the Paper, Novelty and Toy Workers in an election at Franklin, O., another election won by District 50, United Mine Workers at the Standard Silicate Co. in Cincinnati, where the count was 39 to 34, and recognition by card-count at the Farm Co-op Bureau.

In addition, Regional Director Davidson reports that the Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers have won a contract for 250 workers at Time Recorder Co., with a seven to 25 cent pay raise, vacations, and other gains, and the winning of a contract by the Construction Workers with a lumber company employing 250.

WIN ELECTION

The vote for the United Rubber Workers at the Passaic, N. J. plant of U. S. Rubber is a major CIO victory, with 1,460 workers choosing the CIO to 908 for no union.

From the New York area, Regional Director Mosele reports a contract with the Swift Packing Co. at Harrison, N. J., involving 500 workers, two victories for the Steel Workers Organizing Committee in small elections at Newark and Wellington, N. J., and a contract won by Local 293 of the Cannery and Agricultural Workers in the Beth David Cemetery on Long Island.

From the eastern Pennsylvania area, Regional Director Craig reports a 249 to 141 victory for the Wholesale and Retail Employes at a Sears-Roebuck store, a 121 to eight win for District 50, UMWA, at the Bisbee Oil Co., and another District 50 victory at the Pennsylvania Salt Co., where the CIO won by 75 to 55.

Anti-Labor Actions of U. S. Officials Under Fire

WASHINGTON, Sept. 20—Intimidation and arbitrary firing of CIO members in three government departments were protested by Allan S. Haywood, national organization director of the CIO in letters addressed to Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson and Secretary of Navy Frank Knox.

Haywood expressed the CIO's "deep concern" over a number of incidents in which members of the United Federal Workers, CIO, were arbitrarily suspended and fired without any chance to defend themselves in fair and impartial hearings.

Referring to the summary dismissal of Helen Miller from the Labor Dept., Haywood pointed out that customary procedure calls for an impartial body to settle a dispute between union and employer that cannot be settled by mutual discussion. This has been ignored by the Labor Dept., though other government agencies, such as the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Commerce, have voluntarily agreed to such an arrangement in dismissal cases.

"In times such as these," he wrote, "it seems to us essential that unions be granted full democratic privileges. In view of this I request that you reconsider the question of procedure in the dismissal of Mrs. Miller and grant the UFWA a hearing on this case."

He also referred to mass suspensions in the Navy Yards in which workers were taken from their jobs by armed forces, marched through the plant, and turned out at the gates without explanation and without charges.

"The methods under which the dismissals were made were extraordinary and seemed designed to terrorize the employes," he wrote to Secretary Knox. "In some yards, the men were herded together by armed guards, or marines, marched out of the yards and stripped of their badges. The men so dismissed have never been given the opportunity to answer the charges against them."

Writing to Secretary Stimson, Haywood urged a review of the arbitrary dismissal of two leading UFWA members at the San Antonio, Texas, airfield, declaring: "a review of the facts in this case show a continuous series of actions against members of the UFWA" at the field, culminating in the firing of the two CIO men.

In writing, Haywood reaffirmed support of the national defense program and opposition to "any and all subversive interests," pointing out that democratic labor policies by the government would "protect our nation against things adverse to its interest."

BLOCK-LONG PICKET LINE: Picketing members of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers occupied the better part of a city block in New York last week when they demonstrated at the main office of Broome & Newman. ACWA members are on strike at the firm's two plants in Carteret and Asbury Park, N. J., with the latter factory already closed down.

Three Unions Meet This Week

Transit Union To Convene In New York

NEW YORK, Sept. 20—The third biennial convention of the CIO Transport Workers Union of America opens in the Auditorium of Transport Hall, the union's own home in New York City, Sept. 24, after a period of unprecedented activities which held the nation's attention for months.

The TWU won a $5,300,000 wage increase for the employees of the city-owned Transit System in New York this month, conducted several successful strikes in the past year, notably the great bus strike in New York, concluded and renewed many agreements throughout the country, and since the previous convention chartered 39 new locals.

When the TWU was chartered by the CIO in May, 1937, it had a membership of a few thousand in New York City, none of whom were under contract. Since then it has spread to many cities in the United States and its possessions and has written numerous contracts, with employers raising living standards and working conditions of subway, street car, bus, taxi and other transportation workers to unprecedented levels.

$108,000,000 WON

In New York City alone, where practically all passenger transportation workers are in the TWU, wage increases and other benefits secured in the past four years amount to upwards of $108,000,000. The TWU has pioneered in the introduction of paid vacations, paid legal holidays, sick-leave, pensions paid entirely by employers, limitation of working hours and other features previously unknown to transit labor.

The convention will review the activities of the TWU in the past two years and will outline a program for consolidation and building the organization of the future.

In addition to TWU organizational matters, the convention will deal with many national issues and with the problem facing the country because of the international crisis. The convention will make its contribution to the common effort of further uniting the American people for more effective national defense and security.

Many prominent national figures are scheduled to attend as guests and speakers.

State, County Parley in Detroit

Lansing, Mich., Sept. 20—More than 250 delegates representing 164 locals of the State, County and Municipal Workers, CIO, will assemble for the second biennial convention of the union opening here September 24.

Main program of future union action for the delegates to consider will include a drive for full collective bargaining similar to that enjoyed by CIO unions throughout private industry, a campaign for major wage increases in local government offices and agencies, and concentration of organizing drives in industrial communities.

PLAN CHANGES

In addition, the union will work out a position on national defense, will consider removing the present no-strike clause in its constitution, and will plan for a setup of field offices throughout the country.

Abram Flaxer, president, will open the convention, which will be addressed by national CIO officials and leaders of the Michigan government. Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, will speak on the position of the CIO in regard to collective bargaining for government employes

Shipyard Meeting to Review Gains

CAMDEN, N. J., Sept. 20—A year of outstanding gains in membership, wages and improved working conditions for members of the International Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers are recorded in the officers' report which Pres. John Green and Secretary-Treasurer Philip Van Gelder will present to the union's seventh convention opening in Atlantic City, Sept. 23.

The union's income, reflecting the big growth in membership, has doubled during the past year, the report states, and wage increases amounting to $350,000,000 will go to union workers in the next few years under present contracts signed by the locals. The average pay in the industry is now $1 an hour. In 1933 when the union was founded, it averaged 54.9 cents.

Some 200 delegates, the largest number in the union's history, will attend the convention, representing shipyards on the Atlantic, Pacific and Gulf coasts, and in the Great Lakes area. American and British government and labor leaders, including Sidney Hillman, OPM associate director general, and outstanding CIO officials will speak to the delegates.

SPEAKERS

Among those who have indicated that they will address the Convention are Irving Abramson, chairman of the N. J. Industrial Union Council, who will act as chairman in opening the session; R. J. Thomas, president of the United Auto Workers; James Carey, secretary of the CIO; a delegation of British trade union and Labor Party leaders, and Jack Jones of the Welsh Miner's Federation.

Main problems facing the union the coming year, outlined in the Officers' Report, include the question of handling the influx of new workers in the industry, and working out a system of classifications and rates for individual workers, providing for up-grading of the men according to their capabilities.

The report also points out that more attention should be paid to the question of occupational diseases in the industry, and the elimination of health and safety hazards. Another problem is the working out of a comprehensive program to protect shipyard workers when production and employment in the industry begin to decline.

CIO Asks Run-Off Poll At Sikorsky Plant

Bridgeport, Conn., Sept. 20—A run-off election among workers of the Vought-Sikorsky aircraft plant here will be asked immediately, Richard T. Frankensteen, national aircraft director of the United Automobile Workers announced following a Labor Board poll held Sept. 4 in which the UAW defeated an AFL union.

Although it was the AFL that petitioned for the election and conducted an expensive campaign aided at several points by company cooperation, UAW officials said, the UAW won, 1,132 votes to 997 for the AFL. This was a little short, however, of the 1,325 majority needed to obtain sole bargaining rights.

The AFL defeat at Sikorsky, a UAW statement declared, "was a heavy blow to AFL prestige in the eastern aircraft industry and implied rejection of its contract standards as recently exemplified in the contract signed at Hamilton Standard Propeller in Hartford, Conn."

The Sikorsky election, UAW officials said, leaves the CIO'S record unbroken. The AFL has been defeated in every major Labor Board poll in the aircraft and auto industry in the past year.

Connecticut Meeting Dec. 5

New Haven, Conn., Sept. 20—The annual convention of the Connecticut Industrial Union Council will be held Dec. 5-7 at the Hotel Taft here, the executive board decided this week.

BUY BOND: Members of Local 350, CIO Cannery, Agricultural & Packing Workers of America, composed of employes of the British-American Tobacco Company plant here, dipped into their treasury yesterday to buy a $1,000 United States defense bond. In the picture above, Louise H. Rouse, treasurer of the union, gives a check for the bond to Emmitt C. Burke, president of the Consolidated Bank and Trust Company, while Ray Thomason (right), regional director of the CIO, and union members look on. The union was first organized in 1937, and has gained bargaining rights, union protection, and other improvements for its members in the intervening years.

Pact Lifts Pay By Two Million At Colt Arms

HARTFORD, Conn., Sept. 20—One of the nation's most important armament firms—the Colt's Patent Fire Arms Manufacturing Co.—today signed a CIO agreement which lifted wages more than 12 cents an hour over May, 1941, levels, and increased workers' income by two million dollars a year.

The agreement, covering more than 7,000 production and maintenance employes, was signed by Local 270 of the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers. The union was certified as sole bargaining agency following an election last month.

The union and company, in a joint statement, pointed out that "wage increases of from 5 cents to 20 cents per hour have been granted, which, together with the general 7 cents per hour increase negotiated by the union in May, make a total increase of 12 cents minimum received by the employes in the last five months."

MANY IMPROVEMENTS

The pact lifted minimum pay rates by a nickel an hour, and provided for adjustment of piece work rates "to provide a 78-cent minimum for male operators." Other provisions called for arbitration of disputes, a grievance and seniority set-up, two weeks vacation with pay for workers having five years' service and one week for those on the job more than six months.

"The union wishes to stress the friendly, cooperative spirit in which the negotiations were carried on, entirely in keeping with the requirements of national defense," the statement declared.

Back Bill For Seamen's Compensation

Washington, Sept. 20—Support of a bill to give unemployment compensation to seamen was urged by seven CIO unions in the maritime industry through the CIO Maritime Committee this week. The bill, HR 5446, comes up for hearing before the House Merchant Marine Committee September 30.

Seamen are the only major industrial group excluded from unemployment compensation, despite the fact that they are employed at best only eight or nine months a year and cannot get WPA or other relief through their inability to meet residence requirements.

Action on the bill, promised as "a first order of business" when application of the Neutrality Act in 1939 severely curtailed American shipping, has been delayed up until now, the Maritime Committee pointed out, in calling for full CIO aid in getting it through the House.

The Committee urged CIO members to take action by resolutions and letters urging quick passage of the bill, and to forward them to their own Congressman and to Rep. Schuyler O. Bland, chaiman of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, House Office Bldg., Washington, D. C.

Steel Local Proud of New Building

Canton, Ohio, Sept. 20—The new office building of Golden Lodge, Local 1123 of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, has been publicly commended by the City Council as a "marked improvement for the city."

Ground was broken for the $17,000 project on Sept. 9, 1940, with Clinton S. Golden, SWOC northeastern regional director, as guest speaker. The building, two stories high and constructed of brick, contains offices for District Director Mayo and Pres. I. W. Abel of the local, as well as for other officials and for clerks. The hall in the basement is available for parties, meetings and recreation

The building is located only two city blocks from the big Timken plants, and its neon lights can be seen in the entire district.

"The members of Golden Lodge 1123 are proud of the fact that this achievement was accomplished on a pay-as-you-go basis and at no time was there a debt on their building," Pres. Abel said.

CIO Group Raps Bland Blacklist Bill

Washington, Sept. 20—The Bland bill, (HR 5074) designed to revoke licenses of marine radio operators suspected of being "subversive," by the Federal Communications Commission "opens the door to blacklisting of union members and sets a precedent for similar legislation against larger groups of workers," the CIO Maritime Committee said today in appearing before the Senate Commerce Committee to oppose the measure.

The bill "would invite a little gestapo to operate—to charge operators with being unAmerican, subversive, suspected of being either," and would "place the lives and the earning power of radio operators in the hands of the FCC entirely and would allow the discharge of an operator or revocation of his license on suspicion or belief without proof of charges of any sort," the Maritime Committee said.

The Maritime Committee's testimony cited the devotion to duty and the heroism of radio operators in a serious of recent torpedoings of American ships as evidence of their high morale and concept of duty, pointing out that a bill barring operators for their opinions or for union activities would break down these standards.

"Labor has long recognized that employers and their agents united in their desire to frustrate the growth of trade unions and prevent collective bargaining have attacked militant trade unionists and labelled them as "subversive" or "communists", the Maritime Committee said.

NEW LOCAL OFFICE: Members of Golden Lodge, Local 1123 of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, Canton, Ohio, are proud of their new office building. Valued at $17,000, it has space for offices and a meeting hall.

Smelter Union Sweeps Key Arizona Poll

DOUGLAS, Ariz., Sept. 20—In one of the most important elections in Southwest history, the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers scored an overwhelming 5-1 victory at the smelter of the powerful Phelps-Dodge mining interests.

The vote:

CIO	512
AFL	80
Neither	32

The city was the scene of a gigantic celebration as the triumphant CIO smelter workers marched down the main street in a great parade. The company, the most powerful in Arizona, has for a quarter-century been a bulwark of anti-unionism.

In the days leading up to the election the company and the AFL filled the air with rumors designed to intimidate the workers and keep them from voting CIO.

Predicting victory on the eve of the election, the CIO union's Intl. Rep. Orville Larson pointed out that the Phelps-Dodge workers "are not forgetting that time after time the AFL has betrayed them in their previous attempts to organize a union in the smelter . . . they are determined to lead the way towards organization of the entire state, and to break forever the attempts of the Phelps-Dodge Corp. and the AFL to ram phoney unionism down their throats."

Charter Film Office Employes

New York, Sept. 20—The CIO United Office & Professional Workers of America has chartered a local union of clerical, professional and related employes in the motion picture industry, it was announced today by Sec.-Treas. John Stanley.

The new local will be known as the Screen Office & Professional Employes Guild, Local 109, UOPWA. It was chartered upon application of the officers of the former Columbia Film Office Workers Guild, whose members voted unanimously at a recent meeting to seek CIO affiliation.

Stanley pledged to the Columbia employes the UOPWA's "wholehearted support and cooperation in completing 100 per cent organization of your office, in extending organization to other offices in the film industry and in winning for all office and professional employes the fruits of genuine collective bargaining."

Drive Speeds Among Book Publishers

New York, Sept. 20—Steady progress in organizing the New York book publishing industry was reported today by the CIO Office & Professional Workers, as it announced the signing of a contract with one publishing house, negotiations with a second and the settlement of a strike at a third.

Grossett & Dunlap, reprint book publishers, has signed an agreement granting a 12½ per cent wage increase, the five-day week and severance pay, it was announced by Jane Benedict, executive secretary of the Book & Magazine Guild. Negotiations looking toward recognition of the union in the shipping department of Prentice-Hall & Co. are already in progress.

The Guild's strike against Book Publishers' Shipping Service, joint shipping office run by Harpers', Dodd-Mead and Farrar & Rinehart, was settled with an agreement for an NLRB election to determine the proper collective bargaining agency.

Big Raises Won at Trona

TRONA, Calif., Sept. 20—Employes of the foreign-owned American Potash & Chemical Co., located in this desert town, today had a chance to appreciate the benefits of CIO unionism.

Members of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, they kept up their picket lines for four months despite attempted strike-breaking by an AFL outfit and hysterical anti-unionism in some government and newspaper circles. The men went back to work some weeks ago, and these are the dividends of their recently signed contract:

1. Wage increases of 10 and 15 cents an hour, with the minimum zooming from 62½ cents to 78 cents.
2. Job reclassification which have lifted many rates of pay by 20 and 25 cents an hour.
3. Two weeks' vacation with pay, excellent grievance and seniority machinery, and improved safety conditions.
4. Joint control by the union and company of the retail stores in the company-owned town, and agreement by the corporation to construct 106 badly-needed family dwellings.

CIO Pickets Plants of Rubber Firm

New York, Sept. 20—CIO picket lines today encircled two plants of the Julius Schmid Rubber Co.

Some 400 employes of the company's plant at West Paterson, N. J., went out on strike Sept. 12 after the company fired several members of Local 65, Wholesale & Warehouse Workers Union, and called a meeting to form a company union. The strike of 100 persons at the firm's New York City plant followed three days later.

Organization of the Jersey plant was begun by Local 65 after the company had refused to bargain in good faith with the union for a contract to cover the New York employes. Local 65 had previously been certified by the National Labor Relations Board as sole bargaining agency.

No Buckeye Strike

A story in the last issue of The CIO NEWS gave the erroneous impression that the Cannery & Agricultural Workers are conducting a strike at the Buckeye Cotton Oil Mills, Memphis. Tenn. The union is conducting a fight for recognition at the plant, and has rallied mass support to its cause, it was pointed out at the union's national office.

CIO CONVENTION IN DETROIT

Rap Curb On Strikes In Canada

TORONTO, Ont., Sept. 27—Passage of an Order-in-Council which President A. R. Mosher of the Canadian Congress of Labor—to which Dominion CIO unions are affiliated—described as virtually abolishing the right to strike, held the attention today of workers throughout Canada.

Not affected by the new order is a walkout of 4,000 employes at the St. Catherines plant of McKinnon Industries, a General Motors subsidiary. The strikers held their ranks solid in the second week of the dispute despite a company sponsored back-to-work movement which was aided by a newspaper propaganda campaign and the presence of several hundred members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Charges made by Munitions Minister Howe that the strikers had been dragooned into striking fell flat when only 200 entered the plant after his appeal, and this number dwindled soon afterwards.

Most of the McKinnon strikers are members of Local 199, UAW-CIO, and they are asking wage increases promised a long time ago.

LABOR NOT CONSULTED

Labor was not consulted about the new Order. It forces unions to go through the protracted stages of industrial inquiry commissions, conciliation boards and review board. Then, if workers in a plant want to strike, they cannot do so until the Department of Labor comes in and holds a vote. Those who don't vote will be considered as having opposed the strike.

The minister of labor determines what employes vote, and if he decides to lump in the office workers in many plants, collective bargaining will be frustrated.

"The government has demonstrated once again," said CCL Pres. Mosher, "its inability or unwillingness to understand the purpose and function of the labor movement, and the basic principles which should underlie relationships between employers and workers.

"Since this Order-in-Council imposes still further restrictions upon rights which have been won by workers after generations of struggle and sacrifice without providing any means of removing the causes of industrial unrest, it will have the effect only of hindering the war effort.

CIO STAR: Hollywood talent scouts got an eyeful of pretty Lorraine Miller — whose father is a member of the CIO auto union in Flint, Mich.—and signed her up for a movie contract. Union members picked Lorraine as Queen of the Flint CIO Rodeo last January; the prize was the lucky trip to the film capital.

Packers Lose Wage Suit

Chicago, Sept. 27—(FP)—A ruling which may mean $5,000,000 back pay for 130,000 employes of the Big Four meat packers was handed down in federal district court here by U. S. Judge Michael Igoe.

Upholding the Wage-Hour Division in its case against Swift & Co., Igoe ruled that the 14-week seasonal exemption from the overtime provisions of the Wage-Hour Act does not apply to the 5,000 workers in Swift's local packing plant.

Only employes engaged directly in the slaughtering, handling and dressing of livestock and poultry are affected by the seasonal exemption, the court ruled.

The CIO Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee intervened in the suit with claims for 61,000 workers who failed to receive their overtime pay because of Swift's interpretation of the seasonal exemption clause.

Many CIO Affiliates Meeting

Washington, Sept. 27 — A number of CIO national unions and state councils were meeting in convention this week, reviewing past gains and pressing forward to new organizational goals.

The United Rubber Workers, reelecting Pres. S. H. Dalrymple, discussed plans for unionization of three hitherto unorganized sections of the industry.

At Baton Rouge, La., the Oil Workers Intl. Union decided to raise $200,000 for a joint drive with the CIO to bring industrial unionism to the 65,000 employes of Standard Oil.

Delegates to the parley of the Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers at Atlantic City, N. J., hailed past gains and reiterated their intention of spreading the union shop throughout the industry.

Anti-labor policies of New York Board of Transportation were severely denounced by CIO Organization Director Allan S. Haywood and Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers Union at its meeting in New York City.

At Lansing, Mich., the biennial convention of the State, County & Municipal Workers heard Pres. Abram Flaxer cite numerous instances of anti-unionism on the part of city government officials. He predicted that despite opposition, the union would forge ahead in coming months.

Skyscraper Struck

New York, Sept. 27—Tenants of two large sky-scrapers here had to walk—not ride—to the nearest exit when CIO Building and Maintenance Workers called an elevator strike.

Affected by the walkout—and walk-up—were the 58-story building at 500 Fifth Avenue and an adjoining 38-story building.

The union, which is affiliated with the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee, was certified as sole bargaining agency by the State Labor Relations Board on Sept. 8, after it had won a poll among maintenance workers by a 240-3 margin and among construction workers by a 29-3 majority.

Refusal of the building management to bargain for a union contract precipitated the strike.

Parley To Open Nov. 17

WASHINGTON, Sept. 27—The fourth national convention of the CIO will open in Detroit on Nov. 17, CIO Pres. Philip Murray annouced this week in sending out the official call to all affiliates.

His announcement pointed out that the convention will be faced with an "historic task" at a time when the nation's security is being "threatened" by the forces of "tyranny and oppression, which are stalking throughout the world."

The actions of the aggressors, Murray added, "threaten our democratic institutions and fundamental beliefs."

By convening at Detroit, the CIO will assemble in a city where it made its greatest single advance in organizing the unorganized during the past 12 months. With the Ford Motor Co. now operating under a union shop agreement the entire motor industry, of which Detroit is the capital, is covered by the UAW-CIO.

Organizing progress throughout the city has been rapid and effective during the past year, and the former open-shop citadel is now a stronghold of CIO industrial unionism.

SWOC Wins At Bethlehem In Maryland

Baltimore, Md., Sept. 27—The CIO today scored another major triumph, winning the important NLRB election at the Bethlehem Steel Sparrows Point plant by a 2-1 majority.

The victory makes the Steel Workers Organizing Committee sole collective bargaining agency in all the firm's major steel plants, and is the tenth successive SWOC win in Bethlehem polls. The vote:

SWOC	10,813
Independent	4,198
Neither	731

Bargaining conferences are now in progress between SWOC and Bethlehem and other Little Steel firms. Upon formal certification of the union at the Sparrows Point plant, the workers will be lumped into the Bethlehem bargaining unit and will be covered by any contract worked out.

ILLINOIS CIO HEADS: Here are the officers elected at the big constitutional convention of the Illinois Industrial Union Council at its meeting in Springfield last week end. Seated, left to right: Pres. Ray Edmundson, a district president of the United Mine Workers; and 1st Vice-Pres. Sam Levin of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers. Standing: 2nd Vice-Pres. Robert Travis of the Farm Equipment Workers, and Sec.-Treas. Francis De Lauric of the steel workers.

Introducing the CIO— As Dan Cupid!

MILWAUKEE, Sept. 27—The Milwaukee CIO today played the role of Cupid as successfully as it has filled Santa Claus' shoes on innumerable occasions in the past.

As a result, E. O. Farchenin of Milwaukee not only has a brand new gas stove but a bride to use it.

Farchenin won the stove at the CIO Labor Day picnic. But what good is a gas stove to a bachelor?

With typical CIO resourcefulness, Farchenin acted fast to correct the situation.

Using the fine new stove as a "clincher" argument, he persuaded his girl friend to marry him.

Thomas Scores Auto Industry's Defense Stalling

DETROIT, Sept. 27—The automobile industry has been lying down on the job of helping the national defense program.

That was the accusation made today at a hearing of the Congressional Committee investigating defense migration by President R. J. Thomas of the CIO United Automobile, Aircraft and Agricultural Implement Workers.

So seriously did the industry regard Thomas' charges that a few hours later C. E. Wilson, head of General Motors, unexpectedly appeared before the committee to reply that the public was suffering from a misconception of what large-scale industry can' accomplish.

Both Thomas and Wilson seemed to agree that the OPM was to a large degree responsible for the lag in defense automotive production, but the union leader placed a considerable share of the blame on the profit-minded executives of the industry.

DEVOTED TO PROFITS

Central point in his charges was that the auto industry had refused to interrupt car production in the most profitable year in its history in order to devote more attention to defense needs, and that it had been abetted in this refusal by the big business men holding down high government defense positions.

The Congressional Committee, which is making a study of priorities unemployment, was told by President Thomas that the lag in changing over from non-defense to defense production—bringing with it widespread loss of jobs—could have been greatly averted by better planning.

"Eight or nine months ago we brought these facts to the attention of officials in Washington," Thomas asserted. "We tried to get defense work for the industry then. We have kept close tab and we find national defense work is only a very minor portion of what is being done in the industry."

Thomas made frequent reference to the Reuther plan—devised by Walter Reuther, head of the UAW-CIO GM division—which outlined methods for utilizing idle automobile plant capacity to produce defense goods. The plan, which was officially endorsed by the CIO, was given a brush-off by OPM Director General William Knudsen, who is former head of General Motors, and by other defense officials.

WOULD AVOID LAY-OFFS

If proper steps had been taken, the UAW-CIO leader declared, "defense jobs in the industry would now be more than sufficient to absorb the full complement of automobile workers displaced by curtailment of automobile production."

Instead of using existing plant capacity to turn out defense goods, the auto industry has preferred to have the government finance new factories for it, Thomas added, "and have accepted only such defense orders as might be produced without interference to their 'business as usual.'"

By turning out a tremendous number of passenger cars, the auto industry gained big profits, Thomas said. "But now last winter's 'business as usual' is going to mean 'unemployment as usual' for auto workers."

He pointed out that the OPM, by picking Chicago for a new Buick plant in which to build Pratt & Whitney aircraft engines, was making a "ghost town" out of Flint, Mich., where thousands of Buick employes have been employed.

Attack OPM Finagling On Project

Washington, Sept. 27—Officials of the OPM Labor Division "are making two labor disputes grow where none grew before," leaders of the CIO United Construction Workers Organizing Committee charged today as the government-AFL building trades "stabilization program" tied up construction of new plant for the Blaw-Knox Steel Co.

The company ran into difficulty when it purchased a plant near Martins Ferry, O., for production of goods for the Navy Dept. The firm employs some 3,500 workers under a Steel Workers Organizing Committee contract in its big Pittsburgh plant.

Renovation of the Martins Ferry plant got under way with 300 members of the UCWOC on the job. The job was going smoothly until the business agent of an AFL local in Steubenville, O., protested that only AFL workers should be employed on the job.

TRIES TO HELP AFL

The dispute came to Joseph Keenan, former AFL official in Chicago and now a top man on the staff of the OPM Labor Division, headed by Sidney Hillman. He ruled that under the recently concluded stabilization pact between the OPM and the AFL, the work must be subcontracted to AFL employers.

After protests from the company and the UCWOC, an OPM board of review ruled that UCWOC members should finish the rough work, with the remainder being subcontracted to employers with AFL contracts.

Blaw-Knox was accordingly forced to cancel its contract to the low bidder for the rest of the job, because it was operating under a CIO contract, and informed another company that it would lose its construction contract if UCWOC agreement were signed.

DENY RIGHTS TO CIO

UCWOC officials, who protested vehemently against the "stabilization" agreement when it was announced by the OPM and the AFL, charged that the construction workers' right to choose their own collective bargaining agency, as guaranteed by the Wagner Act, had been abrogated by the deal. In addition, they pointed out that as a result of Keenan's ruling, the cost of renovating the building had been increased.

The UCWOC has further complained that Keenan has tried to prevent awarding of a $979,000 contract for pre-fabricated homes for defense workers in a midwestern city to a concern which employs CIO workers despite the fact that the firm's bid on the job was $400,000 less than the next nearest bid.

Rubber Union Maps Drive In Three Fields

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Sept. 27—Reaffirming its position of "100 per cent support of the CIO under the capable leadership of Philip Murray," the sixth annual convention of the United Rubber Workers, CIO, closed here with instructions to the union's officers to press aggressive drives in three fields.

Named as the "outstanding problems" for 1941-42 are successful mopping up in the Goodyear plants (where contract negotiations are now under way in three big plants), the rubber boot and shoe industry and the allied products industry, covering floor covering, plastics and related products.

In line with its oft-repeated support of Pres. Roosevelt's policies, the union unanimously endorsed the Administration program of support to all countries fighting Hitler, emphasizing that it was done solely "in the interest of maintaining our own democratic way of life" and reiterating the union's opposition "to all totalitarian dictatorships."

HIT ATTACK ON LABOR

By unanimous vote the delegates also condemned the use of troops in strikes and lashed at legislative attempts to curb labor's right to strike.

A program to protect labor in the operation of the rubber priorities program was outlined in another resolution. It calls for gradual establishment of priorities in proportion to provision for employment of displaced workers in other employment.

In the event of layoffs, workers would be paid severance pay until unemployment insurance benefits begin.

Opposition to anti-Negro discrimination was voiced in another resolution which instructed the URWA officers "to use every effort to break down racial discrimination in the plants."

SEEK NATIONAL PACTS

The way toward future national agreements with the Big Four in rubber was opened with adoption of a resolution ordering URWA officers and representatives "to promote and bring about joint negotiations on contracts between various local unions representing the employes of the same company, and to promote joint negotiations between other groups of local unions that have common interests."

The Murray Industrial Council plan was endorsed by unanimous vote, the convention voting "to promote it in every way." Pending adoption of the Murray Plan, the delegates voted approval of the Labor Defense Advisory Committees of OPM.

Pres. S. H. Dalrymple, president of the URWA since its inception, was re-elected by acclamation. L. S. Buckmaster, president of the Akron Firestone local, was named vice-president, to take the place of Thomas F. Burns, OPM labor consultant, who announced his retirement from office early in the convention. Frank Grillo, veteran secretary-treasurer, was also re-elected.

Serving on the General Executive Board for the coming year will be: H. H. Wilson, Los Angeles; Fleet Perrine, Akron; Thomas F. Burns, Chicopee Falls, Mass.; Walter J. Welsch, Newark, Ohio; Wm. Abel, Indianapolis, Ind.; George Cummins, Mishawaka, Ind.; W. I. Vaught, Akron, and Jos. Sebald, Butler, N. J.

Pledge $200,000 For Standard Oil Drive

BATON ROUGE, La., Sept. 27—Delegates to the Oil Workers Intl. Union's 12th convention returned to their homes today after laying definite plans for the conduct of a $200,000 joint organizing campaign with the CIO.

The convention, after hearing a number of speakers stress the importance of organizing the vast Standard Oil properties—which employ some 65,000 workers—voted an assessment to finance the organizing drive. The delegates unanimously requested that Michael F. Widman. Jr., CIO assistant director of organization, be appointed director of the campaign.

Widman, who directed the recent Ford Organizing Campaign, warned the delegates that "either you prepare to organize the unorganized in your industry, or, when this national defense program is over, the unorganized are going to give you an awful licking in your wage standards and in your present working agreements."

BRING STABILITY

Asserting that "if strikes come in the oil industry because of our campaign, it will be because of the stupidity on the part of the employer," Widman declared the effect of unionizing the industry will be industrial stability.

"We are going to be a stabilizing influence in the oil industry by making labor costs comparatively equal in all of their refineries and fields. We'll help them to help themselves—if they are smart enough to see it."

Earlier the convention had heard Pres. O. A. Knight accuse the oil companies of responsibility for the so-called eastern gasoline shortage, which he said sprang from their greed for higher prices. The delegates, in support of his recommendations, passed a resolution demanding full labor representation on all regional Oil Conservation Boards.

SUPPORT PRES. MURRAY

In other resolutions, the OWIU pledged support to CIO Pres. Philip Murray and to the national defense program; urged legislation to increase soldiers' pay to $60 a month; voted support of the victims of the Richmond, Ind., police frame-up case; and reasserted its firm belief in the union shop "as a means of protecting our gains from encroachment by connivance of the enemy."

Telegrams of greetings and support from CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Pres. John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers were read to the delegates.

The union's Ladies' Auxiliary also conducted its convention during the week.

Strike Shuts Intl. Shoe Plants

Manchester, N. H., Sept. 27—The powerful International Shoe Co. today had entered negotiations with the CIO-United Shoe Workers organizing committee for settlement of a strike of several hundred workers at the company's eastern plants here.

The company, which operates numerous factories throughout the midwest, is one of the targets of a special organizing campaign started several months ago under the direction of CIO Organization Director Allan S. Haywood and Walter Harris, head of the drive.

Steel Union Registers New Gains

PITTSBURGH, Sept. 27—CIO's historic negotiations with "Little Steel" today were nearing the end of their second week, while the Steel Workers Organizing Committee reported major gains on a far-flung front.

Leaders of the SWOC are meeting with Bethlehem, Republic, Youngstown and Inland in separate conferences at New York, Cleveland, Youngstown, O., and Indiana Harbor, Ind. The union is asking for sole bargaining rights, the union shop, check-off and equalization of wages with firms already under contract.

In Baltimore, meanwhile, the SWOC easily won a Labor Board election at the huge Sparrows Point plant, making it the tenth of the company's major properties to be covered by the contract when it is finally signed.

Other developments in steel:

1. A five-year organizing drive ended successfully at the J. A. Roebling Co., Trenton, N. J., where a contract covering 5,100 workers in two plants was signed by the SWOC. A two-week strike shut down the plant early this summer, and in a subsequent NLRB poll the union gained a 2-1 majority.

2. The first "white collar" contract in the steel industry, covering 1,700 office workers of the National Tube Co., a U. S. Steel subsidiary, lifted wages $17 a month for all persons receiving less than $4,000 a year. The pact covers white collar workers in company's plants at McKeesport and Ellwood City, Pa., and at Lorain, Ohio.

3. A circuit court order which sealed the coffin of a company union bolstered the SWOC's organizing drive at the Rockefeller-owned Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., Pueblo, Col. The SWOC lost an election among the plant's 5,700 workers last March in the midst of confusion over the status of the 25-year-old Employes Representation Plan and the lack of a final decision by the NLRB that it be dissolved.

With the court upholding the Board's subsequent order, SWOC Representative H. A. Rasmussen announced that "we have already held conferences . . . to formulate a procedure whereby we would prove that a great majority of the company's 5,700 employes are union members and wish to be represented by the SWOC."

Kansas CIO Hails Work of Murray, Lewis

Wichita, Kan., Sept. 27—A hundred delegates, representing 50,000 CIO members in Kansas, met here last week for the annual convention of the state's Industrial Union Council.

The convention voted unanimous approval of the program of CIO President Philip Murray and commended both Murray and former CIO President John L. Lewis for providing the "inspiration back of the great, almost fabulous benefits that the CIO has brought to the workers of this country."

"The sterling, far-sighted and patient leadership of John L. Lewis is the living symbol for the millions of happy homes and the contentment of the millions of industrial workers," the resolution added, and "Philip Murhay, his successor, has continued to carry out the basic policies established by John L. Lewis, with like results."

Other actions of the convention called for a $60-a-month pension for all workers over 60; medical care for those unable to afford it; extension of workmen's compensation laws to include those suffering with occupational diseases, and liberalization of the unemployment compensation law.

Re-elected unanimously to office were the council's three leaders; President Henry Allai, of the mine workers; Vice-President Steve Hanes, of the oil workers, and Secretary-Treasurer C. N. Stover, of the steel workers.

Murray Announces Call For CIO Convention In Detroit Nov. 17

BARBERS CUT LOOSE: Members of the CIO Natl. Barbers & Beauty Culturists Union called a walkout in New York City to force their wages up from present starvation levels. Some 8,000 barbers and manicurists are out.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 27—The fourth national convention of the CIO will take place in Detroit, beginning Monday, November 17, President Philip Murray announced today. The convention takes place at a time when "the dangers to our nation demand a national unity of all sections of the population who value the security of our country," the call declared.

Convention headquarters will be located in the Hotel Statler, while the sessions will take place in the Moose Hall, about 3½ blocks from the hotel. A meeting of the CIO Executive Board has been called for Saturday, Nov. 15.

The Moose Hall will have seating capacity for the expected 1,000 delegates as well as for approximately 3,000 visitors.

The call declared:

"The Congress of Industrial Organizations is confronted with a historic task. The security of our nation is being threatened. Tyranny and oppression, which are stalking throughout the world and which through acts of brutal aggression have submerged nation after nation and subjected millions of people to abject slavery, threaten our democratic institutions and fundamental beliefs."

DANGERS TO U. S.

"More than ever the dangers to our nation demand a national unity of all sections of the population who value the security of our country and who are determined that our democratic forms and fundamental liberties shall not perish."

The call also pointed to the achievements of the CIO in organizing the unorganized as the best protection for economic and political democracy, declaring:

"The Congress of Industrial Organizations has continued to march onward organizing the unorganized workers in the mass production and basic industries thereby fulfilling for American workers their aspiration for economic and political democracy.

"The CIO must continue to assert its rightful leadership in the consideration and formulation of policies in regard to the important questions which today confront the American people."

The call cited the CIO constitution on representation at national conventions, which gives two delegates to unions with up to 5,000 membership and on up to 10 for unions with over 200,000.

Local industrial unions and councils are entitled to one delegate each. Per capita taxes must be paid up to within two months of the convention date.

Resolutions, appeals and constitutional amendments to be considered by the convention must be sent to the Secretary of the CIO not less than 10 days before opening date.

Murray Hits Wage-Curb Plan

WASHINGTON, Sept. 27—Opposing attempts to freeze wages in connection with price control and pointing out that wage increases are not responsible for current price rises, President Philip Murray today asked the House Banking and Currency Committee to hear a spokesman from the CIO at its present inquiry into proposed price-control legislation.

Murray's letter, addressed to Rep. Henry B. Steagall, committee chairman, charged that price increases came "out of profiteering, out of special material shortages, out of hoarding and speculation, and out of uncoordinated public and private purchases."

His letter declared:

"The CIO holds most strongly the position that wage increases have not been responsible for the rise in prices. The price increases now besetting the American people have come from other causes; out of profiteering, out of special material shortages, out of hoarding and speculation, and out of uncoordinated public and private purchases.

UNWISE POLICY

"We hold that it is unwise in the terms of sound economics and of proper public policy to attempt to freeze wages in connection with price control," he added.

"From the extensive profits records being rolled up by the major industrial corporations of the country at the present time it is clear that a serious maldistribution of national income is going on, an unjust distribution which will be intensified by any attempts to freeze wages at this time."

Murray also assured the committee "of the sincere and intense interest of the CIO in the fullest possible production and in the prevention of inflation" in seeking a hearing for the CIO on the proposed legislation.

'Truce' Formula Ends Mine Strike

WASHINGTON, Sept. 26—The strike of over 44,000 miners in the captive mines owned by U. S. Steel and other steel companies ended here with the announcement of a four-point truce plan proposed by the Natl. Defense Mediation Board and modeled on the original peace plan put forward by President John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers.

Under the proposal of the Defense Mediation Board, the United Mine Workers agreed to recommend an immediate return to work by the strikers, with a three-day notice guaranteed in the event of a future stoppage, and to hold in abeyance the union shop provision of the Appalachian agreement. Both parties accept the Appalachian contract, with this exception. Jurisdiction over the dispute is retained by the Mediation Board, which will continue to seek a permanent settlement.

The provisional settlement was agreed to by the UMW, Lewis said, "only to make a contribution to national defense—which has been our attitude since the beginning of these hearings." UMW officials pointed out that the truce was an adaptation of the original plan for settlement offered by the union the first day of the strike.

BARS STRIKEBREAKING

Lewis pointed out further that the UMW "still dissents from the principle that strikes must be broken as a quid pro quo for a hearing on merit before the Natl. Defense Mediation Board or any other government agency."

The strike was called to enforce the union shop in the captive mines. This clause applies to mines under the Appalachian agreement, covering all commercial mining operations.

Judge Sears Hears Wiretap Evidence

Washington, Sept. 27—Decision to hear witnesses on a defense motion to reopen the Harry Bridges deportation trial was "taken under advisement" by Judge Charles B. Sears, U. S. presiding inspector in charge of the case, after argument from Bridges' defense attorneys at hearings in the Department of Justice here.

The argument was based on a motion to secure a new hearing at which proof would be given of a conspiracy by the FBI and other

1,500 Join CIO Office Union

New York, Sept. 26—More than 1,500 organized direct mail advertising workers were united in the CIO here when the Lettershop Division of the AFL's Amalgamated Lithographers came over to the CIO United Office and Professional Workers, now conducting a drive to win contracts for thousands of workers in this industry.

The AFL workers, who came over to the CIO with the consent of their parent union, were brought in as the result of the two months old campaign of the UOPWA which has already won contracts for 900 in New York and 2,500 in Detroit and Chicago. In addition, the CIO union has won close to a dozen elections in recent weeks, the latest by a 44 to nothing vote.

The lettershop workers, who produce the advertising literature that clogs the nation's mailboxes, are among the most exploited in the white collar field. Wages in unorganized shops are as low as $12 a week, hours sometimes fantastically long, and job security practically non-existent.

On Freezing Wages

Said the water in the brook to the water in the pipes, as fall set in: "Okay, boys, let's freeze! Now then, all together, let everyone do his part, and no fair any water not freezing."

Says the war profiteer today: "If inflated prices are to be controlled, it's only fair as well as necessary that wages be frozen, too."

It is a specious argument, and a big campaign is now on to sell it to the public. But it does not hold water. And if the same human intelligence and planning are applied to social problems, as are applied to domestic problems when pipes threaten to freeze, everything possible will be done to prevent the freezing of wages.

The water in your pipes has a very different function from the water in the brook. It must be kept running if it is to be of benefit. More than that, its freezing causes burst pipes and other disasters.

Wages similarly have a very different function from profits and prices. They are the life-blood of our economy. Basic American living standards rise or fall with them.

When they increase, mass purchasing power increases and business improves because more money is directed into the channels where it can do most good.

When wages fall or are frozen, on the other hand, the effect is the reverse; and the health, welfare and efficiency of millions of underpaid people are impaired.

Profits may be cut, limited or frozen, and a rich minority will grind their teeth. Price profiteering may be curbed, with beneficial results. But wages cannot be cut or frozen at present insufficient levels without causing suffering to millions and creating grave social dangers.

That is why CIO President Murray has expressed his opposition to any attempts to freeze wages in connection with price control, in asking permission for the CIO to prevent its views before the House Banking and Currency Committee.

He points out that wage increases have not been responsible for present rising prices. These price increases, he says, "have come from other causes; out of profiteering, out of special material shortages, out of hoarding and speculation, and out of uncoordinated public and private purchases."

The wages of most American workers are still at shamefully low levels, while profits have increased by hundreds of millions and war profiteering runs rampant in many defense industries.

"From the extensive profit records being rolled up by the major industrial corporations of the country at the present time," Murray says, "it is clear that a serious maldistribution of national income is going on, an unjust distribution which will be intensified by any attempt to freeze wages at this time."

Representatives?

Let no one kid you into thinking that the reactionary Congressmen from poll-tax states, whose names are constantly associated with labor-baiting and every kind of anti-union bill, are democratically elected representatives of the people in their districts.

Let's see how such loud-mouthed and vindictive foes of labor as Eugene Cox and Carl Vinson of Georgia, and Howard Smith of Virginia and Martin Dies of Texas got into Congress.

Only 5,137 votes were cast for Cox in 1938, representing less than 2% of the population of his district. Vinson, with 4,363 votes, was also elected by 2% of the people in his district.

Dies received 12,816 votes and Smith 13,796 votes—the people who elected them in both cases representing no more than 4% of the population of their respective districts.

In contrast, one pro-labor Congressman, Raymond McKeough of the non-poll tax state of Illinois, received 129,000 votes in the same year—or 93,000 more than all four anti-labor poll-tax Congressmen combined.

In 1940, 42% of the total population in the non-poll-tax states voted, while only 7% of the population in the eight poll-tax states voted.

Just add these facts to the many other good reasons why the CIO is demanding abolition of poll taxes and the introduction of democracy to those states where only a privileged minority is now allowed to vote.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

AN INVESTIGATION has been going on in Washington for some time into the most absorbing and important question of what and who make us think as we do.

True, the Commissioners who are conducting this investigation would tell you that its scope is much more limited. The lawyers representing the business interests involved would probably say that it is just some government meddling with business.

But nevertheless this investigation of the Federal Communications Commission into newspaper ownership of radio stations is touching on questions that are basic to freedom of speech and freedom of press—or rather to the lack of these freedoms that permits a minority to dictate to the people through control of the written and spoken word.

SOME 240 radio stations are at present controlled by or closely associated with daily newspapers, and there has been an increasing tendency for newspaper publishers to enter the radio business.

The purpose of the FCC investigation is to determine whether this kind of trend to monopoly over these main media of information and public communication has adverse affects on freedom of speech over the air.

The CIO took part in the hearings to present labor's viewpoint on the subject, as distinct from the business viewpoint of publishers and radio station owners. Its testimony, presented by Allan S. Haywood, director of organization, pointed out:

(1) That labor does not at present enjoy the freedom of speech over the air which is its constitutional right. There have been numerous instances of refusal to sell time, or to grant adequate free time to CIO and other labor organizations, while business concerns monopolize most of the time.

(2) That newspaper-controlled stations have been frequent offenders, though by no means the only offenders in this respect.

(3) That big business control over most of the press gives it a bias against labor; that there is serious danger if this bias is carried over to radio broadcasting by newspaper control; and that any newspaper monopoly of broadcasting would tend to deprive labor of recourse to a competitive medium when it gets a raw deal from the press.

(4) That the FCC has been lax in its duties by failing to protect labor's rights on the air; and that it should seek amendment of the Federal Communications Act, if it finds that its present powers are insufficient to do this.

THE THINKING of the American people on labor, social and political questions is influenced more than almost anything else by what they read in the papers or hear on the air.

The people who control these channels of information, which are as necessary in modern life as the water supply, therefore exercise tremendous and most undemocratic power over the thinking and consequent actions of the people.

This power has its limits, of course. A political candidate, for instance, can frequently be elected despite a hostile press, if he has a good organization or other means of direct contact with the voters.

The CIO has been able to grow to its present strength in face of newspaper hostility and limited access to the air. Through meetings, leaflets, labor papers, through house-to-house visits and shop talks, its organizers have been able to overcome these handicaps. And the workers know from their own experience what the CIO really stands for.

The cruder forms of propaganda engaged in by reactionary publishers may even have a reverse effect at times on intelligent readers; and they certainly build up the prevailing and justified suspicion that "you can't believe all you read in the papers."

But in subtler ways big business control of press and radio exerts an all-pervading influence on people's thinking. Even where higher standards of objectivity are observed in the news columns, big business publishers are bound to reflect their bias, in their news handling as well as editorially, wherever labor programs and policies seem to conflict with their long-range interests as employers and with those of their financial backers and advertisers.

Similarly in the radio handling of labor and social questions, broadcasters are bound to be influenced by the fact that they work for companies with a large business investment, or must depend for employment on big business sponsors.

Radio broadcasting is a younger industry than newspaper publishing. It has not "jelled" to the same extent as the press. It is more sensitive to public reaction, more fearful of public regulation.

It is therefore important that labor should be alert and vigilant to demand its full rights over the air; and to fight every tendency of big business interests to make of radio broadcasting the same kind of anti-labor propaganda agency as they have made of so much of the press.

Government, Transit Unions Hold Parleys

LANSING, Mich., Sept. 26—Problems of collective bargaining for civil service employes took the main attention at the opening sessions of the State, County and Municipal Workers, CIO, meeting in their second biennial convention here.

The problem was stated by Abram Flaxer, SCMWA president, in his report to the delegates pointing out that civil service workers were meeting the same kind of refusal to bargain collectively that industrial workers met with a few years ago.

"This is going to be a convention of state, county and municipal employes who turned to unionism for exactly the same reasons which have motivated the millions of organized workers in industry," he said.

"They are organizing so as to bargain more effectively. Government workers have gotten started late. They are now running into the same arguments which workers in industry were running into up to just a few years ago."

GROWTH IN MEMBERSHIP

Close to 200 delegates came to the convention, representing 53,000 members from 23 states and 173 local unions—a growth of 47 per cent in membership over the last convention two years ago. This progress was recognized by CIO President Philip Murray, who wired greetings and congratulations "on the splendid accomplishments of your organization since your last meeting."

In addition, the officers' report showed wage increases of $11,000,000 in the two-year period, in addition to shorter hours and generally improved conditions in organized fields.

Full aid in the struggle to defeat fascism and aggression was expressed in the officers' report and in a feature speech by R. J. Thomas, president of United Automobile Workers and a vice president of the CIO.

The convention later, by a vote of 183 to 7, adopted a resolution declaring the defeat of Hitlerism the primary task confronting the United States and calling for a "torrent" of supplies to Britain, the Soviet Union and China.

Typical of the union's progress was the report showing growth in Michigan where a membership of 300 a short time ago has grown to 5,000 paid up members today.

NEW YORK, Sept. 27—Determination to play a full role in the struggle to defeat reaction and to bring collective bargaining to the nation's transit workers, marked opening addresses and reports at the third biennial convention of the Transport Workers Union, CIO, meeting in Transport Hall, here.

Sharply criticizing the Board of Transportation of New York for its refusal to bargain collectively in good faith with the union, President Michael J. Quill and other officers declared in their report to the 250 delegates:

"Such shortcomings as there are in the newly promulgated wage schedules of the Board of Transportation are rooted in one faith. For this the remedy is not less collective bargaining, but more collective bargaining—genuine collective bargaining. The struggle cannot and will not end until genuine collective bargaining and satisfactory contractual relations are firmly established."

MAIN SPEAKERS

Main speakers at the opening sessions included, in addition to Quill, Allan S. Haywood, organizing director, CIO; Joseph Curran, CIO vice president and head of the Nat'l Maritime Union; Edwin S. Smith, former member of the Nat'l Labor Relations Board; Lee Pressman, general counsel, CIO. Paul Robeson, famous Negro singer and friend of organized labor, was scheduled to sing.

Each speaker emphasized the need of vigorous enforcement of labor's right to organize and bargain free from intimidation and from stalling tactics on the part of employers, pointing out that transit workers on city-owned lines, despite civil service, had as much need as any other group of workers to exercise these rights.

After a long debate the convention, by a vote of 230 to 20, adopted a strong resolution against Hitlerism and pledging the "support, patriotism and loyalty" of the union in favor of a program of all-out aid to Britain, the Soviet Union and China.

Shipyard Union Reports Big Pay Increases In Year

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Sept. 27—Speeches stressing labor's responsibility in reshaping a war-torn world keynoted sessions of the seventh annual convention of the CIO Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers here.

President John Green's report to the convention showed that the union has almost doubled industry's average wage scale since 1933, with the present figure of $1 an hour contrasting with the 54.9 cent scale of eight years ago. Contracts negotiated by the shipyard union have netted $350,000,000 annual wage increases, the report noted.

43 AGREEMENTS

The union now has 43 agreements, and has eliminated regional wage differentials, Green reported.

"The union has moved to a position where it can expect to negotiate with employers on a coast-wide national basis," he said.

The 200 delegates, representing about 100,000 men in the nation's busy shipyards, heard President Green declare that "the workers in the American shipyards today realize their stake in the world struggle which is going on."

Urging increased supplies for the nations fighting Hitler Germany, Green warned:

"Let no one think that our sole purpose is one of destruction. Our aim must be not only to lay the foundations for a new world to replace the one which is now in the agonies of a suicidal struggle.

ELIMINATE EVILS

"We are not concerned to fight to restore the status quo either in this country or in the world at large. We are fighting to eliminate the profound evils, economic and social, which have brought our civilization to the brink of destruction."

Later on the convention passed resolutions urging repeal of the Neutrality Act and supporting the President's policy of aiding England, the Soviet Union and China.

WIDMAN SPEAKS

The delegates heard Michael F. Widman, Jr., CIO assistant director of organization, bring greetings from President Murray and from Organization Director Allan S. Haywood. Widman denounced those whose propaganda has sought to picture the CIO as opposed to national defense.

Other speakers at the convention were Sidney Hillman, associate director-general of the OPM; John Jones of the Welsh Miners Federation, and A. H. Findley of the British Trades Union Congress.

CIO Council Established In Illinois

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Sept. 27—Formation of the CIO's 29th State Council, election of officers, and working out of a program to strengthen the CIO in Illinois, and to take its full part in the fight against fascism marked the closing session of the first state-wide CIO convention here. Ray Edmundson, CIO Regional Director and United Mine Workers leader, was elected president.

"Our gathering takes place against the foreboding background of the clash of world armaments, a clash which endangers and threatens to destroy the very institutions which sustain us and ecourage us to fight for a better day for all Americans," Edmudson told the 700 delegates in his opening speech.

Paying tribute to John L. Lewis, Philip Murray and other "farsighted and patriotic men" who founded the CIO, Edmundson declared that the CIO has made "liberty for the common people, freedom from the economic bondage of the great corporations . . . the end products of the CIO in Illinois."

GREETINGS FROM CIO

Greetings from the national CIO were brought by Director Allan S. Haywood, who told the delegates of the work of the CIO throughout the nation and who urged them to organize unorganized workers as the only sure means of fighting reaction.

Resolutions supporting the Murray defense plan, upholding the policy of aid to victims of aggression, demanding citizenship for Harry Bridges, and a number of other issues were adopted by the convention.

ELECT OFFICERS

In addition to electing Edmundson as president, the delegates elected Samuel Levin of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers as first vice president, Robert Travis of Farm Equipment Workers second vice president, and Francis De Laurie of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee as secretary-treasurer.

agents of the Justice Department to bring Bridges' deportation by any means, lawful or unlawful. It followed an expose of G-man snooping on private phone conversations of Bridges, who caught them in the act at the Hotel Edison in New York.

Defense attorneys Carol King, Richard Gladstein and Aubrey Grossman, in presenting an affidavit proving that wiretapping took place in New York, added other evidence to show that the FBI habitually used illegal wiretapping in other cases, and declared that it was "impossible to believe" that the FBI's evidence at the Bridges trial was not secured by the same illegal methods.

CITE CONGRESS

"The August, 1941, wiretapping (in New York) against Bridges occurred a few months after Congress had voted down legislation, sponsored by the FBI, designed to legalize wiretapping," the defense brief said. "Thus, the FBI is seen to persist in illegal conduct even after Congress has refused to place the stamp of legality on FBI efforts.

"If the FBI will wire tap after Congress has refused to change the present law, there can be no reasonable doubt that wiretapping occured before such Congressional refusal."

The brief, after citing opinions of Supreme Court justices on the unconstitutionality of wiretapping, declared in conclusion:

"Two courses are open, to permit this violation of law to go unnoticed and protect those, who, though public officials, flout the law; or to permit counsel to produce evidence showing what evidence was secured directly or indirectly by wiretapping and consequently illegally.

"Having shown that FBI agents tapped Bridges' telephone wires, we are entitled to prove that a substantial portion of the case against him was 'a fruit of the poisonous tree.'"

RECORD PAYMENT:

Eagle-Picher Employe Gets $28,500 in Back Pay

JOPLIN, Mo., Sept. 27—Decency to the union men who worked under him today had brought a high reward to John Sheppard, former acting director of research at the Eagle-Picher Lead Co.

The reward amounted to $28,500, the highest single back-wage payment in the history of the National Labor Relations Board, and an offer to return to his job—which he refused.

The payment grew out of the settlement of the six-year-old case involving the notorious Blue Card Union, which tried to run a back-to-work strike-breaking movement against the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers.

Sheppard was fired by the company in November, 1935, after he had refused to herd the employes of his department into the company union. He was a star witness against the company in the 1937 NLRB hearing.

Three hundred other employes of the company are getting back pay and reinstatement, following U. S. Circuit Court action upholding the Board's decision against the company.

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

BULLETIN

The Steel Workers Organizing Committee has won a tremendous victory in the Labor Board election at the Bethlehem plant in Sparrows Point, Md. The vote has just come in, and shows 10,813 for SWOC, 4,198 for the "independent" and 731 for neither. This is one more step in the "mopping-up" process on Little Steel and demonstrates the ability of the CIO to bring benefits to the workers in all branches of the industry.

The organizers and members who have labored so well to bring about the series of successful elections in Bethlehem plants are to be commended for a splendid job, intelligently handled and diligently carried out.

The Bethlehem Steel election will be followed by a poll at Bethlehem Shipbuilding in the same area. With these two under its belt, the CIO will be in a strong position to move in on the Glenn-Martin aircraft plant, one of the largest in the nation. Glenn-Martin is tough, but so were Bethlehem and Ford and all the major organizing jobs the CIO has carried out in its five and a half years of existence.

All of CIO's victories, for that matter, have been hard to win. Unlike the AFL, CIO never gets its members presented on a silver platter by the employers. It has to get them the hard way—by organizing and battling, as often as not fighting the leadership of the AFL as well as the boss.

AFL PLUS EMPLOYER

Most recent example of the AFL doing the boss's work is reported by Regional Director Cowherd, who writes that vigilante thugs have been trying to prevent the CIO from organizing at Helena, Ark. These thugs, who have threatened CIO organizers and attempted to push them around at a meeting last week, openly boasted that they were AFL men—and that they were there to keep the CIO out. At Director Cowherd's request, I sent him the following statement of CIO's position on this type of vigilantism:

"The CIO is unalterably opposed to every form of vigilantism, mob law, or strong-arm tactics directed against the right of workers, whether in the South or anywhere else, to organize in unions of their own choice. This is not a matter of theory with the CIO, it is a matter of every day practice. The CIO was brought into existence to organize the unorganized and to improve their living and working conditions. It has not allowed thugs or muscle men to stop it.

"Our advice to those who try to trample the Bill of Rights is that we will hold them accountable for their brutal and un-American tactics against freedom of speech and assembly. The CIO is an American institution, founded and built on American principles. Americanism and mob-ism cannot exist side by side."

AROUND THE CIO

An interim contract has been won by CIO workers at the New Haven Clock Co., providing union recognition and a five cent hourly increase. Other matters are under negotiation with the Paper, Toy and Novelty Workers. Ray Thomason reports from Richmond, Va., that 125 CIO workers at the Richmond Guano Co. have won a closed shop check-off contract with a six cent increase.

Peter Campbell, CIO director in Louisville, Ky., adds a contract won by Local 49 of the Clothing Workers, carrying a 10 per cent increase. John Tisa, organizer of Local 80 of the Cannery and Agricultural Workers, writes in to tell of a substantial victory by 900 CIO workers at the Consolidated Cigar Co. in Camden, N. J., who won their contract after a month's strike. Regional Director Craig of Philadelphia helped in the settlement.

Conventions continuing this week include Transport Workers, New York; Marine and Shipbuilding Workers, Atlantic City; State, County and Municipal Workers, Lansing, Mich. These unions all demonstrate clearly the basic purpose of the CIO—to organize workers, to protect democracy, to defeat reaction and fascism. Out on the northwest Pacific coast, the Intl. Woodworkers of America are preparing for their convention, meeting in a spirit of harmony that argues well for constructive, united action on their problems.

Mine, Clothing Unions Back Hosiery Strike

By TRAVIS K. HEDRICK

CLINTON, Tenn., Sept. 27—Symbolic of the unity and growing strength of the CIO in Tennessee, leaders of the United Mine Workers and Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America joined here Sept. 20 to pledge support to the American Federation of Hosiery Workers in its strike against the closed Magnet Mills, Inc.

William Turnblazer, president of District 19, UMW, told the rousing rally in the Anderson County Court House that "we have 22,500 coal diggers in this district. Your fight is our fight."

Leo Krzycki, member of the General Executive Board of the ACW, outlined the principles of trade unionism for the overflow crowd and then got a loud cheer when he said "you ought to thank God that you live in a region in which the coal diggers are powerful."

ANTI-UNION VIOLENCE

The Hosiery Union's strike here began September 9 and the plant has been closed down since September 15 after a series of disorders that included the burning of the union hall, stabbing of a striker and an attempt to shoot William Smith, secretary-treasurer of the AFHW, who was riding at night back to Knoxville from Clinton. Smith was trailed by automobile for five miles.

A National Labor Relations Board consent election set for September 22 was cancelled by the Board after the Clinton paper published the list of eligible voters and urged business men to "persuade workers to vote right." The mill also bought an ad smearing the union and CIO.

PARADE PLANNED

As a result of President Turnblazer's pledge at the mass meeting, a parade and rally for coal miners and supporters of the hosiery strike was scheduled in Clinton for September 27.

Cole W. Danenburg, organizer for the hosiery union, and Paul R. Christopher, CIO Regional Director for Tennessee, expect 5,000 or more members of the UMW to join in the day-long demonstration.

The Hosiery Union is demanding a 7½ per cent increase, a week's paid vacation and a union shop. Negotiations were resumed Sept. 23 with a representative of the U. S. Conciliation Service sitting with the management and the negotiating committee of Branch 125, AFHW and Danenburg.

A total of 906 workers are idle.

HAYWOOD TESTIFIES:

Newspaper-owned Radio Stations Discriminate Against CIO, FCC Told

WASHINGTON, Sept. 27—CIO affiliates have been repeatedly discriminated against by radio broadcasting stations, Allan S. Haywood, organization director of the CIO, told the Federal Communications Commission here today in testimony during the FCC probe into control of radio by newspaper owners.

Haywood urged the Commission to "probe deeply into the question of restrictions of labor's rights by newspaper-controlled stations" and to work out policies guaranteed "to accord full protection to labor in the enjoyment of its rights to freedom of speech on the air."

This discrimination springs from bias against labor unions, Haywood pointed out in citing a number of instances where radio time has been denied or withdrawn from CIO unions. It is not confined to newspaper-controlled stations, he added, in urging the Commission to go ahead from the present hearings to "a further investigation into the whole question of anti-labor discrimination by all radio stations, regardless of ownership or control."

CIO COMPLAINT

Summarizing the CIO's complaint against radio stations, Haywood pointed out that time is frequently refused to labor, that such refusals "in some cases clearly reflect the bias of the station owners" and their fear of offending employers, chamber of commerce, etc., and that some of the more glaring instances of discrimination have been committed by newspaper owned stations.

In addition, Haywood said, free time when given is not "an adequate substitute in frequency or regularity for the type of paid program which has been desired," and that the most frequent reason given for denial is that the subject is "controversial," and therefore in violation of the code of the Nat'l Association of Broadcasters.

This so-called code, he pointed out, was not based on law or other legal authority, and resulted in a one sided presentation of facts on labor issues. "Unions are denied the opportunity to purchase time and they cannot get free time for radio debates, because the employers will not give labor the publicity of a public debate," he said, quoting from the CIO convention report of 1940 on the question. "Yet corporations frequently broadcast distorted news and propaganda on their commercial programs."

BIAS AGAINST LABOR

This has resulted, Haywood added, in a well-founded feeling among organized workers that anti-labor bias controls many radio stations as it controls most of the daily press.

"If current monopolistic trends continue, and if anti-labor newspaper publishers obtain a virtual monopoly in certain areas over radio as well as press, labor will have every reason to believe that democracy has been asleep at the switch while our constitutional rights of freedom of speech and press have been placed at the mercy of wealthy minority interests," he said.

Haywood also criticized the Commission "for laxness in enforcement of the provision that radio stations must operate in the 'public interest, convenience and necessity' as required by the Federal Communications Act." He urged the Commission to correct this by fuller use of its present powers or by seeking extension of them through Congress if necessary.

Open CIO Office

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Sept. 27—The CIO has opened a sub-regional office at Room 25, Town Hall Building, Market and Washington Streets, in Wilkes-Barre, it was announced here by John F. Kosik, newly-appointed sub-regional director.

The office will service various CIO unions in northeastern Pennsylvania. Its phone number is Wilkes-Barre 2-7325.

Aid Relief Plan

Camden, N. J., Sept. 28—Fourteen thousand CIO shipworkers here, members of the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuildiing Workers, have voted to support the British child relief plan announced by the N. J. State CIO Council. Plan is to contribute an hour's pay towards a "CIO Children's Village" in England for bombed-out British kids.

Was Hearst Worried!

FCC Bares Hearst Ban On CIO Radio Program

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, Sept. 27—How Hearst radio executives worked for 13 months to clear their San Francisco station, KYA, from the "stigma" of carrying a nightly CIO broadcast was told at FCC hearings here in a series of documents that had more laughs than three pages of Hearst comic strips.

The program, one of the most popular on the West Coast, was canceled in October, 1940, after station officials had been instructed by E. S. Stoer of Hearst Radio in New York to make the "refusal as plausible as possible."

The FCC, probing the effects of newspaper ownership of radio stations, was shown a letter written by Stoer on Sept. 1, 1939, to John S. Brookes of the Hearst Corp., describing the CIO quarter-hour, "Labor on the Air," as the only "dangerous program on KYA."

SACRIFICED REVENUE

So frenzied did the Hearst officials become about the program that on Mar. 5, 1940, Stoer indicated that revenue—usually a tender point with the Hearst organization—wasn't nearly as important as getting the CIO off the air.

"I am quite willing to forego the revenue from this program if there is any way to get it off, even though I realize that the loss to the station would be felt very considerably," Stoer wrote to a KYA official.

A fortnight earlier, Clarence Lindner of the San Francisco Examiner complained to Hearst officials in New York about the "KYA problem." Gist of his story was that the Frisco Chamber of Commerce had promised to try to find jobs for unemployed men. That fact was announced by the CIO program.

As a result, according to Lindner, "somewhere between 250 and 300 workers showed up—and would have been extremely obstreperous if the police, having been warned in advance, had not been there to maintain order.

"Today KYA—and the Hearst name, and perhaps in some minds, the Examiner—are linked with this drive against business in San Francisco," he wrote indignantly.

The Hearst empire accordingly called in legal advice to see if the program couldn't be barred from the air because of its contents. After scanning the contract and the broadcast material, the lawyer, G. J. Fink, replied: "I am sorry to say, that I do not find anything which in my opinion would justify you in arbitrarily cancelling the contract . . ."

KYA officials later toyed with the idea of a broadcast under the auspices of the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers, which could be used to calm down the advertisers and carry anti-labor material under the guise of a discussion of "community problems . . . to offset the damage being done by the CIO vehicle."

'SOUNDS VERY STUPID'

One Reiland Quinn of KYA, reporting on the idea to Stoer, his superior, admitted that "this of course sounds very stupid as it is written here . . ." but that it might be worth a try. Quinn objected to the NAM's transcribed anti-labor program, American Family Robinson, as "so subtle it misses the point."

By mid-summer of 1940, the Hearst officials had decided cancellation of the contract would be too dangerous, and so they waited until the agreement between the CIO and the station expired in the autumn. At that time, they refused to renew it and intensified their efforts to establish friendliest possible relations with the chamber of commerce.

'Marine Agency Hinders Pact Parley'--Curran

NEW YORK, Sept. 27—The U.S. Maritime Commission, through its persistent policy of hindering collective bargaining, is responsible for the present chaotic condition of the merchant marine industry, Pres. Joseph Curran of the CIO Natl. Maritime Union charged today.

In a long telegraphed reply to Admiral E. S. Land of the Commission, who had proposed a conference which the NMU accused of being designed to "freeze" wages, bonuses and war-risk insurance, Curran pointed to the government agency's "refusal to recognize those rights guaranteed under the law to American seamen to bargain collectively through their elected representatives with the operators for wages, hours and conditions of employment."

While the NMU is "at all times" prepared to engage in conferences aimed at smooth operation of commerce, it does not believe that the meeting suggested by Adm. Land would be "fruitful" until the conclusion of current bargaining sessions with private employers, Curran said.

LACK SINCERITY

"It is obvious, therefore, that projected conferences proposed by the Maritime Commission lack sincerity of purpose based on activities of the Commission in present and in all previous situations," the telegram continued.

"Furthermore, we are not prepared to agree that human lives may be placed in the category of cattle and their value 'frozen' at any given price.

"We suggest that interference of the Maritime Commission cease at once, because it is hindering peaceful conclusion of negotiations for contracts now being conducted between our union and the operators," Curran said.

"We, who represent the vast majority of American seamen, have had no difficulty in reaching peaceful agreement with the operators on all questions affecting wages, working conditions and war risk compensation."

Ask U. S. Aid Against Vigilantes

Memphis, Tenn., Sept. 27—Department of Justice protection for a group of CIO organizers who were chased by a vigilante mob of 50 men from Helana, Ark., where they were preparing to address a weekly mass meeting, was asked today by Vice President William R. Henderson of the Tennessee Industrial Union Council.

Henderson said that the car in which they were riding towards the West Helena Fair Grounds was stopped by the men, who claimed they were AFL members. Chief of Police Lewis Barker and a deputy sheriff both refused to promise the CIO organizers police protection, while the mayor, the prosecuting attorney and the sheriff were all conveniently "out of town" and could not be reached.

TAKEN TO FERRY

When the organizers assembled in a restaurant to plan their next move, the vigilante group forced them to the ferry landing from which they were carried across the river to Mississippi.

The CIO group consisted of Ted Doktor and Harry Koger of the wood workers; Koger's daughter, Miss Mary Lou Koger, a stenographer; William Haber of the cannery and agricultural workers, and W. C. Lee, of the Nat'l Maritime Union.

Two previous mass meetings in the town had drawn widespread support from the workers, with 850 employes of the Chicago Mill & Lumber Co. joining the Int'l Woodworkers; and about 350 employes of cotton compresses and cotton oil mills joining the cannery and agricultural workers.

Win Better Pact for Fishermen

Seattle, Wash., Sept. 27—The Columbia River Fishermen's Protective Union, affiliated with the International Fishermen & Allied Workers, has negotiated an agreement for the fall fishing season which will bring them from 12 to 30 per cent more pay than last year.

In announcing the agreement, the IFAW said: "This notable achievement is a result of the militant and aggressive action of this IFAW affiliate, and leads the way for increases for all the other groups who are interested in the fall salmon season."

OUT TO WIN: Members of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee point to some convincing reasons for voting SWOC in the Labor Board election at the big Bethlehem Steel plant in Baltimore. Union won the election Sept. 25 by a two-to-one majority.

Welcome!

LYNN, Mass., Sept. 27—Mayor Albert Cole, other city officials here, and a police escort were part of this city's official "welcome" to Albert J. Fitzgerald, president-elect of the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Marine Workers, on his arrival here last week.

A large crowd of fellow union-members staged an impromptu parade, with Fitzgerald, Mrs. Fitzgerald and their daughter as guests of honor.

Fitzgerald, who is also president of UE Local 201 and secretary of the Massachusetts State CIO, assumes his UE office on Nov. 1.

Camden CIO Strikers Ask Support

Since the strike was called on August 30, the "police have pushed, mauled and threatened the people on the picket line," according to Victory Osuchowski, CIO field representative. Pickets have been limited to a small number, scabs have been escorted into the plant and a union member trying to snap a picture of the police escorting the scabs was nearly run down by a patrolman driving a squad car.

Osuchowski appealed for funds to back the strikers and asked that they be sent to the South Jersey Industrial Union Council, 210 N. 6th Street, Camden, N. J.

REFUTE STATEMENT:

Says NYA Ignores Labor Advice In New York

NEW YORK, Sept. 27—"Labor has been given no opportunity to contribute to the guidance of the NYA program" for industry vocational training in New York, it was charged today by the Youth Committee of the Greater New York Industrial Union Council.

Taking sharp issue with statements in a feature article about the NYA program in the Sept. 1 issue of The CIO NEWS, the CIO council committee said that in New York, "there has been no consultation with labor, as there has been with management, in the selection of the courses that young people should be trained in, nor has labor been asked to advise on the nature of the training program.

"Anti-union employers have found in the NYA too often a source of cheap labor supply. No effort has been made to educate youth as to the functions and history of the labor movement, and few of the shop foremen are union members. Consequently, there is no opportunity as the article would have us believe, to 'have prejudices against unionism worn through by the time they are ready to find employment.'"

CIO AIDED YOUNGSTERS

The committee pointed out that the New York CIO has called for the expansion and improvement of the NYA training program, and recalled that when 7,000 young people were dismissed from the NYA staff in New York recently, the council called upon all affiliated unions to support demands for their reinstatement.

"We protested again, and a delegation visited Miss Helen Harris, the local Administrator, when recent changes in wages and hours occurred," the CIO group said. "These changes provided for an increase from 60 hours a month to 160 hours, with only $3 additional pay. In appealing to us for support, the NYA workers had pointed to this wage as far below the subsistence level."

SHOULD BE EFFECTIVE

The Council statement, signed by Youth Committee Chairman Rudy Skreck and Secretary Leon Strauss, concluded:

"The NYA, however, cannot become a completely effective training program without the fullest participation of labor in its work. Industry conferences of labor and management must determine what labor forces will be needed in each industry and which skills should be taught the young NYA worker.

"Labor-approved wage scales must be established for the training periods. Labor can and should provide competent instructors for the courses."

Texas CIO Raps Pipe Line Plans

Houston, Tex., Sept. 27—Construction of an oil pipe line from the Gulf Coast to the Atlantic seaboard should be deferred "until all present transportation mediums are fully exhausted," the Texas CIO Industrial Union Council recommended here.

A special Council committee which studied the matter said it "strongly" suspects that the east coast gasoline shortage was "purely artificial and caused by a few major oil companies that are refusing to use present transportation facilities and are using the present national emergency to force the federal government to allow them to obtain a monopoly on east coast and foreign markets."

Aluminum Local Pushes Housing Plan

MARYVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 27—Development of a union housing program, initiated by Local 9 of the CIO Aluminum Workers, moved along today with announcement that funds have been earmarked for the construction of 500 dwelling units.

The plan, adopted by a number of other unions throughout the country, calls for establishment of a corporation of which the residents of the homes will be the stockholders. The corporation will enter into a contract with the government for construction of the units. The government provides all the funds necessary and retains management of the corporation until it is assured that the risk is sufficiently secured.

Workers who occupy the homes buy a specified amount of stock each month, which constitutes rent as well as payment on the purchase price, and within several years establishes a stake in the project.

The plan is devised to get around the main stumbling block in the present housing program—the question of the 10% down payment required by the Federal Housing Administration.

'Contented'!

The workers, members of Local 335, CIO Cannery, Agricultural & Packing Workers, ratified the negotiating committee's report and then pledged their efforts to launch an organizing campaign in neighboring milk canneries. Also planned is a series of monthly forums at which CIO speakers will address the local.

SPEED-UP GOES OUT: The notorious Bedeaux speed-up system went out the window, and CIO unionism—bringing with it wage boosts of from 10 to 39 cents an hour—came in as District 50, United Mine Workers, wound up a 4-year fight at Dow Chemical Co. by getting a signed agreement. Shown signing the $1,300,000-increase pact are (seated, left to right): Clarence Harris and Elwood Smith of the union, and James Driver, chief negotiator for Dow. Standing: Joseph Bird, District 50 international representative, and E. O. Barstow, company vice-president.

Distillery Local Elects Officers

Philadelphia, Sept. 27—Frank L. Cassidy was re-elected president and business manager of Local 163, CIO United Distillery Workers, at the local's annual elections. It was his fourth consecutive victory.

Others elected were Thomas P. Henry, vice-president; Adam J. Baranauskas, treasurer; John J. Maloney, financial secretary; James McBride, recording secretary, and Joseph Papalini, sergeant-at-arms.

1,000 Join CIO

Bayonne, N. J.—(FP)—One thousand workers at the American Radiator Co., previously organized as an "independent union," have voted to join the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers. The UE recently assisted them in getting a nine cent hourly raise.

Murray Calls Parley To Discuss Defense 'Dislocations'

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4—Representatives of CIO unions most severely affected by "widespread dislocations" in industry because of the defense program were called by Pres. Philip Murray to a conference here Oct. 20. Purpose of the meeting will be to coordinate efforts to "mitigate the vicious effects of the industrial confusion as much as possible."

Murray's letter to the unions charged that the CIO Industry Council plan, aimed at getting full production and efficient management of the nation's industrial plants, has received little consideration, with the result that "American industry has now been plunged into the midst of widespread dislocations."

The CIO leader charged that "there has been a failure to heed the CIO's warnings or to consider its proposals, both general and specific."

Seamen's Bill Wins CIO Support

Washington, Oct. 4—Full CIO support for the seaman's unemployment compensation bill (HR 5446) was given by Russ Nixon, speaking for John T. Jones, CIO legislative representative and director of Labor's Non-Partisan League, in testimony before the House Merchant Marine Committee now considering the measure.

Nixon pointed out that seamen, are the only large industrial group of workers not covered by compensation, and that while they are excluded, "we cannot claim to have established a full and adequate social security system."

"Our members in the maritime industry are engaged in a field where the hazards of unemployment are especially severe," Nixon said. "That their plight should continue uncared for by protective social legislation is a gross discrimination against the welfare of a very important group of American workers and is warranted by no considerations of logic or justice."

5 in a Row!

SPRINGFIELD, O., Oct. 4—The CIO made it five victories in a row here last week.

Paul Miley, regional director for the UAW-CIO, announced that the auto union had won an election at the Ohio Steel Foundry by 358-173. In line with a stipulation signed before the election, the company will begin contract negotiations immediately.

Unions Get Appeal To Aid Indiana Frame-up Victims

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4—An appeal in behalf of the 65 members of the Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee now on trial in Winchester, Ind., on framed charges arising out of a strike at International Harvester's plant in Richmond, Ind., early this year was endorsed and forwarded to all CIO national unions and organizing committees this week by Allan S. Haywood, director of organization.

The appeal for financial aid to carry on the defense, signed by Secretary-Treasurer Gerald Fielde and Chairman Grant Oakes of the FEWOC, asked that funds be sent to the Richmond Defense Fund Committee, 1110 So. Oakley Blvd., Chicago.

In his letter endorsing the appeal, Haywood asserted that the workers were brutally attacked by police during the strike which was called after the company had refused to grant a wage increase, although its profits had trebled.

"As a result of this strike and litigation, the Farm Equipment Workers find themselves in a position where financial assistance is needed and the men assured a fair trial," Haywood wrote.

DANGER SEEN

"A conviction in this case," FEWOC Chairman Oakes said, "will be a signal for every fascist-minded employer to conspire with the police and politicians to smash any concerted action taken by union men and women to improve their wages and working conditions.

"It will legalize roving bands of home-grown storm troopers, such as those allowed to run wild in Richmond, terrorizing the town's entire population.

"The Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Commititee is doing everything possible to nip the plot of the Richmond Hitlerites to railroad the 65 CIO defendants to jail. But it takes money—huge sums of money—at least $4,000 every week."

CIO Radio Men Offer Anti-Spy Plan

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4—Adoption of the anti-espionage plan of the American Communications Association would do an effective job of preventing espionage through radio marine messages, Joseph Selly, ACA president, told a Senate Committee hearing testimony on the Bland bill, HR 5074.

The ACA plan, Selly explained, would prevent espionage and at the same time preserve the radio operators' right to organize and bargain collectively, which would be destroyed under the proposed bill. The bill, he pointed out, would put operators' licenses and consequently their livelihood at the mercy of government officials whenever an operator came under suspicion of being "subversive."

Selly followed the CIO Maritime Committee on the witness stand to criticize the bill on the ground that it would "serve as the instrument through which anti-labor employers and their hirelings could deprive of his living any radio operator who by his trade union activity displeased them, and thereby serve as a club to smash the trade union of marine radio operators."

Under the ACA anti-espionage plan, the ship's captain would have control of all power going to the radio shack through a meter switch on the bridge, together with a device to record every signal sent from the ship. Other features of the plan include equipment to prevent transmission on wavelengths other than the one regularly assigned to the ship, installation of new equipment to prevent giving the ship's position away as now possible with old equipment, expansion of present listening-in services by the government, use of three operators on each ship rather than one, and a prohibition of use of intermediate wavelengths except when the ship is within a day's journey of port.

AT STATE COUNTY PARLEY: The so-called weaker sex was much in evidence at the convention of the CIO State, County and Municipal Workers in Lansing, Mich., but when it came to supporting their union, the girls were just as strong as their brother delegates. Convention proclaimed right of government workers to organize and bargain collectively.

Unions Assail OPM-AFL Deal As Blow at Rights

By CECIL OWEN

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4—Sharp protests were pouring into Washington from CIO affiliates and the public against an OPM labor policy on defense construction projects that injures defense and infringes the basic right of workers to chose their own union.

The protests were aimed at the recent stabilization agreement negotiated between Sidney Hillman, OPM official, and the Building Trades Department of the AFL. This agreement is interpreted by OPM as freezing out the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee, CIO affiliate, on all defense construction jobs.

Under this OPM policy, contractors who employ other than AFL labor are denied the right to participate in the defense program, regardless of efficiency, economy, or other factors. If their employes happen to be members of the UCWOC or other CIO unions, they are barred from receiving defense contracts.

The issue has come most sharply to a head in the case of a 300-unit defense housing project at Wayne, Mich., near Detroit, on which a UCWOC builder submitted a bid which was $431,000 below his nearest competitor's bid. The Federal Works Agency was about to award the contract to P. J. Currier, the UCWOC firm, when OPM intervened.

WORKERS WILL SUFFER

Homes in this project are eventually to be sold to the workers who occupy them. Rejection of the Currier bid would mean that these workers will be eleven years longer paying for their homes. The economy is not at the expense of UCWOC labor since wage rates are identical under Davis-Bacon act procedure. Neither is it at the expense of the house since identical specifications must be complied with by all bidders.

The Currier bid was so amazingly low because this large firm prefabricates the house parts in a 40-acre plant in Detroit and assembles them on the site. It is the industrial technique rather than the craft method that makes these big savings possible.

Facts in the Currier incident are so plain that the case has become a major concern in current government labor policy. It has served to expose the discriminatory OPM policy in dramatic fashion. FWA chief John M. Carmody has admitted that OPM interference is the only reason for withholding the award of the contract.

Hillman, OPM labor policy maker, was at the AFL building trades convention in Seattle, when the case broke here. In his absence, OPM was keeping mum, but other officials were indignant about the delay in this project and the extra expense caused by OPM's attitude. FWA officials made no bones of the fact that they wished to award the job to Currier at once.

This is but the latest of a series of incidents that have arisen as a result of OPM's deal with the AFL. In another recent case, 300 UCWOC members were ordered off a defense job by OPM officials, but a compromise settlement let them finish work under way. All new work was ordered subcontracted to AFL contractors only at additional expense and loss of time.

When the OPM-AFL pact was first announced, Chairman A. D. Lewis of the UCWOC wrote Hillman and registered a vigorous protest. The UCWOC had been excluded from the conferences and was not even allowed to see the pact until its publication.

Technical Men's Union To Convene in Detroit

NEW YORK, Oct. 4—The role of technical men in the nation's defense emergency will be the principle theme of the Sixth Convention of the Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists & Technicians, CIO, which will take place in Detroit October 10, 11 and 12th.

The bulk of the Federation's members are employed in the nation's key defense industries such as auto, aircraft, ship and electrical manufacturing.

The organization has made a considerable progress during the past year and now numbers upwards of 8500 members.

The FAECT recently scored a number of victories through NLRB elections held at the General Motors, Turnstedt, Cadillac, Buick and Styling Divisions as well as in the Chrysler Highland Park and Dodge plants in Detroit, it was announced today by Lewis Alan Berne, international president, in a statement listing the gains of the organization during the past year.

"In some industrial centers our members have made considerable gains in wages through the contracts signed by our organization," Berne continued.

TRANSIT UNION MEETS: Delegates to the third biennial convention of the CIO Transport Workers' Union, meeting in New York, get a report on organizational gains during past two years. They heard leaders denounce anti-union position of many New York City officials who have fought against signing an agreement covering city-owned subway lines.

Transport Union Urges Drive In Utilities

NEW YORK, Oct. 4—Extension of organizing to include public utilities, subject to approval of the national CIO, marked the close of the convention of the Transport Workers Union here. The extension was adopted as an amendment to the union's constitution.

Its intention, convention speakers explained, was not to raid existing unions, but to organize unorganized workers "employed in, on or about any and all passenger and other transport facilities and public utilities."

Following up the officers' report at the beginning of the convention, the delegates approved a resolution endorsing the President's policies of "all aid to the peoples fighting Hitler," and declaring the military defeat of Hitler to be "in the best interests of our nation, and above all the trade union movement."

The convention also demanded that Harry Bridges be freed of deportation charges, urged freedom for political and labor prisoners, denounced the N. Y. Board of Transportation for its policies on the subways. Michael Quill was re-elected president, and Matthias Kearns vice president. Douglas MacMahon was elected secretary-treasurer, succeeding John Santo, who was voted a year's pay in recognition of his services to the union since its formation.

Missouri CIO Council Elects New Officials

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo., Oct. 4—Delegates to the third annual convention of the Missouri CIO Industrial Union Council, held here last weekend, elected a new slate of officers for the coming year and took action on a number of important problems facing CIO unions in the state.

David Watkins, international representative of the United Mine Workers, was elected president to succeed Delmond Garst, president for the past two years, who declined to run again because of increased activity and responsibility in affairs of his own union, the United Automobile Workers.

Harold Edwards, representative of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, was elected secretary-treasurer to succeed James T. Nash, international representative of the United Construction Workers, who also had served for two terms.

Principal speakers at the convention were Governor Forrest C. Donnell; Pres. R. J. Thomas, of the UAW; Harvey Freming, Oil Workers International Union; Powers Hapgood, regional director in Indianapolis and Norman Smith, assistant director of the UAW Ford Organizing Committee. Government officials from the Social Security Board and the Wage-Hour Administration also spoke.

In another resolution, the delegates urged that "John L. Lewis and his successor Philip Murray be commended for their unswerving loyalty and patience" in molding CIO policies which have brought organization to five million mass workers in five years.

California CIO Heads Hit Ruling On Bridges

OAKLAND, Calif., Oct. 3—An increase of more than 45,000 in California CIO membership during the past year was reported today by the California State Industrial Union Council as arrangements were concluded for the opening of its fourth annual convention today.

The officers' report, jointly prepared for presentation to the Convention by President Philip Connelly and Secretary Louis Goldblatt of the State CIO Council, placed total CIO membership in the state at more than 160,000 and announced that the state organization had taken in 53 new affiliates during the year.

CIO Regional Director Harry Bridges, slated to talk Saturday, and Gov. Culbert L. Olson, scheduled for Friday afternoon, are headliners among the speakers.

LARGE CONVENTION

Indications are that this year's parley will be half again as large as the 1940 convention, with approximately 450 delegates in attendance.

Full aid to the nations fighting Hitlerism is urged in the officers' report which will be presented to the Convention Friday.

A lengthy section of the report takes note of the report of Trial Examiner Charles B. Sears recommending deportation of Harry Bridges. Sears is accused of anti-labor bias, and Bridges is pledged unwavering support of the CIO in the officers' round-up which declares:

"The action of Trial Examiner Sears in proposing the deportation of Harry Bridges is a fighting challenge to the CIO's five million members and their ability to protect and defend their trusted leader."

HAIL MURRAY PLAN

The State council takes a strong stand in support of CIO President Philip Murray's industry council plan for increased participation by organized labor in the planning and execution of the defense program.

Extend Government Workers' Rights, Is Plea

LANSING, Oct. 4—Five million workers employed in Federal and local government need full collective bargaining rights, now denied them, in order to take their place as American citizens working under equal protection of the law, the State, County and Municipal Workers declared in a policy statement adopted toward the close of their second biennial convention here.

"There is no reason why government workers should be excluded from the operation of labor relations acts, and every effort must be made as soon as feasible to wipe out their exclusion from the benefits of the Natl. Labor Relations Act and the several state labor relations acts," the declaration said.

"We are resolved to use every legitimate means at our command to overcome, once and for all, in every way possible, this basic discrimination against government workers."

RIGHT TO STRIKE

In line with this, the SCMWA affirmed the right of government workers to take strike action if necessary to enforce collective bargaining, protested persecution of government workers by special snooping committees and reactionary officials, and passed a resolution upholding the merit system.

The convention also urged speedy adoption of the CIO Industry Council plan as presented by Pres. Murray, and expressed its appreciation to him and to the national CIO for "financial, moral and organization support." Earlier Pres. Murray wired his greetings to the delegates, in which he pledged CIO aid in winning collective bargaining rights for government employes.

Describing government workers as "the ground crew and home guard" of national defense, the delegates unanimously passed a resolution calling for the military defeat of Hitlerism and condemning "appeasement."

Abram Flaxer was re-elected president for a two year term and Henry Wenning secretary treasurer.

N.Y. CIO Barbers Win Strike

New York, Oct. 4—A three-week strike has ended in a major victory for 3,000 members of the CIO Natl. Barbers & Beauty Culturists Organizing Committee.

The walkout, which closed hundreds of Manhattan shops, gave the men a $21 minimum for a 54-hour week, 50% commission over $36, seven legal holidays with pay. Manicurists gained $10 a week for a 48-hour week with commissions of 50% over $14. All hiring is to be done through the union offices.

TO ARBITRATE

The pact, signed by Local 1 of the union and the Broadway Master Barbers Assn., also provides for arbitration of the workers' demands for a 48-hour week with $25 pay for barbers and a week's vacation for barbers and manicurists. Adolph Rosenbaum, strike chairman, is to confer with Mayor LaGuardia regarding appointment of the arbitrator.

Pointing out that the contract lifted pay by $3 a week and cut the work week by 1½ hours, Rosenbaum declared:

"The gains recorded by our local serve as a beacon to all locals in the union."

Appeal for Aid To Toy Strikers

New York, Oct. 4—An urgent appeal for support of striking toy workers at the Holgate Bros. Co., Kane, Pa., was sent today to all CIO affiliates by Secy.-Treas. Alexander Ravitch of the United Paper, Novelty & Toy Workers.

The firm, which manufactures educational toys, has paid men employes an average of only 40 cents an hour and women about 32 cents.

"The members of this local union, though desperate and hungry, indignantly turned down" what union officials called a "shameful offer" of the firm to end the 10-week walkout by a weak compromise. The company offered to return only 175 of the 450 strikers to their jobs, and insisted upon retaining 75 scabs.

FACE HUNGER

Ravitch's letter to the CIO affiliates said the international union has done its best to assist the 450 strikers and their 1,500 dependants, but "our people in Kane are without clothing, shoes, money to pay rent or keep their homes warm in the fast approaching cold weather."

He asked unions to send contributions to United Toy Workers Local 309, c/o Hilton's Service Station, Wilcox Street & Biddle Road, Kane, Pa., and to inform the Holgate Toy Co., Kane, Pa., that its products are being placed on the unfair list until the firm settles the strike.

Murray Calls Confab On Defense Problems

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4—Declaring that the CIO has warned repeatedly against "widespread dislocations" of industry resulting from "the policies and management of the national defense program," Pres. Philip Murray today invited representatives of a number of those CIO affiliates most severely affected to attend a conference here October 20, to coordinate efforts to "mitigate the vicious effects of the industrial confusion as much as possible."

Murray's call to the conference pointed out that the CIO Industry Council Plan, "presented as a sound basic approach to the full utilization of our nation's capacity," has so far not been given consideration, with the result that "American industry has now been plunged into the midst of widespread dislocations."

In his letter, Murray stated:

"The CIO has from time to time beginning long ago pointed out that the policies and management of the National Defense Program were creating dangerous industrial and economic dislocations.

CIO'S WARNINGS

"We warned time and again that the failure to organize in such a way that full production could be established and that supplies of critical materials could be expanded would result in idle plants and increased unemployment.

"While on the one hand these dislocations mean the unemployment of workers, on the other they mean failure to get the maximum national output.

"The CIO Industry Council proposal was presented as a sound basic approach to the full utilization of our nation's capacity.

"So far, however, there has been a failure to heed the CIO's warnings or to consider its proposals, both general and specific.

RISING UNEMPLOYMENT

"The result is that American industry has now been plunged into the midst of widespread dislocations. These mean the destruction of many businesses and a spreading tide of unemployment.

"Several of the unions in the CIO have already begun work in their industries to mitigate the vicious effects of this industrial confusion as much as possible.

"In order that these efforts may be coordinated and intensified, we are calling a conference of representatives of the unions most severely affected. The conference would discuss the measures already taken by the unions and explore further steps which might be helpful to the unions individually and jointly."

Western Union, CIO Sign First Contract

DETROIT, Oct. 4—Members of the American Communications Association in this city are voting on the first agreement entered into between the Western Union Telegraph Company and the CIO Communications union, William Burke, ACA International Representative, announced.

ACA won sole collective bargaining rights in a recent NLRB election. An overwhelming vote for ratification of the contract is expected.

The new agreement, negotiated by a rank-and-file committee headed by Burke, will mean a wage increase of $65,000 to Detroit employees. A maintenance of membership clause, similar to that recommended by the Defense Mediation Board in a number of recent cases, has been incorporated in the pact.

Other important provisions are absolute job security to employees having five years service in the event of displacements resulting from mechanization; seniority governing promotions; free bicycle maintenance for messengers; establishment of a 90 cents an hour minimum wage for motor messengers.

The Detroit agreement is expected to have a marked salutary effect on the ACA's drive to organize Western Union workers in other communications centers.

Murray Assails Ruling Against Harry Bridges

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4—The decision of Judge Charles B. Sears ordering the deportation of Harry Bridges "lends aid and encouragement to the enemies of organized labor," Philip Murray, president of the CIO, said in announcing the CIO's determination to carry on the campaign in defense of Bridges until his rights as an individual and as the elected leader of thousands of American workers are fully recognized.

Sears' decision, made as presiding officer of the Dept. of Justice that tried Bridges for a second time on charges of "communism," was given at the end of a 10-week hearing on the case and after he had refused to accept proof from defense attorneys that Bridges' wires were illegally tapped by the FBI as part of a long-term conspiracy to send him out of the country.

The report, Murray pointed out, constitutes an attack on the basic right of American workers to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing.

"Recent events have demonstrated ever more clearly that the basis of freedom rests on the right of workers to organize in labor unions and to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing," Murray said. "An attack on this right menaces the basic fabric of American democracy."

AFL PLUS SPIES

Sears report relied heavily on testimony by Harry Lundeberg, appointed leader of a dual AFL maritime union, and by one Ezra Chase, self-confessed labor spy who worked for the notorious Capt. Hynes of the Los Angeles red squad, which, as Murray pointed out, was exposed and sharply condemned for anti-labor acts by the LaFollette Civil Liberties Committee.

Lundeberg's bias against Bridges and against the Intl. Longshoremen and Warehousemen's Union was admitted in testimony both by Lundeberg himself and in the report by Sears. "He made no effort to conceal his enmity for Bridges," Sears wrote.

"He characterized Bridges' labor record with a damaging phrase, saying 'it stinks.' He expressed the view that the trade union movement on the coast would be better off without him. However, I do not believe his bias would cause him to deviate from the truth."

This statement, admitting prejudice and bias on the part of an FBI witness and at the same time brushing it aside as of no importance, characterized the Sears report throughout, as does Sears' own attitude toward

Statement on Decision

WASHINGTON, Oct. 1—President Philip Murray of the CIO today issued the following statement on the proposed order for the deportation of Harry Bridges:

The Congress of Industrial Organizations has consistently and vigorously upheld the right of Harry Bridges, elected leader of 25,000 American workers, to remain in this country and carry on legitimate activities for the betterment of their living and working conditions.

Recent events have demonstrated ever more clearly that the basis of freedom rests on the right of workers in labor unions and to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing. An attack on this right menaces the basic fabric of American democracy.

The report of Judge Charles B. Sears, recommending the deportation of Harry Bridges, unfortunately lends aid and encouragement to the enemies of organized labor in this country. A study of the report shows that it relies largely upon sources that are either admittedly guilty of bias against Bridges or of working against organized labor.

Thus, the report relies mainly upon the evidence of an official of a rival union in the American Federation of Labor, one Harry Lundeberg, whom Judge Sears himself quotes and describes as having "made no effort to conceal his enmity for Bridges." The report also condones the activities of the notorious Los Angeles labor spy police squad, an organization that was exposed by the La Follette Civil Liberties Committee.

Realizing the gravity of the threat to the organized labor movement if this type of attack on its elected leaders is permitted to stand, the CIO, through its already constituted committee for the defense of Harry Bridges, will carry on its campaign to protect his constitutional rights as an individual and as a duly elected leader of thousands of American workers.

Hobbs Bill Near Vote In House

Washington, Oct. 4 — The Hobbs concentration camp bill (HR 3) is coming up for a vote on the House floor, possibly early next week, according to information in Congress here.

The bill would put aliens in jail for indefinite periods and would deport alien members of international unions.

The bill has been opposed by the CIO at three conventions and in testimony before the House Judiciary Committee. Appearing on the bill last May, John T. Jones, CIO legislative representative and director of Labor's Non-Partisan League, declared that "attacks on the rights of the non-citizen or the foreign born are a prelude and cover for attacks on the rights of the labor movement."

Rep. Hobbs, author of the bill, comes from the polltax state of Alabama. His attempts over the past three years to get the measure through have been blocked each time by labor and progressive opposition, as was his attempt to push a bill to legalize wiretapping earlier in the session.

Hobbs has openly boasted that the purpose of the bill is to "get" labor leaders and members who happen to be non-citizens.

Storm Troopers

"We took 10 men with their guns up to Gadsden the other night and cleaned out the picket line at Republic in no time. Give me my uniform and 10 good men with guns and we could clean up the Post strike in a few minutes."

This is the kind of language that was heard in Italy when gangs of Fascist bullies were terrorizing the unions preparatory to Mussolini's seizure of power; or in Germany, when Nazi storm troopers were playing a similar role for Hitler.

It has an ominous ring when heard in the United States. Yet the man so quoted is a prominent state guardsman in Alabama and office manager of the Birmingham Post, against which the Newspaper Guild is on strike.

Such language is still more ominous when coupled with a number of recent outbreaks of vigilante violence. For instance, a group of CIO organizers were driven out of Helena, Ark., by a mob of 50 men; and more recently two CIO organizers were kidnapped near Harriman, Tenn., tied to trees, whipped with blackjacks and guns and left naked.

The CIO will not be stopped by such brutal violence, of course. On the contrary, it will steel the determination of the workers to organize and obtain the protection of strong unions against such terrorism. The effect at the Mead Corp. in Harriman, for instance, was a more than two-to-one vote for District 50 of the United Mine Workers shortly after its organizer had been a victim of this mob violence.

But the CIO does demand immediate action by local and state authorities, and by the Federal Department of Justice, to defend our constitutional rights of freedom of speech and assembly and to punish the criminal assaults that have occurred.

It also joins with all good Americans in serving notice that we want no Fascist storm troopers running amok in this country.

Flagrant Favoritism

No government agency has the right to violate the spirit of the Natl. Labor Relations Act by dictating to workers their choice of union affiliation; nor has it the right to dictate to employers that they must deal with the AFL rather than the CIO.

Yet the CIO United Construction Workers Organizing Committee reports that the OPM has been guilty of just such behavior in several recent instances of flagrant favoritism to the AFL as against the CIO.

For instance, the Blaw-Knox Co., which employed some 300 CIO workers to recondition a steel plant at Martins Ferry, O., was told by an OPM official that it must fire the CIO men and hire AFL workers "because all defense construction work belongs to the AFL."

More recently, the Currier Lumber Co., an employer under agreement with the CIO Construction Workers, submitted the lowest bid for a defense housing project at Wayne, Mich., only to be advised later that the OPM review board had recommended against granting the contract on the grounds that it should go to an AFL concern.

American labor had a long and hard struggle to win for the workers the right to organize into unions of their own choosing, which is now written into the law of the land. So far as the CIO is concerned, it is going to defend this right against violation by employers, by the OPM or by anyone else.

Labor's Rights

There is no question that the report of Judge Charles B. Sears, recommending the deportation of Pres. Harry Bridges of the Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, "lends aid and encouragement to the enemies of organized labor," as CIO Pres. Philip Murray points out.

It has been greeted with glee by labor-baiting politicians, by union-fighting employers and by the anti-labor press.

Such enemies of labor care little about the technicalities of the case, about the obvious bias of the report, or about the credence it gives to Bridges' personal enemies and organizational rivals, to labor spies and to other unsavory witnesses. They rejoice because they regard the report as a crackdown on labor.

The CIO will continue its campaign for Bridges, Murray announces, both to defend his constitutional rights as an individual and because it recognizes the grave threat to all labor in such persecution of a union leader and such interference with the workers' right to have representatives of their own choosing.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

NO BROOKINGS professors were among the vigilantes who recently kidnaped, slugged and tarred two CIO organizers in Roane county, Tennessee, it is reliably reported.

Nor is it likely that any Congressmen donned masks to demonstrate in this practical fashion their belief in "freezing wages."

As they ripped off the clothes of the organizers, blackjacked them and laid on the hot tar, the vigilantes explained their actions by saying: "We're not going to pay northern wages in Tennessee."

It was not to be expected that any professors would join in this crude form of opposition to higher wages, since they have other and more congenial methods of expression.

The Brookings Institution, for instance, expressed itself by issuing a report purporting to show that the government must "control wage rates" if it wishes to prevent inflation.

The masks behind which Congressmen attempt to conceal their efforts to keep wages down are likewise not so crude as those used in the hills of Tennessee. Their masks are of the widest and wordiest variety, ranging from alien-baiting and flag-waving speeches to corporation-supplied statistics on taxation and wage-control.

The CIO, for its part, has to fight back on many fronts against all these varied methods of keeping wages down.

Against vigilante attacks, it must depend upon the courage and determination of its organizers and of the workers themselves. It must also mobilize all possible pressure to demand that the authorities protect the workers' civil rights.

Against such propaganda as is put out by the Brookings Institution, the CIO has to mobilize and publicize its counter-arguments, at the same time exposing the pretense to academic impartiality of an institution which regularly reflects the employers' point of view.

Against the many kinds of legislation which conceal a wage-cutting purpose, the CIO has to mobilize the pressure of a people's lobby and to organize politically to make labor's votes count.

The wage-control proposals now being made in the press, by brain-trusters of the profiteers, and before Congress, are unsound and dangerous for the following, as well as many other reasons:

(1) They are based on the argument that wages must be kept down if prices are to be controlled and inflation checked. Yet the fact is that recent price increases have not been caused by higher wages but by far different causes, such as profiteering, shortages, hoarding, speculation, etc.

(2) The proposals to control wages would "freeze" a condition in which millions of American workers do not even enjoy a living wage, to the further advantage of war profiteers whose soaring dividends and luxury demands are a public scandal.

(3) These proposals would break down voluntary collective bargaining and undermine the labor unions, by depriving them of power to improve their members' wages. This effect is not incidental. It is one of the main, though unstated, reasons why so much pressure is being exerted for wage control.

We are not changing the subject if we jump from vigilante activities and wage control to Harry Bridges' deportation, the Hobbs concentration camp bill and the other anti-alien and allegedly anti-subversive bills which the CIO is opposing in Congress.

Pres. Murray has pointed out that the biased decision of Judge Charles B. Sears against Bridges is in effect an attack on the right of labor unions to elect their own leaders; and that the longshoremen's president has been singled out for persecution, not on account of his views, but because his union activities have antagonized influential employer groups.

Similarly the alien-baiting and other bills opposed by the CIO are ill-concealed attempts to curtail labor union rights; and to expose active unionists to persecution on the same kind of phoney pretexts as union-fighting employers usually advance.

It must be remembered that our economy is based on the profit system, whose basic laws continue to operate without regard even to national defense.

One of these laws is that employers are constantly driven, often by pressures beyond their control, to maintain and increase their profits at the expense of wages. Labor unions are the chief force opposing this tendency, preventing extremes of exploitation and promoting more equal wealth distribution.

There are therefore at all times powerful interests working to undermine the unions by open or devious means. This hostility may find expression in vigilante attacks and other violence. But it is also expressed in present wage-control proposals and in all sorts of anti-labor bills. The connecting link between all these moves is their intended effect in boosting profits at the expense of wages.

AFL Local Joins CIO Mine Workers, Wins Quick Pact

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Oct. 4—Local 51 of the Progressive Mine Workers, has left the AFL and affiliated with the CIO United Mine Workers, it was announced here at District 12 headquarters of the UMW. The District Office also reported the signing of a union shop agreement with the management of Mine "A" in Springfield.

"Within 24 hours after Secretary-Treasurer Thomas Kennedy had issued a charter," a statement issued by District 12 declared, Dist. Pres. Ray Edmundson succeeded in helping the new UMW local negotiate and secure a signed model agreement with Mine "A" management, which had been recognizing the Progressives since 1933."

George Deruy, president of the new UMW local said after the charter was issued: "We are happy to be home at last. We appreciate the consideration shown by Pres. John L. Lewis and Dist. President Edmundson in our being able to rejoin the UMW without penalties and with all full rights and privileges.

"We got disgusted with Ozanic's bunch (Joe Ozanic, president of the Progressive Miners) when they showed their utter bankruptcy in the recent coal negotiations. Why did we need them when they just sat around while John L. Lewis was doing the real job of fighting for all the miners.

"Every member of every local remaining with the Progressives should now join the UMW. This senseless split must be ended. Then we will have a strong unified movement under one great president, John L. Lewis, and we'll all go places."

This is the second major set back for the Progressive outfit in the Sangamon county area this year. Last February Mine "B" at Springfield went overwhelmingly for the UMW in a Labor Board election and is now operating under an UMW contract.

Independent Joins CIO

Philadelphia, Pa., Oct. 4— An eight year old independent union at Harbison's Dairy here has voted to affiliate with the CIO, George Craig, CIO regional director reported this week. The union has 430 members.

An attempt by the AFL to organize these workers failed miserably, Craig said. "At the meeting held Sept. 30, the AFL organizers were booed and chased from the premises where the meeting was held," he declared.

unions. Thus, in disposing of the role of Chase as labor spy, Sears commented:

"The alien (Sears' way of referring to Bridges) devoted much effort to show that Ezra Chase had done labor spying. It was shown that he had furnished information to the police of Los Angeles. The alien called on Capt. Wm. F. Hynes and Charles D. Catherman, officers of the Los Angeles police in charge of labor troubles to establish this.

"There is no evidence that such information reached the employers. I find no impropriety in the police department, obtaining information in any legal way of the probability of future events which might call for police action."

In other words, Sears' report, as Pres. Murray points out in his statement, "condones the activities of the notorious Los Angeles labor police spy squad" known by millions of American workers as one of the most ruthless anti-union police squads in existence.

"GOOD" LABOR LEADERS

The question of what makes a "good" labor leader apparently concerned Judge Sears, for he devoted several pages of the report to a study of the problem—coming to the conclusion that Bridges could not possibly be good—because he was 1; a "communist" and 2; disobedient to his "AFL superiors" before 1937.

Thus, after admitting that Bridges "undoubtedly greatly aided the maritime workers in securing higher wages" and that "he may well have shown good judgment and even wisdom in negotiations," Sears declares reprovingly:

"On the other hand, it is to be noted that in 1937 he worked against his superiors in the AFL and he and his union were expelled therefor. He favored strikes disapproved by his AFL superiors."

(The facts are that Bridges and the union did work against the racketeering, company union leadership of Joe Ryan of the AFL Longshoremen, and that the union came over to the CIO under his leadership in 1937, was never expelled.)

Win Long Strike

Robert, Calif.—Pay boosts running up to $15 a month were won by members of the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers at the Trojan Powder Co. here after a 24-week walkout.

Bridges Denies Sears' Charges

New York, Oct. 4—The deportation order against him is one more step in the fight of big business against organized labor, Harry Bridges, California CIO head, commented in a statement issued here.

"Judge Sears' decision shows little understanding of labor problems and the working people's efforts to secure decent living standards through organization," Bridges declared. "The Sears decision proves that big business lobbyists in Washington have to be appeased, and the honor of the government department which presented the charges and then itself selected Judge Sears to rule on these charges, had to be protected."

DENIES CHARGE

Charging that application of Judge Sears' "formula" would smash all American unions, Bridges added:

"Despite Judge Sears' findings, I am not and have not been a member of the Communist party. I shall continue to refuse to be a red-baiter, witch-hunter and union-wrecker. I shall continue to oppose and fight Hitlerism and fascism, at home as well as abroad.

"American trade unions must be on guard. This decision can be applied to them and threaten their very existence as free organizations, and their right to organize."

Quaker Oats Knows Its Oats!

The agreement calls for paid vacations up to three weeks' depending upon length of service, time and a half for work on Saturdays and Sundays and double time on holidays.

Haywood Raps 'Freeze-Wage' Propaganda

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4—Plans to freeze wages by government action, currently being promoted in anti-labor circles, were sharply denounced in a statement issued here by Allan S. Haywood, national director of organization, CIO, in commenting on a report by the Brookings Institution.

The Brookings report, which called for wage limits ostensibly to prevent inflation, was described by Haywood as "a substantial disservice" to the country and as based on an "inaccurate and superficial study" of prices, wages and profits.

Haywood's statement, which followed one last week by Pres. Murray also criticizing proposed wage limits, pointed out that wage increases won by CIO "could be and have been paid without the necessity of price rises, and that price increases now in effect have come from profiteering, speculation, hoarding and unnecessary material scarcities."

"The perfectly fantastic profits now being made by American industry in spite of substantially increased taxes show, in themselves, that the increased wage costs have not forced industry to raise wages," Haywood said. "The extensive and careful testimony given before the Banking and Currency Committee of the House clearly prove that wage increases that have taken place have not been responsible for price rises."

The fact is, Haywood added, that much of the increase in real wages has come from overtime pay resulting from increased hours, and that increased hours bring even more profitable production than regular hours.

ONE OF A SERIES

The Brookings Institution's report is only part of a series of similar proposals that have been made in recent weeks to hold wages down to arbitrary levels. These plans for wage freezing have come from newspapers, industrialists, and certain government officials. Leon Henderson, in charge of price control for the U. S. Government, has indicated that he is opposed to the idea, but Marriner S. Eccles, head of the Federal Reserve Bank, has publicly favored it.

Sharp contrast between the enthusiasm of newspaper publishers for wage freezing and their horror at the idea of profit fixing was evident in the editorial treatment given Treasury Secretary Morgenthau's gingerly-offered plan to hold profits at six per cent, which has been giving the newspapers the jitters ever since it was tentatively put forward at a price control bill hearing. Wage fixing, of course, is something else again.

CIO TO TESTIFY

CIO plans to testify on price control were revealed in Pres. Murray's letter of last week to the chairman of the House Banking Committee asking for an opportunity to be heard on the bill.

THEY ALSO WALK: The pickets weren't the only ones using their feet when the CIO Building Service Workers struck the 58-story building at 500 Fifth Avenue in New York. Elevator service was crippled by the union's protest against management refusal to negotiate a union contract. The pickets (above) seem to be bearing up better than Miss Ellin Merrill, a model employed in an office on the 24th floor, who's sadly regarding her dogs after the long hike up.

Furniture Strike in Arkansas

Ft. Smith, Ark., Oct. 4—Nearly a thousand workers in six furniture plants here walked out when their employers refused to negotiate an agreement giving them decent wages and working conditions.

Local 270, United Furniture Workers, announced that the strikers would go back when a settlement providing better pay and working conditions was reached.

Ernest March, UFW secretary-treasurer, who is assisting in negotiating the dispute, praised the "splendid support from local unions in the Ft. Smith area which has strengthened the determination of the furniture workers."

300 Attend Kentucky CIO Parley

Union representatives to the two-day convention will hear reports showing that CIO membership in the Blue Grass State has increased by 17,810 members in one year, and discussion will be directed towards further organization of Kentucky workers.

Scheduled to address the convention are Pres. William Mitch of District 20, United Mine Workers, Birmingham, Ala., and Michael F. Widman, Jr., CIO assistant director of organization.

Keep 'Em Shaving!

NEW YORK — In line with their drive to help out conscriptees in the U. S. Army, Local 1224 of the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers (CIO) has included a novel clause in its new contract with the Blue Strike Razor Co.: The management undertakes to provide any Local 1224 member who goes into the army with free razor blades.

The contract also includes a $2 weekly pay raise, paid holidays and vacations, and other union conditions.

AT LONG LAST:

U. S. Launches Coal Mine Inspection Drive to Cut Deaths

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4—Uncle Sam this week embarked on a program of inspecting safety conditions in the nation's coal mines.

The action climaxes long-time demands of the United Mine Workers for government intervention to halt the ever-increasing number of fatal accidents in coal mine disasters. Supported by the unions of the CIO, the UMW won passage of the Flannery Federal Mine Inspection Bill by Congress early this year after Pres. John L. Lewis repeatedly demanded protection for the mine workers.

Into the coal areas of the country the Dept. of Interior's Bureau of Mines is sending 107 inspectors—all of them qualified by at least five years' experience in coal mining work—to maintain continuous watch over safety conditions in the mining properties.

The inspectors will make public summaries of mine conditions and practices which are felt to require immediate attention. The reports will be available to the union and mine owners, publications, insurance organizations, health and safety commissions and others seeking information about mine safety conditions.

General policies of the inspection campaign—for which Congress has appropriated $729,000—were discussed at a meeting of the Advisory Committee on Mine Inspections in Washington last month. Attending were representatives of employes, the Dept. of Interior and the Bureau of Mines, and three leaders of the UMW: Sec.-Treas. Thomas Kennedy, John T. Jones, who is director of Labor's Non-Partisan League, and Percy Tetlow, UMW industrial representative.

Win First CIO Strike In Little Rock

Little Rock, Ark., Oct. 4—(FP)—The first CIO strike in the Little Rock area resulted in a substantial victory for workers at the Koppers Wood Preserving Co. tie plant near here, when the company signed a contract recognizing Local 8-298, Intl. Woodworkers of America, as sole bargaining agency.

The pact lifts pay 8% and grants full seniority, time-and-a-half overtime and vacations.

NEW LOCALS

The union won after a 3-week strike in which deputy sheriffs attempted to terrorize the Negroes who form 75% of the membership. Organized only recently, the local now has more than 200 members, and won an NLRB election 15-1. The strike was called when the company refused to arbitrate.

Assistance came from many quarters. Otis G. Nation, Oklahoma representative of the CIO Cannery and Agriculture Workers, helped throughout the strike, and Howard Lee of the United Mine Workers aided in the negotiations.

SIGN MINE PACT: Industrial peace and wage increases were the gains won when District 6 of the United Mine Workers, covering Ohio, signed a contract with the state Coal Operators Assn. Initialing the pact are R. L. Ireland, Jr., head of the association, and UMW District 6 Pres. John Owens.

HOLD 'EM ELI!

CIO Gets First Down—Yale Consents to Poll

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Oct. 4—Yale's chances for a successful football season—not conceded to be very high—are taking second place in the conversations of a lot of people here.

For some time next week the Connecticut Board of Mediation and Arbitration will hold the first union election in Yale's history among 700 university maintenance workers. The Yale directorate has agreed to bargain with the union chosen as sole bargaining agent, and Local 142, CIO United Construction Workers, predicts a sweeping victory.

The university's precedent-breaking agreement to bargain with a union followed a threat by the UCW to call a strike for higher wages, better working conditions, union shop, paid vacations and grievance machinery.

Yale was described last week by John J. Clark, union organizer, as the "worst sweatshop in New England." Despite the scores of millions of dollars in its treasury, it pays 140 charwomen only $11.25 for a 30-hour week, and requires each woman to clean as many as 50 dormitory rooms a day.

May Strike At RCA Wireless

New York, Oct. 4—Workers at RCA Communications here have notified the Defense Mediation Board and Pres. Roosevelt that they are ready for strike action, if necessary, to enforce their demands for wage increases and the closed shop.

The workers, members of the American Communications Assn., CIO started negotiating three weeks ago and reached a deadlock when the company flatly refused their demands, demanding in turn that the contract be worsened in more than 17 sections.

Tennessee Mobsters Attack CIO Organizers; Protests Mount

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

Two anti-labor acts occurred this week that will, if they are allowed to stand, give encouragement to the enemies of democracy in this country and in other lands as well. One is the brutal, murderous beating of CIO organizers by hired thugs in Tennessee; the other is the deportation order of Judge Charles B. Sears against Harry Bridges.

The whipping and tar and feathering of CIO organizers is an example of open terrorism at its worst. These men, engaged in the lawful business of organizing workers and in preparing for an election under the Natl. Labor Relations Act, were kidnapped, tied to trees and beaten to the point of serious injury, left naked and told that next time they would be killed. The hired thugs who committed these crimes openly boasted of what they were doing, bragged about their purpose—to keep "northern wages" out of the South.

The attacks took place on the Federal highway. Local police officers were directly involved, according to the victims. The Governor of Tennessee has refused to give them the protection required by the law, despite threats of more thug violence. The case is now up to the Attorney General of the United States, since state and local police authorities not only refuse protection but actually encourage if they do not take part in the violence.

This kind of attack on workers and their representatives is grist to the mill of anti-democratic forces everywhere. It breeds further violence against the rights of workers, if it is allowed to go unchecked and unpunished. The duty of the U. S. Department of Justice is clear—to give workers in the South, or anywhere else, the full protection of the law in exercising their basic rights of freedom of speech and assembly.

THE BRIDGES CASE

The order of Judge Sears, acting for the Department of Justice, to deport Harry Bridges is also a serious blow at basic American rights, and an encouragement to the enemies of labor and democracy.

As President Murray pointed out in his statement on the Sears order, "Recent events have demonstrated ever more clearly that the basis of freedom rests on the right of workers to organize in labor unions and to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing. An attack on this right menaces the basic fabric of American democracy."

Bridges is the elected leader of 25,000 American workers, who have won better wages and living standards through the union he leads. The Sears report, which seeks to deport him for this activity, is based almost entirely on the evidence of individuals known for their prejudice against Bridges and against labor.

The CIO, as President Murray declared, has consistently upheld the right of Bridges to carry on his legitimate union activity in this country. It will continue to do so. President Murray has pledged that the CIO committee set up to defend Harry Bridges will carry on its campaign until his rights "as an individual and as a duly elected leader of thousands of American workers" are fully guaranteed.

Strikers Force Recall of Troops

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Oct. 4—Efforts to use 500 armed members of the Alabama Home Guard for strikebreaking purposes were completely defeated by a one-day walkout of 19,000 employes of two Birmingham mills operated by the Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Co.

Withdrawal of the troops by Governor Dixon of Alabama paved the way for settlement of the strikes at the TCI Ensley and Fairfield properties. For a time it appeared that another 8,000 CIO members, employed on the company's coal mines and red ore fields, might join the demonstration against state-protected strikebreaking.

The walkout started when Local 1489, Steel Workers Organzing Committee, voted to turn down company compromise offers for increased wage incentives. A few hours later the Home Guard was stationed at the Ensley plant with orders from the Governor to keep the plant gates open. Workers at the Fairfield plant immediately voted to go out until the troops had been withdrawn.

HOLD CONFERENCE

Conferences between Governor Dixon and William Mitch, SWOC regional director, and Noel Beddow, SWOC district director, brought about removal of the troops. A few hours later the Ensley local accepted a company offer for further negotiations on the wage question.

"The men will not go to work as long as those guards are there," Mitch told the Governor during the conferences.

The TCI walkout marked the second time within a month that Dixon had assigned the Home Guard for strike duty. The first was during a recent strike of the SWOC at the Gadsden plant of the Republic Steel Corp.

VIGILANTES

Local CIO officials blamed Home Guardsmen for the vigilantism which flared up in Gadsden during the Republic walkout. They pointed to a statement by Bob Ward, prominent State Guardsman, Legionnaire and office manager of the struck Birmingham Post, a Scripps-Howard paper. The American Newspaper Guild is seeking wage increases and the Guild shop.

Ward boasted: "We took ten men with their guns up to Gadsden the other night and cleaned out the picket line at Republic in no time. Give me my uniform and ten good men with their guns and we could clean up the Post strike in a few minutes."

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Oct. 4—The CIO held a union mass meeting in hill-bound Roane County this week.

Outside the Junior Order Hall in Harriman a hundred husky coal miners and quarry workers maintained a constant vigil to protect the employes of the Mead Corp. Paper Mill as they heard union organizers urge their vote for the CIO in a forthcoming Natl. Labor Relations Board election.

The mass meeting, with its workers' guard, was the CIO's answer to the mob of vigilantes and thugs who committed the year's worst act of anti-labor violence, the kidnaping and drenching with hot tar of two organizers as they left a union meeting in the town last week.

The men were Oscar Wiles of the United Mine Workers and Homer Wilson of the Int'l Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers. They were seized on Sept. 26 by masked men who drove them into the hills, ripped off their clothes, slugged them and kicked them and doused them with steaming tar.

"You've made your last trip to Roane County," the men were told.

"We're organized politically over here and we're not going to pay northern wages in Tennessee."

TEETH DROPPED OUT

"I didn't feel anything," he said later. "I was just too numb, I guess. Only when I opened my mouth to talk my teeth began to fall out like shucked corn."

The vigilantes' efforts to intimidate the Mead employes proved a dud, however, as District 50, United Mine Workers, scored a 2-1 victory in the election. District 50 received 96 votes to 43 for no union.

Tennessee and national CIO union leaders quickly came to the assistance of the men.

In a long telegram to Attorney General Francis Biddle, Secretary-Treasurer Paul Christopher of the Tennessee Industrial Union Council charged that police officers in Harriman, where the meeting was held, "were directly involved in the perpetration of this outrageous flogging."

Pointing out that the pre-election union meeting was scheduled for Sept. 30, Christopher added:

"Anti-union elements in Roane County have openly threatened to break up a scheduled mass meeting of employes . . . Gov. Prentice Cooper refused to send State Highway patrolmen to the scene to preserve law and order, and protect our constitutional right of free assembly . . .

DANGER SEEN

"It is acknowledged by law enforcement and state government officials that shooting may break out at the meeting tonight with possibility that several may be killed or severely injured . . .

"We respectfully beseech you to use your good offices and influence to see that federal laws are observed in Roane County, Tenn., and that we are allowed to meet peaceably tonight."

Apparently, the presence of miners and quarry workers held back the vigilantes from further interference with the meeting.

In Washington, Department of Justice officials said the case had been turned over to regional officials for further investigation.

Meanwhile, President William Turnblazer of the Tennessee CIO addressed this message to Governor Cooper:

'GESTAPO' AT LARGE

"Governor, have we reached the stage in the Volunteer State where members of the Gestapo can roam the highways of Roane County seizing and assaulting American citizens?

". . . I am calling upon you for assistance and a full and complete investigation of this outrage. I feel the state should offer a substantial reward for the arrest and conviction of those responsible for this dastardly act."

Wilson and Wiles, the victims of the vigilante assault, had been working together in Harriman, the former in organizing an iron mill reopened for defense production after years of idleness, the latter in preparing for the NLRB election at the paper mill.

STOPPED ON ROAD

The two men had addressed a mass meeting of workers in both plants, and were driving along U. S. Highway 27 when they were overtaken by another car packed with yelling men. A blast of rifle and revolver fire blew out the rear and two left windows and the left rear tire. They halted their car.

The vigilantes piled out. One drew a long knife and ripped off the trousers of the two CIO officials.

"They were holding pistols on us all the time," Wiles reported. "One of them went to work on my back and legs with a strap or horsewhip, I don't know which. Another was beating me between the shoulders with something that felt like a blackjack. They kept saying they weren't going to pay northern wages in Tennessee."

TIED TO TREE

The mobsters eventually tired of this sport, and, placing the men in their car, drove off into the hills. While they melted tar over a bonfire they tied Wilson and Wiles to a tree.

"They beat us with bushes, sticks, and blackjacks," Wilson recalled. "I kept sagging down like I had passed out. I guess I was just about passed out, at that."

After they had been tarred and then abandoned by the vigilantes, Wilson and Wiles managed to walk five miles to the farm of George Fezel, who drove them to the Sheriff at Kingston. He took them to Knoxville.

Doctors spent four hours and used twenty cans of ether to remove the tar from the union organizers.

"As soon as we recover we're going back," the two men said.

VIGILANTE VICTIMS: Worst outbreak of anti-labor violence in years occurred last week at Roane, Tenn., where a mob of masked men kidnapped two CIO organizers and drenched them with steaming tar. National and State CIO officials immediately demanded Dept. of Justice action against the criminals. Top: Homer Wilson of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers shows effect of the manhandling. Textile Union Wins $2,000,000 Boost At Celanese Corp.

CUMBERLAND, Md., Oct. 4—A ten-cent-an-hour increase, boosting the pay of close to 10,000 workers at the giant Celanese Corporation of America plant by $2,000,000 a year, was gained today in an agreement ratified by the membership of Celanese Local 1874, the largest rayon unit within the CIO Textile Workers Union.

Crowding into the large State Armory in Cumberland to hear final reports of the union's negotiating committee, Local 1874 members in two packed morning and evening meetings voted overwhelmingly to accept the agreement which secures the highest single wage increase ever granted in the rayon industry at one time.

The agreement, reached after two months of negotiations with company representatives in Cumberland and conferences before the U. S. Department of Conciliation in Washington, brought the minimum pay of Celanese workers three cents above the average minimum pay of workers in the rayon industry.

HIGH MINIMUM

The blanket increase of ten cents an hour sent the minimum wages of workers in the corporation's spinning department up to 87 cents an hour, in the examination department to 91 cents an hour, in the dyehouse to 80 cents an hour, in the textile division to 66 cents an hour, while top mechanics in the engineering division are to receive $1.02 an hour, their helpers 77 cents an hour and the labor rate is to be 66 cents an hour.

Improvements on other sections of the old contract brought approximately $50,000 more a year in vacation pay under the general wage increase, eliminated differentials under a reclassification of certain work and clarified regulations.

The agreement was hailed by Herbert W. Payne, international TWUA representative and director of the union's rayon division, and George A. Meyers, Local 1874 president, and Clyde D. Lucas, Local 1874 secretary-treasurer, as the "best ammunition for the defense of the workers living standards."

"The ability to secure such an increase in wages," Meyers declared, "was based upon an intelligent and sincere negotiating committee and upon an intelligent, united and progressive labor union."

Win Four Polls Near Philadelphia

Philadelphia, Oct. 4—The Steel Workers Organizing Committee has won four important polls in eastern Pennsylvania in recent weeks, it was revealed today by Michael Harris, sub-regional director.

Most important of the quartet was at the foundries division of the Baldwin Locomotive Works at Eddystone, where the SWOC polled 419 votes to only 125 against. As a result, the CIO steel union now has two of Baldwin's divisions under contract, and the election "will be the springboard to organizing the rest of the locomotive shop, numbering about 5,000 employes," according to Harris.

The other SWOC victories:

Hunter Manufacturing Co., Bristol—83 votes for SWOC, 9 against.

W. A. Case & Sons, Norristown—79 votes for SWOC, 8 against.

Rap Anti-Labor Bias In Jersey

PATERSON, N. J., Oct. 4—A demand that labor be given an equal voice with industry in guiding the vocational training school set-up in Paterson, N. J., was voiced today by Pres. Irving Abramson of the New Jersey Industrial Union Council.

At the same time the CIO official protested vigorously against the school's anti-Negro bias, reflected in the fact that not a single Negro has been included in the school's 5,000 entering students nor among the 3,500 placed at work in defense industries.

While U. S. Office of Education regulations specifically require equal representation for labor and management on vocational school advisory boards, the Paterson Vocation School has nine employers on its board and only one man from labor—a representative of an independent union.

"The result of this is that labor has not been given any opportunity to formulate any of the policies," Abramson said. "The result also is a discrimination of applicants who have had a trade union background, race discrimination and other arbitrary qualifications not contemplated under the existing law.

"Inasmuch as the federal government is contributing to the maintenance of these schools, it is not unfair to request that the laws of the United States be complied with in the maintenance of vocational training schools."

Discussing discrimination against Negroes, Abramson added:

"If workers are being asked to provide for national defense, we assume that it means defense of our democratic principles and institutions. Color discrimination is not the kind of thing which is conducive to the feeling that we are defending democracy here in America."

Clothing Union Demands U. S. Control Prices

NEW YORK, Oct. 4—Charging that profiteering is responsible for recent increases in retail prices, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers today demanded federal control of commodity prices.

An editorial in Advance, the ACW's monthly magazine, said that labor fears that wages will be frozen while prices and profits "fly to the four winds, whether openly or through artificial scarcity and bootleg selling.

"Prices are going up," the editorial stated. "They will keep going up unless firm, definite action is taken by the American people.

"Higher prices mean low earnings. The recorded price rises between 1939 and now almost exactly parallel the price rises during the first two years of the last war, and after the first two years, in 1918, they went heaven high. Are we going to have this all over again?"

The nation's organized workers, the ACW publication declared, will exert "firm, purposive, unbending pressure by labor upon Congress to make sure that Congress lives up to its responsibilities in these crucial times."

YIELDING TO CHANGE:

Southern Town Goes CIO In a Big Way

ATLANTA, Ga., Oct. 4—The town of Buford, 40 miles from Atlanta, has gone CIO in a big way. Its chief industrial plant is Bona Allen, Inc., a shoe company employing more than 2,000 workers.

Two employes of the company came here in August to ask help in organizing the plant, and received immediate response from C. H. Gillman, CIO regional director, and H. W. Denton, head of the Atlanta CIO Council.

In a few weeks most of the company's employes had signed membership application cards. The company agreed to recognize the union as sole bargaining agency without requiring a check by the Labor Board, and negotiations are now under way for a contract.

CITIZENS FRIENDLY

Buford citizens have been friendly and cooperative. The school auditorium seating 1,500 persons has been used for union meetings, and at meetings open to the public, it has been crowded to capacity, with hundreds standing outside listening to the speeches over an amplifier.

When Buford's Rotary Club asked for CIO speakers, Lucy R. Mason, CIO publicity representative, and Regional Director Gillman agreed to speak at a luncheon meeting.

The union spirit is sweeping Buford. Barbers have organized and applied for a charter, and other groups are asking organization. The nearby town of Flowery Branch is going union, too. Workers in the Chattahoochee Furniture Co. there have applied for a charter. Union meetings are also being arranged in other nearby towns.

GROWING IN ATLANTA

In Atlanta, the CIO is growing like a snowball. Contracts have just been signed with Pittsburgh Plate Glass, and with Motor Convoy, Inc., which hauls Ford cars. The CIO has just won an election at Georgia Art Supply Co. by a vote of 43 to 1, and a consent election will be held for employes of United Motor Service.

A long strike at the Austell Furniture Co., Austell, Ga., has been settled, and the company has agreed to bargain with the union under a court order. A contract with the Atlantic Steel Co. is being negotiated by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

Shipyard Union Re-elects Green

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Oct. 4—The seventh annual convention of the CIO Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Works wound up here after re-electing its national officers and voting full support for CIO Pres. Philip Murray's Industry Council plan.

John Green, president of the shipyard union, and Sec.-Treas. Philip Van Gelder were re-elected to new terms in office, while George Wright was elected vice-president without opposition.

DESCRIBES BUNGLING

The delegates heard CIO Sec. James B. Carey and Pres. R. J. Thomas of the automobile workers union demand more labor representation in the defense effort and government acceptance of the industry council plan, under which workers and employers would direct production scheduling for each industry.

Thomas told of defense bungling in the auto industry which has brought severe priorities unemployment and production curtailment.

"No workers are more interested in furthering defense than the auto workers," he said, "but thousands and thousands of them will not be given a chance to contribute to the defense program."

Sharply criticizing Charles Lindbergh's anti-Semitic statements as "a start for Fascism and Nazism in this country," the UAW-CIO head warned of the dangers to labor inherent in a Fascist victory in the war.

Sec. Carey told the 150 delegates that "it isn't enough to pass resolutions in support of the Murray plan. We must see to it that the plan is put into operation. We must demand greater labor representation."

CAREY SPEAKS

For "every labor representative in Washington, there are scores of dollar-a-year men," Carey pointed out. "So let's get in there and raise our voices and put people in there who can do the job."

The convention passed a resolution pledging full support to the people of England, the Soviet Union and China in their fight against Hitler's Nazism, because, as Pres. Green explained, "they are waging the battle of American democracy, too."

Earlier the convention had voted to bar Communists, Nazis and Fascists from holding office in the union.

Best Cigar Pact Gained In Detroit

DETROIT, Oct. 4—CIO contracts establishing the highest wages and best working conditions in the cigar industry have been signed with Diesel-Wemmer-Gilbert Corp., the United Cannery Agricultural, Packing & Allied Workers of America announced today.

The contracts covering 2,200 workers in the company's six plants in Detroit, and Lima, Findlay, Van Wert and St. Mary's, Ohio, were signed after a five-week strike, UCAPAWA Pres. Donald Henderson said.

Terms call for pay increase of 15 to 20 per cent; departmental, plant and company-wide seniority rights; grievance machinery, and provisions for negotiating a further increase.

MANY BENEFITS

Other gains never before won by machine cigar workers provide full payment for time lost when a machine breaks down more than 15 minutes; one hour's pay when called to work and not put to work, and double time if called back to work after being sent home; a month's bonus for all workers entering military service, and double pay for Sunday and holiday work.

Another agreement was signed by UCAPAWA recently covering the 900 workers of Consolidated Cigar Co., Camden, N. J., largest cigar firm in the United States. Terms include pay increases; a $14 weekly minimum; a week's paid vacation; seniority rights, a shop steward system and other gains.

ANOTHER WIN: Members of the CIO Shipyard Workers' Union hoist their fingers in a V-for-Victory salute after their smashing 2-1 NLRB election victory at the Bethlehem Steel Sparrows Point shipyard in Baltimore. Steel workers had won by a similar margin in an election five days earlier.

Another Bethlehem Victory

By a 2-1 margin the Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers won sole bargaining rights at the company's important Sparrows Point shipyard here. The vote:

CIO	2,567
Independent	1,386
No Union	307

The election followed by five days a similar victory for the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, which won a poll at the adjoining Sparrows Point steel mill by a vote of 10,813 to 4,198.

Local CIO officials predicted the two election victories would spur union organizational activities throughout the entire city.

Push Drive for U. S. Wage Bill

Washington, Oct. 4—The United Federal Workers, CIO, will launch a nation-wide campaign to win passage of the Federal Workers Minimum Wage bill, introduced by Rep. John E. Sheridan of Pennsylvania.

"Federal workers paychecks are getting smaller every day," Eleanor Nelson, UFWA secretary-treasurer, announced. "Pay raises are vital to maintaining the morale that is needed for an effective national defense."

Sees Need For Control Of Prices

WASHINGTON, Oct. 11—Proposed plans to freeze the wages of the nation's industrial workers would lead eventually to virtual enslavement and forced labor, CIO Pres. Philip Murray this week warned Congress in a statement presented to the House Committe on Banking and Currency.

"An attempt to institute wage control would immediately bring in its wake the breakdown of voluntary collective bargaining, the establishment of dictatorial controls over labor and industry, and the destruction of a free democratic labor movement," the CIO leader's statement predicted.

He denied vigorously that recent increases in prices and the cost of living have come from wage increases, charging that they arose from speculation, profit-making and hoarding.

Murray's statement was presented to the Congressional Committee by Ralph Hetzel, jr., CIO economic director, who was on the witness stand for the major part of two days.

Hetzel said that the rising cost of living has caused considerable unrest throughout the nation, and stressed the necessity of halting the upward price movement before it cuts further into the American workers' real wages.

Toronto Paper Raps Internment of CIO Union Leader

TORONTO, Ont., Oct. 11—The influential Toronto Daily Star has severely criticized the government's internment in a prison camp of Vice-Pres. C. S. Jackson of the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

Jackson was arrested and sent to a concentration camp without trial as a result of his activities during a work stoppage at the Canadian General Electric Co.'s plant here some time ago. If the facts are true as alleged, the paper said, "the action of the federal administration has been so outrageously a violation of the lawful liberties of a labor organizer—or indeed, of any citizen—that the case will constitute a blot upon its record. . . ."

The Daily Star cites the presentation of facts made to the Canadian Congress of Labor by J. L. Cohen, K. C., a prominent attorney who has interested himself in the Jackson case.

EXAMINES CHARGES

Reviewing the charges on which the Department of Justice said it based its internment of Jackson, the editorial says:

"The first of these charges, that Jackson took a leading part in an illegal strike, constitutes no reason whatever for detaining him in an internment camp.

"If what he did was considered illegal, then the obvious course was to try him in the courts. That is what the courts are for—to try infractions of the law.

Additional charges made by the Department of Justice against Jackson, says the Star, "are six in number, the first being that in addresses to two labor bodies, he criticized legislation passed since the war began. And why not?

"If criticism of the government and its legislation is going to land men in detention camps, half the population will have to be interned."

PAGING REP. HOFFMAN:

CIO's Going Places In The Old Home Town

ST. JOSEPH, Mich., Oct. 11—Rep. Clare Hoffman of Michigan—whose wind was pretty well knocked out by the Ford-CIO contract last June—got another jolt this week.

Coming into Hoffman's home district, the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers gained a Labor Board election victory at one plant and signed a contract with another.

Vacations with pay for the first time in 60 years were won by employes of the F. P. Rosback Co., which manufacture printing and switching machinery.

Other improvements include a six-cent pay raise, retroactive four weeks, time and a half for overtime, grievance procedure and job protection for draftees.

At the New Products Co., the UE's local 931 won an election by an 8-1, gaining 251 votes to 32 against.

Various AFL craft unions distributed leaflets at the gates in an attempt to confuse the employes, thus hoping to cut the UE's majority. This disruptive tactic of the corrupt AFL leadership failed to accomplish its aim.

50 Cops Do Ward-Heel Duty For Bosses In Tennessee Poll

CLINTON, TENN., Oct. 11—(FP)—New precedents for intimidation of workers in an NLRB election were established here by the management of the strike-bound Magnet Mills, which defeated the CIO American Federation of Hosiery Workers by 525 to 334.

The union announced that it was renewing its complaint against the company and would ask the Labor Board to set aside the election result. Originally scheduled for Sept. 22, the election had been postponed for a truce that the company promptly broke.

When Robert Fraser, regional NLRB director at Atlanta, arrived to supervise the critical vote on Oct. 3, he found this village of 2,000 population overrun with cops of every stripe. The Anderson county courthouse shivered under the weight of 50 special deputy sheriff's, extra municipal police, and a squad of state highway patrolmen. This display of armed might was described as the "queerest" in NLRB history.

The officers weren't loafing. Their chief job was to escort anti-unionists around the community, distributing circulars to a list of Magnet workers conveniently published by the local weekly newspaper, the Clinton Courier-News. It was ward-heeling with a gun.

Another newspaper entered the fight when a scandal sheet called "Progressive Labor," published at Knoxville, issued a special edition attacking the union. Several Magnet strikers asked for copies; they were given a bundle of 50, which they took to the union hall.

Within an hour a Magnet attorney had drawn up a larceny complaint, signed by three scabs, and eight strikers were held in $1,000 bond by Justice of the Peace J. S. Holt.

On election day the leading business houses of Clinton displayed big "Vote No!" signs in their windows. One appeared in the Union National Bank, of which Carl Kincaid, Magnet mill president, is a director. The bank has served as headquarters for a well-organized back-to-work movement.

Striker Robert W. Miller, 25, took photos of the "Vote No!" signs. At Hodges drugstore his $44 camera was torn away by Carvel Dudley Hoskins, the proprietor, who first slammed it on the sidewalk and then hurled it at Miller. The young man ducked in time.

Accompanied by Managing Editor Travis K. Hedrick of The Hosiery Worker and by several strikers, Miller sought a warrant for Hoskins' arrest. Holt declined to issue one immediately. He denounced Hedrick (former state editor of The Chattanooga Times) as "an agitator and a red" when Hedrick reminded him that he had readily supplied warrants for the arrest of eight strikers.

Miller then went to a nearby mining town where he got a warrant from Justice H. M. Briner, and arranged for service by a constable who is a member of the CIO United Mine Workers.

CIO Urges Aid For Toy Strike

Washington, Oct. 11— National CIO support for the cause of striking workers at the Holgate Toy Co., Kane, Pa., was asked this week of all CIO affiliates by Allan S. Haywood, director of organization.

The strike, being conducted by Local 309, United Paper, Novelty & Toy Workers, has been in progress for 10 weeks. The international union is having difficulty raising support for the strikers and their dependents, 1,500 in all, and cold weather threatens to bring added hardship.

Unions are urged to send contributions to Local 309, c/o Hilton's Service Station, Wilcox Street and Biddle Rd., Kane, Pa.

Seek Union Shop

West Allis, Wisc.—The union shop and checkoff of dues will be a major demand of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee in future negotiations with employers in the Wisconsin-northern Illinois area, a regional SWOC conference here decided.

AFL Czars on Trial

New York—Selection of a jury has been completed for the trial of George Browne, AFL vice president, and Willie Bioff, czar of the Hollywood AFL stage hands union, on charges that they violated the federal anti-racketeering law by extorting more than a half-million dollars from four movie companies over a six-year period.

California CIO Backs Bridges

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 11—A program of organization designed to accelerate the present rapid rate of growth, which has increased CIO membership in the state by 50% during the past year, was worked out by the 437 delegates attending the California CIO convention here.

The delegates gave a thunderous reception to Harry Bridges, head of the CIO longshoremen and CIO director for the state, when he entered the convention hall on his return from an extended visit to the East Coast. For 20 minutes they paraded through the hall in an enthusiastic reception for the union leader whom Judge Sears, special Dept. of Justice trial examiner, had claimed was an undesirable alien.

HIT OUSTER EFFORT

Later the convention passed a strongly worded resolution condemning the Dept. of Justice effort to send Bridges back to Australia, and attacked an ouster bill passed by the House of Representatives last week when only 40 Congressmen were on the floor.

In his speech to the convention, Bridges urged unity of the democratic peoples against the menace of fascism.

"It is not a question any more of when Hitler will be stopped, but how soon and at how great a sacrifice," Bridges told the convention. He urged the united action of all anti-fascists, "regardless of race, color, religion or political philosophy."

The delegates by a large majority urged full support of this country to the efforts of the nations fighting Hitler.

THOMAS HAILS MURRAY

CIO Vice-Pres. R. J. Thomas, head of the auto union, was applauded when he concluded his speech with a tribute to CIO Pres. Philip Murray. "We must continue that man as president of the CIO," he said.

Thomas told the delegates that the present severe unemployment crisis in the auto industry could have been avoided had the government adopted the Murray Industry Council plan and the Reuther plan for full utilization of productive capacity in the nation's automotive plants.

A less enthusiastic greeting was afforded Gov. Culbert L. Olson of California when he indicated in his speech that he would not heed labor's demand for the immediate release of King, Ramsay and Connor, framed marine unionists now serving long terms in San Quentin prison. The governor was subjected to a withering cross-fire of questions about his attitude on the case.

Pres. Philip Connelly and Sec.-Treas. Louis Goldblatt were reelected to their council offices by acclamation. Los Angeles was selected as the 1942 convention city.

Canadian Officials Seize, Expel Reid Robinson

BULLETIN

DENVER, Colo., Oct. 10—CIO Vice-pres. Reid Robinson, head of the Intl. Union of Mine Mill & Smelter Workers, was ordered deported from Canada at a Canadian immigration hearing in Toronto yesterday, it was announced by James J. Leary, secretary of the union at headquarters here.

DENVER, Oct. 9—Reid Robinson, CIO vice-president and head of the Intl. Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, was virtually shanghaied by Canadian immigration officials and thrown into the governor's dungeon at Toronto, it was announced at the union's headquarters here. Significant, perhaps was the fact that the Canadian officials seized Robinson in the town of Swastika!

Robinson notified the union of his arrest Oct. 5 but was unable to send complete details until a few days later. He was stopped at Toronto while en route to Kirkland Lake to address a union mass meeting and to take part in a conciliation hearing involving the government, 12 mining companies and the union.

STRIPPED AND SEARCHED

Refusing to let him communicate with his union or with a lawyer, the Canadian officials stripped and searched him, then threw him into a cell with 17 drunks. An officer returned at 4 p. m., Oct. 5, and told Robinson he could be freed on $200 bail, but would not permit him to call an attorney to arrange for release.

Later the local jailer called Atty. J. L. Cohen, who demanded that the immigration authorities release the CIO official. At 8 p. m. Robinson was let out in custody of the lawyer.

REID ROBINSON

Special significance was attached to Robinson's arrest when it was learned that the Northern News, mine-controlled newspaper in Kirkland Lake, had declared editorially that Robinson should not be permitted to enter Canada. Local unionists also learned that company stooges were wagering that the U. S. labor leader would not appear at the meeting on Oct. 5 or at the conciliation hearing three days later.

COMPANY WITHDREW

They lost the second part of the bet when Robinson arrived for the hearing. Company representatives then withdrew, saying they would not recognize an outside organization.

The Kirkland Lake union scheduled an emergency meeting to decide on further steps. A strike vote has already been taken in what Robinson describes as "the key struggle of the CIO in Canada."

The union official has sent a protest to the U. S. State Department against his treatment by Canadian authorities, who ordered him to appear Oct. 9 for a hearing.

Auto Parts Strike In 2nd Week

Cleveland, Oct. 11 (FP)—A walkout of 1,000 workers at the home plant of the Kirkland Steel Products Co. entered its second week Oct. 7 with the strikers determined to bring wages up to those in the company's Detroit plant and in the rest of the auto industry.

The strike was called by Local 486, CIO United Automobile Aircraft & Agricultural Implement Workers.

As a result of the walkout against the big auto frame manufacturer, the South Bend, Ind., plant of the Studebaker Corp. was forced to shut down Oct. 7. Midland also makes frames for Willys-Overland, Hudson, Buick and Ford cars.

Local Pres. Joseph Jackson charged that wages at the Cleveland plant, where the basic hourly scale is 68c, are 20 per cent below scales at Midland's Detroit plant.

ALCOA 'Not Guilty'

New York—The Aluminum Company of America, which owns or controls an overwhelming majority of the nation's aluminum production and fabricating facilities, is not a monopoly, a straight-faced U. S. judge ruled here in throwing out a U. S. anti-trust suit.

Illinois CIO Plans Survey Of Jobless

Chicago, Oct. 11. — The twenty members of the Illinois CIO Council's executive board voted unanimously this week for a survey of the need for organization among the thousands of unemployed workers in Chicago. The action was taken at the Board's first formal session since the State convention held last month in Springfield.

Ray Edmundson, chairman of the State Council said:

"At our recent convention, the glaring need of organization in Chicago as well as numerous points down state, was thoroughly agreed upon. Just as in the past, the present policy of the CIO is to organize the unorganized workers and to extend to them the benefits of modern collective bargaining."

OPEN CHICAGO OFFICE

The Chicago survey will be in charge of Robert Travis, member of the United Automobile Workers, and one of the two vice-presidents of the newly formed State Council.

He will also be in charge of the State CIO office in Chicago during the absence of Chairman Edmundson who resides in Springfield. During the recent CIO drive of the CIO Farm Equipment Workers in Chicago, Travis took an active part.

Downstate activities of the Council will be under the personal direction of Edmundson. Drives are under way already, Edmundson said, in such industrial centers as Alton, Decatur, Peoria, Rock Island and the Crab Orchard area in southern Illinois.

DEFENSE PROBLEMS

A resolution calling for attention to the problem of unemployment caused by defense production priorities was unanimously adopted at the meeting, following reports of delegates from the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers; the Farm Equipment Workers, and the United Auto Workers, all of whom declared that thousands of Chicago workers are already being laid off due to shortage of materials.

A committee was apointed to make a thorough investigation of the extent of priority unemployment and report back to the Board. All CIO locals in the state will be urged to aid in this survey, during which questionnaires will be sent out to be filled in and returned to the State Council.

Members of the investigating committee are John Doherty, Steel Workers Organizing Committee; Samuel Levin, Amalgamated Clothing Workers; Ernest DeMaio, United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers; and Francis DeLaurie, sec.-treas. of the State Council.

HANDS ACROSS THE TABLE: Step right up—you can get your manicure from one of these three attractive manicurists and the job will be done by union labor. The photographer caught them watching the signing of a master agreement between Local 1, CIO Barbers & Beauty Culturists Union, and the Broadway Master Barber Assn. in New York. It took a three-week strike to win the pact, the first in 55 years.

Ohio CIO Council Ready For Big Convention

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Oct. 11—A total of 414 local units in Ohio of 30 national CIO organizations are entitled to send delegates to the fourth annual convention of the Ohio CIO Council, which opens Oct. 17 at the Hotel Ohio in Youngstown, according to Ted F. Silvey, secretary-treasurer.

Hotel Ohio in Youngstown was the headquarters for many months in 1937 of the CIO's bitter strike against the "Little Steel" corporations of Republic and Youngstown Sheet & Tube.

John Owens, president of the Ohio CIO Council since its establishment at the end of February, 1938—who will preside over the Ohio meeting—was in charge of the section of that strike in Ohio plants.

Speakers invited by President Owens to address the convention include Philip Murray, Allan Haywood, and Clinton S. Golden from the CIO and Prof. R. R. R. Brooks, the CIO's representative in the Office of Production Management who will describe priority questions. Ohio has been suffering of late a large amount of priority unemployment among its consumer-goods manufacturing enterprises.

OUTSIDE SPEAKERS

Louis Bromfield, noted author and movie script writer, now resident in Ohio after many years residence in Europe and Asia, and Wilbur S. Stout, state geologist, are invited especially to speak on the question of soil and water conservation and the reasons why the question is of concern to urban workers.

Mayors of nine Mahoning Valley towns will be present on the platform at the opening session when Mayor William B. Spagnola (who was friendly to the CIO during the "Little Steel" strike and who since was elected mayor of the city) delivers the welcome for himself and his fellow mayors.

Kentucky CIO Council Re-Elects Caddy, Grigsby

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Oct. 11—Policies to guide CIO unions in the state on national, local and union affairs through the troubled year lying ahead were drawn up by some 350 delegates to the convention of the Kentucky CIO Industrial Union Council which met here Oct. 4-5.

The convention reelected Council President Sam Caddy and Secretary-Treasurer John Grigsby, and chose ten vice-presidents, two of whom were reelected.

William Turnblazer, president of District 19, United Mine Workers, was the toastmaster at the annual banquet given for the delegates on Friday evening.

Michael Widman, assistant CIO director of organization, who represented the national CIO at the convention, told the delegates the exciting story of the organizing drive on the Ford Motor Co., which he headed.

'ENTERING WEDGE'

As an entering wedge, Widman said, the union started 20 softball teams for Ford employes, but the response was so great that a hundred more had to be formed.

The events that happened between this modest beginning and the final complete organization of the outstanding citadel of anti-unionism in the country, are now history, Widman said.

Resolutions were passed by the delegates calling for a union drive in Louisville; pledging full support to the Government's defense program; reaffirming opposition to Nazi-ism, Fascism, Communism and any other ism; calling for a national slum clearance program; and advocating unemployment insurance for seamen.

The ten vice-presidents elected for the coming term are: John Fish, McVeigh; J. W. Riding, Blackburn; Jesse Lovelace, Madisonville; Ray Samples, Wheelwright; Hugh Bethel, Covington; Al Whitehouse, Newport; Downing Cyrus, Ashland; Miss Emma Saurer, Louisville; T. E. Adams, Henderson, and Fred Smith, Louisville.

House Group Hears CIO Assail Wage-Freezing

By HENRY FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, Oct. 11—CIO opposition to any proposals for wage control was expressed to the House Banking & Currency Committee this week on behalf of Pres. Philip Murray by Ralph Hetzel, Jr., CIO Economic director.

Hetzel placed in the record a statement by Murray that wage increases gained in recent months have "not been exorbitant" and that the wage increases have not been responsible for recent zoning price increases.

The Murray statement contains this 5-point summary of the CIO's position on price control:

1. "Inflation must be prevented.
2. "The present situation justifies measures to control those prices which are threatening to create an inflationary movement.
3. "Wage increases have not been responsible for the recent price rises.
4. "It is not necessary to institute wage control to prevent inflaflation or keep prices in check.

MENACE TO LABOR

5. "An attempt to institute wage control would immediately bring in its wake the breakdown of voluntary collective bargaining, the establishment of dictatorial controls over labor and industry and the destruction of a free democratic labor movement."

"Higher wages mean a higher standard of living for working people," Murray declared. "Higher prices, on the other hand, may mean no such thing. They may mean inflation, or monopoly, or hoarding. The setting of wages means putting a ceiling on a man's livelihood. Setting wages in a period of rising prices means the erosion of the level of living of Americans."

CAUSING UNREST

In his testimony, Hetzel pointed out that a number of recent labor disputes have been directly caused by the rising cost of living.

Workers have found, the Congressmen were told, that wage increases gained in the early part of the year have all but evaporated because of the rising price level, with the result that workers are once again demanding increased wage rates.

"Unless the cost of living is somewhat stabilized, I am certain there will be a series of serious movements for increased wages," the CIO official predicted.

Pres. Murray's statement cited U. S. Labor Dept. figures to show that the cost of living has increased 7 per cent or 8 per cent since last summer.

"For many workers the rise is much greater," he said, "for they live in small defense boom towns where prices and rents have risen at more than average rate.

"The wholesale prices now being

Haywood Says:

Pay-Freezing Won't Halt Inflation

WASHINGTON, Oct. 11—Wage-freezing proposals now being bandied about in reactionary circles "will not only fail to prevent inflation, but will actually aggravate the disease it is supposed to cure," Allan S. Haywood, CIO director of organization, told a nationwide radio audience Oct. 9.

Speaking over a CBS network, the CIO official asserted that "no nation can be free where labor is forced to work under conditions that set wages regardless of labor's needs and legitimate desires. Today, when our nation faces the threat of attack upon its fundamental liberties, we need more than ever before to be alert against any attempt to curb or regiment our people.

Lumber Union Stresses Unity At Convention

By HENRY KESSLER

EVERETT, Wash., Oct. 10—All energies of the International Woodworkers of America were centered today on the achievement of a powerful unity around which the union's fifth annual convention, which opened here October 8, may build a vigorous program for organization of the unorganized and defense of democracy.

As delegates converged on this busy lumber port from the far-flung logging camps and mills of the industry, the IWA's Intl. Executive Board, meeting in Seattle over the pre-convention weekend, approved proposals designed to assure that unity.

The Executive Board concurred unanimously in the recommendations of a Committee of Four which, with the assistance of CIO Organization Director Allan S. Haywood, has bent its efforts during the past weeks to improvement and strengthening of the IWA's internal solidarity.

APPROVE PLANS

Recommendations of the Committee adopted by the Executive Board call for a 15-cent per month increase in per capita to be earmarked exclusively for organization, and for adjustments in the basis of representation in convention and on the executive board. These take the form of constitutional amendments, and if approved by the convention, go out to membership referendum.

With enthusiasm, the Executive Board without dissent commended the Committee of Four's efforts. Appointed by Haywood, the Committee consists of Int'l President O. M. Orton, Secretary-Treasurer B. J. McCarty, Columbia River District President A. F. Hartung, and Int'l Executive Board Member Ed McSorley.

"CONSTRUCTIVE"

"There was a general expression," an Executive Board spokesman said, "that through the work of the Committee the fifth convention of the IWA would be the most constructive and most harmonious in the history of the IWA, and that out of it would come the program and the plan that the men and women employed by the lumber industry in the United States and Canada have been waiting for."

Michael Widman, assistant CIO Director of Organization, attended the convention as President Philip Murray's representative.

WIDMAN ON RADIO

In a featured convention address, Widman was to speak for 30 minutes over a 15-station Mutual Don Lee broadcast hookup in the Pacific Northwest. The broadcast will be the night of Saturday, Oct. 11, according to Int'l Secy.-Treas. McCarty. The hour of broadcast will be announced early this week.

Symbolically, the convention city is a stronghold of Weyerhaeuser Timber Company, mightiest operator in the lumber industry, whose vast Everett mills, employing approximately 1,500, were organized and signed to IWA agreements during the past year.

SIZEABLE GAINS

The past twelve months saw democratic industrial unionism established in virtually every major Weyerhaeuser operation in the tall timber of Washington state, despite bitter company resistance. Throughout the fir and pine belts of the west coast, in the vast Ford timber holdings of the upper Michigan peninsula, in the deep southland in other regions the union has registered sizeable organizational gains and improvements in wages and conditions.

Ford Labels Available

DETROIT, Oct. 11—The Ford Motor Co. announced this week that it has shipped 200,000 UAW-CIO labels to dealers throughout the country.

Purchasers of new Ford cars may have the label by requesting them from the dealer, the company said. The labels will be attached to the dashboard without extra charge.

40 Congressmen 'Pass' Bridges Ouster Bill

WASHINGTON, Oct. 11—Further proof that anti-labor forces are determined to "get" Harry Bridges, California west coast leader, was seen in the sudden passage of the Allen bill in the House here, in a new drive to pass the Hobbs concentration camp bill, and in the stiff prison sentence handed out to a Bridges witness on the west coast.

The Allen bill, written solely to deport Bridges, "notwithstanding the provisions of any other law," was brought up and tricked through Congress while only 40 members were on the floor. It was brought up among a series of so-called private bills, which are customarily used to give certain individuals pensions, to indemnify them for losses or damages due from the government, etc. Such bills go through on the unanimous consent calendar, and only the Congressmen particularly interested bother to be present.

The Allen bill, described last year as an unconstitutional "bill of attainder," was shoved through the House in 1940 despite protests by the then Attorney General, and was then allowed to die in the Senate.

At the same time, renewed pressure was put on for passage of the Hobbs bill, which calls for indefinite imprisonment of aliens under deportation warrants. This bill, opposed last year by the CIO as "a prelude and cover for attacks on the rights of the labor movement," has been described by its poll tax author as intended "to take care of Bridges" and other labor officials.

HARSH SENTENCE

On the west coast, a stiff prison term was handed out to James D. O'Neil on a charge of perjury. O'Neil, who took the stand during the Bridges trial to deny anti-Bridges statements attributed to him by the FBI, and to testify that he knew nothing that would connect Bridges with the Communist party, was sentenced to three years.

Meantime, the National Lawyers Guild, meeting in executive board session in Washington, voted to take all possible steps in aiding the fight to prevent Bridges' deportation. Their action was based on a report read by Richard Gladstein of Bridges' counsel, which pointed out that the report of Judge Sears ordering Bridges' deportation "in effect condones labor espionage and sets up new standards for the decapitation of trade unions."

Steps in appealing the Sears' order include argument before the Immigration Division Board of Appeals, which will hear the case within 30 days of the filing of the order, and other legal action through the Federal courts.

As indicated in CIO Pres. Philip Murray's statement on the Sears' order, the CIO committee for the defense of Bridges "will carry on its campaign to protect his constitutional rights as an individual and as a duly elected leader of thousands of American workers."

'Shrunken Bellies':

Average Family Spent $2.27 a Week for Food

WASHINGTON, Oct. 11—(FP)—The average American family spent only $2.27 per person per week for food—or a little over a dime a meal for each person—it was revealed today by the Natl. Resources Planning Board in a study of family expenditures in the U. S. in 1935-36.

The study was a sequel to two previous studies of consumer incomes and consumer expenditures and was broken down to present the figures of the previous studies in terms of families.

The 7,350,000 families in the lowest income group, those with incomes of less than $710 a year and constituting one-fourth of all the families, had an average income of $440 a year, which was $27 less than the amount spent by the average family for food alone.

Striking contrasts were presented in food expenditures by families in different income classes. Families in the $750-$1,000 a year income group spent $300 a year for food, while families in the $2,500-$3,000 group spent more than double that amount, or $619 a year for food.

The average income of all 29,400,000 families was $1,622. Food claimed 29 per cent of this amount, or $467, while housing expenditures came to $248 for the year and household operations and furnishing amounted to $209.

Danger—Thin Ice

Dislocations

The many layoffs now occuring in a number of industries, due to serious shortages of material, call attention to a dangerous situation affecting the whole defense program.

CIO President Murray has called a special conference for October 20 to cope with this problem, and to coordinate the efforts of the various unions which are now meeting it to the best of their ability in their respective industries.

The immediate concern of the CIO, of course, is to check the layoffs and to prevent the imposition of undue hardships on the workers affected.

But it also has a wider concern with the defense production dislocations of which these layoffs are a symptom.

In his call to the conference, Murray notes that the CIO has repeatedly warned that such dislocations would occur unless the defense program was so organized as to establish full production and to expand supplies of critical materials.

The CIO industry council plan is the only constructive proposal that has yet been advanced to secure maximum national output. Failure to adopt such proposals not only results in layoffs and other hardships for large numbers of workers but also amounts to sabotage of the national defense effort.

Union Shop

So much bunk is written and spoken these days about the closed shop and the union shop by anti-union propagandists, who don't know the first facts, that it is refreshing to read something by an authority who has seriously and dispassionately studied the whole question.

Rev. Jerome L. Toner, a member of the faculty of St. Martin's College, has recently completed an eight-year study of the history of union shop and closed shop contracts. Here are some of his conclusions:

(1) That approximately 3,000,000 workers are now covered by closed or union shop contracts.

(2) That labor relations are considerably smoother under this type of agreement.

(3) That unions have demonstrated genuine responsibility under such contracts.

(4) That the closed shop will probably be the rule rather than the exception within the next ten years.

In other words, unions which are seeking to win the union shop are asking nothing new, unusual or unreasonable. On the contrary, they are seeking a type of agreement which has proved its benefits over a long period and in many industries, and their demands are in line with the trend of the times.

"A" For Americanism

"Gustaferri is one of the 250,000 members of the CIO's big and growing United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers Union. Highly percentaged with skilled workers, 60 per cent of the UERMW's members work on defense contracts.

"And because UERMW has negotiated difficult contracts without any major work stoppage on defense jobs during the past 12 months, UERMW deserves the nation's 'A for Americanism.'"

Such deserved tributes to the workers who bear the brunt of defense production, and to their unions which maintain the morale and continuity of production that result from collective bargaining, are all too rare.

CIO unions are the workers' representatives in all the major defense industries. Contracts covering millions of employes are regularly being negotiated and renewed by these unions without stoppage of production.

If it were not for this collective bargaining, with the orderly channels it provides for handling grievances and improving conditions, there would be far more interruptions of defense production than the few that occasionally occur.

That "A" for Americanism should not only go to the UERMW but also to the whole CIO.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

SELLERS of luxury goods are doing a land office business, according to the Wall Street Journal.

"Ah-ha, another 'silk-shirt" era!" you say? "It just goes to show excessive wages must be curbed."

Well, not exactly silk shirts, mister. The luxury goods referred to are such doo-dads as diamonds, the costliest furs and the finest imported vintage champagne. There's the biggest demand for such goods since 1929, according to the wall Street paper.

So maybe factory workers don't know what to do with their average $31 a week and are stuffing diamonds away in the old sock, to guard against inflation.

Maybe beer isn't good enough for them any more, and they are insisting on nothing but the finest vintage champagne (at $8 or more a quart) to quench their thirst.

And, if the moths don't get at them, what could be a nice investment for "excessive wages" than a few mink coats at a few thousand bucks a piece for the missus and the girls?

The imagination of a wage-control propagandist can stretch pretty far. But it can't stretch $31 a week far enough to be responsible for the present booming demand for such luxuries as diamonds, limousines, yachts and the like.

War profiteering is skyrocketing these days. Chairman Vinson of the House naval affairs committee referred to one naval defense contract as having realized profits of 247 per cent, for instance. And profits of 808 major industrial corporations increased 33 per cent in the first half of last year.

There are plenty of excess profits, in other words, to provide all sorts of super-luxuries for people who would be better off without them.

Wages have increased too, it is true. But what remains of these increases, after higher living costs have taken their toll, goes to buy more adequate food and clothing, a little better housing and other modest comforts for those who need them most.

That's one big difference between limiting profits and limiting wages.

Another difference was pointed out by Security Administrator McNutt in a recent speech. Declaring it is fallacious to compare limiting wages with limiting profits, he said:

"The fallacy lies in applying like rules to unlike problems.

"When we deal with profits, we are dealing with property.

"When we deal with labor of a human being, we are dealing with human liberty.

"There is a difference—and it is the biggest difference in the world."

CIO President Murray outlined the case against freezing wages in connection with price control very simply and conclusively in his testimony before the House banking and currency committee. It amounts to this:

Labor has every reason to desire a check on runaway prices and inflation. Increased living costs have already eaten up a large part of recent wage increases, and the rest is threatened as prices continue to rise.

To check inflation, it is necessary that some kind of price control legislation be enacted. But it is not necessary to enact controls on wages, since wage increases have had little or no effect in causing the present price rises.

On the contrary, the greatest rises in price have occurred in the commodities in which labor cost is the least factor; and where the major wage increases have been granted, the price rise has been the smallest.

As business has expanded, there has been an actual reduction in labor costs despite increased wages; and where prices have been raised they have usually gone to swell profits, which were little if at all affected by the higher wages.

To check inflation, therefore, it is necessary to deal with its real causes, which include profiteering, hoarding, speculation and unplanned public purchasing.

To freeze wages would not help, but on the contrary would doom millions of American workers to a standard of living far below minimum health and decency requirements, at a time of towering profits.

Finally, government wage controls would cut at the roots of the democratic system of free collective bargaining and open the door to a system of enslaved labor under dictatorial rule.

The above are some of the many good and sufficient reasons why the CIO is calling upon all its affiliates and members to urge their Congressmen to oppose any form of legislation to freeze or control wages.

Auto Union Moves Fast To Protect 215,000 Faced with Job Loss

DETROIT, Oct. 11—A crisis long predicted by the CIO auto union and just as long pooh-poohed by the auto industry, became a living reality this week as the specter of unemployment confronted close to a quarter-million workers in the nation's No. 1 assembly-line industry.

Acting quickly to meet the emergency situation, the UAW-CIO drew up a 7-point defense unemployment agreement with General Motors—which union officials said was a model for the industry—and after conferences with Ford Motor Co. announced that a contemplated loss of 20,000 jobs at the giant River Rouge plans would be temporarily held down to 5,400 layoffs.

Meanwhile, Pres. R. J. Thomas of the union said forthcoming curtailment of automobile production constitutes the "most serious problem faced by the union in years," and announced that the UAW-CIO is "mobilizing all its available resources" to bring new defense contracts into cities where they are needed most, and to protect the seniority of union members who obtain defense work outside their original place of employment.

NEW DIVISION

Creation of a new Defense Employment Division of the UAW-CIO was announced by Pres. Thomas. It will be headed by Sec.-Treas. George Addes, with Victor Reuther serving as its assistant coordinator.

The agreement with GM followed the huge corporation's acceptance of a number of proposals worked out by the union and approved by the OPM. It calls for protection of the seniority of workers displaced from their jobs by curtailment of car production, and permits workers to switch from non-defense to defense work within the company or for other employers,, without loss of seniority. GM will not call workers now employed by other firms back to their original jobs so long as the men are engaged on defense work.

A NEEDLESS CRISIS

Commenting on the agreement, UAW-CIO Pres. Thomas said:

"Had industry and government been willing to undertake this essential task" — of adapting plants gradually to full production for both defense and civilian goods—"defense jobs developed in the industry would be more than sufficient to absorb to full complement of automobile workers displaced by curtailment of regular automobile production."

This was one of the essential principles in the plan advanced several months ago by Walter Reuther, head of the UAW's GM division and one of the signatories to this week's agreement. The Reuther plan urged utilization of idle machinery and idle man hours to produce defense products—notably airplanes—in the auto plants.

FIRMS SCORNED AUW PLAN

At that time, both the principle behind the Reuther suggestion and the practical suggestions were ridiculed by leaders of the auto industry and by William S. Knudsen, former GM offcial who is now director-general of the OPM. In commenting on the GM agreement, Pres. C. E. Wilson of the company unconsciously confirmed the "business as usual" charges made by the union a half year ago when he admitted that a huge proportion of the company's facilities are not engaged on defense work.

Sec.-Treas. George Addes of the UAW-CIO pointed out that the GM agreement "does not solve the basic difficulty" facing auto makers and auto workers.

"While it gives first call on defense jobs to unemployed auto workers, it does not create the additional jobs which are needed," he said. "The UAW-CIO will continue its efforts to bring new defense orders as speedily as possible to cities and communities where they are most needed."

PRACTICAL VALUE

He pointed out, however, that the GM agreement will be "of great practical value" in protecting seniority of transferred workers and in making it possible for "skilled, key workers to be used on defense jobs where they are needed most."

Addes said the GM "model agreement" would be extended to Chrysler, Hudson, Ford, Packard and other firms under contract with the union.

PARLEY WITH FORD

After conference with Ford officials, the union official gained assurance that a projected lay-off of 20,000 workers would be limited to 3,000 production workers with less than six months employment and to 2,400 non-production personnel not covered by the union.

Industry officials said, however, that because new defense plants are not yet ready for production, at least 100,000 men will be idle by the year's end. At Ford, for example, company executives warned that half of the 88,000 employes might be jobless by December and that they could not possibly be re-absorbed in defense work until spring.

Ford-CIO Pact Lifted Wages By 52 Million

DETROIT, Oct. 11—Ford Motor Co. workers benefited by an estimated $52,000,000 a year as the result of the company's historic union shop contract with the CIO, Richard T. Leonard, head of the UAW-CIO Ford division, said today.

Wage adjustments outlined in the contract signed last June have been nearly completed, he said.

In its pact, the company agreed to pay scales for each classification "at least as high as those paid by the major competitor named by the union."

New U. S. Agency Asks Letters on Race, Color Bias

WASHINGTON, Oct. 11—A letter from any job seeker who has been denied a defense industry job because of his race, creed, color or national origin is sufficient to launch an investigation by the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, it was announced today by Lawrence W. Cramer, executive secretary.

The complaint should be mailed to the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, Social Security Building, Washington D. C.

Persons who believe their race, color, creed or nationality are preventing their getting a job, or a promotion, in the federal civil service, may also submit complaints in the same way, Cramer declared.

The letter stating the complaint should contain all facts pertaining to the case, name and address of the employer and of the person making the complaint; the basis of the discrimination against him; his own race, religion or national origin; the type of job for which application was made; and all other data concerning the job application and the discriminatory refusal to hire him.

The President's Committee, which was set up under a recent Executive Order, maintains its own investigating staff, and also uses the staffs of the Negro Employment and Training Branch and of the Minority Groups Branch of the OPM for making primary investigations.

Chiseling, Broken Promises Stymie OPM Rehiring Plan, Buffalo CIO Charges

BUFFALO, N.Y., Oct. 11—The "Buffalo Plan" set up by OPM to put General Motors workers thrown out of jobs here back to work has broken down, the Buffalo CIO Council charged this week in a letter sent to OPM Associate Director Sidney Hillman, the Council's Executive Board declared that:

1. Hundreds of General Motors employes are still out of work because of the failure of the Curtiss-Wright and Buffalo Arms Corp. to hire them in spite of their promises when the "Buffalo plan" was set up.

2. The WPA in New York City is sending men to Buffalo and paying all their expenses while they go to vocational schools here to be trained for defense work while local members of the United Automobile Workers walk the streets looking for jobs.

3. The OPM has appointed a CIO representative on the Training-within-Industry Committee while permitting the AFL to name its own man.

4. An anti-union foreman from Remington-Rand who had been employed at $2 an hour as instructor in a Tonawanda vocational night school, took half-finished work from the plant an had it finished by students at the school.

"This produces not only violent antipathy among unions and among vocational trainees," the Board asserted, "but it also cheats union men and women at the Remington-Rand plant out of work to which they are entitled and gives the Company free labor at the expense of the tax payer.

"It is the opinion of the Council's executive board that this is a serious question which should be corrected immediately before it has a more widespread adverse effect upon the civilian morale which is an important element in our defense program."

U. S. Needs Skilled Craftsmen for Defense

Washington, Oct. 11—Thousands of skilled craftsmen are urgently needed to fill defense jobs open in the government, the U. S. Civil Service Commission announced this week. Although 5,000 machinists and 1,000 toolmakers have been appointed in the last year, the Government needs more of these men.

"Toolmakers and machinists are both needed now in such ordnance establishments as the Frankford Arsenal in Philadelphia, the Watertown Arsenal in Massachusetts and the Watervliet Arsenal in New York," the Commission states.

Vacancies also exist in the Philadelphia, Charlestown and Puget Sound Navy Yards and at the Sacramento Air Depot in California and Wright Field in Ohio. Pay ranges from $1,800 a year to $1.06 an hour for machinists and from $7.20 a day to $1.08 an hour for toolmakers, with extra pay for overtime work.

Applicants must have completed a four-year apprenticeship or had equivalent experience, and in addition toolmakers must be able to read blueprints and be experienced in the use of precision gages and measuring instruments. No written tests will be given.

Applications may be filed until further notice with the Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C.

Maryland CIO Parley In December

Washington, Oct. 11—The Maryland-D. C. Industrial Union Council will hold its annual convention in Washington Dec. 15-17, the council's board decided last week. At the same time it elected John T. Jones, Council president and CIO legislative representative, as delegate to the national CIO convention.

In other actions the Board "hailed the far-reaching Labor Board victories at the Bethlehem Steel Co. at Sparrows Point, Md.," where the CIO shipyard and steel unions have recently won major victories; denounced wage-freezing schemes; and criticized the Hobbs concentration camp bill.

• High strength with minimum weight. This is the basic principle underlying the construction of everything that flies—from birds to airplanes.

Stainless steel—with its high strength-weight ratio—has already contributed much to aviation progress. This metal is highly resistant to corrosive attack by moisture-laden air and salt water spray. It practically eliminates the hazard of corrosion and thus protects from the always present chance of failure from rust-weakened members. Since no painting or coating is necessary to protect its gleaming surface, maintenance is greatly simplified and kept at a minimum.

Designer and manufacturers finds stainless steel an ideal material for an increasing number of applications.

quoted practically guarantee a further rise in the cost of foodstuffs and other perishable commodities of 10 to 12 per cent. The grievous housing shortage is becoming more acute, and a great wave of increases in rents is clearly in the making."

The CIO leader's statement branded as a "widely-spread canard" the story that the present increase in prices is in large amount due to wage increases.

"This falsehood has been extensively circulated, especially by anti-labor quarters," the statement declared. "It is being used as a new touchstone to justify attacks upon organized labor by those who have always sought labor's destruction."

LABOR NOT TO BLAME

Most of the substantial price increases have occurred in those commodities where wages are a minor factor, or where no considerable wage increases have occurred, the House Committee was told — in imported commodities, farm products and raw materials.

"A group of fairly important wage increases took place beginning about March, 1941, following the appearance of great profits in the basic industries," Pres. Murray's statement added.

"These wage increases were considerable in, among others, coals, steel, automobile, and electrical and radio manufacturing industries. In each of these cases, both the government and CIO economists have figures which point conclusively to the fact that the wage increases could be paid without any increase in prices of the products.

"Where increases in prices have taken place in these industries, they have apparently been used to expand profits and not to pay the cost of wage increases."

Turning to the subject of wage controls, Pres. Murray's statement warned that they would lead certainly to a condition of enslaved labor.

The process, he said, would "set into motion an irresistible chain of government orders and fiats which would lead inevitably to government control over all labor and all industry.

WOULD ENSLAVE LABOR

"For example, should workers for one reason or another, wages having been set, seek to change from an industry paying lower wages to an industry paying higher wages or from a less desirable city to a more desirable city, the government would be compelled, in order to insure labor supply to the less desirable industry, to forbid workers to leave their jobs. That is the beginning of enslaved labor.

"The only way to maintain the effective cooperation of the working people in this productive effort is to strengthen the system of free collective bargaining. Great Britain, even at war and under attack, has not sought to destroy that system.

"We here in this country must not do it either under the guise of wage control or any other means."

Construction Union Scores OPM-AFL Monoply Deal

By CECIL OWEN

WASHINGTON, Oct. 11—Whether American workers are to be forced to accept government dictation on which union they may join, was the issue squarely posed here by sensational repercussions in the wake of refusal to award a housing job to a low bidder who uses CIO labor.

From one end of the capital to the other there were demands for explanation by OPM, defense agency at the center of the big dispute, of its labor policy. Rallying to the side of the United States Construction Workers Organizing Committee, other CIO affiliates flooded Washington with wires.

The entire matter was aired before the Truman defense investigating committee of the Senate and many Congressmen voiced indignation on the floor of the house. The Justice Department intervened with a legal ruling upholding the UCWOC's position. Newspaper and radio commentators added their voices to the swelling chorus of protest.

NO STATEMENT YET

While the storm raged in Congress, the press and radio and throughout labor and business circles generally, there was deep silence from OPM, punctuated only by a few weak and anonymous alibis. It was said by OPM officials that an explanation must await return of Sidney Hillman from the west coast where he had gone to address the AFL building trades department.

The controversy which has stirred Washington more than any other labor issue since the defense program began, was started when the Federal Works Agency was ordered by OPM not to award a 300-unit housing contract to the J. P. Currier Lumber Co., Detroit, although its bid was lowest by $431,000. The firm employs UCWOC members and this was the sole cause for the refusal of the award, OPM even going so far as to admit the job could have gone to Currier if he had been non-union.

LEWIS BLASTS POLICY

UCWOC Chairman A. D. Lewis charged in a statement issued here that the OPM's policy "brings vividly to mind" the systems of "forced labor practiced by the Fascist-dominated nations of old Europe."

"When the government says to a man that he must join a certain type of union, or none at all, it definitely marks the most backward step ever taken in the history of labor relations in this nation.

"Freedom of choice as guaranteed by the Wagner Act and other pro-labor legislation for which labor has fought a half century struggle, is being discarded by the OPM. Here we have the spectacle of a set of bureaucrats, clothed with extra legal powers, undertaking to rewrite the laws enacted by Congress and to impose on free American Labor a new form of slavery.

WHAT RULE OF REASON?

"By what rule of reason or policy should any branch of labor or industry be denied an opportunity to participate on an equal basis in the defense program of our nation? Why are savings of millions of dollars of taxpayers' money so lightly discarded in order to continue an outmoded and too often corrupt setup in this industry?

"Are American workers now to be subjects of a 'Labor Front' on the Hitler model? Are reputable business men to be turned away solely because they have sought to deal fairly with their employees in the spirit and the letter of federal labor laws?"

These, Lewis said, are only a "few of the vital questions" raised by the OPM Labor Division's "stealthy efforts to enforce a deal with the building trades of the AFL." With the matter now thoroughly publicized, "we are willing to let determination of this issue go before the bar of public opinion, Lewis concluded.

MONOPOLY TO AFL

Though the Currier-UCWOC case has exploded all over Congressional hall and in the press and radio, it is but one of a series of incidents that demonstrate strong bias by the OPM Labor Division toward the AFL building trades.

Effect of its policy admittedly is to grant a monopoly to the AFL on all defense construction, regardless of the wishes of the workers or cost to the taxpayers. This is frankly stated by OPM as the price for an uneasy peace in the construction industry.

Further confirmation of the OPM-AFL deal comes from the AFL itself whose current clipsheet has this to say: "Hillman, in his official position as twin head of OPM, helped in the negotiation of this pact which gives AFL unions a virtual closed shop on all defense construction projects." The AFL publication hailed the appearance of the OPM associate director before the building trades convention.

STABILIZATION PACT

Origin of the controversy dates back to a stabilization pact for the construction industry which was negotiated by OPM and the AFL. The UCWOC was barred from this pact and protests of Chairman A. D. Lewis went unanswered except for a brief reply from Hillman. Implicit in this agreement was the AFL monopoly which has been blasted into public view by the Currier episode.

Admittedly, also, there is no legal basis for this monopolistic OPM-AFL pact. The Justice Department, when questioned by FWA, advised Administrator John M. Carmody that under the law he should award the contract to Currier as a lowest responsible bidder. But OPM took the view that its word was beyond mere legalities and Carmody knuckled under, although admitting before a Senate Committee that he wanted to award the job to Currier.

When it became clear that Carmody would not act and OPM officials were running for cover, the Truman committee decided to subpeona Hillman to explain why he has granted a monopoly to the AFL. He is expected to testify on his return from the coast. Meanwhile, the defense housing project is delayed while Detroit workers suffer.

Haywood Says:

to improve his way of living. This is being carried out today through the efforts of the unions of the CIO.

WOULD HURT NATION

"If those efforts are to be hampered by an arbitrary order that says to each worker: 'thus far and no farther can you go in striving for a decent standard of living'—then we shall be denying the very basis of our nation's strength."

Haywood recalled that the CIO has "repeatedly" pointed out that "wage earners' income goes for consumer goods—food, clothing, shelter, medical and other professional services. There are no shortages in these goods and services. On the contrary, there are farmers and merchants and laborers eager to supply them."

The CIO organization director quoted from a number of government economists to show that "wages are not a major factor in costs of production, and become less and less a factor as production increases. Wage increases, far from causing price increases, are paid for out of increased production."

WOULD END BENEFITS

To freeze wages, as reactionary business and Congressional leaders are now proposing, would "wipe out the benefits to the nation that collective bargaining brings," Haywood warned.

"Collective bargaining is very dear to the American people. Generations of laboring men and women have struggled to establish it, both a sa matter of right and as a matter of daily practice in industry.

"Arbitrary freezing of wages would be the very opposite of collective bargaining. It would be, as President Murray told Congress, 'the beginning of enslaved labor'."

FBI Will Probe Anti-CIO Attacks

WASHINGTON, Oct. 11—The Department of Justice this week announced it was acting upon CIO complaints of recent anti-labor vigilante activity.

Asst. Atty. Gen. Wendell Berge said that FBI men were being sent to Harriman, Tenn., where two union organizers were beaten and soaked in hot tar; and to Helena, Ark., where a crowd of 50 men forced six CIO officials to leave town without addressing a scheduled mass meeting.

A CIO mass meeting at Memphis, Tenn., last week endorsed a resolution by union officials involved which condemned the "actions of the local police and deputy peace officers of Helena and West Helena, who collapsed in the performance of their duties, when they refused to give protection and guarantee safe passage to the CIO leaders from the assembled mob."

SOUGHT ARRESTS

The resolution also accused the U. S. District Attorney at Little Rock, Ark., of refusing "to recognize warrants for the arrest of four members of the mob, which were sworn out by one of the CIO representatives.

The statement pointed out that the "reprehensible action of this mob," which threatened to lynch the men and which forced them to leave the state in violation of the anti-kidnaping law, "constitutes a vicious flouting of the constitutional guarantee of the rights of American citizens to peaceful assembly."

Rubber Pact Lifts Pay

Trenton, N. J., Oct. 11—Wage increases running as high as 15% were won here in a contract signed by the Essex Rubber Co. and Local 212, United Rubber Workers.

The pact climaxed a two-week strike and an extensive organization campaign. Last June, the union won an NLRB election at the plant after the Labor Board had ordered dissolution of an illegal company union.

Bankrupt Firm Must Pay

St. Louis—A U. S. circuit court ruled here that a referee in bankruptcy for the Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co. must honor NLRB claims for $160,000 back pay for 168 workers. The firm went out of business while its appeal from the NLRB decision was being considered by the courts.

Ask Higher Textile Pay Base

Washington, Oct. 11—A petition to lift the minimum wage for the cotton, rayon and miscellaneous industry from 37½ cents an hour to 40 cents was sent today to Wage-Hour Administrator General Philip Fleming by Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers Union.

Rieve estimated that a rise to the highest possible minimum under the Fair Labor Standards Act would increase the annual earnings of some 150,000 cotton textile workers by about ten million dollars a year.

Earlier this year the cotton textile minimum was lifted from 32½ cents to 37½ cents. Rieve pointed out that "the present price margins have been sufficiently high to provide impressive profits for this industry."

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

The campaign to organize Bethlehem marches on steadily. Following on the overwhelming victory for the Steel Workers Organizing Committee at Bethlehem's Baltimore plant, the workers at Bethlehem Shipbuilding in the same city chose the CIO Marine and Shipbuilding Workers by a two to one majority. Next week workers at the Fore River Bethlehem Shipbuilding plant, biggest of all Bethlehem shipbuilding units, will vote on their choice of a union to represent them—choosing between "independent" and CIO. There can be no doubt of the way this election will turn out.

The Bethlehem campaign, together with the Ford campaign, was one of the major objectives set by the CIO at its 1940 convention. The Ford campaign has been won, with a closed shop contract covering aproximately 130,000 workers. The Bethlehem campaign is getting closer to final victory with each election.

THE REASONS

What are the reasons that account for these CIO victories in Bethlehem, in Ford and elsewhere throughout industry in this country? As I said in a radio address to the workers at the Fore River plant last week, the reasons are basically very simple.

The CIO does not win elections on the basis of promises. It has won and is still winning them on the basis of solid performance, solid sevice to the workingmen and women of this country. To begin with, CIO has the secret of modern, effective organization — the principle of industrial unionism. Modern industry requires modern methods of organization. Today's great sprawling corporations cannot be organized piecemeal. Unrelated, unaffiliated splinter unions each attempting to organize independently of the other cannot do the job.

This is why workers everywhere are voting for CIO to represent them—because they realize that only through affiliation to a strong, united industrial organization can they secure the protection and the benefits they need.

CIO ROLLS AHEAD

Despite intimidation and open terror against CIO in Tennessee, Paul R. Christopher, CIO representative and secretary of the state CIO Council, is able to report a victory at the Mead Paper Mill, where the workers voted 96 to 53 for District 50 of the United Mine Workers.

The drive to organize unorganized shoe workers, undertaken with the aid of the national CIO and under the direction of Walter Harris, has scored an impressive victory in an election at the International Shoe plant in Nashua, N. H., where the workers voted 492 for the United Shoe Workers to 102 against.

On the same day, the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers won an election at the Paper Box Machine Co. in the same city, the vote 54 to 18.

In Akron, Ohio, the United Rubber Workers Local 2 has voted to accept a contract with Goodyear, marking the first complete collective bargaining agreement with this firm. It will be signed coincidentally with signing at Cumberland, Md., and Los Angeles, Calif. Another shipbuilding election at Detroit shows a CIO victory by over 400 votes. At Buffalo, N. Y., the workers of the American Car and Foundry Co. chose the SWOC by three to one over the AFL Federal union.

In Salt Lake City, James Morgan, regional director, reports that Cudahy Packing workers are signed up almost 100 per cent with the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee. Workers at the Utah Woolen Mills voted two and a half to one for CIO.

CANNERY WORKERS WIN

The United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing and Allied Workers have been piling up a string of victories recently, led off by the contract won from the Diesel-Wimmer-Gilbert Cigar Corp., fifth largest in the country, and covering 2,200 workers. Six plants in Detroit, Mich., Lima, Findlay, Van Wert and St. Mary's, Ohio, are included. Wage raises of from 10 to 15 per cent feature the agreement.

The Cannery and Agricultural Workers also announce the first union contract with the Quaker Oats Co., signed in Cedar Rapids, Ia., where the biggest cereal plant in the world now becomes CIO. The same union also announces a contract at the Marshall Canning Co.

DETROIT, Oct. 11—An attractive pamphlet that tells the "how, where and why" of low-cost housing for workers has been issued by the CIO United Automobile, Aircraft & Agricultural Implement Workers.

Entitled "Housing for Defense," by UAW Pres. R. J. Thomas, the pamphlet was issued by the UAW-CIO Educational Dept., 281 W. Grand Blvd., Detroit, Mich. The pamphlet is priced at 10 cents a copy.

"The UAW-CIO must not only increase wages but also take rent and housing action to see that an inflationary cycle does not wipe out wage gains," the pamphlet points out. "Rents must be kept within reason."

While local rent-control programs are a prime necessity at this time, "they cannot do the job without the support of a local union housing program," the booklet points out. "The long range effect of a housing program will be to provide UAW-CIO communities with an increased number of low cost houses. By buying houses, workers will be able to stabilize their housing costs, and the dangers of inflation will be completely nullified."

After describing the background of the nation's sub-standard housing, and of the efforts of the defense housing program to counteract that situation, the pamphlet shows how successful unions have been in pushing through their own low-cost home plans. It pays particular tribute to the Camden Plan, originated by the CIO shipyard union, which has been extensively copied throughout the country.

The appendix contains a detailed program for union low cost housing, which answers all the questions about just what steps have to be taken, what money has to be raised, and how the project should be managed and directed.

While "Housing for Defense" is principally directed towards auto workers, unionists in every locality and every industry who are confronted with a housing problem—and almost everybody is—will find this new publication an exceptionally valuable guidebook.

Offer Course In Labor Journalism

New York, Oct. 11. — A course to teach unionists the "ABC's" of labor journalism will be conducted at The Writers School here by Fred Myers, editor of the Guild Reporter, official organ of the American Newspaper Guild.

"Many of our untrained labor editors, chairman of educational committees and publicity chairmen are doing phenomenally excellent jobs, but there is none of them who could not do better if he had the opportunity of professional training in the field and of regular exchange of experiences with others in similar work," Myers said.

The school opened October 6, and the class will meet one night weekly for 12 weeks. Fee for the course is $10.

Letters of inquiry should be addressed to The Writers School, 381 Fourth Ave., New York City.

Labor Problems On N Y. Womens Radio Series

New York, Oct. 11—"Labor—its responsibilities and possibilities" is the title of a ten-weeks' series of forums which will be sponsored by the Women's Trade Union League over Station WEVD from 9:15 to 9:45 on Thursday evenings.

Leaders in labor, government and academic circles will take part in these open discussions on the immediate problems facing wage earners in the national crisis.

Two CIO speakers who will be on the program are James Carey, national CIO secretary, and Clinton Golden, eastern director of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

Unique feature of these forums will be the participation of a trade union audience in the discussion, which will have an opportunity to hear representatives of organized labor present their questions and views in the latter half of the program.

N.Y. Laundry Union May Strike To Cut Long Work Week

NEW YORK, Oct. 11—A deadlock was reached yesterday in negotiations between the Laundry Workers' Joint Board, affiliated with the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, and Greater New York laundry owners over a reduction in the workweek for 25,000 laundry workers when collective agreements expire at the end of this month. Unless contracts are renewed, there is danger of a general strike.

According to Hyman Blumberg, Joint Board manager the union has rejected an employer proposal of 50 hours per week for maintenance men, and 46 hours per week for inside male help.

The union, Blumberg said, is demanding a 48-hour week for maintenance men instead of the present 53; a 44-hour week for inside male help instead of the present 48 hours; a 40-cent an hour minimum and a guarantee of 40-hours work per week for female help, and a sick and death benefit fund.

WANT EQUAL HOURS

Mr. Blumberg declared that the union is determined to equalize working hours between inside male and female help, and to establish standards in the laundry industry. He said that a 50-hour week for maintenance men and a 46-hour week for other inside male help are "out of step" with all trends in other local industries.

The deadlock yesterday was between the union and the so-called family laundries, as well as wholesalers, who handle the wash of a million New York families.

Vote Strike At Buffalo Steel Firm

Buffalo, N. Y., Oct. 11—Workers at the Buffalo Forge Co. voted overwhelmingly today to strike unless their wage negotiation demands are met.

Officials of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee said date for the walkout will be set by the union's executive group. The SWOC is seeking contract negotiations, wage increases and the reinstatement of three dismissed workers. The plant, employing about 1,500, has large defense orders for ventilating equipment.

Several Unions Back Murray

New York, Oct. 11—The general executive board of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers has voted unanimously to urge the re-election of Philip Murray as CIO president.

Through a statement issued by Sec.-Treas. Jacob Potofsky, the ACW board said that "Mr. Murray's record in office during the past year is the crowning achievement of the CIO. It has brought into contractual relations the great Ford Motor Co. and other giants of industry which had previously resisted unionization.

"Mr. Murray's efforts in steel, motors and other basic industries have resulted not only in scores of equitable contracts but also in a substantial increase in CIO membership."

Other unions which have taken similar action within the last week include the United Office & Professional Workers, whose executive board met in New York; the Intl. Woodworkers of America, meeting in convention at Everett, Wash.; the California Industrial Union Council, which convened in San Francisco last weekend; and the Aluminum Workers of of America.

A SHORT SHORT STORY:

The Well-Dressed Corpse

IN A DINGY, second-rate hotel room, the body of a man was found. He wore no coat and no vest, but around his throat was a beautiful silk tie. That he had been strangled with the latter, both Lieutenant Olson and his burly assistant, agreed. There was no clue to his identity beyond the unenlightening name, James Smith, on the hotel register. The clerk at the desk was not of much assistance.

"Y'know," he explained, "in a hotel like this we get a lotta Smiths—right now we have four. Maybe somebody did ask for James Smith, but it mighta been any of the other guys. There's . . ."

"OK, OK, never mind. Let's go up and take another look, Kelly," said Olson, turning to his frowning assistant.

A further examination of the deceased Smith's effects was not fruitful—nothing to pick him out of the thousands of anonymous human beings that a big city can hold. Olson picked up a coat which lay on the bed.

"The guy who did this job sure did his work thorough," he said, pointing to the ragged place where the manufacturer's label had been torn out. "Got any ideas, Kelly?"

"It's a sticker, all right," said that worthy, pushing his derby farther back on his head. "Ain't it funny—when a guy wants to commit suicide he jumps out of the window of the best hotel in town. But for murder, he always picks a joint like this. These places is hotbeds of murder. Yeah, human nature sure is funny."

A Clue

"Listen Philosopher, the department isn't paying you for that. They've got a lotta college boys for that stuff. . . . Say, this looks like something," he said, picking up the coat again, "here's that there union label. He missed up on that. Let's see if there's one on that swell piece of tapestry this stiff's wearing."

The tie, too, though the manufacturer's label had been torn out, yielded a small union label which has been partly concealed by the folds.

"I don't get this," said Olson. "This is a pretty swell tie for a guy wearing such a cheap suit."

"Maybe it wuz a Christmas present," volunteered Kelly, helpfully.

"A Christmas present!" sneered the lieutenant. "Guess you never got a Christmas tie. You should see the ones my wife buys me. No-o-o, I don't think this belonged to Smith. Look here, Smith must have been packing to leave—his stuff is in that grip, his shirts, his ties. Yeah," he added triumphantly, "here in the closet is his hat and under it on the hook—the tie he was gonna wear. Now. let's see . . . this guy comes to see Smith. They fight. Smith gets knocked out. The killer is desperate. Smith must be wiped out. He looks in the bureau drawers—nothing there—he rips off his own tie and dresses up his friend real good and snug!"

"Yeah," replied Olson to Kelly's shouts of approval, "maybe I am right. But we've still got to find out who these guys were. Let's go."

The Tracer

The phone booth downstairs was warm, but Lieutenant Olson was hot on the scent.

"Hello. Amalgamated Clothing Workers? I want information about your union label . . . hello, this is Lieutenant Olson of the Homicide Bureau. I have two of your union labels here. I want to know who the manufacturer is. OK." Olson read off the numbers on both the coat and the tie label. "Yes, I'll wait. . . . Hello . . . the coat, Piper & Son and the tie . . . Hinch and Webly. Fine. Thanks."

Piper & Son, after examining the coat, could not do more than explain that it was of the type which is turned out in great quantities and sold to a great many retail shops in and out of the city. To trace it would be a long and arduous undertaking. Olson decided to drop that for the moment and call on Hinch & Webly. This proved to be a very exclusive establishment on the Avenue. Here the detectives met with far better success. Mr. Webly immediately identified the tie as a recent number sold on special order to one of their best customers, a Mr. Scott. Two minutes later, Olson and Kelly emerged and made a dash for the nearest cab.

To find Mr. Scott was a comparatively simple matter but they arrived none too soon. Mr. Scott seemed to be preparing to leave on a long trip. When questioned, he protested with great dignity that he knew nothing of a James Smith. He began to sound quite convincing—that is—until he suddenly stopped short and stared dumbly at something Olson had taken out of his pocket and was dangling between his fingers.

The Clincher

"Ever see this before?" asked Olson, blandly, waving the tie gently to and fro.

Scott was totally unprepared for this damaging bit of evidence and it was not long before he broke down and confessed.

Later, Olson, homeward bound with Kelly, was disposed to be expansive.

"Well, that's going to be a pretty good mark for Lieutenant Olson. Yes sir, and for you, too, Kelly. May mean a promotion, y'never know."

"Sure thing," agreed Kelly, "Ellery Queen couldn't done better. That was swell thinkin'."

"Yeah," said Olson, generously, "swell thinkin' and the union label."

Canadian Auto Workers Win Strike

TORONTO, Oct. 11—Four thousand members of United Automobile workers union ended a 14-day strike and returned to work at McKinnon Industries-GM St. Catherines plant this week after forcing the management to agree to negotiate wage increases

By their solidarity the strikers defeated a Canadian edition of the Mohawk Valley back-to-work plan which was promoted by Munitions Minister Howe whose department of $1-a-year businessmen have vigorously opposed trade unions in the industries they head. Howe recently said a company union would be recognized at Hamilton alongside of a SWOC union.

The agreement was hailed by Regional Director George Burt of UAW as a notable victory for the union "over all the forces which could possibly be mustered against it." The strike began when the company refused to consider increases, declaring that it could not grant them under a wage-freezing order in council.

INCREASE RETROACTIVE

Any increases negotiated will be retroactive. All employes returned to work on the same basis as previously. Shortly before the strike ended the Department of Labor confirmed the union's announcement that several hundred GM workers at Oshawa had received wage increases of 10 cents hourly and up.

The department maintained that general increases could not be given even if the company was in favor, but admitted that there could be wage adjustments where rates were out of line or increased efficiency shown.

BLOW TO HEPBURN

The agreement granted complete recognition to the union which means that General Motors have agreed to what Premier Hepburn of Ontario forbade in 1937 when the company's workers struck at Oshawa. Hepburn won an election on the phony issue of keeping the CIO out. Today the UAW is the largest industrial union in the province.

The strike was the first one since the war in which Royal Canadian Mounted Police were sent to the scene to protect "loyal" workers who wanted to return to work.

Despite their presence and the barricades on main streets adjacent to the plant, only 300 production workers entered during the two weeks. The failure of any more to return gave the lie to Labor Minister McLarty's statement that workers were dragooned into striking.

Few features of the back-to-work plan were neglected. Workers were told by company foremen they would be fined and jailed by the RCMP if they did not return; the newspapers and radios kept up a constant attack on the patriotism of the workers; movie screens were used; rumors of departments returning filled the city hourly; efforts were made to pit foreign against native-born and skilled against unskilled—but all to no avail.

Labor Regime In Australia

Canberra, Australia, Oct. 11—Australia's first Labor government since 1932 came into power here last week after two supporters of Prime Minister Arthur Fadden's coalition regime swung their votes to the labor forces.

John Curtin, 56-year-old former newspaper man and Labor party leader, was directed to form the new government.

Basis for attack on the coalition were charges that it had failed to provide adequate pay for the army; that it failed to extend compensation and old-age pension payments; that the compulsory loan system caused unequal sacrifices among various income groups, and that new opportunities were being created for private business profits.

Juke Box Sings Union Song!

WATERBURY, Conn., Oct. 11—(FP)—Imagine his surprise when, sitting in a diner near headquarters of the CIO local at the Chase Brass & Copper Co., Director Don Harris of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers Brass Organizing Drive suddenly heard a union song blare out of the diner's juke box.

Wondering whether Benny Goodman or Count Basie had gone in actively for labor organization, Harris investigated. He found the record was the "Talking Union" ballad from the Almanac Singers record album of the same name.

It seems the Chase union got the records on a loan from the Brass Workers Organizing Committee in Waterbury. Delighted with the union character of the songs, Chase volunteer organizers put them in their headquarters juke box, which is connected with the diner next door.

The owner of the diner is an enthusiastic member of the Chase union and dishes out union relish with every sandwich. He went for the Almanac records like a fly to molasses.

Chase workers got a big kick out of the records. The action the nickelodeon gets resembles the play on a jack-pot machine. The tunes and words carry right into the Chase plant, where "Which Side Are You On?" has become as popular as "Marie Elena."

N. Y. Welfare Head Refuses Union Pact

NEW YORK, Oct. 11—Welfare Commissioner William Hodson has again given the cold shoulder to demands for sole bargaining rights sought by the CIO State, County & Municipal Workers in the Dept. of Welfare.

Hodson also turned down union requests for a five-day week for the 9,200 employes, and for abandonment of a committee investigating so-called subversive activities, which the SCMWA has branded as an anti-union fishing expedition.

Daniel Allen, SCMWA official, said the union would seek a conference with Mayor F. H. LaGuardia to press for acceptance of the union's demands, which have the support of CIO President Philip Murray.

L. A. Council Runs Forum

Los Angeles, Oct. 11—Establishment of a committee on priorities problems, steps toward the purchase of the CIO building, and inauguration of regular weekly CIO forums high lighted activities of the Los Angeles Industrial Union Council this week.

Final plans for the purchase of the CIO building and adjacent property and enlargement of facilities will be acted upon at a meeting of CIO leaders Oct. 10. Plans call for the purchase at a price of $74,000, and the issuance of non-interest-bearing bonds to affiliated locals and individuals to raise $20,000 for the down payment and cost of improvements.

LABOR AND DEFENSE

Starting with a series of five meetings under the general topic of "Labor in National Defense," the CIO forums are being held every Sunday evening in the CIO building. Topics include the functions of the OPM, priorities, wage stabilization, price control, and a comparison of the CIO Industry Council plan as compared to the advisory councils.

Speakers will include James G. Thimmes, regional director, SWOC; Walter Smethurst, assistant director of aviation, UAW; Oscar Fuss, Labor's Non-Partisan League; George Roberts, formerly international representative of the United Rubber Workers and now with the OPM, and representatives of various government agencies. The forums provide ample opportunity for questions and answers, and are open to the public.

An ambitious program on priorities has been drawn up and adopted by the council, by which the CIO unions take the initiative in securing the cooperation of small manufacturers in the formation of associations.

Marine Parleys Stalemated; Owners Blamed

NEW YORK, Oct. 11—Failure of steamship operators to recognize the need for adjustment of wages and working conditions for American seamen, many of whom are engaged in the transportation of cargoes into war zones, has resulted in a stalemate of negotiations, Pres. Joseph Curran of the Natl. Maritime Union, informed President Roosevelt yesterday.

The Union's agreements with 28 steamship companies expired on September 30. Since that date American seamen have been leaving U. S. ports with no guarantees of protection and security, which, the NMU warns, must inevitably lead to confusion and dislocation of the Union's policy of maintaining smooth flow of commerce.

OBSTINATE POSITION

"The National Maritime Union," the President was informed, "cannot accept responsibility for confusion or interference with the smooth flow of commerce which this obstinate position of the operators may project.

"Since the outbreak of hostilities the NMU has consistently maintained a continuous movement of vessels and settlement of all disputes through the peaceful channels contained in the machinery of contracts. This machinery does not now exist because the contracts have expired," the telegram to the President stated.

The Union's demands include higher wages and adjustment of working conditions to conform to the rising costs of living and unusual working regulations which did not exist when the last agreement was negotiated two years ago.

SEEK UNIFORM WAGES

The Union is also demanding that the wages and working standards of all American seamen be made uniform. There is no differential in living costs, taxation of income of the men who man America's merchant vessels.

American steamship operators have virtually the same operating costs, including insurance rates, costs of fuel, repairs and supplies.

The present differentials in wages—which the NMU contends are deliberately maintained by the shipowners to foster disunity in the ranks of trade unions—only results in confusion and delay in the free flow of commerce, which is so vital to the defense of our country at this time, the NMU said.

Charge U. S. Investigators Use Intimidation

WASHINGTON, Oct. 11—Charges that the Civil Service Commission's investigating staff is illegally intimidating thousands of government workers and seriously injuring morale, were laid before the Commission today by a delegation of 100 representatives of Washington locals of the CIO United Federal Workers.

The union officials said the Commission would destroy the merit system it was supposed to protect unless immediate action is taken to discipline the investigators.

Led by UFWA Sec.-Treas. Eleanor Nelson and by Nathan Witt, UFWA counsel, they complained that among other things, a Civil Service dick had gained material from a Confidential Selective Service Questionnaire despite pledges of the government that the material would not be available for other U. S. agencies.

ICKES HEADED GROUP

In another case, the delegation complained that a War Dept. employe was labeled as "subversive" by the Civil Service probers because he had collected money for loyalist Spain. The organization for which the employe was gathering the funds was a Spanish aid group headed by Sec. of the Interior Harold L. Ickes!

One government employe was asked this anti-union question: "Do you belong to the Communist party, the Nazi Bund or the CIO?" Another man's chance at a U. S. job apparently hinged on his answer to a question about what he thought about future occurences in the Balkans.

CIO Smashes Two Fake Unions

Buffalo, N. Y., Oct. 11—Workers at two plants of the American Radiator Co. dealt a crushing defeat to two independent unions at Labor Board elections which were won hands down by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

In another election among the 700 workers at the Buffalo plant of the American Car & Foundry Co., the SWOC defeated an AFL union three to one.

At the American Radiator's Bond plant, the SWOC beat the Arco Independent Union, 1267 to 42, and at the Terminal plant, the vote was 332 for the SWOC to 65 for the Cloverleaf Cooperative Union.

Nathan E. Cowan, SWOC subregional director, in announcing the results of the Radiator elections said: "This tremendous victory means the end of company unionism at the American Radiator plants here. It means that from now on the workers will be represented by a union that stands on its two feet and fights for their rights."

NO SCABS HERE: There were plenty of cops, but no scabs, as the United Automobile Workers conducted a militant strike at the McKinnon Industries, St. Catherines, Ont. Failure of the back-to-work movement forced the company to negotiate wage increases—and then the men went back to their jobs together—and victorious.

Goodyear Rubber Signs With CIO

See Story Page Three

AKRON, Ohio, Oct. 18—The CIO this week knocked another big corporation out of the open shop camp when the powerful Goodyear Rubber Co. signed agreements with the United Rubber Workers for three principal plants.

Pres. S. H. Dalrymple of the URWA hailed the agreement as the "end of an epoch" and predicted that both the workers and the corporation would benefit through existence of the CIO contracts.

The contracts will lift wages by several cents an hour, and bring about markedly improved working conditions.

Goodyear was the sole remaining holdout among the large rubber concerns. A strike at the plant in 1936 was one of the first conducted under CIO auspices, but at its conclusion the company doggedly fought against signing an agreement. Final victory came as the result of an intensive organizing campaign in recent months under joint CIO and URWA auspices.

CIO Picket Line Ties Up Big Texas Pecan Shelling Plant

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., Oct. 18—A strike of 860 employes of the Southern Pecan Shelling Company is going strong as the result of company rejected demands for a five cent wage increase by the Pecan Workers Union, Local 172, affiliated with the United Cannery, Agriculture, Packing and Allied Workers of America.

The Union was assisted by Father Lee Murphy, representing Archbishop Robert E. Lucey. Department of Labor Conciliator Charles Young attended three meetings with the Company prior to the strike.

Julius Seligmann Sr., the "Pecan King," refused flatly to grant any increase in wages until a few minutes before the strike deadline. His offer of a two-cent increase then was rejected by the union committee and the plant was emptied, clean as a whistle, in about three minutes.

NO SCABS ENTER PLANT

The union claims it has the prettiest picket line that ever graced the streets of San Antonio. Not one scab has entered the plant. The police patrolling the picket line seem to enjoy their duties and have been very courteous—an extreme contrast to the police brutality in the last strike.

A few hours before the strike Father Leo Murphy declared he could not honestly ask the union to concede further and promised full support to the strike.

The company is the largest in the pecan industry and is now pressed hard for Thanksgiving and Christmas deliveries. Except for the stubborn attitude of Julius Seligmann, the company would not be losing $20,000 production every day. The amount of the wage increase requested has been lost by the company already due to the strike.

May Strike At RCA Wireless

NEW YORK, Oct. 18—Employes of the RCA Communications network this week rejected company contract proposals and authorized the American Communications Assn. negotiating committee to call a strike if necessary to enforce union demands.

ACA members employed by RCAC made their decision during a 15-day balloting period which terminated Oct. 15. The company has 1,250 employes in continental United States and Hawaii, and maintains exclusive radio telegraph communications with most European capitals.

PARLEYS BOGGED DOWN

The strike vote was taken after negotiations, which commenced on September 15, bogged down when the company rejected the union's two demands and countered with proposals for some seventeen changes in the existing contract. The union charged the company with failing to bargain in good faith and attempting to negotiate "backwards."

In announcing the vote, Selly stated, "Our members are fully cognizant of the seriousness of the step they have voted to take. We reiterate our strong desire to avoid any action which might adversely affect the national defense effort, in which the facilities of RCAC play such an important part. However, we will not permit the management to use the present emergency as a black-jack over the heads of the employes in order to feather its own profitable nest.

"The union negotiating committee is fully aware of its responsibilities to the public, the national defense effort, and our membership. The company's wanton disregard of these interests forced us to submit the strike vote.

"We have called to the attention of the appropriate government agencies, and we repeat, that we would welcome any other method to resolve our differences, but we are determined to take whatever steps are necessary to achieve a just and equitable settlement."

CIO Wins Poll At Intl. Shoe Plant

Nashua, N. H., Oct. 18—The CIO gained a major victory here this week in its national campaign to organize the Intl. Shoe Co., largest single producer in the country.

Workers in the Nashua plant voted 492-107 in a Natl. Labor Relations Board election for the United Shoe Workers of America, it was announced here by Walter Harris, head of the joint CIO USWA organizing campaign.

The victory has spurred CIO organizing activities in all parts of the state, where many shoe firms are located, it was reported.

Addressing a shoe workers' mass meeting in Haverhill, Mass., shortly after the election, Harris predicted that before long Intl. Shoe will sign a master contract covering all its 38,000 employes. The firm operates plants at Nashua and Manchester, N. H., and in a number of mid-west communities.

Mass Lay-Off Danger Seen In Wire Merger

New York, Oct. 18—The American Communications Association, CIO, this week charged the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce with making recommendations for legislation permitting mergers in the telegraph industry which would "open the door to mass lay-offs of employes."

The charge was made in a letter sent by Larry Kelly, chairman of the union's National Merger Defense Committee, to Senator Burton K. Wheeler, chairman of the Senate committee which issued the report on Oct. 2.

All-Alaska Parley Called

Juneau, Alaska, Oct. 18—An All-Alaska Labor Convention to be held here Jan. 26 to 29 was sponsored by the Juneau CIO Council in a resolution passed at a recent meeting.

The Council extended invitations to all organizations who have participated in former All-Alaska conventions and urged that all unions in the territory take part.

Swanky Shops On Fifth Ave. Hit by Strike

New York, Oct. 18 — If you're accustomed to buying your suits custom-made from a swank Fifth Avenue tailor—at $100 to $200 a suit — you're just plain out of luck.

For the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers today had 1,500 tailors out on strike as the result of refusal by the Merchant Tailors' Society to make counter-proposals to the union's contract demands. The ACW asked for 25% wage boosts, time and a half for overtime over 40 hours, and a provision extending social security benefits to all tailors.

Herman Holzknecht, manager of Journeymen Tailors' Local 1, said the strike is 100 per cent effective, with scores of shops along Fifth and Madison Avenues crippled by the walkout. The custom tailors have received no wage boost in four years, he pointed out.

FRAME-UP DEFENDANTS: These men and women are the defendants in the notorious Richmond, Ind., prosecution, and they're getting support from CIO unions throughout the country. Vigilantes smashed their union headquarters and beat up a number of workers during a strike at the Intl. Harvester plant last Spring. The vigilantes went scot-free, but their victims are on trial. Sixteen were found guilty last week, but the CIO plans to appeal their cases to the highest court.

Protest At Once Wage-Freezing Bill, Jones Warns

By JOHN T. JONES
CIO Legislative Representative
Director, Labor's Non-Partisan League

The anti-labor drive to include wage freezing provisions in the Price Control Bill has been increasing in intensity, and there is danger that the House Banking and Currency Committee, which is drafting the final bill, may include such provisions.

The administration-sponsored bill before the committee provides for Government regulation of prices and rents, but not wages. This bill would authorize the President to set ceilings on prices of such commodities and on rents in such communities where prevailing rates or proposed increases are unjustified or abnormal. It forbids price ceilings on agricultural commodities where rates are below 110% of parity. The bill gives the President authority to designate the agencies to administer this legislation.

A substitute bill recently introduced by Congressman Gore of Tennessee, who is a member of this Committee, would set up a Federal agency under an administrator, who would have the authority to set ceilings on wage rates (as well as on prices and rents).

The bill would make it unlawful for unions or individual workers to negotiate wages higher than those set up by the administrator. It would also make it unlawful for a worker to accept, or for an employer to pay, higher rates than those established by the Government. Violations would be punished by $5,000 fines and one year imprisonment.

WAGE-FREEZING BILL

It is of utmost importance that sufficient labor protest be registered within the next few days with the House Banking and Currency Committee against any legislation that would set ceilings on wage rates.

At the same time, the Committee should be urged to report out and secure early passage of the proper kind of anti-inflation legislation which would check excessive and unwaranted increases in commodity prices and rents, that are resulting in rapid cost of living increases.

Government and labor witnesses who appeared before the Committee presented adequate facts to prove that wages and recent wage increases have not been responsible for inflationary price increases; that such legislation would undermine labor unions by taking wage questions out of the sphere of collective bargaining; and that it would unjustly deny American workers the right to a more decent standard of living.

COMMITTEE MEMBERS

Henry B. Steagall of Alabama, Clyde Williams of Missouri, Brent Spence of Kentucky, Thomas F. Ford of California, Paul Brown of Georgia, Wright Patman of Texas, William B. Barry of New York, Leon Sacks of Pennsylvania, Albert Gore of Tennessee, Wilbur D. Mills of Arkansas, A. S. Mike Monroney of Oklahoma, Walter A. Lynch of New York, Herman P. Kopplemann of connecticut, Hale Boggs of Louisiana, Merlin Hull of Wisconsin, Jesse P. Wolcott of Michigan, Charles L. Gifford of Massachusetts, Fred L. Crawford of Michigan, Ralph A. Gamble of New York, Robert W. Kean of New Jersey, Jessie Sumner of Illinois, Frederick C. Smith of Ohio, John C. Kunkel of Pennsylvania, Thomas Rolph of California and Charles S. Dewey of Illinois.

HOBBS CONCENTRATION CAMP BILL

There is a possibility that the Hobbs Concentration Camp Bill, which would permit a board set up by the Department of Justice to imprison indefinitely deportable aliens, will come up for a vote in the House within the next few days. Continued labor protests against this undemocratic proposal will aid in its defeat.

Dime An Hour

Dayton, O.—The strike of Local Machine Workers, against the Simonds-Worden-White Company here was settled this week with an agreement that included 10 cents an hour wage raises for everybody.

High Court Reviews Coast Contempt Case

Washington, Oct. 18—The question of a labor leader's right to publicize his criticism of an anti-union injunction, received the attention of the U. S. Supreme Court for several hours this week.

The case involved Harry Bridges, head of the west coast CIO longshoremen, who several years ago sent a wire to Secretary of Labor Perkins describing a California state court injunction against the union as "outrageous" and warning that it might lead to a coast-wide longshore walkout.

Bridges was subsequently found guilty of contempt of court. Counsel for the state of California told the U. S. Supreme Court that the contempt was not in the criticism, but in the act of offering the text of the wire to the newspapers, and of allegedly confronting the judge with a strike threat unless the injunction were revoked.

Osmond K. Fraenkel, counsel for the CIO official, argued that the telegram was sent to Miss Perkins in an effort to obtain a solution of the labor dispute and was not directed against the participating judge.

In a companion case the conservative Los Angeles Times charged that its freedom of the press was being abridged by a contempt case growing out of its editorial criticism of actions by a California judge, and the expression of opinion that the judge would make a mistake in taking certain judicial steps.

Milton Murray, Eubanks To Head News Guild

NEW YORK, Oct. 18—Milton Murray of Detroit and Sam Eubanks of Oakland, Calif., were elected president and executive vice-president of the American Newspaper Guild in the union's national referendum election, final tabulation of returns showed today.

Early in the election campaign, Sec.-Treas. Victor Pasche and four other candidates on the "United Guild" slate for the executive board withdrew from the race in a unity move. As a result, William Rodgers of Washington automatically became the Guild's next secretary-treasurer.

TAKE POSTS NOV. 1

The new officers will take over their posts on Nov. 1.

Referendum election of officers and executive board members for two-year terms was initiated at the Guild's annual convention in Detroit last June. Previously, Guild leaders had been elected by delegates to the convention.

MURRAY'S STATEMENT

Pres.-elect Murray issued this statement when the returns were made known:

"The complete change of leadership ordered by the members of the American Newspaper Guild is a decisive return to the principles of trade unionism under which the Guild made its greatest gains.

"The new leadership is pledged to a vigorous program of organizing thousands of newspaper men and women throughout the United States and Canada, and to an aggressive program of collective bargaining to improve their wages, working conditions and job security."

In a statement issued 24 hours before the final counting of returns, Sullivan, Kaufman and Pasche conceded the victory of their opponents and called for continued unity within the organization.

"The program of the ANG laid down in successive conventions, is a program of vigorous, progressive industrial unionism," the statement declared. "It is a program which affords the basis for complete unity of the membership in building our union, in taking our place with the whole labor movement. It is a program which will help achieve the unity which the people of this country need to meet the unparalleled dangers confronting us.

"In carrying out these tasks as the elected leadership of the American Newspaper Guild, the new officers will have our sincere and unqualified support. We urge those who supported us in the campaign to give these officers their unstinting backing in the same spirit. We know they will."

Woodworkers Map Unified Plan For Organizing

EVERETT, Wash., Oct. 18—The CIO International Woodworkers of America, in the union's fifth constitutional convention, which closed Oct. 13, unanimously adopted a unity program drafted by an IWA Committee of Four in collaboration with the national CIO

The program, designed to provide a meeting ground on which opposing forces in the union could submerge their differences, sets up a new organizational drive and declares national defense and the defeat of Nazi fascism a basic consideration in IWA policy.

A committee of four statement, endorsed by the convention, says:

"The Congress of Industrial Organizations with its vast membership stands united against fascism and all it represents here and abroad.

ACTS, NOT WORDS

"This position does not stop with public pronouncements, for the workers, members of the CIO, are those who produce the material necessary for the defense of our own nation and those other nations now victims of aggression by Nazi tyranny. As workers in the basic lumber industry, it is vital that we contribute our full share towards the common goal—the defense of our nation and aid to victims of Nazi aggression.

"That this goal may be achieved is but one of the paramount reasons for the speedy elimination of any and all friction within our own IWA organization. It is imperative that this be done."

ORGANIZING PLANS

The convention submitted to membership referendum a proposal for a 25-cent per month increase in per capita tax to finance the new organizational program, which aims to lift the present 60,000 membership to 200,000 in the coming year.

Presence of CIO Assistant Director of Organization Michael Widman throughout the convention contributed much to agreement on policy issues, the Woodworkers' leaders acknowledged.

Widman submitted the plan under which Adolph Germer is to remain as organizational director, with Al F. Hartung, Columbia River Council President, as assistant director. On the convention's closing evening, Widman announced he had asked the CIO for funds with which to put 16 organizers into the field immediately.

Election of officers nominated at the convention is scheduled within 40 days, with Harold Evans of Olympia, Wash., and Worth Lowery, incumbent vice president, standing for the presidency.

O. M. Orton, vice president elected by the executive board to fill the unexpired term of Pres. Harold Pritchett, was renominated for vice president. His running mate will be Norman E. Mason of Coeur d'Alene, Idaho. Opposing Orton and Mason are Carl Winn of Everett, and James Fadling of Aberdeen. Seccretary-Treasurer B. J. McCarty, renominated, will be opposed by Ed Benedict of Forks, Wash.

Among resolutions the convention voted to urge speedy adoption of the Murray industry council plan to stimulate lumber production for defense; urged all-out aid to Great Britain, the USSR and other nations resisting Hitlerism, including repeal of the neutrality act; backed the fight of the CIO against the deportation order issued to Harry Bridges, and protested any attempt to stir up race hatreds.

The convention divided on a proposed referendum to bar and expel from membership "communists, fascists and nazis." After debate, the referendum to go to the membership was re-drafted to permit a vote on each philosophy separately. Objections had been raised by delegates to classifying communists with their "ideological opposites," the nazis and fascists.

Renew Union Shop Pact, Lift Wages

Minneapolis, Minn.—The Union shop contract between Local 1140 of the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers and the Electric Machine Manufacturing Company here has just been renewed with a flat 10 cents per hour wage raise retroactive to Aug. 1, a 5-cent bonus for every hour of work on the first night shift, 10 cents for the second night shift, one- and two-week paid vacations and other improvements.

AFL Convention Kicks Out Brewers' Industrial Union

Seattle, Wash., Oct. 18.—The AFL wound up its 61st annual convention yesterday after going through the time-honored procedure of kicking industrial unionism in the shins.

This year's victim was the Brewery Workers' Union, whose 42,000 industrial-organized members have long been looked upon with covetous eyes by AFL craft union chieftains.

By a 15-1 vote the convention suspended the Brewery Workers for their refusal to turn over truck drivers employed by breweries to the AFL teamsters' union. The teamsters' demand for the brewery drivers has been the subject of a long-standing dispute within the federation.

Memo to McCarthy--- You're in the Union Now

CHICAGO, Oct. 18—The first contract between a plant of Chase & Sanborn and the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing & Allied Workers of America was announced here this week by Donald Henderson, national president of the union.

Terms include pay increases ranging from $4 to $7 a week; one week's paid vacation and six paid holidays.

"This contract following a whirlwind campaign is a good stride forward in the UCAPAWA drive in coffee plants all over the country," Henderson said. "It is also an auspicious opening of the Chicago organizing drive in the food industries which started Oct. 1."

New Southern Labor Paper

Charlotte, N. C., Oct. 18 (FP)—A new labor paper made its formal bow to Dixie this week when the first issue of the southern edition of the Hosiery Worker, official organ of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, came off the press.

...We Never Knew 'Til Now!

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18—This week's prize for sheer, unadulterated nerve goes by unanimous vote of all the judges to Rep. Clare Hoffman, Michigan's veteran labor-hater in the House of Representatives.

Speaking under the title "The Real Friend of Labor," this is what Hoffman had to say about himself: "Some labor publications and some labor leaders, yes, and a few reporters, have attempted to pin on me the appellation of anti-labor. Never was anyone more mistaken.

"The truth is that every amendment ever proposed by me to any labor legislation, every single labor bill introduced by me in Congress would, if adopted, have worked to the advantage of, improved the condition of, the man who actually works."

Hoffman has voted against every piece of progressive legislation in a long career in the House. Failing to defeat them, he has tried to kill labor laws by amendments. Failing that, he has voted and spoken for every anti-labor law brought up before the Congress—and that includes plenty.

Observers in Congress who looked for a bolt of lightning to flash through the roof while Hoffman spoke were disappointed but not surprised. Congressional union-baiters have been getting away with the same kind of stuff and worse for years.

'END OF AN ERA'

Goodyear Rubber Co. Quits Open Shop, Signs CIO Contracts

By ROBERT CRUDEN

AKRON, Ohio, Oct. 18—Conclusion of agreements between the giant Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., and locals of the United Rubber Workers, CIO, in Akron, Los Angeles, and Cumberland, Md., last week marked the end of an epoch in rubber.

Goodyear, the last holdout against unionism in the industry, was a bitter foe of labor, resisting every effort at organization. The success of the joint CIO-URWA organizing drive changed the picture this year and led to the negotiations resulting in the contracts.

BETTER RELATIONS

"The way is now open for stable, responsible labor relations at Goodyear," declared Pres. S. H. Dalrymple and CIO Field Representative Harry Doll, who is in charge of the Goodyear drive.

"We look forward to a new era, marked by cooperation and good faith on both sides. Such cooperation will do much to promote the interests, not only of the company and the workers, but also of national defense."

Doll said that the Akron Goodyear contract provides for restoration of lost service to employes whose seniority had been abolished by the company during prolonged layoffs, for restriction of the flying squadron (a "training" group which has the run of the factory and enjoys special privileges) to 2% of the total payroll and abridgement of some of their privileges, and for raises in minimum rates.

Under the agreement women's minimums are up from 57c to 65c an hour and men's minimums are up from 75c to 85c an hour. The overwhelming majority of the workers make much more than the minimums.

LIFT HIRING RATES

Hiring rates under the new contract are hiked from 45c to 55c for women, and from 55c to 70c for men.

Pay raises of 7c-8c an hour were granted last summer in a preliminary agreement.

Protection of seniority rights, paid vacations, procedure for the settlement of grievances and other safeguards are contained in the Akron agreement.

Additional seniority protection is provided in provisions that men laid off and called back to work within five years will retain credit for previous service.

SETTLE NLRB CASES

A number of NLRB cases outstanding against the company are now in the process of being adjusted as a result of signing the contract.

The Cumberland agreement provides for grievance settlement procedure, protection against rate cutting, seniority rights, protection of the jobs of draftees, and other concessions.

PROTECTION OF JOBS

A clause inserted to protect jobs of workers endangered through priorities reads as fololws:

"Employes furloughed due to restriction of crude rubber as established by the OPM Priority Division shall retain their seniority rights during the period such restrictions are operative plus periods stipulated in this agreement under seniority."

In its early stages, the Goodyear drive was under the direction of Robert J. Davidson, now CIO Regional Director in Cincinnati.

Machine Tools Two-Thirds Idle In Michigan Parts Plants, Auto Union Tells U. S.

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18—Sensational charges that machine tools in the Detroit area adaptable for national defense production are running at only 35% of capacity, were forwarded to a Congressional investigating committee today by CIO Vice-Pres. R. J. Thomas.

Thomas, head of the UAW-CIO, said a survey revealed that of 1,577 machine tools in 34 Detroit plants, 337 are idle throughout the week. He urged immediate steps to place this idle equipment in use both as a solution to the menacing automobile unemployment problem, and "to produce arms in sufficient quantities to frustrate Nazi designs for world domination."

Sec.-Treas. George Addes, head of the auto union's newly created Defense Employment Division, said that the situation amounts to a virtual sit-down strike by business, it was reported by Federated Press, labor news service.

Thomas' charges were sent in the form of a memorandum to Rep. John H. Tolan, head of the Congressional committee investigating migration of labor, which held hearings on the Michigan situation a few weeks ago.

POINTS TO REUTHER PLAN

His statement pointed out that the present situation, where important machine tools are running at only one-third of capacity, was one to which the CIO program drawn up last December by Walter Reuther, head of the UAW-CIO General Motors Division, paid particular attention. The Reuther plan called for conversion of the industry's tooling facilities to defense needs, and pointed out that under such an arrangement the mass production of planes in auto plants was both feasible and desirable.

Thomas noted that recent statements by GM Pres. C. E. Wilson contradicted the "answer" to the Reuther plan given by Alfred Sloan, chairman of GM, earlier this year. Sloan had maintained that only a small part of the auto industry machinery can be adapted for national defense production.

BUILT NEW PLANTS

"It was on the basis of this position that the automobile industry, the OPM, and the U. S. Army and Navy, up to the present time, at least, followed a program of building new plants and of developing new production equipment, instead of utilizing facilities already available," Thomas asserted.

General Motors has devoted "less than one-tenth" of its giant productive capacity to defense work, Thomas said.

The unfortunate effects of this policy will be fully realized when full curtailment of auto production takes places throughout the industry, he added. "Then auto workers will pay the penalty in unemployment for apathetic national defense preparation."

EARLIER CHANGE-OVER

A greater recognition of the auto industry's responsibility to national defense would have brought about a much earlier preparation for change-over from civilian to defense production, the UAW-CIO official said. While this would have postponed introduction of 1942 model cars, "some 30 million hours of skilled labor in the utilization of essential machine tools might have been diverted from producing new model cars to open the way for gigantic national defense production.

"But the conception of 'business as usual' triumphed in governmental agencies as well as in the industry itself. . . . In consequence, automobile workers are left to face an extended period of unemployment—a period of unemployment which might well have been obviated by early planning for defense retooling."

The figures gathered by the tool and die council cover 34 plants in the county. The plants have a total of 1,577 machines, of which 337 were idle at the time of the survey, or 21.4%.

The machines at work are in use only 44.4% of a full 3-shift week, according to the data.

Hobbs Bill On Ice-- For A Time

Washington, Oct. 18 — Opposition of the CIO and progressive groups has temporarily held up the Hobbs concentration camp bill, though it is still being readied for an early vote in the House, it was learned here.

The bill, which would put certain classes of non-citizens in concentration camps for indefinite periods, has been fought by the CIO for over three years. Sponsor of the bill is polltax Rep. Sam Hobbs of Alabama, who has openly boasted that it is designed to "get" Harry Bridges and other labor leaders the polltaxers don't happen to like.

Meanwhile, the Bridges deportation bill, passed in the lower House by a snap vote when only 40 Congressmen were present, has been sent to the Senate Immigration Committee for action. This bill denounced by the CIO when passed in the House last year and criticized by the then Attorney-General, bluntly waves aside the U. S. Constitution in calling for Bridges' exile, "notwithstanding the provisions of any other law."

Sen. Richard B. Russell is chairman of the committee. Bridges defense officials here urged letters and wires of protest to him and to individual Senators against passage of the bill by the Senate.

Trial Opens

Minneapolis, Minn., Oct. 18—Trial of the 28 members of the Socialist Workers party under indictment for allegedly plotting to overthrow the government by force, is scheduled to open in Federal court here Oct. 20.

Company Stalling May Force Cork Strike

GLOUCESTER, N. J., Oct. 18—Workers of the Armstrong Cork Co., members of the United Cork Workers Local Industrial Union 1060, voted to strike here to force the company to quit stalling on the union's demands.

The union negotiating committee stated that although conferences with company representatives have been going on since Aug. 11, no agreement has been reached. The old contract expired Aug. 16th. The union is demanding a 16-cent hourly pay increase for all employes; time and a half pay for work exceeding eight hours a day and 40 hours a week; one week's paid vacations, a union shop and check off of union dues.

A Department of Labor conciliator has been trying to help settle the dispute, the union stated.

Union representatives said they were willing to renew negotiations and to have all issues arbitrated by the National Defense Mediation Board, but that the company "left them with no alternative but to strike."

The union has agreed to furnish adequate personnel to protect the plant from fires or sabotage during the strike.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Gaux

WE HAVE to borrow from an official apologist for the AFL for the best description of that organization's recent gathering at Seattle. It was like "reunion week at the old school," he says.

Year after year, for about half a century, the same labor leaders of the old school have met in one city or another to swap tales about their distant youth and to go through the same rituals they learned as striplings.

Each year Puffing Billy Green puffs and wheezes a bit more. But you can always count on him to make much the same speech in much the same way. And "the boys" always know just where to show the old school spirit with their applause, without even listening.

Each year John P. Frey and Matthew Woll, looking and acting as professorial as can be, perform their accustomed functions on the resolutions. They are always disposed of in the same way and with the same arguments. About the only change is that Frey's reminiscences become longer and longer, as the years add to the length of his memory.

True, there are little escapades and incidents from time to time to add to the fund of stories at the next class reunion. This year, for instance, Big Bill Hutcheson tired of the customary bull-shooting and went away to shoot a deer. And as for good old Ed Gainor he just disappeared altogether, so that someone else nearly occupied his armchair on the executive council.

To show how closely the old school traditions are observed by these alumni of labor (they graduated long, long ago), we may cite the customary handling of the question of discrimination against Negroes by AFL unions.

At the AFL convention in 1935, Pres. A. Philip Randolph of the Sleeping Car Porters made a most eloquent and moving indictment of the vicious practices of so many craft unions in denying membership and jobs to qualified Negro workers.

He gave example after example of the constitutional barriers erected against Negroes; and of the subterfuges of such unions as the Machinists which bar them through their ritual, or accord them only a second class membership.

Green looked pained and tried to hush the matter up. He said the AFL could not interfere with its internationals in this respect. Frey and a few others spoke, and Randolph's plea for action was voted down in the customary fashion.

Reading about the repetition of this same performance in Seattle six years later, one might almost think one had picked up the papers of 1935. The same speakers, same speeches, same arguments, almost the same words, and the same results.

Randolph again spoke with his customary eloquence, citing the same uncorrected grievances, together with a number of more recent examples. Green exhibited the same flustered pain at such tactlessness and advanced the same stale arguments. Frey, the Federation's "intellectual," added some dirty cracks at Randolph's intellectuality to his stock speech. And Randolph's plea for action was voted down in the same old way.

About the only difference was that in 1935 there was a special Federation committee, whose findings bore out all of Randolph's charges; whereas in 1941 all that Randolph was vainly asking was the appointment of a similar committee.

The fraternity spirit at its worst is also exhibited at these reunions of craft leaders of the old school. Their pot-bellied aristocracy resents newcomers and outsiders and the younger generation in general. Class distinctions are observed between Class A and Class B members.

The slightest belch or other indication that a speech is coming up is enough to give the floor to members of the inner circle; but anyone less than 20 or 30 years away from the work-bench has to start a riot to be recognized.

Despite all precautions, however, new and strange faces do appear from time to time—to the embarrassment of the elders of the old school, one of whom was once so blunt as to refer to such newcomers as "riff-raff."

NRA days brought tens of thousands of mass-production workers to batter on the rusty and inhospitable doors of the AFL. Their representatives were so cold-shouldered at the 1935 convention that they turned away to join in founding the CIO.

Since then, the backwash of the great organizing campaigns of the CIO has carried other new members into the AFL. But the "old school" spirit still dominates and suffocates, and relegates the mass-production workers to a Class B status.

All that is most vital, progressive and democratic in labor is now found in the CIO—a movement that looks and moves forward and that is definitely unlike an "old school" reunion.

Facts On Our Side

In opposing wage-freezing legislation, the CIO has repeatedly pointed out that wage increases are not responsible for the recent price rises; and that wages can be raised still further without inflationary effect.

Expert confirmation of this position is now forthcoming from impartial governmental sources. In his testimony before the House banking and currency committee, for instance, Isador Lubin of the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics declared that price increase made since August, 1939, were enough to cover "very substantial wage increases in the future as well as those already made."

Lubin testified that selling prices have risen in advance of wage rates; and that prices which have advanced most are for commodities that are least affected by labor costs,

He noted that this year's wage movements have followed on rapid rises in profits, so that in the major industries in which the CIO has won wage increases there has been enough profit surplus to cover those increases without raising prices.

Furthermore, there has been "a continuous tendency for labor costs per unit of output to decrease," according to Lubin, so that output per man-hour has more than made up for increased hourly earnings.

All the facts support the CIO contention that it is desirable to control the inflationary price increases, but both unnecessary and most undesirable to attempt to control wages at the same time.

But facts and arguments are not enough by themselves to defeat the present moves by selfish and reactionary interests to force wage-freezing legislation through Congress. That is why the CIO is calling on all its members to express at once to their Congressmen and to the House banking and currency committee their determined opposition to all forms of wage-control legislation.

Gadsden and the CIO

A recent editorial in the Gadsden (Ala.) Tribune congratulating the CIO on its "intelligent procedure" and welcoming the agreement of Republic Steel there to bargain with the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, is one of those straws which show which way the wind is blowing in the South.

Gadsden once had an evil sound to labor ears as a city where union organizers were beaten up and an anti-labor terror prevailed.

But the forward sweep of CIO organization in the South has not left Gadsden untouched. The workers there are rapidly becoming unionized. And as they win recognition from their employers, the forward-looking citizens of Gadsden are also coming to recognize that the CIO has a most constructive contribution to make to their city's welfare.

That's real progress!

Unused Capacity

Labor has more reason than any other element in the population to be concerned with full use of our productive capacities, both for defense and for the manufacture of consumers' goods. It suffers first and most from layoffs and from higher prices caused by shortages; and it has most to lose from any failure to defend our democracy.

That is why the CIO took the lead in advancing the Murray industry council plan and other special industry proposals for achieving full production.

Some of the disastrous results of failing to heed these CIO proposals are seen in the recent announcement of the UAW-CIO that tooling machines in the Detroit area, adaptable for defense production, are running only at 35% of capacity.

How much longer are labor's demands for all-out production to go unheeded?

The Richmond Trial

During the International Harvester Co. strike last spring, the Farm Equipment Workers' union hall at Richmond, Ind., was wantonly smashed up by police, deputy sheriffs and state troopers. Picket lines were attacked and strikers brutally assaulted.

None of the persons guilty of this anti-labor violence have been punished. Instead, 65 of the strikers were arrested and 14 of them have recently been sentenced to fines and prison sentences.

CIO organizations all over the country are supporting the defense of these Richmond workers. For it is recognized that labor's rights of picketing and free assembly are at issue, in addition to the injustice against the individuals concerned; and the whole movement must be eternally vigilant if such essential civil liberties are to be preserved.

Vol. IV October 20, 1941 No. 42

The period covered in this chart is from August 1939 to September 20, 1941. The figures are taken from the wholesale price indexes of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, U. S. Department of Labor.

The production figure in this chart is that of the Federal Reserve Board on a base of 1935-1939 = 100. The employment figure is that used by the CIO in its unemployment estimates and is put on to an index of 1935-1939 = 100.

ECONOMIC OUTLOOK:

Retail Food Prices Highest In Decade, Will Go Higher

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18—Retail food prices are now at their highest level in 10 years, the Economic Outlook, monthly publication of the Economic Division of the CIO, declared in its current issue released today.

According to U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics figures, retail prices are already 15.5 percent higher than they were at the beginning of the present war—and are due to go up still higher.

This has taken place despite the fact that U. S. food supplies are larger this year than they were in 1940, the Outlook pointed out, adding that even sharper rises in wholesale prices will be shortly reflected in additional retail price increases.

Answering the "widely spread canard" that price increases are due to wage increases, and that, therefore, wages must be frozen, the Outlook pointed out in line with CIO Pres. Philip Murray's testimony on the price control bill that prices have gone up most markedly in those commodities where wages are the least of the factors making up costs—that is, in agricultural commodities, raw materials, etc., and not in finished or semi-finished manufactured goods.

PROFITS JUMP

"Wages do not constitute a key factor in the cost of any of these commodities," the Outlook said. "In the one set of commodities, durable manufactured goods, where wages do constitute an important part of the cost and where the major wage increases have been granted, the price rise has been the smallest.

"Wage rates increased very little during 1940, but on the other hand, profits of 1,398 manufacturing, mercantile and public utility companies were 19 per cent. larger than in 1939 and twice as large as in 1938, according to the Federal Reserve Bank of New York.

"Where increases in prices have taken place in these industries, they have apparently been used to expand profits and not to pay the cost of wage increases."

PRIORITIES PROBLEM

Turning to the serious problems created by shortages in materials, the Outlook pointed to a proposed defense need survey to be made by the newly appointed Supply Priorities and Allocations Board as a "step in the right direction, even though it is a year and a half late," and as a project long urged by the CIO.

"It is apparent that the application of priorities alone is not going to be sufficient to insure adequate production," the Outlook said. "It is becoming evident now that, in order to speed up and guarantee defense output, it will be necessary to allocate materials to both defense and consumer industries.

"As the available production facilities of various critical items becomes more and more needed for defense, there will be less available for civilian needs. With expanded consumer and defense demands and limited amounts of critical materials, it becomes a serious problem to determine the quantity of the various critical items to be allocated to the various sections of industry."

CIO Backs Appeal of 14 Convicted In Indiana Anti-Labor Prosecution

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Oct. 18—Conviction of 14 members of the Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee on charges of resisting police during a strike last spring, will be appealed to the Indiana Supreme Court, Powers Hapgood, chairman of the National Richmond Defense Committee, announced here this week. The committee was named last week by CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

The 14 union members who were convicted in Randolph county court at Winchester, Ind., Oct. 10, were among 65 workers arrested in Richmond, Ind. last March and held on various charges, during an attempt by the International Harvester Co. to re-open its strike-bound plant there.

Penalties included fines of $100 for each of the 14 defendants with jail sentences of 90 days for two of them and 60 days for eleven others. Twenty-three out of the 37 tried were acquitted. Clifford Kerr, president of the Richmond FEWOC local, and Robert Foley, international organizer from Chicago, were given the stiffest sentences—$100 fine and 90 days in jail. Neither were on the picket line.

GRAVEST THREAT

"These convictions face organized labor in Indiana with one of the gravest threats since World War I," declared Committee Chairman Hapgood, who is also regional director here.

"The convictions apparently give legal status to a strike breaking formula that threatens the very basis of democracy. This formula includes police assaults on picket lines, on union headquarters, and mass arrests and indictments of persons merely because they hold union cards.

WOULD RESTRICT RIGHTS

"We consider this threat as even more grave today, because it attempts to take the right of picketing and free assembly from trade union members.

"Denial of these civil liberties to certain of our population certainly does not coincide with the Government's plans for unity for defense, and makes a mockery of statements that we are fighting fascism to safeguard these rights."

During the strike disturbances out of which the charges against the defendants arose, the union hall in Richmond was wantonly smashed to bits by police, sheriff's deputies and state troopers. Plaster and lath were ripped from the walls, furniture, including a piano and equipment were beaten to pieces with a sledge hammer and axes, and water pipes were pried loose.

Veteran unionists who saw the shattered union hall said that the venom and ruthlessness shown in demolishing the hall was beyond description. The police, of course, have not been prosecuted.

Ouster of Robinson Under Fire

Toronto, Ont., Oct. 18—Deportation from Canada of CIO Vice-Pres. Reid Robinson this week aroused labor groups throughout the Dominion and caused the Toronto Star, one of the country's most influential papers, to brand the Immigation Dept.'s action as "un-British and Fascist."

Robinson, head of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, was arrested while he was en route to a Conciliation Board hearing at Kirkland Lake, in the heart of Ontario's booming gold-mine country. He was kept in a Toronto jail overnight, and a few days later was ordered out of the Dominion.

In deporting the CIO vice-president, Canadian officials were taking action against a distant relative of the late Queen Victoria of England. Robinson lived in Alberta for six years and his mother was born at Seaforth, Ontario. His grand-uncle was the Marquis of Lorne and Duke of Argyll. The Duke was married to Princess Louise, Duchess of Argyll, whose mother was Queen Victoria of England.

Labor officials condemned the government's action as a breach of the historic good neighbor policy between Canada and the United States.

MINE OWNERS DEFIANT

The jailing and deportation of Robinson was merely the anti-climax in as brazen a defiance of the government by gold mine operators as has been displayed by Big Business here since the war began. As soon as the Conciliation Board hearing opened to review the claims of 5000 miners for improved wage and working conditions, the operators' representatives arrogantly walked out of the room after declaring that they were "unalterably opposed to undertaking an agreement with Local 240" of the union, which had been chosen as bargaining agent by the workers.

In a 185-page brief, the union explained how the operators could increase wages out of their tremendous profits in recent years, as well as grant better working conditions and union recognition.

$279 Back Pay

Dayton, O. — Russell Behmer goes back to work at the Sheffield Gauge Company here with $279 back pay as a result of a protest by the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, who said he had been discharged for union activity.

Mine Workers Gain Union Shop In Harlan County

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Oct. 18.—The union shop came into the troubled coal mines of Harlan County, Ky., this week, as a victorious climax to negotiations conducted by the CIO United Mine Workers.

Announcement of the history-making agreement was given out by Pres. William Turnblazer of District 19, UMW, after a week's conference with the Harlan County Coal Operators Assn. District agreements are being negotiated on the pattern set by the UMW and the Appalachian operators associations, when Pres. John L. Lewis won a new and greatly improved agreement after a 30-day shutdown of the mines early this year.

Under terms of the Harlan contract, non-union workers must join the UMW, and future employes of the mine operators must also become members.

The Harlan pact affects 12,000 men working in 22 mines, as well as properties in Bell and Knox Counties connected with the Harlan companies. UMW officials said they would soon negotiate new agreements for other portions of Kentucky and eastern Tennessee.

Turnblazer predicted the agreement would work out "very good relationships between the miners and operators . . . There'll be no more disputes about this fellow and that one," since all will be members of the union.

With the signing of the UMW contract, an end is expected to occasional minor flare-ups that have occurred since the county's operators bowed to the power of the union and signed an agreement two and one-half years ago. Prior to that date, the county had gained a notorious nation-wide reputation for the violence which accompanied its anti-union activities.

Machine Tools 2-3 Idle, Auto Union Charges

machines, the largest machines used in retooling, which got rough castings in shape of cutting down to a life-size model, numbered 40 in the survey. But 18 of them—almost 50%—were standing dead in the plants.

Out of 49 planers 17, or over a third, were idle. There were 87 radial drills, the largest universal drill presses in the tool and die industry. About one-fifth, 17 to be exact, might as well have been at the bottom of the ocean, so far as defense contribution was concerned, Addes said.

The UAW research department calculates that the total possible machine-hours the machines in the 34 plants could be used were 252,320 (multiplying the 1,577 machines by 160 hours per week). The machine-hours per week actually obtained were only 91,760 (1,240x74).

"Reducing the figures to percentages," Addes says, "we find actual use amounts to only 36.4% of possible total use of this vital machinery.

"Our members are deeply interested in this situation. Our union at its Buffalo convention last August called for all-out aid to the victims of Hitler short of war. We are resolved to see this resolution carried out by the employers and the government. The union has already made many sacrifices and will make more, but there has to be some cooperation if the defense effort is to get anywhere.

LAYOFFS AHEAD

"In the second place, the layoffs in immediate store for our members are running up into six figures. In Michigan alone the government now estimates that 115,000 auto workers will be idle by January. Experts in the industry say that they will not be absorbed before late spring, if then."

Leo Huberman Joins Ramsay-King Conner Defense

San Francisco, Oct. 18 — Leo Huberman, noted labor journalist, has joined the King-Ramsay-Conner Defense Committee, it was announced today.

Huberman, former labor editor of PM and at present columnist in U. S. Week, will handle publicity for the Committee in its current intensive national campaign to have the men out of prison by Christmas.

Huberman became interested in the case while he was on the West Coast writing his recent pamphlet, "Storm Over Bridges", for the Bridges Defense Committee. His talk with King, Ramsay and Conner at San Quentin prison confirmed him in his belief that this was another instance of innocent men being railroaded to jail for the crime of being militant trade unionists.

Pay-Freeze Protests Urged

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, Oct. 8—Urgent protest against wage freezing proposals was called for this week in a letter sent to CIO affiliates by John T. Jones, CIO legislative representative and director of Labor's Non-Partisan League. Jones' letter asking for wide protests "within the next few days," cited the Gore bill authorizing the government to set wage limits as a warning example.

Opposition from U. S. government spokesmen also continued in testimony by Isador Lubin, head of the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, who backed up the position of CIO Pres. Philip Murray that wage increases were not responsible for rising prices and that wage freezing would lower living standards.

Jones' letter to CIO affiliates was accompanied by a memo pointing out that wage freezing would impair already low living standards, that it "is advocated by enemies of labor who know it would weaken labor unions and collective bargaining rights," and "has no place in a free country."

Jones also reiterated the point that wages are not a major factor in costs and therefore do not cause rising prices, pointing out that price rises are in reality caused by profiteering, artificial shortages and other factors not controlled by the workers.

THE WAGE FACTOR

A large part of Commissioner Lubin's testimony before the House Banking and Currency Committee now considering the price control bill was devoted to a discussion of wages as a factor in prices. Citing price increases that took place before the recent wage increases won by CIO unions, Lubin declared:

"However, the price increases that occurred up to August 1941 cannot be attributed to the cost of meeting wage increases. Selling prices rose in advance of wage rates. The prices which have advanced most are for commodities that are least affected by labor costs.

"In general, selling prices have risen more than was necessary to cover the cost of wage advances, and, in fact, by enough to cover the cost of all probable wage increases in the immediate future."

Prices began to shoot up as soon as the war began in September, 1939, Lubin pointed out, "without any corresponding increases in wages." After a relatively stable period between the end of 1939 and August, 1940, commodity prices jumped ahead again, hitting an 8 per cent. increase by March, 1941, while wage rates increased by only one-third of one per cent. during the same period.

SURPLUS PROFITS

Following March of this year, Lubin explained, wage rates began to increase "only after it was evident that profits were rising rapidly in the industries where the initial wage demands were made."

"The wage movement of 1941 really began in four major industries," Lubin said—"cotton manufacturing, coal, steel and autos. In each of these cases it was possible to pay the cost of the initial wage advance without raising prices. In other words, there was a sufficient surplus in the form of profits available in those industries to make it possible to increase those wages without increasing the prices of those commodities."

In addition, he pointed out, industry has been able to pay wage increases out of savings in overhead costs through the fuller use of existing plant capacity and through greatly increased output per manhour.

CIO Leads AFL In Recent Elections

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18—Continued popularity of the CIO among the nation's industrial workers is shown by figures released by the National Labor Relations Board on elections conducted in recent weeks.

The figures reveal that 19,360 workers voted for CIO unions, 5,741 for AFL unions, and 2,013 for independent unions or employe representative plans.

The two largest elections in the CIO group were won by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee. At the plant of the Bethlehem Steel Co., Bethlehem, Pa., the SWOC carried 10,813 votes to 4,198 for an independent union, and at two plants of the American Radiator Co., Buffalo, N. Y., the SWOC won 2.599 votes to a combined vote of 107 for two separate independent unions.

OTHER BIG POLLS

Other large elections won by CIO unions were:

American Brass Co., Detroit, won by the United Automobile Workers, 803 to 496 for an independent union.

L. G. Conn, Elkhart, Ind., won by the United Paper, Toy & Novelty Workers, 515 to 194 against the union.

I. Lewis Cigar Co., Newark, N. J., won by the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing & Allied Workers, 545 to 378 for a company union.

Swift & Co., Chicago, won by the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee, 572 ot 548 for an independent union.

End Strikes In Ohio

Washington, Oct. 18—Two strikes by CIO affiliates were terminated this week at the request of the National Defense Mediation Board.

Members of the CIO United Automobile Workers went back to their jobs at the International Harvester Co.'s truck plant in Springfield, Ohio, after a strike of several weeks which involved some 3,500 employes.

At Niles, Ohio, members of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee ended a strike pending a Labor Board election to determine the sole collective bargaining agency in the plant.

Union Head Asks Probe of Currier Case

Washington, Oct. 18—A demand that the Truman committee investigate the national defense program, "delve thoroughly into the policy and conduct of the OPM" was voiced today by Chairman Joseph Cannon of the Distillery Workers Organizing Committee.

Cannon's wire was based on details of the Currier case, in which the CIO Construction Workers have charged that a Detroit housing firm was denied a Government contract because the AFL and the OPM had worked out a monopoly agreement on all defense building work.

"It might be pertinent to go deeply into the reason for letting Government contracts to contractors who employ none but members of unions charging exorbitant initiation fees, running from $25 to $1,500, collected in installments," Cannon suggested in a telegram to Sen. Henry Truman.

Referring to the Currier case, Cannon asserted that "government officials who may be responsible for a betrayal of workers and home buyers in such a manner are not worthy of being continued in positions of trust."

Technical Men Push CIO Drive

DETROIT, Oct. 18—Plans to complete the organization of technical workers in this area and to bring the full weight of technical experience to bear on the defense program through adoption of the Murray Industry Council Plan featured the convention of the Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists and Technicians, CIO, just concluded here.

Pointing out that many employers are refusing to utilize the contribution that technical workers can make to American defense, the Federation called for quick adoption of the Murray plan as the best means of arming this country for resistance to aggression and of aiding those countries now fighting Hitler.

GAINS REPORTED

Federation gains over the past year reported to the convention included a general wage increase in technical fields of close to two and three-quarter million dollars, won chiefly in automobiles, aircraft, oil and civil service, and a vigorous growth in membership and union influence among technical and professional workers.

The convention voted unanimous support of aid to Great Britain, the Soviet Union and all peoples fighting Hitlerism, protested the deportation order against Harry Bridges, called for joint effort by the union and professional societies to aid defense, urged an expanded defense and low-cost housing program, and protested the switching of the Currier housing contract in Michigan from the CIO Construction Workers to the AFL Building Trades.

More than 75 delegates were present. Re-elected officers included Lewis Alan Berne, president; Marcel Scherer, vice president, and James A. Gaynor, secretary-treasurer.

Textile Mill Bows to CIO Union

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18—Settlement of a lockout at the big Lincoln Textile Mills in Huntsville, Ala., followed this week OPM action in removing the firm from a list of eligibles for government contracts.

The lockout, which started Sept. 26, involved 1,800 persons belonging to the CIO Textile Workers Union. The firm makes cotton duck for the Army and the Navy.

VOLUNTARY CHECK-OFF

Early in August the Natl. Defense Mediation Board recommended voluntary check-off of union dues, and a "maintenance of membership clause," under which TWU members could withdraw from the union only under certain special conditions and after a board of two union leaders and two company officials had given their unanimous consent.

The proposal was accepted by the union but the mill management withheld approval until Oct. 10, shortly after its name had been placed on the ineligible list by the OPM.

Some observers here believe the ban on government contracts will be applied to companies rejecting Mediation Board proposals in the future, with the more drastic plant seizure being confined to firms necessary to national defense and producing products unobtainable elsewhere.

CIO Moving Fast In the Cigar Industry

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 18—The advance of the CIO into the cigar industry is continuing with marked success, the United Cannery Agricultural, Packing & Allied Workers reported this week, in announcing a contract here with the Zifferblatt Cigar Co. covering 500 workers.

In addition to the usual 40-hour week, 8-hour day with time and a half for overtime, the workers will get sick leave with pay, maternity leave, one month's pay for conscriptees with two years' seniority, and other benefits.

"This contract includes all the good clauses in the Consolidated Cigar (Camden, N. J.) contract signed three weeks ago and adds a 100 per cent union shop and hiring through the union," said Harold Lane, national secretary-treasurer of the union.

"We are gratified that at last cigar workers are cracking the low pay and poor conditions which have been notorious in the cigar industry."

Lane said that in addition to the contract with Consolidated, largest cigar firm in the U. S., six plants of Diesel-Wemmer-Gilbert in Michigan and Ohio, were signed previous to the Zifferblatt agreement.

Back LaGuardia

New York, Oct. 18—Local 104, CIO United Retail, Wholesale and Dept. Store Employes, has called for re-election of Mayor F. H. LaGuardia and for the election of American Labor Party candidates in the coming city balloting.

At the conclusion of the local's membership meetings, Pres. Sam Nesin received a trophy from Jack Roth, secretary of the Trade Union Athletic Assn., as an award for the local's championship baseball team. Members of the team received medals.

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

One more open shop citadel has fallen, this time the coal fields of "Bloody Harlan County," where the United Mine Workers has just signed a union shop contract. The contract, first to be signed with the Harlan County Coal Operators Association, covers more than 12,000 workers in 22 mines. It brings those workers the gains won by the United Mine Workers in the Southern agreement signed last July, including wage increases, vacations with pay, seniority, etc., as well as the union shop.

The signing of this contract is a climax to more than 20 years of struggle on the part of the Harlan County miners and the United Mine Workers for the rights and recognition accorded to American workers throughout the rest of the coal and other industries. The victory is equal in importance and significance to those won by other CIO unions in steel, automobiles, and other basic mass production industries. It proves again that the policies and methods of industrial unionism succeed where other methods fail.

It proves also that no amount of violence and terrorism against the workers can prevail in the long run. "Bloody Harlan" did not earn its name for nothing, and its history of anti-union acts is as long or longer than most. Vigilantes and those forces behind them in Tennessee and Arkansas who were responsible for recent beatings of CIO organizers should take note of Harlan County—if they haven't already noted the fact that the election they tried to stop in Tennessee was won by the CIO immediately after the floggings took place.

And other anti-labor individuals who believe that labor problems can be "solved" by deporting labor leaders should take note also. Scores of union organizers have been deported out of Harlan County — and today Harlan's coal operators sign a union shop agreement with the United Mine Workers of America.

WITH THE CIO

Never was there a better opportunity for the CIO to make rapid organizing progress, and CIO affiliates all over the country are taking full advantage of this chance.

Pres. Lewis Merrill of the United Office and Professional Workers reports his union has signed a union shop contract with the Boston Mutual Insurance Co. covering all states in which the company operates. The contract provides for a straight $4.00 a week pay raise, vacations with pay and other benefits. Pres. Merrill also reports that negotiations with the gigantic John Hancock Co. in the Boston area are under way.

The insurance business is one of the biggest fields that this union has to face. Organization has made considerable headway already, with contracts signed covering several thousand workers. The insurance business is also representative of big monopoly capital at its strongest and most entrenched points. The UOPWA has been doing a good job in tackling this financial giant.

RUBBER WORKERS WIN

Another important election victory has been chalked up by the United Rubber Workers in winning a Natl. Labor Relations Board poll at the Armstrong Rubber Company in Connecticut. The score: United Rubber Workers, CIO, 297; AFL, 20. The Rubber Workers Union, reported at its "peak strength" at the recent convention, has been winning handsomely in a string of NLRB elections recently.

This week the Ohio State CIO Council is holding its fourth annual convention in Youngstown—scene of one sector of the Little Steel strike of 1937. The convention finds the Ohio Council stronger than ever before, with some 414 local affiliates from 30 CIO national and international unions represented. Delegates who remember the Little Steel strike will get much satisfaction from noting that today Little Steel is negotiating, and signing, agreements with the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

AID FOR TOY WORKERS

Last week this office sent out an appeal to all CIO affiliates for help to the CIO strikers at the Holgate Toy Co. in Kane, Pennsylvania. The strike, led by the United Paper, Novelty and Toy Workers, Local 309, has been in progress for more than 10 weeks, and aid is urgently needed. Contributions should be sent to Local 309, c/o Hilton's Service Station, Wilcox Street and Biddle Road, Kane, Pa.

Through the aid of David Fowler, regional director in Arkansas, more than 2,100 furniture workers in the Fort Smith, Ark., area have just won a maintenance of membership clause in their new contract, plus wage increases and other gains. The workers are members of the United Furniture Workers of America, CIO.

New Trial For Bridges' Witness

Sacramento, Calif., Oct. 18—James E. O'Neil, former CIO publicity man in San Francisco, will get a new trial on government charges that he committed perjury during the recent deportation hearing against Harry Bridges, conducted by Judge Sears of New York.

The new trial was ordered by Judge M. I. Walsh of the U. S. District Court, who on Oct. 8 had sentenced O'Neil to three years in jail and a $100 fine.

During the Bridges hearing O'Neil had flatly denied statements attributed to him that he had seen Bridges pasting dues stamps into Communist party membership books. An unwilling witness for the government's legal battery, he swore that all the statements in an unsigned document prepared by an FBI stenographer, were false.

Clothing Workers Strike

San Francisco, Oct. 18—Members of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers today were picketing four downtown men's clothing stores.

The men asked for a 20 per cent wage boost because of rising living costs, but later reduced the demand to 10 per cent. In return they were offered a $2-a-week boost, equivalent to less than 5 per cent.

One of the firms picketed, Hastings, has its store in the St. Francis Hotel, thus adding CIO pickets to the AFL men now striking the famous hostelry.

HEADQUARTERS This large building, formerly occupied by the AFL, is heaquarters of the CIO's lusty group of unions in Cleveland, Ohio. Plans are now being worked out for purchase of the building at a cost of $60,000.

Cleveland CIO Raising $60,000 To Purchase Big Labor Temple

CLEVELAND, Oct. 18—Firmly established in their leased four-story building, Cleveland's CIO unions today moved forward in a widespread campaign to raise $60,000 for the outright purchase of the structure.

The building, located in the center of downtown Cleveland, was formerly the Moose Temple. It was originally built at a cost of more than $400,000 and stands on a lot valued at $100,000.

Recognizing that CIO union officers were scattered all over the downtown area, the council began laying plans more than a year ago to bring all offices together in one big labor temple. In July of this year the building was leased with an option to buy within a year. It had previously been occupied by various AFL unions. These unions gave it up and scattered in all directions.

FIXED IT UP

When the CIO committee went into the building, an expensive and imposing structure, it was described as a "wreck." It had been long neglected. Volunteer committees from scores of locals went to work. They cleaned, scrubbed, painted, plastered, erected partitions and did an $8,000 remodeling job for less than $2,000.

Today with its dozens of offices and its 11 meeting halls, the CIO Labor Temple is teeming with activity. Last Sunday more than 3,000 union members met in a score of local meetings.

A Membership Activities Committee is sponsoring a dance every Saturday night. It is also arranging for weekly boxing matches. Dan Merritt, recently one of the outstanding heavyweights in this area and now a member of the executive board of U. S. Aluminum Local 55, surveyed his membership and found a flock of professional boxers. They will take part in the boxing shows.

MAC is also organizing dramatic groups, bands, sports and educational classes—all under the slogan of "Make the CIO Temple a Beehive of Activity."

Funds for leasing and remodeling the building were raised through the organization of the Cleveland Realty Cooperative, Inc. Shares at $5 each are sold to CIO members only. The charter is set up to make it impossible for any individual or any single union to gain control.

This CIO corporation operates the building and will purchase it through the sale of 12,000 additional shares ($60,000) to members and local unions. The building is already being operated at a limited profit.

Negotiate Master Pact At Cudahy

Omaha, Nebr., Oct. 18.—Negotiations for the second master agreement in the nation's important meat packing industry got under way here Oct. 14.

Representatives of the CIO Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee met with officials of the Cudahy Packing Co.—one of the industry's Big Four—to negotiate a pact covering eight plants where the PWOC has been certified as sole bargaining agency.

Heading the union delegation will be PWOC Chairman J. C. Lewis, who represented the master agreement from Cudahy shortly after a similar agreement had been signed with Armour & Co.

Electrical Union Pushes 'More Production' Demand

St. Louis, Mo., Oct. 18—Eighty shop stewards and officers of locals of the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers of America in this area met this week to hear Vice-President William Sentner charge that "dollar-a-year business 'experts' are keeping the national defense program bottled up by refusing to insist on greater exploitation of sources of raw materials."

Sentner urged a 4-point program:

1. Demand that the Government force large companies to expand production without any more delays;

2. Demand that spreading of contracts to smaller firms be accelerated;

3. Launch a mass "In Plant" training program to train 1,500,000 workers for defense work;

4. Both AFL and CIO—ten million strong—should put their shoulders to the wheels "inside the factories, inside the Government, and inside of everything else" to make the national defense machinery "click with high speed efficiency."

Boston, Mass., Oct. 18—Summoned by the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers to plan actions to prevent severe "priorities" layoffs and plant shut-downs in the Clinton, Mass., area near here, more than a hundred civic, church, business and labor leaders met here last week and elected a "Committee to Keep Clinton at Work Defending Democracy."

The chairman is Dr. Wane Hendricks, pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Clinton and chairman of the Protestant Ministers' Alliance. Other prominent members are: Joseph Kilcoyn, Joseph Ellans and Lewis Tonoli, city selectman of Clinton; Adin Custance, president of the Clinton Chamber of Commerce, and Christopher Geas, president of UE Local 242.

Gain, Pay Boost

Newark, N. J.—Four hundred employes of the Foote Pierson Company here this week have a new union contract with a flat 10 cents per hour raise, vacations, and a voluntary check-off arrangement. They are members of Local 437, United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers (CIO).

Agree to Mediate Strike In Tank Parts Plants

Detroit, Oct. 18—Acting on a suggestion by Pres. R. J. Thomas, members of the CIO United Automobile, Aircraft & Agricultural Workers today called off their strike at the Hillside, Mich., Steel Products Co. and left the issues at stake up to the Natl. Defense Mediation Board.

CIO MEN FIRED

The strike, called by the CIO union, was in protest against discrimination on the part of the company, which fired 13 union members following a one-day absence from work in protest against unsettled grievances. Members of the AFL auto union—which won an NLRB poll at Hillside by one vote several months ago—were all reinstated after the stoppage. Later, another 15 CIO members were forcibly ejected from the plant.

"Stoppage of work going to and received from the Hillside plant by the Spicer unit of the UAW-CIO was in conformity with a clause in the contract which provides that the men may refuse to handle material from plants where labor disputes occur," Jack Thompson, UAW-CIO regional director in Toledo, declared in explaining the Spicer shutdown.

WORKERS DEMAND RIGHTS

Since the AFL victory at Hillside, "we have attempted no raids or boycotts, but we do demand the right of our membership to work under peaceful conditions," he added.

"All we have asked of the company is to have the men who were discharged be put back to work and to guarantee us that our men will not be subject to violence. That is certainly a just and fair request."

CIO Union Heads Rap OPM Ruling In Currier Case

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18—Further discussion of the government's refusal to award a $900,000 defense housing contract to the Currier Lumber Co. of Detroit because the firm was under contract with the CIO, will be heard on Capitol Hill Oct. 22.

The Truman Committee investigating the national defense program has invited Chairman A. D. Lewis of the CIO United Construction Workers; OPM Associate Director General Sidney Hillman, who upheld the decision barring the contract to the CIO firm, and Pres. William Green, of the AFL, to testify on the case, which has gained nationwide publicity.

Basis for withholding the contract was a "stabilization agreement" worked out by the OPM Labor Division and the AFL Building Trades Dept. which gave a virtual monopoly on all government construction work to the federation. A storm of protest arose from both the CIO and public agencies when it developed that the Currier firm's bid was $400,000 less than that of its nearest competitor as the result of prefabrication techniques.

MANY TELEGRAMS

The UCWOC revealed it had received wires of support from the heads of a number of CIO unions, including Pres. John L. Lewis of the mine workers, Chairman J. C. Lewis of the packinghouse workers, Pres. Donal Sullivan of the newspaper guild, Pres. Lewis Merrill of the office and professional workers, Pres. Abram Flaxer of the state, county and municipal workers, Sec.-Treas. David McDonald of the steel workers, Pres. Morris Muster of the furniture union, Vice Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the rubber workers, Pres. John Green of the shipyard union, Pres. Joseph Curran of the maritime workers, Pres. N. A. Zonarich of the aluminum workers, Pres. Reid Robinson of the metal miners, and Joseph Cannon of the distillery workers.

Criticize Plane Firm's Labor Policy

Bendix, N. J., Oct. 18—The board of directors of Air Associates Co. today was pondering a Natl. Mediation Board proposal that it rehire all striking CIO workers, and appoint a personnel official who could give full attention to employe relations at the big airplane parts plant.

The latter proposal, a novel one from the Mediation Board, followed a suggestion that Pres. F. Leroy Hill has too much work and can't give sufficient attention to labor relations—a fact apparently borne out by the two-week strike which has closed the big plant here for the second time in a year.

FIRM REJECTED OFFER

An earlier suggestion by the board for ending the walkout was accepted by Local 700 of the CIO United Automobile, Aircraft & Agricultural Implement Workers, but it was turned down by President Hill.

Following Hill's rejection of its offer, the NDMB went over the head of the company president and summoned the board of directors to Washington for further conferences.

The walkout started Sept. 30 when the workers sought recognition and a standard union contract. The firm agreed to negotiate after settlement of a strike last July, but union officials said it had merely stalled.

In its earlier recommendation, the Mediation Board sharply criticized the company's attitude.

CRITICIZE COMPANY

"On the basis of the entire record in this case, the board feels obliged to observe that this company has not exhibited toward either this certified union or the NDMB that attitude of cooperation to which the public is entitled on the part of the company whose operations are essential to the defense of the nation," the board said.

CALLING MR. RIPLEY:

That Ain't No Monopoly, That's the Aluminum Co.!

NEW YORK, Oct. 18—(FP)—The Aluminum Co. of America, one of the nation's biggest monopolies, has been acquitted on charges of violating the Sherman anti-trust law, a measure under which many unions have been convicted.

In a 170,000-word oral opinion, which took 10 days to deliver, U. S. Judge Francis Caffey gave the firm a clean bill of health. Conclusion of the opinion on Oct. 10 ended what was believed to be the longest trial in legal history.

Begun in April, 1937, the taking of testimony required 26½ months, during which 155 witnesses testified, 1,803 exhibits were filed and 40,708 pages of testimony were transcribed. Asst. U. S. Atty. Gen. Thurman Arnold said the decision would be appealed to the U. S. Supreme Court.

GUILT "NOT SHOWN"

"The evidence compels the conclusion that it has not been shown that Alcoa is guilty of any violation of the Sherman Act, as was charged in the government's bill; that the government has failed to prove its charges in any of the three phases into which it divided the case: (1) monopolization; (2) conspiracy, and (3) "other misconduct," the 72-year-old jurist ruled.

Caffey took the stand that the control which the company exerted over the industry was justified by reason of the firm's initiative. Since the company did not actually prevent competition, it did not violate the Sherman law, the judge held.

The company was shown in an entirely different light during recent hearings before the special Senate committee investigating the national defense program. It was brought out at these hearings that Alcoa had impeded the national defense program in the interest of preserving its monopolistic position and future profits.

In the present case, the government sought to break up the firm into a number of competitive enterprises. This was the outcome of anti-trust suits in 1911 against the Standard Oil Co. and American Tobacco Co.

In both cases the U. S. Supreme Court upheld the anti-trust charges. Standard Oil subsequently split up into smaller enterprises, but this failed to break the firm's monopoly.

Attack on Metal Miners Boomerangs

Silverton, Colo., Oct. 18—An effort by the wealthy Shenandoah-Dives Mines Co. to smash the CIO's Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers ran smack into a resounding reproach today from the National Labor Relations Board.

The Board ordered the firm to dissolve a fake union, abolish a contract with it, stop interfering with the the CIO union, and rehire 78 dismissed workers.

The NLRB decision climaxed a long struggle for recognition by the CIO affiliate. The case dates from July 15, 1939, when the union went out on strike for higher wages and the union shop.

A company-incited mob, composed of merchants, hangers-on and non-employes of the company, raided the union's headquarters, beat up several union leaders, took over the union hall and set up a fake union, the San Juan Federation of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers.

Shortly after the vigilante meeting, the company signed a contract with the San Juan Federation. It was this agreement which the NLRB today ordered dissolved.

CIO Wins Poll

New York, Oct. 18—An election among 29 employes of the Publishers Distributing Corp., national magazine distributor, here, was won by the Periodical Employes Union, an affiliate of the United Office & Professional Workers.

LIBRARY: One of the best CIO libraries of its kind is this one, maintained by the Wabash Valley Industrial Union Council, Peru, Ind. The two photos show the great range of books, pamphlets, papers and reference works on display in the library corner of the council headquarters.

CIO Going Forward In Utah

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Oct. 18—Not all the CIO's big and effective organization drives are taking place in the heavily-populated metropolitan areas.

Last week, into Bingham Canyon, for 38 years an open shop domain of the powerful Utah Copper Co., officials of the Utah Industrial Union Council and the CIO Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers came to stage a mass demonstration to help organize the local mines.

As the Copper Hill workers streamed off shift, they were met by CIO unionists who marched through the streets bearing placards which called on the miners to throw off the yoke of the corporation. Last year the company extracted profits of $23,000,000 from the dynamited terraces of the Bingham open pit.

Assured of support by the state CIO council, the men gathered in front of the union hall to hear speeches and to sing the latest Hollywood CIO song hit, "Sing Out the Answer, Join the CIO."

HOMES ON HILLSIDE

As the tune's refrain echoed up the sheer walls of Copper Canyon, wives and children of the open pit men looked down from their crow's-nest homes, perched on the sides of the mountain, on the formerly unheard-of sight of an Industrial Union Council day being staged in Bingham.

Meanwhile across Utah's mountain ranges and alkali deserts, the story of the Utah copper drive is being carried to workers over the airwaves from Station KUTA in Salt Lake City. The program is being broadcast each weekday night from 8:45 to 9 o'clock.

With the organization campaign quickly accelerating, Col. D. C. Jackling, head of Utah Copper's industrial realm, paid a hurried visit to his company's properties in a visit described by the press as "routine." Union workers think, however, that the colonel's "routine" visit is evidence of growing company alarm at the gathering weight of the CIO campaign.

N. Y. Times Pays $15,000 In NLRB Case

Washington, Oct. 18—Two members of the American Newspaper Guild unfairly discharged by the New York Times will receive a payment of $15,000 to be divided between them, under a stipulation between the National Labor Relations Board, the Guild and the Times, the NLRB announced this week.

In consideration of the Times' agreement to settle the outstanding issues, the Board agreed to permit the Guild to withdraw the charges against the newspaper and to vacate the decision issued Aug. 24, 1940, on the basis of the charges.

The Times agreed not to discourage membership in the Guild or interfere with its employes rights to join it. A contract between the Guild and the Times covering employes in the commercial departments was signed last April.

Ask Change in Neutrality Act

Akron, Ohio, Oct. 18—The general executive board of the CIO United Rubber Worker supports any modification of the Neutrality Act that President Roosevelt may propose and is "cognizant" of the need for its repeal, Sec.-Treas. Frank Grillo announced today.

CIO Union Leaders Discuss Layoffs, Defense Problems

Midland Steel Strike Lifts Pay 13c

CLEVELAND, Oct. 25—The home plant of the Midland Steel Products Co. reopened Oct. 20 when 1,000 workers won their strike for wage increases, which lifted hiring pay from 68 to 81 cents an hour.

The company manufactures automobile frames, and the walkout for a time threatened to cause shutdowns in a number of auto plants. The strike was called by Local 486 of the CIO United Automobile, Aircraft & Agricultural Implement Workers because the company's Cleveland plant was paying lower wages than the Midland plant at Detroit.

Under the new agreement, the hiring rate is increased from 68c to 81c with a minimum of 86c after 30 days of service, it was pointed out by UAW Rep. Ed Hall.

Prudential Election Ordered

New York, Oct. 25—Further progress in the CIO campaign to organize industrial insurance agents was reported here today by the United Office & Professional Workers.

Leon Berney, general organizer for the union, revealed that the State Labor Relations Board had ordered an election among 2,500 agents of the Prudential Insurance Co. after long hearings, to determine if the men wish to be represented by Local 30, UOPWA.

At the same time, Local 30 asked for certification as bargaining agency for the 2,100 agents of the Metropolitan Life.

LONG HISTORY

Efforts to secure collective bargaining in the Metropolitan Life have had a long and turbulent history. A number of cases before the SLRB, in which the local charged the company with firing union men, were settled several months ago by the payment of $86,000 in back wages to the employes.

"We are seeking these certifications," Berney said, "to enable the employes of these billion-dollar insurance companies to negotiate with the company officials for increased income to meet the present increase in the cost of living, to strengthen their job security, and to have a voice in their conditions of work through machinery for peaceful adjudication of disputes."

Strike Vote

Knoxville, Tenn., Oct. 25—Members of Local 9, CIO Aluminum Workers of America, are to take a strike vote this week end among workers employed by the Aluminum Co. of America at the Alcoa, Tenn., plant.

The AWA has been negotiating for some time with the company in an effort to secure elimination of the Southern differential in wages.

$30,000: A civil damage suit against Republic Steel Co. won a jury award of $30,000 this week for John Solanics, CIO steel worker in Cleveland. Solanics said he was slugged and permanently injured by an attack during the bloody 1937 Little Steel strike. (Story Page 2)

Mourn Death Of Rabbi Israel

Baltimore, Oct. 25—Organized labor and progressives were mourning the death of Rabbi Edward L. Israel this week. Rabbi Israel had a long record of friendly interest in and support of labor causes, acting as arbitrator and as investigator for religious bodies in strike situations, unemployment surveys, and the like.

With representatives of the Federal Churches of Christ, the National Catholic Welfare Conference, and the Central Conference of American Rabbis, he made a study of conditions in the Western Maryland railway strike some years ago. Last year he was a leader in an Interfaith Conference on Unemployment in Washington.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Oct. 25—(FP)—An informal course in collective bargaining, conducted by Organizer John C. Clark of the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee, CIO, brought an overwhelming response from the 600 plant workers at Yale University.

By a vote of 462 to 143, the janitors, maids, waitresses, engineers, watchmen, mechanics and even the campus cops chose the CIO as against no union in an election conducted by the State Mediation Board.

Having passed this test easily, the organized workers will now put some heavy questions to Personnel Director R. Carter Nyman. Sample queries: "Is there any reason why this richly-endowed institution should not pay maids $18 a week instead of $11.25? And really, Mr. Nyman, don't you think that $26 is lousy pay for a mechanic who should get at least $45?"

Yale's sweatshop policy was a big help in the organizing campaign that Clark started last April.

"For example," he said, "in 1940 everybody got a month's vacation. They had to take it—without pay. This summer, after we had started our drive, the university allowed 2-week vacations with pay. But that didn't fool the workers here.

"They gave the janitors raises of $2 or $3, too, but those men voted for the CIO just the same. I tell you, this is the swellest bunch I've worked with since I became an organizer."

Negotiations are scheduled to begin as soon as the certification is received for the first union ever to bargain with the Connecticut branch of football's so-called Ivy League. In addition to substantial wage increases, the UCWOC is demanding a union shop.

Push Fight on Rent Gougers

Pittsburgh—(FP)—The Fair Rents Committee of the Pittsburgh Defense Council has certified to the Office of Price Administration four cases of unwarranted rent increases. In one instance, a $25 rental had been raised to $60. In another case, the $15 rent for a house in bad repair was hiked to $24.

STRIKE COUPLE: If it hadn't been for the strike of the Birmingham Newspaper Guild against Roy Howard's Birmingham Post, Miss Jo Patnick of Miami, Fla., would not have come up to picket with Local Pres. Harold Helfer. They walked last summer on the beach at Miami, walked on the picket line this fall at Birmingham, and decided after a while that two can walk as cheaply as one. So now Mr. and Mrs. Helfer eat their meals at strike headquarters, and find the union a better provider than the wealthy publisher. (Story, Page 2)

U. S. Lifts Furniture Base Pay

WASHINGTON, Oct. 27—The 40-cent hourly minimum in the furniture industry, which goes into effect November 3, will raise the wages of some 43,000 workers, mainly in the South and other low wage centers of the country.

The United Furniture Workers, CIO, played an important role in the industry committee hearings which led to increasing the minimum pay from 30 to 40 cents. UFW representatives on the committee were Pres. Morris Muster, Secretary-Treasurer Ernest Marsh and Morris Piser, member of the General Executive Board.

In commenting on the order raising the minimum, Pres. Muster said that "unified labor action and the support of enlightened representatives of the public and industry made possible this great step forward. Our own organization is proud of the part it played in achieving the 40-cent minimum."

Vote CIO, 7-1

Bessemer, Ala., Oct. 25—Production workers at the local plant of the Pullman Standard Car Manufacturing Co. voted by 736-111 for the CIO Steel Workers in a recent NLRB election.

Craft unit election carved out of the plant were won by the AFL among small groups of electricians and machinists.

Need Greater Production, Murray Says

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25—One hundred CIO union leaders and research directors, meeting here Oct. 20 at a conference called by Pres. Philip Murray, discussed out of their own experience in mines, mills and factories the critical problems of defense unemployment and insufficient production.

For a full day the representatives of the CIO's great organizations in the mass production industries discussed all aspects of the present situation, and then ordered a committee of seven to report on their findings to the Executive Board meeting at Detroit, Nov. 15.

Lack of planning and failure to put into practice a number of CIO suggestions stemming out of the Murray Industry Council Plan, have led to chaotic conditions in many industries, the representatives were told.

MONOPOLIES

A number of the speakers told of monopoly grasping for profits at any price, which has cut down defense production and resulted in hardship for thousands of men.

The conference heard a statement from CIO Pres. Philip Murray. In his letter to the meeting, Murray said:

"Only effective action by organized labor can prevent priorities dislocations from becoming a destructive catastrophe. The CIO's fundamental interest is the establishment of the fullest possible production and employment."

'Sweet' Raise

BALTIMORE, Oct. 25—"Sweet" wage increases were won today for 850 members of the CIO United Sugar Workers Union.

A contract with the American Sugar Refining Co. will bring an additional $100,000 into workers pay envelopes during the course of the next year, it was estimated by Regional Director Frank Bender. Hourly paid workers gained a nickel increase, while those on piece work had their rates upped 12 per cent.

Boston Insurance Firm Signs CIO Pact For 370 Agents

BOSTON, Oct 37—A contract providing for a pay increase of $4 a week has been signed with the Boston Mutual Life Insurance Co., the Industrial Agents Union announced here this week. The union is affiliated with the CIO United Office & Professional Workers.

The agreement which covers the 370 industrial insurance agents of the company in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Maine and New Hampshire, also calls for two weeks' paid vacations, job security, machinery for settling disputes, and payment to employes who enter military service of the difference between their average earnings and their government pay for a period of three months.

WIN UNION SHOP

All employes at present members of the union must remain members and all new employes must join, under the terms of the contract. A novel clause is also included requiring non-union employes to pay $2 a month, the amount of union dues, "to the USO, or a worthy charity."

In announcing the signing of the agreement, James H. Durkin, national union representative declared: "This agreement will enable employes of the Boston Mutual to meet present increases in the cost of living, to strengthen their security, and to have a voice in their conditions through the machinery for peaceful adjudication of disputes it sets up.

"As a result the employes covered will have greater morale and ability to back up to the hilt the U. S. national defense effort and to contribute their share to that understanding between management and employes that will advance national unity in defense or our country."

Ohio CIO Reveals Big Gains

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Oct. 23—Six hundred and two delegates from Ohio units of 28 national organizations and from 20 city and county councils comprised the fourth annual convention of the Ohio CIO Council, which adjourned in the Mahoning Valley steel city of Youngstown Sunday evening after three full days of consecutive action further to advance the cause of industrial unionism in the Buckeye State.

Theme of the convention was "Working Together," stressed in the 14-chapter officers' report, which set forth organizational, legislative and public relations gains as demonstration of unity within the ranks of the CIO in Ohio, and with other organizations which are working to advance the general welfare.

CIO GAINS

The record showed 142 new CIO charters issued to unorganized groups in Ohio during the past year, and 75 out of 100 labor board elections won with 58.9 per cent of all votes cast.

Due to the effective work of the Ohio council, no anti-labor bills passed the 1941 session of the Ohio legislature, and gains were reported on several measures affecting labor, notably the State's unemployment compensation law. Delegates to the convention received new booklet publications prepared by the State council on this subject and about workmen's compensation, which was considered by a special convention committee.

National Organization Director Allan Haywood reviewed for the delegates accomplishments in the year since the Ohio convention at Akron in 1940 and stirred the meeting with the promise that more of the same great progress was to follow.

LAWTHER SPEAKS

A distinguished guest from abroad was Will Lawther, president of the Miners' Federation of Great Britain, who addressed the Ohio body about the effort of Britain's labor movement to resist the tyranny of Hitler, and called upon the American unionists to give all help possible. The convention passed one resolution pledging aid to the nations in military combat with the Hitlerian autocracy, and a second demanding immediate repeal of the Neutrality Act.

RESOLUTIONS

Other resolutions by the convention called for federalization of unemployment compensation with improved and uniform standards; asked that the Federal Government place less confidence for defense on the representatives of big business who have put private profit-seeking ahead of the country's welfare, and give greater voice to labor; considered the question of priorities unemployment, and called for the reelection of President Murray as head of the National CIO.

In addition, the convention reaffirmed support of the CIO Construction Workers Organizing Committee, demanding an investigation of the Currier Lumber Co. situation in Detroit. Sharp opposition to all wage control legislation was expressed. Support for the USO to bolster army morale was voted.

The convention reelected Council President John Owens and Secretary-Treasurer Ted F. Silvey. It named a list of 13 vice-presidents, including six new ones, who with the President and the Secretary-Treasurer constitute the Council's Executive Board.

Urge Sec. Hull Protest Ouster Of Robinson

Denver, Oct. 25—Charges that his recent arrest and summary deportation from Canada were done at the request of Canadian mining owners were made in a letter from Reid Robinson, vice-president of the CIO and president of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, to U. S. Secretary of State Cordell Hull.

"It should be noted," Robinson wrote, "that my arrest at Toronto came after it has been publicized in all the Kirkland Lake papers that I was to appear at a union meeting, and to appear before the government conciliation board."

Discuss Women's Problems

Newark, N. J., Oct. 25—A conference on women in the electrical, radio and machine industry, which opens here tomorrow, will be addressed by various women prominent in government and labor.

The conference is called by District 4, United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, CIO, a large percentage of whose 35,000 members are women.

Subjects to be discussed are wages, working conditions and job opportunities for women; women and national defense and organization and leadership among women. Both men and women will take part in the conference.

"This is the opening gun in a dramatic drive in our union," the conference call stated, "to unite the women and men in a common effort to build and consolidate our union, and to work together for the defeat of fascism and the extension of our democracy."

2,000 Margin For Winners In Guild Poll

New York, Oct. 25—Members of the American Newspaper Guild elected Milton Murray of Detroit as their new president by a margin of more than 2,100 votes, final tabulation of the Guild's national referendum revealed today.

Murray received 5,534 votes to 3,371 for Donal Sullivan of Boston, the incumbent.

Sam Eubanks, Oakland, Calif., defeated Milton Kaufman for the office of executive vice-president by a vote of 5,539 to 3,348. William Rodgers, Washington, D. C., was unopposed for secretary-treasurer.

BOARD MEMBERS

The victors were all members of the "Pro-Guild" slate, which carried every contest for the executive board over opposition from "United Guild" candidates. Elected to the Board were Walter Engels, New York; Harry Martin, Memphis, Tenn.; Kenneth B Crouse, Minneapolis-St. Paul, Minn.; James W. Farmer, Seattle; Ralph Foster, Toronto, Canada, who was unopposed; Louis Ade, Hammond, Ind.; Edward Allen, Boston, Mass.; James F. Crow, Los Angeles; Jules Schick, Philadelphia, and Joseph M. Walsh, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

The new officers take over on November 1. They were elected for two-year terms.

Strike Idyll

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Oct. 25—Striking members of the American Newspaper Guild at the Scripps-Howard Birmingham Post were presented with this columnar attraction, by Pres. Harold Helfer, in a recent issue of their strike paper:

"One of the nicest pickets we have on the line now is Miss Jo Patnick. She is more than nice. She is very beautiful. Of course, that is neither here nor there, but it is rather interesting how it happened that she came down.

"You see, I met Jo in Miami and Jo and I used to walk along the beach and listen to the cry of the waves and we would pick up seashells and we would watch the jellyfish and we would go on down to the jetty and watch the sunset come to pass.

"So Jo and I figured we were beachcombers and we were very happy because there is no overhead to being a beachcomber and one day is like another and everything is very simple and honest.

"But, alas and alack, there came the day when I had to leave and come back to Birmingham; which I did. Sometimes, though, I would get very sad thinking about my beachcombing days and I would write a letter to Jo saying hello and wishing her a lot of luck along the beach.

"When we went out on strike, I wrote Jo about it. Jo became very interested in our trouble right away and one fine morning there she was at the depot, bag and baggage, ready to join us on the picket line.

"I tell Jo that I never suspected she felt strongly about unions and Jo says, well we had a very nice beachcombers' union, didn't we, and now Jo and I walk together on the picket line and we are very happy."

P.S.

Last week Guild Pres. Helfer tucked Miss Jo Patnick into his topless roadster and drove to Mississippi to rout out a sleeping justice of the peace. The wedding was celebrated next evening at Birmingham strike headquarters with a party and dance.

Transit Union Gaining Ground In Los Angeles

Los Angeles, Oct. 25—A pledge to work for smoother and more efficient city transport as a contribution to defense was made by the Transport Workers Union Local 156 here in announcing first results of an intensive organizing drive.

"We recognize how important a smooth-working, efficient transportation system is in this key national defense city, and we pledge to do our part toward maintenance of production," union officials said. "There must be no slowing down of the defense effort, and this policy applies to transport workers."

Workers forced by the company into a stooge union are deserting it rapidly to join the TWU, which has won an injunction prohibiting the company from forcing workers to join the employer-dominated organization. The TWU has also proposed an election to determine the bargaining agent.

Another GM Plant

Syracuse, N. Y.—(FP)—The UAW-CIO won an NLRB election at the local plant of the General Motors Corp., which is manufacturing machine guns.

Little Steel Striker Gets $30,000

Cleveland, Oct. 25—Echoes of the gunfire which marked Little Steel's efforts to break the CIO's 1937 strike rumbled through a Cleveland court this week as a jury handed down a $30,0000 civil damage award to John Solanics, one of the strikers.

Solanics had filed suit against the Republic Steel Corp., charging that during an attack by company thugs on strike headquarters, he had sustained permanent brain injuries.

The suit was the first of more than 250 similar actions by individuals seeking $2,500,000 redress from company attacks during the famous walkout. Company attorneys—who said they would appeal the decision—contended that the riot in which Solanics was injured was actually a so-called spontaneous rebellion of non-strikers.

COMPANY'S QUESTION

The corporation's legal battery submitted this question to the jury:

"Did Republic Steel enter into a conspiracy to prevent unionization or bring the strike to an end by means of violence?"

Nine of the jurors voted—with the precedents of the NLRB and La Follette Committee behind them—that the company had done just that.

The case was tried before Judge C. J. McNamee, who earlier in the case discharged Tom Girdler, company chairman, as a defendant on grounds that he was not connected with the case.

Strike Sears In Detroit

Detroit, Oct. 25—It took just a week for striking CIO employes at three Detroit stores of Sears, Roebuck to convince the management that it should negotiate a contract.

The United Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Employes walked out to win reinstatement for 15 fired unionists, to end company unionism and to win recognition.

The management agreed to negotiate on settlement of the strike after over 1,000 pickets snake danced through the principal store singing union songs.

Meanwhile the workers at the Montgomery Ward outlet will have a chance in an NLRB election on Nov. 1 to decide if they wish to be represented by the CIO union or by an AFL outfit.

'Impasse' at Plane Plant

Buffalo, N. Y., Oct. 25—Efforts to settle the threatened strike at the Bell Aircraft Corp. have reached "an impasse," Thomas M. Finn, Federal conciliator, declared this week.

Officials of the United Automobile Workers, whose members voted last Sunday in favor of a strike, said they would remain at work until all possible steps at arbitration had been taken.

Labor's Help

BUFFALO, N. Y., Oct. 25—Judge Joseph J. Kelly, Democratic candidate for mayor here, knows the value of labor support. The Judge, who was unanimously endorsed by the Erie County CIO Council, said that "no man can be elected in a large city without labor's help.

"I am a friend of labor," he declared, "and labor has backed me so magnificently I promise I will not forget it when I am in the mayor's office. . . . I want you to know that I will repay this support in every way I can."

CIO Leaders Urge Better Defense Planning, Full Production

Mine Truce Near End; Await Ruling

Washington, Oct. 24—Notice that the 30-day truce in the captive mining fields would expire Saturday, Oct. 25, and that the strike would be resumed three days from that date was served on the Natl. Defense Mediation Board by United Mine Workers President John L. Lewis here.

As The CIO NEWS went to press, a decision from Defense Board Chairman William H. Davis was expected in the case, which involves 40,000 miners. The original strike, called off September 19 by the truce arrangement, was provoked by refusal of the steel firms that operate the captive mines to grant conditions equal to those in the mines in regular commercial trade.

United Mine Workers districts having captive mines in their areas were notifying the workers involved to hold themselves in readiness for a work stoppage Monday, Oct. 27, in accordance with the time limits in the truce. The miners are seeking the union shop and other clauses contained in the commercial agreement covering the Appalachian area.

In the Alabama area, captive mines were halted pending settlement of UMWA demands for payment of the 40 cents a day differential. The Defense Board recommended payment of 25 cents a day, vacation pay and four cents a ton for washer losses.

Another Bethlehem Victory

Baltimore, Oct. 25— The third NLRB victory in four months over Bethlehem Steel today had brought the CIO to the greatest strength in Baltimore history.

In the final of the three polls, the Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers scored a decisive 7-1 decision. The vote:

CIO 3,570
No Union 533

The election was held at the Fairfield yards of the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp. An earlier poll at the Sparrows Point yard went to the same union, while the first of the elections—held at the big steel plant—was easily won by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

The three polls thus brought CIO protection to more than 33,000 Baltimore workers, and it is expected that the company will hire another 10,000 men in the next few months.

Shipyard Union Organizer Walter Walker reported that 500 men joined the union after the election.

Murray Statement To CIO Conference

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25—Following is the full text of CIO Pres. Philip Murray's statement to the CIO conference on priorities unemployment held in Washington Oct. 20:

One of the most immediate and pressing problems facing many of the unions in the CIO is that of unemployment rising out of the dislocations caused by inadequate handling of the national defense program. These dislocations are caused by the failure of government and industry to plan and execute the national defense program at maximum efficiency. The causes of the dislocations are many and include shortage of transportation, lack of equipment, concentrations of orders and so on. One of the most serious is growing shortages of essential manufacturing metals.

Inadequate output of aluminum, copper, steel, zinc and the rare alloy metals is not only reducing civilian manufacture but is actually cutting into essential defense production itself. With the growing size of the arms manufacturing program, these shortages will be even more acute. The supply of some of these metals will be so short that there will not be sufficient material even for defense requirements in the coming year.

GROWING UNEMPLOYMENT

Throughout the Fall and Winter the amount of unemployment among the members of our unions, due to these dislocations, will increase rapidly. It is imperative that CIO unions be prepared to meet the resulting problems as effectively as possible.

Primarily the problem of priority unemployment arises out of ineffective and inadequate planning of the national defense program and of the resulting failure to use our industrial resources fully. Thus the basic solution to priority unemployment is effective defense planning. In this field the CIO has already led the way with the Industry Council Plan. The plan is fundamentally a proposal to establish the most efficient possible use of our industrial resources. As yet the government has not instituted this proposal.

There are, however, a number of means in addition by which the unions may protect the interests of their members in relation to priority unemployment. These measures include the spreading of price defense contracts and subcontracts as broadly as possible; the cooperation of labor with local management to adjust facilities for production to the changing industrial picture; the protection of jobs and priority rights of workers in affected plants; the procurement of emergency work and special compensation benefits for those who are thrown out of work; and the effective restraining and re-employment of workers whose old employment has ended.

UNIONS SHOULD ACT

It seems to me most important that each of the affiliated organizations whose members' jobs are threatened tby priority unemployment should set up agencies or designate officials within their organizations to cooperate with the national CIO in protecting their membership. It should be the function of such committees or officials to help set up for their union a program for its own protection, both in relation to the general production problems and to the specific dislocations which may occur. Such committees or officials should also be prepared to deal with the various defense government agencies whose operations affect employment in the industry.

I have called this conference because it seems to me imperative that the CIO give consideration to a program on these problems at the coming convention. I ask that your conference explore thoroughly the actions and initiative already taken by a number of our unions. I ask further that it discuss all other possible proposals relating to this question. I would ask that a report be made by the conference to the Executive Board recommending the measures which the conference believes the Executive Board should consider.

It is also important that the conference be utilized to acquaint all interested organizations of the measures being taken by other unions.

Only effective action by organized labor can prevent priorities dislocations from becoming a destructive catastrophe. The CIO's fundamental interest is the establishment of the fullest possible production and employment. Only with full employment and full production can there be the maximum output of armament. The CIO therefore assumes a patriotic duty in meeting this problem head on.

Conference Supports Murray Council Plan

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25 — The double-edged problem of increasing defense production to the maximum while keeping defense priorities unemployment to a minimum, received thorough study and discussion at a conference of 100 representatives of CIO unions here Oct. 20.

Called by Pres. Philip Murray, the union officials devoted a full day to the problem and then selected a committee which is to report to the meeting of the CIO Executive Board in Detroit on Nov. 15.

The speeches of the CIO officials brimmed with facts and experiences which bore out CIO criticism of the defense program as voiced during the past two years:

1. That lack of economic planning is hindering production and unnecessarily throwing hundreds of thousands of workers out of their jobs.
2. That full labor representation in the policy-setting councils of the government is essential to straightening out the present chaotic condition of the program.
3. That adoption of the Murray Industry Council Plan is sorely needed if production is to reach the high level necessary for the nation's welfare.

In a message to the conference, President Murray pointed out that "inadequate output of aluminum, copper, steel, zinc and the rare alloy metals is not only reducing civilian manufactures, but is actually cutting into essential defense production itself. Throughout the Fall and Winter the amount of unemployment among the members of our unions due to these dislocations will increase rapidly. It is imperative that CIO unions be prepared to meet the resulting problems as effectively as possible."

LACK OF PLANNING

The CIO national leader charged that priority unemployment is due to lack of planning, and can be corrected only through "effective defense planning."

"There are, however, a number of means in addition by which the unions may protect the interests of their members in relation to priority unemployment," Murray's message declared. "These measures include the spreading of price defense contracts and sub-contracts as broadly as possible; the cooperation of labor with local management to adjust facilities for production to the changing industrial picture; the protection of jobs and seniority rights of workers in affected plants; the procurement of emergency work and special compensation benefits for those who are thrown out of work; and the effective re-training and re-employment of workers whose old employment has ended."

Appointed to the committee which will report to the CIO Executive Board were Sec. James B. Carey, who presided at the conference; Ralph Hetzel, Jr., CIO Economic Director; Clinton S. Golden, of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee; Sec.-Treas. George F. Addes, of the United Automobile, Aircraft & Agricultural Implement Workers; Alfred Hoffman, of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers; Sec.-Treas. Frank Grillo, of the United Rubber Workers, and Pres. Lewis Merrill, of the United Office & Professional Workers.

Submitted to the committee for consideration was a study of the present production and unemployment situation prepared by Hetzel.

While no resolutions or statements were adopted by the conferences, Allan S. Haywood, director of organization, summed up the opinion of the union leaders when he said the primary problems confronting the defense program are the need for immediate relief for workers being forced out of their jobs in civilian production; and for sharply increased production of raw materials to forestall further industrial shortages and shutdowns.

AUTO PROBLEMS

The problems facing the automobile industry were brought out in sharp detail by Sec.-Treas. Addes of the UAW-CIO. After recalling that the union, through the Reuther plan, had long ago offered a program for gradual transition from civilian to defense production, Addes predicted:

"The services of 215,000 out of 530,000 workers necessary to get out last winter's auto production

AFL Union's Anti-Negro Bias Bared At Hearing

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 25—Harvey Brown, president of the AFL Intl. Machinists Assn., was ordered to appear in Washington before the Fair Employment Practices Committee by Mark Ethridge, chairman, following exposure of his union's discrimination against Negro workers at a committee hearing here. John Brophy, director of CIO Industrial Union Councils, appeared for CIO Pres. Philip Murray, a member of the committee.

The committee hearings also brought out the fact that a very small percentage of Negroes were hired by aircraft and other defense corporations in California. The order to Brown to appear in Washington was prompted by testimony that a Negro worker who had secured a job at a San Francisco Bethlehem Co. shipyard had been refused membership in the AFL union, and had thus been unable to take the job.

"This is clearly a case of discrimination, and I order Mr. Brown to appear in Washington before the next session of the committee," Chairman Ethridge said.

COMPANY DISCRIMINATION

Charges of anti-Negro discrimination were made against a number of companies, chiefly in the aircraft industry. The "token" nature of the hiring of a few Negro workers was shown in the answer to these charges made by the personnel manager, who cited 54 Negro workers out of some 48,000 in his plant—the Lockheed Vega Corp. Only 34 of these were doing mechanical work, he said.

One Negro worker testified that the word "colored" was written in large letters on his application card. Another told of applying for a skilled job, with ample experience, and being given a custodial job. Another told of taking an examination for a job at Lockheed with two other Negro workers and 35 white workers. The 35 white workers were hired but the three Negroes were not even told whether or not they had passed the tests.

"We cannot play Hitler's game of indulging in racism and prejudices while we are attempting to destroy him," Chairman Ethridge said in announcing the opening of the inquiry.

Under the Executive Order of June 25, 1941, which created the committee, government contracts contain stipulations that the recipients may not discriminate on account of race or color against potential employes.

Allen Runs For N. Y. City Council

Brooklyn, N. Y., Oct. 25—Daniel Allen, secretary-treasurer of the CIO State, County & Municipal Workers, may be a member of the New York City Council after November 4.

Allen is running for the post on the American Labor Party ticket in Brooklyn. He has wide labor support.

Defense Planning

A number of sad stories were told to the recent CIO conference on priorities unemployment.

They related to unemployment rising out of dislocations caused by the failure of government and industry to plan and execute the defense program at maximum efficiency, as CIO Pres. Philip Murray pointed out.

Shortages of essential metals, shortages of transportation and equipment, and bottlenecks caused by the concentration of orders are among the immediate causes of these dislocations.

These shortages threaten to become more acute as the arms program grows and are likely to throw hundreds of thousands of more workers out of employment this winter.

Any unemployment is sad enough at any time. But what makes the present situation particularly tragic is that now is the time when the labor of every American worker is most urgently needed for all-out defense production, as well as to maintain production of consumers' goods to avoid lower living standards.

Another irony of the situation lies in the fact that most of the present shortages and dislocations could have been avoided by intelligent planning; and that, even now, full use is not being made of available resources and facilities.

The CIO does not cry over spilt milk, however, nor take pleasure in saying, "I told you so," to those who disregarded its warnings and its plans. The conference addressed itself to immediate steps for remedying present troubles, and to a more long-range program for impressing upon the country and the government the necessity to adopt such defense planning proposals as are embodied in the Murray industry council plan.

The immediate steps, upon which most CIO unions are already working, include protection of seniority rights of workers threatened with displacement; provision of emergency work and special compensation for those laid off, and the retraining of those who may be assigned to different work; planning with management to adjust facilities to new types of production; and the spreading of defense contracts and sub-contracts in such a way as to maintain maximum production.

The long-range CIO program, embodied in the Murray plan, calls for full labor participation in the administration of the defense program; for planning on an industry-wide basis; and for all-out production by the planned use of all available resources and facilities, and their planned expansion wherever necessary.

The wisdom of the CIO defense plan is proving itself over and over again, through the present dislocations which it might have averted. All speakers at the conference stressed its importance from their own experience. The whole movement must get behind its promotion as never before if the country's goal of all-out production is to be achieved.

Anti-Union Bunk

Among the absurd lies which anti-labor propagandists are fond of tossing about is the charge that unions corral workers against their will and rule tyrannously over them.

One columnist recently even went so far as to indict all unions as "oppressors of labor."

It is true that racketeers have in some few instances seized control of some of the craft units of the American Federation of Labor, and no words can be too strong to denounce the tyrannies and extortions of which they have been guilty.

But no such scandals have besmirched the record of the CIO; nor would they stand a chance to develop in the vigorous democracy of its great industrial unions.

As to "unwilling members," no argument of ours can speak so loud as the record of Labor Board elections. These elections are conducted by secret ballot under government auspices, and the law provides democratic safeguards to assure full freedom of choice.

Such polls are constantly being held and hundreds of thousands of workers have voted in them. The results have been, and continue to be, overwhelmingly in favor of CIO union representation.

Among the latest, consider the elections in 12 plants of the Bethlehem Steel Co. all over the country. Every one of these elections was won by the CIO Steel Workers Organizing Committee, and the total vote was 45,607 for the SWOC to 18,635 against.

Whenever they have a fair chance, American workers will use their democratic rights to vote for more democracy, and that is what they get through CIO union organization. All propaganda to the contrary is the sheerest bunk.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

There is a Trojan horse running wild in our country that does more damage than a whole army of foreign spies, saboteurs and fifth columnists.

It is responsible for some of our most serious shortages in materials; for much of our industrial machinery being out of use; for the unemployment of millions whose labor is urgently needed; and for many other inefficiencies and worse.

This Trojan horse constantly spreads demoralization and commits the most dastardly sabotage of national defense. But people are so used to it, that it usually escapes notice though it appears everywhere.

There is hardly a stuffed-shirt affair that is not attended by this Trojan horse. It is always bobbing up in Congress. And it makes itself particularly at home in OPM and other defense agencies.

This No. 1 saboteur is an idea—or rather, a misconception or, more bluntly, a lie. It is the idea that capital is superior to labor. And once it is trundled into position, there emerge from the belly of this lie, to do the dirty work, a whole series of subsidiary misconceptions, to wit:

That profiteering supplies the chief motive power for production and should receive the first consideration.

That a few dozen dollar-a-year men, each looking out for their own firms, will somehow generate a production program.

That the millions of Americans who do the real work of production are dumb as hell and fit only to be ordered about by bosses and bureaucrats.

That to enlist labor's cooperation in defense production it is necessary only to hand-pick a few people from its ranks and give them government jobs; and for the rest, just to set up some advisory committees whose advice can be disregarded.

That if "labor trouble" results from this profiteering, lack of planning and failure to give the workers proper representation, labor must be dragooned by anti-strike laws and similar measures.

The CIO representatives who met in Washington on October 20 to discuss the dislocations created by the above mentioned Trojan horse, constituted one of the most practically patriotic gatherings that has been held in the capital.

Representing millions of workers employed in all the major defense industries, these CIO leaders reported from first-hand experience on some of the worst failures of the defense program.

Their reports dealt with serious shortages of essential materials resulting from failure to plan production; with idle plants and machinery that could and should be placed in operation; with monopolistic allocation of contracts; and with the unemployment resulting from these shortages and from the lack of real planning for all-out production.

At the same time, these CIO representatives reported what each of their unions was doing to cope with this situation. They showed that the unions were not only concerned with relieving the troubles of their members and assuring them full employment at decent wages, but that they also realized the seriousness of the national emergency and were putting all their brains and energy into promoting the fullest possible production.

Particularly interesting were the reports of those unions which have been organizing local, regional and industrial conferences with their employers and with public officials, to plan pooling of facilities, wider distribution of contracts and other measures to increase defense production.

Veteran labor organizers remarked rather wryly that they found it much harder to organize employers for such purposes than they had found it to organize workers. The workers had a much better grasp of the need for organization and were less prone to selfish and short-sighted individualism.

Basic to this CIO conference, as to all other CIO plans and proposals, are certain conceptions which are truly American and democratic, and which are the direct opposite of the Trojan horse ideas mentioned earlier. These conceptions are:

(1) That American working people have a primary concern with the defense of our country and its institutions against world-threatening fascism. They do not have to be dragooned but are eager to take the lead for all-out defense production.

(2) That labor has brains as well as energy at least equal, if not superior to those of the dollar-a-year men, and is not afflicted with their selfish competitive and profiteering inhibitions.

(3) That success of the defense program depends on careful planning for full production; and upon enlistment of all of labor's brains and energy through full and equal participation with management in the planning and administration of the program.

CIO Parley Urges Defense Planning

will be no longer required for this purpose. It is possible that 50,000 out of this 215,000 potentially unemployed auto workers will have found defense jobs by the first of the year.

"But the remainder, at least 160,000, will be on the street wondering why with so much talk of labor shortages they have been denied a working part in the drive to outproduce Hitler."

SHORT WEEKS IN STEEL

In the steel industry—where Chairman Philip Murray of the SWOC long ago offered an industry council plan to increase production—some 100,000 men are working less than five days a week, SWOC Research Director Harold Ruttenberg told the conference. In the fabricating industries, "priority unemployment is very imminent, and will present itself in dramatic form," he said.

Ruttenberg also called attention to a factor to which almost every other speaker made reference—that many big corporations, especially those in monopoly or semi-monopoly positions, have been cool to the proposition of supplanting "business as usual" profit methods with intensive defense production.

The Mellon interests were cited as an example. They made little effort to get defense orders until the threat of curtailed civilian production made the executives fear that mounting overhead would cut sharply into their profits.

JOINT CONFERENCE

Neil Brant, an official of the CIO United Electrical Radio & Machine Workers, outlined at considerable length the UE's success in creating joint labor-management-government conferences in many localities to survey plant capacity, determine inventory and sublet contracts so that production may be speeded up while being dispersed among many plants.

"The basic problem is more and more raw materials," he pointed out.

Ben Riskin, research director of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, gave some first-hand observations of conditions in the metal mines, whose production could be steeply increased by improved working conditions and a willingness on the part of the great corporate interests to forego some of their superprofits.

CHISEL ON UNCLE SAM

Some 35 million dollars of government money has been spent to build new brass plants, Riskin said, while no real efforts has gone into the problem of improving production of raw materials. Many mines, enjoying government-subsidized higher prices, have closed down the low-cost sections of their properties and are working the high-cost lodes which would not normally be profitable.

He suggested the transfer of Great Lakes ore ships to the hauling of copper ore from Chile before the lakes freeze over for the winter.

ALCOA AND DEFENSE

Pres. Nicholas Zonarich of the Aluminum Workers told how monopoly has served to keep prices high and production low. The union was well aware that the nation would be faced with an aluminum shortage, he said, but its voice went unheeded in OPM dollar-a-year circles, and the union's highly publicized plan for greater production has never been officially acknowledged by the OPM.

"There is no aluminum shortage, but there are not sufficient facilities for manufacturing and fabricating aluminum," Zonarich pointed out. "The reason why that shortage exists today is the reluctance of the Aluminum Co. to expand its facilities. . . ."

ACTION IN TEXTILES

Sol Barkin, research director of the Textile Workers Union, told of the problems raised by the ban on silk imports from Japan and described efforts of the union to have substitute materials put into production. An effort has been made, Barkin said, to have production allocated to those cities and areas where no other industries exist to absorb workers who may be thrown out of their jobs by shutdowns.

Pres. S. H. Dalrymple and Sec.-Treas. Frank Grillo of the United Rubber Workers recounted the union's efforts to save jobs threatened by rubber shortages. As a result of the URWA's demands, the production cut has been gradual and less serious in its effects than had been anticipated. Grillo urged national coordination by the CIO of the union's efforts to meet the allocation and unemployment problem.

OTHER SPEAKERS

Others who addressed the meeting included Pres. R. J. Thomas of the UAW-CIO, Pres, Lewis Merrill of the UOPWA, Arthur Garfield of the electrical workers, Vice-Pres. Herbert Payne of the textile workers, Grant Oakes of the farm equipment workers, Sec.-Treas. Edward Cheyfitz of the die casters, Frederick Myers of the maritime union, Sec.-Treas. Peter Vidmar of the glass workers, and Jack Lever of the OPM.

Carey Pays Tribute To Late Rep. Connery

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25—Secretary James B. Carey of the CIO this week expressed regret on behalf of its members over the death of "one of labor's friends," Rep. Lawrence Connery of Lynn, Mass.

Connery, aged 46, died in Washington after a short illness.

"Congressman Connery was a true representative of the working man and under-dog in the halls of Congress," Carey declared. "His constant effort was to advance the interests and well being of the lower third of our population whom he knew to be ill fed, ill housed and ill clothed.

"He was a champion and supporter of the social policies and legislative program of the New Deal. Like his brother whom he succeeded, he was an active member of the Labor Committee in the House of Representatives and was recognized by all who had contact with the members of that Committee as a student of social problems with a deep understanding of the aims and problems of organized labor.

"His passing will be mourned by thousands of members of the CIO throughout the country and particularly by the thousands in his own district who knew best his efforts in their behalf."

Ends Walkout At Gas Plant

Birmingham, Ala., Oct. 25—Striking CIO gas workers at the Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Coal Co. were back at their jobs today after gaining a promise of quick action from the National Defense Mediation Board on their demands for higher wages and improved working conditions.

The firm supplies gas to a number of industrial firms in the Birmingham area. Members of District 50, United Mine Workers, held up their strike for 24 hours when promised Mediation Board action failed to materialize, with the Board giving no date for hearings on their dispute. After the one-day strike, the Board agreed to hearings this week on the points at issue.

Some 775 workers were involved in the shutdown.

Curran to Talk To British

New York, Oct. 25—Joseph Curran, president of the National Maritime Union and a vice-president of the CIO, will speak to England on the "Friendship Bridge", a short-wave radio program sponsored by the British American Ambulance Corps. The program is scheduled for October 29.

Curran is President of the Greater New York CIO Council, which recently voted to raise approximatelk $400,000 by voluntary contributions from CIO workers for ambulances for Britain.

Office Union Inducts 1,500 Members at Meeting

NEW YORK, Oct. 25—In a colorful ceremony early this week, Local 16 of the CIO United Office & Professional Workers inducted 1,500 new members into the union.

The event culminated a successful two-month drive during which the local made tremendous gains in the organization of New York's lettershop industry.

Present at the mass meeting in Manhattan Center was Mayor F. H. LaGuardia, who has the union's support for re-election to office.

The unionization of the lettershop industry marks the beginning of the end of sweat-shop conditions which have been prevalent in the 375 direct mail firms paying salaries of as low as $8.00 a week to experienced workers.

As a result of the phenomenally successful organizing campaign, the UOPWA is now the sole collective bargaining agent in the following outstanding firms in the industry: W. S. Ponton, James H. Gray, Ardlee Service, Business Letter Service, Elite Letter Co., Advertisers Mailing Service, Bollinger, D. H. Ahrend Co., J. A. Want, New Era Letter Co., Mailograph Co. and many others.

One of the largest firms in the field, R. L. Polk, employing 2500 workers in this city and in Detroit, has also signed an agreement with the union.

Wins Job Back

Dayton, O.—(FP)—Russell Behmer went back to work at the Sheffield Gauge Co. with $279 back pay as a result of a protest by the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, which said he had been discharged for union activity.

SENATE HEARING:

Construction Union Head Hits OPM-AFL 'Monopoly'

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25—Before an audience and press section that jammed to capacity a large Senate hearing room, the Truman Committee Investigating the National Defense Program this week looked into the OPM Labor Division's refusal to award a government housing contract to the Currier Lumber Co. of Detroit, a firm under contract to the CIO.

Appearing before the committee were Chairman A. D. Lewis of the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee; OPM Associate Director General Sidney Hillman, and J. Douglas Brown, chairman of the Board of Review created under the OPM's national stabilization agreement with the AFL Building Trades Dept.

Lewis told the committee that the OPM Labor Division is operated "in a manner to discriminate against all workers who do not belong to AFL building trades unions. . . . Mr. Hillman's office has acted, in effect, as a recruiting agency for the AFL in connection with defense projects."

Among the cases cited by Chairman Lewis was that of the Blaw-Knox Steel Co., Martin's Ferry, Ohio, which was advised that renovating work on a newly acquired building could not be done by firms under contract with the CIO union but must be done by AFL labor, despite the fact that "the UCWOC workers were local residents of Martin's Ferry, while if the job went AFL, it would mean displacing them for men from outside."

BLAW-KNOX CASE

The Blaw-Knox case, the Currier case and a similar occurrence at Camp Chaffee, Ark., "substantially demonstrate that the effect of this stabilization agreement is to establish a monopoly for the AFL building trades on defense construction," Lewis charged.

"It appears to me also," Lewis continued, "that this policy established by Mr. Hillman and the OPM usurps the prerogative of the legislative branch of the government and in effect rewrites and reverses a labor policy which has been established by Congress in the National Labor Relations Act and other laws. . . . It is evident that certain officials of the OPM have accepted a rather strange doctrine to the general effect that workers in certain industries 'belong' to certain labor groups, regardless of their own wishes."

CITES AFL FIGURES

Less than a million of the construction industry's 3,000,000 workers are enrolled in AFL building trades unions, the committee was told by Lewis, and were it not for the government's building program and certain political alliances, "it would be hard" for the AFL "to maintain its organizations at all."

He branded the OPM stabilization agreement as "in the nature of a bribe to keep the squabbling craft unions from striking defense projects" on jurisdictional disputes, and offered the building trade unions' high initiation and dues fees as an example of rottenness within the AFL camp.

The UCWOC was established to organize the largely unorganized workers in the industry, Lewis said after "repeated appeals" from workers faced with "intolerable conditions permitted by the AFL." The CIO affiliate has chartered some 400 locals, he stated ,and has a membership of over 50,000.

ASSAILS RACKETEERING

In his testimony Lewis reviewed at length the history of craft jurisdictional warfare in the AFL building trades group, pointing out that "instead of fighting on the workers' behalf, it chose the easy way of backdoor agreements, kickbacks, political deals and similar shady devices. It lost the confidence of the nation's workers.

"The CIO challenged all this in the mass industries and now challenges it in the construction industry." Under the stabilization agreement, he asserted, the AFL is trying to get the OPM to "do the organizing job that it was unable to do itself."

Lewis cited testimony before the U. S. anti-monopoly committee by Dan Tracy, head of the AFL electrical workers, admitting that 90 per cent of small-home construction throughout the country is done by non-union workers. Yet, the CIO official said, the AFL "has the audacity to ask the government to give it a 100 per cent monopoly on this type of building when it is financed by the government."

HILLMAN ON STAND

He denied that the AFL stabilization agreement was a monopoly, asserting that it applied only to those firms doing government construction work which are under AFL contract. Nor, he argued, is the AFL opposed to pre-fabricated housing construction.

Rather, the government's refusal to award a defense housing contract to the Currier Lumber Co.—which makes pre-fabricated homes and which therefore was able to submit a bid on 300 homes that was $431,000 lower than its nearest competitor—was a question of labor relations, Hillman said.

The AFL had been in dispute with the Currier Co. early this year when the teamsters union tried to unionize the company's truck drivers, and Hillman expressed belief that a government contract to the firm would antagonize AFL unions and lead to possible disruption of the defense program in the Detroit area.

DENIES 'APPEASEMENT'

The OPM official denied statements by the Senate committee members that he was "appeasing" AFL officials, or that the AFL—through the stabilization agreement—held a virtual veto power over the award of U. S. contracts by threatening to strike against awards which it disapproved.

Saying that "defense must come first," Hillman added that his own advice to Federal Works Administrator Carmody "was against making the award to the Currier Co." The decision was "based on my experience of 30 years in the labor movement," Hillman said, "and the belief that the award would provoke union warfare between the building trades and the teamsters on the one hand and members of other labor organizations on the other hand."

FWA Adminstrator Carmody and AFL Pres. William Green are also scheduled to appear before the committee.

Carey Hits Wage-Freeze Plan In Radio Broadcast

NEW YORK, Oct. 25—Wage freezing by government order, now being proposed by anti-labor forces in Congress and in the newspapers, would be "a breach in the wall of defense that the people of America are erecting against Hitlerism," James B. Carey, secretary of the CIO, declared in a radio broadcast over Station WEVD here today.

"Free labor is the strongest defender democracy can have," Carey said. "To say to the workers of this nation that they must accept arbitrary wage freezing, and consequently accept a lower standard of living, is to weaken defense. It is a breach in the wall of defense that the people of America are erecting against Hitlerism."

Pointing out that recent price rises have not been caused by wage increases won by CIO unions, since the greatest price rises occur in those commodities where increased wages are the least factor in costs, Carey called for some measures of price control to keep the inflationary price spiral in check.

At the same time, he denounced proposals to freeze wages as a blow at the living standards of the entire American people, pointing out that the prosperity of the farmer, the small merchant and the professional worker depend on the size and thickness of the workers' pay envelopes.

There are no shortages in the things the worker buys with his wages, he added, since they are basic necessities—food and clothing, medical care, and the like. Freezing wages would freeze the incomes and the living standards of those who supply them as well as of the workers themselves.

Fight Pay-Freeze, Aviation Union Official Urges

Los Angeles, Oct. 25—Wage fixing over long periods of time through stabilization and other proposals must be fought by the workers, Walter Smethurst, assistant director of the Aviation Division of the United Automobile Workers of America, CIO, declared here in a forum debate this week.

Smethurst contrasted recent wage increases won by organized labor with living cost increases, pointing out that prices began to rise long before wage increases came into effect, and that price rises were now outstripping the benefits workers had won through wage boosts.

NOT A FACTOR

In addition, he declared, wage costs were not a factor in increased prices. "Not only have wage costs failed to increase," he said, "but it can be said that labor costs are the only important element of cost which have not so far shown big increases. . . . Labor costs are low, are not and do not threaten to become a factor in forcing up prices."

"The question of whether or not stabilization is to move in on gains made by labor is entirely in the hands of labor," he said in conclusion. "We must decide whether to fight or to sit back complacently and accept whatever leavings industry is willing to toss us."

Sues For Job

Chicago — (FP) — The first suit under the provision of the draft act requiring employers to rehire draftees released from the service has been filed in the U. S. district court. The complainant is James E. Herbert, who demands that the A. P. W. Paper Co. be forced to put him back to work.

Charge Bias Against CIO

St. Louis, Mo., Oct. 25—A defense housing project planned for the Weldon Spring TNT plant area was dropped because the contractor who submitted the low bid employs CIO workers, James Nash, regional director of the CIO United Construction Workers, charged in a letter sent to Thurman Arnold, Assistant U. S. Attorney General in charge of the anti-trust division.

Nash said that bids for a 60-unit project in the area taken last July, were all thrown out when it was found that the low bidder was an employer of CIO labor. He charged that this was due to a deliberate policy of the Office of Production Management to give all defense construction work to the AFL.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., Oct. 25—Wage increases totaling $57,000 were won from the Southern Pecan Shelling Company after a one week strike of 860 members of the Local 172, United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing and Allied Workers of America.

The union added a seniority clause to the contract and maintained other provisions including the union shop and check-off.

The strike was 100% solid from the minute it was called until the workers voted to go back. Julius Seligmann, the "Pecan King" of Wage-Hour Law fame, was forced to grant the union a wage increase for the first time in the history of pecan workers organization.

Seligmann had hired many young girls who had never been in a union before and who knew little of the pecan workers' struggles. The same girls proved to be the most militant strikers and made the 18-hour picket line the prettiest that ever graced the streets of San Antonio.

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

A very serious problem involving the welfare of millions of American workers took the attention of CIO unions this week in the special conference on priorities unemployment called in Washington.

National defense needs are making materials for domestic manufacture scarcer every day. New priorities are threatening to take hundreds of articles formerly made for civilian consumption out of production. As this increases, larger numbers of workers will be thrown out of jobs, since even the most optimistic predictions do not envisage jobs for any large number of the workers displaced.

The CIO conference heard reports from CIO affiliates, all showing that the situation was either already affecting their members acutely or could be expected to affect them in the immediate future. No group of the people of this country is more anxious to supply defense production for the defeat of aggression than the members of the CIO. At the same time, the people of America must be employed. Our country, especially at this critical time, cannot afford the presence of more millions of unemployed workers.

As an immediate step, consideration should be given to increased unemployment compensation for displaced workers. Orthodox methods are not good enough to deal with this situation. In Great Britain, displaced workers receive severance pay. Whatever program is worked out to relieve this critical situation must be worked out speedily, and worked out on a sufficiently broad scope to take care of all the workers involved.

WITH THE CIO

Election victories by CIO affiliates keep rolling in. From Tennessee, scene of recent vigilante outrages against CIO organizers, State Council Secretary Paul R. Christopher reports that the United Furniture Workers, CIO, won 199 votes as against 128 for no union. Rinaldo Cappellini, CIO field representative at present stationed in New York State, writes that the United Automobile Workers, CIO, won an election at Brown, Lipe and Chapin, a division of General Motors Corp., in Syracuse, N. Y., by the impressive total of 1,029 to 347.

The Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee has won two elections, one at the Oppenheimer Casing Co. in Chicago, where the count was 84 to 34; the other at the Omaha Union Stockyards Co. in Omaha, Neb., where PWOC Local 155 rolled up 232 votes to 57 against.

Regional Director Frank Bender reports from Baltimore, Md., that the CIO contract with the American Sugar Refining Co. has been renewed on favorable terms. The new agreement carries a five cents an hour wage increase, a 12 per cent raise in piecework rates, and improvements in the seniority clause and other important gains. The increase will amount to about $100,000 annually, distributed among 850 workers. The contract was not due for renewal until December 1, 1941, but the union was able to reopen it through a war escape clause that had been written in when it was originally negotiated.

Joseph Bird, field representative in Michigan, reports renewal of a contract with the Karrey and Hanson Co. at Grayling, Mich. The contract, together with another one signed by the Antrim Iron Co., brings a total of 11 cents per hour in wage increases won since it was originally signed in April.

Low Cost Medical Care Available, Study Shows

NEW YORK, Oct. 25—Complete medical service for workers and their families can be provided at an annual cost of about $21 a person, Dr. Franz Goldmann, associate clinical professor of public health at the Yale University School of Medicine, reported this week, after a survey of four industrial health plants, two in eastern and two in southern states.

Dr. Goldmann published his findings in the autumn issue of "Medical Care", a quarterly journal published by the Committee on Research in Medical Economics.

The four plans have been functioning from 17 to 28 years and now cover employe groups who number, with dependants, from 5,000 to 100,000. Two of the plans are wholly financed by the employer, one costing about $1,000,000 a year, while the other two are jointly financed by employer and employes.

Varied Services

Average annual cost per person ranges from $10.75 for the largest to $23.40 for the smallest group, Dr. Goldmann found. Services include those of general practioners, surgeons, specialists, home nursing, hospital care, maternity care, periodic health examinations and other preventive measures.

Dr. Goldmann attributes the low cost to four factors—full use of preventive medicine, even spread of risks over a large group practice, and the integration of preventative and curative services.

Support New Local

Toledo, Ohio—The Toledo Industrial Union Council has demanded that the newly organized local of the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee—composed of employes of the City Water Department—be given all due consideration by the City Council on demands for wage increases and improved working conditions.

File Suits for U. S. Pay Boost

Washington, Oct. 25—Suit to compel payment of pay raises due to government workers under the recently passed automatic promotions bill was started by the United Federal Workers of America, CIO, here this week. The suit was instituted in the name of a Railroad Retirement Board employe, and will cover all similar cases.

The bill calls for raises for about 200,000 Federal employes, but delays in the budget bureau have kept them from being paid. UFWA officials point out that Federal workers are suffering from increasing costs of living while their wages remain stationary.

District 50 Rolls Up New Gains In Big Drive

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18 — A flock of Labor Board election victories, together with a union shop contract signed by the Michigan Alkali Co., was reported today by District 50, United Mine Workers, CIO, as its campaign to organize the gas, coke and chemical and paper industries moved into high gear.

The Michigan Alkali pact, which lifted wages $400,000 a year for 1,700 employes at the Wyandotte plant, established the second highest wage level in the industry throughout the Detroit area.

Wages were lifted eight cents an hour, while reclassifications in many cases lifted rates by an additional 20 cents an hour. In addition the union gained vacations with pay, seniority rights and other standard contract features.

$1-A-DAY RAISE

At Everett, Mass., District 50 reported that 950 employes of the Everett Coke Works had won $1-a-day increases after previously rejecting by an overwhelming vote a company offer for 10 cents an hour wage boosts.

Most important of the NLRB election victories was that at the American Magnesium Corp. in Buffalo, N. Y., where District 50 polled 557 to only 190 for a home-grown company union. The workers have already prepared contract demands, including a 15-cent increase, for submission to the management.

ST. LOUIS LANDSLIDE

A similar landslide was reported in St. Louis, where the District received 553 votes to 140 against at the Titanium Division of the National Lead Co. Pact parleys were scheduled to open Oct. 17.

One of Detroit's oldest drug houses—Frederick Stearns & Co.—came under the District 50 banner when its employes voted 214 to 54 for the CIO union. At Yonkers, N. Y., District 50 gained 27 votes to only five against in a poll at the Pyridium Corp.

TEXTILE CONFAB: Frank Graham, president of the University of North Carolina and member of the Nat'l. Defense Mediation Board, shown addressing a record-breaking state conference of CIO textile workers in Durham, N. C. "CIO is composed of men and women who want to join hands for freedom," he told the meeting.

Connecticut CIO Holds Education Conference

HARTFORD, Conn., Oct. 25—A State CIO educational conference on the subject of "Education for Democracy and Defense" was held here last Sunday under sponsorship of the Connecticut CIO Council.

The conference which was attended by nearly 100 delegates representing the major CIO unions in the state, was the first meeting of its kind to be held in this state, famous for its munitions works.

MANY DISCUSSIONS

Discussions were led by union leaders active in the field of education. Sam Feldman, publicity director of the Brass Valley organizing committee of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, led a discussion on "Education through Literature."

"Education through Activities" was led by David Hedley, teacher of the Council's union classes, and "Education through Union Meetings," was conducted by Harry Silverman, district educational director, United Automobile Workers.

RADIO PROBLEMS

William Cahn, editor of "News of Connecticut," Labor's Non-Partisan League paper, conducted a discussion on Education through Radio, and Iris Zinn, state organizer of the State CIO Council, led one on "How to interest local members in educational activities.

Rev. E. Dent Lackey of the State Defense Council, spoke on labor's vital part in the defeat of Hitlerism, and outlined the services of his Council.

46,000 CIO Letters Back LaGuardia

New York, Oct. 25—More than 46,000 letters urging support for Mayor F. H. LaGuardia in the mayoralty campaign were mailed to members of the Transport Workers Union here. Earlier, the N. Y. CIO Council had adopted a resolution also urging LaGuardia's reelection.

In rejecting the Tammany Hall candidate, TWU Pres. Michael Quill and Local President Austin Hogan reminded the union members that "it was Tammany Mayor Jimmy Walker who sent the industrial and alien squads to crack the skulls of IRT strikers in 1926.

"It was only when Tammany was swept out of office that we could and did build the Transport Workers Union.

"It was under the LaGuardia administration that we had a more favorable opportunity to build our union, sign our contracts and renew them from year to year."

Hit 'Pressure' In Minnesota Trial Case

Minneapolis, Oct. 25 — Charges that the prosecution of members of Local 544 of the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee, CIO, was partly motivated by "pressure by a national pro-Administration trade union leader" were made here as the date of the trial drew near.

The defendants are on trial for alleged "sedition." The indictment, it was pointed out, closely followed the transfer of Local 544 from the AFL Teamsters Brotherhood to the CIO. A pamphlet, "Witch Hunt in Minnesota," has been published outlining the facts in the case.

Swank Cosmetics Queen Gets Strike 'Treatment'

NEW YORK, Oct. 25—One of the best known names in the field of high-price cosmetics was carried on many a picket sign this week as 200 striking members of District 50, United Mine Workers of America, halted operations at the Long Island City plant of Helena Rubenstein.

The fight was carried to the general public, too, as District 50 and other CIO Unions planned a demonstration, 1,500 strong, in front of Mme. Rubenstein's swank Fifth Avenue beauty salon and another mass demonstration at the plant in protest against police brutality toward pickets. Girls in evening gowns were to lead the Fifth Avenue demonstration.

The strike, called Oct. 14 for recognition after Mme. Rubenstein sponsored a company union in the form of the Helena Rubenstein Benevolent Association, saw eight persons arrested in the first nine days, two of them organizers—Irvin Weiland on the Local Union's staff and Jules Bertram on the District staff. The NLRB was among agencies attempting to assist in effecting a settlement.

Sam Machles, regional director for District 50 in New York City, pointed out that, while the Rubenstein preparations were "class" products and brought high prices, wages paid by the famous beautician were well below those in Union shops.

U. S. Probes New Attack In Tennesee

Clothing Union Official Threatened by Mob, Carried Over State Line

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Oct. 25.—Acting on demands from the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, the Dept. of Justice has sent investigators to South Fulton, Tenn., where a lynch mob carried a union organizer across the state line to Kentucky and threatened him with death unless union application cards were handed over.

The outbreak of anti-labor violence was the second within a month in Tennessee. Late in September a mob seized two CIO organizers near Harriman, beat them with whips and poured hot tar over their bodies.

Victim of the vigilantes at South Fulton was Palmer Pinnegar, who was engaged in organizing employes of the open shop of Henry I. Seigel Co. at Fulton, Ky. The state line separates Fulton from South Fulton, Tenn.

On the night of Oct. 10, Pinnegar paid a visit to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Jones in South Fulton. As he arrived at their home, a large number of cars which had been parked in front of the house started to move, and they kept up a continuous patrol during his visit.

GOES TO CITY HALL

The union official called two police officers, who escorted Pinnegar at his own request to the S. Fulton City Hall. The municipal building is in Tennessee, but the other side of the main street is in Fulton, Kentucky.

A mob of about 400 gathered in front of the City Hall when Pinnegar arrived there late in the evening. He immediately called the chief of police at Fulton and asked for safe conduct through the town in order that he might journey back to his home in Paducah, Ky. The request was refused, as was a similar plea to the Kentucky state police.

Pinnegar then asked to speak with a committee from the crowd outside. But after a short conversation with the small group—which was headed by a filling station proprietor — a large group came into the city hall.

A spokesman for the mob ordered Pinnegar to call Robert L. Hardy, his superior official at Paducah, and "tell him that unless he surrendered the union membership application cards, I would be killed."

"Hardy was able to stall them for a couple of hours," Pinnegar said in an affidavit, "during which time he forged a number of application cards for delivery to them, as it was not his intention to deliver the genuine cards. Finally, between 2:00 and 2:30 a.m., Miss Earl Dedman (spokesman for the so-called Committee) told Hardy over the phone: 'I have held this mob off as long as I can and, if those cards are not here in one hour, he will be dead'."

Arrangements were made for a meeting at which the cards were to be handed over.

PROTECTION REFUSED

Meanwhile, the Mayor of South Fulton, after refusing to put Pinnegar in a cell for his own protection, ordered everybody out of the City Hall. The mob took the union official in his car across the state border to Fulton, Ky., where he was detained in a house until the faked application cards were handed over to the mob.

CORRECTION

A headline in the last issue of The CIO NEWS incorrectly reported that a contract had been signed by the United Rubber Workers and the Goodyear Rubber Co. Agreement was reached on all major points, but the contract was not yet signed by the union and company.

The Upper Crust

THIS ISN'T THE BOSS: National Defense Mediation Board has pinned the blame for continued shutdown of the Air Associates, Inc., Bendix, N. J., squarely on the management—but when the state cops got to work, the workers—and not the employers—were on the receiving end of a "rough-'em-up" job. New Jersey CIO unions have threatened to bring large groups of pickets to the scene if trouble develops against the pickets.

2,000 Picket Air Associates As Firm Defies Mediation

BENDIX, N. J., Oct. 25—(FP)—Two thousand pickets showed Air Associates Inc., on Oct. 23, what labor thinks of the firm's defiance of the Natl. Defense Mediation Board. The board's proposal for settlement of the strike was accepted Oct. 10 by the CIO United Automobile, Aircraft & Agricultural Implement Workers, but was rejected by the company.

Members of more than 40 northern New Jersey CIO locals marched in the half-mile picket line, despite a ban on mass picketing by Sheriff William R. Browne. Earlier police had blocked off the section of Route 2 before the plant. No strikebreakers were allowed to enter, and the factory, which had been partly operated by scabs, was completely shut down. Later in the day strikebreakers were taken to the plant in trucks.

Pickets carried signs denouncing Company Pres. F. Leroy Hill, who has brazenly refused to accept the NLRB peace plan. One sign, bearing a big swastika, said: "Hill Hitler." Another asked: "Why doesn't the FBI investigate Hill?" while a third read: "Don't let Hill hinder defense."

PLEDGE SUPPORT

Union delegates from northern New Jersey's most important industrial plants pledged their support of the strikers through a sound truck. Between speeches, union songs were played, with the pickets joining in.

One of the speakers was Peter Flynn, local president of the Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers at the Federal Shipbuilding & Drydock Co., whose Kearny plant was taken over by the Government after refusal to accept an NDMB settlement.

"We beat U. S. Steel (parent company of Federal), and we can certainly beat this picayune Hitler," Flynn said.

Similar mass picket lines will be held regularly until the walk-out is settled. As one speaker put it: "The Air Associates strike has become a national issue."

The NDMB plan that aroused Hill's wrath called for immediate reinstatement of all strikers, pending further negotiations. Hill countered by offering to reinstate only 20 of the 200 strikers and to rehire the others as vacancies occurred. Then the NDMB went over the company president's head and summoned the board of directors, which offered to reinstate the strikers to some kind of job within 30 days.

Win Third Textile Pay Raise

DURHAM, N. C., Oct. 25—Wage increases averaging three cents an hour, plus a Christmas bonus, were negotiated today by the Textile Workers Union of America with the Erwin Mills company for 5,800 workers at the Cooleemee, Erwin, and Durham, N. C., plants.

The wage adjustments amount to an 8½% increase and will add approximately half a million dollars to the workers' pay checks during the coming year.

The wage settlement sets a [illegible] cent minimum in each mill and 40 cent minimum for work outside the plant. It raises the average wage in the company's three plants to almost 50 cents.

CHRISTMAS BONUSES

The Christmas bonus will be 2 1/3% of each worker's earnings during the past year and will amount in most cases to over a week's wages.

The wage raise, which was made retroactive to last Monday, provides hourly increases ranging from 2½ to 11½ cents. A flat 4 cent hourly increase was negotiated for all fixers and section men.

This is the third increase TWUA has negotiated with the Erwin chain of mills this year. A 2½-cent hourly raise was negotiated by the CIO union in April and another 2-cent increase in July—making a total increase this year of around 7½ cents hourly for all workers.

All six plants of the Erwin Mills company are under contract with TWUA.

The wage conference was led for TWUA by Roy R. Lawrence, Southeastern director, who was assisted by H. D. Lisk, Durham TWUA Representative, and Ed Witt, Erwin TWUA Representative.

Home Council Honors Lewis

Springfield, Ill., Oct. 25 — John L. Lewis was honored by the Industrial Union Council of his home city at its last meeting, when the Springfield Council elected him as its delegate to the forthcoming convention of the CIO.

Lewis' work in forming the CIO was praised by Harry Smith, delegate of Local 7840, United Mine Workers of America, in his nominating speech. He nominated the UMW president as "the friend of the underprivileged and labor's champion, John L. Lewis".

The nomination was seconded by Dominic Teneski, a member of Lewis' own Local Union 764, UMWA, and was unanimously approved by the Council, with Jack Pollett in the chair.

At the same meeting, the OPM and Sidney Hillman were condemned for denying construction contracts to the CIO in favor of the AFL.

Clothing Union Wins Employers' Pledge On Insurance, Health Plans

NEW YORK, Oct. 27—The Amalgamated Clothing Workers and the Clothing Manufacturers of the U. S. A. have agreed in principle upon a comprehensive life insurance and sick benefit fund covering 140,000 clothing workers in the principal centers of the industry, the ACW announced this week.

"It is understood that, while the plan has not yet fully crystallized, clothing manufacturers have offered to pay two per cent of their weekly pay roll into a fund that would yield $5,000,000 annually for insurance purposes," the union stated.

The effective date proposed by the manufacturers would be next May 15. Other details have not yet been worked out. In addition to a proposal providing a $500 payment to beneficiaries of a deceased union member, the proposed scheme would grant a schedule of sick benefits for a 13 to 15 week period.

"The agreement in principle is an outgrowth of extended negotiations between the union and the association since last Spring. It follows the establishment of a life insurance and sick benefit fund in the Chicago clothing market where the scheme was first tested and is now in operation."

CIO Launches Big Oil Drive

E. S. Smith To Direct Campaign

WASHINGTON, Nov. 1—The CIO moved today to organize the half-million unorganized workers in the nation's great oil industry.

Pres. Philip Murray and Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers Intl. Union announced the signing of an agreement for the $200,000 joint drive, to be financed by the CIO and the union. Named director of the organizational campaign was Edwin S. Smith, former member of the National Labor Relations Board.

Pres. Murray, in revealing the plans for the drive, pointed out that the "oil industry is the last of the basic mass production industries that still remains substantially unorganized."

FIGHTS STEEL TRUST: Pres. John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers, CIO, shown as he read to Washington newspapermen a letter to the President suggesting that J. P. Morgan was the man behind U. S. Steel's reluctance to grant a union shop contract to 53,000 workers in Big Steel's coal mines.

UMW Union Shop Plea To Full Mediation Board; Lewis Sets Nov. 15 Deadline

(See Story Page Three)

WASHINGTON, Oct. 31—Workers in the captive mines owned by steel companies returned to work today following a three-day stoppage called to bring the mines under the union shop contract in force in all other coal operations.

The announcement of the return to work was made by United Mine Workers President John L. Lewis, who recommended approval of a proposal by President Roosevelt to resume work pending final recommendations of the full National Defense Mediation Board. The UMW set a November 15 deadline.

Lewis' announcement came after two days of conferences with Myron C. Taylor, representing the U. S. Steel Corporation, and a meeting with President Roosevelt in the White House.

Earlier Lewis had sharply criticized the Mediation Board for failing to recommend the union shop clause in its first report, had urged the President to seek concessions from J. P. Morgan, whom he described as dominating the Steel Corporation, and had pointed out that the stoppage was the result of four months of stalling by the steel corporations.

The full meeting of the Board was scheduled as The CIO NEWS went to press. Lewis' statement praised the cooperation and statesmanship of Taylor, recalling that he and Taylor had negotiated once before on the captive mine situation and in connection with the CIO steel contract.

AFL LEADER ON TRIAL

Bioff Just 'Ran Errands' With Cash, Jury Told!

NEW YORK, Nov. 1—Willie Bioff, convicted panderer and boss of the AFL stage hands union in Hollywood, took the stand in a New York federal court this week to portray himself as a simple little fellow always anxious to run errands on request of movie corporation heads.

Bioff and George Browne, head of the Intl. Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes, are on trial for extorting $550,000 from four movie companies during a period of several years. Browne, a former vice-president of the AFL, proved too notorious for even the federation's executive council, and he was scuttled at the recent AFL convention in Seattle.

Bioff was momentarily embarassed when he had to confess on the stand that he has lied under oath in previous court cases. But after recovering his aplomb, Willie told the jury that he had never received bribes from top figures in the movie industry, which is under closed shop contract with Bioff's outfit.

The AFL boss explained with touching sincerity his reason for picking up black bags full of money from hotel room beds, while the film bosses conveniently looked out the window. He told the court he was merely acting as a messenger boy, carrying $1,000,000 for Joseph Schenck of 20th Century-Fox to various people in various cities.

As a messenger boy, Willie Bioff was probably the highest paid in the world. He testified he received 1,000 shares of stock in the film firm after carrying the money for Schenck; that Schenck once gave him $8,000 in "poker winnings," and that his expenses were paid on vacation trips to South America and Europe.

Earlier in the trial heads of a number of the film companies testified of their fear of bodily injury from Bioff's thugs if they failed to meet his demands. Bioff originally asked for two million dollars from the movie bosses, the court was told, but later came down to a lesser figure. Bioff threatened to call strikes to enforce his graft demands, the jury heard.

Ask Raises

Washington, Nov. 1—The United Federal Workers of America today called upon the Railroad Retirement Board to grant immediately raises due Board employes under the Mead-Ramspeck automatic promotions act. The union will continue to press a suit demanding payment, contending that the law's wording makes raises mandatory as of October 1.

GLAMOR PICKETS: While members of the United Mine Workers closed down captive coal mines when the wealthy steel companies refused their demand for the union shop, these pretty New York girls—also members of the UMW, through its District 50—did a bit of picketing, too. They're on the line in front of Helena Rubenstein's ritzy beauty salon on Manhattan's Fifth Avenue. The big cosmetics firm has refused to bargain with District 50.

Textile Union Wins Elections

NEW YORK, Nov. 1—Victory in two National Labor Relations Board elections by a total vote of 1,415 to 807 was announced today by the Textile Workers Union.

Involved were the Bates Mfg. Co., of Lewiston, Me., and the Bradford Mill of the American Woolen Co., of Louisville, Ky., according to TWU President Emil Rieve.

The Bates workers voted 981 to 559 for TWU, making this sheeting mill the fourth large textile factory in Lewiston to choose TWU as bargaining agency.

TWU Director George Jabar will proceed immediately to negotiate a contract.

11TH OF FIRM'S PLANTS

The Bradford election was won 434 to 248 for "no union." The mill was the eleventh in American Woolen to choose the TWU as bargaining agent.

Rieve said that negotiations will begin at once for the application to the Bradford mill of the master agreement already in effect at the other 10 mills, employing 20,000 workers, and located at:

Wood and Ayer, Lawrence, Mass.; Skowhegan and Pittsfield, Maine; Dover, N. H.; Maynard, Plymouth and Webster, Mass.; Norwich, Conn., and Manton, R. I.

Electrical Union Head Says:

'Labor Must Fight For All-Out Production'

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Nov. 1—In his first major address since his election as president of the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers of America, Albert J. Fitzgerald told 6,000 members of his union meeting here that labor cannot wait for either management or government to build the national unity necessary to defeat Hitler. The unions must "build this partnership plant by plant, town by town, until we have a solid structure of partnership embracing the whole of industry" he said,

President-elect Fitzgerald, who officially assumes office on November 1, was the principal labor speaker at the mass meeting which was the climax of "UE Defense Day" for the more than 35,000 members of the union in the Pittsburgh area. About 75 percent of these union men and women are working on defense orders.

FUTURE AT STAKE

"If we fail to defeat Hitler," Fitzgerald said, "then all our concern about wages, hours, business, profits, taxes and prices and all those things—all will be meaningless."

Production of defense materials, the speaker continued, is one urgent necessity; the other is that "these defense materials, once we of the shops have turned them out, must be placed speedily and in large quantities in the hands of the men and women who are doing the fighting."

But national production of armaments, Fitzgerald declared, is not increasing rapidly enough. He said that although the nation should be producing at the rate of 20 billion a year, the actual armaments turned out totaled about 5 billion a year at present.

The reason, Fitzgerald said, is that "labor and the men and women of labor are not yet real, full partners in the shaping and execution of these great enterprises. Management is a partner. Government is the 'senior partner.' But the fact that all of us have to face here tonight is the fact that labor has not yet been accepted into such a partnership."

Pass Price Control Bill, Textile Union Head Urges

BOSTON, Nov. 1—Immediate passage of the Price and Rent Control Bill now before Congress, as a bulwark against inflation, was urged this week by Emil Rieve, national CIO vice president and president of the Textile Workers Union of America.

Speaking at a state-wide protest meeting against the rising cost of living and under joint CIO-AFL sponsorship, Rieve said:

"Whatever financial benefits organized workers have thus far received through stimulated production for defense will be more than offset when the first flush is over, and taxation, higher prices, higher rents and the numerous other sacrifices that shall be requested, will have overtaken us.

"Already the cost of living is eight per cent higher than it was when war broke out in Europe two years ago," Rieve declared.

Stating that "it is no more reasonable to legislate wages than to legislate dividends," Rieve said that "Great Britain, desperately at war, has adopted the control of prices, but it has not seen fit to control wages."

"The greatest influence upon labor's demand for future wage increases will be to arrest the rising cost of living," Rieve said. "Labor's future demands will be predicated upon the cost of living and upon unwarranted or excessive profits.

"I cannot but consider the agitation for wage control to be anything more than a campaign to curb the freedom of labor without moral or factual justification for such a course," he declared.

Fake Plane Union Crashes

Bridgeport, Conn., Nov. 1—A company union at the Vought-Sikorsky aircraft plant has been dissolved, clearing the way for an immediate action on a petition by the CIO United Automobile Workers for a Labor Board election.

The UAW-CIO had filed evidence with the Board showing that the so-called independent union was "a creature of the company." In the face of this evidence, UAW officials stated, the company outfit was hastily dissolved.

In order to avoid protracted hearings which might have delayed an election at the plant for several months, the UAW agreed to a stipulation requiring the company to post notices disavowing the "independent." The Board is expected to call an election shortly.

Dalrymple, Payne On Mediation Board

Washington, Nov. 1—Appointment of two CIO union officials to act as additional alternate labor representatives on the National Mediation Board were annonced today.

CIO Vice-President S. H. Dalrymple, who heads the United Rubber Workers, and Vice-President Herbert W. Payne of the Textile Workers Union were named to the posts by President Roosevelt.

George Googe, southern representative of the AFL and Vice-President W. A. Calvin of the AFL Boiler Makers were also appointed. New alternate members representing the public include Wayne L. Morse, dean of the University of Oregon Law School, who has long been arbitrator under the CIO west coast longshoremen's contract; President Ernest Hopkins of Dartmouth College, Hanover, N. H., and Francis Adams, attorney, of New York City.

Employer alternate members added to the Board are M. E. Leeds of the Leeds & Northrup Co., Philadelphia; A. B. MacBeth of the Union Oil Co., Los Angeles F. D. MacIver of the Phoenix Hosiery Co., Milwaukee, and Frederick S. Fales, former vice-president of the Socony-Vacuum Corp., New York.

Appointment of the new members brings to 41 the total of members and alternate members of the Mediation Board.

Congressional Tories Boom Anti-Labor Bills

WASHINGTON, Nov. 1—Congress was off in full cry this week for drastic anti-strike legislation and other bills to hamstring unions, seizing on the captive mine coal stoppage as excuse for new outbursts of oratory on old themes.

Sen. Harry F. Byrd, who hails from the polltax state of Virginia, refused to wait even for the Senate to open the following morning before rushing into print with a long statement calling for abolition of the right to strike.

Sen. Allen J. Ellender, Louisiana, followed this up with a similar outburst, choosing the note of solemn warning to American workers as his theme. Do not "force" Congress to take away your rights, Ellender pleaded, by going on strike or making "unjustifiable" demands on employers.

An anti-strike amendment tacked onto the debate on revision of the Neutrality Act was the method chosen by Sen. Josiah Bailey of North Carolina—also a polltax state—who called for a $10,000 fine and five years in jail for anyone who directs, orders, urges, etc., anyone else to "do any act or omit any act," etc., which would impair or hold up production.

As a matter of fact, new bills are hardly needed, as has been obligingly pointed out by the newspapers and as Congressmen like Gene Cox of Georgia, another polltaxer, have hastened to remember. The original Vinson bill, pushed aside when the play was to get the May-Connally amendments through (they were killed by CIO pressure) can be taken out of the morgue at any time. The Vinson bill, it will be remembered, calls for a lengthy "cooling-off" period and has other repressive features.

The Ball bill, also a "cooling-off" measure, is in a state of suspended animation and can be brought back to life if necessary. And there's a flood of other measures either still in the dream stage in Congressmen's minds or actually on paper that would destroy the right to strike, put militant union leaders behind bars, bring fantastic charges of "sabotage" against pickets, strikers and union members in general.

WAGE CONTROL TOO

Failing these, there's always the threat of wage control measures that can be tacked on the price control bill, which is now entering its third month of hearings. Wage control, by freezing wages at arbitrarily predetermined levels, would, as CIO Pres. Murray has pointed out, nullify the whole process of collective bargaining.

Prior to this recent wave of anti-labor hysteria, Congress has been fairly quiet in recent weeks. That's no indication, however, that all these anti-union proposals will not be brought back to life—and some more, too, if the polltaxers and the rest of the reactionaries on the Hill feel they can get away with it.

Vigilantes Fail To Halt CIO Cotton Seed Oil Strikes

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Nov. 1—Vigilante activity and other forms of terrorism have failed to halt the swift pace of organization in the open-shop cottonseed oil and cotton compress industry around Memphis, where large nationally known corporations for years have paid starvation wages to their employes.

Organizational work by the CIO United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing and Allied Workers of America is reaching a high point at more than a dozen plants within a hundred mile radius of this city with the greatest activity now centered on four plants operated by Armour & Co. at Memphis and Jackson, Tennessee and Pine Bluff and Forrest City, Arkansas.

The two Tennessee plants of the firm were struck two weeks ago when company representatives attempted to stall the opening of contract negotiations until after their busy season had ended.

STOPPED WORK OCT. 13

Work was stopped in the Memphis plant on October 13 and the Jackson plant was shut down four days later. Both plants have remained completely shut down with the strikes 100 per cent effective.

Wages paid by Armour at the four plants frequently have been in violation of the Federal Wage Hour Act with skilled mechanics getting as little as 30 cents per hour and working as high as 72 hours a week. Basic wages for common labor in the plants averaged around 35 cents per hour but time and one-half was not paid for overtime in many instances.

WAGE DEMANDS

Union requests on the firm include wage increases of 15 to 35 cents for hourly workers and 20 to 25 per cent increases for salaried employes, a closed shop, full seniority rights, grievance machinery and check-off of dues.

Another high spot of the UCAPAWA campaign is a National Labor Relations Board Election in two plants of the Buckeye Cotton Oil Company in Memphis, Tenn., a subsidiary of the Proctor and Gamble Soap Corp. More than 1100 Buckeye employes will choose between the CIO and a company union.

Wage increases of two and one-half to four cents were added to an already existing contract with the DeSoto Cotton Oil Company and rates of pay at the Federal Compress Company and the Tri-State Compress ompany were boosted two and one-half cents per hour—a midyear increase.

STRIKE IN SOUTH: Fighting a wage scale that averages around 35 to 40 cents an hour, members of the CIO Cannery & Agricultural Workers went on strike at the Memphis Cotton Oil Co. at Memphis and Jackson, Tenn. A 24-hour picket line is keeping seed trucks out of the plants, which belong to a subsidiary of Armour & Co., big meat-packing firm.

Seamen Win $10 Increase

NEW YORK, Nov. 1—A $10-a-month increase in base pay for all unlicensed personnel of 28 major American steamship lines was won this week by the National Maritime Union in contract renewal negotiations.

NMU Pres. Joseph Curran announced that the new agreement also provides for five cents an hour increase in overtime pay, bringing this to 85 cents.

CUTS 'SPREAD'

The pact cuts the "spread" of stewards' working hours. They now will work nine hours in every 13 instead of every 14, per day.

The agreement provides that steamship operators must call the hiring hall for all members of the stewards department. Formerly certain "key men" could be "hired off the dock."

President Curran hailed signature of the new contract as a victory for national defense, stressing the fact that it was consumated by collective bargaining without strike or mediation.

Wisconsin CIO Opens Convention

Milwaukee, Wis., Oct. 31—Delegates from all parts of Wisconsin met at the Hotel Pfister here yesterday for the fourth annual convention of the state's Industrial Union Council.

Meeting prior to the convention, the IUC council suggested that the convention concern itself with the problem of obtaining full potential use of Wisconsin's manpower and production capacity to aid the defense program.

NEED MORE JOBS

Emphasizing the need for greater employment and higher production, Pres. Harvey Kitzman declared:

"Our workers want jobs, they want to help in defense, and in many cases these jobs are held up by management through fear that if they retool their plants they will be at a disadvantage later."

Emil Costello, member of the council executive board pointed out that "man hours lost in strikes are nothing compared to the man-hours to be lost now due to poor planning, lack of planning, or lack of interest in defense on the part of management and its representatives in high government positions."

Metal Miners Back Murray For Re-election

Denver, Nov. 1—Re-election of Philip Murray as CIO President was urged today by the International Executive Board of the International Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers.

Murray's support of all-out aid to Great Britain and the Soviet Union and the IUMM&SW convention position along the same lines were declared to be determining factors in the Board's decision.

Further indicating support of the defense program, the Board authorized the purchase of $5,000 worth of defense savings bonds, recommending similar action to the union's membership.

Textile Union Backs Murray, Carey

New York, Nov. 1.—Re-election of Philip Murray as CIO president and James B. Carey as CIO secretary was unanimously endorsed this week by the Executive Council of the Textile Workers Union, Pres. Emil Rieve announced today.

Win Increase

Toledo, Ohio—Members of the CIO Oil Workers International Union gained a 5-cent hourly wage increase in recent negotiations here. The raise is retroactive to Sept. 1.

Lewis Accepts Proposal For Mediation Board Study of Union Demands

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, Oct. 31—Fifty-three thousand workers employed in the captive mines returned to work today following the recommendation of United Mine Workers President John L. Lewis, after a three-day stoppage to bring the steel corporation-owned mines into line with the union shop agreement covering all other coal operations.

President Lewis' recommendation was announced after approval of UMW officials from the districts affected by the stoppage, and was based on a proposal made by President Roosevelt to reopen the mines pending final recommendations of the full National Defense Mediation Board, meeting here as THE CIO NEWS went to press.

Lewis announced the return to work following two days of meetings with Myron C. Taylor, representing the captive mine owners, a White House meeting with President Roosevelt, and conferences with William H. Davis, head of the Mediation Board.

"I have to announce that the United Mine Workers on my recommendation have accepted the arrangement made in President Roosevelt's letter to Mr. Davis," Lewis told newsmen after meeting with Taylor. "The miners will return to work as fast as arrangements can be made locally. In some instances the night shift will return tonight and production will be resumed."

Lewis praised Taylor for his part in the negotiations leading to the resumption of work, declaring: "Once again Mr. Taylor and I have been able to render service at a time of great national interest and in a manner that secured the gracious approval of the President of the United States.

"It may be recalled that seven years ago Mr. Taylor and I settled the captive mine situation of 1934" he continued. "In later years we negotiated the contract in the steel industry. At that time I said that Mr. Taylor was an industrial statesman of far-seeing vision. I reiterate that today and express my gratitude that the problem is on its way to settlement without substantial inconvenience to the defense program."

MURRAY STATEMENT

In a statement issued from his offices in Pittsburgh, Philip Murray, president of the CIO and vice-president of the Mine Workers, pointed out that the UMWA has "exercised every degree of patience and tolerance in this situation," and that the position of the union "is sound from every reasonable and logical standpoint."

"Over 90 per cent of the coal industry has already subscribed to and accepted, through the process of voluntary collective bargaining, the union shop," he declared. "There is no moral reason for the owners of the captive mines in this situation to withhold acceptance of the provisions of the commercial agreement. I am convinced their attitude is one of positive evasion."

The stoppage began after more than four months of negotiations with the steel corporations owning the captive mines, Lewis pointed out when the miners quit the pits Monday, Oct. 27, and after expiration of a 30 day truce agreed upon to allow the National Defense Mediation Board to attempt to find a settlement.

Answering appeals by President Roosevelt to reopen the mines in the interest of national defense, Lewis pointed out that the attitude of the Board "has been casual and lackadaisical to the point of indifference."

Lewis's reply came after a letter from the White House urging the UMWA to reopen the mines and inviting him to meet with Taylor as representatives of the steel corporations.

"The Board now emerges with a report devoid of conclusions as to merit, evasive of the responsibilities of the Board, and dumps its own sorry mess into the already over-burdened lap of the Chief Executive," he wrote in reply to the President's first letter.

In this letter Lewis also charged Sidney Hillman, associate director general of OPM, with being "responsible for the fantastic procedure that has been followed," and with being motivated by "vengeful and malignant opposition to the interests of the United Mine Workers of America."

Edwin S. Smith To Direct Big CIO Drive In Oil

WASHINGTON, Nov. 1—The CIO this week announced the launching of a major organizing campaign among the 500,000 workers in the nation's oil industry, and revealed the appointment of Edwin S. Smith, former member of the National Labor Relations Board, as director of the campaign.

Announcement of the campaign was made in a joint statement by CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers Intl. Union.

The two officials said the drive would reach into all oil centers throughout the nation, with particular stress being placed on the giant Standard Oil Company—keystone of the Rockefeller fortune. Standard employs some 65,000 workers.

Authorization for launching the $200,000 organizing drive in co-operation with the CIO was voted at the convention of the oil workers' union in Baton Rouge, La., last September. An assessment to finance the campaign has since been ratified by the union's locals. The campaign will be financed jointly by the CIO and the oil union.

Smith has established headquarters at the Stoneleigh Court building, Connecticut Ave., Washington, D. C. His appointment to the organizing position came just two months after his five-year term on the National Labor Relations Board expired. A consistent supporter of industrial union principles, Smith has gained a high reputation as a courageous fighter for labor's rights.

In announcing the organizing campaign, Murray and OWIU President Knight declared:

"An agreement has today been signed between the Oil Workers' International Union and the Congress of Industrial Organizations

CIO Leads AFL, 4-1, In Polls

WASHINGTON, Nov. 1—Nearly four times as many workers voted for CIO unions as for AFL unions in recent elections won by the two groups, according to figures released by the National Labor Relations Board this week.

The CIO carried a total of 11,143 votes cast in 47 elections won by CIO unions, to 3,265 total votes cast in 41 elections won by AFL groups. Most of these polls were held during the latter part of September.

The total number of votes won by independent unions or employe representation plants in successful eletctions was 3,721.

MORE VICTORIES

In a previous release covering elections conducted mostly the first two weeks in September, Board figures revealed that 19,360 workers voted for the CIO to 5,741 for the AFL in elections won respectively by the two groups.

This makes a total of some 30,500 votes cast for the CIO in successful elections to 9,000 for the AFL in elections conducted during a period of approximately a month.

5,800 Strike N. Y. Shipyard

Brooklyn, N. Y., Nov. 1—The National Defense Mediation Board reported "halting" progress today in efforts to settle a five-day old strike at the Robins Dry Dock & Repair Co., subsidiary of Todd Shipyards Corp.

The peaceful walkout, involving 5,800 workers, was called October 27 by Local 39, Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, after the firm had refused wage increases agreed upon in negotiations, the union said.

100% EFFECTIVE

IUMSWA President John Green, said the strike, which was 100 per cent effective, had the full support of the national office.

The shipyard's wage scales are the lowest in the Port of New York and possibly in the entire country, according to Regional Director Joseph Burge. He said negotiated wage increases would total about $10,000 a week for 5,000 of the yard's employes.

Burge said that union pickets would allow workers to make repairs at once on any of the 14 merchant ships tied up by the strike if the ships were needed by the U. S. Navy. He declared the union "welcomes the intervention of the National Defense Mediation Board" and is "perfectly willing to have that agency use its good offices to settle the dispute."

Goodyear Signs Pact

Akron, Ohio, Nov. 1—Negotiations for a contract with the powerful Goodyear Rubber Co., in progress for the past several weeks, ended today with the signing of an agreement, it was announced today by the CIO United Rubber Workers of America.

The pacts cover Goodyear plants in Akron, Cumberland, Md., and Los Angeles. A fourth agreement for the Goodyear plant at Jackson, Mich., is now being negotiated.

The contracts, first in the history of the corporation, provide sizeable pay increases and improved working conditions.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

THE whipping-boy who had to take all the paddlings that were coming to an unspankable princeling was fortunate as compared to American labor today.

All the whipping-boy had to worry about was the misdoings of one royal brat. But American labor is made the scapegoat, by press and politicians, for every sin of defense sabotage committed by a swarm of parasitic profiteers, fumbling bureaucrats and all-around obstructionists in positions of power.

Big business interests can hold up the defense program for months until guaranteed tremendous profits. No sign of "public" excitement.

Bottlenecks and shortages cutting possible production almost in half can be created by grabbing dollar-a-year men and their bureaucratic buddies. The "public" is not supposed to be interested.

Profiteers can fatten to a disgusting degree by taking advantage of their country's need. They can deny fair wages, refuse collective bargaining and reject governmental recommendations. A few taps on the wrist maybe, but mostly yawning silence.

But let a labor union go on strike, no matter what the provocation, and all the press and political puppets of the profiteers set to work to whip up a public frenzy of denunciation and threats.

Like tyrants who instigate pogroms against the Jews to divert popular discontent from themselves, the real saboteurs of national defense see a golden opportunity to cover up their own profiteering and obstructions by creating a lynch hysteria against labor.

If the above may seem exaggeration, consider the snarling savagery with which nearly the whole press turned upon the United Mine Workers of America and labor generally in connection with the captive mine stoppage.

The fact of the matter is that the UMWA for many long months had been patiently working to bring a minority of captive coal mine operators into line with the union shop procedures of the rest of the industry.

In the interests of maintaining defense production, the union had shown extraordinary forebearance. But this attitude was not shared by the Morgan interests directing the anti-labor strategy of the captive mine operators.

These interests took advantage of the union's and the country's concern for uninterrupted defense production to insist on special privileges for themselves.

They have sought to maintain a small sector of open shoppery in a union shop industry, with long-range anti-union plans in mind. (Labor has not forgotten the open shop drive that followed the last war).

Yet when this obstinate insistence on special open shop privileges, coupled with governmental failure to require a fair settlement, provoked the captive mine stoppage, labor was made the public whipping-boy for every crime against defense of the bunglers, profiteers and selfish open-shoppers.

Here are a few more facts about the captive mine situation, made public by Pres. John L. Lewis of the UMWA.

Out of nearly 100 million tons of captive mine production, 60 million tons are produced by companies which accepted the standard union shop agreement some time ago. The steel subsidiaries which provoked the stoppage are a minority even in this minority sector of the coal industry.

Defense production was not endangered by the stoppage, seeing that the companies prepared for it by setting aside huge stores of coal. Threats of immediate curtailment of steel production were made chiefly for pressure and publicity purposes.

Furthermore, Lewis proposed to make good any need for additional coal that might arise from the stoppage by recommending to the Mine Workers that they make up the lost production by working additional days each week, after the settlement.

The CIO and its unions represent the workers who actually perform most of the country's defense production. They also represent the people who are most concerned with the defense of democracy which is the declared purpose of the defense program.

The patriotism of the CIO and its members is beyond all comparison greater than that of the profiteers and anti-labor politicians who see in the defense emergency only an opportunity to make a financial killing and to destroy labor's rights.

This patriotism is reflected in the day-to-day labors of millions of union members, in the substantial degree of industrial peace preserved by collective bargaining, in the constructive plans advanced by the CIO for all-out production, and in hundreds of other ways.

On Stoppages

The captive mine stoppage was provoked by a minority of open shoppers who have demanded special favors at the national expense by refusing to comply with the labor procedures in effect throughout all the rest of the coal industry.

No immediate threat to defense production was involved, because the companies prepared for the struggle they provoked by laying in large extra stocks of coal. Moreover Pres. John L. Lewis of the Mine Workers offered to make up any lost production by recommending additional working days after a settlement.

If concern for defense production were the real motive for the hullaballoo arising out of this situation, one might expect (1) that chief public pressure would be directed at the Morgan interests responsible for the stoppage; and (2) that chief public attention would be directed to the causes of really serious interferences with defense production.

Neither this nor any of the other relatively few strikes that have occurred since the defense program was launched has held up production anywhere near as much as have the unnecessary shortages in aluminum and other basic materials; the sitdowns of big business to insure inordinate profits; and the general lack of effective planning.

The chief cause of all these really serious stoppages, resulting in idleness of millions of workers and of a very large part of our productive facilities, is the coddling of selfish monopoly interests and the refusal to take labor into full partnership.

Yet the whole fury of the current press and political propaganda campaign is directed against labor, and practically no attention is devoted to the real causes of lagging defense production.

The CIO on the other hand, shows genuine concern for the defense program by constantly calling attention to the real obstructions; and by promoting constructive proposals, like Pres. Philip Murray's industry council plan, for full and expanding production.

The Oil Drive

The great organizing campaigns of the CIO in the basic mass-production industries have made labor history. They have succeeded to a degree that few dared to hope when the movement was first launched. They have brought higher wages, greater security and better conditions to millions who never knew what a union was before.

Nor does the CIO rest on its oars. The successful conclusion of each campaign has been followed by the launching of new campaigns. So it is that the recent outstanding achievements of the CIO in organizing the Ford workers and the employes of the "Little Steel" companies is now to be followed by a new and large-scale campaign to organize the oil industry.

An agreement has been signed between the Oil Workers International Union and the CIO whereby the organization of this basic industry's half million workers will become a major task of the whole movement.

CIO Pres. Murray, OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight and Edwin S. Smith, director of the drive, have all noted the particular significance of this campaign at the present time. It will not only give the oil workers an opportunity to improve their conditions and their status through collective bargaining, they point out, but it will also enable them to make their full contribution to democratic national defense.

The whole CIO wishes good luck and speedy success to this most important organizing campaign.

Unrepresented

The conferences of the International Labor Organization are supposed to bring together representatives of government, labor and employers from the participating countries to discuss labor matters.

The emphasis is on labor, as the very name of the organization indicates. And if labor is not properly represented, the conferences lose most of their meaning.

Yet, the United States delegation to the ILO conference in New York this year includes no representative of the major body of American organized labor in the basic and defense industries. Government and employers are fully represented but the sole labor delegate is an AFL man.

Pres. Philip Murray and Secretary James B. Carey have protested vigorously against this denial to a great labor movement but it is also a slight to the ILO itself, to close the door to that section of labor which is most concerned in and has most to contribute to the conference.

MINERS' STRIKE:

Text of Lewis' Letter, Murray Statement

Following is the full text of the letter sent by Pres. John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers to President Roosevelt on Oct. 27:

Your letter at hand.

I have no wish to betray those whom I represent. There is yet no question of patriotism or national security involved in this dispute.

For four months, the steel companies have been whetting their knives and preparing for this struggle. They have increased coal storage and marshalled all their resources. Defense output is not impaired, and will not be impaired for an indefinite period. This fight is only between a labor union and a ruthless corporation—the United States Steel Corporation.

Lest we forget, I reassert the loyalty of the members of the United Mine Workers of America as citizens of our republic. This Union gave seventy thousand of its members to the armed forces of the United States in the last World War. The per capita purchases of war securities by its members during that period exceeded those of any other segment of our national population. They are willing, when required, to make equal or greater sacrifices in the future to preserve the nation and its free institutions.

ADVERSARY IS MORGAN

If you would use the power of the State to restrain me, as an agent of labor, then, Sir, I submit that you should use that same power to restrain my adversary in this issue, who is an agent of capital. My adversary is a rich man named Morgan, who lives in New York.

You are aware that twice on Saturday I talked on the telephone with Mr. Taylor in New York; that I urged he meet me on Sunday, so that the mines could work Monday, that Mr. Taylor refused to meet me on Sunday, or Monday or Tuesday, suggesting a meeting Wednesday; that Mr. Taylor's reason was that the Board of Directors of United States Steel Corporation would meet Tuesday in New York; that this Board of Directors would determine whether or not Mr. Taylor, in behalf of the Corporation, would accept or reject the Appalachian Agreement when he and I meet on Wednesday.

MORGAN ON BOARD

There are sixteen members of the Board. of Directors of the United States Steel Corporation. Mr. J. P. Morgan is a member of the Board. Mr. Morgan determines who else shall sit on the Board. Mr. Morgan dominates the Board. Mr. Morgan will decide what Mr. Taylor will do when he meets me Wednesday. Mr. Morgan's great wealth is increasing from his profits on defense orders. Mr. Morgan has a responsibility at least equal to my own. Mr. Morgan should be asked to make a contribution. I submit, Mr. President, that it is not unreasonable to ask Mr. Morgan's companies to accept the wage agreement approved by the National Defense Mediation Board, and accepted and signed by other captive and commercial coal companies in the nation.

EASILY SETTLED

You know, Sir, that I am to meet Mr. Myron C. Taylor at 10:00 o'clock Wednesday morning. This is the hour and the date fixed by him. If Mr. Morgan will permit Mr. Taylor to accept the Appalachian Agreement like all other coal operators, then the business can be disposed of in ten minutes and coal production resumed on Thursday. No impairment of defense production will have taken place; but if the country needs additional coal by reason of such brief stoppage, I will recommend to the Mine Workers that they make up the lost production by working additional days each week, until the lost production is regained.

In the interest of settlement, I would be glad, Mr. President, if you concur, to meet with you and my adversary, Mr. J. P. Morgan, for a forthright discussion of the equities of this problem.

Respectfully yours

Following is the full text of a statement by CIO Pres. Philip Murray on the captive coal mine strike:

By virtue of my position as president of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, I wish to make public my own opinion concerning the present captive mine controversy. In so doing it should be understood that there is no one in the nation more anxious to promote the production of materials essential to national defense than I.

Over 90 per cent of the coal industry has already subscribed to and accepted, through the processes of collective bargaining and voluntary agreement, the union shop. There is no moral reason for the owners of captive mines in this situation to withhold acceptance of the provisions of the commercial agreement. I am convinced their attitude is one of positive evasion.

"CLOAK OF DEFENSE"

The cloak of national defense used by these large corporations to escape responsibility, is no justification for their refusal to accept the provisions of the Appalachian agreement. These have already been accepted by a number of captive mines owned by steel companies. The position of the United Mine Workers of America, therefore, is sound from every reasonable and logical standpoint.

It was my conviction when the original Appalachian contract was accepted last June by the coal operators, that the captive mine owners were at that time prepared to subscribe to and accept it.

The maintenance of the integrity of labor unions in America is an integral part of national defense and the preservation of democracy. The United Mine Workers have exercised every degree of patience and tolerance in this situation. The record will show that negotiations with the captive mine owners have been going on directly and indirectly since the beginning of last March.

Captive Coal Mine Walkout Halted As Lewis OK's Truce

reopening of the mines on the ground that production is "essential to the preservation of our freedoms yours and mine; those freedoms on which the very existence of the United Mine Workers of America depends," Lewis wrote reasserting the loyalty of the UMWA, and urging that J. P. Morgan, who he declared "dominates the board of the U. S. Steel Corp." be "asked to make a contribution" to a settlement.

"There are 16 members of the Board of Directors of the U. S. Steel Corp.," Lewis said. "Mr. J. P. Morgan is a member of the Board. Mr. Morgan determines who else shall sit on the Board. Mr. Morgan dominates the Board.

"Mr. Morgan has a responsibility at least equal to my own. Mr. Morgan should be asked to make a contribution. I submit, Mr. President, that it is not unreasonable to ask Mr. Morgan's companies to accept the wage agreement approved by the Natl. Defense Mediation Board, and accepted and signed by other captive and commercial coal companies in the nation."

DEFENSE NOT IMPAIRED

Lewis, in reaffirming the loyalty of the UMWA as shown by their record in the last World War and their willingness to "make equal or greater sacrifices in the future to preserve the nation," asserted that the defense program would not be impaired by the stoppage.

"For four months, the steel companies have been whetting their knives and preparing for this struggle," he wrote. "They have increased coal storage and marshalled all their resources. Defense output is not impaired and will not be impaired for an indefinite period. This fight is only between a labor union and a ruthless corporation—the U. S. Steel Corporation."

BOARD PROPOSAL

The original Mediation Board proposal which Lewis criticized did not recommend the union shop as the basis of settlement, though it did point out that the union shop governed 90 per cent of the nation's coal production. The proposal, made by Chairman Davis and Board Member Walter C. Teagle, drew a dissent from the third member of the panel, Hugh Lyons, CIO regional director in New England, who declared:

"I think that under the circumstances recited the United Mine Workers are entitled to demand and the operators should grant the signing of the Appalachian agreement without change."

The meeting called as the result of the UMWA acceptance of President Roosevelt's latest work resumption proposal will put the situtiion up to the full membership of the Board, of which CIO President Philip Murray and UMWA Secretary-Treasurer Thomas Kennedy are members.

Caviar, Pickles Unfair; CIO Strikes Vita-Food

New York, Nov. 1—If your taste runs to caviar, be sure it's not a Vita Food product.

The firm, which long denied union demands, was finally struck this week by the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing & Allied Workers. The company processes a variety of sea food, as well as dill pickles, olives and fancy cherries.

Union demands include $5 weekly wage increases, the closed shop and a one-year contract, while the company insists on a two-year agreement and only 5 cents an hour increase.

3,000 Vote To Join CIO

NEW YORK, Nov. 1—An independent group representing the 3,000 employes of the U. S. Naval Supply Depot voted by an overwhelming majority to join the United Federal Workers of America.

Some women workers in the Depot are paid as low as $16.21 a week. In an effort to raise pay, the union asked the commanding officer to appoint a wage survey committee, including union representatives, to lay a factual basis for increases.

CIO Launches Big Drive in Oil Industry

for the launching of an intensive and nationwide campaign, under CIO direction, to organize the 500,000 workers employed in all branches of the oil industry.

"By applying its modern principles of industrial organization, the CIO has succeeded in organizing more than 5,000,000 workers in all the major and previously unorganized mass production industries. The oil industry is the last of the basic mass production industries that still remains substantially unorganized.

"We are confident that the present campaign will be as successful as those now nearing completion in the Ford Motor Co. plants, the 'Little Steel' plants and other industries newly organized by the CIO.

WORKS UNDER MURRAY

"Mr. Edwin S. Smith, formerly a member of the National Labor Relations Board, has been appointed Director of the organizing drive. He will establish headquarters in Washington, D. C., and subject to the authority of the President of CIO will have full charge of the campaign and the direction of a nationwide organizing staff.

"All workers organized in the drive will become members of locals chartered by the Oil Workers International Union.

"The CIO is well aware that it is undertaking this major campaign at a time when the successful prosecution of the national defense program is of paramount importance to our country.

TREATED LIKE SERFS

"The oil workers of the nation are eager to do their full share in the defense effort, but they are handicapped in this so long as they are treated like voiceless serfs by the great non-union corporations.

"They urgently need the protection of a powerful industrial union to maintain and improve their wages and working conditions; to remedy their grievances and defend their rights; and to give them that democratic voice and representation without which they cannot make their full contribution to the successful prosecution of the defense program."

SMITH'S COMMENT

Smith issued the following statement upon his appointment:

"Unlike the great industries of coal, steel and automobiles, the empire of oil has still to accept the democratic rule of collective bargaining.

"The CIO proposes to organize the workers in the oil fields and refineries not merely to obtain for these workers a more equitable share of the wealth created by their toil. It is engaged in this campaign as a major contribution to the spirit and reality of democratic defense.

"The oil industry is ridden with paternalism. The CIO proposes to substitute for paternalism, however benevolent, an adult democratic relationship of equality between management and labor—the relationship embodied in collective bargaining.

"The American people are engaged in one of the greatest struggles in our history—the fight to protect our democratic institutions. Every ounce of strength and intelligence of all classes of our people is needed to bring this struggle to a successful conclusion.

"Adequate participation by labor in the defense effort and in the government's policy of aid to the enemies of Naziism is inconceivable without labor's having achieved a collective bargaining status with its employers. Such a status enables labor to plan and execute with management in an organized coherent way programs for labor's own economic protection and for furthering the defense effort in the present crisis.

"In an industry as essential to defense as oil, it is a mockery of of the democratic process for the oil workers not to be organized and in a position to play their basic part in the oil industry's contribution to our national needs."

FIGHT DOUBLE-CROSS: When Air Associates, Inc., Bendix, N. J., went back on its pledge to the Mediation Board to reinstate immediately several hundred CIO aviation union members to their jobs, New Jersey CIO turned out a mass picket line that stretched for blocks down the state highway. Lower picture gives a close-up of the marchers; note the heavily armed county cops at the left.

U. S. Seizes Air Associates Jersey Plant

BENDIX, N. J., Oct. 31—The United States government today had seized the big Air Associates, Inc., plant here following the company's continued defiance of a Natl. Defense Mediation Board order for the reinstatement of striking CIO workers to their jobs.

The action followed by 24 hours the sending of two Army officers to the plant to supervise rehiring of members of the United Automobile, Aircraft & Agricultural Workers. The union had complained earlier that skilled workers who went on strike in early October were being given menial work around the plant.

Despite the presence of the army officers in the plant, company-inspired demonstrations by scabs against the returning strikers resulted in injuries to two men, and the ejection of several others while company guards and county police looked on with little concern.

As the seizure order was publicized at the White House in Washington, members of CIO unions throughout the New York metropolitan area were heading towards Bendix following news of the attack on the CIO members. Charles Kerrigan, official of the UAW-CIO, accused the company of "inspiring" the violence against the unionists.

ATTACKS HOODLUMS

"Management hoodlums are not new to the Air Associates Co.," it was charged by Pres. Irving Abramson of the New Jersey Industrial Union Council, "but to use force in order to break an agreement made with the Government is the newest item in the list of outrages. The State CIO council promises not to stand by and see our members beaten up."

The Government action in the Air Associates case was the third time that the U. S. has taken over a strike-closed plant. The first such instance was at the North American Aviation Co. in Los Angeles last summer, while a few months ago similar action was taken against the Federal Shipbuilding Co., Kearny, N. J., a U. S. Steel subsidiary.

CALL OFF STRIKE

Accepting the NDMB agreement, the UAW Wednesday called off the strike, which had threatened to spread to other aircraft factories on the Eastern seabord.

However, a company statement did not indicate any intention of abiding by the decision, which provides that new employes given strikers jobs shall either be given other jobs or shall be disposed of as the company "sees fit."

DISCRIMINATION

The Mediation Board order, which the War Dept. is to enforce, struck at the root of the dispute, which broke wide open again October 27 when the company attempted to return skilled workers to scrubbing and other unskilled jobs and to delay employment of others after a settlement was believed to have been reached.

Acclaiming the decision as "a justifiable victory," Richard T. Frankensteen, national UAW director of aviation, said:

"We have the assurance of the United States Government that the Mediation Board recommendation will be carried out in the last detail.

"We won this victory because we stood on firm principle and because no individual could dispute the logic and fairness of our position."

GOVERNOR BACKS STRIKERS

The Board's decision was backed up by N. J. Governor Charles Edison, who blamed company President Hill for continuance of the dispute and urged him to rehire the strikers.

No Problem!

Detroit, Nov. 1—(FP)—Defense workers in Detroit, unable to find homes at reasonable rents or purchase prices, are reminding themselves that a year ago in a speech here Oct. 15, 1940 OPM Director Wm. S. Knudsen airily dismissed the housing problem. He said at the time:

"That brings me to housing. There are some extraordinary figures floating around about housing. There shouldn't be too much trouble about housing. About all that movement means is persons moving from one house to another. There haven't been more people coming into the country."

Book Guild Gets 27th Pact

New York, Nov. 1—The Book and Magazine Guild announced this week the signing of its 27th contract.

An agreement with the American Booksellers' Service Co., subsidiary of American Booksellers' Association provides wage increases for 24 shipping employes ranging from $3 to $5.

CIO Ladies' Auxiliaries Meet Nov. 17

WASHINGTON, Nov. 1—Taking the need for unity of women in defense of America as keynote, the CIO Women's Auxiliaries issued a call this week to a national conference to be held in Detroit, Nov. 17, at the same time the fourth CIO convention meets.

The conference, to be held at the Statler Hotel, will draft a program for participation by women in the CIO campaign for "national unity of all sections of the population who value the security of our country and who are determined that our democratic forms and fundamental liberties shall not perish."

The call, quoting from the preamble to the CIO 1941 convention call which pointed to the "tyranny and aggression stalking through the world" which "threaten our democratic institutions," was sent out by the Natl. CIO Committee for Women's Auxiliaries.

Mrs. Fay Stevenson, head of the United Automobile Workers Auxiliaries, is president, and Jullia Katz of Washington, secretary.

HISTORIC TASK

"The women in the homes of labor know well that part of the historic task confronting the CIO is ours," the call declared. "We accept the responsibility willingly and proudly, for we know well that everywhere and always women are the special victims of tyranny and oppression.

"Our women's auxiliaries have won distinction in the onward march of the CIO for their aid in the organization of the unorganized. We must now distinguish ourselves also in the onward march of the women of America to strengthen the defense of the Nation by improving the living standards, the health and the morale of the people of the Nation."

Rap Failure To Name CIO Delegate To ILO Parley

WASHINGTON, Nov. 1—Vigorous protest over the government's failure to designate a CIO representative to the conference of the International Labor Organization, which opened in New York Oct. 28, was voiced today by Pres. Philip Murray and by Sec. James B. Carey.

Carey made public a telegram from Murray to Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, dated Oct. 3, in which he said that "the CIO cannot approve of a suggestion that two of our representatives act as advisors in the ILO in the manner suggested by you during the course of our telephone conversation yesterday."

As a result of the government's failure to heed the CIO demands, 5,000,000 workers in the nation's mass production industries will be unrepresented at the conference, which brings together delegates from 33 nations. At the Havana Pan-American Conference of the ILO both CIO and AFL were represented on the delegation.

The United States is represented this year by three government delegates—Miss Perkins, Assistant Secretary of State A. A. Berle, and Dr. Carter Goodrich; by an employer's delegate, Henry L. Harriman, former head of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce; and by one labor delegate, Robert Watt of the AFL.

In telegrams to Miss Perkins and President Roosevelt, CIO Secretary Carey asserted "it is simply absurd" that workers in the nation's mass production industries are unrepresented at the gathering.

TEXT OF TELEGRAMS

Following is Secretary Carey's telegram to Secretary of Labor Perkins, copies of which were also sent to President Roosevelt and to Mr. Carter Goodrich, chairman of the ILO governing body:

"Though individuals from the CIO have been designated by you to sit with the advisory personnel of the United States delegation, it is necessary again to repeat the CIO's request for representation at the ILO conference. President Murray and I have both sought to make clear to you that the CIO could not accept the designation of CIO representatives in an advisory capacity as you proposed, while the CIO remains unrepresented on the delegation.

"We are most regretful that you did not see fit to designate representatives of the workers of the United States in the major mass production and armament industries for this important international conference.

"It would seem most fitting to have present, in order to secure the success of the meeting, the representatives of the workers in the steel, coal, automobile, aircraft, electrical and machine manufacturing, textile, aluminum, non-ferrous metal production and other basic industries of the nation. The CIO represents these workers and it is simply absurd that in an International Labor Conference held in the United States these workers are without representation by a CIO delegation.

"It is unfortunate that, due to the position you have taken in the matter, the ILO should have to convene its conference under such circumstances."

SET UP BY TREATY

The ILO is the sole offspring of the League of Nations which is still functioning. Created by the Treaty of Versailles in 1919, it was designed to promote social justice for workers throughout the world.

Its last annual conference was held in Geneva in July, 1939. At the time of the German invasion of France, the ILO abandoned its headquarters in Geneva and moved to McGill University in Montreal, Canada.

Attending the present session are about 100 official delegates and some 70 "advisors." The meetings are expected to last about 10 days.

Unions, Employers Confer On Priorities in Southwest

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 1—CIO unions and employers are meeting in industry-wide conferences to solve priorities problems in this area, it was reported today. The Office of Production Management is cooperating and is furnishing industrial engineers to survey facilities and plan conversion of non-defense plants into war production.

Die casters and furniture workers already have held conferences with manufacturers, and contact between the SWOC regional office and local plants is reported as progressing satisfactorily.

Result of the die casters' meeting was that employers said they could multiply production five times if they could get material and orders. They agreed to present detailed accounts of their situations to OPM and the unions, which will forward the information to national CIO offices with requests that aid be given in securing materials and defense contracts.

The Los Angeles Industrial Union Council will hold a conference this week for union officials and government representatives to formulate conversion and re-employment problems.

Keep Wages Free - - For A Free America

"A ceiling on wages means a ceiling on a man's standard of living. A ceiling on wages in a period of rising prices means the lowering of the level of living of Americans"—CIO PRES. PHILIP MURRAY.

Today, in Congress, in the newspapers, on the air, we hear much talk of plans to put brakes on rising prices. The need for such measures is very real. The danger of inflation is coming closer to American homes with every jump in the cost of things American families buy. Food, clothing, shelter—all the basic necessities—are constantly going up.

As prices go up, living standards fall—unless wages keep pace. The CIO agrees that inflation must be stopped.

The CIO News herewith presents the first of two installments from a new CIO pamphlet entitled "Keep Wages Free—For a Free America."

The CIO agrees with the need for price control to prevent excessive price rises. No group stands to lose more than the wage earners when inflation comes. No group lives closer to the cost of living than the workers, whose incomes barely keep pace with the price of food, clothing and shelter—frequently fall behind.

In fact, this gap is widening already. U. S. Government figures show that retail food prices are now at their highest levels in 10 years, with all indications that they will go up still further in a very short time as the present levels of wholesale prices are passed on to the retail markets.

Good living standards are vital to the defense of America. The way to keep America strong is to keep its people strong. Organized labor is wholeheartedly behind the program to defend our country from Hitlerism. Our best ally in this program at home is a high level of living for all Americans. This can only be done if American workers get enough wages to close the gap between the pay envelope and the cost of living.

WAGE FREEZING PLANS

One proposal being made in the name of checking inflation is the plan to control wages by government action.

The usual anti-labor forces in Congress and in the newspapers are pushing this plan. They say that wages must be "controlled," or we will have inflation. What they actually want is to freeze wages at certain arbitrary levels—while profits go on virtually unchecked.

The theory behind the clamor for wage freezing rests on the argument that prices cannot be kept in line without freezing wages. This argument is false. Actually, as reputable economists will tell you—and as U. S. Government experts have already told Congress in testimony—wage rises have not been responsible for current price increases.

Leon Henderson, head of the U. S. Office of Price Control, appearing before a Congressional Committee, said:

"We have no major wage increases recently that would be a major factor in increasing prices. A rise in the wage rate does not mean necessarily an increase in the unit cost."

In other words, recent wage increases, far from causing price increases, are more than paid for out of increased production and decreased cost per unit.

THE WAGE FACTOR

Current price increases have been most marked in those commodities which are least affected by wage costs—agricultural commodities, raw materials, semi-finished manufactured goods. Durable goods, where wage raises have been won, have shown the least rise in prices.

Isidor Lubin, head of the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, testified to this at the same Congressional Committee:

"These figures," he said, "show that the greatest price increases in this list since August 1939 have been among the raw materials. Factory wages do not constitute a key factor in the cost of any of these commodities. The greater the price advance, the smaller has been the element of fabrication by factory workers in this country. The converse is also true. The smallest price advances for any of the groups of commodities just cited is that for durable manufactured goods.

"It is in this field that the largest wage increases have occurred. For durable goods as a whole, hourly earnings rose by 15 per cent between August 1939 and May 1940, while the corresponding increase in the case of non-durable goods amounted to less than 10 per cent.

"Such increases as have been granted obviously have been a minor factor in the price increases that have actually occurred."

WAGES AND PROFITS

As everybody knows, profits have been going up in giant leaps ever since the nation's defense program began to get under way. The National City Bank of New York pointed out recently that profits of 350 leading corporations have jumped 20 per cent between the last half of 1940 and the first half of 1941.

During that period, many of these corporations began paying the wage increases won by CIO unions. Their profits did not suffer. On the contrary, they increased—and are still increasing. The steel industry, for example, was easily able to absorb the 10-cent hourly increases won by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

As a matter of record, prices began to go up long before CIO workers began to win their recent wage increases. Here is Dr. Lubin's testimony again:

"However, the price increases that occurred up to August 1941, cannot be attributed to the cost of meeting wage increases. Selling prices rose in advance of wage rates. The prices which have advanced most are for commodities least affected by labor costs. In general, selling prices have risen more than was necessary to cover the cost of wage advances, and, in fact, by enough to cover the cost of all probable wage increases in the immediate future."

Or, to put it bluntly, industry not only increased its take before wage raises began, but was able to cover "probable" wage increases that might come in the future.

Prices began to shoot up as soon as the war broke out in September, 1939. Today, the cost of food is at its highest level in 10 years, showing an increase of 15.5 per cent between September, 1939, and August, 1941. Overalls have gone up 18 per cent, work shirts 15.5 per cent, cotton dresses 8.5 per cent. Special government studies show that rents paid by low income groups have jumped as much as 50 to 60 and even 100 per cent in some communities. And, as the U. S. Government and organized labor have warned, this is only the beginning.

The "Economic Outlook" monthly publication of the CIO, points this out in a discussion of wholesale price rises:

"A clearer picture of what may be expected to happen to living costs during the coming months may be determined from the activity of wholesale prices during the past year," the Outlook says.

"An examination of the gap between wholesale and retail prices for 15 foods shows that the gap is now the widest it has been in the past 10 years. If, as can be expected, the gap is to be brought up to the average of the past 10 years, retail prices will have to increase at least 12 per cent.

Carey Suggests 5-Point Plan For Defense and Liberty

NEW YORK, Nov. 1—A five-point program suggesting how "defense production can be speeded and the freedom of enterprise and labor preserved" was set forth today by CIO Sec. James B. Carey, writing in a special issue of the Survey Graphic magazine.

As his first point, Carey declared: "We must lay down a guarantee of post-war production levels, assuring full employment and maximum use of facilities to remove the chief fear blocking present defense efforts: fear of the future."

At the present time a defense planning board, vested with broad powers, should be established, the CIO official wrote; the board would be composed of representatives of labor, management, consumers and farmers, with a government chairman.

BACKS MURRAY PLAN

In addition, industry committees, along the lines suggested by CIO Pres. Philip Murray, are urgently needed "in order to deal with each industry in a clarified and integrated manner, to cope with problems of conversion and expansion of facilities, to produce supplies on time and to prevent serious dislocations that would obstruct our entire defense effort," Carey said.

"We must maintain the civil liberties of the American people, including the right of workers to collective bargaining. We must extend social security systems to provide better housing, medical care, and protection against unemployment and old age.

"We must put forward concrete proposals for international order in the post-war period based upon economic and political democracy, including guarantees of decent standards of living for all peoples and curbs upon future wars."

Asked for Peanut Workers

Suffolk, Va., Nov. 1—Aid of CIO unions in a drive to improve conditions of peanut workers here was asked today by the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing & Allied Workers of America.

UCAPAWA Representative Bob Himmaugh urged that wires be sent to the Suffolk, American, Lummis and Pond Bros. Peanut Companies, of Suffolk, telling them of CIO support for a drive for a five cents an hour wage increase, modified union shop and the check-off. Workers, most of them Negro women, are paid only 30 cents an hour.

Get Defense Cooperation Plea

Washington, Nov. 1—A letter calling for immediate cooperation in the defense program was sent today by the Local Chapter of the Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists & Technicians to 1,500 District of Columbia technical workers.

Declaring that the workers can recognize "the life or death stake in this situation," the letter proposed for discussion the calling of a technical symposium on housing, priorities and unemployment, traffic, a cooperative employment exchange and a survey of work techniques in the government's technical divisions.

New Orleans CIO Rallies To Aid Of Police Victims

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 31—Organized labor in New Orleans stood ready for mobilization to aid striking CIO hosiery workers at the Alden Mills here today following renewed strikebreaking activity by city police on Oct. 29.

All CIO local officials in the city met at a specially-called assembly in CIO headquarters and voted to recommend city-wide support for a mass picket line to continue until the cops cease their anti-labor activities.

The local officials also voted to emphasize their protest with a labor holiday, if necessary, throughout the entire city and stage protest rallies at the City Hall and at the mills.

Reports relating in detail the many acts of violence perpetrated on Oct. 29 against both pickets and residents in the neighborhood of the mills were prepared for submission to federal authorities with the request that immediate action be taken by the Government to end the reign of terror, intimidation and coercion against legitimate union activities.

FILE SUITS

The conference also instructed officers of the New Orleans Industrial Union Council to arrange immediately with attorneys for 15 false arrest suits against the police.

The unprecedented mass attack against the pickets and onlookers was the climax of an organized effort by the management and the police to break the strike which has been in progress for more than three weeks. Until the attack there had not been a single instance of violence or even a minor disturbance.

On Wednesday morning about 100 strikebreakers assembled in Washington Square under the supervision of some two dozen uniformed police and were escorted to the mills, where an additional contingent of plain clothesmen and cops were on guard to aid the finks.

POLICE LAUNCH ATTACK

As the strikebreakers approached the mill, the police launched their attack on the picket line. Policemen used nightsticks and fists, their blows falling impartially on pickets, bystanders and even some of the strikebreakers. Groups of persons were herded together by the cops and arrested wholesale.

Fewer than 70 strikebreakers actually entered the plant, which normally employs about 500 workers.

The strike was called by Local 65, American Federation of Hosiery Workers, to win wage increases designed to offset the rapidly rising cost of living.

Celebrate Victory

South Boston, Mass., Nov. 1—The latest addition to the CIO fold in the Boston area, Local 272, United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers will hold a big Victory Dance Nov. 11, to celebrate its rapid growth during the last six months.

The union now has more than 1,500 members. The entire proceeds of the dance will be given to the USO to be used for the boys in the camps.

Union Rights Fundamental, Pressman Says

Washington, Nov. 1. — "Labor unions represent the exercise by workers of a fundamental right—the right to free association of individuals to promote their common cause," Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, said this week in a radio debate here on "Government Regulation of Labor Unions."

"In dictatorships free trade unions are first destroyed and state-dominated unions are then set up which are carefully regulated so that they can never be strong enough to be independent," Pressman said.

His subject was pressed from the opposite side about three years ago by the National Assn. of Manufacturers, which introduced it as propaganda in the public schools.

"The cry for regulation of trade unions in this country comes principally from those who fear that a strong labor movement menaces their privileges and powers," Pressman declared.

Charge Lockout Endangers U. S. Defense Work

CHICAGO, Nov. 1—Charges that the American Can Co. is sabotaging national defense by locking out 4,600 workers at plants here and at Englewood were made today by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

Out a month and a half, the workers said the company "has refused to produce the goods needed to defeat Hitler and has thereby given direct aid to the plans of the 'Fuehrer'."

A list of goods not produced includes:

576,000 first aid kits for the United States.

8,580,000 12-ounce Army meat cans.

2,560,000 Army shoe polish cans.

581,000 assorted food cans.

WANT PAY RAISE

The union asked a raise in wages to the company's west coast standard and a union security clause, when a contract came up for renewal September 1.

The SWOC attempted to continue negotiations, despite company attempts to provoke a strike and possibly a second Memorial Day massacre by suspension and firing of union leaders and by calling Chicago police to "clear out" the plants.

Finally forced to conciliation, the company gave a categoric "no" to U. S. government compromise proposals.

The SWOC asked all CIO affiliates to wire the Washington OPM office, demanding an investigation of the firm, which has been awarded $16,000,000 in defense contracts.

CIO Moving Quickly in Tennessee

Knoxville, Tenn., Nov. 1—Recent outbreaks of vigilante violence against union organizers haven't stopped the CIO from rolling up new gains in Tennessee, Paul R. Christopher, secretary of the state Industrial Union Council, reported today.

The first local of the United Furniture Workers to be chartered in the state gained its spurs when it won an election at two plants of the C. B. Atkin Co. The vote was 199 for the UFWA to 128 against. Since the election, locals of the union have been set up at Jefferson City for employes of the Johnson Spring Co., and at Memphis for workers at the Belz Upholstering Co.

STORES SIGN

In addition, union shop agreements have been signed with the White Stores and the Phillips Grocery Store at Caryville, while the laundry workers gained a contract with the LaFollette Laundry & Dry Cleaning Co. at LaFollette.

At Oliver Springs the United Construction Workers has petitioned for an NLRB election to determine sole bargaining agent at the General Shale Products Corp. District 50, United Mine Workers, has set up a regional office in Knoxville and is pushing organization in two subsidiaries of the Mead Fibre in Kingsport.

Truman Backs CIO Stand in Currier Case

Washington, Nov. 1—The Currier Lumber Co. case—involving the OPM's refusal to permit a 300-unit housing contract to be awarded to the Detroit firm because of its agreement with the CIO United Construction Workers — received further airing this week on the floor of the U. S. Senate.

Sen. Harry S. Truman of Missouri, head of the special committee investigating the defense program which looked into the case a week ago, severely criticized OPM Asssociate Director General Sidney Hillman for his opposition to granting the Currier Co. the federal contract.

The Currier Co. was the lowest bidder by more than $400,000, but failed to get the contract because of fear of retaliation from the AFL building trades, which are party to a nationwide stabilization agreement worked out by the OPM.

"The matter boils down to this," Sen. Truman said, "a responsible company has made a low bid, which it is prepared to perform, and is capable of performing if not illegally interfered with, and Mr. Hillman advises that it be denied the contract and that the taxpayers pay several hundred thousands of dollars more because Mr. Hillman fears trouble from what he calls irresponsible elements of the AFL. . . .

Progress

BIRMINGHAM, Nov. 1—For the first time in this city's history, CIO unions can hold closed meetings in the downtown area, CIO Regional Director Yelverton Cowherd reported today.

The Birmingham Industrial Union Council has rented a hall large enough for a State Convention, eliminating the necessity of meeting at the court house, where doors could not be locked. It has been impossible to secure fraternal or similar halls.

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

The members of the United Mine Workers of America in the captive mines have gone back to work, pending final recommendations by the full National Defense Mediation Board. The return to work demonstrates again the patriotism and deep sense of responsibility of the coal diggers—shown not only in their record in the first World War but in the way they have carried out the heavy responsibilities put on them in the present defense program.

The issues of the dispute are clear. Ninety per cent of the coal industry outside the captive mine fields operates under a union shop contract. The workers in the 10 per cent of the industry comprised in the captive mines have been denied a similar contract to date. As UMA President John L. Lewis has pointed out, there is absolutely no reason why 10 per cent of the industry cannot keep step with the 90 per cent.

The newspapers, aided by the reactionaries in Congress, have seized on this situation as an excuse to unleash the most vicious campaign of labor baiting in recent months. Talk of "cooling-off" periods, strike prohibitions, and the like spreads all over the headlines and the Congressional Record. To read these vitriolic outpourings, you would think that anti-strike legislation was something new, never thought of until the miners took strike action to enforce their demands.

Actually the reactionary press and Congressmen have only been waiting for what they regard as the opportune moment to take anti-strike bills off the shelf, dust them up a little, and put them back in circulation. Such proposals were beaten back by the CIO some months ago. They will be beaten back again.

OIL DRIVE

The CIO has launched an intensive drive in the oil industry, one of the very few remaining open shop citadels. The same techniques and the same militancy that organized steel, autos, and the other basic industries in this country will bring collective bargaining in this field.

The job will be a tough one. Oil is dominated by huge monopoly corporations, many of them notorious for anti-union policies and practices. The CIO and the Oil Workers are fortunate in securing Edwin S. Smith, former member of the National Labor Relations Board, to head this most important campaign. The agreement signed by President Philip Murray, President O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers International Union, and ratified by the membership, marks a major step forward toward completion of the CIO's basic purpose—organizing the unorganized.

The oil industry was about 500,000 workers; 65,000 of them in Standard Oil alone. The Oil Workers Union, one of the original unions that helped in forming the Committee for Industrial Organization in 1935, has strong affiliates in many parts of the country. Using these as a base, the CIO-OWIU drive will proceed to bring the remainder into the CIO.

WITH THE CIO

Local successes, often overshadowed by the bigger issues in the CIO, continue to pile up. The Transport Workers Union has won an election in Omaha, Neb., by 360 to 120. A special drive in St. Louis is under way, with 10 or 12 new organizers being put on by the various nationals and internationals. They will be under the guidance of the CIO national office.

The Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, carrying on their major drive in the Connecticut River Valley industrial areas, are putting on more than 30 new organizers by order of their recent international executive board meeting.

From Akron, Ohio, comes a report that the UAWA-CIO Goodyear aircraft local 856 has won an impressive National Labor Relations Board election by a vote of 860 to 198. From Wilmington, Del., heart of the duPont empire, Regional Director Fullerton Fuller reports that the CIO has won recognition from the local Fibre Company. The count showed that 106 of 159 workers employed by the company were CIO members.

Coal Mine Explosion Kills 15

NORTONVILLE, Ky., Nov. 1—Deadly gas from a mine explosion snuffed out the lives of 15 members of the United Mine Workers Union here this week. Two others were killed in an Earlington mine.

The explosion blasted the Daniel Boone mine here shortly after the 7 a.m. starting time. A rescue squad that fought its way through winding tunnels filled with poisonous fumes did not find the vicitms' bodies until 12 hours later.

33 SAVED

Earlier 33 fellow miners were saved, but the 15 apparently had penetrated farther into the mine and were asphyxiated before they could reach the main air shaft. Fourteen of the 15 were married.

Describing the explosion, Elbert Rayney, one of the rescued miners, said that the workers heard a muffled explosion and a gust of wind rushed up the tunnel, "so strong that it blew the harness from our mules and us to the floor."

"The lights went out and we stayed on the floor to get as much good air as possible. Then we started working our way to the air shaft, crawling on our hands and knees most of the time.

"We ran into black damp about a third of the way to the entrance. Some of the men passed out and we had to carry them. We had to wait two hours before the first man was pulled up in a barrel."

Local Back Teamsters On Trial

Minneapolis, Nov. 1—Support for 28 members of CIO Teamsters Local 544 and the Socialist Workers Party, on trial for alleged "seditious conspiracy," came this week from two locals of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, the UAW's Ford local and from Tucker P. Smith, Michigan director of the United Retail & Wholesale Employes of America.

The CIO locals contributed financial support and Smith sent a letter to the Civil Rights Defense Committee, of New York, stating that "the prosecutions are being conducted on a 'political basis'."

Urging CIO support to get the cases dropped, Smith said "AFL 'bigwigs' should not be allowed to use governmental machinery to persecute the leaders of the CIO local union."

Industrial Hazards:

Every 30 Seconds—A Worker Suffers an Eye Injury

Washington, Nov. 1—On an average of every 30 seconds every working day some American workman clasps his hand in pain to his eyes, victim of an injury that could have been prevented.

Some workers, who lose the sight of both eyes, are forced to adjust the standard of living of themselves and their families to a budget as low as $30 a month. A hundred workers a year lose both eyes through industrial accidents.

NEW BOOK CITES FACTS

These and other facts, their causes and means of accident prevention are completely discussed in a book published this week by the National Society for the Prevention of Blindness—"Eye Hazards in Industry."

The book, written by Louis Resnick, points out that there are an estimated 300,000 unnecessary eye injuries each year in American industry, and that only 20 per cent of these are compensable.

Cost of the compensable injuries is believed to be in excess of $100,000,000 a year and the 240,000 so-called trivial injuries are estimated to cost more than $10,000,000.

"There is no need for the blinding of any worker in American industry," Resnick stated. "The causes of industrial accidents and diseases affecting the eyes are now known.

"Methods of eliminating these hazards or of protecting workers against them have been thoroughly demonstrated. Devices to protect the worker against every type of eye accidents are now available."

No Room for Klan in UAW, Thomas Says

Detroit, Nov. 1—(FP)—"There is no room within the UAW," declares Pres. R. J. Thomas of the CIO affiliate, "for the Ku Klux Klan or its activities. Imperial Wizard Colescott's charge that the CIO is in communist hands is merely the stock-in-trade of his racket. My advice to Colescott is to pack his bag. Detroit does not need him."

The denunciation of the klan followed a claim by Colescott that his organization had many members in the UAW-CIO. The claim is known to be groundless though there were some klan members as delegates to the recent Buffalo convention of the UAW, according to union circles.

In Michigan and northern Ohio the klan element a number of years ago received encouragement from General Motors subexecutives when it flourished as the Black Legion. That organization was broken up by prosecution after a number of murders had been traced to Black Legion members.

Price Bill 'Inadequate', Murray Tells Congress

Renews Warning Against Wage Control Plans

(See Story Page Three)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8—Congress was told this week that "labor regards a vote for wage controls as a vote to destroy organized labor," and that the CIO regards the present price control bill as "wholly inadequate" to prevent inflation.

The warning was conveyed in a letter from CIO Pres. Philip Murray to Rep. Henry B. Steagall, chairman of the House Banking Committee, whose group this week reported out HR 5479, a much watered-down version of the original price control measure introduced almost three months ago.

"Wage control means the destruction of a free labor movement and of collective bargaining," Murray wrote. "It would subject labor to the control of governmental bureaucracy. It would constitute the first step toward direct control of labor by government."

At the same time, Murray sharply criticized the present bill for failing to include enforcement provisions and for leaving wide loopholes for speculative and profiteering price rises in farm products—which would not reach the working farmers, but would profit only the middlemen.

Murray also wrote to all CIO affiliates to urge them to protest wage freezing plans now being pushed by the newspapers and by reactionary Congressmen, and to demand a more adequate price control bill that would stop inflation.

Avert CIO Walkout In Louisiana

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 8—A threatened walkout of all CIO workers in New Orleans to protest outrageous police brutality against strikers at the Allen Hosiery Mills was narrowly averted last week when Mayor Maestri adopted major points in a truce formula suggested by Fred C. Pieper, CIO regional director.

Authorization for the walkout, which would have brought some 25,000 workers to demonstrate at the hosiery mill, was voted by a hastily-called mass meeting of representatives from all CIO affiliates in the city.

COPS CONVOY SCABS

Workers were aroused when a police escort convoyed a group of several score scabs and finks from a down-town square to the plant, where members of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers had been picketing for wage increases for six weeks. As the strikers sought to bar the scabs from the plant, police cut loose with a savage barrage, injuring many strikers and bystanders.

In a telegram to Mayor Maestri, Pieper pointed out that CIO members, numbering 25,000 in 200 plants, were planning to establish a giant picket line at the Alden Mills "in protest against police action in this strike, and to maintain such necessary picket lines until the New Orleans police cease their strike-breaking activities. . . .

"Feeling is so intense in this matter that it is my opinion that nothing short of some reasonable intervention on your part will prevent bloodshed or other serious consequences," Pieper added.

FOUR-POINT FORMULA

He suggested a four-point truce formula: Temporary closing of the mills, removal of police and removal of pickets from the scene, and negotiations in the mayor's office with a view to negotiating a settlement of the strike or of submitting the issues to arbitration. Acceptance of the proposal brought together the company and the CIO committee.

Negotiations for a settlement have so far failed, and the union is now seeking arbitration of the issues, with the company sidestepping.

18's A Crowd!

Jarratt, Va., Nov. 8—A company union at the Johns-Mansville Co. plant didn't have much success.

Of 425 people at the plant, exactly 18 showed up for the first meeting of the phony outfit. Nine of these had been sent as observers by District 50, United Mine Workers, which has been organizing the company; two were lawyers; and three were women who don't work at the plant.

'IN THIS CORNER': Office Union Files NLRB Case Against Wall St. Firms

NEW YORK, Nov. 1—The United Office & Professional Workers Union this week "invaded" the sanctum sanctorum of U. S. finance capital.

Bank and Brokerage Employes Union, Local 96, asked the N. Y. Stock Exchange, the Assn. of Bond Brokers of the N. Y. Stock Exchange, and 33 Stock Exchange member firms doing business on the bond floor of the Exchange, to meet for collective bargaining affecting 160 bond floor clerks.

The union, which represents a majority of the workers, filed a petition with the National Labor Relations Board for certification as the sole bargaining agent for the bond floor clerks on matters of wages, hours and working conditions.

Simultaneously, charges of establishing a company union and intimidating and coercing employes were filed with the board.

HITS COERCION

Lloyd Herbert, president of the local, said:

"This attempt on the part of the Exchange through underhanded means to coerce and intimidate the clerks and set up a so-called 'independent union' is a desperate attempt on the part of Wall Street employers to maintain the miserable conditions of substandard salaries, frequent lay-offs, debt and insecurity, which have been the lot of New York's brokerage clerks heretofore.

"Wall Street employes must and will have bona fide union organization under the protection of the laws of the land," Herbert, a former Stock Exchange employe, said.

27% Increase

Lagrange, Ill.—The first signed contract with the Aluminum Products Co. has been won by Local 4, CIO Aluminum Workers, with the union gaining a 27% wage increase and vacations with pay.

BACK ON JOB: CIO Pres. Philip Murray returned last week to his office in Washington for the first time since he was taken ill last summer. In fine fettle, the CIO head will preside at the opening of the Executive Board meeting in Detroit, Nov. 15, and at the fourth annual convention on Nov. 17.

Open Shop To Union Shop —In 5 Hours

Baltimore, Nov. 8—If you stand on your head when you read this story, you'll feel like members of the United Retail Shoe Employes union felt this week after five hours of first-time negotiations resulted in a union shop contract and "substantial wage increases" for seven employes of the Topps Shoe Store, part of the Fieldston Shoe Corp. chain.

The sensationally speedy pact, this city's first in the retail shoe field, was started in motion by the airplane arrival of Morris Fieldston, president of the chain, who said he was unaware that his employes planned to take their case to the National Labor Relations Board because he never answered a union letter.

Pleading complete ignorance of the communication because of extensive travels, Fieldston said he wanted immediate action. President Nat Klein of the union, within five hours of Fieldston's arrival, negotiated a contract which provides the union shop and wage increases.

Form CIO Council

Port Clinton, Ohio—CIO unions in this city have formed an Ottawa County Industrial Union Council and made formal application to national CIO headquarters for a charter.

Cudahy Packing Signs Master Pact With CIO Union

CHICAGO, Nov. 8—The Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee today had gained its second major victory within two months—a master agreement with the Cudahy Packing Co., one of the industry's "Big Four." A master pact with Armour was signed early this autumn.

The agreement covers 10,000 workers in seven cities: Omaha, Nebr.; Kansas City and Wichita, Kans.; Newport, Minn.; Sioux City, Ia.; Denver, Colo.; and Los Angeles, Calif. PWOC locals in other Cudahy plants will come under the coverage of the contract as soon as they have been certified as sole bargaining agency by the National Labor Relations Board.

Chairman J. C. Lewis of the PWOC hailed the agreement as a major victory for the packinghouse workers and praised the cooperation of company officials in reaching the understanding.

MEMBERSHIP STATUS

Under the contract the company recognizes the union as sole bargaining agency and "suggests that all employes consider the importance of participating in the union. . . . Employes who are members of the union or become members of the union are expected to fulfill their membership obligations and remain in good standing throughout the life of the contract."

Other gains listed in the agreement include the two wage raises given out by the company earlier this year, together with a provision that the pact may be opened for wage adjustments on 30 days' notice; improved seniority; increased vacations with pay; grievance machinery, and double time for Sunday and holiday work.

Get Back Pay

Fairmont, W. Va.—Following a long fight, Local 1 of the Aluminum Workers of America has forced the Fairmont Aluminum Co. to make retroactive to May 1 a wage increase of eight cents an hour. The victory means $9,000 extra pay for members of the local.

Wisconsin CIO Backs Murray Plan

By MORRIS WRIGHT

Milwaukee, Nov. 8—Endorsement of the Murray Plan by the Wisconsin CIO's fourth annual convention was no routine matter. Discussion of major problems facing labor and the nation brought the delegates and guest speakers to the same point time after time until one was reminded of the old maxim, "All roads lead to Rome."

The point was that labor's brains and labor's devotion to the national welfare are needed in this crisis, when our country's defense requires that we outproduce Hitler, though he commands the continent of Europe.

The roads leading to the Murray Plan were many—problems of increasing production for defense, halting unemployment, protection of labor standards, profiteering, sabotage of defense production through indifference and antagonism of some employers.

In addition to unanimous endorsement of the Murray Plan, the convention set up a standing committee to work toward full utilization of the state's plant capacity and manpower in defense production.

Resolutions included:

Support of President Roosevelt's foreign policy, and for Neutrality Act repeal; honoring the Norwegian labor leaders murdered by the Nazis; condemning Nazi murder of hostages; praising Harry Bridges' record as a labor leader and demanding that government persecution of him be stopped; urging reelection of CIO President Philip Murray.

Thomas White, Sr., veteran president of Local 1131, United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, Milwaukee, was elected state CIO president. Harvey Kitzman, who has held the post for the past two years, declined to run. Walter Burke was elected to a third term as secretary-treasurer without opposition.

Guest speakers included Allan Haywood, CIO director of organization; Len De Caux, editor of the CIO NEWS; R. J. Thomas, president of the United Auto Workers; J. C. Lewis, chairman of the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee; Abraham Flaxer, president of the State, County and Municipal Workers.

Tailors Win Swank N. Y. Strike

New York, Nov. 8—Wage increases for 1,400 custom tailors employed along Fifth Avenue ended a three-weeks' strike called by Journeymen Tailors' Local 1 of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America.

According to Herman Holzknecht, manager of Local 1, the tailors will receive a general wage increase of 7½ percent immediately, and an additional 2½ percent on April 1 next.

The strikers will return to work as soon as individual employers sign a certificate of acceptance of the collective agreement reached between the union and the Merchant Tailors' Society of New York.

The agreement is for two years, and though the new terms are fixed for one year, either side may, at least 30 days before expiration date, give notice of a desire to change the agreement.

2,000 Win $4 Pay Boost At Radiator Firm

BUFFALO, N. Y., Nov. 8—Pay increases averaging $4 a week for nearly 2,000 workers at two plants of the American Radiator Co. were won in a contract obtained here by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee. The wage boost, which covers employes at the company's Bond and Terminal plants is retroactive to Sept. 19, the day the striking workers returned to their jobs.

In addition to more pay, the agreement calls for a union shop, vacations with pay, seniority rights, grievance machinery and other standard SWOC provisions.

Tom Casey, SWOC representative, said that the new contract would mean an additional $380,000 a year on American Radiator payrolls, the first time that such gains have been made by organized labor in any of the company's plants.

The SWOC has filed a petition for a Labor Board election at the company's Malleable & Steel Division where the union has a majority of the 700 workers, Casey said. Organization is also proceedning among the Tonawanda Iron workers at Tonawanda, N. Y., he declared.

Girl, Beaten, Sues Teamsters For $75,000

Los Angeles, Nov. 8—Brutally beaten by AFL goons while picketing in the Thrifty-Sontag drug strike, Connie Murphy, pretty 19-year-old clerk, today had sued the AFL Teamsters Union for $75,000 damages.

Named as defendants in the suit were Dan Tobin, head of the teamsters' union; Dave Beck, the teamsters' west coast czar; and three local officials.

The papers were served on Tobin and the rest of the union's officials during a banquet in Tobin's honor at the swanky Hollywood Roosevelt Hotel. Service of the papers was made just after Beck had voiced surprise and chagrin that the Teamsters' Union has been "pictured as gangsters, racketeers and ruffians without the slightest proof."

BEAT HER BADLY

Miss Murphy is a member of Local 26, CIO Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union. She charges that 10 of the Teamsters' strong arm men "violently struck and beat her in the stomach and struck her with boxes" while she was picketing the Sontag store.

Dripping wet after hours of picketing in the rain, the 105-pound CIO lassie was trying to persuade a truck driver not to make delivery to the struck store. The goons, who had been following the truck, then beat her so badly that Miss Murphy collapsed on the pavement.

"They opened up by slugging me in the stomach," she said later. "I fell to the sidewalk and when I regained my feet they knocked me down again with the boxes they had started to unload from the truck. I lay on the sidewalk until the ambulance arrived."

Ask Aid For Frame-Up Victims

Indianapolis, Ind., Nov. 8—Persecution of International Harvester Co. strikers arrested on a picket line last March at the firm's Richmond plant is harming national defense, the Indiana State Industrial Union Council warned today.

In a letter by Walter Frisbie, Council secretary-treasurer, the organization asked all state legislators to take up the cause of the strikers, 65 of whom were indicted.

"The men involved are skilled workmen," Frisbie told the legislators. "Now, when every resource of our great industrial plant is being strained to produce more and more of the tanks, guns, planes and materials of war that will destroy Hitlerism and all it stands for, it is a travesty on justice to drag these men away from their jobs to satisfy the vindictiveness of a handful of reactionary politicians who have blundered badly and now wish to cover up that blundering by gaining token convictions against these union people."

File Objections In Bridges' Case

San Francisco, Nov. 8—Judge Sears' report ordering the deportation of Harry Bridges denies him due process of law, violates the U. S. Constitution, and abrogates the right of freedom of speech and assembly, according to exceptions filed by Bridges' counsel here.

The exceptions were filed as part of the legal steps necessary in appealing the verdict in Sears' report, which was described at the time by CIO Pres. Murray as lending aid to "the enemies of organized labor in this country," and as relying largely on "sources that are either admittedly guilty of bias against Bridges or of working against organized labor."

Present Price Control Bill Inadequate, Murray Charges

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8—The price control bill (H. R. 5479) at present "is wholly inadequate to meet the swift inflationary movement of prices now taking place," CIO Pres. Philip Murray charged today.

In a letter to Rep. Harry B. Steagall, chairman of the House Banking and Currency Committee, Murray urged the Congressman's support for "an effective price control bill" and his opposition to any "measure to institute wage control as unnecessary to prevent inflation and as harmful to the American people."

Murray's letter declared that "wage controls mean the destruction of a free labor movement and of collective bargaining," and that "labor regards a vote for wage control as a vote to destroy organized labor."

At the same time President Murray asked all CIO affiliates to write their Congressmen demanding action on the matter.

NO ENFORCEMENT

"The bill as it stands now does not provide for enforcement machinery effective enough to carry out its purpose. The removal from the original bill of licensing and triple liability provisions makes real enforcement nearly impossible," the CIO leader told Steagall.

Murray also pointed out that the elimination of ceilings on food and other farm products creates serious dangers of speculative and profiteering attempts to inflate such prices, declaring at the same time that organized labor supports the efforts of "honest working farmers" to get a fair return on their labor.

WOULD HURT WORKERS

"This bill will seriously damage working people since they spend from 35 to 45 per cent of their income on food," Murray wrote in warning against the dangers of speculative inflation in farm products.

"It will also jeopardize the interests of the honest working farmers of the nation. The experience of the farm people in inflation beginning with the first World War shows that clearly.

"Labor wants farmers to get their fair share of the national income. We believe that for many years the farm people have not received as much as they should, but the lifting of the effective ceilings from farm prices will not help farmers or labor. Only speculators and profiteers will benefit."

A major portion of Murray's letter to Steagall was taken up with a discussion of proposed wage control measures and an analysis of their harmful effect on collective bargaining, on organized labor, and

CIO Wins Prudential Election

NEW YORK, Nov. 8—The CIO this week swept to an overwhelming victory at the Prudential Life Insurance Co.

In a State Labor Relations Board poll among the company's industrial insurance agents in the metropolitan New York area, the United Office & Professional Workers gained an almost 3-1 majority. The vote:

UOPWA	1,579
AFL	78
No Union	576

Prudential employs more agents in Greater New York than any other insurance company. Borrowing a leaf from the company's famed slogan, the union has pointed out to industrial insurance agents in the metropolitan area that "employes united have the strength of Gibraltar."

OTHER POLLS SOON

As the New York Prudential agents were going to the polls, Pres. Lewis Merrill of the UOPWA announced that petitions for elections were pending for Prudential agents in other areas—Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Scranton and Wilkes-Barre, Baltimore, Buffalo, Detroit, Massachusetts and New Jersey.

Leon Berney, general insurance organizer for the UOPWA, pointed out that "these men are determined to win their fight for higher pay and professional dignity through the democratic processes of collective bargaining.

"As the country organizes to defend democracy on a world-wide front, it is fitting that the employes of America's huge industrial organizations organize to advance democracy on the job."

Labor Scores Gains In City Elections

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8—Labor scored notable successes in municipal elections throughout the country this week, post-mortem reports here indicated.

Most notable victory was in New York where Mayor F. H. LaGuardia defeated William O'Dwyer, Democrat, to gain a third term as chief executive of the world's largest city. LaGuardia was strongly supported by the Greater New York CIO and by a large number of AFL unions in the city.

His final plurality was 133,841. Leaders of the American Labor Party, to which a large number of CIO unions are affiliated, pointed out that the ALP's 434,297 votes were decisive in insuring a third term for the mayor.

Austin Hogan, official of the Transport Workers Union and head of the Trade Union Committee to Elect Labor's Candidates, asserted that a quarter-million of the ALP votes were attributable to the work of his group.

CLEVELAND VICTORY

Eight years of Republican anti-labor rule in Cleveland came to an abrupt end when labor rallied behind the campaign of Frank J. Lausche, a common pleas judge. CIO support was given to Lausche for his promise to respect labor's rights, end the notoriously brutal anti-labor attitude of the Cleveland police department and improve municipal services.

Similarly in Buffalo, N. Y., labor votes provided the winning majority for Joseph J. Kelly, an outspoken friend of unions. Leading CIO officials participated actively in Kelly's campaign.

ELECT CIO MEMBER

At suburban Lackawanna, where the CIO this year captured an NLRB election victory at the Bethlehem Steel Co. mill, union members again used their votes to good advantage. They elected Michael Hughes, a pioneer member of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee at the Bethlehem mill, and defeated all but one incumbent candidate for re-election. Many of the present city officials have been under Government charges for larceny of funds.

WIN IN AKRON

Organized labor came into its own in Akron, Ohio, capital of the rubber industry, with State Rep. George Harter gaining a 5,000-vote lead to win the mayoralty. Mayor Schroy, Republican, sought to make a last-minute issue of labor's support for Harter, but his smear effort brought forth a challenged reply from Harter: "I am proud to be the candidate of labor."

Jury Convicts Browne, Bioff

New York, Nov. 8—John Law caught up this week with George Browne and Willie Bioff, czars of the AFL stagehands unions, and as a result the two men face possible 30-year terms for extorting money from motion picture corporations.

A federal court jury, after two hours of deliberation, found the two men guilty on three counts. Sentence will be pronounced on Wednesday.

Browne is a former vice-president of the AFL and Bioff an expanderer who muscled in on the union several years ago.

7-Hour Strike Wins Union Shop, Pay Raise

New York, Nov. 8—A 5 p. m. to midnight strike this Monday at Underwood & Underwood, nationally known photographic service company, this week won the union shop and pay increases for 17 members of the United Photographic Employes Union, a UOPWA affiliate.

The company stalled since April, when the union won a Labor Board election. The strike, at the height of the pre-Christmas rush, brought a settlement after four hours of negotiations. The union won vacations, check-off collection of dues, holidays with pay and overtime guarantees.

Mediators Study Miners' Demands

Washington, Nov. 8—The National Defense Mediation Board this week was immersed in study of the United Mine Workers' demands for the union shop to cover 53,000 workers in mines owned by steel companies.

It appeared that the Board's decision would hinge on the attitude taken by the three panel members representing the public: Chairman William H. Davis, Pres. Frank Graham of North Carolina University; and Charles Wyzanski, Boston lawyer. The four labor members of the panel are reported in favoring the UMW demands, while the employer group has allegedly taken the position that the board has no right to recommend the union shop.

Neither the UMW nor the U. S. Steel Co. is bound to accept the Board's decision, however. Pres. John L. Lewis of the UMW, who appeared before the Board early this week, informed Chairman Davis prior to the hearings that if no settlement is reached by Nov. 15, the captive miners will again strike to enforce their demands.

Union Wins Holgate Toy Walkout

Kane, Pa., Nov. 8—A bitterly fought strike of 13 weeks ended when Holgate Bros. Co. yielded to a union for the first time in its 152-year history.

Some 400 members of the United Paper, Novelty & Toy Workers Int'l. Union are returning to work with wage increases of eight to 25 per cent, seniority rights, grievance machinery and a union membership maintenance clause.

The company, manufacturer of brush handles and a famous line of educational toys, was founded in 1789, the year of George Washington's first inaugural. Sixty per cent of the workers were paid less than $17 a week, despite the fact that the firm described its staff as "highly skilled."

Advertises for Finks, Winds Up With Strike!

CHESTER, Pa., Nov. 8—Publisher C. R. Long of the Chester Times today was learning the hard way that it's not smart to advertise for strikebreakers before there's even a strike.

Long's advertisement, distributed through the Pennsylvania Newspaper Publishers Assn., accomplished two results:

1. His staff went on strike.
2. He got no strikebreakers.

Basic issues in the strike of 35 editorial and commercial workers—members of the American Newspaper Guild—were the union shop and the five-day week, both of which Long had refused to grant. When the publisher advertised for "sober, industrious reporters, not members of the Guild," the staff voted by a 29-1 margin to strike.

Wages for "sober, industrious reporters" on the Times are among the lowest in the Philadelphia area, according to Pres. Arthur Riordan of the Philadelphia-Camden Guild. Experienced reporters get only $25 and $30 a week, while top pay for editors is $50.

Aided by a few executives, Long made a futile effort to continue publication, but girl pickets blocked a circulation truck. Then Long and his son smuggled out about 100 copies, concealing the bundles beneath their overcoats. Strikers trailed them to the newsstands and bought out their supply. Long finally announced that publication was temporarily suspended.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

MACHIAVELLI once remarked that it is safer for a tyrant to chop off people's heads than to touch their property, "because men more quickly forget the death of their father than the loss of their patrimony."

Perhaps that is why the press and politicians of the propertied classes can whip themselves into a greater fury over any act of labor affecting profits than over anything else.

When Pres. Roosevelt, in a recent radio speech, referred to the "selfish obstruction . . . of a small but dangerous minority of industrial managers," holding out for extra profits, no applause was audible to radio listeners.

But when he followed this up by his remark about "the selfish obstruction of a small but dangerous minority of labor leaders," his stuffed-shirt audience at the hotel where he spoke burst into the most frenzied applause.

This incident, which can be matched many times in Congress and elsewhere, reveals a curious and dangerous state of mind.

It corresponds to the atmosphere created in France, where all attention was devoted to cracking down on labor while profiteers in places of power did the real job of betraying their country with impunity.

While Secretary of Labor Perkins was telling the AFL convention that labor did not have to fight any more for its collective bargaining rights, her own statistical bureau was releasing figures which showed that 40 per cent of the strikes in the first five months of the year were over the issue of union recognition.

Attention Bill Green: The same figures show that 52 per cent of the strikes called in that period were by AFL unions, as against 37 per cent by CIO unions.

In the last month for which figures are available in this Dept. of Labor survey, less than one-half of one per cent of the total man-days of work available were lost due to strikes.

Compare this with the millions and millions of man-days lost to defense production through the "selfish obstruction" of profiteers, monopolists and their ilk, and the planless bungling that results from catering to them.

The crack of the slave-drivers' whip could be heard in a dozen Congressional speeches during the recent splurge of anti-labor hysteria there.

Plans to put the ball and chain on free American labor were brought out from dark cubbyholes and tagged with a "defense" label. Dire threats to put labor in its place and compel workers to work, whether they like it or not, were heard on all sides.

Examination of the Congressional Record reveals that most of the would-be slave-drivers who expressed themselves are Congressmen from poll-tax states.

They evidently fear that, if labor is allowed to retain its democratic rights, this business of democracy is liable to spread—even into their own states.

When an industrialist refuses to bid on defense work until assured all the profit he wants, that's just good business.

When a financier refuses credit to a new defense enterprise because he doesn't consider it a good investment, he's protecting widows and orphans.

When a manufacturer closes down a plant because he can't operate it profitably, after all, he's not in business for his health.

All of the above are solid men of substance who wouldn't dream of striking—anyhow, they wouldn't call it that.

But when American working people withhold their labor until they can sell it for fair wages and under tolerable conditions, by gee and by gosh, that's a strike! And you know what the papers are going to say!

Two opposing ideas are current about national defense. One is that the people who control production should do business as usual, at an unusual profit, while those who do the actual work should be deprived of their rights and driven like slaves.

The other idea is that the work of defending a free country will be enthusiastically undertaken by a free people, if they are assured union security and fair conditions — and above all a free opportunity to throw all their energies into the task they have most at heart.

For Price Control

The issue of price control now before Congress is one that most vitally affects the living standards of every American worker and his family.

It is also basic to national defense, which depends so much upon a healthy internal economy and the welfare and morale of the working population.

One does not have to be an economist to understand some of the worst effects of inflation, which always lurk around the corner in any period of war boom. Prices shoot upward, wages buy less and less, and savings lose more and more of their value. Inflation, in short, cuts wages.

Inflation is already upon us, as anyone who does any shopping knows all too well. Drastic steps to control prices are necessary if it is not to run away with real wages, lower living standards and bring many other ills in its train.

That is why President Philip Murray of the CIO is calling upon the whole membership to join with him in urging upon Congress the speedy adoption of a really effective price control bill.

At the same time he calls upon the whole CIO to oppose any "measures to institute wage control as unnecessary to prevent inflation and as harmful to the American people." Anti-labor forces are vigorously campaigning for wage freezing provisions in the legislation under consideration.

The present price control bill before Congress (H.R. 5479) is "wholly inadequate to meet the swift inflationary movement of prices now taking place," Murray pointed out.

One of the chief reasons for this is that it includes no provisions against speculative inflation in farm products. Working people spend from 35 to 45 per cent of their income on food, and if food prices are not kept within reasonable limits, the worst and most immediate dangers of inflation will remain uncurbed.

At the same time lack of controls in this respect will "jeopardize the interests of the honest working farmers," who suffered as much as any from inflation in the last war, and only speculators and profiteers will benefit.

All CIO members should contact their Congressman on this matter so vital to their bread-and-butter interests as well as to the national welfare. Urge your representatives to oppose all forms of wage freezing and to vote for a really effective price control measure along the lines of the administration proposals first presented to Congress.

Labor's Vote Counts

This is an off year, so far as elections are concerned. But nevertheless there were enough city elections to tell a national story of definite significance.

Nearly all of CIO's five million members are voters. And because they are organized workers, they tend to be more alert politically than the average voter and more purposeful in their voting.

In every major industrial center of the country, the CIO vote is a most important and often decisive factor. In nearly every city, the CIO not only picks out and recommends the candidates most favorable to labor but also organizes effective campaigns by active unionists to insure their election.

All of the results are not at hand as this is written. But in such big cities as Detroit, Cleveland, Buffalo, New York City and many others, mayoralty candidates and other officials were elected who had the benefit of most active CIO campaigns on their behalf. In nearly every case, they could not have been elected without such CIO support.

The results show growth in labor's voting strength and increasing public acceptance of labor's political aims. Let labor-baiters take note.

"High Wages"

There is more excitement over one working man who may have a few dollars to spare on account of overtime, etc., than there is over 99 war profiteers who have more millions than they know what to do with.

Now that the old "silk-shirt" cracks of the last war are again being dug out of newspaper morgues, it is appropriate to look at the real facts about alleged "high wages."

Recent government figures show that in 90 major industries the average weekly wage is only about $31. Even with year-around employment, which few workers have, this means only $1,500 annually, which will provide but the barest necessities of life for a family with two small children.

Other government figures show that less than 10 per cent of American workers earn enough to maintain a small family in modest comfort.

Plan Drive Among U.S. Workers

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8 — A nation-wide drive to organize completely this country's biggest employer, the United States Government, was announced this week by the United Federal Workers Union. The drive will seek to enroll 1,000,000 Federal workers in the CIO.

Techniques used in the Ford campaign can well be applied to the Federal drive, Michael F. Widman, Asst. CIO director, said in speaking at a dinner to launch the drive. They include formation of athletic teams and bands and organization of social events through which prospective members are brought into contact with the union.

FAVORABLE CONDITIONS

With the CIO making great organizational strides in heavy industry, UFW officials feel, they said, that all factors are favorable for CIO organization of government workers, who have the same need for collective bargaining as employes of private industry.

"Wages of hundreds of thousands of Government employes are not high enough to provide a decent standard of living," the UFW stated. "Overtime work without any compensation—much less the time and a half rate that prevails in private industry—is prevalent in Government service. Job security, despite civil service, still exists largely in name only."

AID DEFENSE

UFW officials said the intention of the union is to conduct the drive in such a manner as to help the national defense program in every way possible.

The union will emphasize the sale of defense bonds. The UFW National Executive Board has already appointed a national director for its savings bond and stamp campaign—Arthur Stein.

The UFW also plans to utilize the organizing drive to bring the meaning of the defense program home to government workers by giving them an opportunity to be more active in community defense activities.

Pamphlet on CIO And Defense

Washington, Nov. 8—A pamphlet containing recent statements by CIO officials on problems arising out of national defense has just been issued by the American Council on Public Affairs, 2153 Florida Ave. N. W., Washington, D. C.

Entitled "The CIO and National Defense," the pamphlet contains the text of the Murray Industry Council Plan; a resolution on defense passed by the CIO Exective Board on June 4, 1940; an article by Pres. Murray reprinted from the Nation magazine; the text of a speech by Sec. James B. Carey to the National Industrial Conference Board on May 21; and a speech by John Brophy, director of industrial union councils, to the Alabama CIO, on June 28. The introduction to the pamphlet was written by I. F. Stone, Washington correspondent of the Nation.

No Corny Notes As CIO Strikes Music Makers

ELKHART, Ind., Nov. 8.—A strike for union recognition and a contract has been called by Local 1051, United Band Instrument Workers, against Martin's and Pedler's Band Instrument companies here.

In an appeal for aid for the CIO local, Walter Frisbie, secretary-treasurer of the Indiana CIO Council, said that the local "tried every means available to avoid striking, but the companies' attitude left them no alternative."

The strike, which was called Oct. 9, is being conducted under great difficulties, Frisbie said, "since Elkhart in spite of its active and militant CIO organization is essentially a reactionary city."

Charge Tory Plot To Bar U. S. Orders To Union Plants

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 8—Moves by the most powerful anti-laobr forces in California to cut the ground from under labor's feet in the application of the defense program has stimulated great activity on priorities problems within the city CIO.

The committee of the Los Angeles Industrial Union Council on priorities has discovered that there is a drive, apparently carefully coordinated, by organizations to steer defense contracts away from plants that have union contracts. These organizations are attempting to seize control of defense contract distribution, prevent labor representation on defense councils and boards, and stimulate and coordinate the hiring of non-union labor in defense plants.

Companies and organizations specifically named are the Bank of America, the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, and the open-shop Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association. These outfits were disclosed as the prime backers of labor spying, company unionism, opposition to the proper application of the Wagner Act, repressive legislation and other anti-union activities in California by the LaFollette Civil Liberties Committee.

OPEN SHOPPER IN CHARGE

With William Rosecrans, former president of the L. A. Chamber of Commerce, in a key spot as the local head of priorities and subcontracting, the CIO council's committee had to go over his head to Gov. Culbert Olson to win the right to representation at the "production clinics" to be held by the State Defense Council Nov. 17 and 18. Rosecrans had also rejected the CIO's requests for representation on contract distribution bodies, but the governor indicated this attitude might be corrected.

The CIO committee is atttempting to secure a clause in all defense contracts requiring that all hiring be done through the State Department of Employment, thus circumventing plans to prevent employment of union members in defense industries and enabling better coordination of training and placembent.

PROTEST "IMPORTS"

Another problem brought to the attention of the Governor and other officials is the plan to import 6,000 unskilled workers from Utah for defense work. The committee protested, claiming that priorities layoffs already in effect or scheduled will provide plenty of resident skilled workers without any importations.

The CIO has met with large groups of educators, OPM officials and engineers to work out complex problems, one of which is the need for greater training and retraining facilities and the relaxation of priorities so that necessary machines and materials can be obtained for these classes.

Cooperation in securing defense jobs for skilled workers laid off in non-defense industry has been promised by the state department of employment. The OPM has pledged assistance in getting employers to hire through the state department.

FIGHT CHAMBER

Meanwhile the CIO unions are engaged in a race against the chamber of commerce to enlist the cooperation of the small manufacturers.

The SWOC is working with six manufacturers on the problem of changing over from piping to hand grenades. Local 101 of the Die Casters has met with ten employers, whose plants are being surveyed by OPM engineers for possible defense change-overs. Local 576 of the United Furniture Workers is arranging its second conference with furniture manufacturers for similar purposes. Local 1421, United Electrical, Radio and Machine workers has held its first conference.

Air Chute Pay Shoots Up 29%

BUFFALO, N. Y., Nov. 8 — A temporary wage agreement providing a 29 per cent average hourly pay boost for workers of the Irving Air Chute Co., has been put into a written contract between the company and the United Automobile Workers.

Under the new rates wage scales average from 40 to 50 cents for women and 55 to 70 cents for men.

Signing of the agreement with UAW Local 869 ended threats of a strike and prolonged negotiations and gives Irving workers a living wage and job security for the first time in the plant's history, union officials said. Other terms provide a union maintenance shop; seniority rights, grievance machinery and one week's paid vacation for employes with one year's service.

Appointed

St. Louis, Mo., Nov. 8—Luther M. Slinkard, secretary of the St. Louis Industrial Union Council, this week was appointed by the Governor of Missouri as a State delegate to the Eighth National Conference on Labor Legislation, to be held in Washington, D. C., from November 12 to 14.

'Price Control Bill Inadequate'-Murray

WAGES NOT TO BLAME

"It is not necessary to institute wage control to prevent inflation or keep prices in check," Murray wrote. "Wage increases have not been responsible for recent price rises. Wage increases will not contribute to price rises in the near future if effective price legislation is now established.

"Freezing of wages at this time would mean freezing of the ability of working people to buy farm products in particular. The workers want more food and farmers can produce more food. It is to the interest not only of labor but of the farmers to prevent wages freezing as long as more agricultural commodities can be produced.

"The establishment of wage controls in this bill would be the most dangerous to the welfare of labor. It would wipe out free collective bargaining. It would subject labor to the control of governmental bureaucracy. It would constitute the first step toward direct control of labor by government. The dangers of such a proposal to labor must not be underestimated."

New Pamphlet Bares Racket Employment Agencies

NEW YORK, Nov. 8—Some petty racketeers make a specialty of taking candy away from babies. Still others prefer robbing blind men of pennies.

Less publicized, but just as mean, is the racket conducted by many phoney employment agencies of stealing dollars from unemployed workers.

This week seven liberal organizations threw the spotlight on the problem in a new pamphlet, "Job Brokers—Unlimited," and called for public support of the Tolan Bill (H.R. 5510), which would force licensing of all employment agencies or labor contractors doing business across State lines.

The bill, offered by Rep. Tolan of California has the support of the CIO, which assisted in drafting the measure for consideration by Congress.

NET PAY 45 CENTS

The new pamphlet tells some hair-raising stories. There's the one about a skilled mechanic in Baltimore who was temporarily out of a job. He saw an advertisement: "Wanted—100 Berry Pickers."

"The next morning Bill and 64 other workers were jammed into a truck and driven for 11 hours with only one stop down to a farm in southeastern Virginia," the pamphlet recounts. "There they found quite a patch of strawberries—but for 65 workers it came to just two hours' work. Picking 15 quarts of berries, Bill made 45 cents—and that was all." The employment agency made a dollar for each man it recruited!

MANY RACKETS

The hearings of the Tolan committee investigating interstate migration of workers have found instance of workers all over the country being sent to non-existent jobs, or jobs which turn out to be far different from what the worker was led to expect.

"Spreading false information; sending workers out where no jobs exist; sending workers to jobs without telling them what fees they will have to pay, or what wages they will get; forcing the worker, through labor camps, to buy things he does not need; fee-splitting—these are some of the abuses which come to light as the Tolan Committee turns the spotlight on the problems of migratory workers," the pamphlet points out.

URGES SUPPORT OF BILL

Unions are urged to urge enactment of the Tolan Bill (H.R. 5510) by writing to their own Congressmen and to the subcommittee of the House Labor Committee: Reps. W. F. Norrell of Arkansas; J. F. Hunter, Ohio; E. Worley, Texas; J. C. Baldwin, New York; and R. Welch, California.

Copies of "Job Brokers—Unlimited" may be obtained by writing to the National Child Labor Committee, 419 Fourth Avenue, New York City. They sell at the rate of 400 for $10.

CIO Label On Whiskey

Washington, Nov. 8—The CIO Distillery Workers Organizing Committee today announced that whiskey manufactured by the Pennsylvania Distilling Co. Inc. now bears the CIO label. Brands include: Union Town, Pennbrook and Good Old Guckenheimer.

The Union urged all CIO members to demand the union label.

Seamen Get Green Light In Suit Against Winchell

NEW YORK, Nov. 8—Walter Winchell, Broadway's keyhole-peeping columnist, may soon have to answer in court for his labor baiting of the National Maritime Union, which included statements that NMU members carried emery dust and mercury for sabotage purposes.

Part of a court fight started in June, 1940, a unanimous decision of five judges of the Appellate Division of the N. Y. Supreme Court this week held that the NMU may prosecute its claim for $1,000,000 damages from the effervescent Hearstling.

The decision, according to NMU Attorney William L. Standard, is a decisive one in that it establishes a precedent which can be relied upon by all unions to defend themselves against the attacks of not only an irresponsible snooper like Winchell but of all other radio and newspaper columnists.

People's Health Endangered By Milk Price Rises

(By Federated Press)

NEW YORK, Nov. 8—Big milk companies throughout the nation are soaking the consumer while the soaking is good, Consumers Union reports in the Oct. 30 issue of its weekly newsletter, Bread and Butter.

During the year, from September, 1940, to September, 1941, milk prices were raised in typical cities to these levels:

	1941 Price	Increase
New York	17c	17%
St. Louis	15c	20%
Chicago	15½c	19%
Cleveland	13c	18%
San Francisco	14c	16%
El Paso	13c	30%

In a survey of 98 cities, the Department of Agriculture found that in 69 the price had been raised from 1c to 3c a quart.

PRICE RISE DANGEROUS

"Considering the importance of milk as a food, a milk price rise is always dangerous," Consumers Union comments. "Right now, in the midst of our defense preparations, it's little short of catastrophic.

"Families are not likely to turn to meat, eggs, or fresh fruits and vegetables when they can no longer afford milk. Prices of all these protective foods are high as compared with the cheap, filling, but incomplete breads and cereals that people do turn to.

"That diet shift means poorer health and stunted bodies for children. It means less energy, less resistance to disease."

LESS MILK, MORE PROFITS

The ugly part of the story is that the milk companies can actually increase their profits by selling less milk. Farmers are paid a blend price, obtained by calculating the quantities of milk sold as fluid milk and the amounts used for the manufacture of butter, cheese and evaporated milk.

In New York, for example, the farmer gets 6.2c for milk that the consumer buys as fresh milk, 4.8c if the milk is used for evaporated milk and only 3.8c if it goes into butter. The blend price for September was 5.5c.

If sales of fresh milk increase substantially, the farmer gets a higher blend price; but if fresh milk sales drop and the unsold milk is diverted to the manufacture of butter and cheese, the farmer gets a lower blend price and the milk companies boost their profits.

At this time, Consumers Union points out, the milk companies are particularly interested in manufacturing butter, cheese and evaporated milk, which are being sold in huge quantities and at vastly higher prices to the U. S. and British governments as well as to U. S. consumers. The wholesale price of butter has risen 42 per cent since the outbreak of war, while cheese is up 72 per cent.

EXPLODE COMPANIES' ALIBIS

The favorite explanation of the milk companies—that higher milk prices are necessary because the farmers and milk handlers require more money—is exploded by Consumers Union.

"Of each penny increase," says Bread & Butter, "four-tenths of a cent has gone to the milk distributors. Yet they were making very handsome profits even at the old prices. Furthermore, many independents undersell the big dealers and still make money.

"The only reason for the distributors getting that extra four-tenths of a cent is that nobody stopped them."

Rent Profiteers Face Battle From Labor

By FRED D'AVILA

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8—Soak-the-poor, profiteering landlords who have hiked defense area rents in some cases more than 50 per cent are meeting firm opposition from organized labor, the U. S. Office of Price Administration stated today.

Of 110 rent control committees set up in 26 states, organized labor is represented on 79. In some places labor voluntarily was given a part in this important defense function, but in others, such as nearby Baltimore, the Industrial Union Council had to fight to get representation.

Evidence that the rent problem is primary are the more than two per cent increases for all homes in the $30 a month or lower class in such defense cities as Baltimore, Buffalo, Cleveland, Birmingham and Seattle, from June to September.

The two per cent covers all such homes, whether rent was raised or not. In Buffalo the total increase was 2.8 per cent, but since 32 per cent of the homes were affected, the actual average increase for them was 8.8 per cent—with many individual cases much higher.

WORKERS SUFFER

Most of the rent increases affect workers' homes renting for $30 a month or less.

Not only is the percentage rent increase higher for this classification, but in Norfolk, Richmond and Denver the actual dollar increase is more than that of higher rent dwellings. In most other cities, surveyed by the U. S. Dept. of Labor, the low-rent dollar increase is almost as much as the high-rent.

Most rent committees have little power except publicity to use against gouging landlords who refuse to compromise on exhorbitant increases. Hearings are held in some cities, but in others, such as Baltimore, the committee depends on person-to-person persuasion.

PRESS BOYCOTT NEWS

If this fails, publicity is resorted to, but in Baltimore this has proved unsuccessful due to an employer press boycott of news that would adversely affect thousands of dollars of real estate advertising.

In South Bend, Ind., a landlord used the common trick of ordering out the tenant so the landlord could re-rent the apartment at a higher rate.

However, the tenant, who was a member of the United Automomile Workers Union, refused to move. A picket line around the house soon changed the landlord's mind.

In Patterson, N. J., a landlord ordered rent raises for 116 apartments. The rent committee, which included a labor representative, called him for a conference.

Disregarding the call, he secured eviction notices. The unions pulled a rent strike and threatened further action, so he agreed to a hearing, after which he reduced the increases and made needed repairs.

AUTO UNION ACTIVE

In Detroit the UAW receives complaints, investigates them and forwards them to a mediation commission. Landlords are subpoenaed for hearings, and reasons for increases, such as higher fuel costs, repairs or profiteering, are discussed.

Because of the dilapidated condition of many Detroit homes, landlords often can be brought to terms by demands for strict application of City health laws.

BILL FOR DISTRICT

For overcrowded District of Columbia, which is controlled by Congress, the House is considering a bill, H. R. 5890, which would set up a Housing Administrator with legal powers to keep rents within "reasonable" and loosely defined limits.

The administrator could demand landlords' attendance at public hearings and could punish violators of the law with as much as a year in jail and $1,000 fine for serious violations.

Fight 41% Rent Jump In Philly

Philadelphia, Nov. 8—Protest against rent increases as high as 41 per cent at the Passyunk Defense Housing Project here was made today by the Philadelphia Industrial Union Council.

Rents which ranged from $24.75 to $34.75 a month were suddenly jacked up to $35 to $45 a month, the Council pointed out.

LETTER FROM BERSING

In a letter to the local Housing Authority, Carl Bersing, Council president, said:

"I feel that the raising of these rents without any public notice is not in accord with the announced policy of our National Administration of putting a ceiling on the cost of living and preventing hardships to the defense workers."

Bersing declared that the rent rises harmed the development of the defense program and of national unity, "so seriously needed in the face of the terrible menace of Hitlerism to our country," and urged that theoretical rents be restored.

How to Set Up A Fair Rent Committee—

Washington, Nov. 8—How to set up a fair rent committee, if your community isn't one of the 110 that already has such a body, was explained today by the U. S. Office of Price Administration.

OPA representatives said the committees, which are intended to prevent exorbitant rent increases, should be appointed by mayors or other responsible municipal authorities.

"Committees should be composed of persons known for their good judgment and fairmindedness and trusted by all groups in the community," the OPA stated.

The OPA recommended as committee consultants local sanitary, building inspection, welfare and home registration officials.

Cannery Union Wins Memphis Poll

Memphis, Nov. 8—Workers in the two plants of Buckeye Cotton Oil Co., subsidiary of Proctor and Gamble chose the CIO United Cannery Agricultural Packing and Allied Workers in a Labor Board election by a vote of 713 for UCAPAWA to 375 for the so-called "independent" union.

"Winning of the largest cotton oil mill in the United States into CIO ranks is a major victory in the organizing drive in this industry," said Bill Haber UCAPAWA Representative, adding that "the heavy CIO vote is an impressive answer to open-shop propaganda and vigilante- terrorism in the entire area."

Form Citizens' Defense Group

Cumberland, Md., Nov. 8—A Tri-State Citizens' Committee for National Defense, composed of representatives from labor, industry and other community groups, this week met to plan details of a consumer protection and production program as outlined by a Conference for National and Living Defense, which last week set up the Committee.

The broad program, as outlined by more than 75 Conference delegates, included full support for the Administration's foreign policy, the complete "military annihilation of Hitler and Hitlerism," aid to Russia, Britain and China, and repeal of the Neutrality Act.

Auto Union Ladies' Group Fights Higher Living Costs

WASHINGTON, Nov 8—A nation-wide drive to check the rising cost of living was initiated today with the visit here of a national delegation from the United States Automobile Workers Auxiliary which, in a statement to Congress, urged immediate enactment of price control legislation.

Headed by Mrs. Faye Stephenson of Cleveland, national UAW Auxiliary president, strongly opposed wage control legislation pointing out that Dr. Isador Lubin of the Bureau of Labor Statistics and other economists had testified that there is no real relation between rising wages and increased prices.

STALLING TACTICS

"We are convinced," the UAW delegation stated, "that much of the argument for wage control is an attempt to delay and defeat the establishment of price and rent control legislation."

The Congressional statement, made for 10,000 women in UAW auxiliaries and thousands of consumers who have authorized the delegation to speak for them, said:

"The women of America are rallying to the call for participating in the strengthening of the defense program by raising the living standards of their families and communities. The women we represent are responding to that call with whole-hearted enthusiasm. We ask that . . . Congress . . . make it possible for us to do the important job of strengthening the human defenses by legislating against skyrocketing prices which are impoverishing the nutrition and well-being of the people."

Keep Wages Free - - For A Free America

"A ceiling on wages means a ceiling on a man's standard of living. A ceiling on wages in a period of rising prices means the lowering of the level of living of Americans"—CIO PRES. PHILIP MURRAY.

For the worker, wages are the measure of his standard of living. Workers don't own stocks or bonds. They aren't able to build up large savings. The race between the pay envelope and the grocery bill takes every cent of their income. When the pay envelope lags behind, workers' living standards and the standards of workers' families suffer.

Wages are spent on the basic necessities. Workers don't buy luxury goods. They buy the things that every family needs to continue living.

Many people who argue for wage freezing contend that wage increases will be used to buy scarce goods, thus bidding prices up and causing inflation. This argument does not stand up, since most of the things workers buy can be produced in enough quantity to meet all demands. In fact, the production of these goods and services is capable of great expansion, and millions who are still unemployed can be put to work producing them. Workers use wage increases to buy more food, clothing, medical care; things urgently needed to improve basic living standards.

In a period of increasing prices and mounting cost of living, wage increases are the only defense the worker has against low living standards. They are the only bulwark between the family welfare and worsened conditions. As President Philip Murray pointed out:

"The amount of wages paid to a man determines how he and his family shall live. Wages, that means real wages, are the measure of the welfare of the American citizen. For most workers it is their only income and their one claim on food, clothing and shelter.

WHO STANDS TO LOSE?

The unions of the CIO have won many wage increases in the past few months, and are winning them today. The CIO rightly regards these increases as a contribution to the living standards of its members and to the standards of the entire country.

Everyone benefits when wage increases are won—everyone, that is, except a tiny minority whose self-interest blinds them to the interest of the nation. When a worker's pay envelope grows larger, the farmers, the small business men, the professional workers benefit immediately. They sell more of the basic goods and services that workers need. An increase in the consumption of these goods and services means an increase in the income of the people supplying them.

This is the concluding installment of a new CIO pamphlet: Keep Wages Free for a Free America. The pamphlet, CIO publication No. 58, may be ordered from the CIO Publicity Dept., 1106 Connecticut Avenue, N. W., Washington, D. C. 100 for $1.75, 500 for $5.75.

When a worker's pay envelope shrinks, the living standards of the farmers, the merchants, the professional workers shrink along with it. To outlaw wage increases by freezing wages would immediately freeze the farmer's and the small businessman's income. It would do more; it would lower the standard of living throughout the United States.

Who stands to lose by freezing? The people of the United States—not only the workers, but the men and women who supply the workers directly and indirectly with their needs.

Who stands to gain? Only those whose already bountiful profits would be further increased, whose already ample margin between cost of production and selling price would be still further increased.

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

Wage increases are won by collective bargaining — the democratic American way of working out the relations between employers and workers.

"Wages under a free labor movement are set up by a great number of voluntary conferences, in which the rates of the wages covered under such conference are determined by voluntary and collective agreement," President Murray pointed out in testimony before Congress.

"It takes little imagination to see what danger lies in the replacement of this process of government fiat and enforcing officers. Under such a system not only would it be necessary to force labor to accept the wages the government sets, but it would also be necessary to require industry to pay such wages, no more, no less."

REGIMENTATION

Wage freezing is the opposite of collective bargaining. It would bring the worst kind of regimentation into every American home. It would be, as President Murray has said, "the beginning of enslaved labor."

No nation can remain free when its people are forced to work under conditions they have no voice in setting. Today, our nation is faced with the very real threat of attack on its security and on its liberty. We need more than ever before to be alert against any attempt to curb or regiment our people.

The CIO and all of labor in this country is determined to do its full in defending American liberty. The CIO has shown its desire and its ability to help plan the defense program so that the maximum effort can be put forth in protecting democracy. The members of the CIO, as workers in defense industries, have been entrusted with the practical carrying out of defense—with the creation of weapons to repel aggression.

Free labor is the strongest defender democracy can have. To say to workers in this nation that they must accept arbitrary wage limits, and consequently accept a lower standard of living, is to weaken defense. It is a long step toward a lowered morale. It is a breach in the wall that the people of America are erecting against fascism.

President Murray pointed out this basic truth when he told Congress: "The only way to maintain the effective cooperation of the working people in the production effort is to strengthen the system of free collective bargaining. Great Britain even at war and under attack has not sought to destroy that system. We here in this country must not do it either under the guise of wage control or any other means."

And President Murray summed up the case against wage freezing when he expressed the five main points of CIO's position thus:

1. "Inflation must be prevented.

2. "The present situation justifies measures to control those prices which are threatening to create an inflationary movement.

3. "Wage increases have not been responsible for recent price rises.

4. "It is not necessary to institute wage control to prevent inflation or keep prices in check.

5. "An attempt to institute wage control would immediately bring in its wake the breakdown of voluntary collective bargaining, the establishment of dictatorial controls over labor and industry and the destruction of a free democratic labor movement."

The dangers of wage freezing are very real and very imminent. Powerful forces in Congress and in the newspapers are scheming to include wage ceilings in current proposals for necessary price controls.

Write to your Congressmen and to your Senators. Tell them that defense of democracy requires defense of the American standard of living. Tell them to leave wages to the democratic, American way of collective bargaining.

Write to them now!

CIO Wins Pay Boost, Ends Shipyard Strike

NEW YORK, Nov. 8—A wage-gain victory was won this week by the Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers in settlement of a five-day strike at the Brooklyn yard of the Robins Dry Dock & Repair Co.

A meeting attended by two thirds of the 5,800 yard employes voted to accept a temporary wage settlement that raised the basic pay for laborers to 72 cents an hour. The agreement, which provided that wage negotiations were to be further continued, also stated that:

Helpers receiving less than 74 cents an hour were to have their pay raised to that figure and those getting between 74 and 78 cents were to be brought up to 78 cents. A similar upward adjustment was provided for improvers making less than upward adjustment was provided for improvers making lesss than 92 cents an hour.

The IUMSWA struck after accusing the company of refusing to put into effect wage increases previously agreed upon.

Win Walkout

Philadelphia, Nov. 8—A one-day stoppage at the Pennsylvania Mutual Life Insurance Co. convinced the company that its employes meant business and a new contract was speedily signed providing a 25 per cent pay increase for clerical workers, and a 20 per cent increase on collections for agent.

The previous contract with Local 22, United Office & Professional Workers, covering insurance agents only, expired Oct. 28.

100,000 Face Job Loss From Steel Shortage

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 8—Jobs of more than 100,000 workers in steel and allied metal industries are threatened by priorities, the Steel Workers Organizing Committee reported today. Adoption of the Murray Steel Council plan would have eased the crisis, SWOC stated.

Shortage of materials, especially steel, has already affected 55,000 workers in the finishing departments of large integrated steel mills and in steel fabricating plants manufacturing such items for domestic use as washing machines, lawn mowers, etc.

MANY DEVELOPMENTS

Threatening developments in the industry include:

Chicago sheet and strip mills are operating at only 50 per cent capacity because of shortage of semi-finished steel, diverted to the manufacture of heavier products for use in the construction of tanks, ships and freight cars. Hence, 30,000 workers are hired only three to four days a week—some as few as two or three days.

At the Irvin strip mill of Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corp., at the Rod & Wire Mill of Youngstown Sheet & Tube and at the Merchant Mill hundreds of employes either are working part time or have been laid off.

MANY ON PART TIME

Typical developments are recorded throughout the industry. The SWOC estimated that 25,000 steel fabricating plant workers have been laid off or have been reduced to part time.

These developments were predicted as early as last January by CIO President Philip Murray in a report on the steel industry to President Roosevelt.

He proposed that a steel industry council, consisting of an equal number of representatives of SWOC and management, with a government chairman, be created to coordinate steel production facilities with demands.

5-POINT PLANK

Had the five-point Murray plan been adopted, the impending priorities crisis could have largely been avoided, the SWOC stated. The plan provided the following steps to ease unemployment:

1. Spreading of price defense contracts and subcontracts as broadly as possible.

2. Cooperation of labor with local management to adjust facilities for production to the changing industrial picture.

3. Protection of jobs and priority rights of workers in affected plants.

4. Procurement of emergency work and special compensation benefits for those thrown off jobs.

5. Effective retraining and reemployment of workers whose old employment has ended.

Big Leather Tannery Ends Fight, Signs

GOWANDA, N. Y., Nov. 8 (FP)—The second toughest organizational struggle in the leather industry ended in a union victory when the Moench Tanning Co., subsidiary of the anti-labor Brown Shoe Co., signed its first agreement with Local 44, CIO Intl. Fur & Leather Workers Union.

The 4-year struggle was rivaled only by the fight to organize the Elkland Leather Co. in the notorious company town of Elkland, Pa.

The agreement, won when the 450 workers threatened to strike, grants full union recognition. Wage negotiations will be opened within 90 days. The workers won 5 cents hourly increases in a walkout last spring.

SHOES FOR ARMY

The firm is processing leather for Army shoes and for many years has processed leather for official Boy Scout shoes. Its parent firm is the third largest shoe company in the United States.

The Brown company has long made it a policy to interest small town businessmen in raising enough money to subsidize a factory. The businessmen are then supposed to see that union organizers are kept out, lest the factory be abandoned.

During a lockout that followed a union drive in 1937 the local businessmen helped create Tancraft, a company union, and the plant reopened.

Formation of Tancraft touched off a long fight against company unionism. The stooge outfit was ordered dissolved by the NLRB in April, 1940, whereupon the Independent Tannery Union was set up. The successor was also outlawed by the board in a ruling that was upheld by the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

But the firm was still unwilling to yield to the IFLWU. It took four months of negotiations climaxed by a strike vote to get the contract.

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

BULLETIN: Word of the smashing victory of the United Office and Professional Workers in the Prudential election—1579 for CIO, 78 for AFL, 576 for no union—comes in as the CIO NEWS goes to press. The UOPWA deserves the heartiest congratulations of the entire CIO for this excellent job.

CIO Retail and Wholesale Workers have rolled up an impressive string of National Labor Relations Board victories in recent elections at Montgomery Ward's four stores in the Detroit area. Workers had three choices—CIO, AFL and no union. In each case they chose CIO, as these results show:

Dearborn store: CIO, 259; AFL, 5; No union, 17. Grand River store: CIO, 322; AFL, 8; and No union, 26. Gratiot store: CIO, 237; AFL, 8; No union, 17. Royal Oak store: CIO, 66; AFL, 49; No union, 39.

In addition to winning these polls, the Retail and Wholesale Workers have won their strike at the Detroit Sears, Roebuck Co. after two weeks of picketing. The union won recognition, grievance machinery, and a $3-a-week blanket wage increase.

Department stores are cracking to CIO, and the latest to show the trend is the Marshall Field store in Chicago, where the workers voted 10 to 1 for CIO over the AFL. Marshall Field, incidentally, is the biggest dry goods firm in the world. Its thousands of exploited workers have piled up a fortune estimated at upwards of $100,000,000 for the Marshall Field family. Now the workers will begin to have a chance to get a little return on the wealth their labor created.

AFL RAIDING AGAIN

The AFL, despite all the pleas for national unity that are made and echoed at AFL conventions, has been trying to raid CIO unions again. Latest example is at the R. H. Macy Dept. Store in New York, where the Teamsters attempted to muscle in on CIO drivers and other workers under CIO contract. The attempt was beaten back when the Teamsters refused to pick up the challenge of an election offered by the Retail and Wholesale Workers.

Similar tactics have been tried in the Ford Motor Co., where R. J. Thomas and the writer have been negotiating on a number of grievances during the week. Here the AFL has succeeded in getting elections set in 14 small Ford plants. Whatever the outcome, they will not affect the solid CIO front throughout the Ford empire. Splitting tactics tried at the time the contract was won were defeated when the Ford workers chose CIO by a landslide majority. The present small elections in no way affect the main contract.

A new drive has been put under way by the United Federal Workers, CIO union covering well over a million U. S. government employes. Assistant Organizing Director Michael F. Widman, Jr., spoke at a recent dinner launching the drive. Contrary to the general opinion, U. S. government employes are just as much in need of organizing as any group of industrial or white collar workers in the country.

At time of writing, the captive mine situation is still before the National Defense Mediation Board. The strike was called off pending a full and final report by the entire Board, following United Mine Workers President John L. Lewis's recommendation. This case is one of the most important to come before the Mediation Board and is being watched by workers throughout the United States. The coal miners have every right to the union shop in the captive mine contract. If 90 per cent of the industry can operate under this necessary protective clause, the 10 per cent owned by the steel companies can accept it also.

PROGRESS

Down in Georgia, where the polltax Congressmen flourish, the CIO has made new headway in organizing some of the most exploited workers in industry. Latest victory is the contract won by the United Shoe Workers of America at the Bona-Allen Shoe Co., which brings a 15 per cent pay raise and other important gains to 2,100 workers. The contract was negotiated by Shoe Workers President Frank McGrath, with the help of Atlanta Regional Director Gilman.

In the greater New York area, the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers won an election over the AFL Electrical Workers at the Bayonne, N. J., branch of the American Radiator Co. by 642 to 169. Local Industrial Union 1149 has won a contract at the Mundett Cork Co., giving wage boosts of from 10.5 to 12.5 cents an hour. The contract followed an election victory of over eight to one.

Two strikes were won in Newark, N. J., according to Regional Director Pete Mosele. These were at the Federal Iron Corp., where 140 CIO Construction Workers won a closed shop, check-off and 12 cents an hour increase, and at the Display Box Co., also in Newark.

N.Y. Lettershops Sign Master Pact For 4,000 In Union

NEW YORK, Nov. 8—One of the first master contracts ever to be signed in the white collar field—covering 4,000 New York lettershop workers—has been negotiated by the United Office & Professional Workers Union and the employers' association of the direct mail industry—Mail Advertising Sales Assn.

Terms of the pact, ratified by a six-to-one vote of workers in a mail referendum, include:

Union shop and dues check-off; control of hiring hall; increase of 18 per cent for the majority of the workers; guaranteed wage increase after one year (with minimum wage scales to be established by a joint union-management committee).

One week's vacation with pay; five additional legal holidays; time and a half for overtime and double time on Saturdays; 40-hour week; cost of living clause; union control over installation of new machines; grievances and arbitration machinery.

Contract talks began six weeks after the UOPWA Direct Mail Organizing Committee initiated its three-month-old drive.

Negotiations were carried on by UOPWA President Lewis Merrill and Local 16 President Peter Hawley, for the union, and David Arvan, attorney for the employers' association.

Call Parley On Anti-Negro Bias

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 8—A program for equality of the Negro worker in industry and in the community will get full consideration this week at a conference here called by the Negro Labor Committee of District 50, CIO United Mine Workers.

Principal speakers will be Ferdinand Smith, secretary of the National Maritime Union, and R. W. Hanson, regional director of District 50.

White and Negro delegates from every District 50 local in New Jersey will attend the meeting, the first of its kind in northern Jersey union history. A permanent committee, representing the various locals in the district, and officials will be elected at the meeting to carry out the program of the conference.

FOUR PROBLEMS

The conference is expected to take action along the following lines:

1. End discrimination against Negroes in industry.
2. End discrimination against Negroes in the community where high rents, and bias against Negroes in public places are a frequent occurrence.
3. Equality in defense jobs for Negroes and equal training for defense jobs for Negroes.
4. Legislative action to enforce anti-discrimination laws and to propose further measures to curtail anti-Negro bias.

AFFECTS EVERYONE

"The problem of the Negro worker is the problem of the white workers and of all those who sincerely believe in democracy," the conference call pointed out. "The greatest blot on our American way of life today is the undemocratic discrimination against the 11,000,000 Negroes in our country in the communities, in industry and even in the armed forces.

"To wage a successful fight for democracy, we must work to end the Nazi concept that the Negro is an inferior person and therefore subject to discrimination.

"Discrimination against the Negro is an opening wedge to a general attack on all workers and on our democracy."

Negro Group Convenes

Washington, Nov. 8—What National Negro Congress officials characterized as "the most important meeting in the history of the organization," will take place here November 16 when the National Board of the Congress gathers to discuss important policy and organizational perspectives.

The meeting will be concerned chiefly with the national defense program and the need for unity of action among the entire Negro people in support of the fight to destroy Hitler and Hitlerism.

Negro and white administration officials and key Negro figures in community life throughout the country have been invited to sit in on the deliberations with the National Board members and council officials.

Labor Groups Back Anti-Hitler Rally in Albany

Schenectady, N. Y., Nov. 8—Labor and civic organizations in Albany and Schenectady have joined in the sponsorship of a Smash Hitler rally to be held at the Erie Theater here on Nov. 13.

Prof. Douglas Campbell of Union College heads the sponsoring committee, while its secretary is S. M. Vottis, president of the Capital District CIO Council and financial secretary of Local 301, United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

Pointing out that tyranny and aggression "threaten our democratic institutions and fundamental beliefs," the conference call urged that "we, the American people, stand firmly together in support of all measures necessary for the defense of our country."

CIO PRESIDENT PHILIP MURRAY

Warns of Threat to Nation

(Other Stories On Inside Pages)

DETROIT, Nov. 17—Pres. Philip Murray reported today to the CIO's fourth annual convention on his year's stewardship of the nation's greatest labor organization, pledging further organizational advances during the next 12 months, but warning that "the wanton acts of aggression" by Hitler's Nazi Germany threaten the security and democracy of the United States.

American "liberties, traditions" are at stake, Murray warned, adding that "the workers have been, are now and will always be in opposition to Hitlerism. It must be defeated and destroyed. Democracy can survive in no other way. . . .

"Toward this end the CIO offers its complete support to President Roosevelt's policy of furnishing through our government all possible economic and material aid to Britain, the Soviet Union and China, which are the nations now carrying on the struggle to rid the world of Nazism, the enemy of mankind."

The CIO president's report cited the magnificent organizational gains made by labor during the past year in winning a union shop from Henry Ford, organizing Little Steel, abolishing the Southern wage differential in the mining industry and of bringing union benefits to hundreds of thousands of new members in scores of industries. He estimated that CIO union negotiations have brought an additional one and a quarter billion dollars into workers' pockets during the past year. Organizing efforts in the next year will be concentrated on aircraft, oil and the South, he indicated.

The report examined in considerable detail the present status of the defense program, asserting that one of its "continuing failures" has been a lack of planning for full production and full employment.

Miners, Operators Negotiate; Union Policy Group Meets

(See Stories, Page Three)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15—Bolstered by the unanimous support of the national policy committee of the United Mine Workers of America, President John L. Lewis and his associate UMWA officers were negotiating with steel company presidents in Washington for a settlement of the captive mine dispute, as The CIO NEWS went to press.

Negotiations were renewed following a visit to the White House Friday morning by Lewis, Philip Murray and Thomas Kennedy, as ranking officers of the UMWA, together with Frank Purnell of Youngstown Sheet & Tube, Benjamin F. Fairless of U. S. Steel, and Eugene Grace of Bethlehem Steel.

The coal crisis was caused by an open-shop decision of the National Defense Mediation Board. The Board backed up the steel companies' stubborn insistance upon special open-shop privileges in their captive coal mines, regardless of the union-shop procedures in force throughout nearly the entire industry.

President Roosevelt urged the Mine Workers' leaders and the steel company representatives to settle their differences without a stoppage. His message was reported Friday afternoon to the UMWA policy committee, consisting of some 200 union representatives from all sections of the industry.

The policy committee unanimously adopted a resolution declaring that it "approves, commends and sustains the position taken, and the policies followed by the president of the union and his associate officers in all matters heretofore affecting the captive mine dispute."

APPROVE ACTION

The UMWA committee also commended and approved the action of Vice President Murray and Secretary-Treasurer Kennedy and their associates in resigning from the National Defense Mediation Board.

Urge U. S. Speed Pace of Workers' Housing Program

DETROIT, Nov. 17 — Increased housing appropriations are needed—and needed quickly—Pres. Murray asserted in his convention report, because of the "tremendously increased . . . gravity of the housing shortage, which has resulted in extensive overcrowding of industrial areas."

About one-third of the defense housing funds have been allotted to army and navy personnel, the report said, "leaving insufficient funds for the industrial workers of the nation."

The report noted that the CIO Committee on Housing has found "the present government defense housing program utterly inadequate to meet the long-prevailing needs among low income groups and industrial workers generally.

"We feel it is imperative that Congress act immediately to appropriate more funds for defense housing."

SHORTAGES

The Housing Committee has cooperated with CIO affiliates confronted by housing shortages, the report said, and with the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee "in developing modern industrial production methods in the backward housing industry—modern production technics which would result in lower costs, greater speed and the creation of a real mass housing industry."

One aspect of the defense housing program that received special the so-called "Camden Plan," first worked out by the Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers and U. S. housing experts.

"The mutual mortgage feature of the 'Camden Plan' offers workers advantages both of home ownership and of rental housing without the risks and penalties that accompany either alone," the report said, "and it offers the government self-liquidating projects."

CURRIER CASE

Implied criticism of the OPM's recent withholding of a contract to the Currier Lumber Co., Detroit, a firm under contract with the CIO, was contained in the report.

"The goals of swift low-cost housing of defense workers are not being served by the recent attempt to discriminate against contractors that employ CIO labor and modern factory production technics," Murray declared. Referring to the Currier case, the report stated:

"This action of discrimination against the CIO unions must be severely condemned. The principle of equality of treatment by the federal government must be extended to all CIO unions in government defense projects."

Thomas Kennedy the Mediation Board's refusal to recommend a union shop for 53,000 workers in mines owned by steel companies. Kennedy joined CIO Pres. Murray in resigning from the Board.

CIO Officials Quit Board; Dist. 50 Withdraws Cases

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14—Resignation of CIO President Murray and Mine Union Sec.-Treas. Thomas Kennedy from membership in the National Defense Mediation Board was followed today by the protest resignations of seven CIO union officials from positions as alternate members of the National Defense Mediation Board.

Simultaneously, John Owens, Ohio CIO president and head of the mine union district in the Buckeye State, announced his resignation as chief consultant for the OPM Labor Division, also in protest against the Mediation Board attack.

Quitting the Mediation Board were: Sec. James B. Carey, Vice-Pres. S. H. Dalrymple, Vice Pres. Emil Rieve, Clinton S. Golden of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, John Brophy, CIO director of industrial union councils, and Hugh Lyons, CIO regional director in New England and Vice Pres. Herbert Payne of the textile union.

Carey's letter to President Roosevelt charged that the refusal of the majority "to face the issue" has rendered the Board useless, so that it "can no longer make an effective contribution to national defense."

Dalrymple wrote to the President that "the Board's decision is almost inexplicable in the light of the facts presented to it."

"Naturally, under these circumstances, the Board's decision cannot but result in an impairment of the national unity which we so greatly desire. I am fearful that it may result in arousing suspicion in the minds of many working people, not only as to the Board itself, but as to the intentions of the Administration as a whole."

SHOULD ENCOURAGE LABOR

The rubber union president pointed out that "if we are to fight in the cause of democracy against Hitlerism we should welcome the growth of democratic organizations like trade unions. We should welcome their expansion and encourage them in increased participation in the affairs of government.

"The recent decision of the NDMB is a negation of these hopes and aspirations of labor."

Lyons said it was "unfortunate that an agency created by Executive Order for the purpose of eliminating conflict within the defense industries should so prejudice its position."

HALT BOARD'S WORK

The mass resignations practically halted work by the Mediation Board, a large proportion of whose current cases involved CIO affiliates.

Meanwhile, District 50, the gas, coke and chemical division of the United Mine Workers, announced it had withdrawn all pending cases before the Board and that it would not use the Board's services in the future.

The announcement was made by District Pres. O. E. Gasaway, who said the union has three cases before the Board, involving 900 workers at Sloss-Sheffield, Birmingham, Ala.; 2,700 at U. S. Gypsum plants throughout the country, and 250 at the Solvay Process Co. in New Orleans.

Bayonne, N. J. (FP)—Employes of the American Radiator Co. voted 642 to 169 for the United Electrical Radio and Machine Workers (CIO) in an NLRB election.

Favor Close Ties With S. America

Washington, Nov. 17— Close and friendly relationship between the CIO and bona fide labor movements in South and Central American nations is urged in the report of President Murray to the convention.

"Organized labor must establish a basis for such cooperative effort in order to achieve for the workers a realization of their present aspirations which underlie their concentrated effort to crush Hitlerism," the report declares.

Vigorous protest is expressed in the report against the Secretary of Labor for denying genuine representation to the CIO at the International Labor Office conference held recently in New York City, by designating two CIO union officials as members of the advisory personnel.

"Both your President and Secretary have advised the Secretary of Labor and the President of the United States that the CIO can not accept and strongly disapproves

Launch Big Oil Drive in Texas

HOUSTON, Tex., Nov. 15—Edwin S. Smith, one of the few men to enter the ranks of organized labor after serving in a high government post, opened the CIO drive among local oil workers by sharing the platform at a meeting here this week with President O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers Intl. Union.

The former National Labor Relations Board member drew more than 200 workers at an impromptu gathering, and warned them against the "benevolent father" picture that goes hand in hand with company unionism.

Smith recalled that the company union scheme was born in blood after the Ludlow massacre of strikers on the Colorado coal fields of the Rockefeller family.

COMPANY UNIONS

"There is nothing any company union has ever done for workers that a bona fide union can't do better," Smith declared. "The company union is the gift of the employer and all that it gives can be taken away at his pleasure."

Defining Fascism as "the most devilish system ever conceived for the enslavement of free peoples," Smith warned that the United States is menaced both by Fascism from abroad and by Fascist growth here, citing anti-Semitism, attacks on labor and growth of monopoly as evidence. No element has greater interest in democracy than labor, he said.

Southern Firms Sign Contracts

Houston, Tex., Nov. 17—Two more southern firms with a long record of stubborn refusal to deal with the union have finally signed contracts with the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, reports Frank A. Hardesty, SWOC district director for Texas and Oklahoma

Black, Sivalls & Bryson, Inc., in Oklahoma City, and the Texas Electric Steel Casting Co. of Houston, have signed agreements providing substantial pay increases; paid vacations, seniority rights and other standard union terms.

Hail CIO Role in Fight Against Discrimination

DETROIT, Nov. 17—The CIO, which bans race discrimination, is taking a leading part in the battle to end discrimination in defense industries, particularly against Negroes, CIO President Philip Murray reported this week to the Fourth Annual CIO Convention.

Murray said that he appointed John Brophy, director of Industrial Union Councils, as his personal representative on President Roosevelt's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, which was charged with the prevention of discrimination in defense industries.

"In August," Murray said, "the committee was able to report that 27 big defense contractors had changed their employment policies with regard to minority groups since the establishment of the committee.

SIGNIFICANT CHANGE

"Eleven of these firms make military plane parts and equipment and the development is regarded as significant because prior to the committee's establishment there had been an industry-wide ban against Negro workers in airplane factories.

"The creation of governmental agencies such as this has been facilitated in very great degree by the mere existence of a powerful labor organization such as the CIO, which has eliminated in substantial measure within its own ranks the prejudices against Negroes and against the foreign-born which have divided the labor movement so tragically in the past and hampered its operation."

In specifically banning discrimination, Article 2 of the CIO Constitution says:

"The objects of the organization are . . . to bring about the effective organization of the working men and women of America regardless of race, creed, color, or nationality, and to unite them for common action into labor unions for their mutual aid and protection."

Murray Hails CIO Progress, Urges Aid To Nazis' Foes

Hitler Threatens U. S. Security, Murray Charges

DETROIT, Nov. 17 — The CIO fully supports the nation's foreign policy of furnishing "all possible economic and material aid to Great Britain, the Soviet Union and China which are the nations now carrying on the struggle to rid the world of Nazism, the enemy of mankind," President Murray declares in the opening section of his report to the fourth CIO convention meeting here today.

"The paramount issue confronting the nation today is one of self-preservation," Murray's report says. "The Nazi German government has, through its wanton acts of aggression, destroyed nation after nation, reducing the people to depths of physical torture and economic exploitation.

"It has become increasingly evident to the people of our nation that their liberties, traditions and institutions—the very security of our country—are at stake and are now seriously endangered. The workers have been, are now, and will always be in opposition to Hitlerism. It must be defeated and destroyed. Democracy can survive in no other way."

UNITY IN DEFENSE

The task of defeating Hitlerism needs the fullest participation and the support of our entire population, Murray says. "No one segment in our society can do this job. On the other hand, no one segment must be called on to do all the sacrificing that will necessarily be entailed in fulfilling our national policy."

This "simple proposition" has not been appreciated or has been deliberately ignored, Murray adds, while the enemies of labor seek to take advantage of the emergency to wipe out labor's basic rights and to roll up huge profits from the defense program.

Though a "horde of representatives of the large corporations" have swarmed on Washington and tried

Report Cites Gains In Many Industries, Warns Of Dangers

DETROIT, Nov. 17—Praise for the CIO's "splendid progress" during the past 12 months was tempered with a warning that the world crisis threatens "American freedom and American democracy" in the report of Pres. Philip Murray to the fourth annual convention of the CIO, opening here today.

In his 88-page document the CIO President made clear that the nation's industrial union movement has no intention of resting on its oars but would "pledge organization of the aircraft industry, the oil industry, the unionization of the South and the general expansion of organizing activities on every front."

Murray's report was given to about 500 delegates from all parts of the United States and Canada who gathered in Detroit's Moose Hall for a week of deliberations. The lobby of the Hotel Statler, convention headquarters, was bustling with activity over the weekend as delegates poured into the city.

BOARD MEETING

The Executive Board met here on Sunday, Nov. 16, its meeting postponed a day because of the crisis in the captive coal mines following refusal of the National Defense Mediation Board to recommend the union shop for 53,000 workers.

Choice of Detroit as the convention city was in itself symbolic of the year's successes, for in this motor capital of the world occurred CIO's greatest victory of 1941—the union shop contract with Henry Ford.

"Today we are happy to report the practical consummation of every commitment made to our vast membership at the last convention," Murray's statement asserted, recalling 1940 convention pledges to unionize Ford and Little Steel.

"We are stronger today than we were one year ago," the CIO leader continued. "The organization is more firmly entrenched in the life of America today than ever before."

But, he reminded the delegates, "the fundamental job of organizing the unorganized is still the task of the CIO. This convention, like the convention of one year ago, should unitedly dedicate itself to the task of or-

Mediation Board's Coal Decision Brings Showdown

Board Forfeits Confidence, Murray Says, Resigning

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14—The National Defense Mediation Board today appeared "all washed up" following the resignation of CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Sec.-Treas. Thomas Kennedy of the United Mine Workers as CIO representatives on the government agency.

Resignation of the two labor leaders, following the Board's 9—2 vote against the union shop for 53,000 coal miners in properties owned by steel and utility corporations, caused a sensation in the nation's capital and left in doubt the future policy of the government in regard to labor relations.

LACK OF CONFIDENCE

Murray and Kennedy cast the only two votes for the union shop recommendation. The CIO leader later branded as an act of "arch treachery" the votes of the two AFL representatives against the union shop.

"The Board has made it impossible for labor to retain any confidence in its future actions," Murray and Kennedy declared in their letter. "The United Mine Workers of America has a perfectly meritorious case. . . . This opinion discloses that regardless of the merits of any case, labor unions shall be denied the right of normal growth and legitimate aspirations, such as the union shop, and the traditional open

Mine Union Leaders At White House Parley

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14—Leaders of the United Mine Workers and executives of three big steel companies conferred today with Pres. Roosevelt over the union shop issue in the captive coal mines, while the UMW's national policy board of about 200 men prepared to reach a decision on a future course of action.

UMW Pres. John L. Lewis; Vice-Pres. Philip Murray and Sec.-Treas. Thomas Kennedy represented the union at the White House conference, which was in session as the CIO NEWS went to press. Also attending the parley were Frank Purnell of Youngstown Sheet & Tube; Benjamin F. Fairless of U. S. Steel; and Eugene Grace of Bethlehem Steel.

COMPANIES HOLD OUT

Refusal of the steel corporations to grant the union shop to the UMW, representing an admitted 95% of the 53,000 workers in the companies' mines, precipitated the crisis.

The meeting of the miners' policy group followed the Mediation Board's recommendation against the union shop and the subsequent protest resignations from the NDMB of Murray and Kennedy.

Negotiations for the union shop for the captive miners have been in progress for several months. The dispute was finally certified to the Mediation Board.

Miners Get Compensation

Cumberland, Md., Nov. 15—Western Maryland miners who were forced into idleness by the Appalachian shutdown in April and May today were entitled to receive unemployment compensation benefits for 17 days of their idleness, the Alleghany County Circuit Court ruled this week.

The decision, hailed as a partial victory by District 15 of the United Mine Workers, found the miners entitled to compensation for the period between April 22 until they resumed work, the judges finding that the worker-operator dispute ended April 21 with settlement of the controversy with northern operators.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

PRESIDENT MURRAY'S report to the CIO convention reveals the picture of a young and vigorous labor movement asserting the right to shoulder its full responsibilities to its country and to humanity in a period of world crisis.

The CIO has grown to manhood in its six years of existence. Its physical growth and functioning were the chief preoccupation of its earliest years. It suffered all the usual growing pains of adolescence.

But self-consciousness swiftly developed into self-confidence. And today the CIO almost takes its organizational growth for granted, while it devotes itself to the purposes for which the American working people have given it strength.

Organizing the unorganized is still as basic to the CIO as is the life-blood to a human being. The success of the CIO in this respect has been phenomenal. The plans for continuing this work, and maintaining and expanding the health and strength of the movement are obviously a first essential.

But the 1941 convention meets at a time when fascism has grown from a hideous and reactionary doctrine into a positive military menace to all humanity.

Labor has always loathed everything for which fascism and its German expression, nazism, have come to stand. Destruction of labor unions and democracy, racial intolerance, aggressive militarism and imperialism—these are the fascist program in every country where reactionary capital has sought to retain its privileges of exploitation through brute force and a new dark age of human slavery.

Here is the very antithesis of everything that the CIO stands for and desires. But this fascism, this nazism, is now more than a political creed or form of government in certain foreign countries. With all the power of Hitler's tremendous war machine behind it, it has become a program of world conquest.

The defeat of this world menace is now a paramount issue of self-preservation for the United States, President Murray declares. The CIO must devote its major energies to the fight against Hitlerism, he says. This is not only a matter of national defense, it is also an essential part of the whole CIO program to advance labor's interests and defend its rights.

There are two distinct but closely related parts to this fight against Hitlerism which the CIO president makes the keynote of his report.

One is the rendering of all possible aid to Britain, the Soviet Union and China, the countries that are bearing the brunt of military resistance to world fascism.

The other is the promotion of a democratic defense program that will assure maximum production, and at the same time guard democracy here against perversion of the program into anti-labor and anti-democratic channels by American Hitleristic elements.

This concept runs through every page of President Murray's report. It is the essence of his Industry Council plan, which is now the official program of the whole CIO.

The CIO will not rest on its oars after its magnificent achievements in organizing the Ford workers, Little Steel and countless other corporations. It will continue and expand its present drives. It will launch new campaigns in the oil industry, throughout the South and everywhere else that workers remain unorganized.

In so doing, the CIO will be true to the major purpose of fighting Hitlerism. For labor's welfare and morale, based on decent wages, fair conditions and the orderly disposition of grievances through collective bargaining, are basic to the success of the defense program.

Furthermore, the American workers must have the democratic channels of self-expression which union organization gives them, if they are to be full participants in democratic defense, and to insure that the nation's defense effort be not diverted from democratic to imperialistic purposes.

In applying the principles of the CIO defense plan to defense administration, to legislation and to other domestic issues, President Murray's report is vigorously but constructively critical.

If the tremendous human and physical energies of the United States are to be unleashed for full production and defense, labor must be taken into administrative partnership for intelligent planning; its rights must be preserved and full scope allowed for its voluntary efforts. That is the kernel of CIO's position as outlined by its president.

The CIO Convention

The Congress of Industrial Organizations assembles in convention in a period of world war, when the fate of nations hangs in the balance and when the events of a short time may change the whole course of history.

Labor's attitude and activities are more than ever of decisive importance in such a period. The rate of industrial production may determine the outcome of a modern war. Labor's voice carries more weight than in ordinary times, for the powers that be realize their dependency in a crisis upon the good-will and morale of the working population.

A grave responsibility therefore rests upon the shoulders of the CIO delegates gathered in Detroit. Representing more than five million workers in the basic and defense industries, they will make decisions affecting not only the future of all labor but also national policies, and so the course of world events.

The CIO enters this convention stronger numerically and organizationally than ever before in its history. The record of the past year in new contracts, wage increases and other improvements won would justify making the occasion one for self-congratulation and rejoicing.

But that is not the spirit of President Murray's report nor of the convention. Rather the spirit is one of serious determination to maintain and increase the movement's strength so that it may pull its full weight for the defense of democracy and our country's welfare in these most critical and perilous times.

Basic issues of foreign policy and of national defense confront the convention, in addition to the usual organizational and legislative issues. On all these subjects the delegates can confidently be expected to render their democratic decision in the spirit of Pres. Murray's admonition:

"Let us furnish for America during this period of grave national crisis the kind of legislation and responsibility that will win for us the support and acclaim of American workingmen and women and, of course, the citizenry of our great republic."

Good News for the South

"The CIO has definitely opened the South for unionism," says President Murray in his report to the CIO convention. "Just as Ford and Bethlehem Steel were made particular objectives during the past year, so during the coming year . . . should unionization of the South be the particular objective."

The successes of CIO organizing work in the South are related elsewhere in this issue of THE CIO NEWS. Spread over many industries and states as they are, they have not received the same national attention as have some of the concentrated CIO drives in particular industries.

But the significance of this southern organizing work is far-reaching indeed. It has been conducted "against a background of anti-union hatred on the part of many employers, low wages, discrimination and physical attacks on many organizers," as Murray points out. But the Southern workers have proved no different from any others in their desire for organiaztion and their determination to achieve it.

Social and political as well as economic gains will follow in the wake of the spreading unionization of the South.

As labor becomes better and better organized, for instance, we can look for increasing demand for abolition of the undemocratic poll-tax and for the retirement of those reactionary politicians who have retarded progress not only in the South but in Congress as well.

Recognition Demanded

Labor is constantly being urged to throw all its energies into full defense production. Yet, because of maladministration of the defense program, lack of planning and denial of representation, labor has not yet been given the opportunity to make the full contribution it desires to make.

"Organized labor has been provided in no instance with regular opportunity to express labor's position on the major questions of production and defense operation," CIO Pres. Murray reports. The defense agencies have been "almost wholly dominated by executives drawn from the major industrial and armament corporations."

Just as union recognition by employers is a prerequisite for collective bargaining, so labor recognition by the government is a first essential for fully effective participation by labor in defense production.

shop policy of the anti-labor employers shall prevail."

The resignations of the two CIO leaders were announced at a crowded press conference in Murray's office shortly after William H. Davis, Board chairman, had released the decision and had "explained" at great length to the press that the recommendation against the union shop was allegedly in the best interest of the United Mine Workers.

Murray told the press that there were many "justifiable defense reasons for universal application of the union shop in coal." Maximum production of coal is essential to national defense, he said, and "Mr. Lewis, in submitting the union shop proposal to the Board, said that the UMW was prepared to give a definite guarantee of a constant flow of coal without interruption until May 1, 1943"—the expiration date of the bituminous coal contract.

"It must be known," he continued, "that no other union or industry we know of is better able to deliver on that guarantee than the UMW.

PRESENTED CASE

"I asked each Board member if it could be possible by any stretch of the imagination for the Board to have before it a better case, more meritorious than this. None dissented, not a public or employer or AFL member.

"I asked if they weren't setting up an open shop policy by a government agency, thereby denying the rightful claim of unions to grow and develop, if this wouldn't lead employers to demand an end of the union shop.

"I asked if this wasn't the first time in the history of our government that a government agency had asked for the open shop, and if that didn't run counter to the National Labor Relations Act, the right to organize, bargain collectively and use economic power of the union when other methods failed. I've received no answer by any member of the Board."

BETHLEHEM CASE

Murray recalled that the Mediation Board had recommended a union shop in a case involving the AFL shipbuilders and the Bethlehem Steel Co. on the west coast, and derided Chairman Davis' tortured efforts to prove there was no parallel between that case and the miners'.

"I can see no good moral reason for CIO representatives continuing to serve on a Board of this kind," Murray concluded. "We think the Defense Mediation Board has outlived its usefulness. We think it's done."

In The CIO NEWS next week — full coverage of the CIO's historic fourth annual convention.

Text of Murray-Kennedy Resignation From Defense Mediation Board

Following is the complete text of the letter sent to President Roosevelt on Nov. 11 by Philip Murray, president of the CIO and vice-president of the United Mine Workers of America, and by Sec.-Treas. Thomas Kennedy of the UMWA. Both were members of the National Defense Mediation Board.

Dear Mr. President:

We hereby respectfully tender to you our resignations as members of the National Defense Mediation Board.

We accepted membership on this Board with a single purpose. We were and still are in wholehearted support of the national defense program. The call for maximum production under this program creates the need for every sincere effort to assure continuity of production. In our judgment the National Defense Mediation Board offered an instrument to labor and management whereby our problems could be disposed of without the need of industrial conflict or the relinquishment of any legitimate rights of either party.

We have therefore consistently counselled the affiliated unions of the CIO to utilize in full all available machinery for mediation to achieve the peaceful solution of the problems arising between labor and management. We are still of the opinion that such a policy is desirable.

UNDERMINES CONFIDENCE

However, in the recent decision of the Board involving the captive coal mines of the bituminous coal industry the Board has made it impossible for labor to retain any confidence in its future actions. The United Mine Workers of America has a perfectly meritorious case. Our reasons are set forth in the minority opinion. The uncompromising attitude of the majority opinion is in itself a negation of the basic principles upon which the Board was established by you in the effort to promote mediation in lieu of industrial conflict. This opinion discloses that regardless of the merits of any case, labor unions shall be denied the right of normal growth and legitimate aspiration, such as the union shop, and the traditional open-shop policy of the anti-labor employers shall prevail.

For these reasons we do not feel that in good conscience we can continue as members of this Board.

Sincerely yours,

PHILIP MURRAY
THOMAS KENNEDY

A Mediation Board panel studied the problem during a one-month truce agreed to by the union and the operators, and finally suggested that it be negotiated among the conflicting parties or left to voluntary mediation or arbitration.

The miners, rejecting the Board panel's dodge in the case, went out on strike in the captive mines late in October. After a three-day walkout, they went back to their jobs when a White House conference attended by Lewis, Davis and Myron Taylor, former head of U. S. Steel, agreed to submit the dispute to the entire Mediation Board, with Lewis stipulating that the truce would last until Nov. 15.

STRIKE MAY RESULT

With the UMW almost certain to reject the discredited open shop proposal of the Mediation Board, only last minute action is apt to halt the possibility of another strike by the captive miners.

Indirectly at stake in the dispute is the union shop in the commercial coal mines throughout the Appalachian area. That forward step was gained by the UMW after protracted negotiations last spring, but the contract suggests that failure to win the union shop in the captive mines would be considered cause for the commercial operators demanding it be rescinded on their properties.

DISSENT OPINION

In their minority dissenting opinion to the Mediation Board Murray and Kennedy pointed to these facts conceded by the Board: (1) that the UMW has industry-wide bargaining in anthracite and bituminous; (2) that 90% of the production of coal is under union shop conditions, except for the 10% in the captive mines; (3) that 95% of the workers in the captive mines are UMW members; and (4) that the industry-wide contract provides for uninterrupted production until May 1, 1943.

The minority report recalled that the Board had recommended a union shop in the Bethlehem Shipyards on the west coast, though the company was the only one of several which had rejected a coast-wide stabilization agreement worked out by the union—an AFL affiliate—and the government.

On the merits, the report said, there is no basis for distinguishing the captive coal case from the Bethlehem Steel Co. case. Representatives of the public and of the employers have offered no argument in reason or logic to refute the merits of the request of the United Mine Workers of America.

"Such a decision as an expression of national policy endangers all labor unions and threatens to rip asunder peaceful industrial relations established in other industries where a union shop relationship has already been established . . . the decision of the majority of the Board makes it impossible for labor to retain any confidence in its future actions," the minority said.

to take over complete control of defense, "labor with its huge reservoir of energy, resourcefulness and personnel available for use in the national effort to achieve a real national defense program, has been practically ignored," the report charges.

Adequate labor representation on the defense program is needed not only to secure the full support of all the people but also would be by which "the flood gates of the energy and productivity of the millions of workers" would be released for the defense effort, Murray adds.

DEMOCRACY AT HOME

Defense of democracy at home is necessary to defending it from foreign attack, the report point out in accusing enemies of labor's rights of sabotaging the nation's defense program.

"The right of labor to organize and engage in collective bargaining, to be free in choosing its representatives and to maintain the basic freedom of assembly and speech must remain inviolate," Murray declares.

"The enemies of our nation and of our defense program are those who seek to use the problems which confront us as an excuse to whittle away or destroy the democracy for which the struggle and sacrifices are being made."

WORKERS' CONCERN

The war in Europe and the Far East has been the constant concern of American workers, Murray points out, and the American people have been aware that "the developments abroad both in Europe and in the Far East would necessarily aggravate the dangers in this country."

For this reason, he adds, the CIO in 1939 supported President Roosevelt in urging repeal of the arms embargo act, and in 1940 Pres. Murray testified in support of the lend-lease act. "Today labor has become more deeply appreciative of the dangers to democracy through Hitler's aim of world conquest. It is clear to labor that a single task looms ahead—the defeat of this menace to humanity," the report says.

CIO PLAN

Discussing the broad changes in the national economy that are resulting from the defense program, Murray's report cites the failure to plan either for adequate armament or for adequate supplies of civilian goods, warning that economic chaos will come after the war unless rational plans to meet it are laid now.

His report urges adoption of the Industry Council Plan, presented by the CIO to the President and to defense officials last December, as the best way of securing the full production needed to beat Hitler and to maintain our own living standards.

"These guiding principles would establish a program which would assure complete economic and material aid to those nations and peoples who are struggling to defeat Hitlerism and thereby fulfill our national policy of protecting the interests of the American people," the report says in concluding the section on foreign policy.

AFL Official Raps Decision

Washington, Nov. 15—The action of two AFL members of the National Defense Mediation Board in voting against the union shop for captive coal miners today received scorching criticism from George Meaney, AFL secretary-treasurer.

The two labor votes in favor of the majority opinion against the United Mine Workers were cast by George Q. Lynch, head of the AFL Patternmakers League, and William Calvin, vice-president of the boilermakers. They were serving as alternates to Meaney and to George Harrison, head of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks.

Meaney participated in the early part of the coal mine hearing, and before being called away from the city on business, offered a motion to recommend that the miners be given the union shop.

BACKS MINORITY

He did so, Meaney said, "because I am still firmly convinced that this decision was the only proper one that could be arrived at on the merits of the case itself and wholly apart from any extraneous issue.

"If I had been in Washington at the time the vote of the board was taken, I would have voted for my motion. I am therefore in absolute disagreement with the decision of the board."

Vote On Strike At Gold Mine

Kirkland Lake, Ont., Nov. 15—Government officials this week were counting 4,000 ballots to determine whether 12 large gold mines in Northern Ontario are to be closed by a sttrike of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers Union.

The strike vote was authorized by Federal officials under wartime labor regulations after mine operators had rejected the proposal of a conciliation board that they recognize the union.

STAINLESS STEEL...

for Buildings

● Builders and architects are using stainless steel on buildings for increased utility and lasting beauty. Tons of this metal have been used on a single building.

Stainless steel requires no lacquers or other surface treatment to guard against rust and corrosion. Its distinctive bright surface is free from stain, tarnish, and oxidation. It does not chip or peel. Because of these characteristics, stainless steel is specified with the assurance that little need ever be spent to maintain its beauty.

The artist who first conceived of the American community as being everywhere bright, clean, and glistening with the permanent luster of stainless steel is no longer regarded as a visionary dreamer—but a practical prophet of the modern architectural trend.

Murray Hails CIO Progress, Cites Need of Vigilance

ganizing the unorganized. The ranks of this organization, I trust, will be more firmly cemented to perform this task than ever before."

SOUTHERN CAMPAIGN

One of CIO's major efforts in coming months will be the organization of workers in the southern states, Pres. Murray indicated.

"With that in mind, the national office of the CIO is planning, during this convention, to hold a conference of delegates from the South and representatives of the organizations involved for the purpose of laying complete organizational plans for the intensive—and successfull—campaign in that area," he said.

Several pages of the President's report were devoted to a summary of CIO's impressive gains during the year. The employers' "front" against labor's demands for higher wages was broken during the spring, it was pointed out, with the result that the unions have been able to bring an additional 1¼ billion dollars into the pay checks of their members.

DEFENSE PROGRAM

Reflecting the impact of the defense program on the nation's economy and way of living was the discussion of labor's role in the protection of American democracy —a problem that has assumed prime importance in almost every phase of CIO activity.

Reiterating the organization's complete loyalty to the nation and its thorough support of the defense program, Pres. Murray pointed out that "the national defense program must be built upon the complete and wholehearted cooperation of the people of the nation."

No one section of the population may be expected to do all the sacrificing, however, a fact which Pres. Murray hinted had been ignored by the "horde of representatives of large corporations who descended upon Washington and attempted to assume complete control of our defense effort through the dollar-a-year men within the Office of Production Management.

"This group became a super-government, not responsible or responsive to the needs or demands of the people of the country.

"On the other hand, labor, with its huge reservoir of energy, resourcefulness and personnel available for use in the national effort to achieve a real national defense program, has been practically ignored. As compared to the representatives that came into the defense program from industry, the representatives of labor are practically negligible in number."

THE MURRAY PLAN

The nation's problem today is one of production—"how to produce the required quantities of materials within the shortest period of time"—Pres. Murray declared. And, he added, the many conspicuous failures of the present defense administrative machinery could be wiped out by governmental adoption of the Murray Industry Council Plan.

Pointing out that the Plan—which he first offered to President Roosevelt in December, 1940—has been indorsed by the CIO Executive Board, and by numerous national unions and councils, Murray said his Plan would provide:

1. "Adequate and centralized planning" in each basic industry.

2. Participation in the direction of each industry by those who best know its problems — the workers and management—with labor given full and equal representation in the planning process.

EXPENSIVE FAILURE

Failure to adopt the Murray Plan is costing the nation dearly, the CIO president's report pointed out.

"The whole picture of the defense program so far has been one of chaotic administrative disorder," Murray charged.

"The planning of the defense program and production has been practically non-existent. Where it has existed, it has been planning for production at fantastically low levels. The nation is now becoming the victim of the mistakes and failures of the past eighteen months.

"The American economy and the American working force is capable of accomplishing a stupendous volume of production. The task of the nation is to harness that power for the protection of our nation, its people and its freedom.

"As yet, the engines of the nation's strength are only idling."

One example of how this planlessness is injuring the nation's ability to build its defenses is the fact that, according to government figures last May, six companies held 31.3% of the total defense contracts, while 56 out of the nation's 200,000 corporations held approximately three-fourths of the total dollar value of the contracts awarded.

On the other hand, shortages and maladjustments threaten to halt the upward progress of production and to increase sharply the 4,500,000 people unemployed in September.

ANTI-LABOR LEGISLATION

Under the cloak of the defense program, long-time enemies of labor have sought to strip the workers of the power of their organizations, Murray said in his review of legislative activities during the year.

"Defeat of these reactionary proposals has been our first concern and has consumed the bulk of the time and energy the CIO has been able to expend in the legislative field," he declared, with the result that "significant victories were won by the CIO in its defense of labor's rights."

Defeat of the May-Connally bill to curb the power to strike, and of the Hobbs Bill to legalize wiretapping, served notice of labor's strength and "for the time being, at least," halted further efforts along these lines.

FEW POSITIVE GAINS

Nevertheless, there has been a "failure" to gain "positive new achievements in progressive social legislation," the CIO president's report pointed out. No advance in social security legislation, nor in improved housing or tax programs was registered during the year.

One of the worst of the present threats to labor is the proposal to freeze wages, Murray asserted, a development which if successful would "break down voluntary collective bargaining and unjustly deny American workers the right to a more adequate standard of living."

Murray called attention to two bright spots on the legislative record: passage of the Mine Safety Bill, which had been long demanded by the United Mine Workers and by the CIO; and extension of the Bituminous Coal Act, which was first enacted after a strenuous campaign by the UMWA.

FBI AND CIVIL RIGHTS

One by-product of the "hysteria and excitement" surrounding the defense crisis was the launching of a renewed attack on basic civil liberties, Pres. Murray reminded the convention delegates — an attack that has taken the form both of legislative proposals and actions by government agencies.

J. Edgar Hoover's Federal Bureau of Investigation "has acted with disregard for the civil rights of American citizens and with a pronounced anti-labor bias," the report said. ". . . The serious danger exists that a political police similar to the fascist Gestapo is being developed in this country. FBI agents were caught tapping the wires of the president of a CIO international union in pure violation of the federal statutes."

Other attacks on American civil liberties have taken the form of anti-alien and concentration camp bills; proposals to legalize wire-tapping; and "the work or fight" administrative order of the Selective Service system.

VIGILANCE NEEDED

Vigilant guard will be needed by the CIO during the next year to ward off repetition of these attacks on labor and civil rights, Pres. Murray warned, with the hope that in the future—at least in areas of concentrated CIO membership—labor may be content not with "the defeat of anti-labor candidates but must seek the election of definitely pro-labor representatives."

In this connection, Murray praised the work of city and state industrial union councils in warding off much of the restrictive legislation that Tory foes of labor hoped to pass in many states.

While it is clear that the record in the various states has not been completely satisfactory, the CIO President expressed hope that further diligence in "problems of political action" and more "systematic analysis . . . of the various political organizations in the several states, such as farm, labor, business and other political bodies" may lead to more effective and positive gains for workers in the future.

LAUDS LEADERSHIP

He lauded, too, the increased participation of CIO local groups in community leadership and in regional production councils aimed at spreading defense contracts more evenly and beneficially.

"The possibilities of the use of such techniques by local Councils in solving other problems, such as community health, and in meeting the serious issues which have developed in many places as the result of defense production displacements, should be further explored," Murray suggested.

In other sections of the report Pres. Murray reviewed the work of the various national office departments; spoke of "the assistance and guidance" he had received from the Vice-Presidents and the Executive Board; called for closer relations with farm groups on the home front, and for continued friendly contact with the South and Central American labor movements; urged increased pay for selectees, abolition of the southern poll tax, and extension of the Social Security and government housing programs.

Report Lauds Council Plan As Aid to Defense

DETROIT, Nov. 17—The CIO Industry Council Plan, first submitted by President Murray to government officials last December, "meets the basic needs of the situation" far better than any other suggestion for improving defense production, the CIO leader reported today to the fourth annual convention.

"We merely ask the opportunity for discussing this plan with the responsible officials of the United States Government in order that it be given full consideration," Murray declared.

Pending adoption of the Industry Council Plan, the CIO—"as an American institution with loyal Americans as its members"—will do everything in its power to assist the defense program, he made clear.

"At all times we shall attempt to point out what we may consider to be the short comings of the program or its administrative machinery from the point of view of ever pressing for a stronger and more effective national defense effort.

MUST DEFEAT NAZIS

"The CIO is firmly convinced that this nation must participate in the defeat of Nazi Germany," President Murray declared. "Toward this end we have offered our analysis of the national defense program and have submitted our recommendations for a more vigorous and more militant and comprehensive plan to effectuate the goal desired by all Americans."

The Industry Council Plan keys in with the basic problem now facing the United States, he added—"the problem of production, how to produce the required quantities of materials within the shortest period of time."

PRINCIPAL POINTS

"1. Through adequate and centralized planning, each basic defense industry could be advised as to the materials that must be produced for such industry, and the general price level that should be maintained for such industry; and

"2. The persons directly involved in such industry, as management and labor, are the ones best equipped and trained to attain the goal set for the industry. The Industry Council Plan contemplates a direct and active participation within each industry on the part of management and labor.

"For labor, we are demanding such representation not merely to protect labor's interests, but of equal importance, to obtain the full benefit of the resourcefulness and technical skill of labor's representatives who are fully acquainted with the problems and needs of the industry."

PROGRAM IN LOW GEAR

Considering the "stupendous volume of production" of which America's great industrial machine is capable, "the engines of the nation's strength are only idling" at the present time, President Murray pointed out in examining weaknesses of the defense program.

Big business control of OPM; hysterical attacks on labor under the cloak of "defense"; demands that labor make sacrifices while big business reaps super-profits—all these have done injury to the program, he asserted, adding:

"The national defense program must be built upon the complete and wholehearted cooperation of the people of the nation. This demands adequate and responsible representation for the workers of the country. The need of obtaining the confidence of the workers in the defense program would thus be served [by adequate representation for labor] and the flood gates of the energy and productivity of the millions of workers would also be unleashed."

POST-WAR PROBLEMS

Questions of defense now facing the United States, and the "superhuman tasks" involved in a post-war adjustment to peacetime conditions require careful planning, the report emphasized, and "any such planning must be based upon adequate and effective labor representation."

Reviewing in considerable detail the network of new government agencies which have been established to conduct the defense program, President Murray charged that the many agencies and the constant reorganizations have failed to effectuate maximum production.

ADMISSIONS OF FAILURE

"Each of the reorganizations has in itself been an admission of serious failure," he said. "In many cases the machinery of production has become so encrusted with conflicting and unwieldy bureaucracy that the output has been less than it would have been had no government agency been set up at all. . . . Much of this continuous shifting has been made in a vain effort to adjust the agencies to meet the task of national defense to which their fundamental structure has been unfitted."

Equally serious was the failure to provide organized labor with regular opportunity to express labor's position on the major questions of production policy and defense operation. . . .

NO VOICE FOR LABOR

"In some rather few instances men from the ranks of labor have been given positions or have been consulted in matters of secondary policy. With only a handful of exceptions, these men from labor have not been designated by organized labor or even in consultation with the elected leaders of organized labor. They have been appointed by the government.

"Thus there has been no channel or means by which organized labor could effectively participate in the defense effort through representatives, who were on the one hand responsible to organized labor, and on the other to whose commitments organized labor felt itself bound."

Murray on Foreign Policy

"Today labor has become more deeply appreciative of the dangers to democracy through Hitler's aim of world conquest. It is clear to labor that a single task looms ahead — the defeat of this menace to humanity.

"The paramount issue confronting the nation today is one of self-preservation. The Nazi German government has, through its wanton acts of aggression, destroyed nation after nation, reducing the people to depths of physical torture and economic exploitation. It has become increasingly evident to the people of our nation that their liberties, traditions and institutions—the very security of our country—are at stake and are now seriously endangered. The workers have been, are now, and will always be in opposition to Hitlerism. It must be defeated and destroyed. Democracy can survive in no other way.

"It is important to note that our foreign policy has been formulated through the joint action of our legislative and executive branches of the National Government. President Roosevelt in carrying out the national policy so determined, has sought to protect our national interests and the cause of democracy.

"Toward this end the CIO offers its complete support to President Roosevelt's policy of furnishing through our Government all possible economic and material aid to Great Britain, the Soviet Union and China which are the nations now carrying on the struggle to rid the world of Nazism, the enemy of mankind."

New York, Nov. 17—A check for $50,000 was presented to the British War Relief this week by the Furriers Joint Council of the International Fur & Leather Workers Union. The $50,000 is part of a $100,000 fund raised by New York members of the CIO furriers' union in less than a month by working an extra day at the rate of time and a half.

A check for $50,000 was presented recently to the Russian War Relief at the rally held in Madison Square Garden.

CIO Councils Function In 33 States

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17—Creation of an Industrial Union Council in the state of Illinois has lifted the total number of state CIO groups to 33, delegates to the CIO convention were informed by Pres. Murray in his annual report.

The total number of city, county and district councils is now 204, the report said in reviewing the work of the CIO Dept. of Industrial Union Councils, headed by John Brophy.

The Department was created in December, 1940, to co-ordinate "the work and affairs of all Councils, state and local, with a view to the development of the greatest possible harmony between the work and affairs of the Councils and the policies of the CIO as a whole"

ANTI-SABOTAGE BILLS

Early in the year the state Councils were faced with the task of opposing so-called anti-sabotage and state guard bills drawn up late in 1940 at a Federal-State Conference on Law Enforcement Problems of National Defense held in Washington.

Since it was evident that this legislation could be used to suppress strikes and other concerted labor activities aimed at improving wages and working conditions, Pres. Murray instructed all Councils in cooperation with national and international unions to undertake a vigorous campaign against it.

The drive was successful in a number of states. Anti-sabotage bills were defeated or buried in committee in Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio, Montana, Minnesota, Oklahoma, and Connecticut, and other anti-labor measures were defeated in some of these and other states.

In California, however, both the anti-sabotage and the state guard bills were passed and signed by the governor, while the pro-labor bills never got out of committee.

That the record in state legislatures is not as good as it should be, the report declares is in part due to the fact that "the primary energies of the CIO have been directed until quite recently into the field of organizing, rather than political action," and also to the recent whipping up of anti-labor sentiment.

NEED GREATER ACTIVITY

The need of more diligent and constructive political action on the part of CIO Councils is stressed in the report. Attention is called especially to the CIO's model state bills which all CIO Councils should work to have passed.

The possibilities for community leadership in housing, health, and defense groups is another important field for activity by CIO local Councils, the President's report points out.

"It is obvious that such developments constitute lessons by which the public can be made acquainted with the constructive purpose and activities of organized labor, and by which public support for all the work of the CIO, including its fundamental organizing work, can be obtained.

New NLRB Leaning To Craft Units Seen Dangerous To Labor

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17—Problems of the National Labor Relations Board, chiefly rising from new policies and new personnel on the Board, are considered in President Murray's report to the fourth CIO Convention, with a basic recommendation that CIO unions rely on their own organized strength and less on the Board in establishing and holding trade union rights.

These new policies, the report points out, are not always in the interests of industrial workers, since they have resulted in attempts to upset established industrial union contracts in favor of craft union minorities. The Board has undertaken to break down the industrial unit, the report charges, adding that the sole motive appears to be appeasement of noisy craft union groups at the expense of the majority.

COLLUSIVE CONTRACTS

In addition, the Board has changed its policy of repudiating collusive contracts signed by employers with unions they favor in order to avoid genuine collective bargaining. Strikebreakers have been permitted to vote in clear violation of the intent of the law.

On the key issue of the union shop, the report finds that the Board has adopted the policy of approving "the legitimate closed shop contract in general," though CIO unions must be alert to see that it is not used as "a device operating for the benefit of employers and racketeering elements."

Victories for the Labor Board in Supreme Court cases, the report notes, include a decision in the Heinz case upholding the Board's claim that a genuine agreement between employers and a recognized union must be put in writing. In other cases the Board won approval for its policy of outlawing interference by strawbosses in elections, whether or not the employer knew of his subordinates' acts.

The report also contains a review of CIO and SWOC successes with the Board in the Little Steel cases, which were settled on terms favorable to the SWOC. A similar record in the Ford Motor Co. cases is also reviewed.

Concluding this section on the Labor Board and the Act, the report declares:

"Many of the CIO unions have achieved substantial recognition in their respective industries. This has eliminated any pressing need on the part of such unions to appeal to the Labor Board for protection against unfair labor practices on the part of employers.

"These unions have continued to resort to the Labor Act for the sole purpose of obtaining elections and certifications thereunder pursuant to stipulations with employers, that upon such certification collective bargaining would follow."

Jersey CIO Issues Convention Call

Newark, N. J., Nov. 17—A call for the fourth annual convention of the New Jersey CIO Council to be held at Camden, N. J., Dec. 6-7 has been issued by Pres. Irving Abramson. Around 80,000 new members have been enrolled in CIO unions in New Jersey since Nov., 1940. Abramson said, the largest yearly increase in the state since the CIO was formed.

To Educate

Waterbury, Conn., Nov. 15—Plans for a concerted campaign to establish trade union education committees in every local CIO union in the State are being formulated by the Connecticut Industrial Union Council.

CIO Leads In Board Elections

Washington, Nov. 17—Maintaining the top record held since the National Labor Relations Board started functioning, the CIO won 40.6 per cent of all the elections held during the year, and polled 41.9 per cent of all votes cast, Pres. Murray's report revealed today.

The AFL won only 34 per cent of the elections, polling 28.1 per cent of the votes cast.

A marked increase in number of 1941 Labor Board elections is indicated by the figures released for the first half of the year which show a total of 378,462 votes were cast, a record-breaking figure.

The President's report states that during the second quarter of the year, almost twice as many elections were reported as were held during any other quarterly period in the Board's history.

100 Credit Unions Connected With Labor Groups

Washington, Nov. 15—Of 5,300 State credit unions and 4,000 Federally chartered, more than 100 are connected with trade unions, the U. S. Farm Credit Administration announced today.

A credit union is a people's bank which does two jobs: it provides a place for people to pool their savings, and a place where they can borrow small sums at low interest rates.

BETTER WORKING CONDITIONS In IMPORTANT DEFENSE PLANTS

Murray Urges Army Lift Soldiers' Pay

DETROIT, Nov. 17 — Declaring that "widespread and wholly justified discontent in the Army during the past year is testimony to the soundness of the CIO's position" which asked for improved conditions a year ago, CIO President Philip Murray, in his report to the 1941 CIO Convention, this week said that "the most pressing need for our Army is an increase in pay for drafted and enlisted men."

"During the past year," Murray said, "practically nothing has been done by the federal government to improve the conditions of drafted men and other soldiers.

"The increasingly serious defense situation makes it all the more necessary now that American soldiers receive the kind of treatment by their nation that is justified by their high responsibility for its protection.

'TREAT THEM LIKE MEN'

"The men of our Army must not be treated as outcasts," Murray declared. "They must be treated as men who have been forced to sacrifice greatly to enter their country's service. It is the duty of the nation to give them every possible advantage."

Murray said that the CIO must continue to press for improvements demanded by the 1940 Convention, including:

1. A guarantee far more effective than the present law that drafted workers will get their jobs and seniority back upon the end of their Army service.

2. That effective Social Security benefits be established for drafted men.

PROTECT CIVIL RIGHTS

3. That civil rights of drafted men be fully protected.

4. That full protection be given to conscripted men and their families against foreclosures or evictions from homes, the lapsing of life insurance policies, and the seizing of cars, furniture or other household goods on which there may be debts.

Murray renewed the plea for an active voice for labor in the administration of the Draft Law and the protection of workers against the use of the Law to break strikes.

Evictions Tripled

Baltimore, Nov. 15—Of paramount concern to workers, because low-rent homes are chiefly affected, is the tripled rise of simple eviction notices reported this week by the People's Court. No non-payment of rent cases were involved, and it is thought that landlords are ordering evictions so that they can raise rents for succeeding tenants without running afoul of the Fair Rent Commission.

CIO Backs 'Village' Movement

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15—Formation of a national committee to aid the project of a CIO-maintained "British Children's Village" was announced by CIO Secretary James B. Carey here today. John Brophy, director of CIO Industrial Councils, was selected as national coordinator and Irving Abramson, president of the New Jersey CIO Council, chairman.

Purpose of the committee is to coordinate efforts to raise funds for the maintenance of the Children's Village, which is designed as a refuge for British children from bomb-devastated areas. Original impetus for the project came from the New Jersey CIO Council, which has already been at work for some time raising contributions from New Jersey workers.

STATE OFFICIALS

Other members of the committee include: John Phillips, president of the Pennsylvania CIO Council; Ted F. Silvey, secretary of the Ohio Council; and August Scholle, president of the Michigan Council.

In a letter to Abramson, Carey declared:

"This project is one that should have the support of all workers anxious to do a small part in helping to save Britain's children from Hitler's bombs. I am sure that all members of the CIO will gladly contribute to such a fund as your committee proposes to maintain."

THE MURRAY COUNCIL PLAN

THE CIO NEWS
Special Feature Supplement
NOV. 17, 1941

For 'All-Out' Production

It's almost a year since Philip Murray first offered the nation his sensational Industry Council proposal to increase production, plan our defense program and give labor a seat at the government council tables.

Today national defense is behind quota; millions face unemployment from priority shortages; labor still has no voice in defense.

Here's the story of the Murray plan, and a brief history of what's happened to it—and to national defense—in the last 12 months.

"TOP-RANKING defense officials today are stumped in their effort to figure who is boss among them. It suddenly is discovered that President Roosevelt, in what he thought was an effort to simplify defense machinery, actually created a maze that has no beginning and no end.

"One high official suggests that the mind of Rube Goldberg, if devoted to the job, could not have devised a setup comparable to that now supposed to run the vast defense effort. Another official is urging that a Philadelphia lawyer be hired to find the way out of today's tangled situation."

The above quotation came from U. S. News, a magazine of, by and for businessmen. But scores of labor representatives whose work has brought them in contact with U. S. defense officials during the last year may well say "Amen" to that statement.

For the defense program has produced, along with guns, tanks and priorities, a confusing new array of government agencies — agencies whose jurisdictions overlap, whose spheres of influence are as yet undetermined, whose functions are not always clear. The Supply Priorities & Allocations Board (SPAB) is an administrative nightmare, in which Price Administrator Henderson, for example, sometimes outranks OPM "Production Boss" Knudsen, sometimes is on a par with him, sometimes takes his orders.

Two years of the defense program have shown that U. S. preparedness is being administered along "craft union" lines. The labor leader or business man who has a problem must trail through Washington's crowded streets from the price agency to the priorities agency to the finance agency to the production agency, and in between times pay visits to a few subsidiary government bureaus that have a finger in the pie.

The "craft union" way of managing the defense plan has proved just as inefficient and wasteful as the craft union way of organizing the workers in a mass production industry.

LAST December, Pres. Philip Murray of the CIO offered a plan to cut a sharp knife through the maze of government red tape. The Murray Industry Council Plan, as it came to be known, offered a suggestion for "vertical" organization of the defense program—a blueprint for handling defense matters through industry units.

The Murray plan received high praise from many government and private social planners and economists. It has received widespread support from the great unions of the CIO. But the government has given the Murray plan the cold shoulder.

WHAT is the Murray plan? How would it work? Who would run it? These are simple questions, and require only simple answers.

Last March, Pres. Murray submitted to Pres. Roosevelt a memorandum covering these very questions. He said:

"The proposed industry councils should be set up in the major and important industries concerned with defense production. This need cover only the most important industries. Each industry should be defined broadly.

"The industry councils should be composed of equal representation of labor and of management in each industry, the chairman to be a representative of the government. These councils should be largs enough to be representative of the important elements in the industry, but small enough to be effective. . . .

"The council could have responsibility for the various factors in each industry, now distributed through a vast number of agencies, such as allocation of orders, determination and allocation of expansion needs, scheduling of production rates, determination of priorities, establishment of industrial relations, and labor supply."

To tie all the knots together a Central Coordinating Board would be set up in Washington, with the President as its chairman and a membership jointly composed of industry and labor. The central board would collect all information relating to armament and civilian needs; it would set production quotas for the separate industries, which could then be scheduled for various plants by the individual industry councils; and it would coordinate defense problems not handled directly by the industry councils—for government housing, health and welfare activities, and protection of the general consumer interest.

NEEDED—More tanks, more steel . . .

CARTOONISTS for reactionary newspapers for years have been depicting Uncle Sam as a bewildered old gent bound hand and foot by a daffy professor taking his planning hints from the textbook. Most Americans realize, however, that planning is necessary and beneficial to our economic life. The question is no longer "shall we plan?" but "how shall we plan?"

President Murray's proposal would lift present-day economic planning in this country out of the hit-or-miss "craft union" stage into a system of charting accurately the nation's civilian and defense needs, and of making adequate preparations to supply those demands.

"The real unit of our production is the industry—steel, coal, automobile, aircraft, for example," Pres. Murray has pointed out. "To get the most efficient production, to get the soundest planning, each industry must be thought of as an integral production unit.

"Is is obviously impossible to plan the most efficient use of any industry by uncoordinated and often conflicting government pressures. . . . Competent planning and the sound direction of production require the industry unit for administration."

Members of the various industry councils would be no utopian dreamers—they would be men out of the factories and mills and mines who know to a "t" the capacities and bottlenecks and general production problems of their industries. Each council, with its administrative staff, would have an encyclopedic knowledge of its industry.

With that knowledge, the industry council would be well-equipped to handle the basic job of planning; to regard each industry not as a series of corporations, but as a series of plants, as a collection of plant equipment, as a mass of workers capable and ready to produce what the nation needs.

Instead of Uncle Sam's being at the mercy of a handful of financiers and corporation bosses, America's mighty production machinery would be at the disposal of the people, ready to meet their requirements, administered by a wise management.

Thus, by treating each industry as a single vast productive unit, defense contracts could be placed by the in-

These lead sentences from stories in The CIO NEWS tell the tale of magnificent organizing progress which enrolled hundreds of thousands of new members into the nation's great industrial unions and brought the forces of labor to peak strength in 1941.

And all over America—on battering, monotonous production lines . . . in the aircraft plants with their 50 cents an hour pay . . . in the steel mills and the mines and the factories and on the farms—all over America a chorus of hope arose in workers' throats. For CIO was marching again, to the tune of the '37 drive, toward the vision expressed by Philip Murray, who said at the 1940 CIO convention:

"I look forward with you to the day when our country and its people may be able to enjoy a broader security, a security that encompasses the well-being of all of the peoples throughout the nation, a kind of security that will drive from the temples of finance and industry rapacity, greed and selfishness, and that will mete out to the lowly, the humble and the workers of this nation those things that God, in His infinite wisdom, decreed the masses of the universe should receive."

Victory at Ford

HIGH on the list of CIO activities mentioned in President Murray's report to the 1941 National CIO Convention was the smashing UAW-CIO victory over Henry Ford, and the part played in it by both UAW leaders and the CIO Organization Department, headed by Allan S. Haywood, director, and Michael Widman, assistant director.

Marching to the speed of CIO, which in six years raised its membership from 800,000 to more than 5,000,000, the Ford workers in April-May-June order won their strike, chose CIO five to two over AFL in a Labor Board election, and signed the best contract in the industry, an agreement which startled the nation by establishing the union shop, check-off collection of dues and wages equal to the highest paid in the industry.

The pact, which affects a total of 120,000 Ford employes, swung King Henry's pendulum of policy from a reactionary, ruthless dictatorship to socially desirable collective bargaining. The contract is a model for the industry, establishing the principle that when all workers gain by collective action, they all should help maintain the union that has helped them win their gains.

With the $50,000,000 wage increase won for 250,000 employes of General Motors, and myriad other significant gains, the Ford contract helped to establish the United Auto Workers Union as one of the largest in CIO, and accounted materially for a 93 per cent gain in UAW membership within a year. The union has contracts covering 700,000 workers.

Following almost complete organization of the auto industry, the UAW turned its attention to the rapidly expanding aircraft industry, and reported to UAW Convention delegates that already 50,000 workers have been enrolled. A combined UAW-CIO drive is fighting a three-front "panzer" battle to organize the "Fords" of aircraft—Martin in Baltimore, Douglas in California and Curtiss Wright.

The UAW-CIO "revved up" the aircraft drive by its Vultee victory last December, winning 4,000 workers 12½ cents an hour pay raises. Additional horsepower was added at Brewster the same month when 6,000 employes won one of the "best plane pacts in the nation" with $1,500,00 in pay raises and the union shop and check-off. At Ryan, at North American, at Continental and Air Associates, the UAW-CIO won additional gains for thousands more. Often in bitter struggle, it established its power and prestige, and is well on the road toward "auto-organizing" the aircraft industry.

The Mine Contract

Backbone of the CIO has always been the United Mine Workers of America, which, more than any other union, is responsible for starting the Congress of Industrial Organizations. Led by President John L. Lewis, 400,000 soft coal miners "dug in" against an employer lockout in April, and smashed through to victory a month later in a counterattack that won $1 a day raises, and vacations with pay for the first time in the industry's history.

One hundred thousand anthracite miners later boosted their pay 10 per cent, and in one of the most important industrial conflicts of the year, CIO southern soft coal miners won the greatest victory in the union's 51-year-old history by shattering the ancient theory that Southern workers should be paid less than their Northern brothers. Abolition of the North-South wage differential in the mines will have lasting repercussions in every other industry.

The Mine Workers' gas, coke, chemical and paper branch, District 50, is well on the way toward matching the parent organization's gains, and has launched an intensive drive to organize the many thousands of workers in its jurisdiction.

The mine workers' tremendous victory, plus an almost simultaneous wage gain of 10 cents an hour won for 530,000 workers by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, plus similar wage gains won shortly afterwards by CIO unions in other basic industries, smashed an employer Maginot line built to guard rising profits and prevent wage gains.

Industry, stimulated by the defense program, enjoyed a period of unprecedented prosperity, with profits soaring as "per unit" production costs started toward the basement. If the industries could have maintained their refusal to pass on any gains to the workers, the 1941 industrial situation would have been marked by even more outrageous profits, by widespread resentment among the working people, and the consequent lowering of morale so necessary to successful defense of the nation.

Pressure of CIO unions won their members a total of $1,125,000,000 in wage gains annually, to offset at least in part the rising cost of living.

Little Steel

SWOC made one of the most important organizing advances in its history by winning bargaining rights for 170,000 employes of the "Little Steel" companies — Bethlehem, Republic, Youngstown Sheet & Tube and Inland—in a series of elections and card checks that proved the union the choice of an overwhelming majority of the workers. All four companies, long anti-labor holdouts, have agreed to sign collective bargaining contracts, and negotiations are in progress.

Keeping pace with the mine, steel and auto unions was the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers Union, which not only won 10 cents an hour raises for most of the industry's workers but also increased its membership by the phenomenal figure of 221 per cent. Over 116,000 workers joined the union in a year! One of the union's major accomplishments was the signature of a contract covering all the 45,000 workers in the Westinghouse Electrical & Manufacturing Co.'s 24 plants.

Basic Industries

In other basic industries, CIO unions recorded astounding progress:

The Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers reported a 58 per cent increase in membership. The number of new members signed up in a year was as great as the total membership in 1939. The union won 18 out of 21 Labor Board elections, receiving 68 per cent of all votes cast, in contrast to the AFL's 4½ per cent. One of the organization's greatest victories was the long-sought establishment of the work day on a "collar to collar" basis, so that underground miners' pay runs from time of entry to time of exit from the mines. The union won more than $16,000,000 for workers in the industry through wage raises and NLRB and Wage-Hour awards.

The United Rubber Workers Union not only won $22,000,000 in wage increases but finally "cracked" the lone holdout in the industry, the giant Goodyear Rubber Co., signing a contract that brought wage raises, improved working conditions and job security. The union's membership increased 28,000 during a year, to reach an all-time peak of 82,000. Thirty-six new locals were chartered and 35 new companies were brought under contract. The union was instrumental in obtaining action of the Wage-Hour Division in establishing a 40-cent minimum which directly benefited 10,000 workers.

The Oil Workers International Union concluded 128 negotiations with various companies, bringing the total number of contracts to over 200. The union won a general five cents an hour increase early in 1941, and followed it up with five and 10-cent increases later. The CIO and the oil workers have started an intensive drive to completely unionize the industry, enlisting the services of Edwin S. Smith, formerly a member of the NLRB.

President Murray reported substantial progress by the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee, which is waging a heroic struggle to clean up building industry unionism. More than 400 locals have been chartered and wage gains have been won in virtually every contract negotiated —in some instances ranging as high as 33 per cent. Organizing has been particularly rapid in the building supply side of the construction industry.

like these, the future citizens of er, more secure life.

ALCOA Lifts Pay

The Aluminum Workers Union raised wages of 17,000 employes of the dominant Aluminum Co. of America 10 cents an hour. Contracts negotiated during the year covered 30,000 workers.

The Utility Workers Organizing Committee chartered 33 new local unions, and now has a total of 23 signed contracts, an increase of 17 per cent over last year's pacts. In the largest back pay settlement ever reached through the Labor Board, the union won $300,000 for workers at the giant Consolidated Edison Co.

The Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee reported a 35 per cent gain in membership, chiefly in plants of the International Harvester and Caterpillar Tractor Cos. The union won four out of six International Labor Board elections, covering 21,000 workers, nearly four-fifths of the firm's employes. As the result of union activity, wage gains at the two companies ranged from 10 to 12½ cents an hour.

Strong consolidation of organization was reported by the National Assn. of Die Casting Workers and the Federation of Glass, Ceramic and Silica Sand Workers. The Die Casters have 90 per cent of the industry covered by closed shop contracts, with 52 companies under contract. The union reported a 280 per cent membership gain. The Glass Workers reported the entire plate, safety and window glass industry under contract, providing for either the closed shop or union maintenance. The union has 37 contracts in effect, covering 27,800 workers. It has won raises of from two to 17 cents an hour from most of the companies under contract.

The United Stone & Allied Products Workers Union announced that 84 additional contracts have been signed in the past year, providing in most cases for the closed shop and check-off collection of dues. The union has won substantial gains in wages and working conditions.

Clothing and Textile

Among unions in the clothing and closely allied industries, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers reported wage gains of 10 to 25 per cent for virtually all of its 273,000 members, as well as substantial progress in organizing the cotton garment industry. One wage negotiation alone won $18,000,000 more a year for 135,000 workers over the nation. For the first time in the men's apparel industry a contract negotiated provides for paid vacations.

Both the Amalgamated and the Textile Workers Unions reported substantial progress in their battle to organize the South. The Textile union has won some form of union security in 88 per cent of all contracts, which have increased considerably during the past year. Due to the leadership taken by this union, the historically low wage levels in this industry have been raised from 48 to 60 cents an hour average.

Wage increases obtained by the United Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Employes amount to more than $1,000,000. Outstanding among the union's organizing successes is its progress in the New York stores of Stern Brothers, R. H. Macy & Co., Saks 5th Ave., Ovingtons, Wanamakers, Gimbel Brothers and Oppenheim-Collins. The union won two significant elections in Chicago—at the Fair and Boston stores.

Since the last CIO Convention, the United Furniture Workers Union has brought more than 13,000 new workers and 82 new plants under protection, and in the three large manufacturing centers of the industry has established itself so strongly that it is now the industry's dominant union.

The United Shoe Workers gained 37 new locals in a year, and as the result of an intensive spring organizing drive won a 10 per cent wage increase for practically all the workers in the shoe industry. The union also pushed a successful campaign to raise the industry minimum to 40 cents an hour, bringing gains to 96,000 shoe workers. The combined effect of these activities was to increase the average wage from $16.19 a week in 1939 to $21.66 in June, 1941.

During the past year the membership of the International Fur & Leather Workers Union has increased over 10,000, primarily in the leather division. The union reported substantial wage increases as well as provisions in most contracts for one week's vacation with pay and a guarantee that no worker's wage rates can be reduced through introduction of new machinery.

In the marine and transportation fields, the National Maritime Union reported a $3,500,000 annual increase negotiated for 30,000 seamen, and an industry-wide increase of approximately 25 per cent. The NMU has raised wages more than 65 per cent since it was organized. It added 26 contracts during the year, bringing the total to 119.

The Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers won the first CIO pact ever signed with Bethlehem Steel, at Hoboken, N. J. The union has almost doubled the industry's wage scale since 1933. Contracts negotiated have netted $350,000,000 annual increases. The union has 43 contracts, more than half of which provide for maintenance of the union shop.

Longshore and Transport

Wage increases of more than $2,500,000 annually were won for the membership of the International Longshoremen & Warehousemen's Union since the last CIO convention. The average increase is approximately 10 cents an hour for almost the entire membership. Almost 90 per cent of the union is covered by preference of employment or closed shop contracts.

Outstanding among the successes of the Transport Workers Union have been the collective bargaining agreement won from the N. Y. Board of Transportation for the City-owned transit lines; signature of a pact with all major New Orleans trucking firms, raising 800 workers' wages more than 16 per cent; and renewal of contracts with the 5th Ave. Coach and New York City Omnibus Cos. after protracted strike action.

Substantial gains have been reported for the International Union of Fishermen & Allied Workers, the Inland Boatmen's Union of the Pacific, the Marine Engineer's Beneficial Assn. and the Marine Cooks & Stewards Assn.

The Fishermen won increases ranging from 7 to 15 cents an hour. The MEBA has 265 companies under contract and has negotiated wage increases for most of the workers covered. The Cooks and Stewards now have a closed shop agreement with all companies under contract. The union won an important Labor Board election in the Inter-Island Steamship Co. by 90 per cent.

White Collar Workers

The white collar field joined the industrial in scoring notable CIO victories.

Among the leading unions was the United Office & Professional Workers which won a contract with the important John Hancock Insurance Co., and Labor Board elections at Boston Mutual and Prudential Life, and was highly successful in organizing R. L. Polk directory workers as well as employes in the direct mail industry. The union signed master contracts covering more than 4,000 workers in the direct mail advertising field in New York City and in the photographic field, covering 1,000 employes.

Substantial gains were reported also for the American Newspaper Guild, the Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists & Technicians, the United Federal Workers, the State, County & Municipal Workers and the American Communications Assn. The Guild won a contract as important to it as the Ford victory to the UAW when it negotiated $104,000 a year in pay raises for commercial department employes of the N. Y. Times. Subsequently editorial employes also voted for the Guild.

The Federal Workers are engaged in a nation-wide drive to bring the great majority of 1,250,000 government workers under union protection. The Architects won 15 out of 16 Labor Board elections. Aside from winning wage increases, the American Communications Assn. performed an outstanding service for its membership by protecting it from the twin evils of mechanization and uncontrolled merger of Postal and Western Union Telegraph Cos.

The State, County & Municipal Workers added 94 locals during the year, and won gains in working conditions, abolition of unpaid overtime work, and paid vacations and sick leave.

The Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee, the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing & Allied Workers, the Distillery Workers Organizing Committee and the International Woodworkers of America all reported progress.

Packing Signs

One of the major achievements of the PWOC was the signing of master agreements with Armour and Cudahy, covering 22 major packing plants and increasing wages. The union now has 65 contracts. Acting as a joint partner with the U. S. Government, the union instituted a back pay suit which brought $1,000,000 due under the Wage-Hour Act to thousands of packing house workers.

The Cannery Workers nearly doubled the number of workers under contract during the past year, and increased the number of pacts 20 per cent to a total of 189. Seven out of every 10 workers voting in Labor Board elections chose the CIO union. The union signed the first CIO contract with the world's largest cannery, Campbell's Soup Co., lifting wages $500,000 a year.

The International Union of United Paper, Novelty & Toy Workers has increased the number of its affiliated unions 185 per cent since last year. In the last six months, at least two thirds of the affiliated locals have negotiated for wage increases, bringing average raises of 10 per cent to workers affected.

The National Organizing Committee of Barbers & Beauty Culturists reported that practically every local has won benefits in either increased wages, commissions or reduction of working hours. The Greater New York organizing drive boosted membership approximately 1,000 in a two months period.

From auto workers to barbers, from steel workers to newspapermen, from miners to office workers, from every basic industry in the nation, workers have participated in CIO gains—in wages, in hours, in working conditions, and industrial democracy. The 1941 report of such substantial annual progress can do nothing better than stimulate greater CIO effort for even more important gains in 1942.

dustry councils to insure quick production, fullest employment of labor and the elimination of the bottlenecks which now occur when one big corporation swims in profitable orders it can't fulfill for years while its less fortunate competitors shut down whole departments and turn an ever-increasing number of workers on to the streets.

UNCLE SAM is hungry for copper. Copper is an essential metal in a thousand defense products. Yet last month a California copper mine, producing 6,000 tons a month, closed down. Five hundred men are out of their jobs. The copper shortage becomes a little worse.

Why did the mine shut down? Because its owners say they can't show a profit on 12c-a-pound copper, though they kept operating in 1935 when copper sold at 8½c and in 1939, when it sold for 11.3c a pound!

In Detroit this winter hundreds of thousands of automobile workers face unemployment—at a time when the United States has been frantically searching for more skilled workers. Why? Because the big companies stuck to "business as usual" methods, ignoring the desperate plea of the auto workers union for a gradual changeover from civilian to defense production that would have avoided much of the lost time.

A hundred thousand workers are going to have nothing to do in a score of steel towns this winter. The reason? Because corporate dollar-a-year men insisted the steel industry's capacity was ample for defense needs—and it isn't. Result, plants that fabricate steel into all sorts of products are shutting their doors.

The monopolistic Aluminum Co. of America said it had all the facilities needed for both defense and civilian demands. The aluminum union said "no"—but ALCOA won the debate with the big business boys of the OPM. Result: not enough aluminum for defense, no aluminum for civilian demands, no jobs for men and women who make pots and pans.

So it goes in industry after industry. Walter Reuther, a leader of the CIO auto union, last year suggested a plan—based on Pres. Murray's proposal—for making planes and other defense products in auto plants by utilizing waste time and wasted equipment. The auto bosses were as emphatic in attacking the Reuther plan as they were lacking in sound argument against it. Pres. Murray, speaking with the wisdom of a man who knows the steel industry, suggested a plan to increase production of the nation's basic metal. His plan has been gathering dust at the OPM—dust which even the flurry caused by eventual admission of a steel shortage didn't stir.

The defense program is being bombed and battered by shortage, by corporate greed, by lack of planning. Adoption of the Murray Plan would be the most simple way to cut the Gordian knot holding in check America's great reservoir of skilled manpower, and its great managerial brainpower, and its billions of machine horsepower.

EVERY worker knows that his fate, his independence, his security is tightly bound to the future of democracy. Fascism may pay off, for a while at least, to the privileged few among the corporation owners and coupon clippers. But the workers will get fascism's heel in their neck from the first day on.

The Murray Plan is one of democracy's strongest weapons.

Unemployment and insecurity spread the seeds of disbelief in democracy. Empty bellies need more than speeches to sustain a faith in the democratic way of life. The Murray Play, by intelligent economic planning, will help put America to work.

DRIVE STARTS: Here's a familiar CIO scene—the launching of a new drive. This one, in New York lettershops, was a big success.

Democracy's roots must go far down to insure its survival. Political democracy is meaningless without industrial democracy; and democracy in the shops requires democracy at the planning table. The Murray Plan will give labor a real voice in shaping industrial policy, a greater responsibility in charting the nation's welfare. Seated on the industry council, American labor will best be able to protect the progress gained in decades of struggle.

The Murray Plan will help Uncle Sam insure against a post-war collapse. As Pres. Murray has pointed out:

"One of the most serious impediments to proper industrial expansion is the feeling on the part of the industry that the post-war period will find many of the industries over-burdened with productive capacity and the resulting costs. This obstacle to rapid increase of current production would be removed by industry planning by the councils for full utilization of present and future capacity.

"Much of the capacity created for defense needs can be assigned to peacetime functions if the proper plans are made. Such planning would simplify the present haphazard method of government loans and expenditures for plant increases. It would lay the basis for a rational distribution of such increased capacity within the industry. It would also make possible substantial economies by assuring that such new plant would be most effectively utilized."

THE Murray Plan won't be adopted just because it's efficient, desirable and in the nation's best interests.

It's going to take a mighty demand from labor—a far greater outcry than any yet raised by American's millions of "factory soldiers"—to force acceptance of the Murray Plan. That demand should come again and again from every union and local and council.

That demand should come now. It should come fast. It should come loud.

'TO PROTECT OUR RIGHTS'

CIO Defeated Efforts To Smash All Labor

CIO licked its weight in legislative wildcats during the past 12 months.

Stacked up against the oratorical outbursts of reactionary Congressmen — many of them poll-taxers from the South—was the organized expression of millions of worker-voters led by the CIO. The people won most of the fights.

Under this "extremely grave legislative attack that has been made on the most basic rights of American trade unions during the past few months"—as Pres. Philip Murray expressed it in his report to the fourth annual convention—defense of labor's rights has been the paramount legislative task of the CIO. The right to organize, the right to bargain collectively, the right to strike have required constant protection from the enemies of labor who hoped to use the national defense program as an excuse to rob American workers of hard-won gains.

As a result, little new social legislation or improvements of existing labor and social laws were put on the statute books.

Discussing the lessons of the legislative year, President Murray's report calls for greater participation by the CIO not only in the battles in Congress but in election campaigns to make sure that real pro-labor Congressmen are elected—not the kind that require a constant stream of letters and telegrams every time a labor measure comes up.

"In the areas of great CIO industrial organization we must no longer be content with the defeat of anti-labor candidates," the report says, "but must seek the election of definitely pro-labor representatives.

"Such representatives will not require a deluge of telegrams, letters and declarations before they act and vote pro-labor. And it should be remembered that the best source of such reliable pro-labor representatives is from within the ranks of our own organization."

May-Connally Bill

Chief among the anti-labor measures blocked by CIO action was the May-Connally bill, which was defeated in an overwhelming House vote after weeks of hard CIO campaigning. This bill, backed by the most reactionary circles in Congress and in the newspapers, would have wiped out the right to strike and thus destroyed the fruits of years of struggle for union recognition and collective bargaining.

Helping to bring about the CIO victory against the anti-strike bill was the work of scores of union lobbyists, brought to Washington from all parts of the country. Working under the direction of John T. Jones, CIO legislative representative and director of Labor's Non-Partisan League, they interviewed practicalyl every Congressman and gave them information about the thinking of "the folks back home."

The May-Connally bill was only one of a series proposed in Congress, which included the Vinson bill, the Ball bill, and many others designed to break strikes and hamstring unions. As summarized in President Murray's report, these anti-labor measures if passed:

". . . would have clamped upon American workers a system of forced labor. They would have imposed compulsory mediation or compulsory arbitration. They would have permitted the use of the army and navy to keep open any strike-bound plant regardless of the conditions which caused the strike. They would have suspended the Norris-LaGuardia anti-injunction act and permitted widespread use of the anti-labor injunction.

"They would have made union shop contracts illegal. They would have placed on a permanent blacklist workers who failed to submit to or comply with decisions of the Mediation Board. They would have undermined the Labor Act and permitted employers to dismiss any active union worker on the grounds that the employer regarded such a worker as a 'subversive character.' They would have imposed punishments which included heavy fines, long prison sentences and even the death penalty."

New Tactics

New tactics featured the Congressional attack on labor, the report notes. All the rules were waived in the attempt to rush anti-strike, anti-union measures through a stampeded House. While last year the CIO had to fight off attacks on the Wagner Act, the Wage-Hour Act and similar progressive laws, this year the fight had to be waged in defense of every right that labor has acquired throughout U. S. history.

The fight had to be waged with two major weapons in the hands of labor's enemies—the false outcry that labor was sabotaging national defense, and a new trick of referring anti-labor bills to Congress committees known for their anti-labor bias, rather than to the better-qualified House Labor Committee.

The national defense angle, under which "every union organizing drive, every union request for a living wage, every strike caused by employers' refusal to grant collective bargaining rights," became an excuse for hysterical attacks in Congress and in the press, was played to the limit.

The new trick of passing labor legislation to stacked committees violated "every established rule for fair procedure." Under ordinary procedure, proposed bills are referred to standing committees under whose jurisdiction they normally come. Thus, a labor measure goes to the Labor Committee, a banking measure to the Banking Committee, etc. But this time the anti-labor bills were shunted into such groups as the Judiciary Committee, the Military Affairs Committee, and others known for hostility to organized labor. These committees shut off testimony on bills important to millions of workers, frequently hearing only two or three or even just one witness before reporting them to the House—and reporting them favorably.

The measures against labor were beaten back, the report notes, but they still remain like a loaded gun in the hands of labor's enemies, and can be brought up again at a moment's notice.

Unjust Taxation

Not all the battles were won. President Murray frankly declares that the CIO's fight for a fair and just tax bill ended in defeat. He cites the failure of labor to exert sufficient pressure on Congress to persuade "friends of labor" in the House and Senate to act effectively; the failure of Congress leaders to insist on adoption of the U. S. Treasury's very moderate proposals; the effective work of a big business lobby; and the parliamentary tricks and gags used to rush the measure through.

A similar record of failure to secure adequate appropriations for WPA is noted in the report, with a warning that cuts in WPA will result in widespread suffering among the unemployed. Action on removal of the poll-tax and on the anti-lynching bill was again stalled as in previous years. Little was done to alleviate the nation's housing crisis, despite shameful conditions in defense industry areas.

On the positive side, the CIO did succeed in winning passage of the mine safety bill, though only after a strenuous two-year campaign during which more than 1,600 miners' lives were sacrificed to Congressional delay. The bituminous coal act, also endorsed by the United Mine Workers, was renewed. Certain legislation raising pay standards for Federal workers was won.

Current Threats

Chief among the current threats to the welfare of the American people discussed in Murray's report are the plans widely pushed in Congress and in the newspapers for arbitrary limits on wages. "Such legislation," the report says, "would set a ceiling on wages and take wage questions out of the sphere of collective bargaining. In effect, this would break down voluntary collective bargaining and unjustly deny American workers the right to a more adequate standard of living."

These wage freezing schemes, being pushed under cover of badly needed price control legislation, are vigorously opposed by the CIO, and can be expected to take a considerable part of CIO's legislative efforts during coming weeks and months.

Another serious threat to labor is seen in repeated attempts to use the Selective Service act as a weapon against strikers, and in the flat refusal of Selective Service officials to seek labor's cooperation in administering the act. The report describes the order for the reclassification of strikers, which was issued June 9, 1941, as "a threat against the right of labor to strike." This order stands, despite CIO protests, and will be "a continuous threat against organized labor" until rescinded.

Battles of Ideas and Words marked the CIO's legislative year. Here are some of the CIO pamphlets that helped arouse labor to the dangers threatening it in Congress.

It's NOT The Same Old South As CIO Makes A Stand In Dixie

"Against a background of anti-union hatred on the part of many employers, low wages, discrimination and physical attacks on many organizers, this one fact stands out clearly: The CIO has definitely opened the South for unionism." So commented President Murray in his annual convention report. And in this article Miss Lucy Randolph Mason—who knows whereof she speaks about Dixie and about labor—tells of CIO gains from Richmond to New Orleans, from Atlanta and Birmingham to Memphis.

By LUCY RANDOLPH MASON
CIO Southern Public Relations Director

THE CIO has grown to robust proportions in many parts of the south in the past 18 months. In the spring of 1937 the United Mine Workers of America was the only industrial union which had nearly completed organization of its industry in this region. No other industrial union had made appreciable gains in any southern state. The work of organizing still lay ahead.

Today there are hundreds of thousands of CIO members in the South. About 33 national unions or their sub-divisions have representation in this area. While only the Mine Workers have completed their job, a number of other unions have gone a long way in organizing. Others have only made a beginning.

The rate of organizing progress has speeded up very greatly in the past year or two. The other day I asked some one in the Atlanta CIO office where Regional Director C. H. Gillman was, and was told: "He just stepped out to sign a contract." That's the way it is in some southern cities—CIO representatives are always "stepping out" to sign contracts.

A very wholesome indication is the demand for organizing help coming from workers who have never been approached by CIO representatives. News of the gains made through union contracts spreads from workers in one industry to those in another, leading to constant calls for aid in setting up new locals. There are more requests for assistance than organizers can meet, and everywhere more men are needed to cover the territory.

More Pacts, Fewer Strikes

Some of my friends in the business and newspaper world tell me that industrialists are beginning to take the attitude that they are going to have to deal with the CIO sooner or later, and they might as well accept organization quickly and get it over with. That may account for the speed with which some contracts are consummated. It often happens that agreements are signed a few weeks after organization begins in a plant.

Certainly the number of strikes in relation to agreements secured is growing less. As Van Jones of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers puts it: "The last year shows a marked decrease in the number of strikes and a willingness on the part of employers to meet in good faith with chosen representatives of their employes. Also the number of contracts arrived at without strike action reflects recognition of our organization in their plants and mines."

Respect for CIO

In cities where CIO unions have had contracts for a year or two, there is a great change of attitude on the part of the public, press and office holders.

The CIO is accepted as part of the community, its officials serve on civic and social-work committees, newspapers print much more news favorable to the CIO and the editors have changed their formerly hostile attitude to a more understanding one.

Merchants and other business people are adopting a more friendly position as they begin to benefit from the new purchasing power turned loose in communities through wage increases won by industrial unions.

Union members are more secure in their civil rights when unions are numerous and strong. The mayor, sheriff, chief of police, and other elected officers stop being subservient tools of industrial corporations and begin to protect the rights of workers. Several governors of southern states have proved fair and just toward the CIO. It is worth noting that one of the governors with such a record has recently been elected to the United States Senate.

Birmingham

Naturally Birmingham with its huge CIO membership in coal and steel leads in CIO progress in the south. Yelverton Cowherd, secretary of the Alabama Industrial Union Council, reports a membership of more than 60,000 in the city and its trade area. Not only miners and industrial workers, but employes in many other occupations are enjoying union gains in Birmingham.

William A. Mitch, president of District 20, United Mine Workers, and also president of the Alabama Industrial Union Council, has been a powerful influence in promoting organization in many industries in Alabama.

Mobile is another Alabama city showing CIO progress lately. Along the water front the National Maritime Union, Inland Boatmen's Division of the NMU, and the Marine and Shipbuilding Workers are strong. The Textile Workers Union recently won a textile mill contract, after the employes in disgust with ineffectual AFL leadership, had voted themselves into the CIO. The United Construction Workers have a contract for building many homes for workers in Mobile, and other CIO unions have locals there.

Active in Alabama are the Textile Workers Union, the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers; District 50, coke, gas, by-products and chemical division of the Mine Workers, and numbers of other national unions.

Can't Stop CIO

Some three years ago the Mayor of Memphis, Tenn., was shouting that he could take care of any CIO organizers who dared come to that city. Norman Smith of the Automobile Workers was nearly killed there twice. Life was too dangerous for CIO men to stay in Memphis.

Now Memphis is different. Thousands of CIO members are enrolled in many union locals. Elections and contracts have been won again and again. The United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing and Allied Workers, has brought better wages and working conditions to many hundreds of workers. The Steel Workers Organizing Committee has pushed an energetic organizing campaign with great success. Representatives of the Inland Boatmen of the NMU have found time to help other workers organize and lent their hall for meetings. W. R. Henderson of the Boatmen, and later SWOC representative, has done particularly effective work. Now CIO unions have several meeting halls and a number of union offices in Memphis.

The Newspaper Guild has an excellent contract with the morning and evening papers. Other unions operating in Memphis are District 50 of the Mine Workers, the American Communications Association, the United Federal Workers, International Woodworkers, United Construction Workers, United Office and Professional Workers, United Automobile Workers, and the United Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Employes. The Mayor of Memphis no longer threatens CIO organizers.

Paul R. Christopher, executive secretary of the Tennessee Industrial Union Council, reports CIO activity from Knoxville in the northeastern part of the state to Memphis in the southeast. Chattanooga is one of the most active CIO towns, with the SWOC having the greatest number of locals.

Several national unions are pushing work aggressively in and around Knoxville. District 50 of the UMW is launching a vigorous campaign in Tennessee. A fine example of resistance to terrorism was given in Roane County in which Homer Wilson of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, and Oscar Wiles of the Mine Workers' District 50 were horribly beaten the night of September 25.

These two men were kidnaped and tortured while on their way home from a union meeting in Harriman. A few days later the workers of the Mead Paper Corporation, Harriman, voted for District 50 by a large majority.

New Orleans

Fred Pieper, regional director in Louisiana, reports that in New Orleans and its trade area, CIO membership grew from 675 in 1939 to 15,000 in 1941. Three years ago the CIO was misunderstood and hated in New Orleans, and the city administration helped employers and the AFL to fight it.

Now the CIO is strong and respected in New Orleans. Its locals spread from the waterfront through the industrial life of the city and out to cities 50 miles away. Recent additions to the union family are three large sugar refineries, one of them the "world's largest", says Pieper. In one of these the workers voted to leave the AFL after a year of failure, and now have a good contract under the CIO.

Atlanta Goes CIO

Atlanta has moved so fast in the last 18 months that new locals are springing up in every direction. Director Gillman reports organization is progressing in many of the city's industries.

A strike in the big Cluett and Peabody Company at Atlanta last February resulted in a national contract between makers of Arrow shirts and the Amalgamated Clothing Workers. May Bagwell, ACW representative was rewarded for four years of constructive work at this plant by the excellent agreement finally secured.

The union spirit has spread from Atlanta to towns many miles away. Biggest victory was in Buford in the Bona-Allen Company, manufacturers of leather, harness and shoes, employing more than 2,000 people. A fine contract was signed between the United Shoe Workers and the Company on October 29—the first signed with a deep-South shoe company, according to President Frank McGrath of the Shoe Workers. Buford workers are spreading unionism into nearby towns.

Dalton, Ga., is a fine example of peace and prosperity brought to a town through constructive relations between company and union. The large textile mills and hosiery mills there are under contract with the Textile Workers Union.

Textiles is the principal industry of North and South Carolina, the two most important cotton textile manufacturing states in the union. Big mills in Columbia, capital of South Carolina, where a number of strikes and lockouts occurred in the past, today are enjoying peaceful relations under contracts with TWUA. At Greenville, one of the leading textile centers of the world, textile workers celebrated their first Labor Day vacation with a parade.

In the Carolinas

One of the most recent North Carolina victories involves a contract covering three plants of the Erwin Mills employing 7,500 workers. Near the Virginia line the nine Marshall Field Mills are all under contract, and organization has spread into the huge mills at Danville, Va., where a campaign is being conducted.

From Virginia's mountains to her seacoast—from coal mines to shipping ports—CIO unions are found. Ray Thomason, regional director, has worked fast and hard in the last two years and accomplished much. Among other plants, four big pulp and paper or paper products mills are under contract with the United Paper, Novelty & Toy Workers; UCAPAWA has contracts with the big peanut processing plants in tidewater Virginia, and with tobacco stemming plants in Richmond, and the Amalgamated Clothing Workers has had a large clothing concern in Richmond signed up for four or five years.

Richmond is becoming a CIO center with contracts in pulp and paper, steel, clothing, tobacco stemming, dyeing and bleaching, chemicals and other products. The Newspaper Guild has recently signed a contract with the Times Dispatch and News Leader.

Kentucky, with its strong UMW, has shown marked CIO progress in other industries. Pensacola, on the gulf is the strongest CIO center in Florida. The Newspaper Guild has a contract with the Jacksonville paper.

Mississippi is losing out in its bitter fight against organization with several CIO unions making headway and signing contracts there.

The CIO is in the South to stay and from now on its progress will be at an increasingly rapid rate because the foundation is strongly laid.

CIO Cracks Employer Front To Boost Wages $1,125,000,000 in Year

A tidal wave of wage increases, one of the most remarkable gains in the history of the labor movement, flooded CIO members' pay envelopes with a total of $1,125,000,000 extra this year as the result of CIO activity since the 1940 Convention.

The wave was particularly significant because it engulfed a united employer opposition, whose dike was battered beyond help of a million thumbs by the United Mine Workers' precedent-setting $1 a day wage gain and the Steel Workers' 10 cents an hour increase, which affected millions of workers in practically every industry in America.

Birmingham, Ala.—Example of CIO Progress

By HAROLD HELFER

President, Birmingham Newspaper Guild

"I DON'T believe it—it's too good to be true," said Yelverton Cowherd, CIO director in Birmingham. "Re-check those figures."

But the figures were true—in the year ending Sept. 30, the CIO had gained exactly 10,178 more union members in the Birmingham area.

Furthermore:

Most of the contracts signed contained provision for the union shop.

Wages had been pushed up from a nickel to a quarter an hour.

There had been a general shortening of the work week.

And above all, a clear unmistakable spirit of militant unionism had blossomed out.

Indicating this fact perhaps better than any other incident is the strike of the Birmingham Newspaper Guild against The Birmingham Post. Some thirty white-collar workers belong to the Guild—circulation branch managers, reporters, photographers and a few clerks.

Last year they had felt they had been kicked around by The Post management. A strike vote came up, but it was voted down. The Guild signed a weak, unsatisfactory contract. Sheepishly, this slice of 30-odd from the great middle class went on with their work, stil respectable, but shaken.

Kicking Back

This year, come contract time, the same thing happened. The Guild felt itself kicked around again.

But then the sequence changed. The Guild kicked back. The Guild had found itself. The Guild, having solidified itself with the rapidly expanding CIO steamroller, found that this time it had muscles. When the Guildsmen took up their picket signs at one minute after midnight on Sept. 6, green and naive about such matters, they found friends marching up and down with them, steady hands who knew what to do. They were the coal miners and steel workers.

There's no longer any doubt about what's happened in Birmingham. The CIO, though an infant in years, had grown into a great and robust giant.

The CIO Steel Workers Organizing Committee even crashed through to a great victory in Gadsden, which has about as bad a record as any town in this country for "union-hating." When the Republic Steel Corporation continued mistreatment of union members and refused to comply with requests of CIO leaders William Mitch and Noel Beddow to stop it, the SWOC workers completely closed the plant and kept it closed—despite a terrific surge of reactionary pressure—until the management two days later agreed to treat the union respectably.

In Birmingham the CIO made the governor of the state back-track. The Ensley plant of the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Co., a subsidiary of U. S. Steel, was closed down by CIO steelworkers when the management refused to consider their grievances.

Despite the orderly conduct of the work stoppage, Governor Dixon ordered the Home Guard (instituted when the state militia was inducted into service) to the plant in a manifest attempt to break the strike.

It was only a matter of hours before Governor Dixon received a telegram that he had better remove his "tin hats" or all the steel workers at all the T. C. I. plants would walk out in protest. The governor recalled the Guard.

Join in Droves

In the van of the CIO's tremendous drive in the Birmingham area during the past year was the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers organization. Sixteen new unions, involving 4,014 men, sprang into existence.

Three thousand men joined the shipyard union. Six hundred signed cards in nine locals of the woodworkers. Others poured into the retail union and the textile workers. New locals of the packinghouse union, District 50, of the miners, the barbers, the transport workers, the oil union, the auto union, the construction workers, the office union—they all showed big gains.

In all, these new locals reported a membership at year's end of 10,178.

On the go, with the CIO, in Birmingham. City leaders chart strategy in the strike of the Birmingham Newspaper Guild vs. the Birmingham Post. Left to right, Guild Pres. Harold Helfer; Pres. William Mitch of District 20, United Mine Workers; A. B. Isserman, Guild counsel; Yelverton Cowherd, Alabama CIO president; Guild Organizer Woods; and, standing, Fon McGinniss.

Another 15,000 showed up as new faces in the established locals of the older unions—the steel workers, the coal miners, the older shipyard locals, the mine, mill and smelter workers.

Textile Union Moving

The Textile Workers Union started off the year with a bang, signing a closed shop contract with the Utica Knitting Mills at Anniston for 750 workers. At the Indian Head Mills at Cordova the union won a contract with the preferential clause, and it is now a 100 per cent union shop. The mill employs 700.

After 42 departmental strikes, the Lincoln Mills at Huntsville finally gave the preferential union shop and now approximately 1,400 people are listed there in the check-off of dues.

The International Woodworkers of America has organized ten new locals and negotiated four closed shop contracts. Two others were negotiated without this feature, but have 100 per cent organization anyway. The union handled 153 grievances and only lost one case. It brought an increase of 7½ cents per hour for its members.

The Packinghouse Workers Union has been growing with a bang. So successful was the organization at the Hormel Packing Co. in Birmingham that shortly afterward a closed shop contract was signed, granting wage increases from 5 to 13 cents an hour. Subsequently, and in rapid order, Armour branch house employes and Wilson branch house employes came into the organization.

William Mitch

Standing boldly out in relief in the picture of these gigantic CIO strides is the honest, sincere, hard-working figure of William Mitch, head of the United Mine Workers in Alabama, and one of the outstanding CIO leaders in this district. He is respected by management for his integrity and conscientiousness as much as he is by his union members.

Spotlight, Please—The CIO Auxiliaries Take The Stage

ALL THE spotlight at Detroit won't be grabbed by the CIO convention. For the ladies are coming to town!

Trade union wives in Birmingham, Ala., and Sunrise, Wyo., are giving their husbands final instructions on when to put the cat out and what to feed junior for breakfast—the ladies are heading for the third annual conference of CIO auxiliaries, to be held at the same time as the sessions of the fourth CIO convention.

Veterans and Juniors

Auxiliaries formed during the mine strikes of the '20s in West Virginia will send their delegates to sit with the women veterans of the Ford strike, with the aides of the Newspaper Guild in its 18-month strike against Hearst in Chicago and with the heroic wives of sharecroppers, whose union battles have been among the most desperate of those of the CIO. Some West Coast longshoremen will do their own cooking while their ladies spend four days in Detroit exchanging information with other women who, on the picket lines—or in the soup kitchens which kept the picket lines going—have added their strength to that of the unions.

Among those expected at the conference is Mrs. Vadis P. Morgan, financial secretary of the women's auxiliary of the Silverton, Col., local of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers.

Indicative of the feeling of the women who make up union auxiliaries is the letter which Mrs. Morgan wrote with the application of her group for a certificate of affiliation to the National Coordinating Committee for CIO Auxiliaries—with a dollar fee which the group could ill afford. (The local to which her husband belongs has been locked out and on the blacklists for two years.)

Union Devotion

The letter says, in part, "I realize that our nerves are frayed from this long drawn-out fight—that after two years of a diet of beans, bread, potatoes and eggs, when unable to pay lights, water and rent, the knowledge that the black list keeps us from obtaining work here or elsewhere, that perhaps our perspective has changed and we do not see things in their true light. However, our biggest problem after the one of trying to exist is to keep devotion to organization above personal feeling. We try to do our part in this big game of labor—perhaps it counts for more than it would seem. At least we study and try."

There, also, will be Ruth Allen, daughter of a West Virginia miner who left her home in Marion County to take a scholarship won by her work in high school. She came back four years later to become educational director of the Marion County Industrial Union Council. Ruth, who is also the executive secretary of the West Virginia State Council of Auxiliaries, has conducted classes for 6,500 miners and organized 1,500 women in the county into auxiliaries.

She Got a Scab!

From the same state will come the wife of a Negro miner, a woman with a jail record of which she is proud. Why? It was imposed for "beating union pork chops out of the hide of a scab"—a scab who not only tried to steal future security from her husband by trying to break the strike, but who went into the strike kitchen and stole meat for his lunchbox so that he could eat it at noon in the struck plant!

The National Coordinating Committee believes that by understanding all the problems of the women it can function best; but the women who hold together the morale of their families and who work side by side with their husbands in the fight for a better world do not talk much about what they as individuals have gone through.

One request by Mrs. Julia Katz, national secretary of the committee, for information from a Southern auxiliary leader, brought a letter from her 13-year-old daughter. In dignified simplicity, the girl apologized to Mrs. Katz for the lack of a sufficient answer, explaining that her mother was too busy with auxiliary work and meeting everyday problems to take time to write them down.

Near-Slavery

From the wife of a Negro organizer for the Cotton Sharecroppers, Tenants and Field Laborers Division of the UCAPAWA, comes a vivid and dramatic story showing the indomitable spirit of a woman faced with terrific economic burdens, anti-union forces and racial discrimination—a combination not unusual in the town of Kirkwood, Mo.

Evicted from their farms by owners who wished to get the government bonus for curtailed planting, these people walked the roads "night and day" to find living quarters of any kind. Zella Whitfield, author of the letter, found a friendly superintendent on the Laforge housing project who gave rooms to the family until they were forced into hiding to escape landowners wrathful over their organizing a demonstration.

"I am determined to do all I can," she writes. "I have nearly 200 women organized. Our object is to make the union stronger in the South and help the people learn how to manage their own affairs, instead of letting the land hogs make slaves of them.

"They have worked us every since we were supposed to be set free, for nothing, and our living conditions are terrible. I, myself, have had to take blankets and make a tent over my bed during childbirth, sometime, to keep it from raining or snowing in my face."

But these personal factors will be forgotten at the meeting in Detroit, where the delegates will coordinate and put into terms of a national program the work which the auxiliaries are doing locally and in their own internationals in the interest of national defense—the fight against profiteering, the aid in civilian defense activities and the carrying out of Red Cross work. The determination of the women who helped make Park City, Utah, a 100 per cent union town; of others who went out with their woodworker husbands in Oregon and Washington and fought for the union; the determination inherent in the tradition of the miners' auxiliaries—this determination is being turned to the problems of a country at war, of a democratic system which must be defended and extended.

"Our women's auxiliaries have won distinction in the onward march of the CIO for their aid in the organization of the unorganized," the call states. "We must now distinguish ourselves also in the onward march of the women of America to strengthen the defense of the nation by improving the living standards, the health and the morale of the people of the nation."

Preparing Plans

Mrs. Catherine Gelles, president of the Detroit Council of UAW Auxiliaries and the woman who organized the huge soup kitchen for the Ford strikers, is a fitting chairman for the arrangements committee in the convention city. Mrs. Faye Stephenson of Cleveland, national president of the UAW auxiliaries, is acting chairman of the National Coordinating Committee and will preside at the conference sessions.

Strikes are won in the union kitchen as well as on the union picket line. Here's a strike scene that's familiar to many a CIO-er; the ladies announce that chow is ready. These ladies are helping out farm equipment workers, striking against Intl. Harvester Co., last spring.

Paging Mr. Hitler--Here's A Program!

BILLS to erect concentration camps in America, to jail strikers for long prison terms, to tap private phone conversations, to exile militant union men, even a serious proposal to execute striking workers, marked a year of almost incessant attacks on basic civil rights in this country, President Murray reported to the fourth CIO convention.

At the same time, anti-union activity of the FBI redoubled, with open wiretapping practiced against the president of a CIO international union in one case and a strenuous campaign by the Dept. of Justice to secure passage of a bill legalizing FBI snooping.

These attacks on basic American rights, taking place under cover of the "hysteria and excitement surrounding the defense crisis," were beaten back by the CIO, as President Murray notes—but the dangers are by no means past.

Concentration Camps

The Hobbs bill (HR 3) for example, and the Allen bill (HR 4861) would herd aliens who have been ordered deported but who cannot be sent abroad into concentration camps for indefinite periods — which could mean life. Both these bills have been kept from passing only by united CIO and other progressive opposition, but they can be revived at any time.

Another Allen bill (HR 1644) ordering the deportation of one individual—Harry Bridges, CIO California leader and president of the Longshoremen and Warehousemen's Union—was smuggled through the House when only 40 members were on the floor. This bill, stymied last year after nationwide protests, is scheduled for Senate consideration this session.

Wiretapping Defeated

The CIO's best victory in stemming this anti-democratic offensive came in the defeat of the wiretapping bill, offered by Rep. Hobbs and backed by the Dept. of Justice and by Congressional leaders. Commenting on this campaign and on other evidence of anti-union work by the FBI, President Murray's report declares:

"The FBI continues to be a grave threat because of its various violations of civil rights. The serious danger exists that a political police similar to a fascist Gestapo is being developed in this country."

As the report points out, the U. S. Dept. of Justice has refused to prosecute violators of civil rights, though a special bureau was set up for that purpose. CIO organizers have been tarred and feathered by vigilante gangs, especially in the South, and promised "investigations" by the Department seem to have little or no result in checking such outrages.

Defense appropriations are soaring towards the 63 billion dollar mark—but performance as represented by actual expenditures, lags far behind at about 10 billion. Reason for the lag, according to Pres. Murray's report, is the lack of planning in the defense program—which CIO believes could be remedied by adoption of the Murray Industry Council Plan.

ECONOMIC OUTLOOK:

Arms Program Brings Vast Changes In Economic Life

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15—Declaring that the "economic condition of the U. S. can only be discussed in terms of the armament program," the current Economic Outlook, monthly CIO publication, devotes six pages of a special convention issue to discussing the effects of the defense program on wages, employment, cost of living, the national income and taxation.

"The economic condition of the U. S. can only be discussed in terms of the armament program," the Outlook says.

"All production is subordinated to the requirements of defense manufacture. The major consumer of national output is the armament program. Practically all of new industrial development is being done through government investment."

"All economic factors in the nation have become related to the federal government's program of arms purchases."

HALF OF U. S. INCOME

Present arms programs and future plans call for use of more than half the national income on defense, the Outlook points out, adding that the limit on the defense program "has ceased to be the amount of appropriations" and it can only be measured now in terms of "actual production and potential production."

Vast changes in the national economy are already resulting, chiefly evident in the turn from production of non-durable consumers' goods to durable goods. These changes are estimated to affect all kinds of businesses—at least 20,000 of which may be destroyed by the dislocation of the arms program."

One result, in addition to wiping out small businesses and millions of jobs, is a speeding up of the monopoly process.

This is seen in the fact that only 4,000 of the nation's 184,000 manufacturing plants have prime government contracts of $50,000 or over, and in the further fact that only some 6,000 of the 12,000 plants located by the army and navy as fit for arms production are being used in defense.

While production has been rising to "extraordinarily high levels" in the past few months, unemployment still remains a major problem, with an estimated 5,000,000 out of work, and the certain prospect of greater numbers of jobless through the application of priorities.

AVOIDABLE SHORTAGES

Lack of planning is largely responsible for this mass unemployment, the Outlook points out, declaring that if the CIO production plans and the Industry Council plan had been adopted or even "discussed in good faith," the situation could have been avoided. The CIO warned repeatedly that shortages in steel, aluminum, copper and other materials were developing, but nothing was done.

Wage increases won by the CIO have been the only factor in even slightly balancing the share of national income going to the workers, the Outlook points out. The usual tendency in times of rising national income is in the other direction, with a greater share going to profits and workers receiving proportionately even less than they ordinarily get.

Another serious threat to workers' income is in the rapidly rising prices already amounting to "mild inflation." These price rises, chiefly felt in consumers' goods that workers buy, "have already practically wiped out the substantial wage increases secured by CIO affiliates in the first half of 1941."

Economic chaos will be the effect of an end to the war, the Outlook says in conclusion, unless proper steps are taken now in the sense of planning to avoid it.

Govt. Control of Wages Scored; Report Cites Industrial Super-Profits

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17—Economic problems involving the bread and butter of all CIO members are dealt with in the section of President Murray's report on the Economic Division of the CIO, headed by Ralph Hetzel as director.

Questions of wage policy, price control, priority unemployment, taxation and WPA are the main topics in the section, covering the year's work of the division in preparing information, carrying on studies, publishing a monthly "Economic Outlook," and generally furnishing background material for CIO policies on such matters.

On wage policy, the report declares emphatically that "the CIO has always gone on the "fundamental conviction that the working people of the nation should receive a greater share of the national income," and that "the vigor and success of the CIO has grown from its steadfast adherence to this principle."

WAGE FREEZING

The report sharply condemns attempts now being made in Congress and in the employers' press to control wages by government order, pointing out that wage increases can easily be paid out of industrial profits without materially increasing prices, and that wage control would "force labor to freeze its share of the national income."

The CIO also opposes any other plans that would cut wages, the report adds, citing CIO opposition to attempts to tie wages to the cost of living and to put forced savings plans in operation.

In doing so, the CIO is aware of the dangers of inflation, as shown by Pres. Murray's testimony at hearings on the price control bill, in which he called for "measures to control those prices which are threatening to create an inflationary movement" while vigorously fighting wage control proposals.

PRIORITIES

The new and menacing threat to the workers involved in priorities unemployment—which means layoffs due to materials shortages—is dealt with in the report, which describes the situation as "a direct attack on our defense program," which requires full production and full employment to carry out its purposes.

These shortages are due to lack of planning and to failure to use American resources fully and intelligently, the report adds, pointing out that the Industry Council plan "is CIO's answer to this need."

A section of the report is devoted to a discussion of taxation, pointing out that the heaviest burden now falls on those least able to pay, while excess profits and inflated incomes are left comparatively untouched.

It also calls attention to the continued need for adequate WPA appropriations, urging support for the Thomas bill (S. 1833) to set up a unified public works program and to improve WPA wages and working conditions.

Urge More Extensive Training

Washington, Nov. 17—Hitting at uncoordinated government defense programs and lack of sufficient labor participation, CIO President Philip Murray in his report to the Fourth National CIO Convention this week urged affiliated unions to "give substantial attention to establishing in plants with which they have collective bargaining relation agreements training, apprenticeship and upgrading programs."

"Such programs jointly operated by unions and management would improve the productive output of industry and smooth the operation of each plant," Murray declared.

GREATER EFFORT NEEDED

Murray said that the Training-Within-Industry Branch of the Labor Division of OPM "has undertaken no forceful and systematic effort to make certain that industries in industrial areas where large expansion has taken place are prepared to train an adequate labor supply."

The CIO President recommended that no training program go forward without the fullest participation of labor in planning and operation, and that each program should be closely related to production plans.

Win Election

Lima, Ohio, Nov. 15—A 686 to 245 National Labor Relations Board election victory was scored in the Ohio Steel Foundry this week by the United Automobile, Aircraft & Agricultural Implement Workers Union.

Defense Strikes Only 10% of Total

Washington, Nov. 15—Man days lost in defense strikes from June 1 to October 1 of this year amounted to about one-tenth of the total lost in all strikes, according to figures released by the OPM here.

In other words, there were nine times as many more man days lost in non-defense strikes as in defense industries. Newspapers—and especially newspaper editorial writers—please note.

Union Shop Promotes Stability

WHEN men are equal, they bargain. When they're not, they haggle, and one of them frequently loses his shirt.

That, in postage stamp style, is the worker's case for the union shop. Its unity gives him power. His power gives him confidence, self respect and a better standard of living. He bargains with his employer instead of wrangling, meets him as an equal instead of as an exalted being with life or death control over the food, clothing, shelter, pay check.

The union shop means basically that all employes of a particular plant or industry are members of one union. The union shop is tried and established.

Millions Covered

Of 11,000,000 organized workers, an estimated 3,000,000 are protected by union shop contracts, chiefly in the coal, clothing, printing, building trades, brewery, motion picture, railroad and glass industries. The union shop is far older than CIO—in fact, almost as old as the labor movement.

The union shop is as American as democracy. For the union IS the democracy through which the worker expresses his industrial citizenship. And no such organization can be fully effective in furthering the welfare of the worker and bettering his bargaining relations with the employer unless it embodies all workers covered by its unit. Likewise, no democratic government can be fully effective unless all those within its borders are participating citizens.

Democracy At Work

This comparison has been ably put by an official of the Steel Workers' Organizing Committee, who said:

"When these ideas are applied to union-employer relations they operate, with some variations, as they do in a political democracy. The union elected by a majority of the workers in any one plant represents them all.

"The minorities, as in any one Congressional district, are unrepresented. The majority union bargains with the employer for all workers, and the minority is required to abide by the conditions of employment favored by the majority."

"All the workers are bound by the union-employer contract. The wage increases, shorter hours, and other benefits secured by the majority are enjoyed likewise by the minority. The union has to pay hall rent, postage and grievance committeemen for lost time and other expenses.

"To meet these obligations every member must pay the taxes (union dues) levied by and for the support of the union. All the workers derive equal benefits from the union, and therefore they must all share equally in paying the cost of its upkeep. . ."

A union firmly established through a union shop contract can turn its energies toward improving production, feeling that its members, with the employer, have a real stake in the plant's efficiency and output.

Why Opposition

This is no mere theory, but for several years has been the practice of large CIO unions, particularly in the clothing industry, where the Amalgamated Clothing Workers Union has established an extensive service to deal specifically with this problem.

Opposition to the union shop stems more from employer organizations than from individual employers—probably because outfits like the National Association of Manufacturers find that militant reaction enhances their chance of existence. The United States Department of Labor has discovered that employers' opposition to the union shop "was due not so much to their objection to the union shop, as to their unwillingness to accept collective bargaining."

Just Not So

Employers frequently are like the man who takes a drink to stop a cold that he thinks he's going to catch sometime next week.

They offer a variety of reasons for rejecting the union shop, including: That a union shop interferes with an employe's right to self-determination, that it makes the union judge of a man's right to be employed, that it destroys discipline and efficiency, that it places the union in a position where it can checkmate the management's operating policies.

All of these reasons frequently arise from the "I-don't-want-a-union-shop" attitude. All of them may be answered by the statement that experience simply has proved them untrue.

List Needed Social Security Improvements

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17—A set of principles for an improved social security system for the nation's workers was outlined in President Murray's CIO convention report.

Pointing out that President Roosevelt may soon recommend a number of changes in the Social Security system, the report said the CIO Committee on Social Security "will give the fullest measure of its energy and counsel to the consideration of these measures so that we can make effective our contribution to the development of a sound social security system for the American people."

CITE GOALS

Listed as goals for CIO endeavor in improving the existing security committee were:

1. An Old Age insurance providing for universal coverage without a pauperizing needs-tests and guaranteeing a monthly minimum income large enough to make a decent standard of living possible.

2. Unemployment Compensation on a uniform federal basis with extended coverage to all workers, adequate benefits, benefits for partial unemployment and repeal of employer experience rating schemes.

3. Permanent and total disability benefits for all who lose their earning ability, as part of the old age security program.

DISABILITY BENEFITS

4. Temporary disability benefits for those who lose their earning power through illness.

5. National health program on a national basis covering all members of the family, with free medical care for those who cannot afford insurance.

6. More adequate public assistance for blind, dependent children, maternal and child health care.

7. Federal social security for those in military service.

8. Public finance of social security program by taxes upon excess income.

Seamen Win Raise On Seized Ships

New York, Nov. 15—The U. S. Maritime Commission has granted a $10 monthly wage increase to all unlicensed seamen sailing on vessels seized by the government under the Ship Seizure Act of June 6, 1941.

The wage increase, effective as of November 1, came about following recent discussions between Thomas Christensen, director of the Pan American Department of the National Maritime Union, and Philip King, assistant director, Division of Marine Personnel, of the Maritime Commission.

In a statement dealing with the wages, hours and working conditions of foreign seamen sailing on seized ships under Maritime Commission control, Christensen pointed out that the difficulties encountered in manning these vessels arose mainly because the wages paid on them were inferior to those customarily paid in similar trades.

"The final and proper solution lies in the granting of the same wages, hours and conditions to the foreign seamen sailing on vessels owned and operated by the Commission as those on American flag vessels manned by American seamen in similar trade routes," the statement said: "However, the NMU is prepared and willing to meet with the Commission and cooperate in every way possible to try to work out an equitable adjustment of this whole problem."

Win Increase

Cortland, N. Y., Nov 15—A four-cent-an-hour pay increase modified union shop and a week's vacation with pay were listed this week by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee in the victorious settlement of a 35-day strike involving 1,000 employes of the Wickwire Bros. wire plant.

Your Social Security Card

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15—The U. S. Social Security Board today urged all workers eligible for government Old Age and Survivors Insurance to be sure they use only one Social Security account number card and to show it to every new employer the first day on the job.

Workers with questions about their wage credits should inquire at the nearest Social Security Board field office, where confidential statements are available.

CIO Headquarters Busy During Year

All through the year the various departments in the CIO national headquarters keep on the job protecting labor's interests throughout the country. Here's a birds-eye picture of their functions and activities.

ORGANIZATION

"The Organization Dept., under the direction of Allan S. Haywood, director, and Michael F. Widman, Jr., assistant director, has expanded its activities with encouraging accomplishments and results," Pres. Murray noted in his annual convention report.

Haywood

The Organization Dept. has 23 regional directors, one sub-regional director and 78 field representatives directly assigned to CIO and on the CIO payroll. In addition, CIO has assigned 92 field representatives to national and international unions and organizing committees and has 10 directors or officers of national and international unions and organizing committees on the CIO payroll.

As of October 1, there were 41 national and international unions and organizing committees affiliated with CIO.

LEGAL

The job of representing CIO's side of the case in several lawsuits of importance to labor and in proceedings before government agencies during the year was carried out by the Legal Dept. of the national office, headed by Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel.

Pressman

Chief CIO victory in the courts was a verdict upholding the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers union claim in the "collar-to-collar" case. This claim, recognized by the Wage Hour Division of the Labor Dept. meant that for the first time in history miners were paid for time spent in travelling from the mine opening to the work place. Previously this time—as much as two hours a day—was unpaid

In addition, the CIO won a number of important victories in lawsuits arising out of the Little Steel situation, including a suit filed against the Steel Workers Organizing Committee by the companies involved, the Apex Hosiery case filed under the anti-trust laws, a damage suit against the United Office and Professional Workers, and a settlement in the Aluminum case, in which the AFL filed suit to take over the union's funds.

PUBLICITY

In a year marked by constant attack on Labor's basic rights, the CIO Publicity Dept., headed by Len DeCaux, has "conducted an intensified publicity campaign . . . in conjunction with our legislative work."

DeCaux

The Publicity Dept. has endeavored throughout the year to increase the amount of time allotted to labor representatives on the nation's radio stations, as well as publicizing CIO activities and statements in the daily newspapers.

During the past year the CIO NEWS doubled its circulation and conducted extensive campaigns in behalf of the CIO's national organization and legislative program.

A number of pamphlets — their circulation running about one million—were issued during the year.

COUNCILS

Creation of a Department of Industrial Union Councils at CIO headquarters, with John Brophy in charge, has helped to coordinate the work of various CIO state and local groups, Pres. Murray reported to the convention.

Brophy

The Department was established in December, 1940, shortly after Pres. Murray took office, and it has given considerable attention to every phase of the Councils' activities — political, community participation, educational etc.

Through the activities of the various councils, various types of state anti-labor bills have been defeated, and in recent months the local CIO groups are reported to be showing increased interest in participation in community leadership.

COMPTROLLER

A report on CIO finances for the year was given to the CIO Executive Board meeting in Detroit on Nov. 16 by J. R. Bell, Comptroller.

Bell

The report revealed that an audit of the books has been made by a committee appointed by Pres. Murray.

Increased organizing activity during the past year has brought hundreds of thousands of new members into the unions during the past year, with the result—according to Pres. Murray—"that continued increase in income of the national organization will assure the continuation" of aid to affiliated unions and expansion of CIO activities.

ECONOMIC

The CIO has expanded its research and economic work throughout the past year, Pres. Murray's convention report indicated.

Hetzel

The Economic Division — until 1940 known as the Unemployment Division — is headed by Ralph Hetzel, Jr.

Monthly publication of the Economic Outlook brings CIO views on such subjects as unemployment, wage freezing, price control, cost of living, public works policy etc. to labor leaders and government officials and economists.

In addition the Division has worked with the CIO Committee on Unemployment and has represented the CIO at a number of conferences conducted by government departments, as well as digging out from the overwhelming volume of data issued every week by the government vital facts of interest to labor.

Win Nickel Raise

Sugar Land, Tex., Nov. 17—A five-cent hourly pay raise for 140 employes of the Marshall Canning Co. here was gained in a contract signed by Local 102, United Cannery, Agricultural Packing & Allied Workers.

'Repeal Out-Worn Marine Laws,' Is Plea

Detroit, Nov. 17—"Archaic laws and regulations" designed to restrict the rights of seamen "serve only to preclude the peaceful and orderly development of collective bargaining, and should be repealed," according to the section on maritime unions in President Murray's report to the CIO convention.

Employers have used the old slogan "seamen are wards of the government" to fasten these repressive laws on maritime workers, making them victims of special discriminations not suffered by other groups of workers, the report points out. At the same time, U. S. agencies such as the Maritime Commission and the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation interfere with the unions' attempt to win full bargaining rights.

Maritime workers are also the target of a third attack in the form of repressive bills offered in Congress.

The CIO Maritime Committee, formed of the CIO unions in the industry, has been fighting during the year for the repeal of legal shackles on maritime workers and for laws to bring standards up to those enjoyed by other workers.

Report Notes Farm-Labor Unity Need

Detroit, Nov. 17—Unity of interest between farmers and organized labor is a fundamental CIO policy, President Philip Murray stated this week in his report to the 1941 CIO Convention.

It is clear today as it has been in the past, he said, that the welfare of the workers and the farmers is interdependent.

"The critical problems created by our national defense have emphasized the necessity of coalition between organized labor and progressive farm organizations," Murray declared.

Carey Wires Congress On Neutrality

Washington, Nov. 17 — Labor's right to organize, bargain collectively and strike must not be interfered with under pretense of protecting American security, CIO Secretary James B. Carey said in a wire sent to all members of the House of Representatives urging them to vote for arming of ships and amendments to the Neutrality Act as passed by the Senate.

Asserting that "American workers are united in demanding freedom of the seas and the right of American ships to protect themselves from Nazi pirates, Carey charged that "the claim of certain Congressmen that they cannot vote to protect our nation's security from Hitler unless labor's right to organize, bargain collectively and strike is restricted or abolished, is a pretense for an attack on labor at the expense of the safety of our nations."

"Hitler cannot be beaten by initiating his Nazi repressions here in our own country," Carey said.

Discuss Legislation At Labor Dept. Parley

Washington, Nov. 17—Plans affecting labor under the national defense program were discussed at the eighth national conference on labor legislation which was held here this week at the Department of Labor. Representatives named by the governors of 39 states, and the District of Columbia and Alaska attended the conference which was called by the Secretary of Labor.

Among the CIO representatives present were Frank J. Bender, regional director in Maryland; Meyer Adelman, secretary-treasurer of the Milwaukee, Wis., Council; Powers Hapgood, Indiana regional director; Anna Marsoli, secretary, Rhode Island Council; F. C. Pieper, regional director in Louisiana; Paul M. Russo, representative United Automobile Workers in Wisconsin; Luther M. Slinkard, secretary, St. Louis, Mo., Council and Gustave A. Strebel, president of the New York State Council.

Subjects taken up at the conference included labor supply, training and priorities; state labor laws; safety and health programs and industrial relations, as they concern national defense.

HEADQUARTERS: Here's the new building being occupied as national offices for the CIO National Maritime Union in New York City. Owned by the union, the property cost $80,000. Through the NMU hiring hall, located in the new building, more than 1,000 seamen are dispatched to jobs each week.

New Guild Heads Confer With FDR

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15—Lunch with Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, a 20-minute conference with the President and meetings with high government and labor officials marked the stay here this week of the three ranking officers of the American Newspaper Guild.

President Milton M. Murray, Executive Vice-President Sam B. Eubanks and Secretary-Treasurer William W. Rodgers were presented to President Roosevelt by Barney B. Taylor, Washington Guild president.

Discussing the Birmingham Guild strike and the tendency of some publishers to regard the newspaper business as a "defense industry," the leaders, through Murray, assured the President that they proposed to operate "a union of which he would be proud to have his wife a member".

The Guild leaders also met CIO President Philip Murray and other CIO officers.

Retail Union Makes Gains In Denver

Denver, Nov. 15—Signature of three contracts providing pay raises up to 33⅓ per cent, and victory in a National Labor Relations Board election were announced today by Local 269, United Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Employes of America, through Fred K. Hefferly, CIO field representative.

A pact with the Golden West Milling Co., of nearby Longmont, brought the 33⅓ per cent increase plus a week's vacation with pay, the union shop and check-off collection of dues.

A contract with the Eagle Branch of the Colorado Milling & Elevator Co., one of the largest corporations in the State, brought pay increases averaging seven cents an hour and a similar vacation clause, covered also in an agreement with the Omar Milling Co. that boosted wages from 2½ to 18 cents an hour.

Foes of CIO on Stand At Teamsters' Trial

Minneapolis, Nov. 15—A parade of anti-CIO witnesses, some of whom failed to get jobs with CIO Teamsters Local 544 and turned instead to the AFL Teamsters Union for their pay checks, this week featured the sedition trial of 28 members of the Socialist Workers Party and of Local 544.

The trial, which started October 28, is expected to last at least six weeks more. Defendants, if convicted, face a maximum of 16 years each in prison and $10,000 fines.

The Civil Rights Defense Committee, 160 Fifth Ave., New York City, urged financial support for the defendants, who are accused of conspiring to overthrow the government. According to the prosecutor, the "evidence" of this is that the 28 believed that workers should always continue to demand better conditions and wages, regardless of what they were able to win from employers.

Accusations by one witness that a defendant advocated overthrow of the government turned out, under cross examination, to be nothing more than the long-known Marxist prediction that the effects of war and economic collapse would cause the mass of workers to turn toward the political program of revolutionary socialism.

Bridges' Counsel Accuse Sears of 'Tortured Reasoning' In Decision

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 15—Trial Examiner Charles B. Sears exhibited anti-labor prejudice, was careless and indulged in "tortured reasoning" in recommending that Harry Bridges, California CIO director and Longshore union leader, be deported to his native Australia.

That today was the contention of a brief supporting Bridges' appeal from the Sears' ruling, which was directly opposite to one previously made by Dean James M. Landis, who found that former testimony describing Bridges as a one-time affiliate of the Communist Party came from the mouths of discredited labor fakers, stool pigeons and ex-convicts.

FILE EXCEPTIONS

Exceptions to the Sears ruling, filed with the United States Immigration Service, stated that Sears based his decision chiefly on two witnesses, Harry Lundeberg, secretary of the Sailors Union of the Pacific and James O'Neil, former CIO publicity man.

The exceptions pointed out that Lundeberg found Bridges a great obstacle in his path to labor "czardom" and became his open enemy prior to testifying at the hearings.

The exceptions cited the perjury conviction of O'Neil, who was had once seen Bridges pasting stamps in a Communist membership book, but who denied it before Sears. Sears, the defense continued, apparently accepted as truth the alleged, unsworn statement of a perjurer—which he denied in court.

Truce Averts Walkout At Niagara

Niagara Falls, N. Y., Nov. 15—Arrangement of a conference about a National Labor Relations Board election today temporarily ended threat of a strike by the United Mine Workers union at the Carborundum Co., producers of abrasives vital in defense work.

Announcement of the strike's deferment followed an NLRB order to the company to withdraw recognition of the Carborundum Employes Union and invalidate the bargaining contract with the organization.

UMW District Organizer Charles A. Doyle, who said the CIO represents the majority of the firm's 3,200 workers, pointed to the fact that an NLRB trial examiner previously had ruled the CEU to be company-dominated.

Service Staff At Yale Gives University Course On Striking

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 15—The first strike in exclusive Yale University's 241-year-old history ended this week after 11 hours, by agreement between the administration and the United Construction Organizing Committee, representing nearly 600 maids, janitors, engineers, mechanics and maintenance workers.

The walk-out of the underpaid, overworked employes caused a minor crisis among the 5,214 students, many of whom for the first time had to make their own beds.

The precedent-making dispute drew considerable support from students who realized that workers have been underpaid on wages as low as $11.25 a week, and from at least two professors who cancelled classes in sympathy with the picketing employes.

WIN SYMPATHY

The two were Professor Fred Rodell and Associate Professor Abraham H. Feller. Professor Rodell posted a bulletin board notice, which said:

"There will be no class in taxation today. The Law School, as you know, is being picketed by a union representing the striking service employes of the university.

"I have determined to my complete satisfaction that the union is a bona fide union representing a clear majority of those employes . . . I, therefore, intend to respect its picket line.

"I am sorry for any inconvenience this may cause the class in the matter of future make-up lectures, but I assure the class that the inconvenience to me will be equally great, and I feel rather strongly that issues at stake are somewhat more important than the question of personal inconvenience to us."

AGREE ON SETTLEMENT

The UCWOC and officials of the university, which has been endowed to the tune of $100,448,707, agreed to a five-point settlement formula, which provided for:

Return to work, no discrimination against strikers, a ban on publicity save through a mediation official, and provision that intimidation cases could be submitted to the mediation board and that when negotiations were resumed on November 18 the university should not by a sudden offer of a wage increase prejudice the full possibilities of the negotiations.

SAME OLD STORY

Although the scene of the struggle— an ivy clad campus—differed sharply from the ordinary blackened industrial plant, the issue of worker vs. boss was the same, Organizer John J. Clark declared.

"Union busting was the fundamental issue," he declared. "We want protection from intimidation and threats. We are being watched by 501 universities and colleges over the nation. What we do here will decide in some measure what others will do."

PICKET YALE: First strike in American university history went off with a bang this week, as the CIO Construction Workers scored a couple of touchdowns in a snappy 11-hour walkout at Yale. Union won many improvements for the college's big maintenance workers. Here are some of the pickets marching before one of the campus's Gothic archways.

Drive Sweeps Y's In Gotham; Ask Pact

New York, Nov. 15—After one week of a drive to bring higher wages and better working conditions to the 5,000 maintenance and food service workers in New York "Y's" and social agencies, a majority of the YMCA and YWCA employes have demonstrated their desire to be represented in collective bargaining by the Social Service Employes Union, Local 19, United Office and Professional Workers of America, it was announced today by Joseph H. Levy, national social service director of the union.

The union proposed to the YMCA and the YWCA of New York and Brooklyn that a secret election be held. "The response of these workers within the past week has been amazing," Mr. Levy said. "Without a doubt these will be an overwhelming vote for the union." A substantial majority of the workers in Sloane House, the country's largest YMCA, have already signed union application cards.

Both the YMCA and YWCA have declared it to be their national policy to recognize the right of workers to organize. Pledges of support from religious, labor, social service, and other organizations have been received by the union.

Pact in N. Y. New Laundry

New York, Nov. 17—A new two-year agreement signed between the Laundry Workers' Joint Board of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and the principal laundry owners' associations in this area has averted a threat of a general strike of 25,000 laundry workers servicing a million families in Greater New York and Long Island.

Terms of the agreement call for a general 10 per cent wage increase for all inside help; reduction of hours from 53 to 48 for maintenance men and from 48 to 44 for inside male help, and payment by the employers of one per cent of their weekly payroll for sick benefits.

The CIO NEWS--A Voice To Answer Labor's Foes

MANY readers of this special convention issue of The CIO News will be making their first acquaintance with this weekly newspaper of the Congress of Industrial Organizations. Many others, who have read it before, may not have thought what a paper of this kind means and can come to mean for all of us.

When you read something in the big business press that makes your blood boil, don't you often wish that labor had a press of its own that could act as a real antidote to the anti-labor poison daily fed to millions of the American public?

NOT BIG ENOUGH

Yes, we have a labor press. But it is not big enough to cure mind-poisoning on a mass-production basis. Nearly every union has a paper or magazine of its own. There are many weekly labor papers. Each of them does a splendid job of bringing the truth about labor to the members of a particular union or the workers of a particular locality. But still more needs to be done—and on a national basis.

The CIO NEWS is the national weekly organ of the whole CIO. It is the only paper that reports all the news of the CIO and handles national labor issues from a national labor viewpoint. It speaks for a labor movement of more than five million members. It has no private profit interests to serve, but only the interests of the working people who finance and support it.

BIG AMBITIONS

The CIO NEWS is a paper with big ambitions. It is the small beginning of a national labor press that aims eventually to circulate as widely and speak as effectively for labor as the big business press does for Wall Street.

To bring this about, one thing is needed more than anything else. That is YOUR SUPPORT.

With your support The CIO NEWS can grow rapidly in circulation and size. With more pages at its disposal, it can add many new and popular features to appeal to every member of the family and to attract new readers. It can compete on the news-stands with the papers and magazines of the wealthy anti-labor interests. It can lay the basis for a daily labor press.

What You Can Do

(1) You can subscribe to The CIO NEWS yourself, and urge others to subscribe. That's quite simple and cheap. Just put One Dollar in an envelope and send it with your name and address to

The CIO NEWS,
1106 Connecticut Avenue,
Washington, D. C.

This will bring the paper to your home each week for a year.

(2) You can order, or you can urge your Local Union to order The CIO NEWS in bundle lots, for distribution at your meetings, at your plant and elsewhere. The price for bundle orders is 1½ cents per copy for quantities up to 1,000; 1¼ cents per copy for quantities between 1,000 and 2,000; and 1 cent per copy for quantities of more than 2,000.

(3) Through your Local or Industrial Union Council, you can arrange for a group subscription to have The CIO NEWS mailed to your members at their homes. If such a subscription covers 100 or more members, the only down payment necessary is 3 cents per member to cover the cost of preparing your mailing list in stencil form. This amount is payable once only. Thereafter your Local or Council will be billed at the rate of 1¼ cents per member per week, for as long as you wish to continue receiving the paper.

(4) You can take up with your union or Council the possibility of publishing a special union or local edition of The CIO NEWS. At present there are a score of such editions being published. They combine your special local or union news, edited by your own editor, with the national news and features of The CIO NEWS. Full particulars about launching such an edition can be obtained by addressing The CIO NEWS at CIO national headquarters.

Your union depends upon the support of every individual member. Your paper, The CIO NEWS, depends upon the support of every reader. YOU can do your part to build a really powerful national labor press. It's up to YOU!

CIO PLEDGES ALL-OUT AID TO NATIONS FIGHTING NAZIS

Backs Miners' Fight

BULLETIN

WASHINGTON, Nov. 22—The United Mine Workers today agreed to end the captive mine shutdown, pending arbitration of the dispute by a three-man board.

DETROIT, Nov. 22—The United Mine Workers, fighting to win the union shop for 53,000 captive miners, today had received the full and outspoken support of the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

To UMWA Pres. John L. Lewis in Washington went a message from the convention squarely backing up Executive Board action on Nov. 16 endorsing the miners' struggle.

The Executive Board's resolution expressed belief that "the cause of the UMWA is just, fair and reasonable, and the officers of this union are to be commended highly for their example of fortitude and fidelity to the cause of labor."

FULL BACKING

It added that the CIO had pledged "unqualified support" to the UMWA's effort "to stabilize the mining industry on the basis of a union shop, uniform agreement covering commercial and captive mines."

CONVENTION OPENS: Here's what delegates to the CIO's Fourth Constitutional Convention saw as Pres. Philip Murray delivered his opening address on Nov. 17. Sessions were held in the Moose Temple at Detroit.

Re-Elects Murray, Carey

See Stories On Inside Pages

DETROIT, Nov. 22—The CIO finished up its fourth constitutional convention today after having adopted by unanimous vote a resolution calling for all possible aid to Great Britain, the Soviet Union and China in their "heroic struggle to rid the world of Nazism."

Re-elected to office for another year was Pres. Philip Murray, who received a number of tributes from the delegates throughout the convention sessions at the Moose Temple. Also re-elected were the CIO's secretary, James B. Carey, and its six vice-presidents.

First act of the convention, which opened Nov. 17, was to vote full and complete support to the United Mine Workers in thier effort to win the union shop for 53,000 workers employed in steel-owned coal mines. The support was voted by the CIO Executive Board at its Nov. 16 meeting, and the action was quickly and unanimously ratified by the convention delegates.

PLAN BIG DRIVES

In other major actions, the convention voted for action organizing drives during the coming months, with President Murray pointing out that a great deal of CIO's concentrated energy would be expended in the now largely unorganized southern states.

The Murray Industry Council Plan gained endorsement from the delegates as the best method of unleashing "the energies and resources of all our people" behind the defense program while giving the nation maximum production efficiency, preserving labor's rights and strengthening free speech."

Criticism of the OPM for its failure to award a contract to the Currier Lumber Co., Detroit, a firm under contract with the CIO, was also voted.

Bagpipes Sound As CIO Greets Murray Re-Election

DETROIT, Nov. 21—The rousing call of the bagpipes sounded in Moose Hall today in a stirring appeal as five hundred delegates and a hall full of whistling, cheering, shouting visitors joined in celebrating for 45 minutes the election of Philip Murray as president of the CIO.

As the St. Andrews Highlanders paraded through the hall followed by enthusiastic delegates, onlookers were reminded of the blood-rousing call of freedom which sounded through the Scottish Highlands years ago—a call brought up to date in the challenge of the CIO for American labor to take the lead in the new battle for freedom against the forces of Hitlerism.

All the news stories about splits in the CIO went into the junk pile as every delegation joined in the tribute to Phil Murray's leadership—a tribute not only to the man himself—but also to the bold leadership taken by him in this convention.

The broad vision of the CIO leader has given a new impetus, a new challenge to America's workers—a challenge to demonstrate again that America's ancient heritage of freedom will be defended.

And not only defended—even while the echoes of the demonstration resounded in the convention hall, Murray was solemnly proclaiming that the democratic rights of labor not only must be protected, but must be extended during the national emergency.

"RECOGNIZE LABOR"

Finally, to an audience hushed with a consciousness of labor's responsibilities, Murray firmly, emphatically called upon the government to recognize that while labor is willing to assume these responsibilities it expects to be given new powers, new recognition in our government.

Impassioned at times, quietly moving at others, but all the time sincerely calling for unity in the nation and in the CIO, Phil Murray again stepped into the vanguard of his people—America's people—and took up again the forward march of labor toward a better world.

Five Short Years

DETROIT, Nov. 22—Five years ago an automobile worker in Detroit could toss his job away just by admitting publicly that he was a union member.

This week the Detroit City Hall carried a big sign over the front door: "Welcome, CIO Delegates."

Two Scenes On The Convention Floor

Industry Council Plan Seen Best Defense Aid

DETROIT, Nov. 22—The Murray Industry Council Plan—aimed at giving the nation full production from its great industrial plant while giving labor a more equal voice in the direction of the nation's affairs—received thorough-going support this week from the CIO's fourth constitutional convention.

"The essence of our national defense program is one of production—the need of producing the necessary quantity of materials — airplanes, tanks, ships and guns — within the shortest period of time to aid those nations struggling against the Fascist aggressors," the resolution declared.

The plan for Industry Councils proposed by Pres. Murray last December, the resolution continued, is "attuned to the needs of our present national situation" and its adoption by the federal government would "unleash the energies and resources of all our people."

INCREASE PRODUCTION

"The Plan will guarantee the production of armaments in needed quantities and on time by attaining the highest possible productive efficiency of American industry through the full and complete cooperation of industry, organized labor and government," the CIO statement declared.

"The guiding principles of the Murray Plan will establish a program which will assure complete aid to those nations and peoples who are struggling to defeat Hitlerism and thereby fulfill our national policy of protecting the security of the American people."

It urged all CIO affiliates to call upon their local and national legislators and Congressmen to urge adoption of the industry council program.

President Murray, after analyzing the Plan for the delegates, asserted the Council Plan would help alleviate the national disunity and national confusion that now besets the United States.

"Labor does not trust the employer, the employer in too many instances does not trust labor, government doesn't trust either, and it seems to me that neither labor nor the employer trusts too much in government," the CIO president said in regard to the present situation.

WORK TOGETHER

"Hence the need of using mechanisms of this description, devices such as are suggested in the Industry Council Plan, to bring all these elements together, working together in the common effort toward the attainment of our national objectives . . .

"So far as labor is concerned, it gives to labor the thing that labor has been crying for down through the years in the U. S. It gives labor forthright administrative responsibility on each Board from the bottom right up to the top.

"It gives to labor equality of responsibility with that of management and with that of government."

SOLVE PROBLEMS

Harry Bridges, president of the longshoremen's union, told the delegates that in his opinion the "Murray Plan will take care of most of the problems of planning all-out production."

"If there had been a Murray Plan in France, there would have been a France today fighting Hitler," Bridges said . . . "Those nations that have been destroyed by Hitler were mainly destroyed because the people at the top claimed to have all the brains and all the ability. They wanted to do nothing but give orders down below."

Pres. Nicholas Zonarich of the Aluminum Workers reviewed the recent history of the monopolistic light-metal industry, and told of the cold-shoulder given the union's industry plan, which was worked out in conjunction with the Murray Plan.

Production has been curtailed, unemployment is growing and corporate interests are using the situation for their own special benefit, he said, charging that adoption of the industry council plan and utilization of labor's brains would help correct the situation.

Resolution Honors Murray

DETROIT, Nov. 22 — High tribute to the work of Philip Murray as president of the CIO was expressed in this resolution passed at the CIO convention:

WHEREAS, (1) The CIO, under the inspiring leadership of Philip Murray, has continued to march onward in giant strides toward the achievement of its basic objectives which were firmly established under our first president, John L. Lewis; and

(2) Such mighty organizational feats as the unionization of the Little Steel corporations, California aircraft plants, and the Ford Motor Company have been completed under his active participation and invaluable guidance; now, therefore, be it

RESOLVED, That this convention, by a rising vote, expresses its deep appreciation to Philip Murray, president of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, for his inspiring leadership, untiring efforts, and mighty achievements in the interest of the working men and women of this nation, and to James B. Carey for his splendid work and magnificent activities performed as secretary of the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

CIO Wins First Pact With Sherwin-Williams

Detroit, Nov. 22—The Sherwin-Williams Paint Co. this week signed its first CIO contract, with District 50, United Mine Workers Union. The pact provides 8½ per cent raises for workers at the local plant.

Pres. Murray, Henry Ford In Parley

DETROIT, Nov. 22 — Henry Ford had his first meeting with a leader of the CIO this week.

The aging head of the Ford Motor Company, which last June startled the nation by signing a union shop, check-off contract with the UAW-CIO, chatted with CIO President Philip Murray for half an hour in his office at the huge River Rouge plant. Afterwards Murray lunched at the plant with Harry Bennett, Ford personnel chief; R. J. Thomas, president of the auto union; Allan S. Haywood, CIO organization director, and Fred Peiper, regional director in New Orleans.

While the union leaders were thus engaged, most of the 500 delegates piled into buses for a trip through the Rouge plant, where some 85,000 workers—all UAW-CIO members—are normally employed. Arranged by the city CIO arrangements committee, the tour took the convention delegates through the main assembly plant and through the steel mill, where Ford makes the metal for his cars.

WARM WELCOME

The Ford workers gave the delegates a warm welcome, with many waving and cheering as the CIO groups filtered through the plant. Visitors who had seen the plant in pre-union days were struck most by the UAW-CIO buttons, pins, sweaters and caps being worn throughout the plant, and by the fact that the tension and strain once written on most Ford employes' faces is no longer to be seen.

One of the CIO tourists was Michael S. Widman, Jr., CIO assistant director of organization, who headed the Ford Organizing Drive. It was the first time he'd seen the assembly line in operation!

130 Cover Parley For Press

DETROIT, Nov. 22—Harried members of the CIO publicity staff wiped their brows today, picked up the last of the convention press releases and thanked heavens that conventions come only once a year.

For one of the largest newspaper delegations in recent history descended upon Detroit to cover the proceedings—about 130 altogether.

They filled up four rows of seats at two press tables that stretched clear across the hall at the foot of the stage, and filed several hundred thousand words to all parts of the country and abroad.

PHONE ON TABLE

One Detroit paper had a direct-line telephone installed right at the press table to save its correspondent the shin-bruising job of rushing from his seat through the crowded newspaper ranks to the backstage pressroom.

When the convention hall was silent, delegates could hear the staccato rattle of the telegraph machines in a room near the stage.

Three correspondents, representing a British news service and two London papers, were on the scene, each cabling about a thousand words a day across the ocean.

LABOR PRESS PARLEY

Present also were a large group of labor paper editors. The group met at the Statler one evening to discuss methods for improving the quality of labor publications and of best presenting to readers the great stories of labor's role in helping Uncle Sam out-produce the Nazi war machine.

Tennessee Paper

Knoxville, Tenn., Nov. 22—The Tennessee State Industrial Union Council this week started publication of a four-page, mimeographed monthly bulletin called the "Tennessee CIO NEWS."

BUSY PEOPLE: Two of the busier people in a convention attended by hundreds of busy people were Miss Mercedes Daugherty, secretary to Pres. Murray and James R. McCormick, veteran and efficient chief usher.

WELCOME: CIO convention delegates were made welcome in Detroit by Mayor Jeffries (right), elected with support of CIO votes. He was introduced by Tracy Doll, head of the city CIO council.

CIO Re-Elects Pres. Murray, Backs Anti-Nazi Nations

Stress Need For Full Aid

DETROIT, Nov. 22—The CIO was on record today as favoring a U. S. policy to "immediately furnish all possible aid to and completely cooperate with Great Britain, the Soviet Union and China, which are the nations now carrying on the struggle to rid the world of Nazism, the enemy of mankind, and thereby bring about the military annihilation of Hitler's regime."

The resolution was passed unanimously after several hours of speeches, all in favor of the statement as it came from the Convention Resolutions Committee.

President Roosevelt was commended by the resolution for "his forthright foreign policy," which the convention said, reflects "the unquestioned desire of the American people."

"We are fully cognizant and deeply appreciative of the dangers to our country, as a result of the continued aggression of the Nazi government and Hitlerism," the resolution declared. "We cannot condemn too vehemently the cold-blooded murder of innocent civilians in the conquered nations by Hitler and his Nazi hordes, and call upon our government to rally all free nations in their official condemnation of these brutal policies."

UNITY NEEDED

National unity for the program of all-out aid to Hitler's foes is essential, the resolution said, adding:

"The efforts of any such as Lindbergh to disunite the American people on such un-American issues as anti-Semetism must be ferreted out and exposed as Hitler's fifth column. The American people demand that all aides of Hitler in this country, be they our own home-grown Quislings or the representatives of his puppet states, such as Vichy France, must not be permitted to cause dissension or sow their seeds of disunity in this nation.

"Only through the united effort of all people to protect our great

PRES. PHILIP MURRAY

Convention Hails Organizing Drives Council Plan

DETROIT, Nov. 22—Some five hundred delegates to the fourth constitutional convention of the CIO were returning to their homes today after re-electing President Murray and other executive officers; pledging the CIO to a policy of all possible aid to the nations fighting Hitler; mapping new organizational campaigns; and supporting the coal miners in their fight for the union shop.

President Murray's re-election, like that of the other officers, was unanimous, and was followed by a tumultous demonstration.

Re-elected with him were Sec. James B. Carey, and Vice-Presidents Joseph Curran, S. H. Dalrymple, Emil Rieve, Reid Robinson, Frank Rosenblum and R. J. Thomas.

Dominating most of the convention sessions was the realization that the policy of wanton aggression of Adolph Hitler's Nazi Germany menaces the democratic nations of the entire world, and that the United States, as the arsenal of democracy, must make "all-out production" its principal task.

At the same time, the CIO made it clear through resolutions and speeches that American labor will not permit the nation's reactionary employers and politicians to utilize the defense program as an opportunity of stripping labor of its hard-won gains. It urged adoption of the Murray Industry Council as the best method of improving defense production.

"The President of this organization, in recommending outright, forthright support to the President's foreign policy, has suggested in the same report and has said from this platform to the convention that he shall never, so long as he possesses any power as a leader of labor in this nation, forfeit labor's right to its natural advantages and to the attainment of its natural objectives," Murray told the delegates.

"Insofar as the CIO is concerned, it shall be its purpose to protect its gains and increase its opportunities to advance and improve the standards of its membership. That we propose to do. That we think we can do, and justifiably do, in the face of a grave national emergency."

FUNDAMENTAL WORK

Organizing the unorganized is still a major function of the CIO—"a fundamental work," as Pres. Murray told the convention—and the delegates showed eagerness to proceed with the working of bringing more non-union industries into the organized classification.

A key organizing campaign will be conducted in the south, Murray indicated, pointing out that considerable progress has already been made.

Birmingham, for instance, is almost as completely organized as are such northern industrial cities as Detroit and Pittsburgh, the delegates were told, and similar

CIO Backs Miners; Shutdown Effective

DETROIT, Nov. 22—The CIO convention this week went all-out in support of the United Mine Workers' struggle to win the union shop for 53,000 captive miners.

Through Executive Board action, through convention endorsement and through numerous speeches by delegates, the CIO made it crystal-clear that the fight of the miners, led by UMWA Pres. John L. Lewis, is the fight of all American labor for the union shop and for preservation of labor's rights during the national emergency.

The convention's statement of support was unanimous, with the delegates rising in a solid body to show their sentiments in behalf of the coal miners.

Even before the delegates had assembled for the opening day of the convention, the CIO Executive Board, meeting on Nov. 16, had adopted a resolution citing the union's 95% organization of the coal mines and charging that the attitude of the big steel interests in opposing the union shop "can be properly classified as un-American and not conducive to the best interests of the Defense Program."

CAUSE IS JUST

The resolution, which received endorsement from the convention on Nov. 17, concluded:

"We believe that the cause of the United Mine Workers is just, fair and reasonable, and the officers of this union are to be commended highly for their example of fortitude and fidelity to

WASHINGTON, Nov. 22—One of the nation's most important battles for extension of democracy awaited, as the CIO NEWS went to press, the decision of the United Mine Workers Union 200-man National Policy Committee either to continue the fight for the union shop in captive coal mines or to support President Roosevelt's suggestion that the issue be sidetracked until after the defense emergency or be submitted to compulsory arbitration.

It was practically a foregone conclusion that the committee would back up UMW President John L. Lewis, who personally rejected Roosevelt's proposal for ending the week-old, rapidly spreading mine strike on the grounds that:

1. No UMW officer possess authority to execute an open shop agreement, since the last UMW convention expressly instructed the officials to secure for the captive mine membership the same union shop agreement enjoyed in commercial mines.

2. Acceptance of the open shop for 53,000 "captive" miners would invalidate the UMW's union shop, Appalachian contract covering 400,000 others, some 125,000 of whom are striking in sympathy.

Meanwhile, as the employer press tried viciously to smear Lewis and divide the labor movement on the basic battle which will set a precedent important to every worker in America, Lewis exposed Eugene Grace, president of the Bethlehem Steel Co., as the block to settlement.

"From information derived from various sources," Lewis declared before the UMW Policy

BULLETIN:

Miners End Shutdown

Washington, Nov. 22.—The United Mine Workers today ended the shutdown that had closed the captive coal mines for seven days.

The dispute will be arbitrated by a three-man board consisting of John R. Steelman, Labor Dept. Conciliator, representing the public; Benjamin Fairless, head of U. S. Steel, representing the employers; and UMW Pres. John L. Lewis, representing the mine workers.

TEXT OF LETTER

Text of the letter sent to Pres. Roosevelt by Lewis after a meeting with the UMW Natl. Policy Board follows:

"The National Policy Committee considered today your letter of this date, supplemental to your previous letter of Nov. 18.

"By unanimous vote this committee accepts your proposal to refer the captive mine contract to a board consisting of Dr. John R. Steelman, representing the public, and Messrs. Benjamin F. Fairless and John L. Lewis, representing the steel companies and the

Back Railway Wage Demands

Detroit, Nov. 22—The CIO convention went on record backing demands of the railway labor brotherhoods for wage increases and called on the government to force the railroads to meet the workers' demands out of their "increasing and mounting profits."

NEXT ISSUE

A number of convention actions and discussions occurred too late for this issue of The CIO NEWS, due to stress of time and limitations on space. Next week's issue will carry many stories of convention actions omitted for these reasons in this issue.

Hobbs Bill Killed; Worse Bills on Way

Washington, Nov. 22—The House of Representatives this week killed the notorious Hobbs Concentration Camp Bill, H.R. 3, by a vote of 167 to 141, but even worse legislation has been proposed.

Suggested laws range from a ban on defense industry strikes to punishment by death "on conviction of wilful sabotage against the national defense, whenever such act causes or threatens death or serious injury to others."

Sample bill, reported out by Rep. Hatton W. Sumners' anti-labor judiciary committee, is H.R. 2, which raises the maximum penalty for sabotage from 30 years in jail and $10,000 fine to death, with the

PRINCIPAL RESOLUTIONS PASSED BY CONVENTION

Natl. Defense

WHEREAS, (1) The very question as to whether our nation shall survive or not at present depends completely upon whether our national defense program shall be successfully prosecuted;

(2) The essence of our national defense program is one of production—the need of producing the necessary quantity of materials—airplanes, tanks, ships and guns—within the shortest period of time to aid those nations struggling against the fascist aggressors;

(3) To accomplish this goal it is essential that our existing plant facilities be utilized to the full with adequate provision for any increase in productive facilities that may be necessary, together with a maximum utilization of the available labor supply of the nation. At the same time it is essential that wherever possible production of civilian goods for our needs be maintained as fully as possible to the extent that this does not weaken our defense effort;

Equal Sacrifice

(4) The effectuation of our national defense program will involve severe sacrifices on the part of the American people. However, it is essential that no segment or group within our nation be unduly burdened. In addition, the enemies of democracy must not be permitted, under the guise of national defense, to destroy the basic liberties and institutions of America which assure the wholehearted participation of the American people in the struggle to destroy Hitlerism;

(5) The national effort that will be involved in accomplishing this end demands the full participation of all the people of the nation. Labor is fully equipped to make its contribution, not only in labor power but in brains, and to accept its share of the burdens in any joint enterprise for the fulfillment of our national policy. Such labor participation has not been afforded to date in the national defense program.

(6) The national defense agencies which have been established form a mass of overlapping organizations unable to accomplish the task, and to this extent, are sapping the strength of the American people who seek to effectuate a real national defense program. Appropriations for the program far exceed actual contracts awarded or production accomplished. The deadly grip which corporate dollar-a-year men have established over the OPM and other defense agencies, through their "business as usual" concept and absence of planning, have curtailed production of necessary war materials and caused unemployment through priorities, thereby leaving idle machinery and idle men with a corresponding failure in production and a destruction of American morale; now, therefore, be it

RESOLVED, (1) The CIO has offered, as its contribution to the full and complete prosecution of the national defense program of unlimited production of those materials needed to implement our foreign policy and crush Hitlerism, the Murray Industry Council Plan. The CIO, in convention assembled, hereby again expresses its forthright support of the Murray Plan as one attuned to the needs of our present national situation;

Voice For Labor

(2) This plan will unleash the energies and resources of all our people, through full participation of labor in the national defense program and thereby assure the achievement of our national goal;

(3) This plan will guarantee the production of armaments in needed quantities and on time by attaining the highest possible productive efficiency of American industry through the full and complete cooperation of industry, organized labor, and government. Through industry councils which would establish regional and plant committees, the resources and brains of all would be dedicated to our single task of maximum production;

(4) This plan will preserve the basic democratic rights of the American people; namely, the freedom of speech, assembly, and worship, and the free right to organize into labor unions for collective bargaining and other mutual protection.

(5) The guiding principles of the Murray Plan will establish a program which will assure complete aid to those nations and peoples who are struggling to defeat Hitlerism and thereby fulfill our national policy of protecting the security of the American people.

(6) The CIO does not wish it to be understood that it will refrain from participation in the national defense program unless its own Industry Council Plan is adopted. To the contrary, the CIO as an American institution with loyal Americans as its members, will do all in its power to participate in the national defense program in order to rid this world of Hitler and Hitlerism. At all times we shall attempt to point out what we may consider to be the shortcomings of the program or its administrative machinery from the point of view of ever pressing for a stronger and more effective national defense effort to achieve the defeat of Nazi Germany.

(7) The CIO affiliates and their members should initiate a program of calling upon their Congressman, state and local Representatives, and all groups in their communities to request the President of the United States States to establish the Murray Industrial Council program.

Mine Shutdown

WHEREAS, (1) The United Mine Workers of America are engaged in a struggle with the Captive Mine Owners composed principally of the large Steel Units; in an effort to secure the application of a uniform Union Shop agreement; and

(2) Ninety-five per cent of the industry, including many captive mine operators have accepted, signed and are operating under the terms of this standard agreement, which agreement is a real stabilizing force in the Industry, and guarantees continuous operation and production of coal to April 1943; and

(3) Over ninety-five per cent of the employes of these recalcitrant steel units in the coal industry are members of the United Mine Workers of America; and

(4) The United Mine Workers of America in convention assembled has instructed its officers to have the same uniform agreement applied to the entire industry; and

Firms Un-American

(5) The attitude of these large steel units, whose profits under the defense program are enormous, can be properly classified as un-American, and not conducive to the best interests of the defense program; and

(6) We believe that the cause of the United Mine Workers of America is just, fair and reasonable and the officers and members of this Union are to be commended highly for their example of fortitude and fidelity to the cause of Labor; now, therefore, be it

RESOLVED: By the Executive Board of the Congress of Industrial Organizations that we approve and pledge our unqualified support to the United Mine Workers of America, in its logical effort to stabilize the mining industry on the basis of a Union Shop, uniform agreement, covering commercial and captive mines, and we call upon Government and captive mine owners to direct their efforts to the consummation of this standard agreement as a real contribution to national defense.

Foreign Policy

WHEREAS, (1) Hitler and the Nazi government, in their drive for world conquest, directly menace the security of the United States;

(2) The triumph of Hitlerism means the destruction of democracy and subjugation of the people to depths of physical and spiritual torture and economic exploitation. This has been amply demonstrated through the wanton acts of aggression on the part of the Nazi government, destroying nation after nation, and expunging, wherever its iron heel has trod, the liberties, traditions and democratic institutions of the common people; now, therefore be it

RESOLVED, The CIO reflects the aims and needs of American workers—the desire and right to live and work as free men in a free democracy. American workers cannot and will not tolerate any appeasement of any elements or forces which seek to undermine or compromise American democracy.

We are fully cognizant and deeply appreciative of the dangers to our country as a result of the continued aggression of the Nazi government and Hitlerism. We cannot condemn too vehemently the cold-blooded murder of innocent civilians in the conquered nations by Hitler and his Nazi hordes and call upon our Government to rally all free nations in their official condemnation of these brutal policies.

Heroic Struggle

At the present time the people of Great Britain and of the Soviet Union and China are engaged in their struggle to smash Hitlerism. President Roosevelt, reflecting the unquestioned desire of the American people, has espoused the policy of extending complete and full aid to these nations in their vital struggle which involves the interests of the American people.

The CIO declares it to be of paramount importance to the security of this nation that we immediately furnish all possible aid to and completely cooperate with Great Britain, the Soviet Union and China, which are the nations now carrying on the struggle to rid the world of Hitlerism, the enemy of mankind, and thereby bring about the military annihilation of Hitler's regime. This program must be coupled with an aggressive preparedness and active defense by the united efforts of the nations of the Western Hemisphere.

The CIO commends President Roosevelt for his forthright foreign policy and in the joint action of the President and Congress in the recent amendments to the Neutrality Law which will permit this nation to immediately arm and protect American ships and American seamen carrying vitally needed supplies to the heroic people of Great Britain, the Soviet Union, and China, and thereby assure the quicker defeat of Nazi Germany.

National Unity

National unity toward this end is essential. Efforts of any such as Lindbergh to disunite the American people on such unAmerican issues as anti-Semitism must be ferreted out and exposed as Hitler's Fifth Column. The American people demand that all aides of Hitler in this country, be they our home-grown Quislings or the representatives of his puppet states, such as Vichy France, must not be permitted to cause dissension or sow their seeds of disunity in this nation. Only through the united effort of all our people to protect our great nation through the support of our clear foreign policy shall we survive with the heritage of our founders kept intact.

We urge upon our membership to a greater effort in our national defense program, to formulate policies, call conferences, and consult with members of our national administration, our employers and other local groups, toward the end that by a mighty joint and unified effort we shall have done our part to destroy Nazism and preserve for the future benefit of America our present free and democratic way of life.

progress will be made in other southern centers during the next 12 months.

In addition, nationwide drives to unionize the oil industry and to push ahead with unionization of the zooming aircraft industry will also receive close attention from the CIO.

FEDERAL DRIVE

Allan S. Haywood, CIO director or organization, called attention to plans for organizing the million employes of the federal government, large numbers of whom are engaged in industrial rather than white collar occupations.

"The federal workers must be organized, they must have the right to organize, and the government agencies must be required to bargain collectively with them," Haywood declared. "The CIO is determined to push that drive forward."

CHEMICAL CAMPAIGN

John Mates, a member of the United Mine Workers, predicted success in the drives of District 50, UMW, to organize the "chemical and byproducts industries of this country one hundred per cent" and said great forward strides would be made in unionizing, along industrial lines, the building trades through the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee.

Later the convention passed a number of resolutions supporting the specific organizing campaigns and condemned the OPM for its refusal to grant a government housing contract to the Currier Lumber Co., Detroit—a CIO firm—because of the so-called stabilization agreement worked out by the AFL and the OPM.

CIVIL RIGHTS

The convention lashed out at a number of violations of civil liberties and urged strict government action against those who would rob the people of their inherited rights.

Calling for expansion of the Dept. of Justice's civil rights unit, the resolution said:

"There can be no toleration of any political police such as the FBI in this country similar to the Nazi Gestapo or any toleration of any agencies of the government, including the FBI, violating the law, and we protest against the use of the FBI to oppress or harass and labor organizations in the pursuit of their legitimate activities.

BRIDGES CASE

In a long and detailed resolution, the convention called upon the Attorney General to over-rule Judge Sear's report which urges the deportation of Harry Bridges, CIO California director, condemned the Allen Bill for ouster of Bridges, and urged continued defense of Bridges by the CIO.

Speaking in behalf of the CIO official were CIO Vice-Presidents Dalrymple and Curran; Sec.-Treas. David McDonald of the steel workers; Van A. Bittner, of the miners; CIO; George Wilson of the San Francisco CIO and others.

POLITICAL PRISONERS

A number of resolutions called for the release of labor prisoners: Earl King, Ernest Ramsey, Frank Conner; Irving Potash and John Vafiadea, of the fur workers; C. S. Jackson and Pat Sullivan, both now in Canadian internment camps. The CIO also pledged support to the defense of members of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, charged on a frame-up with sabotage of government property in Tennessee during a strike two years ago; and to the defense of Farm Equipment union members at Richmond, Ind., who were arrested after an attack on their picket line last spring.

DRAFT PROBLEMS

Calling attention to report that the Army has been giving draftees training in strikebreaking, the convention "wholeheartedly denounced this practice" and asked President Roosevelt to order this training stopped at once. The "work or fight" order adopted by the Selective Service Administration also came in for criticism, along with a request that labor be more closely consulted in connection with the draft and that adequate steps be taken to insure jobs for men released from the army.

Base pay for draftees should be raised to $60 a month, the convention urged, and improved services for education, transportation and recreation should be provided, the resolution said.

Other resolutions called for expansion of the government's defense housing and social security programs; criticized wage-freezing proposals as dangerous not only for labor but for other sections of the population; and warned that CIO would vigorously attack efforts to tie wages to the cost of living.

CIO Backs Construction Union, Hits OPM-AFL Deal

DETROIT, Nov. 22—The CIO this week pledged its full support to the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee, and at the same time criticized the "vicious abuse of authority and extra-legal procedure of the OPM and its officials" for their deal with the AFL building trades department, as represented in the so-called stabilization agreement.

The convention resolution hit particularly the OPM's refusal to permit the Currier Lumber Co. of Detroit—a firm under agreement with the CIO—to receive a contract for the construction of 300 perfabricated homes for a Michigan defense housing project.

DANGEROUS PRECEDENT

"If this action of the OPM is permitted to stand unchallenged, a dangerous precedent will have been established which will wreak havoc not only upon the UCWOC but upon every affiliated organization of the CIO," the resolution said, and "will constitute a vicious act of discrimination by government against the CIO, as contrasted with other segments of labor."

The resolution directed the CIO's national officers "to make forthright representations immediately and continuously" to OPM officials demanding "that the discriminatory stabilization agreement be nullified in its entirety." The resolution urged that the "just and time-honored practice of awarding government contracts without discrimination in favor of any particular union be followed in all cases."

ASK AID TO UCWOC

The resolution concluded:

". . . It is the desire and instruction of this convention to all members and all affiliated bodies of the CIO that they extend to the UCWOC their wholehearted, sincere and organized support in its efforts to bring clean industrial unionism to the construction industry; and that this convention believes that a successful organizing campaign by the UCWOC will prove beneficial to every affiliated organization of the CIO; and will provide homes for CIO members at a cost which they can afford to pay; and will relieve opposition to the organization drive of all affiliated unions; and will greatly assist in accomplishing the goal of the CIO as enunciated by the slogan 'Ten Million Members by 1945'."

Farmers Union Head Offers CIO Cooperation

DETROIT, Nov. 22—President James Patton of the Farmers Union this week, in a joint broadcast with CIO Secretary James Carey, proposed a working alliance between the two organizations.

Carey said that "this is the first time in the history of organized labor" that a national farm organization has taken such a stand, and proposed a conference to cement the association of the two groups."

Labor Law Meet Backs Murray Plan

Washington, Nov. 22—Endorsement of the Murray Industry Council plan and a recommendation that collective bargaining contracts provide for voluntary arbitration were voted this week by the National Conference on Labor Legislation, attended by employes, employers and State labor department officials.

"Such councils," the conference reported, "because of their knowledge of plant facilities and labor supply, could determine the capacity of the different units of the industry, and plan and supervise the adaption from peace-time to war-time economy and from war-time to peace-time economy."

sentence mandatory on the judge if a jury recommends it.

Sumners this spring suggested the electric chair for defense industry strikers.

Sounding off for restrictive, anti-labor and anti-democratic legislation have been the poll tax Southern Congressmen, elected by small minorities in their districts and responsible only to the bosses.

All the Southern Democrats who have been hollering for anti-strike legislation supported the Hobbs Bill, which provided in some cases for life imprisonment of aliens without trial by jury.

Labor and liberal Congressmen, plus most of the Republican bloc, fought the measure. Among those who opposed the bill on the floor were:

Representatives Thomas H. Eliot, Emanuel Celler, John Coffee, Samuel Dickstein, Vito Marcantonio, Dewey Short, Frank E. Hook and Martin J. Kennedy.

The Hobbs Bill was opposed by CIO, AFL and Railroad Brotherhoods.

CONVENTION DELEGATES:

Hail Last Year's Gains, Pledge More In '42

DETROIT, Nov. 22—The impressive record of gains rolled up by the CIO during the past year is an eloquent testimonial of the correctness of the militancy and consistency with which the CIO's basic organizing principles have been applied, the Committee on Officers' Report declared in summarizing the organization program of the past year, at the CIO national convention.

"The record of our affiliates in raising wages for their members shows that the CIO is fully worthy of the trust placed in it by the workers of the nation," the report stated. "Since our last convention President Murray notes, the CIO has won wage raises of more than $1,250,000,000 annually. Outstanding in these increases is the wage raise won by the UMWA and the abolition of the Southern differentials.

"Thousands of contracts have been renewed on improved terms; hundreds of new agreements won. Wage increases, union security, improved relationships between workers and employers have marked each of these successes.

"In winning these gains, the CIO is acting," as Pres. Murray points out, "in the true interest of the nation and of a sound and unified defense program. A period of rising industrial activity, marked by greatly increased profits, has also been marked by a greater share of those increased profits going into the hands of the workers who created them."

"The CIO submits that this is a contribution to the welfare of the entire American people unequalled by that of any other organized group in the nation."

Confident that the CIO policies are headed on the right track, the report stated, the CIO will continue at its task of organizing the unorganized "in the same spirit and with the same militancy that has brought its victories in the past.

MAJOR CAMPAIGNS

"The drive to organize the cruelly exploited workers of the South becomes a major organizing task of the CIO. The drive to complete organization in the non-ferrous metals industry, in the oil industry, where the CIO faces the might of Standard Oil, and the drives to carry full organization to the white collar, the government and other partially organized fields are all under way as we meet here.

"We can be sure that these workers will be brought into the CIO, with all the protection and all the improvements in living conditions that CIO membership has meant to other industrial workers.

LAUD HAYWOOD, WIDMAN

"Under the guidance of National Director Allan S. Haywood, with the aid of Assistant Director Michael F. Widman, the Organizing Department of the National Office of the CIO has been of the greatest help to our affiliates in rolling up the impressive record cited by Pres. Murray."

The significance of this record of CIO progress was called to the attention of the delegates by Director Haywood in a speech from the floor. "A little over a year ago," Haywood said, "the resolve was made to organize the Bethlehem Steel mills and organize the Ford plant. It has been continually said that Ford could not be organized."

STEEL DRIVE

Under the direction of Van Bittner of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, a major drive on Bethlehem resulted in the winning of elections in 12 plants, Haywood stated, while the United Automobile workers under Pres. R. J. Thomas, now have a contract covering 130,000 Ford workers, which is the best in the industry.

In addition to these outstanding gains, Haywood said, there is a long list of achievements won by important CIO unions in Southern areas, in the aircraft, lumber, chemical, rubber, textile, department store, and other industries.

Warning unions not to endanger their progress by jurisdictional disputes, Haywood urged that all such disputes be submitted to the CIO and that CIO's decisions be accepted without quibbling.

Pres. Murray, speaking on the report, praised the members of the CIO for the remarkable record made in organization which had increased the membership by more than a million since September of last year.

"This work must go on," Murray declared. "Nothing must stop the work of organizing the unorganized in the United States — not even a grave national emergency."

Calling upon the membership of the CIO to rise above all trivialities and to work devotedly for the aims of the CIO, Murray warned that "organization was never perfected through the issuance of statements miles away" but that it had to be done "by men around mill gates and in local union halls and in mass meetings and in picketing activities."

DISTRICT 50

John J. Bates, delegate from the York County (Pa.) CIO Council, urged the delegates to support the drive of UMW District 50 to organize the half a million unorganized workers in the chemical industry and not to forget the vital part played by the United Mine Workers in starting the CIO and contributing such outstanding leaders as Philip Murray, Tom Kennedy and John L. Lewis.

Delegate Van A. Bittner from the UMW, who served as chairman during the discussion on the organizing section of the Officers' Report, also spoke on the vital part taken by the Miners' Union in CIO organizing activities, and stressed the danger facing labor in the "clamouring for some action to curb the rights of labor" being raised by reactionary Southern Congressmen on the issue of the captive mine strike.

"They are particularly fighting against the President of the United Mine Workers because he has dared to do what the representatives in the convention have told him to do. And why is that?

"Because the press of the nation has been so one-sided that they knew what would hit the American people best, so they played it up and tried to make the President of the United States think that the issue was between him and the President of the United Mine Workers, whether he was bigger than the President of the Mine Workers.

"It has been a case of misrepresentation all down the line, and I for one glory in the spunk of the man who will stand up for what he knows his workers are entitled to."

See Big Opportunity To Expand Councils

Detroit, Nov. 22—Expectations that the coming year will offer great opportunities in the building of CIO councils was expressed by John Brophy, national director of industrial union councils at the special conference on councils held during the CIO convention.

Experiences in many localities throughout the nation were exchanged at the conference on such questions as industrial planning; legislative and political activity; the part played by CIO groups in various phases of community life, and administrative work.

Director Brophy said that 32 state and 152 city and county were represented at the convention by 184 delegates, a number of whom told of the important role played by the CIO in their communities.

In a discussion on problems facing the CIO, Brophy said that "the councils have both a challenge and an opportunity to make an increasing contribution to the CIO program and to the general improvement of America."

nation through the support of our clear foreign policy shall we survive with the heritage of our founders kept intact."

WIDE RESPONSE

The resolution, which was passed unanimously, came up on the second day of the convention after Vice-Pres. Reid Robinson had completed the reading of the first section of the report of the Committee on Officer's Report, dealing with Pres. Murray's recommendations on foreign policy.

Passage of the statement by the convention brought in a flood of wires from local unions in all sections of the country giving vociferous and enthusiastic support to the delegates' actions.

NAZIS' ACTIONS

Speaking in behalf of the resolution, Pres. Murray told of his increasing concern as the Nazis took over one nation after another and wiped out all vestiges of decency and democracy.

"Into every country that they have gone there has trailed in their wake starvation, poverty, misery, suffering and disease," he said. "The right of freedom of worship has been taken away. There is no free press in any of the countries taken over by Hitler. The lives of the people are completely controlled from the moment they rise out of their beds in the morning until they return to their beds at night.

"Such, my friends, is the most sorrowing, terrifying spectacle that this world has ever witnessed—terrifying to the point that it arouses the ire and the indignation of all liberty-loving people throughout the world."

DEMOCRACY AT HOME

The CIO president made it clear, however, that in supporting the fight against foreign fascism, American labor has no intention of bowing to the wishes of the fierce enemies of labor who have been using Congress and the press as their forum to suggest the crippling of democracy at home.

The national CIO, through its affiliates, "will fight every inch of the way against the enactment of labor-baiting, labor manacling legislation in the federal Congress," he said.

MANY SPEAKERS

First speaker in behalf of the resolution was Leo Krzycki, veteran vice-president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, who pointed out that the resolution was probably the most important coming before the convention.

"Do we mean what we say in that document," he asked, "that we feel with and for these people over there and that we are willing for the time being to shelve our own personal and our own group interests that we may give over there so that democracy may prevail?

"Of all the words in the dictionary, there is no word that carries with it the significance of the word 'production' in America. I ask that we make that word live and do what is necessary to produce and produce, and not stop production."

FULL CONFIDENCE

Vice-Pres. S. H. Dalrymple, head of the rubber union, said the world is looking to America and "I have the fullest confidence that in the end, as in 1918, we will be victorious."

Sander Genis, an official of the Textile Workers Union, charged the life of this union, the very life of the entire nation" are at stake.

Michael Quill, head of the transport workers, stressed the need for CIO unions to translate the resolution from words into actions so that the American people will "do the one job, to defeat Hitler, to give the tanks, the guns, the planes, yes, our blood and our very life to defeat Hitler and maintain American democracy."

SEAMEN ARE WAITING

Joseph Curran, CIO vice-president and head of the Natl. Maritime Union, told the delegates that "the seamen are waiting, the ships are there" to help the fight against Hitler. Five hundred shiploads of material have already been carried to the Persian Gulf to aid the British and Russian forces, Curran revealed, and four hundred ships are "maintaining a regular ferry service, one ship arriving in the Persian Gulf every two days."

William Dalrymple, a member of the United Mine Workers, and CIO regional director in Oregon, denied allegations that the miners are "laying down on the job." He referred to the lack of newspaper publicity over the industrialists' five-month sitdown for high profits early in the defense program, and warned that it's as easy to lose democracy at home as over there.

"The miners will go just as far as any man in America," he said, "in protecting the American flag, and we will keep a full flow of production going so that the ships can carry materials over there."

OTHER SPEAKERS

Others who spoke on the question were Walter Reuther of the auto workers; David McDonald of the steel workers; Emil Rieve, head of the textile workers; Lewis Merrill of the office and professional workers; George Addes of the auto workers; Irving Abramson of the New Jersey CIO Council; Abram Flaxer of the state, county & municipal workers; and Joseph Cannon of the distillery workers.

Foreign Labor Leaders Send Greetings To CIO

DETROIT, Nov. 22—Three representatives of foreign labor movements appeared before the CIO convention and hailed CIO's support of aid to the nations fighting Hitler.

First of the speakers was Armando Ramirez, a Cuban delegate to the recent ILO conference in New York, who brought greetings from the Cuban Tobacco Workers Union, an organization of 80,000 members.

Next to appear was Miss Margaret Bondfield, veteran British Laborite and one time Minister of Labor in the British Cabinet.

She spoke briefly to thank the CIO for its pledge of assistance to the "CIO Childrens' Village" movement, a project originally undertaken by the New Jersey CIO Council and quickly supported by other union groups.

The convention voted to back the work of the newly-formed National CIO Committee to aid the Village project, which is aimed at providing new homes for the children of British workers who have been bombed out of their own homes.

Appointed by President Murray to the committee were President Irving Abramson of the New Jersey CIO; Ted Silvey, executive secretary of the Ohio CIO; August Scholle, head of the Michigan CIO; John Phillips, head of the Pennsylvania CIO; and John Brophy, CIO director of industrial union councils.

The committee will coordinate CIO activities in connection with war relief work.

Right after Miss Bondfield spoke, President Murray introduced President Jan Stanczyk, head of the Polish Miners Union, who has been in exile since the Nazis invaded the country.

His brief message of greeting to the delegates was translated into English by Leo Krzycki, a delegate from the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

Urge CIO Form Ties With Workers In Democracies

Detroit, Nov. 22—The CIO moved to implement its all-out fight against Hitlerism with the unanimous adoption of a resolution today instructing its officers to contact all democratic trade unions throughout the world to work out a common anti-Nazi program.

The convention also voted to send cables to the trade union movements in the countries battling Hitler and to the workers in occupied territories pledging the CIO to cooperation with them in their struggles.

The resolution said in part: "Re—man of whom are in concentra- warm fraternal greetings to our trade union brothers in the countries fighting Hitler and to our brothers in the occupied countries —may of whom are in concentration camps—pledging our solidarity to see that this, our common fight against Hitlerism is carried to a successful conclusion so that all men may be free."

PRES. MURRAY ADDRESSES

On Organization

NO MOVEMENT within the mind of man in this country of ours has done so much to alleviate distress and provide a better living for the workers of America than has the Congress of Industrial Organizations. This work is not merely a work of going out into the field and organizing men and women just for the sake of organizing them. No! The fundamental problem which attaches itself to the question of organization is the economic betterment of the people, elevating standards of men, women and children, furnishing to our people and to the countless thousands of women and children dependent upon the members of this organization, a better outlook, a little more of the good things of life.

Organization fundamentally means but one thing; that is, clothing and bread and butter, and pictures on the wall, and carpets on the floor, and music in the home, enlarged opportunities for children to receive the benefits of better education. These are the fundamental things, these are the roots, the very roots underlying the formation of the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

Remarkable Growth

I say to you, my friends, you have made a remarkable record since the inception of this movement; you have done a splendid job during the past year, in that you have increased the dues-paying membership of this organization approximately one million over September of last year.

That means something to the CIO, that means something for America, and that means something to the people, to the people who are attached to the CIO. Reported by Secretary Robinson, of the Officers' Report Committee, these organizations affiliated with CIO increased wages for their members alone some one billion two hundred and fifty million annually in wage negotiations conducted during the present year. Can you appreciate what that one billion two hundred and fifty million dollars meant in increased buying power for these workers who are members of the Congress of Industrial Organizations?

These things reflect substantial contributions towards the welfare of a great country and its people, and that is why we point with particular pride towards the accomplishment of the CIO in the field of organizing during the current year.

And this work must go on; nothing must stop the work of organizing the unorganized in the United States, not even a grave national emergency. This work has to go on.

1940's Pledges

Last year on the platform of the Atlantic City Convention we made a commitment to our membership, that before this convention convened we hoped to be able to organize Ford, we hoped to be able to organize Bethlehem Steel, we hoped to be able to organize Republic Steel, Youngstown Sheet and Tube, and other important so-called independent steel companies. Over in the city of New York, the city of Chicago and the city of Youngstown, Ohio, wage scale negotiations are now going on with all of these independent steel companies. The Steel Workers' Organizing Committee has won during the current year at the properties of these independent steel companies exclusive bargaining privileges for some two hundred thousand steel workers.

Wage scale negotiations are now under way, wage scale committees have been elected by these respective units of the Steel Workers' Organizing Committee. They are now meeting the captains of these great big independent steel organizations, and we hope within the next few weeks to execute for some two hundred thousand workers employed by those so-called independent steel companies satisfactory wage agreements that will be hailed by the steel workers employed by Bethlehem, Republic, Youngstown Sheet and Tube and others.

Auto Drive

Then we go into the automobile industry. We have heard recounted here the splendid accomplishments of the United Auto Workers and the National CIO in the organization of the Ford workers, resulting in the execution of a closed shop contract covering wages, hours and conditions of employment for some one hundred and thirty-two thousand workers, and since the last convention the Auto Workers' International Union, operating in conjunction with the National CIO, has created a National Aircraft Division, and the President of the Congress of Industrial Organizations has placed in charge of that campaign of organization Dick Frankensteen of the United Auto Workers. Brother Frankensteen has been conducting an aggressive campaign of organization in this great aircraft industry, and we are proud to report that contracts have already been consummated by that organization affecting some one hundred thousand workers who never before had the benefit of collective bargaining contracts at any time in the history of the industry.

What Brother Haywood has said to you with reference to these many other unions, these many other industries, is equally true. Our organization has made during the current year unprecedented gains in the field of organizing, has made unprecedented gains in wage improvements, in improvements in conditions of employment, and in union security provisions which have been incorporated in our collective bargaining contracts through the processes of voluntary collective bargaining. These gains, my friends, are your gains; these gains are the gains of America; these gains are the gains of the people, the workers of the United States of America.

Gains In South

Who can remember just a few years ago, at one of our great National conventions the stories that were told about the South, the stories that were told about the inability of any organization to ever organize the South? Today there is brought to your attention a report which shows to you that the greatest industrial center in the South, the great Birmingham steel district, is just as completely organized in the National CIO unions, and in the workers there, as are the workers in the city of Detroit or the workers in the city of Pittsburgh. The city of Birmingham is definitely a thoroughgoing almost 100 per cent CIO city.

Wage standards in the South during the past year have been increased for workers employed in southern industry, particularly in the Birmingham area, anywhere from 10 cents to thirty-five cents per hour per worker, unprecedented material financial gains, improving the living standards of southern workers. Not too much attention has been given to the fact that during the recent Miners' Conference the southern wage differential has been abolished for day men; and don't you know that the Steel Workers' Organizing Committee eighteen months ago abolished certain definite, discriminatory iniquitous differentials operating against both whites and colored, after the organization was established there!

This work of elevating the standards of the southern worker is going on. Who is doing it; who is doing it in America? There is only one group that I know, only one group, and that is you, the National CIO. That is your job. Nobody else is going to do it. Nobody else in the history of this country ever undertook the doing of it, until you came along, and you are doing it now.

The South is opened up. Yes, the slogan of the National CIO for the ensuing year is going to be one of organizing the South, the great South—the great South must be organized before this convention meets next year.

I don't mind telling you that insofar as the CIO is concerned there is not going to be anything stand in our way of organizing the South during the current year. We have to do it, we are going to do it; let us pledge ourselves to see that that job is done before your convention meets next year.

Real Job Ahead

This work of organizing rises so far above men and so far above triviality, that men who are interested in kids, men whose souls and hearts and minds beat in unison with the aspirations of little children, and men and women, will loan their bodies and their souls and their brains and their minds and everything that God has given to them in this effort of organizing. If they are sincere about it, they will do it not from a public platform in a great convention, but they will do it right out in the heart of industry where the job has got to be done, and no matter what the sacrifice may be. It takes brave men to do these jobs; they don't do them with spurs sunk into desks and offices scattered throughout this country; they do it out in the sticks where the job has got to be done.

That is no idle talk—that is no idle talk. Organization was never perfected through the issuance of statements miles away from where the organization has to be done. Fundamentally it has got to be done by men around mill gates and in local union halls and in mass meetings around these places, and in picketing activities; and by eternal God, so far as I am concerned, I deem it a great privilege and honor to have the opportunity of doing a job like that. I have felt that way throughout life, and I shall always feel that way.

My People

All right, this is an important resolution I have perhaps a little too much emphasis into this thing, I don't know; but my heart beats in unison with the heartbeat of the people who live out there. I live with them. When I go home from the city of Washington and the city of Pittsburgh my week-ends are spent in mining camps with coal diggers or steel workers; and all of my family connections are working in coal mines digging coal, and are members of the Mine Workers' Union. Others are members of the Steel Workers' Organizing Committee there are some here working in the city of Detroit in union auto plants. I like life such as that, sitting right smack squarely in the front room or the kitchen with them talking to them about their problems. Hell that is the only kind of life I ever led, and that is the only kind of life I ever want to lead.

Do you think the presidency of the Congress of Industrial Organizations has interested me? Do you think I aspire to it? If there are any here that believes so, then they are vultures. They have no right to believe so, they have no right in their heart or their conscience to believe so. All I want to do is what I have done throughout life and that is to work in the trenches of industry fighting to organize men and women—nothing more and nothing less. It is no delight to me for that fagging carcass to stand up on this public platform talking about leadership. I take no pride in leadership. And the man that says I do is a filthy dirty liar. I take pride in my association with the people who struggle, who fight and who strive to build unions.

Can't Delay

My friends, that is how I feel. And we have been doing such a remarkably great job in this field since this organization was originally brought into being that we cannot afford to dally along this organization highway. There are six hundred or more delegates in this convention, representing some forty-one International Unions, a great many local Industrial Unions, a great many State, City and County Industrial Unions. It is going to be your job during the coming year to organize men and women. So far as the President of this organization is concerned, I am President today, I do not know that I will be President Saturday or Monday—but I tell you this, that you have a job to do, each and every one of you in this convention, and that job rises above you, you and you; that job penetrates the heart and the soul of human beings.

This kind of a job is a Godly job, it is a noble task, it is a task of improving, and improving, and improving the standards of living of American working men and women, and giving a better outlook to children.

Planning

"The weakness and failures of the defense program are due in great measure to lack of planning. America's resources, both in material wealth and in human ingenuity, are great enough to defend ourselves and to give full aid to those actively on the firing line . . .

"The adoption of the CIO Industry Council Plan, presented to the government by Pres. Murray . . . would ensure the fullest production not only of arms and other defense weapons but of civilian goods needed to maintain and improve our standard of living." — From the CIO Committee On Officers Report.

On Foreign Policy

THE MATTER before the house (Foreign Policy) is one that transcends in importance any other question which may come before this convention, in that the decision of the convention upon this resolution (Text on Page 4) and upon this report will have its effect in the homes of millions of people throughout the United States, and its obvious repercussions in all of the countries throughout the world.

There is no labor organization in America that is more deeply rooted in defense production than our CIO organizations. You have a list of them before you. You know the industries from which these organizations hail. You know the important fundamental part that they must play in the days to come after this convention is over.

In the submission of this report to this great convention, I as President, sensed very keenly my own individual responsibilities to the memberships of our unions and to the workers of America. Like any other citizen of our great land, I have watched through the news organs of our nation the steady, forward march of those forces of aggression, those forces of brutality in Europe, and I have been very conscious of the one outstanding fact that in each of the countries overrun by the Nazi forces the labor movement was the first to feel the impact of the terrifying blows of the German army.

Leaders Killed

The leaders of every labor organization in every country taken over by Germany, including the unoccupied portions of certain countries in Europe, have either been killed, murdered or put in concentration camps, and the organizations in each instance have been completely obliterated.

There are no labor organizations any more in any of the countries overrun by Hitler. There are no conventions of labor being held in these countries today. There are no open forums. There are no democratic privileges.

The workers of these occupied territories are denied the right to meet for the purpose of discussing wrongs that may be perpetrated against them. The unions are abolished. The wage standards and living conditions of the working people of the occupied countries are definitely regulated and controlled by the Hitler and Nazi forces.

There is the situation. Into every country that they have gone there has trailed in their wake starvation, poverty, misery, suffering and disease. The right of freedom of worship has been taken away. There is no free press in any of the countries taken over by Hitler. The lives of the people are completely controlled from the moment they rise out of their beds in the morning until they return to their beds at night.

Arouses People

Such, my friends, is the most sorrowing, terrifying spectacle that this world has ever witnessed—terrifying to the point that it arouses the ire and the indignation of all liberty-loving people throughout the world.

That is why this convention has given serious, intelligent, constructive consideration to the report and to the resolution now pending before the convention. The President of this organization, in recommending outright, forthright support to the President's foreign policy, has suggested in the same report and has said from this platform to this convention that he shall never, so long as he possesses any power as a leader of labor in this country, forfeit labor's right to its natural advantages and to the attainment of its natural objectives.

Will Protect Gains

On this historic afternoon, the 18th day of November, 1941, when our great convention is solemnly considering the passage of the pending resolution let me say to America now that insofar as the CIO is concerned it shall be its purpose to protect its gains and increase its opportunities to advance and improve the standards of its membership. That we propose to do. That we think we can do, and justifiably do in the face of a grave national emergency.

Through the medium of this convention here today, just before you take your action, I am asking the President of our mighty government, the mightiest in the world, the best in the world and the most democratic in the world, to give labor a better break in this country of ours, to give us more ample representation in the development of this great national defense program.

And to the labor baiters in our National Congress, these southern Congressmen to whom President Lewis has so aptly referred, I say to them today from this platform that the national CIO, through all of its forty-one affiliated international unions and its five million members and their dependents and their friends, will fight every inch of the way against the enactment of labor-baiting, labor manacling legislation in the federal Congress.

And before this convention ends I am going to ask you to make these words of ours effective by having each organization, in conjunction with our national office, visit the city of Washington and make manifest your protestations against any kind of legislation which has for its purpose the strangulation of labor in America. America needs the labor movement. The people of the United States need CIO. The President of the United States of America needs CIO, and we say to him, "Here we are, we are coming, we are with you, give us representation."

These views which I have expressed to you reflect the convictions of the President of the Congress of Industrial Organizations. I hope when your convention passes into history that your fight will continue unabated, as it must needs for the continued advancement and the continued protection of American labor, the American working man, his wife and his children.

Fighting Tradition

I come from a miner's family, all coal diggers. For thirty years I have been an officer of the United Mine Workers of America, and during that thirty year period I have been on every battlefront of this country where the miners were fighting for their rights. I fought the militia in the state of West Virginia and the National Guard, when the Governor of that commonwealth was seeking the destruction of the United Mine Workers and when the Miners Union was not so strong.

In the 1922 strike of the Miners Union, to which Delegate Kennedy referred, I was Vice-President of the International Union, and when the flag of the United States was hoisted over the Montour 4 tipple of the Pittsburgh Coal Company, and the National Guard was turned out to break the strike, I think it was Phil Murray that led the parade of 750 miners to the tipple that morning, if I am not mistaken.

In District No. 2 during the same strike, and later in the 1927 strike when I was Vice-President of the International Union, and I denounced the efforts of Governor Fischer of the State of Pennsylvania using the state police to kill and murder our people, I visited almost every mining camp in central Pennsylvania and Western Pennsylvania during that historic struggle, I addressed countless meetings of striking miners and their families, I was thrown in the streets by the state police during that historic strike, fighting the use of armed forces to destroy the United Mine Workers Union.

Home Invaded

My home in Pittsburgh in the 1927 strike was surrounded, surrounded with a force of filthy Pinkerton detectives and private guards; my home was invaded and ransacked during that strike, and my family terrorized.

In the 1927 strike, the 1928 strike, the 1929 strike, I traveled through the coal camps of West Virginia and Ohio and Western and Central Pennsylvania, playing my part in that fight against the use of brutality and force to destroy the Miners Union.

And just a few days ago, while I was lying in the hospital—I just got out of the hospital, I was ill—some of my defamers—and I have got a few that some day I will take particular delight in talking to—some of them, at least, planted a few sticks of dynamite around my home and my garage, to threaten my wife and my family—only two or three weeks ago.

Yes, I have been on the battle front; I take second place to no living soul.

Supports Miners

So far as the present situation is concerned affecting the captive mines and the United Mine Workers of America, I shall be at the beck and call of President Lewis and my union. Never have I betrayed them, and so help me God, never shall I betray them, lending whatever support I can towards the constructive prosecution of the efforts of the President of my own organization for whom I have the greatest affection, love and admiration — and I take second place to no citizen in this country in that regard, either.

So, my friends, it is not for me to divert from the ordinary rules of procedure for the purpose of discussing the part that I have played in our proceedings. I have submitted my recommendation to this convention affecting policies of the National CIO in relationship to the foreign policies of the President of the United States. I have done so in good conscience, believing that it is the finest thing that the CIO can do under existing circumstances.

I believe in it, I am wholeheartedly for it, and, my good friends, when you adopt it I shall do with you whatever I can to make it effective.

Lewis Exposes Steel Operators

(The following paragraphs are excerpts from the speech of John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers Union, to the UMW National Policy Committee this week, explaining negotiations with heads of the steel companies for settlement of the captive mine controversy).

Obviously the steel companies believed that all they had to do was to maintain their attitude while the government broke any projected strike of the mine workers and established nation-wide the principle of the open shop in industrial relations in America.

Army Wanted Maps

Mr. Fairless revealed in the conference that a week ago last Saturday night, at midnight, two days before the Mediation Board had rendered its decision, that he was awakened from his sleep to receive a demand from the military organization of the government for maps of the steel corporation's mining properties and other data having to do with possible military strategy in the mining communities of this country.

He stated in the conference that in the State of Alabama his companies had had requests for that information several days prior to the Saturday request for that information affecting the Northern captive mines.

Mr. Purnell, president of Youngstown Sheet and Tube Company, stated that he had received the same request under the same circumstances on the same date as affecting his company.

Foresaw Bloodshed

During the sessions, Mr. Fairless and his associate made it clear that they believed that the Army would march into the mining communities equipped with all their paraphernalia of war and undertake methodically and with systematic military strategy, through the utilization of artillery and machine guns, terrifying, intimidating and breaking the morale of the mine workers, to crush the strike, with accompanying bloodshed.

Mr. Grace submitted to the conference that his corporation (Bethlehem) has received government contracts which they now have unfilled, amounting to more than $1,200,000,000, payment to be made to Mr. Grace's corporation from the public funds of the United States, derived from taxation upon its citizens.

The years have proved that Mr. Grace is not in business for the pleasure of it, and that his corporation is out to make a profit; it is a reasonable assumption that out of that volume of government contracts now held by Mr. Grace that his corporation will make a quarter of a billion dollars in profits on the operation.

We suggested to Mr. Grace that he owed this country something: we suggested to Mr. Grace, who has a salary and bonus account exceeding a million dollars in many years, that he owed something to a man who worked in a coal mine for seven dollars a day, and that there was a vast gulf between his million-dollar income and the income of the man who lives in a company house in a mining town and tries to rear a family on seven dollars a day, when the mine works.

We have no quarrel with our government; our membership unanimously believes in our government, and will contribute to the maintenance and stability and for the future grandeur of our government. We have in the past. We have demonstrated it before. We have supported and we have given of our energy and the lives of our people without stint, when necessity required. We will do that again.

We only consider it unfortunate that the great captains of the steel industry have come to believe that they can use the government at will, use its vast influence and power to maintain them in a super-arrogance and contempt for the established processes of collective bargaining in the coal industry.

Those processes of collective bargaining have come to exist only through 50 years of sacrifice and work and expenditure of time and money, and in the cost of a sum total of human contribution through the years and decades that can scarcely be computed, and the steel magnates say: "Away with it; we do not wish to be annoyed. We run our companies the way we wish."

We do not believe that the Congress of the United States, at the request of a Connally from Texas, a Cox from Georgia or a Smith from Virginia, elected by a minority of their electorate who are in no sense majority representatives of our citizenship, would again impose involuntary servitude, compulsory arbitration on forty million American workers.

And if the Congress did—and if the Congress did, what then? We asked them, "What then?" Would that establish national unity in America? Would that achieve the objective of the ideal in American policy and American public life and in American relationships between citizens? We think not. And we are serene in that conviction.

2 Cos. Would Sign

From information not substantially gained in the conference with the steel executives, but derived from various sources—and the United Mine Workers of America does have some sources of information aside from what comes to it through the newspapers—it is my considered opinion that the United States Steel Corporation wants to sign this contract and that the Youngstown Sheet and Tube Company wants to sign this contract, but that Mr. Eugene G. Grace, multi-millionaire industrialist, with a billion, two hundred million dollars of unfilled government orders is standing there unchanged, unaffected, cold-bloodedly determined to prevent any settlement, if he can, in basis of the union shop in the coal industry.

Hits Decision

Those steel companies are just waiting for some one to say to them that they should settle. That's been obvious for some time. They were prepared to settle with the mine workers if the National Defense Mediation Board had had the strength of character and the courage to render a just decision in this case, but because the National Defense Mediation Board stultified itself in its decision, it left the great companies without an excuse to save their face and sign this contract . . .

. . . I assert again that there is no quarrel except that quarrel between our membership and their union and these greatest of all corporations, powerful, dominant and entrenched corporate entities, which are sitting there today saying to the United Mine Workers of America, "you shall not pass; we will not give you justice on your demands because we do not want to be placed in the position of giving justice to a lot of other people who might then ask for justice."

. . . The steel magnates admitted that we have a just cause, but in the words of Mr. Grace, this situation has grown so big and affects so many other interests that "we cannot concede to the mine workers a settlement on merit."

. . . Why should any one falter because today or tomorrow in the Congress of the United States a Connally or a Cox or a Smith or a Brown, coming from an area where the citizens are deprived of an opportunity to vote by the economic sanction of the poll tax, may call the president of the United Mine Workers of America, or any of his associate officers, a traitor to our flag and our government?

I laugh at such a charge and I challenge the Connallys and the Coxes and the Smiths, any one of them, to absent themselves from the immunity of their specially protected position in Congress and walk up to John L. Lewis and call him a traitor.

Bans Open Shop

. . . The conference yesterday terminated without arrangement for additional meetings. I assume that the presidents of these corporations whom we met will report to their own directors some time. I don't know when. I know that one of these days there is going to be a settlement of this proposition.

I know, further, that there can be no open shop agreement executed because no officer and no member of the United Mine Workers of America has the authority from that membership to give away their rights and execute an open shop agreement and hasten that arrangement on our people.

MINERS TO WHITE HOUSE: A battery of cameramen greeted John L. Lewis, left, president of the United Mine Workers; Thomas Kennedy, secretary-treasurer; and Philip Murray, vice-president of the UMW and president of CIO, on arrival of the three for conferences last week with President Roosevelt over the steel companies' refusal to grant the union shop in captive mines.

CIO Votes Full Aid To Miners

the cause of labor; therefore be it

"Resolved, by the executive board of the CIO, that we approve and pledge our unqualified support to the United Mine Workers of America in its logical effort to stabilize the mining industry on the basis of a union shop, uniform agreement, covering commercial and captive mines, and we call upon the government and captive mine owners to direct their efforts to the consummation of this standard agreement as a real contribution to national defense."

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, himself the vice-president of the miners union, devoted a major portion of his opening speech to a discussion of the coal situation, and made frequent reference to it during other statements to the convention and to the press.

PLACES BLAME

The mine shutdown was directly attributable to the actions of some "five or six important industrial steel corporations," Murray declared.

The union has a perfect case, he added, and the Mediation Board's recommendation against the UMW union shop demand is the "rankest kind of governmental discrimination," the CIO leader asserted.

Who is fighting the miners, he asked.

"We find Mr. Eugene Grace (head of Bethlehem Steel) with $1,250,000,000 worth of government contracts, more government business than he will be able to execute or provide the government with in the next three and a half years, standing upon his hypocritical principle that he cannot subscribe under any conditions to the establishment of a union shop at his mines, although some 95 or 97% of his brethren in the same industry have voluntarily subscribed to the same.

"We find Mr. Thomas Girdler's Republic Steel Co. assuming the same attitude. We find the great United States Steel Corp. doing exactly the same."

RAPS AFL ACTION

Murray lashed out at the action of two AFL representatives on the Mediation Board who voted against the union shop.

The AFL, he said, has resorted to the vilest kind of treachery in going back upon its promised word, and no labor organization within the mind of man could have committed a more heinous crime than did the representatives of the AFL. . ."

During ensuing discussions on other questions, a number of speakers expressed their support of the convention's position.

Mines Shut Tight In Demand For Union Shop Rights

Committee, "it is my considered opinion that the United States Steel Corp. wants to sign this contract and that the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. wants to sign this contract, but that Mr. Eugene Grace, multi-millionaire industrialist, with a billion, two hundred million dollars of unfilled government orders, is standing there, unchanged, unaffected, cold-bloodedly determined to prevent any settlement, if he can, on basis of the union shop in the coal industry.

"So we have the situation today of a man with 1,200 million dollars of government contracts in his pocket, so arrogant in his strength and so contemptuous in his attitude that he would rather wait in the hope that the Army of the United States will break the strike and crush the Union."

TENSION MOUNTS

With strike tension rapidly mounting as strikebreakers shot at and wounded several pickets, there were definite rumors that the Army might seize the mines, although this was regarded as a last-resort maneuver.

Anticipating the threat, President Lewis pointed out that "if the soldiers come, the mine workers will remain peacefully in their homes, conscious of the fact that bayonets in coal mines will not produce coal."

The hue and cry for dictatorial government settlement in favor of the steel operators' open shop demands included suggested legislation which would authorize President Roosevelt to take over and operate the mines, and would declare unlawful any interruption of production.

ARBITERS BIASED

Lewis, in reply to President Roosevelt's request for arbitration of maintenance of the status quo, said practically any arbiter would be influenced by Roosevelt's opinions and hence could not be unbiased.

Lewis declared Roosevelt's assertion that a captive mine open shop would not invalidate the Appalachian union shop agreement was incorrect, pointing out that:

The steel operators obviously regard the open shop as more favorable, "otherwise they would not fight and disturb the tranquility of the nation by insisting on the deletion of the union shop clause from the Appalachian agreement."

CITES APPALACHIAN PACT

The Appalachian contract provides that "if the United Mine Workers of America make a wage agreement during said period covering wages or working conditions with any person, association or district within the Appalachian area, on a basis more favorable than above, then this agreement shall be modified so that all parties to the Appalachian agreement shall receive all the benefits of such more favorable wage agreement."

This clause, Lewis pointed out, works both ways.

Spread of the strike was entirely justified, UMW officials said, on the ground that the Appalachian contract permits strike action to preserve the integrity of all bituminous coal pacts.

NEGOTIATIONS COLLAPSE

The "captive" miners struck for the second time within a month on November 15 on expiration of a settlement deadline, after conferences between UMW Officials Lewis, Philip Murray and Thomas Kennedy and Steel Magnates Grace, Benjamin Fairless of U. S. Steel, and Frank Purnell of Youngstown, had broken down.

Grave disagreement between the competing firms was exposed at a press conference, when Grace apparently had to beat the two other company presidents into line, although all three maintained that their "united" front was unbroken.

ROOSEVELT DENIAL

Lewis' letter to Roosevelt Monday, after negotiations collapsed, was followed by Roosevelt's denial that an open shop captive contract would invalidate the Appalachian agreement, but Roosevelt later said that if the UMW would agree to the status quo in captive mines, all operators with closed shop pacts would be "urged" to continue them as an aid to national defense.

Ford, Willys Agree To Manufacture Jeeps

WASHINGTON (INS)—In a move to double the production of the army's "jeep" trucks, the war department Saturday announced that the Ford Motor company, and the Willys-Overland Motors, Inc., of Toledo, will join in turning out this type of vehicle.

The agreement between the two companies, the first of its kind to be negotiated by two American auto manufacturers since the World war, provides that the Ford company will make available the huge facilities of its River Rouge plant at Dearborn, Mich., for the production of a vehicle identical to the model now being manufactured by Willys. The latter company will furnish complete drawings, licenses, patents and other manufacturing information without cost.

October 24th, 1941

Gentlemen:
When I was in the market for a new car, I talked with a number of my friends who have various makes of cars. During our discussions, I realized that I had to consider these factors:

The higher cost of most cars today.
The greater cost of gas and oil and repairs.
Higher taxes.
Yes, and what about this question of substitutes being used because of material shortages?

My friends argued that the purchase price of the WILLYS would be much lower and consequently, the new taxes would not be as high. And what car gets up to and over 30 miles on a gallon of gas, uses very little oil and costs so very little to repair if it ever needs repairs? My friends assured me that this car was the Willys.

The Willys salesman convinced me, by demonstration, that there are no "ersatz" materials in the new Willys. One of my friends insisted that he paid his incidental expenses and rent from his monthly savings on his Willys.

I thought you would like to know that my friends sold me on a WILLYS.

Very truly yours,

We are proud beyond words of the Willys Engineering and Manufacturing Staffs. In close collaboration with the Quartermaster Corps of the United States Army, they created and perfected the rugged, dependable "Jeep" that is being used as the pattern for all command-reconnaissance cars of this type.

In civilian service, the new 1942 Willys Americar, "the Jeep in Civvies," is equally outstanding. Designed by the same engineers, built by the same trained hands, powered by the same fuel-saving Go-Devil engine as the rugged "Jeeps," it provides dependable transportation at the lowest cost of any full-family-size car in the world.

Women's Place In Labor's Fight Discussed By Auxiliaries

DETROIT, Nov. 22—Union women have an important role to play in times of national emergency and should be made aware of the great contribution they have to make to the national defense program.

This was the main point stressed in reports and speeches heard by delegates representing 100,000 members who attended the conference of CIO Auxiliaries which met here concurrently with the fourth national convention of the CIO.

Mrs. Faye Stephenson, national president, was chairman of the conference.

At the closing session the women's auxiliaries elected Mrs. Faye Stephenson of Cleveland as national president, Mrs. Julia Katz, Washington, D. C., national director, and Mrs. Eleanor Fowler, also of Washington, secretary-treasurer.

"It is the first time in the history of the labor movement in the United States that organized wives of organized workers from all fields of industry have met in formal conference to consider a national program that will meet their needs and embrace their interests as women and as a part of the labor movement," the officers' report to the conference stated.

WOMEN IN FACTORIES

The report, read by Mrs. Julia Katz, secretary of the National Coordinating Committee of CIO Auxiliaries, declared that women, particularly those in defense production centers, were faced with the likelihood of being called upon to supplement the labor power of men.

"We must be trained," the report stated. "We must begin now to organize adequate nurseries and schools. And above all, we must protect the gains which we have helped organize labor win by insuring equal pay for equal work.

"This is our first line of defense, but it is by no means all of our responsibility to the defense and security of the nation."

REAL CONTRIBUTION

The outstanding contribution women's auxiliaries have to make, the report continued, deal with "the maintenance and strengthening of the living standards of every community in which we exist.

"Volunteer participation offices need women, and auxiliary members have important and extraordinary abilities to give—experience, courage and loyalty and the ability to work as a group."

THOMAS SPEAKS

President R. J. Thomas of the United Automobile Workers and several women speakers outstanding in public affairs addressed the delegates during the four days the conference was in session.

Taking up the question of the captive mine strike, Pres. Thomas explained in his speech the importance of women understanding the issues involved in this and other strikes. He urged the women to make every effort, not only to understand labor's position themselves, but also to make other women understand it.

"If it is wrong for the individual to pay dues to the union," Thomas declared, "it is also wrong for him to accept the wage raises and better conditions which the other workers have obtained for him. I, for one, am getting tired of hitch-hikers."

BACK MINERS

After hearing Pres. Thomas' spirited defense of the justness of the miners' strike for a union shop in the captive mines, the women delegates voted unanimously to send a telegram to Pres. John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers pledging "their wholehearted support to the striking miners."

A proposed trip to England by a delegation of women from various groups in the United States was announced by Miss Eloise Davison, director of women's activities in the Division of Civilian Defense, in her talk to the CIO Auxiliary delegates.

She asked for support and cooperation in the civilian defense program and urged that CIO women make it their duty to see that the right type persons are named to defense councils in their localities.

Later the Auxiliary delegates heard Miss Helen Gregory, field representative for the Consumer Division of the Office of Price Administration, warn of the dangers of inflation to consumers.

"Every rise in prices is a wage cut for you," she said. "Inflation not only has the power to rob every home of food, clothing, health and even peace of mind but it will also increase the cost of the defense effort and thus raise taxes, too."

Experimental consumer information centers, such as the one which has already been set up in Chicago, Miss Gregory said, should be set up in other cities. Pointing out that it will be the job of the consumers themselves to make the program fit the committees and groups they represent, Miss Gregory asked for the wholehearted cooperation of members of the CIO auxiliaries in making the program function successfully.

JENNIE LEE SPEAKS

At a luncheon given by the auxiliaries on Tuesday, Miss Jennie Lee, former member of Parliament, talked on the role of British workers in the fight against Hitler, comparing it to the part to be played by American workers. Miss Lee, who is the daughter of a Scotch miner and a graduate of Edinburgh University, attended the International Labor Office conference recently held in New York and has been speaking before labor and other groups in various cities.

England needs not only guns, tanks and planes from America, Miss Lee said, but also the "best of your ideas."

Policies to guide the CIO auxiliaries during the coming year were embodied in a number of resolutions passed by the delegates. Among these was one endorsing CIO Pres. Murray's Industry Council plan. Another urged support of the government's program of establishing free nurseries for children of workers and of setting up a national nutritional program to feed families from central kitchens in defense areas.

RESOLUTIONS

The conference also voted to support President Roosevelt's foreign policy; called for Federal supervision of trailer camps; urged the training of women for defense; opposed job discrimination against Negroes, and pledged full support to the program and policies of the national CIO.

Delegates voted at one of the later sessions to change the name of the organization to the Congress of Women's Auxiliaries of the CIO. Previously it had been called the National Coordinating Committee of CIO Auxiliaries.

Seek Voluntary Settlement Of Disputes, Is Plea

DETROIT, Nov. 22—The CIO "will cooperate completely in the attempt to adjust all labor disputes on a voluntary basis" through collective bargaining and will use the government's mediation facilities "to the utmost degree," the CIO convention voted here.

Earlier the delegates had unanimously accepted a report from the Committee on Officers' Reports upholding the resignation of President Murray and Mine Workers' Secretary-Treasurer Thomas Kennedy from the National Defense Mediation Board in protest against the Board's 9-2 decision turning down the miners' union shop demand.

CITE COUNCIL PLAN

The Officers Report cited the "constructive suggestions" of President Murray's Industry Council Plan as a "basis for the solution of maintaining stable labor relations".

The resolution on use of strikes noted that labor is in the front ranks of those seeking a democratic victory over fascism, and that "'business as usual' employers and Nazi appeasers . . . seek to inject the poison of Hitlerism into our democratic society through the repression of labor's rights."

"UTMOST IMPORTANCE"

The resolution concluded:

"Labor appreciates more than any other group that in this grave crisis, mediation and peaceful solution of our industrial disputes is of the utmost importance to America.

"The CIO calls upon the government and industry to recognize, in the effort to defeat Hitlerism, that labor's participation in the formulation and administration of our nation's policies must be accepted in good faith, the right of labor to live must not be inpaired, and that the reasonable demands of the working men and women to improve their lot wherever it is possible and consistent with our national welfare must not be denied.

"Any legislative anti-labor measure constitutes aid to Hitler by destroying American morale and serving to weaken the national effort to defeat Nazism."

ACA Boosts Wages $200,000

New York, Nov. 22—A wage increase of $200,000 a year—approximately 12 per cent—was won this week by the American Communications Association for employes of RCA Communications, Inc.

Guild Strikes Shut Three Papers; 4th Walkout Won

New York, Nov. 22—Three American Newspaper Guild strikes had three newspapers shut down tighter than the Nazi censorship this week.

A 19-day-old fourth strike ended in victory, with pay raises for every striker and an agreement to arbitrate the question of still higher pay and other improvements in working conditions.

Papers closed by picket lines included: The Birmingham Post, Chester (Penn.) Times and Allquippa (Penn.) Daily Gazette.

Strikers at the Parkchester Review, a Bronx weekly, returned to work under an agreement providing for wage increases and for negotiation of a contract within 10 days—otherwise disputed points will be submitted to arbitration.

The three strikes, involving daily papers, were called after publishers refused Guild demands for wage increases and union security.

UAW Wins Goodyear Aircraft Vote

Akron, O., Nov. 22—By a 4-1 majority the United Automobile, Aircraft & Agricultural Implement Workers Union this week won a National Labor Relations Board election at the giant new plants of the Goodyear Aircraft Corp., Richard T. Frankensteen, UAW Aircraft director, reported today.

Goodyear Aircraft will soon move into three new plants now being constructed at the Akron airdock and by January 1 more than 12,000 workers will be employed, Frankensteen said.

To Float Bonds

Los Angeles, Nov. 22— To purchase the building it has occupied for more than a year and to expand its facilities, the Los Angeles Industrial Union Council is floating a $20,000 building bond issue among its affiliates.

Popular

DETROIT, Nov. 22—CIO's support of all possible assistance to the nations fighting Hitler brought immediate support from local unions throughout the nation.

On Nov. 20, Sec. Carey was forced to announce that it would be impossible to read further wires to the convention because on Thursday morning alone more than 1,000 telegrams were received.

WHEN LADIES MEET: While CIO convention was in session, the Natl. Coordinating Committee of CIO Auxiliaries held its own convention in another hall in Moose Temple. Delegates discussed union problems, cost of living, and plans for extending auxiliaries throughout the nation.

Murray Given Car By Auto Union

Detroit, Nov. 22—Like many a motorist before him, CIO Pres. Philip Murray will leave Detroit in a brand new car.

But unlike most others who pick up their latest model autos in this automobile capital of the world, Murray didn't have to pay for his.

For at a convention banquet, the United Automobile Workers presented Pres. Murray with a new Ford Mercury car—equipped with the CIO union label—in appreciation of his services in helping win the famed union shop contract at Ford.

In a speech of thanks, Murray told "off the record" stories about the events leading up to the contract, expressed hope that Ford workers and management would work out the nation's most ideal labor relations cooperative policy, and urged the Ford workers to show the greatest possible union discipline as an example to the entire nation.

Pres. Roosevelt Sends Message to Delegates

DETROIT, Nov. 22—Following is the letter sent by President Roosevelt to President Philip Murray of the CIO:

"Dear Mr. Murray:

"Will you please extend my greetings and felicitations to the officers and members of the Congress of Industrial Organizations attending your annual convention. At the same time let me wish, with all your members, for a meeting out of which will come substantial good and benefit to American wage earners, to American business, to American farmers, and to the American public.

"The annual conventions of American Labor groups are symbols of the freedom which we in the United States enjoy and must make every sacrifice to maintain. Only in a democracy could such a meeting be held.

OUR FREEDOMS

"But they as well as freedom of worship, freedom of speech, freedom of the press, and all property rights are today threatened by the menace of Hitlerism which has already blighted so many peoples who cherish liberty and happiness.

"Unless these freedoms are protected from this world scourge, free trade unions and all other free institutions will vanish. In order to protect them our defense program must be all out and at all times. We need guns, tanks, planes and ships and we must produce guns, tanks, planes and ships without interruption, and the American people and their government are determined that we shall have them.

"I have every confidence that your members, recognizing the imperative needs of the American people in the interest of American defense will cooperate with all other American groups in the common and in the patriotic interest. Americans will demand such a contribution from management, from labor and from all other groups for the preservation of home, family, religion and nation.

UNITED ACTION

"In my message to the American Federation of Labor convention I said to that meeting, as I say to the Congress of Industrial Organizations convention: 'In this hour when civilization itself is in the balance organizational rivalries and jurisdictional conflicts should be discarded. Only by united action can we turn back the Nazi threat. The establishment of peace between labor organizations would be a patriotic step forward of incalculable value in the creation of true national unity.'

"American labor organizations today have a great responsibility. Enslaved workers the world over look to their American brothers for the production of the weapons which will make them free again. American workers can not and must not fail them in their hour of need and our hour of need.

"Very truly yours,
"Franklin D. Roosevelt."

Accident Time Loss Exceeds Strike Loss

New York, Nov. 22—Despite the report that more than 24,000,000 man days of work were lost in the last 15 months because of strikes, the latest issue of the Dept. of Labor "Information Bulletin" reports that industrial accidents cost U. S. labor 41,900,000 man days of work during 1940—a three months shorter period.

DELEGATION: Here's a typical delegation at the CIO convention—representatives of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee. In 1935, 10,000 steel workers were organized; now, the number's over half a million.

Great Gains Reported In South; CIO Maps Plans For Organizing Drive

DETROIT, Nov. 22—Rumors of what the CIO is doing for low-paid workers in the South are beginning to penetrate even into the pine woods of Alabama and Texas where thousands of lumber workers are hidden away toiling like slaves for 10 to 15 cents an hour.

The story is seeping down to the 6,000 workers employed in the salt and sulphur mines of Louisiana, and spreading through the sugar refineries.

Ku Klux Klan and other hoodlum anti-union elements in Georgia, Tennessee and Arkansas are beginning to discover that an attack on a CIO organizer brings on indignant cries of protest heard throughout the country.

Shivers run up and down sheriffs' backs under the glaring light of publicity turned on law enforcement agencies in towns noted for their apathy in running down anti-union thugs.

These are some of the tough spots still challenging the efforts of the CIO touched upon by regional directors and organizers at a conference held during the CIO convention here under the chairmanship of Allan S. Haywood, director of organization, to discuss both the potentialities and the progress of the southern drive.

BIRMINGHAM

The bright side of the story of CIO progress in the South centers on Birmingham, Ala., now practically a CIO organized city, William Mitch, president of the Alabama Council, told the conference. Mr. Mitch is also president of Alabama District 20, United Mine Workers, and regional director of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

Yelverton Cowherd, CIO regional director in Alabama, and Noel Beddow, SWOC director in Birmingham, reported on gains made in the district, not only in steel plants but in a variety of other concerns in this highly industrialized city.

Dave Fowler, regional director in Arkansas, told of the progress made in "selling" the idea of the CIO to the various elements in cities and towns where CIO organization was starting to prevent hostile action against union activity and to educate public officials as to the value of the CIO program.

LOUISIANA

Reporting for Louisiana, Regional Director Fred Pieper said that outside of the oil industry, the largest potentiality for CIO membership in the state was open to District 50, gas, coke and chemical division of the United Mine Workers, and to the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers. Substantial union membership among the 6,000 workers employed in salt and sulphur mines has already been built up, Pieper said, and four sugar refineries have been organized.

The high spot of the gains made in the state is New Orleans, where some 20,000 workers have been organized in about three years.

TEXAS

Aside from the vastness of the territory to be covered, Maurice Dineen, regional director in Texas, reported that one of the outstanding problems he had to contend with was company unionism, which has been organized on a state-wide basis in Texas, with other industries copying the pattern initiated by Standard Oil.

The Ford drive, Dineen said, was one of the most powerful factors in speeding up organization in the state. "Every politician in the state of Texas is making love to the Dallas Ford Local," he declared.

The news of the CIO is even penetrating into the depths of the pine woods where some 60,000 lumber workers are kept in virtual peonage and paid as low as 10 and 15 cents an hour, Dineen asserted.

TENNESSEE

A dramatic fight with the AFL in Chattanooga was related by Paul Christopher, Tennessee regional director, who said that in its attempt to keep the CIO from organizing, the AFL had had five CIO men arrested on John Doe warrants. But such underhanded tricks only served to advance the CIO cause, he declared, and union membership in the city was growing rapidly.

Practically all the "easy" places in the state have been organized, Christopher said, so that now attention can be centered on the "tough spots," such as Roane County, where two CIO men were recently kidnapped and beaten up.

The storm of indignant protests made by CIO unions brought a glare of publicity upon the incident that caused much embarrassment to public officials.

GEORGIA

Charles Gilman, regional director in Atlanta, Ga., reported to the conference that union membership in his area had been growing so fast there were not enough organizers to keep up with the demands from workers for unionization.

Recent gains included a contract covering 1,300 workers employed by Atlantic Steel, Gilman reported.

Pete Campbell, CIO regional director with headquarters in Louisville, said that Kentucky was "on its way to becoming a CIO state." There are 80,000 CIO members in the state, 50,000 of them mine workers, Campbell reported. Dues paying membership increased by 30,000 during the past year, he declared.

TOBACCO DRIVE

In addition to regional directors and organizers, several presidents of international unions with large memberships in the South attended the conference. Donald Henderson, president of the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing & Allied Workers, told of a drive being planned to organize the 15,000 workers in the plant of the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. in Winston-Salem, N. C.

President Samuel Wolchok of the United Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Employes, said that the retail store industry was one of the largest in the South and that more organizers were needed to press the drive on Sears-Roebuck units and chain stores in the South.

LOW-WAGE AREA

O. M. Orton, president of the International Woodworkers, stressed the importance of bringing up wage rates in the South, where 55 per cent of the timber was produced and competed with the higher wage area in the Northwest. Progress had been made particularly in the Memphis area, Orten said, where three locals had been chartered. The IWA now has 30 locals scattered throughout the South, he said.

Alex McKeown, president of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, stressed the importance of organizing work in the South's dominant industry, textiles, and President Morris Muster of the United Furniture Workers told of recent gains won in southern areas by his union.

GAINS IN SOUTHWEST

Reid Robinson, president of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, gave a brief report of his union's activities in another section of the South, not previously touched on at the conference — the Southwest — where extensive work is being conducted in Arizona and New Mexico and other southwestern areas. The MM&SW also has an extensive drive under way in Birmingham and the Tennessee mining area, Robinson reported.

Work conducted in the South by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers was reported by Gladys Dickason, research director, who said that the ACW had thriving locals in Dallas, Atlanta, New Orleans, and other cities.

NAME COMMITTEE

At the conclusion of the conference, National Director Haywood appointed the following committee of five to report to the convention: Cowherd, Christopher, Pieper, Dineen and Roy Lawrence, TWU regional director in the Carolinas.

FULL DETAILS

A full discussion of the convention discussion of the southern organizing plans will appear in the next issue of The CIO NEWS. The debate occurred late in the convention, too late for full coverage in this week's issue.

CIO Wins Contract With Commercial Bank

New York, Nov. 22 — The first union contract with a commercial bank in this country was signed this week by the United Office & Professional Workers Bank & Brokerage Employes Local here, with the Banco di Napoli Trust Co.

The contract, signed after a whirlwind two-months drive that organized the great majority of 116 employes, provides:

Fifteen per cent increases for all workers making less than $30 and 10 per cent for all earning more, minimums ranging from $18 to $40 a week, 40-hour week and time and a half for overtime.

The bank, known as the "oldest in the world" and founded in 1539, also agreed to two weeks severance pay for every year of employment in the event of layoffs, an annual Christmas bonus which shall be a minimum of two weeks pay, and vacations ranging up to three weeks a year.

In a contract statement, Lloyd Herbert, Local president, said:

"The signing of this historic contract points the way to the tens of thousands of bank clerks in their aspirations to achieve the improvement in wages, hours and security, which have been won by the millions of trade union members of our country."

The UOPWA holds two other bank contracts with the union-owned Amalgamated Banks of New York and Chicago.

Union Shop 35% Strong In 10 Leading Industries

NEW YORK, Nov. 22—The closed or union shop is enjoyed by 35 per cent of the 5,893,000 workers in 10 of the largest American industries, Director Evans Clark of the 20th Century Fund said this week in reporting on some phases of a collective bargaining survey conducted during the past two years.

Employment figures were as of 1939, while union membership figures were as of 1940 and 1941. Labor observers pointed out that the extent of the union shop would appear even greater if an up-to-date census could be made, since there have been notable advances in 1941.

Of the almost 6,000,000 workers in the 10 industries, 4,000,000 are union members, covered by closed shop, union shop or exclusive bargaining contracts about as follows:

Industry	Total Employes	Union Members
Closed Shop Dominant
Printing	245,000	140,000
Clothing	368,000	329,000
Boot & Shoe	220,000	80,000
Construction	2,000,000	1,000,000
Union Shop Dominant
Coal Mining	540,000	537,500
Exclusive Bargaining
Automobile	500,000	450,000

Settlement Of Rail Wage Dispute Seen

Washington, Nov. 22—(FP)—Settlement of the railroad wage dispute which threatens to tie up the nation's railroads December 7 was believed imminent here today as representatives of railroad unions and management met late this week after a conference with President Roosevelt.

Terms of the settlement were believed to be a 10 per cent wage increase for operating workers, instead of the 7½ per cent proposed by the government's emergency board, and 12½ cents an hour for the non-operating workers, instead of the proposed nine cents.

MURRAY'S ACCEPTANCE SPEECH

NATION LOOKS TO THE CIO

(Here are excerpts from the acceptance speech of Pres. Philip Murray, delivered to the CIO Convention at Detroit on Nov. 21 immediately following his unanimous re-election to office.

MY mind at this moment runs beyond this great convention hall. I think I can see at the moment millions and millions of people with eyes cast wonderingly, yes, hopefully upon this great parliament of labor. I look down in the great South and there I see a yearning for organization, a hope forever beating within the breasts of the southern workers for higher standards and improved conditions of living. I can see in the very minds of those people a prayer asking that they shall be delivered from their present condition of servitude by you—by you, by the countless thousands of members of the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

And what I say with reference to the South goes with conviction also out into every unorganized portion of the United States where workers today are without the benefit and without the protection of a great, powerful labor organization to insure them their economic independence.

'Here We Are'

The National CIO, if I understand it correctly in this convention today is saying to America, "Here we are, America, come, let us work together."

We are asking our great government today, this great day, we are asking our Congress and our President today, in recognition of the things which we have done in this convention, to come—come just a little bit closer to labor, to have faith in American labor, to understand that American labor has a soul, a heart, a mind, a conscience, a body.

Labor's chief difficulty in America today, as in the days gone by lies in the unwillingness, the obvious unwillingness of government and business to accept labor in good faith.

There is more need for national unity within this movement today than ever before. Our liberties are bound to be jeopardized, they are bound to be threatened. Industrialists and oppositionists, taking advantage of the present grave national emergency, will attempt to enslave labor, to manacle labor, to restrain labor, to seek the use of the power of the courts to prevent labor exercising the use of its economic weapons where industrialists, taking advantage of the present emergency, attempt to deprive labor of its legitimate, God-given rights in this great country of ours.

Warning To Tories

To those industrialists—and there are many of them in America—I say don't try to shackle labor in America, because labor is in no mood to accept the shackles of mighty industry in the United States, either now or at any other time.

Those men in our Federal Congress, those people who come from congressional districts where there is no industry and where they cannot, by any stretch of the imagination, have the slightest understanding of our economic problems, those are the men who are leading the fight in the Federal Congress to shackle labor today—childish, foolish, perfectly nonsensical, if not crazy men endeavoring to take advantage of the present situation to promote the enactment of legislation that has for its purpose the shackling of labor, the shackling of women and children.

Message To F. D. R.

The Government of the United States, this great democracy of ours, cannot afford in the presence of this grave national emergency, now or after, to enact legislation that has for its purpose the issuance of restraints or the manacling of labor.

These things, my friend to you, Mr. President, the President of our great republic, I am attempting now to address you through the medium of this convention. I ask you in the spirit of equal justice, in the spirit of righteousness, to sit down and ponder just a little more than you have been about the need of giving labor in America a chance, a better chance, a more wholesome chance to join with you in the conduct of your great defense enterprises.

And to you mighty men of industry and finance, wherever you may be today, I shall address myself to you now. I ask you in the name of all that is fair and just to mete out to labor in this situation more, more of the things to which they are entitled. I ask each of you, no matter who you may be, that all industry and that manage and conduct industry to stop profiteering at the expense of the American people.

You, Mr. President, you, Mr. Businessman, we are calling upon you from this convention today. Accept us in good faith, sit around the industry council table with us, perfect your programs of expansion with us, join with us and consult us with reference to accelerated production, give us an administrative part in the development of those great projects, admit labor, give heed to labor, because—because when you talk of labor in America you talk of America—labor is America, America is labor.

Why should the agencies of government in Washington today be virtually infested with wealthy men, men who are supposedly receiving one dollar a year compensation? Why resort to the usages of those subtle hypocrisies? The country knows these men are not making that kind of a contribution towards our national welfare. The country knows it so why be so hypocritical about it?

It is commonly known on almost every street corner in America that many of those businessmen who are allegedly working for one dollar a year, their total compensation, are in the inside of government getting fat, juicy, profitable contracts for the companies they are privileged to represent there. That, is dishonest.

They sent Willie Bioff and another man named Browne to a federal penitentiary for racketeering. Willie Bioff and George Browne indulged themselves in illegitimate practices, but their practice could be no more reprehensible, no more vicious than the dishonest practices of an American businessman purportedly working for a dollar a year and who is obviously in the city of Washington sabotaging the national defense efforts.

Honesty Needed

If we are going into a war, or if we are in a war, the situation is sufficiently serious no matter which of the two conditions may prevail, sufficiently serious to warrant a little bit of honesty in this great dealing, a little bit of better understanding.

When I say to the government of the United States of America, the National CIO is here with its heart, its mind, its body, its everything, its life, its blood, and its limb, prepared to make whatever sacrifices may be necessary to protect this thing that we call democracy, then I say to the government and I say to business, let us, each of us, all of us, no matter who it may be or whence we come from, let us be honest with each other.

Let us be honest with the people of the United States, let us be honest with our government. The underlying motive which prompted this convention to take the action which it has taken is a sincere desire to promote in the United States of America, national honesty—national honesty not only in trade unions and between trade unions but in government and between the various branches of government, and in business and between the various associations represented in business.

Those are our objects, these are our pleadings, these are the things we propose to fight for after this convention is over; and it shall be my proud privilege to render whatever service I humanly can render towards the attainment of those very lofty objectives to which I have made reference.

PRESENTATIONS: Pres. Murray was on the receiving end of a number of tributes and gifts during the convention. Convention Hits Negro Race Bias

Detroit, Nov. 22—Discrimination by Detroit restaurants against Negro delegates to the CIO convention was quickly called to the attention of the organization when Secretary Ferdinand Smith of the National Maritime Union, himself a Negro delegate, complained on the floor.

He said the management of Greenfield's Cafeteria had denied any feelings against Negroes but that the customers demanded the rule against serving them.

Later a resolution was unanimously adopted condemning this discrimination, urging that such restaurants be boycotted by the delegates and that further action be recommended to the Detroit CIO.

"Delegates will please take notice," was President Murray's comment.

UE Signs First Smith & Wesson Pact, Ups Pay

Springfield, Mass., Nov. 22—More than 1,100 workers will receive wage increases ranging from five to 20 cents an hour under a contract signed this week by the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers Union with Smith & Wesson, Inc., nationally known small arms manufacturer. The pact is the company's first.

Passenger Car Production Cut

Washington, Nov. 22—Passenger automobile production in February, 1942, will be restricted to 43.9 per cent of the output in the same month of 1941, Leon Henderson, Director of the U. S. Division of Civilian Supply, announced today.

The cut may be even greater as the result of increasing demands for steel and other materials critical for national defense, Henderson said.

UAW-CIO Sweeps Ford Poll

5 Sedition Defendants Acquitted

Minneapolis, Nov. 22 — Five of 28 members of the Socialist Workers Party this week were acquitted of sedition charges as the prosecution rested its case, which sought to prove that the defendants, most of them members of CIO Teamsters Local 544, plotted to overthrow the government.

U. S. Judge Mathew M. Joyce directed the acquittal but denied a defense motion for freeing the 23 others. Three of those released were organizers for the union, which shifted from AFL to CIO last July. They were: George Frosig, Nick Wagner and Walter Hagstrom. Acquitted also were Dorothy Schultz and Rose Seiler.

To prove the contention of the defense that the prosecution was instigated by President Daniel J. Tobin of the AFL Teamsters Union after the Minneapolis Local shifted to CIO, the Civil Rights Defense Committee quoted from a Tobin editorial in the November issue of the Teamsters Journal:

"We can say now that it is our judgment," Tobin wrote, "that if they (the leadership of the Minneapolis Local) had agreed to the proposition which was made by the general executive board in Washington in May, they would have avoided a great deal of the unpleasant conditions which now obtain."

Frisco Council Backs Sedition Defendants

San Francisco, Nov. 22—The CIO Industrial Union Council this week pledged support to 28 members of the CIO and the Socialist Workers Party, on trial at Minneapolis for alleged sedition.

FORD ELECTION: Workers at the Ford plant in Windsor, Ont.—just across the river from Detroit—took time off for a big election rally and then voted overwhelmingly for CIO in a government-sponsored poll. Lower picture shows the victory celebration.

Canadian Anti-Union Attacks Defeated

WINDSOR, Ont. Nov. 22 — Eleven thousand Ford of Canada workers joined 86,000 fellow workers in the River Rouge plant this week by choosing the CIO United Automobile, Aircraft & Agricultural Implement Workers Union as their exclusive collective bargaining agency.

In an election campaign which set a new low for anti-union attacks and employer professions of interest in defense, and a new high for the courageous manner in which union members fought to victory, the result was: UAW-CIO —6,883; company union—4,455.

NATIONAL ISSUE

The company and newpapers made a national issue of the campaign, declaring that if the CIO won it would sweep the country.

Included in those who voted were more than 1,000 supervisory clerks and officials and power house employes who were neither connected with production lines nor eligible for the union.

Basing his campaign on the plea that the company could not let down the British Empire by a CIO stoppage, President Wallace Campbell of Ford shut down defense machinery in various departments from 25 minutes to nearly an hour while he told employes why they should vote against UAW-CIO.

VICTORY PARADE

Ford workers joined in a victory parade with banners reading: "Union for defense—I want to buy the first union-labelled Ford when Hitler is smashed—British workers discuss speeding production with management, let's do the same."

Immediate application for contract negotiations was made by UAW-CIO Regional Director George Burt.

Textile Hikes Pay $400,000

Draper, N. C., Nov. 22—An annual increase of approximately $400,000 this week was negotiated with the Marshall Field chain of mills by the Textile Workers Union. Averaging 7 per cent, the increase affects 4,000 workers in nine of the company's plants.

Living Costs Up 1-2% in Month Says Labor Dept.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 22 (FP)—The cost of goods purchased by wage earners and low-salaried workers in large cities increased 1.2 per cent from mid-September to mid-October, Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins reported here.

At the same time she reported that the average hourly earnings of factory wage earners in September was 1.6 per cent above the level of the preceding month.

The principal cause of the increase in the average hourly earning, which stood at 75.8 cents in September, was the increase in employment in certain high wage durable goods industries, Miss Perkins said.

The increase in the cost of living resulted from advances in rents and in prices of food, clothing and certain house furnishings. New excise taxes accounted for .2 per cent of the rise.

Compared with the 1935-39 average, the cost of goods purchased by the wage earning group is 109.4 per cent of which .5 per cent is the result of national defense and excise taxes. The full effect of the taxes has not been felt, she said.

It was pointed out that no comparison could be made between the increased cost of living and the increased average hourly earnings because of the fact that the increased average hourly earnings resulted primarily from increased employment and not from wage increases.

Wage increases went into effect in September in the woolen and worsted goods, cotton goods, petroleum refining, glass, slaughtering and meat packing, and silk and rayon industries.

MURRAY CALLS CIO PARLEY TO STEM ANTI-LABOR BILLS

Congress Hears Danger Warning In Tory Plans

(See Stories Page Three)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29—Moving quickly after the close of its historic Fourth Constitutional Convention, the CIO acted this week to defeat the flood of anti-labor bills now simmering on Capitol Hill:

1. President Philip Murray called on all CIO affiliates to send representatives to a legislative conference in Washington on Monday, Dec. 1 "to discuss and take whatever action may be necessary regarding anti-strike legislation."

2. Calling for Congress to convene immediately a conference of government, labor and industrial leaders to work out voluntary acceptance of a plan for peaceful settlement of industrial disputes, President Murray warned that "current anti-labor legislation at this time endangers the national defense program" and can "only serve to arouse resentment."

3. Representatives from a number of CIO affiliates came to Washington to lobby the members of Congress. Their efforts were largely responsible for defeat of the Gore wage-freezing amendment by a substantial vote.

4. Secretary James B. Carey, appearing before the House Labor Committee and the Senate Judiciary Committee, reiterated CIO's objections to anti-strike and wage-freezing legislation, warning that to rob labor of its basic rights "will destroy the essence of the democracy we seek to defend."

Expose Long Delay In Bomber Program

DETROIT, Nov. 29—The CIO United Automobile Workers resumed its criticism this week of "business as usual" policies of the nation's huge auto producers, with UAW Secretary-Treasurer George Addes accusing the industrial barons of "inexcusable delays" in producing bomber planes needed in the war against Hitler's Germany.

Addes said that the Ford Motor Co., operating under union shop contract with the CIO union, "appears to be the only one in the Detroit area that is really getting things done in spite of War Dept. interference by periodical changes in design."

Ford's "colossal achievement" in preparing for production at its huge new Ypsilanti factory was the only bright spot in a survey released by Addes, who is the UAW's defense industry coordinator.

REPORTS OF WORKERS

He said his information came from reports of skilled workers employed in the manufacture of bomber parts. The men are affiliated with the union's Detroit Tool & Die Council, which a few months ago revealed that tool and die machines in the Detroit area are used only 35.54% of available time.

"The underlying cause of the inexcusable delay in bomber production is the unwillingness of auto manufacturers to engage in defense production so long as they were permitted by the government to continue the more profitable business of auto production," Addes charged.

He cited four companies which have held government contracts for some time but are producing only a "dribble"—if that much—of bombers and bomber parts. The companies named are Briggs, Murray, Chrysler and Hudson.

Greetings From China

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29—CIO President Murray today received the following cablegram from the Chinese Association of Labor in Chunking, China:

"Congratulations upon the success of your convention.

"Chinese laborers are deeply gratified and encouraged by your resolution to extend further aid to China. It signifies acceptance by American and Chinese labor of responsibility to crush aggressors and their cooperation in building a foundation for world peace."

Win Poll, 2-1

Los Angeles, California, Nov. 29—Collective bargaining rights were won here by the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing and Allied Workers of America, CIO at the Royal Packing plant here by a Labor Board vote of 196 to 112.

Get Dime Raise

Cleveland, O.—Local 735 of the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers this week announced a 10-cent hourly wage raise for all employes of the Cleveland Sheet Metal & Engineering Co., retroactive to Sept. 1.

OLDEST DELEGATE: T. J. (Two-Gun) Smith, veteran member of the United Mine Workers in Tennessee, takes over the chair at the CIO convention from an old friend—President Murray. Smith presided as delegates lauded Murray's work and passed a resolution of commendation for his year's record as head of the CIO.

Ask Councils Join Fight On Bills

Washington, Nov. 29—An emergency appeal to all state, city and county CIO groups to join the fight against anti-labor legislation in Congress was sent out this week by John Brophy, director of industrial union councils.

Calling attention to the letter mailed by Pres. Murray to all affiliates about the anti-labor drive, Brophy said:

"I am writing to underscore Pres. Murray's request and to add my own exhortation that the action requested by Pres. Murray be taken without delay and carried out with energy.

"The emergency with which organized labor is confronted at this juncture is of the gravest nature. It must be met with the utmost resolution and with swift and vigorous action."

Brophy asked each council to communicate with the Congressmen from its state and reiterate opposition to the bills analyzed in Pres. Murray's statement to the CIO affiliates.

Win Election

Cleveland, O.—The CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers this week won a Labor Board election at the two plants of American Monorail Co. here, by a 3 to 1 majority.

CIO Raps FBI For Attacks On Civil Rights

DETROIT, Nov. 29—The Fourth CIO convention pledged anew its devotion to fundamental civil liberties, but warned against the possibilities of the Federal Bureau of Investigation "becoming a political police similar to the Nazi Gestapo.

"The CIO hereby pledges itself to the maintenance and extension of our democratic rights and liberties, and condemns the invasion of the civil liberties on any part of the American people by private individuals or by any officials of state, local or federal governments," the resolution declared.

The convention statement urged extension of the Justice Dept.'s Civil Rights Unit to provide real enforcement of the U. S. Civil Rights Statutes, adding:

"There can be no toleration of any political police such as the FBI in this country similar to the Nazi Gestapo or any toleration of any agencies of the government, including the FBI, violating the law, and we protest against the use of the FBI to oppress or harass any labor organization in the pursuit of their legitimate activities."

ASK REAL PROBE

Urging investigation by the government police agency of the "true un-American organizations" which are carrying on pro-Hitler activities in the United States, the statement concluded:

"We call to the attention of the country the fact that the FBI has not given its wholehearted and full support to the efforts of the people to unearth, expose and stamp out all appeasement and pro-Hitler activities in this country. That is the task which must be performed if our civil liberties are to be protected."

TELLS OF SEIZURE

Delegate Lewis Allan Berne, head of the Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists & Technicians, told how he had been seized by FBI agents on his return to New York from a recent CIO productions conference in Washington and questioned for four hours about the CIO, the FAECT and himself.

Charging that it would be "farcical . . . if it wasn't a serious danger," Berne said he had "subsequently discovered that other members of the CIO, including officials of unions, have been similarly subjected to this type of Gestapo inquisition."

PROBLEMS IN SOUTH

Paul Christopher, secretary of the Tennessee Industrial Union Council, described the urgent need for protection of civil liberties in the south, and for government action against those who attemp to rob the people of their basic rights.

An expanded Civil Liberties Unit in the Justice Dept. is necessary "if we're going to have democracy in the United States," Christopher warned the convention.

"We talk about democracy abroad, we talk about restoring the rights of people where they have been trampled under. Well, the same thing is happening down in our country, and we think this resolution can go a long way towards giving us more of the democracy we are talking about in the South."

OTHER RESOLUTIONS

In a series of other civil rights resolutions passed earlier in the convention the CIO:

1. "Expressed its abhorrence of lynching" and endorsed "the principles of federal anti-lynching legislation," calling upon the country to seek its passage.

2. Condemned wiretapping, particularly by the Dept. of Justice, as a violation of constitutional rights and stated its opposition to all legislation condoning the practice.

3. Warned that restriction of the rights of aliens is a form of attack upon everybody's civil rights and urged government action to expedite the naturalization of aliens to show the world that "in contrast to Fascism, we are a land where the enjoyment of natural privileges is not limited by accident of birth but freely granted to all who are ready and able to assume the duties of citizenship."

VISITOR: Albert Monk, president of the Australian Council of Trade Unions, was a visitor to the CIO conclave in Detroit. He conferred with a number of the union leaders attending the sessions and described conditions in the "down-under" Dominion.

Federal Union Drive Wins Full CIO Aid

DETROIT, Nov. 29—Full support for an extensive organizing drive among the 1,400,000 Federal employes was unanimously voted by the history-making Fourth Constitutional Convention of the CIO, which devoted considerable attention to problems of Government workers.

The organizing resolution was submitted by the United Federal Workers of America and passed after speeches in its support by R. J. Thomas, president of UAW-CIO; Allan S. Haywood, Organizing Director; Michael Widman, Assistant Organizing Director, and Eleanor Nelson, National Secretary-Treasurer of the UFWA.

Miss Nelson, emphasizing the support of the UFWA for President Roosevelt's foreign policy and the all-out national defense resolution passed by the convention, declared that only through organization could Federal employes make their maximum contribution to the struggle against Hitlerism.

President Thomas told the convention that there was no more important step toward assuring success of the defense program and protecting the rights of industrial workers than the complete organization of Government employes. He urged that Federal workers "be given the benefit of a major organization drive."

CRITICIZES SEC. PERKINS

Director Haywood, who is also Administrator of the UFWA, cited the example of the Helen Miller case in the Department of Labor as one reason why Government employes need CIO organization. He criticized Secretary Perkins for dismissing the UFWA member and taking a position against collective bargaining.

"The Federal workers," said Haywood, "must be organized, they must have the right to organize, and the Government agencies must be required to bargain collectively with them. This idea of adopting inquisition and firing people without charges or proper trial before their Unions must be stopped."

U. S. BIGGEST EMPLOYER

The organizing resolution stated that whereas "the United States Government in conducting its defense program has become one of the largest employers in the Nation" the CIO "endorses an extensive organizing drive among the employes of the Federal Government, and urged the cooperation of all of its affiliates be given to the United Federal Workers in conducting such a drive."

By passing strong resolutions for pay raises and overtime pay for Federal workers, the CIO convention put teeth in the UF WA legislative program which features H. R. 5730, the Federal Workers Pay Raise Act, and H. R. 5369, the Federal Workers Overtime Act.

RAP DIES GROUP

The Dies Committee was branded "a notorious enemy of the labor movement and of all persons genuinely opposed to Fascism."

The resolution protested "the adoption by groups in the Federal Government of the anti-labor un-American standards of the Dies Committee as an attack on the entire labor movement" and asked the national CIO "to cooperate with the United Federal Workers and the FAECT in presenting this matter to the Secretaries of War, Navy, Labor, the Attorney General and the President of the United States."

Mourn Loss of Rose Stein, Noted Labor Writer

Washington, Nov. 29—Rose Stein's many friends in the CIO were deeply grieved to learn of her death this week following a brief illness.

Miss Stein, a free lance writer and research worker, came from Pittsburgh, Pa., where she was active for a number of years in promoting workers' education and the civil rights of workers in Western Pennsylvania.

WELL KNOWN FIGURE

She was well known to many CIO members among the miners and workers in the steel, aluminum and glass industries who attended the Workers School in Pittsburgh which she directed for several years.

John Brophy, national director of CIO Industrial Union Councils, who was an old friend of Miss Stein's, expressed great sorrow at her untimely death which cut short her faithful service to labor.

"For more than a decade," he said, "this little Jewish woman worked persistently under tremendous handicaps to advance the cause of labor. She was held in high regard by both trade unionists and liberals of all faiths with whom she worked in her various activities to promote the interests of labor."

Father Carl P. Hensler, chaplain at Seaton Hill College in Greensburg, once said, Brophy recalled, "Thank God for people like Rose Stein."

J. Warren Madden, former chairman of the National Labor Relations Board and now a Federal judge, told of Miss Stein's contribution to workers' education at a funeral service held here attended by a few friends in government and CIO circles.

She was buried in the Workmen's Circle Cemetery on the outskirts of Washington.

AT FORD PLANT: Somebody must have told a pretty good joke as the photographer snapped this picture in the dining room of the Ford Motor Co. in Dearborn, Mich. It brought big grins to the faces of President Murray (right); Harry Bennett, personnel director for Ford (center) and President R. J. Thomas of the Auto Workers Union. A little earlier Murray had conferred for the first time with Henry Ford.

Ladies Offer Support to CIO Program

Detroit, Nov. 29—Mrs. Faye Stephenson, newly elected president of Women's Auxiliaries, who was presented to the delegates of the CIO Convetion by Pres. Philip Murray, pledged full support to the program of the CIO and thanked the convention for going on record in favor of backing the Auxiliaries' work.

"The women today no longer feel that the only place they have is in a strike," she said. "In a defense program such as you have adopted here, we wives of the workers have pledged the support of all-out aid to the defense program, aid to our national policy and aid to the policy of the CIO."

CIO Mobilizes To Defeat Tory Measures

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, Nov. 27—With the historic Detroit convention less than a week behind it, the full force of the CIO was mobilized here this week to beat back the heaviest Congressional assault yet made on labor's right to live and to play it's part in the defense of democracy.

Employing familiar Hitler tactics of encirclement, Congressional reactionaries, led by the polltaxers and with strong undercover support from the appeasement bloc, opened a series of simultaneous drives on three fronts—with three major anti-labor bills in the House and two in the Senate.

Of these bills, the Norton and Vinson anti-strike measures in the House and the Connally bill in the Senate were the most active threats as The CIO NEWS went to press. Others were brewing almost hourly, with nearly all the more articulate labor-haters in Congress trotting out pet measures as fast as the daily newspapers could give them space.

CALLS CONFERENCE

CIO forces fought back vigorously, following a call first sounded by President Murray at the convention where he urged the unions to send representatives to Washington immediately after adjournment and a second call for a full-dress CIO legislative conference for Monday, Dec. 1.

At the same time, testimony presented in Murray's name by Secretary James B. Carey before House and Senate committees put CIO on record as unalterably opposed to any measure that would restrict labor's rights and hence cripple labor's effort in the defense program.

GORE BILL LICKED

An early round in the campaign went to the CIO with the defeat in the House of the Gore bill, designed to freeze wages by imposing arbitrary pay ceilings on the price control bill. This achievement, won after two days of intensive work by a large CIO delegation on Capitol hill, did not wind up the price control situation, however, since the original bill itself remained in considerable danger of burial.

President Murray, writing to all Congressmen early in the week, warned emphatically that a vote for the Gore bill "must be viewed as an anti-labor action" and at the same time urged them to pass an effective price control bill as "essential to the welfare of the nation."

WIDESPREAD RESPONSE

On the anti-strike bill front, President Murray's call for a meeting of representatives from labor, government and industry to work out a sensible and democratic solution of the problem of maintaining full production received a widespread favorable response throughout the nation. The plan was announced in a letter to CIO affiliates which said in part:

"The CIO, at its recent convention demonstrated that the workers of the nation are in the forefront in battling for the successful prosecution of our national defense program. This goal can be obtained only through the voluntary acceptance by labor of mediation and peaceful solution of industrial disputes."

The full CIO legislative conference, called as the dangers of strike restrictive and other anti-labor legislation grew sharper almost hourly, was set "to discuss and take whatever action may be necessary regarding anti-strike legislation."

Washington observers remembered that a similar CIO meeting called last July was followed by the defeat of the anti-labor May and Connally amendments then before the House, and noted also that the Connally bill now offered in the Senate was identical in meaning and content to the one defeated at that time.

Quaker Oats In 2nd Pact

Buffalo, N. Y., Nov. 29—Second CIO agreement with a Quaker Oats plant was signed here today between the management of the Depew, N. Y., plant and the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing and Allied Workers of America, CIO.

Pay raises of 10 cents per hour on the minimum rates were won, setting the minimums at 45c for women and 60c for men. General pay raises provide for increases of seven cents per hour for women and eight cents for men.

Vacations of one week up to three weeks, depending on length of service are included as well as good provisions on seniority and shop steward and grievance settlement.

In September UCAPAWA signed up the Des Moines, Iowa, plant of Quaker Oats.

Vote For CIO

New York, Nov. 29—Stock and shipping employes of Baker & Taylor, leading wholesale booksellers, voted 116 to 7 for the Book and Magazine Guild as their chosen collective bargaining agent in a recent Labor Board election. The Guild is an affiliate of the United Office & Professional Workers.

King, Ramsey, Conner Gain Freedom From Jail

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 29—Widespread protests of labor against the state for keeping three maritime unionists—Earl King, E. G. Ramsay and Frank J. Conner—in prison, were finally heeded this week by the California Parole Board, which ordered the men released on parole. For more than five years, trade unions throughout the country have kept up a persistent fight to free King, Ramsay and Conner.

Leo Huberman, publicity director for the Defense Committee working to secure the release of the men from San Quentin prison, told the CIO convention last week of the anti-labor conspiracy which sent the men to prison and gave the highlights of the trial, showing the prejudice aroused against them.

Governor Culbert L. Olson of California, had admitted, Huberman said, that the men had been convicted on conflicting and flimsy evidence, but had taken no action to pardon them.

NAMED COMMITTEE

At the close of the CIO convention last week, Pres. Murray appointed a committee of eight CIO union leaders to visit the Governor.

They were: Jim Thimmes, Steel Workers Organizing Committee, chairman; Donald Maguire, Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union; Jack Montgomery, United Auto Workers; Cy Perkins, United Rubber Workers; George Wilson, president, and Mervyn Rathbone, secretary, both of the San Francisco CIO Council; Morris Zusman, Amalgamated Clothing Workers, and Joe Selly, president, American Communications Association.

Board Hears Captive Mine Arguments

Washington, Nov. 29—Negotiations on the question of a Union shop for 53,000 captive coal miners continued this week in New York, following the end of the one-week shutdown on Nov. 22.

The captive miners went back to their jobs when the United Mine Workers National Policy Committee ratified Pres. John L. Lewis' acceptance of a proposal for a three-man board to make a final settlement of the dispute. Appointed by Pres. Roosevelt to the board were John R. Steelman, on leave as director of the U. S. Conciliation Service, representing the public; UMW Pres. Lewis, representing labor; and Ben Fairless, head of U. S. Steel, as employers' representative.

The Union's acceptance of the proposal was contained in a letter made public at the White House while the Policy Committee was meeting a few blocks away at UMW headquarters.

LEWIS' COMMENT

"This arrangement provides for an honest determination of the issue," Lewis said. "It is a rather sad commentary that we have to

Murray Guidance Praised

DETROIT, Nov. 29—A paean of praise accompanied Philip Murray's re-election as president of the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

Sec.Treas. Thomas Kennedy of the United Mine Workers made the nomination and after reviewing Murray's long record of service to organized labor, declared:

"This man is a man of conviction. He has the courage to give voice to those convictions. He has outlined for this great organization a course of procedure during the past year that has borne fruit, as attested to by the great increase in membership and in service and in results to those dependent upon and members of this great institution.

"With all of it, my friends, his work has been characterized by that humble, almost self-effacing manner and way that has been his attitude throughout his entire life.

"SPLENDID TRAITS"

"Yet this man knows that with all of these splendid traits of leadership, neither he nor any other man can hope to make progress unless he has the united support of those who believe in and who are members of these great organizations affiliated with the CIO.

"With that as a test, I believe you will agree with me that his leadership has commanded the united support and cooperation of every organization in the CIO."

Vice-Pres. Frank Rosenblum, in seconding the nomination, told the delegates that "the achievements of the CIO in the past year under the wise and temperate guidance of Philip Murray have more than justified our faith."

Murray was described by Vice-Pres. R. J. Thomas as a "Christ-like character in his tolerance and his love for his fellow-men, yet he hates and fights and vanquishes the oppressors of the people."

The CIO leader's nomination was also seconded by Vice-Presidents Dalrymple, Curran, Robinson and Rieve.

CIO Board Hails Miners' Decision

DETROIT, Nov. 29—Following is the text of the message sent to President John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers by the CIO Executive Board on Nov. 22, following announcement of the conclusion of the captive mine shutdown and the submission of the union shop dispute to a three-man board:

"The Executive Board of the CIO conveys its appreciation to the United Mine Workers of America and its Policy Committee for the splendid contribution which it has made to the nation in accepting arbitration of its captive coal mine dispute in the effort to arrive at a satisfactory solution to this problem.

"We feel certain that the merits of the UMW's case assure a well-earned victory."

Don't Shackle Labor

"Labor has never been faced with such a serious threat to its very existence as that which now confronts us as a result of the proposed anti-labor legislation," says CIO President Philip Murray.

This threat to labor also endangers the defense program, he points out. At a time when the enthusiasm of American labor for all-out production to defeat Hitlerism is reaching new heights, as shown by the recent CIO convention, it would be sheer treachery to pass labor-shackling legislation that can only provoke resentment and encourage industrial disputes.

The position of the CIO is constructive, patriotic and crystal-clear. It was expressed in a unanimously adopted resolution at the Detroit convention, which made the following points:

(1) The working people are in the forefront of the battle against Hitlerism, to preserve democracy and labor's rights.

(2) It is "business as usual" employers and Nazi appeasers who are seeking to "inject the poison of Hitlerism into our democratic society" through repression of labor's rights, while they insist on more and more war profits.

(3) The CIO will do everything possible to cooperate for maximum production for national defense. It will leave no stone unturned to adjust labor disputes through collective bargaining and through utilizing available mediation facilities.

(4) Labor's participation in the formulation and administration of the nation's policies must be accepted in good faith, and the right of labor to live must not be impaired.

(5) "Any legislative anti-labor measure constitutes aid to Hitler by destroying American morale and serving to weaken the national effort to defeat Nazism."

In pursuance of this policy, President Murray has proposed a national conference of representatives of labor, industry and government looking to voluntary acceptance of a plan to assure peaceful adjustment of industrial disputes and maximum production.

In the meanwhile, however, the threatening situation in Congress calls for mobilization of the whole CIO, through the legislative conference convened in Washington and through action by every affiliate and every member throughout the country.

Labor's voice must be heard at once in Congress, through resolutions, wires and personal contact. Let your Congressmen and Senators hear from you without delay.

Workers In Uniform

In the recent past we have witnessed many attempts to create anti-labor sentiment among the young men drafted into the armed forces. Such vicious propaganda would turn brother against brother, since most of the men in uniform are workers themselves or from the families of farm or industrial workers.

No organization in the country is more concerned for the welfare of the men in the army than is the CIO. Its recent convention in Detroit emphasized the close bonds of solidarity that should unite the workers in the factories with the workers in uniform.

The CIO from the first has advocated and lobbied for more adequate pay for soldiers. The convention went on record emphatically to work for increases in base pay to $60 a month.

It also adopted a comprehensive program for the greater welfare of the armed forces in many other respects.

"As trade unionists," the CIO delegates declared, "we understand that our army, along with the armies of other nations fighting Fascism, is our only guarantee that we will preserve our rights as trade unionists."

Just as the civilian workers look to the army for such protection, so should the men in uniform expect labor to defend democracy on the home front and to preserve decent conditions for them to return to.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

THE delegates to the recent CIO convention began outproducing Hitler from the moment they hit Detroit. It was the hardest-working three-shift, continuous operation, conveyor-system, mass-production convention ever to be held.

Between the pre-convention executive board meeting on Sunday and the post-convention board meeting on the following Saturday, there was hardly a pause in convention business.

When the convention itself was not in session, there were committee meetings and two or three special conferences each evening. The only time for caucusing or whoopee was in the few hours left for sleep.

The one expedition of the convention was fully in keeping with the spirit of the convention. It was to the Ford plant, where the delegates watched some more out-producing of Hitler by CIO members.

To see a hunk of steel go in at one end of the huge Ford plant and emerge later at the other end as a finished car was quite a sight. As the conveyor carried the parts on their non-stop journey, every movement of the machinery and every action of the workers was directed and coordinated to one single end, the production of the finished product.

At the CIO convention, one almost had a similar feeling. There was hardly a report, a resolution, a speech or a vote that did not relate to the keynote issue of the fight against Hitlerism.

The discussion might start with an organizing campaign, the union shop, wage demands, civil liberties, legislation or any one of a dozen other subjects. But before it was over, in one way or another, it was fitted into the main convention pattern and program of defending democracy against foreign and domestic Hitlerism.

The convention was the first opportunity for a clear-cut national expression by the CIO on the overwhelming issues of the spreading world war. And the delegates acted as if they were making up for lost time, determined to place the CIO at once in the lead, and with an almost desperate sense of urgency.

The strength of the CIO has always been in its singleness of purpose. It broke away from the crazy-quilt craft unionism of the AFL to concentrate all its energies on the single purpose of organizing the unorganized. It organized them into single industrial unions, each backed by the weight of all.

The Detroit convention was above all a single-purpose convention. The organization of the South, the oil drive and other union campaigns were major issues. But their purpose again and again was stated to be, not only the improvement of wage standards, but also the strengthening of democracy and the workers' morale for national defense and more aid to the nations fighting Hitler.

Civil liberties were defended and all forms of racial and national discrimination were denounced with all the greater vigor because of the menace of Hitlerism.

The convention pledged a strong fight against all labor-shackling legislation, both to preserve American democratic rights against domestic Hitlers and to keep labor free for the maximum voluntary effort for all-out production.

Profiteering and the selfish obstructions of dollar-a-year men were denounced as the acts of fifth-columnists and Quislings. Labor representation in the government and defense administration was demanded to give voice and power to the people most devoted to democratic defense.

The many tributes paid to President Philip Murray and the demonstrations in his honor were tributes to the man himself and to the splendid success of his leadership in carrying forward the organizing work so well begun by his predecessor, John L. Lewis.

They were also tributes to his leadership in expressing and giving direction to the overwhelming sentiment of the Detroit convention for all-out effort against the world menace of Hitlerism.

More than that, they were a tribute to the author of the Murray industry council plan. This plan, initiated more than a year ago, includes the outline in principle of nearly every action voted by the Detroit convention.

The convention met on the day when the captive coal mine strike became effective. It adjourned on the day agreement was reached to end it. All through the convention the anti-labor press was doing its hysterical worst against the union and the CIO. But it failed to disconcert or divide the convention.

The miners' reasonable demands won unanimous support from the convention, which recognized fair treatment for labor as a prime requisite for successful national defense.

CIO's Opposition To Anti-Labor Bills Told House By Carey

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28—CIO's fi rm opposition to repressive laws designed to wipe out labor's basic right to organize, bargain collectively and take strike action when necessary was expressed before the House Labor Committee and the Senate Judiciary Committee by James B. Carey, CIO secretary.

At the same time, Carey, speaking in President Philip Murray's name and for the entire CIO, offered a practical plan for working out a solution to labor-management disputes that might threaten full production of defense goods and weapons.

This plan, announced by President Murray in a circular letter to CIO affiliates, calls on President Roosevelt to convene an immediate conference of labor, management and government to seek voluntary means of adjusting their relationships. It was designed, in Murray's words, to "assure the peaceful solution of industrial disputes and guarantee a maximum production for our national defense program."

ANTI-UNION BILLS

Carey's testimony in the House Labor Committee took up the Norton bill (HR 6075) and the Vinson bill (HR 4139), two of the major anti-union measures now being readied for a quick trip through the floor of the House and an early vote, according to reactionary plans in Congress. Summarizing CIO objections to both measures, Carey declared:

"The Norton bill and the Vinson bill are both designed to restrict and hence to destroy the right to take strike action. They both authorize the Federal government to use injunctions against unions, thus setting aside the Norris LaGuardia act.

"They would both use the full armed force of the U. S. in any industrial dispute. They would put workers under severe criminal penalties for exercising their basic right to take strike action, regardless of the means by which hostile employers might provoke the strike."

Cites Resolution

Carey cited the CIO convention resolution on strikes and national defense as the best proof of CIO's anxiety to continue full production for the defeat of Hitler, pointing out that the CIO had stated its purpose of using all voluntary means of mediation and conciliation in every dispute in which it was involved.

"Note that this resolution calls for the full and voluntary cooperation of labor, government and industry toward the solution of problems of labor relations," Carey said.

"Too much stress cannot be laid on the voluntary nature of this cooperation. In fact, the word 'voluntary' expresses the whole meaning of democratic, free labor relationships. The meaning of collective bargaining is comprised in its voluntary nature.

"Once the element of compulsion is introduced, collective bargaining in its true sense ceases to exist. The relationship ceases to be one of bargaining; it becomes one of compulsion."

National Unity

The CIO testimony before both House and Senate Committees made a strong point of the need for national unity during the crisis presented by Hitlerism. Appearing before the Senate judiciary group on the Connally bill, which provides for government seizure of plants and freezing of wages and other conditions during disputes, with the plants and the profits going back to the owner after the union is smashed, Carey said:

"The need for national unity was never greater. You cannot have national unity if you put a great section of our population under a repressive law that robs it of its right to organize and bargain collectively. You cannot have the full production needed for the defense of our country by making slave labor of American workers.

"The national emergency requires full production. Full production can only be achieved through the free, voluntary effort of the workers who make the weapons and the goods needed for our country's security."

Hitler Methods

Answering questions in the Senate committee, Carey charged that the Connally bill would "do the same job in America that Hitler has done in Europe—freeze wages and working conditions by destroying unions." America, if it remains a democracy, can outproduce anything Hitler may conquer, he added —something that cannot be done under conditions of slavery.

Concluding his testimony before the House Labor group, Carey urged immediate adoption of the proposal of Pres. Murray for a three - way conference to settle problems arising from labor-management relations.

"Out of this meeting, we believe, can come a sound and acceptable proposal for the mediation of all disputes that might lead to interruptions in defense production," he said.

The fact that such a proposal will start with the advance of voluntary acceptance by all three sides —labor, government and management—is a powerful argument for its success."

Anti-Labor Bills Aid Hitler, CIO Analysis Shows

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28—CIO analysis of the major anti-labor bills now being rushed through Congressional committees in the hope of a quick vote on the House and Senate floor was presented to CIO representatives here in summarized form by Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel. Four major bills were discussed, the Norton bill (HR 6075), the Vinson bill (HR 4139), the Connally bill (S 2054) and the Bridges bill (S 2042).

"The Norton, Vinson, Connally and Bridges bills seek to shackle labor, permit employers to run wild with mounting profits, and will serve only to aggravate and increase industrial disputes," the analysis said.

"The CIO is in the forefront in prosecuting the national defense program. We appreciate that this entails complete and full resort to the mediation facilities established by the government in the effort to adjust all industrial disputes in a peaceful manner.

"Compulsion through legislation cannot and will not solve industrial relations problems. To the contrary, it can only serve to weaken the national unity behind President Roosevelt's call for all-out effort in support of our nation's policies."

CIO POLICY

Pressman's memorandum cited convention action both in support of the struggle against Hitlerism and in pledging to use all mediation adjustment of disputes by peaceful means of collective bargaining, wherever possible.

"Any attempt to impose compulsory arbitration or the freezing of wage conditions or other terms or conditions of employment will not aid our industrial relations problem but will aggravate the situation. The voluntary acceptance of peaceful mediation by the millions of American workers will go much further toward the solution of our problems than any attempt to repress or harrass labor."

BILLS ANALYZED

Each of the bills analyzed would have this effect of producing more rather than less industrial tension, Pressman pointed out. Thus, the Norton and Vinson bills would allow the government to take injunction action in any industrial dispute, breaking down the anti-injunction act and subjecting workers to severe criminal penalties for exercising their rights as union members.

The Connally bill, which calls for plant seizure and freezing of wages and other conditions of work, would subject workers to governmental bureaucracy without any attempt to get at the real cause of the dispute. In addition, it would mean that the government was acting as a union-breaking agency, since the plants would be returned to the owners with profits intact after the seizure period was over.

The Bridges bill would impose so many restrictions on unions "as to actually eliminate a free trade union movement," the CIO memo said, in citing numerous red tape provisions that would require unions under threat of sharp criminal penalties to file detailed statements of their finances, their plans of action, and similar information that could be used to the advantage of the employers.

Summarizing the Norton and Vinson bills, the CIO analysis declared: "The Norton and Vinson bills establish the legislative principle of compulsory abrogation of the right to strike. This creates economic slavery for Americans. What can be done for 30 days can be enlarged for several years. Our struggle against Hitler must lose its intensity through the adoption of such Nazi concepts."

Talmadge Boasts Of Flogging

Atlanta, Ga., Nov. 29—The governor of Georgia proudly proclaimed to a public hearing this week that he had once flogged a Negro, and then sought to link himself with the Apostle Paul in justification for his action.

The governor is Eugene Talmadge, one of the most reactionary officials ever brought to prominence through the poll tax, which bars most of the common people from voting.

Talmadge boasted of his resort to violence at a hearing on petitions for parole of eight Ku Klux Klan members who were convicted in 1938 of flogging workers who had joined the CIO Textile Workers Union at a Georgia mill. During a period of a few weeks, 53 persons were kidnapped and flogged in the Atlanta area coincident with the union's organizational campaign.

Eight of the Klansmen were subsequently convicted for their illegal activity.

The Lowdown

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29 —(FP)—According to the Wall Street Journal of Nov. 27:

"Coal strike ended too quickly to harm industry much.

"Steel production loss was minor; coal tar output, a chemical essential, was bothered not at all.

"Steel makers, resigned to a closed shop in their captive mines, have resumed worrying over the scrap shortage. Latest prediction: some plants will close within the next two weeks—unless the OPM digs up scrap for them."

CIO Convention Backs Drives In South and Oil Industry

Work in South Seen An 'Outstanding Task' For CIO in Coming Year

DETROIT, Nov. 29—Organization of the South is one of the outstanding tasks facing the CIO during the coming year, CIO President Philip Murray told delegates to the CIO convention.

"I don't mind telling you," Murray declared, "that in so far as the CIO is concerned nothing is going to stand in our way of organizing the South during the current year. We have to do it; we are going to do it. Let us pledge ourselves to see that this job is done before your convention meets next year."

In furtherance of this policy, the convention adopted a resolution urging CIO officials to formulate and put into effect plans in conjunction with all interested national and internatinola Unions designed to bring about organization of all Southern workers into unions of the CIO."

DESCRIBE PROBLEMS

In the discussion on southern organizing from the floor, several delegates from Unions active in the South spoke on the problems to be faced in this drive and the progress made so far.

The work done by the Textile Workers Union in the South during the last four or five years, was described by Delegate George Baldanzi. "As a result of our constant push forward," he stated, "we have raised the wages of those workers considerably, but there is a tremendous task to be accomplished there, and it is going to require a well coordinated campaign by every international organization connected with the CIO."

EFFECT ON POLL TAX

Noel Beddow, of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee in Birmingham, Ala., told the delegates that since many of the Southern workers were kept from voting by poll-tax requirements, there were a lot of representatives from the South in Congress that "we are not proud of."

Among them, he said, was Eugene Cox, "a little nincompoop down in Georgia elected from a district in which there are very few people that till the land or work in the factories that have the right to vote."

Delegate Fred C. Pieper from the Louisiana Industrial Union Council said that the South is a "frontier" where hundreds of thousands of workers look to the CIO for help.

ASK AID FOR STRIKE

Lewis Merrill, president of the United Office & Professional Workers described some of the brutal vigilante activity which has taken place in southern regions, and Milton Murray, newly elected president of the American Newspaper Guild, told of the 11 weeks' strike against a Scripps-Howard paper in Birmingham, and asked the cooperation of other CIO Unions in Birmingham and other cities where the Guild is organizing.

The sorry role played by the AFL in its feeble attempts to organize the South was mentioned by Paul Christopher, regional director in Tennessee. "As frequently as the years rolled around," Christopher recalled, the AFL used to say, "We are going to organize the South," but it was never done.

John Schulter, delegate from the Alabama Council, urged international Unions to send organizers into the South to aid in a task that is "a matter of fundamental importance to every Union in this country."

Farm, Labor Mutual Aid Pledged

Detroit, Nov. 29—Recognition of the common interests of farmers and organized labor and cooperation of the two groups in support of these interests was urged in speeches and in action taken by the CIO national convention.

The resolution on the farm program passed by the delegates declared that "the CIO seeks to cooperate with all progressive farm groups and organizations to the end that the farms of the United States and organized labor may render one another mutual support in their efforts to better their lot."

CAREY, PATTON ON RADIO

In a radio program broadcast the evening of November 18 over a national hookup, CIO Secretary James B. Carey and James C. Patton, president of the Farmers Educational and Cooperative Union of America, exchanged greetings from their respective conventions. The Farmers Union was meeting in convention at Topeka, Kansas, at the same time the CIO convention was in session at Detroit.

"The working farmers of America — whether we are owners, tenants, sharecroppers, or farm laborers," Patton said, "want industrial workers to know that the interest of working farmers and of industrial workers is a common one. Inescapably we are dependent upon each other.

"The forces now threatening our institutions and our chosen way of life deepen our awareness of this mutual interdependence."

CAREY'S REPLY

In his speech in reply, Secretary Carey said: "So far as I know this is the first time in the history of organized labor that a national farm organization has formally and publicly voiced sympathetic understanding of labor's problems and their relationship to agriculture, and has offered to make common cause with labor in striving to solve our mutual problems."

Declaring that the CIO has long called for a conference of labor, form and government representatives to discuss basic problems, Carey said "the CIO welcomes this move by the working farmers and will follow its words of welcome with action."

arbitrate a decision of a so-called mediation commission."

He added that "perhaps one great advantage that will come to labor and the country out of this controversy will be the passing of Mr. (William H.) Davis' horse-trading mediation board. The sinister intrigue of Davis has been responsible for misleading the country and confusing public thought."

CONTINUOUS PRODUCTION

"With the mines returning to work," Lewis pointed out, "and the controversy well on the road to a just settlement, the country can feel reassured as to its supply of coal for national defense and all domestic usage.

"With the continuation of production assured until April 1, 1943, under collective bargaining contracts in the industry, the coal industry will offer an object lesson to all other important industries."

Knight, Smith Pledge Major Progress for '42 In Petroleum Campaign

DETROIT, Nov. 29—Organization of the nation's petroleum industry under an arrangement announced by Pres. Philip Murray a few weeks ago, received enthusiastic and unanimous support from the fourth CIO convention here.

Pointing out that the petroleum industry "remains the only major industry not properly and effectively organized," the convention called on all CIO affiliates to lend "all possible assistance and cooperation in this campaign to bring industrial democracy to the 500,000 employes of the petroleum industry."

Announcement of the campaign, which will be under the direction of Edwin S. Smith, former NLRB member, was made in Pittsburgh late in October by Murray and Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers Intl. Union.

Stressing the importance of the organization drive to the entire CIO, Knight told the convention delegates that the industry represents 17 billion dollars of capital—nine billion in the Standard Oil interests alone.

"The national CIO has long been in combat with company unionism," he said, and "the remaining stronghold of company unionism in the United States is the oil industry.

"The mine workers, as we all know, have been strong enough to remove this company unionism and menace from their ranks, but the Rockefeller interests have crammed it down the throats of the oil workers. If and when they are properly organized through the help of the CIO, the oil workers can disgorge this unpalatable morsel."

The oil organizing drive, Pres. Knight continued, ties in closely with the CIO's projected union campaign in the South, for oil is the dominant industry in half a dozen southern and southwestern states—Texas, New Mexico, Arkansas, Mississippi, Louisiana and others.

OIL TO HITLER

While the CIO is solidly behind the national defense program and the world-wide effort to defeat Hitler, American oil interests—according to recent newspaper stories—have somehow supplied a million barrels of highgrade oil to the Nazi war machine, Knight declared, adding: "The oil workers in this nation do not like that sort of thing."

Smith, introduced by Pres. Murray to the delegates, predicted success in the oil organizing campaign and described it as one more episode in the perpetual battle "for the preservation and the spread of our American democratic institutions."

There may be glamor in the oil industry, Smith declared, and in the change wrought in American life by the introduction of the gas engine, but only sentimentalists can perceive "glamour in the paternalism of the company unionism of the oil industry."

"We propose," the union official continued, "by means of this organizing campaign to de-glamourize oil. We propose to bring the oil industry out of the realms of romance and down to the ground of solid democratic dealing with the organized workers."

WANT REPRESENTATION

Another goal of the campaign, he said, was to assure the oil workers representation on the government's petroleum committees—now dominated by representatives of the big corporations.

"We hope, through organization of the oil workers, to democratize its contribution to national defense," Smith asserted. "We want to see representatives of the organized oil workers sitting with representatives of management and with representatives of the government in order to devise the best means of promoting the contribution of oil to national defense and the contribution of oil to those who are fighting Hitlerism."

PRAISE FROM MURRAY

After the oil organization director had finished his talk, Pres. Murray took occasion to deny newspaper charges that Smith was a "CIO man" on the NLRB. Murray said he had never met Smith socially during the latter's term on the Labor Board,

"It was always the opinion of the President of this organization that Edwin Smith rendered a distinct service to the nation and to its people and that in his decisions and in his work he always thought primarily of the law, what the law was intended for and what the members of the National Labor Relations Boaard were appointed for," the CIO leader declared.

"I know that he was a man of distinction and that he had rendered great public service. So when the time came along that the government no longer felt it needed him and an opportunity presented itself to Edwin Smith to take important positions with industry, I thought that labor ought to bid for his services, because I believed then as I do now that he was the type of man that labor needed in America."

Elber, Schafer Get Oil Posts

Washington, Nov. 29—Appointment of two regional directors for the CIO's Oil Workers Organizing Campaign was announced today by Director Edwin S. Smith.

Named West Coast regional director was Irwin Elber, while B. J. Schafer will be in charge of the southern district.

Elber is a one-time government employe who later served as field representative and national organizer for the United Federal Workers, CIO affiliate, in various sections of the country.

Schafer has served two terms as a vice-president of the Oil Workers Intl. Union, and has been an official of local unions at various times.

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

The CIO Convention in Detroit last week was a tremendous gathering. The report of organizing activities submitted for the past fiscal year showed remarkable growth of membership in the CIO. ORGANIZE THE UNORGANIZED proved again to be the big question our movement is confronted with.

A conference of all Southern representatives was held, followed by the adoption of a resolution by the Convention to make the task of organizing the South the outstanding task for the coming year. This drive will involve a number of our affiliated National and International Unions, among which is Textile, District 50 (who are conducting a nation-wide drive), Oil, Auto and Aircraft, Lumber, Rubber, etc. The Southern delegates were determined to effectuate this program—all leaving with enthusiasm determined to do the job.

CIO expects to put this machinery in motion at a very early date.

DRIVES UNDER WAY

The program to organize the Oil Industry is getting under way. Director of the drive, Edwin S. Smith, has established headquarters in Washington; already has selected some of his field representatives, and by the early part of this coming year the structure will have been completed and ready to push ahead for 1942. FAECT, simultaneously with the Oil Drive will start their drive in this industry.

The Federal Workers Organizing Drive came in for much discussion and support by the delegates.

In the white collar fields, retail and office and professional workers drives are under way.

Every organizer and regional director will be expected to be on his toes, cooperating with the National and International Unions and Organizing Committees to carry out the plans laid down, in an efficient and effective manner.

The Utility Workers Organizing Committtee are looking forward to a successful fiscal year having started off by a victory over the AFL in the Penn-Edison at Altoona, Pennsylvania of 363 to 15.

The Lumber Workers have voted for the increase in per capita in order to start, maintain and sustain a drive in that industry.

CHANGES IN PERSONNEL

The following changes have been made in regional directorships, during the last few weeks: H. C. Fremming has been appointed Regional Director for Kansas City area; E. B. Pugh has been transferred to the regional directorship for Richmond, Va.; Fullerton Fulton has been transferred to Chicago and Thomas Shane has been promoted to the directorship in Wilmington, Delaware.

Ray Thomason and Neil Beam, regional directors, have gone to work for District 50, UMWA, as well as organizers Vernon Ford, Joseph Mayo, Donald and James Mark, Jr. In addition, Powers Hapgood has taken over the duties of regional director in Indiana, replacing James Robb, who took a position with SWOC.

Walter Harris, now in charge of the Organizing Drive of the United Shoe Workers of America, will go over to District 50, UMWA, on December 16, 1941.

Michael F. Widman, Assistant Director of Organization, has accepted a position with District 50, UMWA, effective December 1.

We wish for these brothers in their new assignments every success. I know they will serve faithfully as they have done for the parent body, The CIO.

Onward with the firm resolve to make this coming fiscal year even greater than the one just ending—ORGANIZE THE UNORGANIZED!

URGES UNITY: President James G. Patton of the Farmers Educational & Cooperative Union, shown as he addressed the organization's 37th convention in Topeka, Kans. He urged greater cooperation with labor—a plea that gained quick support from CIO Secretary James B. Carey.

CIO Raps Race Bias

Detroit, Nov. 29—Racial and religious discrimination last week was severely condemned by the fourth CIO convention.

Racial and religious bias, wherever it occurs, is "contrary to the spirit and purpose of our democracy," a unanimously-passed resolution pointed out, adding:

"We call upon our national government to end discrimination in defense jobs and in the army, and upon our affiliates to use all the resources at their command to stamp out discrimination wherever it appears.

Richard Reisinger of the auto workers, and Pres. Irving Abramson of the New Jersey CIO both described instances of discrimination that had come to their attention, while John Brophy hailed as a step forward the work of Pres. Roosevelt's Fair Employment Practice Committee, of which he is an alternate member.

Pres. Murray's Reply To FDR's Letter

DETROIT, Nov. 29—Following is the text of the letter sent by President Philip Murray to President Franklin D. Roosevelt on Nov. 22, replying to the Chief Executive's message to the CIO convention. Text of the President's message appeared in the Nov. 24 issue of The CIO NEWS.

"I wish to acknowledge your letter of Nov. 15 and express the appreciation of the officers of the CIO and of the delegates to our fourth annual convention for your kind greetings and felicitions.

"The delegates to this convention, representing over 5,000,000 members in all of the basic and mass production industries, have been deeply appreciative of the heavy responsibility which rests upon labor.

"It is the workers of the nation who struggled to establish American democracy, and it is they who shall assure its preservation. For this reason the CIO has made its forthright declaration that it is dedicated to the task of doing all within its power to eliminate the menace of Hitlerism which has already destroyed democracy in so many other lands.

"National unity is of course essential today. All sections of the labor movement, management and government, must wholeheartedly unite behind our national program. The strengthening and growth of labor unions would establish the morale necessary for the attainment of this end. Greater participation by labor in the national defense and a more active participation of labor in government are essential.

"It is the sincere conviction of the CIO that with the adoption of the industry council plan would be created the national unity which all Americans are striving to obtain.

"The CIO and its millions of members stand ready to participate in the battle of production toward the end of defeating the Nazi forces. Our workers desire to produce more and more guns, tanks, planes and ships. We have expressed our desire to utilize to the utmost degree the mediation facilities of the government for the peaceful solution of industrial disputes. The industry council plan will create the type of mediation agency which would enlist and encourage the confidence of the workers.

"The CIO desires to offer its contribution and perform its obligations. We offer to the government and industry our full resources for the maximum prosecution of the national defense program in order that we may soon establish a world based upon economic security and political and religious freedom."

Report Cites Problems Facing Labor Press

DETROIT, Nov. 29—The labor press today is faced with an added responsibility in view of the crisis facing the nation, and should extend its news coverage the Committee on Press and Publicity declared in a report to the CIO convention here, made by Publicity Director Len DeCaux, chairman of the Committee.

"We believe it is incumbent upon the labor press to enlarge its view from purely trade union matters to larger issues involving the welfare of the nation as a whole," the report stated.

The committee report recommended that the CIO press "devote considerable space to popularizing the Murray Plan, to developing labor's role in the national defense program, to promoting the various CIO unions' programs for increased output of defense materials, and to fostering the growth of unity and understanding necessary for the successful consummation of the program to defeat Hitlerism."

BIG BUSINESS PRESS

Referring to the hostility of the commercial press toward the CIO, the committee pointed out that the deep and justified resentment of CIO members should be directed toward the publishers of newspapers rather than the working newspapermen, many of whom are members of the CIO American Newspapeor Guild, "who are trying to do an honest job under difficult conditions."

The report recommended that CIO bodies elect committees to confer with publishers and editors to protest misrepresentations appearing in newspapers. Attention of the delegates was called to the concentration of ownership and consolidation of newspapers which not only is restricting employment but also is influencing editorial policy.

In the section on the labor press, the report took up the question of a daily newspaper published by the CIO, recommending that the matter be referred to the national officers of the CIO for consideration.

LABOR & RADIO

Endorsing the position taken by the CIO against monopoly tendencies deriving from the ownership of radio stations by newspaper publishers, the committee warned that "such concentration of power over agencies of public opinion is a distinct danger to our democratic institutions, since, if carried forward, it would lead to the danger of censorship of news at its source."

The effort of the CIO Publicity Department to obtain regular time on the radio networks "for the expression of CIO opinion on vital issues,' was endorsed in the report and the hope expressed that "this marks the first step toward a greater radio recognition of the important role the CIO plays in our national life.

"At the same time," the report continued, "we reiterate the position taken by previous CIO conventions that the existing code of the National Association of Broadcasters is being used by certain radio stations to deprive labor of its voice on the grounds that presentation of the CIO position is a controversial matter.

Bridges' Counsel Flays Ouster Report at Hearing

Washington, Nov. 29—The report of Judge Charles Sears, special Department of Justice trial examiner, who recommended deportation of Harry Bridges, California CIO head, was bitterly attacked by the union officials' defense counsel before a four-man board of appeals of the Justice Dept.'s Immigration Service.

Using both legal and factual arguments, Richard Gladstein and Carol King, Bridges' attorneys, recommended that the recommendation for deportation to Australia be reversed by the appeals group.

Gladstein presented his argument after Albert del Guercio, government attorney, had sought to bolster up the FBI's case with a glowing description of Harry Lundberg, AFL seamen's leader, who testified against Bridges.

"If this Board accept the word of Lundberg, it would be accepting the word of Bridges' worst enemy," Gladstein maintained. "He had the motive, the design and the moral opportunity to lie against Bridges. And he did."

The defense counsel pointed out that the government's case against Bridges rested heavily on testimony of Lundberg and of James O'Neil, former CIO publicity man in San Francisco.

At the hearings last spring the FBI maintained that they had been told in private by O'Neil that he had seen Bridges pasting dues stamps in a Communist party membership book—a statement that he refused to sign and which he vehemently denied at the hearing when under oath.

The two statements cancel out, Gladstein argued, and prove nothing either way. "If you hold otherwise, you deny due process of law." he said.

CIO Women Map Program To Aid Defense, Democracy

DETROIT, Nov. 29—A detailed program for defense of our nation and of our democracy, climaxing in a CIO Women's National Defense Week some time early next year is the most important result of the national conference of CIO auxiliaries held last week in Detroit.

Specific suggestions which delegates carried back with them to their local auxiliaries for immediate action included registration for defense service, such as red cross work, canteen work, first aid classes etc.; strengthening the morale of the armed forces by correspondence and gifts to union draftees and parties for service men in their own communities; and participation in and cooperation with local civilian defense bodies, especially the nutrition and consumer interest committees which have been set up in many parts of the country.

Strengthening of defense through adequate health facilities and a fight against malnutrition was emphasized as an important part of the auxiliary program. Improved knowledge of nutrition among housewives, the demand for low-cost nutritious meals in eating places near factories, and a vigorous campaign against profiteering were three of the steps recommended for auxiliary action.

CONSUMERS' ORGANIZATION

Organization of consumers to protest rising living costs was constantly emphasized as one of the auxiliaries most important tasks. Immediate passage of a price control bill was placed first on the list for legislative pressure.

Maintenance of our own democracy was recognized by the conference to be a vital part of a real defense program. In line with this auxiliaries were urged to give full support to the CIO legislative program and immediate assistance in the campaign to defeat wage-control and other anti-labor measures in Congress.

SUGGEST BLOCK-PLAN

In addition to a program of action for auxiliaries all over the country, the Conference voted to make two suggestions to defense agencies in Washington. First they proposed to the Office of Civilian defense that a nation-wide block plan of organization be adopted to extend the voluntary participation of women in the defense program. Under this plan all volunteers now registered for volunteer work would be used for a house to house canvass of all women.

These women would then be organized into Women's Defense Committees of the blocks or other territorial division in which they lived. The defense committees would examine the needs in their block in medical, educational and recreational facilities; arrange for community use of such equipment as washing machines, production of which is now being restricted; establish block nurseries, if possible; and work with a community wide organization of these local women's defense committees to coordinate the work.

This plan was enthusiastically approved as offering opportunity for every woman to make some contribution to the defense program.

ASSAIL PROFITEERING

The conference also proposed that the consumer pledge, issued in connection with national defense week, be revised to add a final sentence: "I will cooperate with all other consumers to guard against profiteering." The pledge as it stands commits the housewife to buy carefully, to take care of the things she has and to waste nothing.

The delegates felt that without a clause against profiteering it was misleading to call this a consumer pledge. The officers were authorized to ask Miss Harriet Elliot's office to issue a new pledge including the anti-profiteering sentence. If that is not possible it was agreed that the auxiliaries should issue their own pledge.

Gold Miners Strike In Canada

ANY BONDS TODAY? That's the question being asked of Leo Krzycki, Amalgamated Clothing Workers official by Miss Ita Bergin of the UAW-CIO staff. The ACW and other CIO unions have already bought many thousand dollars' worth of the Defense Savings Bonds, and the convention urged unions and individuals to back the bond drive.

Labor's Rights At Stake

KIRKLAND LAKE, Ont., Nov. 29—Government terrorism entered into the strike of 3,800 CIO gold miners here as labor-breaking Premier Mitchell Hepburn sent swarms of Ontario provincial police in an effort to smash the workers' fight for recognition from eight wealthy corporations.

First official act of the provincial cops was to stage a storm-trooping parade through the center of town with the idea of scaring the miners and their families. The strikers weren't impressed, and at press time the gold operators could muster only about 150 scabs to pass the picket lines of the International Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers.

ORDERLY STRIKE

The strike, in progress since Nov. 18, has been completely orderly, and up to the time of the government police intervention there had not been a single arrest in connection with the walkout. Despite this record, the mine operators have carried on a campaign of sensationalizing every petty barroom brawl in the hope of building up a case of "violence" against the strikers.

Each such propaganda effort is followed with a request for extra police "protection" for the gold mine operators, who have extracted millions of dollars out of the rich Canadian sub-soil while denying a living wage to their employes and seeking to smash every attempt at organization.

It was generally conceded here that the Kirkland Lake dispute will determine whether genuine trade unionism is to be given its rightful place in Canada or whether traditional company unionism is to hold sway.

OPERATORS ARROGANT

The walkout culminated weeks of struggle to seek union recognition by peaceful means, but at each stage the workers found themselves faced by an arrogant coalition of management which spurned every effort for collective bargaining.

Several weeks ago, Reid Robinson—head of the international union and a vice-president of the CIO—was seized in Toronto while en route to appear at a government conciliation hearing at Kirkland. Finally released, he spoke at the hearing—but only after the mine operators snubbed the government by walking out of the conciliation hearing in protest against the union official's presence.

WON STRIKE VOTE

The union won its strike vote, despite one of the most rigged elections ever conducted by government in the Dominion. Permitted to vote were a large number of supervisory employes; many placer miners, working in solitary fashion far from the Kirkland Lake fields; an inmate of an insane asylum who had once worked at the mines, and a member of a U. S. professional hockey team.

Just before the strike, Canadian Minister of Labor McLarty sought a settlement formula, but the companies steadfastly refused to meet the union.

Auto Union Helps Bring 10,000 New Homes To Detroit

DETROIT, Nov. 29—The militant battle of the United Automobile Workers, CIO, to promote low-cost governmental housing for workers had won a major victory today with Presidential o.k. of plans for "Defense City"—a project of 10,000 homes.

The project, the largest of its kind in the nation, was announced by OPM Associate-Director General Sidney Hillman during a recent trip to the automobile industry center here.

R. J. Thomas, head of the UAW-CIO, hailed the government plans "as one of the most progressive steps yet made in the field of public housing."

LONG-RANGE PROGRAM

"We urged that the housing problem be attacked not as a make-shift for the period of the emergency but with a view to providing American labor with permanent low-cost modern housing," Thomas declared.

"We are glad to see that Defense City will follow such a pattern, and hope that it will be only the first of many such developments."

Delegates to the CIO convention who had a chance to see a model of the project on display in the Hotel Statler lobby commented that it incorporated modern ideas on community planning, with lots of space and integrated school and recreation facilities.

Defense City will come as a boon to many of the 70,000 workers who will be employed at the gigantic Ford bombing plant in Ypsilanti.

ADVANCED BY UAWC

Plans for the big housing project were first advanced by the UAW-CIO in September and were pushed by Walter Reuther, head of the union's housing committee; Richard Leonard, director of the UAW Ford division; and William McAulay, union regional director in the area where the Ford bombing plant will be located.

Pres. Thomas of the auto union said he would shortly appoint UAW-CIO representatives to a committee to discuss detailed plans for the project with government and local representatives. A 250-unit housing project under UAW auspices is now being constructed at South Bend, Ind., while a 1,000-unit development will soon be started at Buffalo, N. Y.

NEW MAGAZINE

Discussion of the auto union's housing, educational and recreational projects is contained in The Distributor, official monthly publication of the UAW-CIO Education Dept. An attractive, well-illustrated magazine, the Distributor sells for 15 cents a month, $1.50 a year. Orders may be sent to the UAW Education Dept., 281 W. Grand Blvd., Detroit, Mich.

$60 Base Pay Asked for Army; Hit Fink Training

DETROIT, Nov. 29—A better break for the million American boys in khaki was recommended by the CIO convention, but the delegates warned the government against using the Army as a strikebreaking force to beat down labor's standards.

Pointing out that rumored training of draftees for strikebreaking duty "is contrary to the intent and letter of the Selective Service Act, and a breach of faith with labor," the resolution called upon the President "to direct that the training of selectees and other service men for strikebreakers be immediately stopped."

SIX-POINT PROGRAM

The convention approved a six-point program aimed at improving life and morale for the men in the army. It called for:

1. Increase in base pay to $60 a month.

2. More liberal furloughs and free transportation for men on furlough.

3. Free postal service for soldiers.

4. Abolition of discrimination because of race, color or creed in the army camps.

5. Improved recreational and amusement program with union participation in the recreational and educational centers at the training camps.

6. "The establishment of a true merit system which would eliminate favoritism, political influence and racial and religious prejudice in the selection and promotion of officers in the United States Army."

The resolution also extended support to the United Service Organization and urged affiliated unions "show solidarity" with the boys in [illegible] by arranging for gifts of [illegible] books, food, etc.

HOUSE 'OK' OF SMITH BILL MENACES ALL U.S. UNIONS

Bare High Profits at U. S. Expense

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6—While the Congressional blitzkrieg against the nation's workers stole most of the newspaper headlines, two Congressional committees this week started investigations of super-profits gained by corporations on defense contracts, and of fat commissions piled up by agents acting as go-betweens in getting U. S. awards for certain companies.

Sen. David I. Walsh of Massachusetts, chairman of the Senate Naval Affairs Committee, predicted there'd be an "awful day of reckoning" when the people get the low-down about corporate war profits.

He estimated that shipbuilders are making a profit of $640,000 on every $6,000,000 destroyer constructed for Uncle Sam's Navy—a profit of well over 10 percent.

BIG COMMISSIONS

One Leon K. Shanack of New York has become rich in a year on big commissions and practically no work, the House Military Affairs Committee has declared.

Shanack cleaned up nearly $200,000 in a year by buying up subcontracting jobs from the Remington Arms Co. and selling the contracts to the Greenwich Machine & Tool Co. at a fat profit.

Shanack's rake-off as a commission man eventually will come out of Uncle Sam's pocketbook, since the Remington Arms Co. has a multi-million dollar cost-plus arrangement with the Government.

On one deal with the Brewster Aeronautical Co., Long Island, N. Y., Shanack made $23,427—a profit of 22% on a contract amounting to $103,000.

Reuther To Speak

New York City, Dec. 6—Walter Reuther, UAW-CIO leader, will broadcast Saturday, Dec. 13, at 2:30 p. m., Eastern Standard Time, over the Columbia Broadcasting System on "How Labor Would Defeat Hitler."

MAKES COME-BACK: Chowderhead Cohen gained prominence a few years ago when the LaFollette Committee bared his record as a professional strikebreaker in New York. He's been nabbed again in New York City for trying to bust strikes again, along with the notorious Pearl Bergoff. (Story Page Two)

They Still Vote CIO in Polls

Washington, Dec. 6—An indication of the steady and continuous growth of the CIO is revealed in the figures released by the National Labor Relations Board on elections conducted among workers in industrial plants throughout the country.

In November alone, approximately 10,000 workers voted for CIO unions as their chosen collective bargaining agency in elections won by the CIO. Out of the 51 elections held over a month's period with CIO unions on the ballot, the CIO won 31, carrying a total of 9,970 votes.

Returns not yet released on elections held late in November, may bring this figure higher.

Among the important elections carried by CIO unions during the past month were: Goodyear Aircraft Corp., won by the United Automobile Workers 860 to 198 against.

Mack Manufacturing Corp., also won by the UAW 935 to 373 for the AFL.

Billings & Spencer Co., Hartford, Conn., won by the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers 510 to 61 against.

In two General Motors elections, one at the Saginaw Steering Gear Division was won by the UAW, 1,197 to 209 against, and the other in the Frigidaire Division, was won by the UERMW 1,306 to 476 against.

CIO Pushes Drive To Kill Tory Plan In Senate

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6—Determined to preserve labor's fundamental rights from the onslaughts of Congressional reactionaries, the CIO today launched a campaign aimed at defeat of the Smith Bill and all other anti-labor legislation in the U. S. Senate.

The bill, sponsored by Rep. Howard Smith, a Virginia banker, slid through the House on the combined votes of southern polltaxers and northern reactionaries. Its provisions fit like clockwork into the program of the National Association of Manufacturers and other anti-labor organization.

Moving quickly to halt the bill in the Senate, Pres. Philip Murray of the CIO urged every affiliated international union, local union and council in the nation to deluge the Senate with wires and letters of protest against the legislation. He also called for mass meetings throughout the land to protest the Tories' program for strangulation of American labor.

MURRAY, HAYWOOD, THOMAS ON RADIO

President Murray will address the nation Monday, Dec. 8, from 7:30 to 7:45 p. m., eastern standard time, on the NBC Blue Network to warn of the dangers inherent in the bill. Allan S. Haywood, director of organization, will broadcast later the same evening—from 9:15 to 9:30 p. m.—over the Mutual Broadcasting System. On Wed., Dec. 10, Vice Pres. R. J. Thomas will speak from 10:15 to 10:30 over the Columbia Broadcasting System.

A meeting of the CIO vice-presidents was being held in Washington, Saturday, Dec. 6, to chart future plans for defeat of the Smith bill.

HEARINGS IN SENATE

It was learned, meanwhile, that the bill will go to the Senate Committee on Education and Labor for hearings, and that labor organizations will be given an opportunity to express their views and grievances.

This procedure differs markedly from that in the House, where the poll-tax Congressmen apparently feared extended discussion of the measure and brought it to the floor with a minimum of public hearings.

Throughout the week CIO "people's lobbyists" representing every CIO union were active in the nation's capital seeking to persuade Congress to call off its war on labor and turn its attention to the more important task of helping to defeat Adolph Hitler.

Urge Defeat of All Anti-Labor Bills

Rap Knox For Praising Mob Rule

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6—High officials of the CIO today assailed a letter signed by Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox which gave an official o. k. to an incitement to mob violence contained in a recent speech by Admiral W. H. P. Blandy to a group of Macon, Ga., citizens.

Blandy's statement—with which Knox stated his "thorough-going accord"—expressed hope that if a defense strike occurs in Macon, "I hope you will ride them out of town on a rail as if they were wearing swastikas on their sleeves."

Knox claimed in a letter to the Workers Defense League that leaders of strikes on defense projects may be considered as "traitors" or, more charitably, as conducting a war on two fronts.

CAREY'S COMMENT

Informed of the Navy Dept. Secretary's statement, CIO Sec. James B. Carey asserted that "in inciting violence against decent Americans who exercise this right, Col. Knox helps to demoralize working men, weaken their devotion to the anti-Hitler cause and convince them that government is unsympathetic to their needs."

Carey warned that Knox's statement would counteract to a considerable extent the "excellent morale-building system" under which the Navy Dept. grants "E for Excellent" awards to plants whose workers turn out the highest production each month.

In New York, CIO Vice-Pres. R. J. Thomas said that Knox's statement revealed the bitterness one might expect "from a satellite of Hitler but not from one of the highest public officials in our nation."

New Pamphlets Explain Anti-Labor Bills, Answer Questions on Murray Plan

HOT OFF THE PRESS are two new pamphlets issued by the CIO to aid America's organized workers in their battle to preserve the labor's democratic rights and to bring improvement to the nation's program for defense against Hitler's Nazi hordes.

"Free Labor Means Victory" tells the why and and wherefore of the crop of antistrike bills now cluttering up the Congressional legislative hopper.

"Two questions must be asked in considering these bills, and in communicating with your Congressmen about them," the pamphlet points out.

"1. Will the bill interfere with national defense production by fostering industrial unrest?

"2. Will the bill restrict labor's rights to organize, bargain collectively and strike when necessary?"

Any bill that does either of these two things "must be vigorously resisted," the pamphlet states, and it goes on to describe the shackles that reactionaries would like to fasten on the nation's workers.

LONG-RANGE PLAN

The long range program of the CIO, as embodied in President Murray's plan for Industry Councils, gets the emphasis in "Planning for Democratic Defense," a new CIO publication that asks the questions people want to know about the Murray Plan and gives the answers to show it's the best plan yet devised for an efficient defense program.

"What is the aim of the CIO Defense Plan?" "What are the duties of the Councils?" "Why is production lagging?" "After the war?"—these are some of the thought-provoking questions contained in the new pamphlet.

Every CIO member ought to constitute himself a committee of one to spread knowledge about the Murray Plan and urge friends and organizations to seek its adoption by the government. A copy of "Planning for Democratic Defense" will give the answers to all the questions he's likely to get about the Plan.

Education Conference In Indiana

Indianapolis, Ind., Dec. 6 — An educational conference sponsored by the Indiana CIO Industrial Union Council will be held here December 14, at the Claypool Hotel. Panel discussions and speeches will center on the theme of "Education in a Democracy."

"At this period more than at any other time, it is essential that the working man have a deep conception of his rights, duties and privileges as a citizen of a democracy," the Council states in announcing the conference.

Edwin S. Smith, former member of the National Labor Relations Board, and now director of the CIO drive in the oil industry, is scheduled to make the main address. This will be followed by three panel discussions on different phases of labor education.

MANY SPEAKERS

The role of labor in the political field and the education of the workers for effective political action will be the subject of the first panel discussion.

CIO leaders who will take part in this discussion are Powers Hapgood, CIO regional director in Indiana; George Craig, regional director for District 50, United Mine Workers; James Robb, regional director, Steel Workers Organizing Committee; James Bayles, United Auto Workers, Muncie, and Marvin Baker, Oliver local of the Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee.

The second panel will deal with the subject of education for social action and will include a discussion of labor's legislative and social needs, cooperatives, housing, planning for post-war economy; price control and other related topics.

Edward Kelly, regional representative of the State, County & Municipal Workers, and a group of social service leaders will take part in this discussion.

Ohio Workers 'Shed Blood' To Aid Injured Brothers

By TED COX

CLEVELAND, Dec. 6—You've heard about the guy who is willing to shed his blood for his union brothers.

Well, if you were one of the 6,000 workers at the U. S. Aluminum plant here you might be called upon to make good your promise.

Don't get me wrong! The boys who belong to Local 55, National Association of Die Casting Workers, don't go around the shop carrying buckets of blood and waiting for emergencies. They've got it down to a scientific filing system. More than a score of typical workers have been systematically typed, filed with the local and stand ready to bleed whenever the occasion demands.

The idea got started a few months ago when a worker in "H Plant" at U. S. was hit by a flying chip off a hammer in the forge shop. The man died from loss of blood.

His fellow workers would have been glad to help him, but they got there too late.

One day, at the huge Otis Steel plant, word went around that a member of Steel Workers Local 188 was in the hospital, that he needed a special type of blood and that a number of donors would have to stand by to be typed for the proper transfusion.

Instantly, scores of Otis workers left their machines. A little later they had chartered a bus and were piling out in front of the hospital. They pushed through the door and into the room where tests were made; the right man was found and the life of the union brother was saved.

Alcoa workers were impressed. When one of their members went to the hospital next month, his type was found in time and shortly after that he was on the way to recovery.

This brought with it the idea establishing the files. One worker after another came in to volunteer his blood until a sufficient number of names was recorded.

At present the union files are equipped to meet any kind of arterial demand, including Rare Type 4.

Bergoff, Dean of Finks, Arrested in New York

New York, Dec. 6—"Strikebreaking, Inc.", whose exploits filled the pages of many books and a dozen files of the Senate Civil Liberties Committee, is trying to make a come-back.

But the outlook for the "corporation" seemed far from rosy this week as New York City cops arrested the veteran dean of the fink professional, Mr. Pearl Bergoff (his mother called him Pearl because she wanted a girl) and released him in $2,500 bail.

It was as head of the Bergoff Industrial Service, Inc., that Pearl cooperated with James H. Rand to perfect the Mohawk Valley Formula, a new plan intended to make strikebusting look legal and respectable. But the New York state government cracked down, and Bergoff lost his license to run a detective agency.

This week Bergoff was arrested for conducting the Modern Investigation Bureau in New York without a license and for supplying criminal characters and thugs for strikebreaking purposes to a struck furniture warehouse. Arrested with him was his daughter, Harriet Bergoff, and a "business associate," Lew Cohen, who said he was the agency's special investigator.

SMUDGED PRINTS

It was revealed that Bergoff had supplied smudged fingerprint records of his hirelings to the police and thereby permitted the thugs to work for several days before the cops caught up with them.

Working on the job was one Chowderhead Cohen, considered by many expert observers as the nastiest and most picturesque representative of the underworld to appear before the LaFollette Committee during its five years' existence.

Bergoff received millions from American industry during the first 40 years of the century for providing riff-raff from the underworld of the nation to bust picket lines, invade the homes of striking workers and cause the intimidation necessary to smash strikers' morale. He once boasted:

"I've served American industry, north, south, east and west. I've been 30 years in harness to American industry.

"I've shipped armies of men to Cuba and Canada. Railroad strikes, dock strikes and textile strikes. I've broken them all in my time."

WHIP FOR ORGANIZERS: This whip, produced as an exhibit by Prosecutor Dan Duke of Fulton County, Ga., doesn't get a rise out of Gov. Eugene Talmadge (left), who boasted that he himself had once flogged a Negro. The whip above was used against CIO textile union officials four years ago, and was one argument used to show why the floggers—members of the Ku Klux Klan —should be freed from jail. Talmadge, with an ear cocked to the voices of Georgia's thousands of organized workers, finally decided the Klansmen should be kept in the pen.

Minimum Up $6 In Jewelry Pact

Trenton, N. J., Dec. 6—A contract providing a $6 boost in minimum scales and wage increases ranging from $2 to $6 per week has been won by Local 409 of the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America, CIO, at the Aurele M. Gatti Co., one of the largest manufacturers of jewels for precision instruments in the United States.

The contract establishes the union shop, check-off, equal pay for men and women doing the same work, four paid holidays, plant-wide seniority, vacation with pay of one and two weeks, job and seniority protection for draftees and a ten-month maternity leave of absence.

The agreement calls for ten-minute rest periods each morning and afternoon, with an additional 10 minutes once each week before lunch to provide more time to cash pay checks.

Gatti supplies 30% of all the jewels made in the United States for precision instruments.

CIO Unions Gird For Campaign To Defeat Smith Bill In Senate

FIGHT TORY BILLS: CIO moved into action this week to help stem the tide of anti-labor bills being advocated by Congressional reactionaries. At top is the CIO special legislative conference called by Pres. Murray on December 1. Union representatives spent days on Capitol Hill interviewing Congress and expressing labor's views. At left, CIO Sec. James B. Carey appears before a Senate Judiciary sub-committee to oppose Sen. Tom Connally's bill to shackle labor.

Measure Would Cripple Activities of All Labor

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5—Following only two days of debate, the House this week passed the Smith bill, most drastic anti-labor measure yet enacted outside of the Axis nations. The vote, 252 to 136, showed a lineup of pro-fascist forces on both sides of the House determined to smash the labor movement by imposing slave conditions on American workers.

Described by Pres. Philip Murray as "a direct attack on the national defense program" and as "subversive of American democracy," the bill brought an immediate redoubling of CIO efforts to block final passage in the Senate, where it now goes to compete with the almost repressive Ball and Conally bills.

As analyzed by President Murray, the Smith bill, if not stopped in the Senate, will set up compulsory arbitration through a 90-day forced "cooling-off" period, will freeze the open shop and ban the union shop, make unions virtually incorporate, prohibit picketing and strike support by other unions, and make social outcasts of unionists who remain loyal to their organizations.

CALL TO CIO

Murray's call to CIO unions to resist final passage of the bill urged all CIO officials and members to wire their protests to the President of the U. S. and to their Senators, and to cooperate with other organized groups in immediate mass meetings throughout the country. These meetings, Murray wrote, should be used to push the CIO plan for a conference of labor, government and industry to work out voluntary means of settling labor disputes.

Meantime the CIO representatives who came to Washington last week to fight anti-labor bills remained on the job, concentrating their efforts now on Senators and on the Senate Labor Committee, where it was indicated the Smith bill would go for hearings before Senate action.

In addition, Pres. Murray called the six CIO vice-presidents in for an emergency meeting to combat the Smith bill and the other two anti-union proposals brought out by Senate Committees. Coast to coast radio broadcasts were arranged for Murray and other ranking CIO officials to rouse the public to the dangers in the Congressional anti-labor drive.

OTHER BILLS REMAIN

Passage of the Smith bill in the House, while it stole the play from other labor-busting measures there, did not remove the dangers from the Connally wage-freezing, no-strike bill and from the Ball bill, which makes union shops illegal and perpetuates the open shop.

Debate in the lower House was led by Rep. Howard Smith, avowed enemy of all progressive legislation and author of more anti-union proposals than almost any other Representative. Smith's diatribes against labor were seconded by two other polltaxers, Hobbs of Alabama and Dies of Texas, both of whom won passage of amendments adding an extra touch of viciousness to the bill.

Labor observers here pointed to Smith's shrewd maneuver in dropping plant seizure clauses from the bill as the bait that won the votes of 123 Republicans, many of whom voted against the Connally amendment of last July that carried such a provision.

Democrats, with 129 votes, however, held a slim lead in whipping the bill through the House. Of the 136 Representatives who voted against it, 108 were Democrats and 24 Republicans. Of these Democrats, only two were from polltax states.

AROUSE THE NATION

Concluding his letter to CIO affiliates urging all-out action against the Smith, Connally and Ball bills, Murray declared:

"The people of the nation must be aroused to the dangers now confronting our country. The basic constitutional rights guaranteed under our Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the U. S. are threatened."

Unions Show Dies' Charges Are Lies

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6—Rep. Martin Dies' lies were being thrown back into the Texas Congressman's face this week by leaders of several CIO unions.

In a smear job carefully timed to assist southern poll-tax Congressmen in their campaign to shackle labor, Dies came out on the House floor with a list of 20 alleged criminals supposedly working for the CIO.

The Texas Representative claimed they were selected at random from a list of 500 such criminals on the CIO payroll and sought to leave the impression that the CIO was completely dominated by an alliance of Communists and criminals.

In Detroit, Pres. R. J. Thomas of the United Automobile, Aircraft & Agricultural Implement Workers declared:

"I denounce as totally false accusations by Rep. Martin Dies that our Union has employed men with criminal records as organizers. I have read the names of the men and checked them with our records. Not one of the five men was ever employed by us.

EMPLOYED AS FINKS

"I am informed that on the contrary they were employed as strikebreakers and 'guards' by the Air Associates, Inc., during our recent strike at the company's plant in Bendix, N. J.

"Dies' insertion in the Congressional Record of maliciously false charges against the UAW-CIO is a cowardly procedure of the kind we have unfortunately come to expect from the disgruntled and repudiated 'statesman' from Texas. . . .

"His performance is dishonest, cowardly and flagrant abuse of his privileges as a member of Congress."

In New York Pres. Joseph Curran of the National Maritime Union said six of the seven men listed by Dies as working for the NMU are not and never were officials of the Union, and that while the seventh once was, he is no longer.

ACQUITTED

Listed by Dies was Sec. Charles Davey of the Bergen County (N. J.) Industrial Union Council, whom the Texas red-baiter accused of being a criminal on the basis of two arrests for assault and battery in a strike at Edgewater, N. J. Dies did not mention the fact that Davey had been acquitted on both charges.

Also on Dies' list is John Santo, former secretary-treasurer of the CIO Transport Workers Union. Santo is accused of having entered the country illegally, but has not yet been given a hearing by the Dept. of Justice. Charges, under American democratic law, are not considered to constitute a criminal record.

Carey Cites Merits of Union Shop

Washington, Dec. 5—Union shops conditions "are the best guarantee for the attainment of our defense program," James B. Carey, CIO secretary, told the Senate Education and Labor Committee in a hearing on the Ball bill (S.683) that would outlaw the union shop and force compulsory use of mediation and conciliation services on practically all labor disputes.

"Unions seeks the establishment of the union shop in order to obtain security for their organization and members," Carey told the committee.

"There is no other objective on the part of unions when they seek such an agreement. In the absence of the union shop an employer who has not completely accepted the existence of the union as an accomplished fact continues to utilize the opportunity of the presence of non-union members to weaken and break down the labor organization . . .

"Continuity of production is assured when a plant is established on a union shop basis between an employer and a union representing the overwhelming number of the employes."

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

Forced use of conciliation and mediation agencies will rule thousands of collective bargaining agreements out of operation, Carey said, pointing out that employers will naturally tend to force an issue to these agencies rather than bargain on an equal basis with their organized workers.

"If it is known in advance that there is a government agency to which an appeal can be made there will be a strong tendency not to adjust the dispute between the parties, but rather to rely on the government to do so," he declared.

Organizers Buy Bonds

Milwaukee, Wisc.—Every member of the organizing staff of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee in Milwaukee have purchased U. S. defense savings bonds, it was announced here by District Director Meyer Adelman.

Jersey CIO To Map Fight Against Bill

Camden, N. J., Dec. 6—The legislative assault on America's organized workers will have a prominent place on the agenda at the annual convention of the New Jersey Industrial Union Council, meeting at the Shipyard Hall here this weekend.

Jersey CIO unions were active in the people's lobbying campaign in Washington against the poll-tax Congressmen's attack on labor, sending the largest delegation from any state in the country to participate in the lobby drive.

Pres. Irving Abramson of the state CIO indicated that mass meetings will be held throughout Jersey to rally the workers against the bills in an attempt to forestall their passage by the Senate.

Pres. Murray, Haywood On Radio Dec. 8

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6—The CIO will go on the nation's airwaves to warn all Americans of the danger to defense and to morale if the Smith Bill or any similar anti-labor legislation is passed by the U. S. Senate.

Pres. Philip Murray will speak on Monday night, December 8 from 7:30 to 7:45 pm, Eastern Standard Time over the Blue Network of the National Broadcasting Co.

His subject will be "Keep Labor Free."

Later in the evening of December 8, Allan S. Haywood, director of organization, will broadcast over the Mutual Broadcasting System. His speech, to be aired from 9:15 to 9:30 pm, will be entitled "Politics or Production."

On Wednesday, December 10, the CIO will again be on the air, this time over Columbia Broadcasting System, from 10:15 to 10:30 p.m., E.S.T. CIO Vice Pres. R. J. Thomas will speak.

The Smith Bill

The passage of the Smith bill by the House is one of the worst blows ever struck against American labor. It is also a stab in the back for the whole national defense effort.

At a time when the voluntary efforts of American workers are most needed to achieve maximum production for the defeat of Hitler, this bill would shackle labor and create profound industrial disturbance by destroying the very democratic rights which labor is most eager to defend.

There is only one consolation to be found in this outrageous act of betrayal by a majority of the House. This is that the shock should be so great, when the character of the bill is fully realized, as to mobilize labor and all public-spirited citizens as never before to check the drive for labor-enslaving legislation before it is too late.

The Smith bill now goes to the Senate, where other equally vicious measures are also pending. Upon the Senate rests the responsibility of undoing the wrong committed by the House and defending American democracy against such traitorous schemes.

The CIO is on record to do everything within its power to achieve maximum production for national defense and to defeat Hitlerism both at home and abroad. This aim can only be achieved by the "voluntary effort of a free people defending its democratic rights," it points out. And the struggle against labor-shackling legislation is a vital part of this whole effort.

On behalf of the CIO, Pres. Philip Murray has made the constructive proposal that the President convene a conference of representatives of industry, labor and government to work out a voluntary agreement and basic policies for the peaceful solution of industrial disputes.

This is the American way, the democratic way, as opposed to the dictatorial methods of compulsion and forced labor proposed by labor's enemies in Congress.

The time is very short before the Senate acts. The CIO is therefore calling, not only upon every union and council, but upon every individual member as well, to write or wire at once to the Senators from the respective states urging them not to let down labor and national defense in this grave crisis.

The Real Culprits

One of the main purposes behind all the present hue and cry against labor is to distract popular attention and indignation from war profiteering and from the real causes of lagging defense production.

It has cost a lot of money to put over the huge propaganda campaign which has whipped Congress into a lather of labor-baiting hysteria. But even so, it has been a very profitable investment for the people who have been making their fortunes out of national defense.

It has also prevented a lot of uncomfortable questions from being asked about the failure of industry and government to organize properly for all-out production.

Profits of the country's leading industrial corporations increased an average of 25.7% in the first nine months of 1941, as compared with the similar period of 1940, according to the National City Bank of New York. This is on top of an increase of 42.3% between the same periods of 1939 and 1940.

A sample of these soaring profits is the 61.3% increase this year in aircraft profits, representing a present return of 38.6% on investment.

In contrast, the average hourly earnings of manufacturing workers increased less than 8% between the first nine months of 1940 and 1941, and most of this increase has been taken away by rising living costs. Furthermore, the wage figures show no deductions for the taxes workers must pay, while the companies in estimating their profits have deducted much larger sums for taxes in 1941 than in 1940.

As to losses in production, the losses due to strikes have been infinitesimal as compared to those due to failures in planning and procurement by government and industry and to refusal of industry to expand its facilities.

The National Association of Manufacturers itself admits that as of this fall only 50% of machine tool capacity of American industry was being utilized; and facts without end could be cited about industry's failure to do the production job demanded of it.

So labor is being made the goat by the millionaire press and politicians, while the real saboteurs of national defense bungle and profiteer to their heart's content.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

THE Smith anti-labor bill, passed by the House, is a horrible combination of blind spite, slaveholders' bigotry, crafty treason, reckless union-busting, utter confusion and sheer stupidity.

It is the product of the medieval mind of a beady-eyed, wing-collared, small-town southern banker from a poll-tax state.

Since the common people of his non-industrial district are prevented from voting by the poll-tax, Rep. Howard Smith has never attempted to represent any more than the point of view of a well-to-do minority who seem to share his desire for a return to the "good old days" of slavery.

So Smith's life in Congress has been devoted to unremitting attempts to turn back the clock of social progress.

The passage of his anti-labor bill by the House is the greatest triumph in Smith's back-to-slavery drive. Imposing forced labor, destroying the right to organize and strike, and threatening working people with the loss of nearly all their legal rights and even with outright starvation, the Smith bill would repeal a hundred years of labor's progress up from chattel slavery.

Following are just a few of the parts of Smith's ball-and-chain bill:

It would outlaw nearly all forms of union organizing activity by forbidding not only picketing but almost every other method of peacefully persuading workers to join a union or to refrain from scabbing.

It would freeze open shop conditions and outlaw all strikes for the union shop or other forms of union security. It would make it illegal for workers to refuse to handle scab material.

Through compulsory cooling-off periods and many other forms of compulsion, it would destroy the right to strike and leave working people at the mercy of profiteering and union-busting employers.

It would make social pariahs of and decree starvation for countless innocent workers, by making union members punishable for any violations of the bill's hundreds of provisions through loss of their rights under the Wagner act and loss of their old age pensions, WPA employment and other forms of public aid, besides making them subject to fines and jail sentences by court action.

How could such a merciless bill for the destruction of American democratic rights and the undermining of industrial morale be passed by the House, at a time when national unity and all-out production for the defeat of Hitlerism are the slogans of the day?

The most charitable explanation that can be given is that many Congressmen were hopelessly confused by the complexities of the many anti-labor bills that were suddenly dumped into their laps and did not fully realize the slave conditions which the Smith bill would impose on labor.

But there were plenty of Congressmen who knew exactly what they were doing. These included the men from poll-tax states, who did most of the talking for the bill and who have long constituted an anti-democratic bloc of the most extreme social reaction.

Another bloc that helped to put across the bill were the political lackeys of selfish employing interests, who consistently vote for anti-labor measures to keep wages down and profiteering unrestrained.

Smith carefully sought such employer support by eliminating from the bill the provision for taking over the plants of employer violators—the only provision in any way directed against employers sabotaging defense production.

Finally, there was the sinister influence of pro-Fascist elements who welcome such attempts to destroy American democracy and to provoke labor resentment and industrial disruption harmful to the defense program.

The picture would not be complete, of course, without some jackass braying from that brazen mountebank and labor-baiter, Martin Dies.

He secured the addition of an amendment to deprive unions and their members of all rights under the Labor Act if their officers could be called Communists or had a "criminal record."

Dies made his union-busting purposes amply clear by puting into the record two lists of the people whom he dubs "Communists" and "criminals." The former included many non-Communist leaders of important unions, and the latter some unionists convicted only of union activity.

Most of Dies' criminal list, however, was made up of individuals in no way connected with unions. The United Automobile Workers, for instance, was able to point out that the five men with police records listed as UAW officials were, on the contrary, strike-breakers and guards employed by the Air Associates Inc. to fight the union.

Smith Won On 'Hates, Prejudices'

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5—CIO representatives here to fight anti-labor bills in Congress had ample material to back up their arguments that union-busting laws would damage national unity and hold up the defense program, while allowing employers to roll in the profits at the expense of national security.

The CIO working group, numbering at its height about 300 representatives of all affiliates, had analyses of the pending legislation, strike statistics, profit statements from leading corporations, and pamphlets prepared by the CIO national office to guide them and to leave with the Congressmen.

The fact that the majority of Congress was unmoved by factual argument in voting for the Smith bill does not detract from the presentation of CIO's case—but from the integrity of the Congressmen who voted, as President Murray expressed it, for "their prejudices and hatreds" rather than for the interests of the country.

ON STRIKES

Strike material used by the CIO delegates showed that strike stoppages account for only a tiny fraction of the huge production losses due to preventable accidents, sickness, failure of industry and government to plan for defense and civilian needs, and unemployment.

Thus, more than 2.5 billion man days were lost in 1940 due to unemployment, sickness and injuries, while only 600 million were worked in defense industry. Of the man days worked on defense in 1940, only 1.4 million were lost due to strikes. In addition, industry's own figures show that only 50 percent of machine tool capacity was being used this fall, while OPM figures show an even smaller degree of use—40 per cent.

ON PROFITS

Meanwhile, big business is enriching itself at "a fantastic rate," according to profit figures gathered by the CIO from corporation statements and government sources. These figures show that 350 leading U. S. corporations had profits 25.7 percent higher in the first nine months of 1941 than in the same period of 1940. This is on top of an increase of 42.3 percent above the first nine months of 1939—which wasn't such a bad year itself.

Congressional reactionaries and pro-fascists, unable to meet these arguments with reason, resorted to vicious charges against the CIO representatives, calling them "goon squads," "criminals," and the like. Loudest of the attempted smears came from polltaxer Smith, who tried his best to stir up a lynch spirit against the representatives of 5,000,000 CIO members.

Smith was followed by Dies, whose jealousy on the anti-labor limelight led him to sound off on unfounded charges against 20 people he falsely alleged were CIO organizers.

The smell of this smokescreen was so strong that Rep. McCormack, majority leader in the House, was moved to defend the right of American workers to send their representatives to Washington on a matter that vitally concerned their welfare. Said McCormack:

"Reference has been made during the debate to goon squads. I cannot respond very favorably to arguments of that kind, directed at labor when the representatives of labor come down here when a matter is pending of concern to them, to express their views and exercise their constitutional right of petition."

Here What You Can Do:

Save Your Unions--Save Democracy

The Smith bill passed this week in the House of Representatives is the most vicious attack on the American people yet made in this country,

It opens the way for fascist control of labor through compulsory arbitration, banning of strikes and picketing, freezing the open shop and other Nazi Labor Front decrees.

The worst enemies of labor and the defense program joined hands to rush this slave law through one House of Congress.

LABOR AND ALL THE PEOPLE MUST JOIN HANDS TO STOP IT IN THE SENATE

President Murray calls on all CIO members to unite with other groups and flood their Senators and the President of the U. S. with protest wires against the Smith bill, the Connally and Ball bills, and all other measures designed to bring forced labor to America.

WIRE THE PRESIDENT OF THE U. S. AND YOUR TWO SENATORS AT ONCE.

The way to keep America free is to keep American workers free. FREE LABOR MEANS VICTORY—SLAVE LABOR MEANS DEFEAT.

Wire the President at the White House, Washington, D. C., all Senators at the Senate Office Bldg., Washington, D. C.

TIME IS SHORT. ACT NOW.

Auxiliaries Aid Fight To Preserve Unions

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6—Nation-wide support of the CIO drive to defeat anti-labor legislation was registered this week by the newly-formed Congress of Women's Auxiliaries of the CIO.

Action by auxiliaries to defeat anti-strike bills was featured in the first issue of the "Washington News Letter," authorized by the Auxiliary Conference in Detroit as the monthly publication of the Auxiliary Congress. The news letter urges action by all auxiliaries to see that letters and telegrams go from every auxiliary member to her Congressmen and Senators opposing all legislation to restrict labor's rights.

A special appeal to all international auxiliaries, and State, city and county auxiliary councils to mobilize pressure on Senators was issued by the national office of the Auxiliary Congress immediately after the passage of the Smith bill in the House.

QUICK RESPONSE

Quick action in response to the national appeal by the Philadelphia Auxiliary Council brought their president, Roie Levy, to Washington to join the CIO lobby. All but one Philadelphia Congressman, Mrs. Levy reported, voted against the Smith bill.

Also joining the CIO and anti-strike lobby was Mrs. Billie Vincent, president of the Auxiliary of the Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists and Technicians, and several members of the Washington chapter of that auxiliary.

Auxiliary lobbyists also participated in the CIO lobby which resulted in the passage of the price control bill in the House. In addition to the Washington officers of the Congress, Mrs. Julia Katz, national director; Mrs. Eleanor Fowler, secretary-treasurer; Mrs. Marion Smith, wife of the director of the Oil Workers Drive; and Miss Susan B. Anthony of the United Federal Workers Auxiliary, participated in calling on Congressmen.

CIO Sweeps 14 Elections At Ford Plants

DETROIT, Dec. 6—Ford Motor Co. employes once again have demonstrated their preference for the CIO, it was revealed today in returns from NLRB elections in 14 Ford "feeder" parts plants in Michigan.

Results in the 14 elections, all of them won by the UAW-CIO:

UAW-CIO	2,178
AFL	70
No Union	104

The election was sought by the AFL auto workers union about the time that Ford was signing its union shop contract with the CIO. The 30-1 vote for CIO was the workers' answer to the AFL, and as a result all Ford workers in the country are now covered by the UAW.

Wages in the small plants covered by the election were jerked up as much as 50 cents an hour after the election as the CIO contract was automatically applied with its provision for Detroit rates in the outlying shops, according to the Federated Press, labor news service.

The plants were established in small communities during Ford's open shop days, when the company hoped to keep its employes away from unionized centers, and to take advantage of lower labor rates.

Wage Freeze Plan Frozen

Washington, Dec. 5—Labor scored an important victory in the vote on the price control bill this week, though it was obscured both by the mangled form in which the bill was passed and by the vote on the Smith slave labor bill.

The victory came in the defeat by 102 to 53 of wage freezing provisions in the bill, following an intensive campaign by CIO representatives that acted as a curtain-raiser to the fight on anti-union legislation.

At the same time, however, Congress watered the anti-inflation features of the measure down almost to the drowning point by refusing to accept the Administration's licensing clause and by hedging other control sections around with considerable red tape, chiefly by putting a five-man board above the one-man administrator that anti-inflation forces wanted.

The bill now goes to hearings in the Senate, where CIO testimony will be heard within the next few days. CIO Congress of Women's Auxiliaries witnesses are also set to appear in favor of a stronger version of the bill, which affects the welfare of every American household.

End Walkout

New York, Dec. 6 — A three weeks' strike of workers at the Artistic Frame Co. has ended with a union shop contract signed by Local 76-B, United Furniture Workers. The Local also won wage increases ranging from $6.50 to $8.50 a week in a contract signed recently with the Pollyware Wood Products Co., manufacturers of novelty furniture.

CIO Head Greets New Chicago Sun

Chicago, Dec. 6—The Chicago Sun, new competitor to the arch-reactionary Chicago Tribune for the attention of the Windy City's morning readers, has a "splendid opportunity" to serve the nation, CIO Pres. Philip Murray wrote to Co-Publisher Silliman Evans of the Sun.

In a message that appeared in the first issue of the new paper, Murray declared that the CIO "has always encouraged the growth of genuinely independent and competitive papers throughout the nation."

"The CIO asks no favors of any paper," he added. "It asks only that newspapers do an honest job of reporting. And that labor news be not colored or marked by bias in writing or position in make-up."

Murray's Call To Action Against Bill

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6—Following is the text of the letter sent today by CIO Pres. Philip Murray to all CIO affiliates analyzing the Smith bill and outlining a course of action aimed at defeating anti-labor legislation in the U. S. Senate:

The most drastic repressive anti-labor legislation has just been enacted by the House of Representatives in the form of the Smith bill. The bill is now before the Senate of the United States which may begin to consider some form of anti-labor legislation on December 8th.

The Smith Bill

The Smith bill would accomplish the following:

(a) Establish compulsory arbitration of all industrial disputes through cooling off periods which may last for 90 days.

(b) Freeze present conditions of employment, thereby prohibiting any union from obtaining the union shop in voluntary collective bargaining.

(c) Require the registration of unions and filing of accounts, together with information regarding membership.

(d) Prohibit practically all forms of picketing in case of any industrial dispute.

(e) Make illegal practically all form of sympathetic action among unions or within a single union on behalf of any group of members and reimposes the shackles of anti-labor laws on labor.

(f) Deny to any trade union the benefits of the National Labor Relations Act, Social Security Act, and the Norris-LaGuardia Act, to any labor union whose members violate any of the provisions of the bill or who retain on their payroll persons who are alleged to have engaged in subversive activities.

In addition, the Senate has before it the Connally bill which freezes all wages and other terms and conditions of employment, and the Ball bill which makes any new union shop agreements illegal.

Blow At Defense

A grave danger confronts the nation today. If legislation of this kind or any repressive legislation is approved by the Senate it will constitute a direct attack upon our national defense program. It is of the utmost importance that the morale of the American workers must be maintained and improved. The legislative proposals would undermine and eliminate the basic rights and privileges of the American people. Nothing more subversive of American democracy has ever been proposed.

It is now the concern of every single member of the Congress of Industrial Organizations and of any other American to make certain that Congress does not pass any such repressive anti-labor legislation.

Plan of Action

My suggestions to you are as follows:

(a) The President of each National and International Union and Organizing Committee should send an immediate communication to all the Senators. The President of each State and Local Council should send a similar communication to the Senators of their respective States.

(b) Every single local union and every single member, and the members of their families, should immediately send in their wires and letters to the President of the United States and to their respective Senators. The CIO's position is that we are against any repressive legislation and instead recommend to the President that he convene a conference of representatives of industry, organized labor, and government, to work out a program for the peaceful solution of industrial disputes subscribed to on a voluntary basis.

(c) Meetings should be arranged to include, if possible, all other groups in your community from which meetings wires and letters should be sent directly to the President of the United States and to your Senators.

The people of the nation must be aroused to the danger now confronting our country. The basic constitutional rights guaranteed under our Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States are being threatened.

It is your task to protect American democracy, which can be assured only through the defeat of the pending legislation before the Senate of the United States.

House Vote on Smith Anti-Labor Bill

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6—Following is the record of the House of Representatives vote on the Smith Bill (H. R. 6149) to hogtie labor unions and workers.

Congressmen who voted AGAINST the bill voted FOR labor.

Congressmen who voted FOR the bill voted AGAINST labor.

If your Congressman voted against the bill, send him a note of thanks.

If he voted for the bill, remind him that you'll remember his vote against labor at the next election.

AT CTAL CONFAB:

CIO Delegates Pledge Aid To Latin-American Labor

MEXICO CITY, Mexico, Dec. 6—Presence of two delegates from the CIO helped cement the unity of all western hemisphere workers at the second Congress of the Confederation of Latin American Workers (CTAL).

Reid Robinson, CIO vice-president and head of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, and Pres. Irwin DeShetler of the Federation of Glass, Ceramic & Silica Sand Workers, brought greetings to the Latin American workers' delegates, and pledged the support of the CIO to build the Good Neighbor Policy as an instrument in the war against Fascist aggression.

Robinson and DeShelter came to Mexico City as fraternal delegates of the CIO. They were named by Pres. Murray during the fourth CIO convention in Detroit.

A high-light of the week-long convention, which brought together 42 representatives of the organized workers in all Latin American nations, was the stirring address of Pres. Camacho of Mexico. He hailed the work of the CTM (the Confederation of Mexican Workers) and spoke in praise of the record of Vivente Lombardo Toledano, CTAL president and former head of the CTM.

ROBINSON SPEAKS

Immediately after the Mexican chief executive had spoken, CIO Vice-Pres. Robinson took the floor to emphasize the pleasure of the American delegates at this evidence of the falsity of rumors that Camacho was breaking his friendly relationship with Mexican labor.

These rumors — together with others that Mexico's president is undoing the liberal work of his predecessor, Ex-Pres. Cardenas —have been widely circulated by Mexico's Nazi Fifth Column, which has been seeking to cause disruption and disunity in the nation.

ANTI-FASCIST PROGRAM

Indication that Hitler's agents are making little headway with this propaganda line was the CTAL's pledge of cooperation with the United States national defense program, and its call for hemispheric unity to aid the foes of the Nazi government.

Demonstrating the strong anti-fascist tone of the meeting was the resolution on foreign policy.

It pledged development of an intensive campaign for material and moral aid to all peoples like those of the Soviet Union and England who are fighting in the first line of battle.

"War against the totalitarian regimes," the resolution continued, "is the war of the Latin American peoples, a vital war in defense of Latin American interests."

HIT NAZIS' ACTIVITIES

The Congress also called upon Latin American countries to put an end to the flagrant fifth column activities of the diplomatic corps of the German, Italian and Franco-Spanish governments in South and Central America.

In another statement, the Congress pledged its support to the U. S. defense program and recorded its favor of the United States' establishing air and naval bases throughout Latin America provided that it recognizes and preserves the independence of the southern nations.

GREETINGS FROM CIO

Both Robinson and DeShetler brought greetings to the Latin American workers from the 5,000,000 members of the CIO.

Robinson stressed the need of united anti-fascist activity by the workers of all American nations, and pointed out that Wall Street imperialism is not representative of the sentiments of the people of the United States towards their southern neighbors.

He warned that while many persons in high corporate and financial circles are parading as anti-fascists now, that they may emerge at some future day as friends of fascism rather than submit to the growth of democracy and better standards for the working people.

"It is labor that realizes, that guarantees the independence of the people of Latin America," he told the delegates, who gave the CIO vice-president a rousing welcome.

DE SHETLER'S ADDRESS

DeShetler expressed gratification both for himself and for Robinson at the "generous welcome" to the American visitors.

"We bring you greetings as fraternal delegates from the CIO convention, which has just been concluded in the city of Detroit," DeShetler said, "from the five million members of the CIO organized in the basic and mass production industries of the nation, from all the officers of the CIO, and in particular, Philip Murray, our great President, and James B. Carey, our secretary."

After reviewing labor's increasing participation in the nation's defense program against the Nazis, DeShetler said American labor is determined that the post-war peace will be written in the interests of the peoples of the world.

SEEK UNDERSTANDING

"Let us assure you that organized labor in the United States seeks understanding of the peculiar problems which have beset labor and the peoples of Latin America, generally," DeShetler declared.

"Nor are we ignorant of the selfish, or at best paternalistic policies which have been followed by the great industrial nations in their dealings with nations of Central America and South America. We are beginning to understand how fully it has been true that your nations have been relegated to a semi-colonial status in international councils.

POST-WAR PLANNING

"We give you our solemn promise that as the CIO gains in power and in influence in determining policies of government and industry in the United States, these things will be changed in the international sphere.

"We stand committed to support for the full and equal representation of all Latin American nations on a democratic basis in carrying out the program of the defense of the Western Hemisphere, and in solving our war-time and peace-time problems in the production and distribution of goods."

Art Meets Labor--Oil Campaign Sponsors Poster Contest

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6—The world of art joined today with the world of labor, to the mutual advantage of each.

CIO artists are going to compete for prizes in a poster contest to spur the organizing campaign of the CIO oil workers. For the artist, it'll mean sizeable cash awards. To the oil workers, it will bring the talents of some of the nation's top artists to rouse the petroleum industry's unorganized workers to the value of CIO unionism.

Announcement of the unique contest was made here today by Edwin S. Smith, director of the Oil Workers Organizing Campaign, and Lewis Merrill, head of the United Office and Professional Workers—in whose varied membership there is a large contingent of artists, designers, layout experts, advertising men and film workers.

The two union officials announced that the Robert Marshall Foundation has contributed a sum of money to be distributed to the creators of the posters which are judged to capture best the spirit of the oil campaign. First prize will be $150, with additional royalties for large quantities of reproductions of the best poster. There'll be two prizes of $100 each and ten of $25.

The contest is open to all members of the United Office & Professional Workers.

THREE-MAN JURY

The jury which will select the best posters is composed of Smith, Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers Intl. Union, and Rockwell Kent, prominent American artist, who has been active in organizing white-collar workers in New York City.

"I have long felt that American artists can play an important part in the advancement of labor's interests," Smith declared. "Certainly, there could be no more inspiring theme for artists than that furnished by the upward struggle of labor for establishment of its democratic rights.

"This poster contest will not only be of direct assistance to the Oil Workers in their organization campaign, but it marks an important link in forging more closely American labor and American art."

ARTISTS SET RULES

UOPWA Pres. Merrill pointed out that the contest differs from most in that the conditions and rules "have been drawn up by the artists themselves. They were prepared so that they would not only ensure the Oil Workers Organizing Campaign the best possible posters but also result in fair returns to competing artists."

Win Niagara Election by 2½--1 Margin

Niagara Falls, N. Y., Jan. 6.—The management of the Carborundum Co., which once wasted an afternoon of negotiations with District 50, United Mine Workers, by demanding proof of the UMWA's existence and of questioning the union's claim to majority status, got its answer this week.

In an NLRB election, District 50 received 1,825 votes to 731 for the AFL and 273 for neither union.

The workers are asking for immediate contract negotiations.

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

Word comes of the terrific trouncing handed the AFL in NLRB elections in 14 "feeder plants" of the Ford Motor Co. in the Detroit area. These elections, in plants which supply River Rouge with parts for Ford cars, were sought by the AFL despite the CIO United Automobile Workers' union shop contract with the company.

The results show that Ford workers realize that only CIO can protect their interests. The UAW-CIO won all 14 elections, by an over-all margin of 30 to 1. The tabulation:

UAW-CIO	2,178
AFL	70
No Union	104

There's ample proof that the CIO is the labor organization in the auto industry, just as it's the only labor organization in all the nation's mass production industries. It's about time that Congressional Tories who would like to shackle labor come to realize that moves to disrupt the CIO are disruptive to national defense as well.

HELP TO HITLER

The splendid response to the CIO call for united action against the passage of vicious legislation to shackle labor was climaxed by a meeting, crowded to capacity, of representatives from all the unions affiliated with the CIO throughout the nation.

Labor has offered its services to the nation through deliberation at the CIO National Convention and needs no repressive legislation to bring this about. It is up to the law-makers to see to it that this offer of the CIO is accepted fully and wholesomely. It is the real effective way to enhance the cause of national defense.

Repressive labor legislation would have been a great help to Hitler there. When the workers know they are getting a square deal and proper representation and participation in the nation's business, they will respond because they will have confidence. Our own national effort must be based upon confidence. A strong labor movement is the greatest defense of democracy—our program of organizing the unorganized must continue unrestricted and unabated.

Yelverton Cowhered, regional director, in Birmingham, reports the Textile Workers Union of America won an election against the AFL among the employes of the Aponaug Mfg. Co. at Kosciusko, Miss. This is the first CIO victory in this state.

Paul R. Christopher in Tennessee reports at Harriman, scene of the flogging of organizers Homer Wilson and Oscar Wiles in Roane County, the Mead Corp. signed a contract with District 50, UMWA, with many gains for the 160 employes.

Joseph Angelo, regional director, in Fairmont, W. Va., reports the signing of a closed shop contract with the Peerless Laundry Wet-Wash, Inc., in Morgantown, and Local 374, Allied Service Workers, with increases in wages and reduction in working hours.

United Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Employes of America have signed a closed shop, check-off contract with the Boston Department Store in Chicago, covering 1,100 employes.

ELECTION VICTORY

Lee Hall reports two victories on the part of SWOC; one at Wire Mill and Wire Rope Mills of the Bethlehem Co., in Williamsport, Pa., with SWOC receiving 669 as against 369 for no union—successful in election among maintenance of way employes of the Philadelphia, Bethlehem and New England Railroad Company which serves a plant of Bethlehem Steel Corp., with result of SWOC being chosen as the bargaining agency with no opposition.

Hugh Thompson, CIO regional director in Buffalo, and who directs District 50, UMWA activities in that area, reports a smashing victory at the Carborundum Company's plant at Niagara Falls, with the following results:

District 50, 1,825; AFL, 731.

There are approximately 3,200 workers employed at this plant and this achievement has great possibilities in bringing organization to the workers engaged in chemicals in the old Buffalo- Niagara area where there are more than 30,000 chemical workers employed.

Adolph Germer, director of organization among the Woodworkers, reports an overwhelming vote in favor of the increased per capita tax. This now will enable a real organizing drive to get under way to organize the unorganized workers in this industry.

STUDY MINE DISPUTE: Members of the three-man arbitration board appointed by Pres. Roosevelt discuss issues involved in the United Mine Workers' demand for the Union shop in the captive coal mines. Calling All Workers:

Use of Radio to Organize Gets Results In Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 6—Organization by radio is one of the techniques which is being successfully used by the Los Angeles Industrial Union Council to bring thousands of new workers into the CIO.

The Council's nightly radio program, "Our Daily Bread," is also used to disseminate CIO news of local and general interest, and to popularize the CIO viewpoint on matters of public concern.

For instance, full coverage was given to the National CIO Convention, an entire program being given to a re-broadcast of President Philip Murray's famous acceptance speech. All important actions and resolutions of the convention were fully reported over the air to an audience estimated at a quarter of a million persons.

HOW THEY DO IT

The organizing technique has been worked out to a degree where excellent results are assured. Suppose that an affiliated union is conducting an organizing drive in plant "X." The drive needs a push to obtain a majority. There is still some timidity among the workers, and some confusion about the CIO.

A worker is selected from the plant, on the basis of his popularity among the men. He is interviewed on the air by the CIO broadcaster, giving a special message to his fellow workers. They are assured listeners, because on the day of the broadcast, there has been a leaflet distribution among them telling them that one of the men from their plant will broadcast especially to them that night.

The worker answers their special problems, describes the CIO, and winds up with an invitation to all the workers in plant "X" to attend a mass rally on the following night.

WORKS LIKE A CHARM

Use of the radio works like a charm.

An important part of the technique is to keep the name of the speaker a secret until he actually broadcasts. This whets the curiosity of the men in the plant and insures an interested audience. The men are as much interested to find out who the speaker will be as they are to hear his message.

Then when he comes to work the next morning and the boss doesn't fire him, confidence grows—and so does the CIO.

HELPS IN NEGOTIATING

The radio program also frequently proves to be invaluable in contract negotiations. A blow-by-blow description of a haggling employer, striving by trick and device to prevent his employes from winning a good contract, frequently softens things up and helps the union win good wage scales and improved working conditions for its members. Employers and their attorneys are regular listeners, and they react to radio publicity as quickly as the workers.

Speakers Expose Tory Plans

Washington, Dec. 6.—Officials of CIO unions were on the radio several times last week presenting labor's views on anti-strike and wage-freezing proposals in Congress.

Speaking on the American Economic Foundation's Sunday program, Pres. Ray Edmundson of the Illinois CIO Council warned against anti-strike legislation as dangerous to national defense and national morale.

CIO Vice Pres. Joseph Curran, head of the Natl. Maritime Union, told a nationwide audience listening to the Town Meeting of the Air program that the "sensible way to win the battle for production is to encourage and strengthen democratic labor unions." He urged governmental adoption of the Murray Council Plan as the best way to help defeat Hitler by boosting U. S. arms production.

170,000 FACE JOB LOSS

The threat of unemployment for 170,000 auto workers within 60 days was cited by Sec.-Treas. George Addes of the CIO auto union as one reason for giving labor an opportunity to help direct the defense program. The UAW-CIO official, speaking on an NBC Blue network program, charged that efforts to hamstring labor come from the "selfish greed of corporations" and from their friends in Government.

Speaking over WAPI in Birmingham, Ala., Pres. William Mitch of District 20, United Mine Workers, defended the UMW's effort to win the union shop for captive miners and decried propaganda attempts to smear Pres. John L. Lewis and the membership of the union as "unAmerican."

"The coal miners will produce plenty of coal, as they have in the past," Mitch declared, as soon as certain corporate interests grant the UMW its just demands.

Citizens' Group Backs Newspaper Guild Strikers

NEW YORK, Dec. 6—The American Newspaper Guild, engaged in a strike struggle against the powerful Scripps-Howard publishing chain, today had the support of a Citizens' Committee of prominent personages.

The Guild's strike against the Birmingham Post for wage increases and the Guild shop has closed the paper down for the past several weeks, while local and national managements of the chain passed the buck on responsibility from Birmingham to New York and back again.

Acting head of the Citizens' Committee is Emile Gauvreau, former editor of Hearst's New York Mirror. Serving as members are Quentin Reynolds, noted war correspondent; Msgr. John A. Ryan of Catholic University; Prof. Colston Warne of Amherst College; Pres. R. J. Thomas of the CIO auto union; Pierre vau Paassen, author and correspondent; August Lindbergh of Birmingham, and others.

BARES CONDITIONS

Commenting on the strike, Gavreau declared:

"In some 25 years I came up from $4 a week to $30,000 a year to discover that my job was to treat those under me as galley slaves and to crush any movement in favor of collective bargaining or organized labor. I was told that I was not being paid $30,000 a year to cry over the help.

"The public would be horrified if it knew of the conditions existing on certain newspapers——a small, wilful minority, I hope and believe—whose workers exist on salaries so meagre as to prevent them from affording decent clothes to represent what our nation proudly refers to as the dignity of the press.

"Typical of all this is the case of the Birmingham's Post, some of whose workers are required to support families on less than $20 a week."

While the strike kept the Birmingham paper closed, Guild officials continued to expose the company-spawned Alabama Newspaper Employes, Inc., at Natl. Labor Relations Board hearings. The outfit was formed shortly after the walkout, and has sought unsuccessfully to promote back-to-work movements.

Meanwhile Guild walkouts had shut down two papers in smaller cities—the Times, in Chester, Pa., a Philadelphia suburb; and the Gazette in Aliquippa, a union stronghold not far from Pittsburgh.

PARLEYS END

Negotiations on the Chester Times were dropped when no agreement was reached in lengthy conferences attended by James Dewey, veteran Labor Dept. conciliator and a resident of Chester. The 34 strikers are seeking the five-day week, the Guild shop and wage boosts.

At Aliquippa—where the Steel Workers Organizing Committee has thousands of members among employes of the big Jones & Laughlin mill — community support quickly came to the aid of Guildsmen when their strike shut the local paper.

A local citizens' committee, consisting of a Protestant minister, two Catholic priests, a teacher, dentist, lawyer and the head of the Board of Trade, heard both sides of the dispute and told the Guild it had recommended to the publisher that he grant the Guild demand. The publisher refused.

At both Chester and Aliquippa the striking unionists started publication of their own papers to fill the communities' need for local news, and the two papers are receiving wide support and heavy advertising patronage.

Ask Increase At Institution

New York, Dec. 6 — While the cost of living continues to rise, the Federation for Support of Jewish Philanthropic Societies continues to stall on the demand of the CIO Social Service Employes Union for a 10 per cent pay increase.

The union picketed the Federation this week as the latest move in a series of protests that began with a 15-minute and later a 30-minute stoppage the first week in November. A request for negotiations on the pay demand was first made Sept. 18.

Charge Union Employe Was Labor Spy

San Francisco, Dec. 6—The Harry Bridges Defense Committee said today that "an exhaustive investigation conducted for several weeks," has unearthed "uncontestable proof" that James D. O'Neil, former CIO publicity man in San Francisco and a government witness in the Harry Bridges deportation hearing, "has been a labor spy in the secret pay of the Intelligence Department of the United States Navy."

"We have undisputable evidence that O'Neil has been spying within the trade union movement for a number of years," the statement declared. "During this period he has been making reports, oral and written, to the Navy's Intelligence Dept. as a paid undercover operative.

ANTI-LABOR REPORTS

"The reports turned in by O'Neil were erroneous, viciously anti-labor and were labor espionage of the lowest and most depraved kind."

The committee alleged "that O'Neil is presently planning to sell to the highest bidder a series of newspaper or magazine articles containing a purported 'expose' against the Congress of Industrial Organizations."

O'Neil was involved in the recent Bridges deportation hearing when the FBI produced a statement allegedly signed by the former union official charging that he had seen Bridges pasting dues stamps into a Communist party membership. O'Neil at the time disclaimed the FBI document as a forgery and was subsequently found guilty of perjury in federal district court. He is now out on bail pending appeal of his case.

CONSPIRED WITH FBI

The Bridges Defense Committee said its investigation "established that O'Neil conspired with the FBI early in the second Bridges deportation proceedings." The hitch in this plot to get Bridges came when O'Neil refused to take the witness stand and testify to the tissue of lies he and the FBI had prepared.

"The truth of the matter is that Albert del Guercio, the prosecutor, and O'Neil were planning a 'Charlie McCarthy' act against Bridges, but when the time came for O'Neil to take the stand, he lacked the courage to face cross-examination from Mr. Bridges' attorney," the committee said.

After determining the truth in the matter, the Defense Committee said it stopped financing O'Neil's defense counsel, with the result that O'Neil "resorted to slander and vilification of this committee, Mr. Bridges' attorney and the CIO."

Canadian Gold Mine Strikers Win Wide Support

KIRKLAND LAKE, Ont., Dec. 6—Mobilization of the North American labor movement behind the 3,800 striking gold miners here was given new impetus last week by several developments in the historic CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers' struggle for recognition. These developments were, briefly:

1. Nineteen Canadian labor leaders, representing more than 100,000 organized workers, held an emergency conference and pledged full support of their organizations to the strike of Kirkland Lake Mine & Mill Workers Union 240 against eight gold mining companies here. An appeal to all Canadian Unions was issued by the conference.

2. The Steel Workers Organizing Committee in Canada forwarded $20,000 to be used if necessary in prosecuting the strike to a successful conclusion. Other international Unions in Canada had promised similar support.

3. Strike emergency committees were established in 29 Canadian centers where workers in many industries pledged a day's pay toward the strike relief fund. The first local to answer the appeal was the Windsor Ford Local of the CIO United Automobile Workers, which sent a thousand dollars from its local treasury.

4. The Union's International office sent a substantial contribution, and President Robinson sent an appeal to all locals and auxiliaries for immediate financial support of the strike.

STRIKE RANKS SOLID

The strike itself continues with maximum effectiveness, the mines remaining completely shutdown. Despite the provocative action of provincial police in turning the ordinarily peaceful Kirkland Lake community into an armed camp, there has been no disturbance.

A parade of Union members through the town's streets during the week was one of the largest in Kirkland Lake history. Two thousand striking miners took part, while the remaining members had their places on the picket lines.

Twenty men were awaiting trial Wednesday on charges of "intimidation." All cases are trivial and charges were made only to justify the presence of the large body of police, sent to Kirkland by labor-hating Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn of Ontario over the protests of municipal officials.

LABOR WINS ELECTION

A municipal election here on Monday climaxed a campaign in which the dominant issue was the strike. Reeve (Mayor) R. J. Carter, who has supported Local 240 in its fight against the operators, was re-elected over Ann Shipley, who was sponsored by the mine owners. In winning the election, Carter defeated the combined Liberal and Conservative political machines. His election was hailed by Local 240 as endorsement of the strike by the voters.

Will Seek New Trial For 18 In 'Sedition' Case

Minneapolis, Dec. 6—Defense motions for a new trial for eighteen members of the Socialist Workers Party were to be argued in federal district court today following their conviction on charges of conspiracy to create insubordination in the Army.

The group—a number of whom are members of Local 544, United Construction Workers Organizing Committee — were acquitted on charges of sedition brought under a law first passed in 1861. Previously five other defendants had been fired after the judge had ordered a directed verdict of acquittal in their cases.

In its decision the jury recommended leniency for the convicted persons. They face possible jail sentences running up to 18 years. Albert Goldman, one of the defendants and counsel for the group, said the case would be appealed up to the U. S. Supreme Court.

Republic Plant Goes CIO

Cleveland, Dec. 6 — The Steel Workers Organizing Committee has been certified by the National Labor Relations Board as exclusive bargaining agency for the employes of the Truscon Warehouse Division of Republic Steel Corp.

The certification of the SWOC to represent this group was the result of a check of union cards against the payroll of the company.

William F. Donovan, district director of SWOC, stated that although this is not a large group, about 30 in all, the certification is important in that it brings the last plant of Republic Steel in Cleveland under the banner of the SWOC.

CIO MESSAGE TO NATION: 'WE PLEDGE ALL OUR AID'

U. S. ENTERS THE WAR: Here's the scene in the U. S. Capitol as the President addressed his message to members of the House and Senate on Dec. 8. Shortly afterwards, U. S. entered the war against the Axis.

Wires, Resolutions Pour In From All Sections of U. S. Offering Full Assistance

(See Stories on Inside Pages)

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13—The CIO went "all-out" in support of the nation's war effort this week.

Thousands of resolutions from local unions and speeches by national CIO officials were implemented by speedy action in many sections of the country to assure full production of armaments and other defense materials as a CIO contribution to defeating the Fascist hordes of Germany, Italy and Japan.

Pres. Philip Murray, speaking to the entire nation in a radio broadcast a few hours after the U. S. declaration of war against the Japanese, told of the CIO's determination to help in every way possible to bring about a victorious conclusion to the country's fight with the Axis.

He recommended adoption of the Industry Council Plan as the best method of bringing production up to necessary levels. Murray warned that passage of the Smith Bill or of other anti-labor legislation would have a definitely harmful effect on national unity and workers' morale.

Murray's advice to the government was seconded by Allan S. Haywood, director of organization, and by Vice-Pres. R. J. Thomas, both of whom spoke on the radio during the week.

It appeared, meanwhile, that saner, wiser minds than those of the poll-tax Congressmen would prevail on Capitol Hill, and that the Smith Bill would be treated to the "cooling off" it recommended as one panacea for labor. The Senate Committee on Education and Labor deferred action on the bill pending the meeting of a labor, government, industry conference called by Pres. Roosevelt following repeated requests from CIO.

Object of the conference will be to explore possibilities for adoption of a national labor policy that will permit voluntary mediation, and a minimum interruption to production, while preserving labor's basic rights.

YWCA Signs With CIO In Capital

Washington, Dec. 13—The United Office and Professional Workers of America today signed a contract with the Young Women's Christian Association, covering 32 employes in its two buildings here.

Pay increases of $2 per week, establishment of a 40-hour work week for women and a 48-hour week for men, time-and-a-half for overtime, accumulative sick leave and recognized union grievance machinery were among the gains won by the union for the YWCA employes.

The contract, according to Sadie H. Sokolove, president of the union, represents "the opening gun in a campaign to organize all office, professional and maintenance workers in social agencies and other non-profit organizations in Washington."

PART OF BIG DRIVE

"This is part of a nation-wide drive," Miss Sokolove said, "being conducted by the United Office and Professional Workers of America to bring the benefits of collective bargaining to a group of workers who have long suffered lack of security and lack of opportunity for improvement of their conditions."

AGAINST SMITH BILL: Anti-fascist sentiment of the workers was expressed at this mass meeting in Newark, N. J., supported by by both CIO and AFL unions. Speakers demanded defeat of the Smith anti-labor bill and of other anti-democratic measures now in Congress, and for defeat of the Axis aggressors.

Ask Freedom For Seamen In Jersey

Newark, N. J., Dec. 13—The New Jersey Industrial Union Council has decided to assist actively the Committee to Free Panchelly, Woodworth and Brown in an effort to secure a pardon for three union seamen incarcerated in New Jersey prisons since the seamen's strike of 1937.

Announcement of the Council's action came from Pres. Irving Abramson, who said it carries into effect an endorsement of the pardon campaign instituted by the CIO convention at Detroit.

LABOR IN THE BLACKOUT:

California Labor Unifies Forces to Help Defeat Hitlerism

By E. E. WARD

Los Angeles, Dec. 13—With danger of a Japanese air raid a momentary possibility, 400 local union officials met on Dec. 9 at the call of the Los Angeles Industrial Union Council and unanimously endorsed plans for immediate mobilization of its 100,000 members for civilian defense here.

President Roosevelt's call for a seven-day week "or any other work schedule that will insure the defeat of fascism," was unanimously endorsed.

SUPPORT PROGRAM

Other unanimous actions were: declarations of the necessity for the unity of all labor; approval of President Roosevelt's plans to increase war production; the utilizing and expanding of all existing production facilities; urging the calling of a nation-wide conference of labor, industry and government; and abandonment of anti-labor legislation.

The Council voted support of President Roosevelt in any moves he may make for full military alliance with Britain, Russia and China against Germany, Japan and Italy.

Detailed plans for action on all these subjects were adopted in the most completely unified and determined CIO meeting ever held here.

By HAROLD ROSSMAN

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 13—As American land, air and naval forces engaged the Japanese aggressors at far-flung points in the Pacific and guarded the West Coast against the threatened attack, the organized labor movement of California this week plunged into the battle of the home front.

Instantaneous pledges of support by state and local CIO Industrial Union Councils and local unions were followed immediately by concrete steps for greater production, watchfulness against sabotage, participation in civilian defense, and maintenance of morale.

Scheduled strikes were called off by CIO unions and efforts made for quick settlement of outstanding disputes. Responding to union appeals, thousands of CIO members hastened to register for civilian defense or to volunteer for service in the state guard.

Calm in the face of air raid alarms and blackouts, the CIO unionists increased their pressure for settlement of priorities and sub-contracting bottlenecks—conscious only of one goal, production and more production for our armed force. At the same time they renewed appeals for defeat of anti-labor legislation which might be harmful to national unity.

'UNITY FOR VICTORY'

Gathering on Monday, only 24 hours after the unprovoked violation of American territory by the Japanese, representatives of the AFL, CIO and the Brotherhoods drew up and signed an epoch-making declaration of all-out labor support for America's victory effort.

Adopting the slogan, "Unity for Victory," the declaration urged upon the membership of all groups in the family of labor:

"We recommend that all factional, partisan and political difference be immediately forgotten and that all labor organizations unite to win the war."

Led by State Sec. Louis Goldblatt and S. F. Council President George Wilson for the CIO, and State Sec. Edward D. Vandeleur and San Francisco Council Pres. John F. Shelley for the AFL, the unionists pledged settlement of all jurisdictional disputes and issues against employers by means which will not interrupt production for defense.

JOINT MEETING

An unprecedented and historic joint meeting of the San Francisco District Industrial Union Council, CIO; the Central Labor Council, AFL; and representatives of the unaffiliated Railroad Brotherhoods to effect a united labor policy will be held within a few days, probably early next week.

Committees from the two councils and the brotherhoods were meeting Thursday in the AFL Labor Council Hall to set the date for the momentous meeting.

Policies to be decided will include greater participation by labor in civilan defense, both in administraton and other capacities, and participation in other phases of the war effort.

John F. (Jack) Shelley, president of the AFL Central Labor Council declared:

"No matter what our disagreements have been, we have to put them aside and pull together because a great amount of the leadership in this situation is going to depend on labor."

Acting separately but simultaneously, the various CIO councils of California moved to swing their membership behind the war effort. First to meet after the outbreak of war, the Alameda County CIO Council paced the state in responding to the emergency.

DISCUSS MEASURES

A special enlarged meeting of the San Francisco CIO Council will be held Friday in the new CIO headquarters at 150 Golden Gate Avenue, to "take action on measures which will enable the CIO unions in San Francisco to give most effective aid to our country." All officers and executive board members of the council's affiliates have been invited to the meeting.

In connection with the scheduled meeting of the state CIO executive board tomorrow and Sunday, an enlarged meeting will be held all day Sunday at the Los Angeles CIO Building to which all CIO organizations of the state have been urged to send one or more representatives.

GETS CIO CHECK: Margaret Bondfield, former British Labor Minister, expresses her thanks to Pres. Irving Abramson of the New Jersey CIO during the council's convention last week for a check for $15,000 for the CIO children's village in Britain. The check was the first payment from the state labor group, which in cooperation with the British-American Ambulance Corps has been collecting funds for a village in Britain to house the kids of bombed-out families. Campaign won endorsement from the national CIO at the Detroit convention.

'Unswerving Loyalty' Pledged by Jersey CIO

CAMDEN, N. J., Dec. 13—A pledge of "unswerving loyalty to our country in this hour of danger," was voted by delegates to the fourth annual convention of the New Jersey CIO Council, which was in session here when the news of Japan's attack on the United States was received.

Declaring that "this attack by Japan is an attack by the Axis powers on our democracy and our way of life," the convention passed a resolution which stated:

"It is the duty of every worker in the state and the nation to support the President of these United States in all military means that he may use to repel aggression. We pledge to make every needed sacrifice of our labor, our fortunes and our lives to defeat this new menace to our national security."

AGAINST SMITH BILL

On the first day, the convention voted to suspend the order of business to take up the passage of the anti-strike Smith bill passed by the House of Representatives. Delegates stood for one minute in silence to express their grief "for the death of democracy" voiced by the House.

A petition 20 feet long addressed to the President and members of the Senate urging them to "erase this blot on American democracy and let free American labor remain free" was signed by all the delegates.

Calling the Smith bill "the first legislative step toward fascism in America" the petition declared: "The Axis powers throttled democracy in Germany and Italy by much the same measures—namely, the shackling and destruction of organized labor. All the gains that the laboring people of America have attained under the present Administration are at one stroke wiped out and destroyed."

MISS BONDFIELD SPEAKS

Miss Margaret Bondfield, former British Minister of Labor, in a speech at the convention called for more aid to Russia from both America and England. Later she was presented with a check for $15,000 as the New Jersey Council's first contribution to a fund for the aid of workers' children.

At the final session, delegates re-elected Irving Abramson, president of the Council by acclamation and elected Carl Holderman secretary-treasurer.

Connecticut CIO Parley Backs U. S. War Policy

By WILLIAM CAHN

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Dec. 13—Unanimous support of the foreign policy of President Roosevelt together with a pledge to organize 100,000 workers into the CIO by next December, were highlights of the annual convention of the Connecticut State Industrial Union Council which took place at the Hotel Taft here Dec. 5, 6 and 7.

Thomas R. Molloy, Hartford, veteran leader of the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, was re-elected as president of the Council for the fourth time.

John J. Driscoll, Waterbury, Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers Union, was re-elected secretary-treasurer by unanimous vote.

HEAR WAR NEWS

The convention took place dramatically at the moment of the bombing of American possessions by the Japanese. When news of this was brought to the convention floor, the 350 delegates instructed their Resolutions Committee to reconvene and draft a suitable resolution to express the needs of the occasion.

As a result, the convention went on record unanimously calling upon President Roosevelt and Congress to declare war on Japan.

The convention also urged the American government to "serve warning upon all other fascist powers that any further hostile acts toward the integrity and security of this country will be met by like action."

PRODUCTION PLEDGE

"We hereby pledge ourselves," the resolution concluded, "to produce all necessary weapons and materials of war; and we call upon the President and the Congress of the United States to weld all of the American people together in this grave hour by refusing to shackle labor and thereby deprive us the opportunity to do our fullest part to defend our country."

The action in this emergency came following the unanimous approval of a resolution which urged all-out aid to Great Britain, the Soviet Union and China in their fight against fascist aggression. The convention also unanimously approved a resolution demanding of Connecticut Senators and President of the Nation to defeat the anti-strike bills passed by Congress recently.

Blame for their passage in Congress was placed on "poll-tax Congressmen, ably assisted by the leading America First political spokesmen and die-hard, labor-hating Republican isolationists."

BIG GROWTH

An increase of almost 93 per cent in per capita payments at the present time over last year, was recorded by the CIO Council in the report of Secretary Driscoll. There are now some 65,000 CIO workers in Connecticut, according to the figures presented.

Whitney Backs CIO 'Y' Drive

New York, Dec. 13—(FP)—Pres. A. F. Whitney of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, unaffiliated, has asked the YMCA to bargain with the CIO Social Service Employes Union here. The SSEU, affiliated with the United Office & Professional Workers, is conducting a drive to organize New York YMCA's and recently picketed the railroad branch, where many members of the brotherhood stay between runs.

'A People's War,'—Hillman

Washington, Dec. 13—Sidney Hillman, associate director-general of the OPM, today urged labor to let no obstacles "interfere with our war effort."

"This is war—a people's war—a war of the common man against old tyranny and new barbarisms," he said.

"We will face hardships and make sacrifices.

"Labor is more united than ever before in this great war undertaking. All labor has pledged its fullest cooperation and participation. Ours is a labor movement unswerving in its devotion to the aims of freedom and in its determination to keep America strong and free.

"Joined in this high purpose, labor can help not only to crush the Axis aggressors, but also to build a new world of peace and security.

"The time is now. Democracy's destiny is in the balance. Labor will never fail the cause of freedom."

Bares Racket To Attract Workers To Non-Existent Defense Jobs

St. Louis, Mo., Dec. 13—Certain defense contractors here are needlessly advertising for outside workers, ignoring the fact that there is a sufficient supply of qualified resident workers, many of whom have already been thrown out of their jobs by priority orders, Luther M. Slinkard, secretary of the St. Louis CIO Council reported at the local hearing held by the House Committee Investigating National Defense Migration.

"Experience has shown that Labor suffers first and most from layoffs and from higher prices caused by shortages, and it has most to lose from any failure to defend our democracy," Slinkard said.

"Therefore the fundamental problem which must receive the attention of industry, Labor and government is to utilize the local Labor supply affected by priorities unemployment in the defense program where every such individual can make his contribution to victory in the battle of production."

Declaring that firms holding defense contracts should be required to give preference to available local labor, the CIO Council secretary urged that needed workers be hired through an authorized local labor agency, such as the State Employment Office.

Influx of outside workers into the St. Louis area have already reached an alarming stage, Slinkard reported, and "will become much more serious when the large defense plants actually get into production, unless some reasonable measures of safeguard are applied."

Slinkard charged that company agents were engaging in "uncontrolled and unwarranted advertising, gate hiring and scouting beyond the commuting distance".

Unions Pledge Full Aid To U. S. War Effort Against Axis Nations

Push Drive For Price Control Bill

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13—Declaring it "essential to the victory of this nation that its working people be maintained in good health, full efficiency and well-being," CIO Pres. Philip Murray this week called on the Senate to pass "effective price control legislation," based on the bill "proposed by responsible government officials."

Murray's call for a price control bill "with teeth in it" was made in testimony before the Senate Banking Committee, where the mangled bill recently passed by the House went for a report before Senate passage. The House bill, passed after defeat of wage freezing features, threw overboard the administration's licensing provisions and made other weakening changes.

"The men and women of the CIO desire more ardently than any other body of citizens the destruction of Hitler and his allies," Murray's testimony said.

"They are, significantly, men and women who stand in the industrial front lines where the nation's armament is being forged. The nation has no more important assets than the continued sound health, the full efficiency and well being of these working people."

LIVING COSTS

For this reason, Murray pointed out, the nation's security requires an effective price control bill to hold down living costs that have already risen 11 percent since 1939, and are now jumping at the rate of 1.5 percent a month.

Turning to wage freezing plans still being pushed despite the decisive defeat in the House, Murray reaffirmed CIO opposition on the ground that wage control would not prevent inflation, would lower living standards, upset established collective bargaining relations that now deal with wage questions, and be administratively impossible. In addition, he pointed out, wage controls "would be most unfair to American working people" in view of enormous profits being made from war production by corporations.

NEED FOR COUNCILS

In urging an effective price control bill, Murray emphasized the need for adopting the CIO Industry Council Plan as providing "the necessary machinery for establishing maximum production, for maintaining industrial peace, and for regulating by agreement the proper relationship between industrial income and wages."

Back FDR Birthday Ball Plans

Washington, Dec. 13—Support of the Committee for the Celebration of the President's Birthday, which helps finance the nation's fight against infantile paralysis, was voiced this week by CIO Pres. Murray.

The CIO leader sent this message to Keith Morgan, head of the Committee:

"I sincerely welcome this opportunity to express my commendation for the work the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis is doing.

"It is quite obvious that to continue this splendid undertaking in the field of research in aiding individuals and communities, requires additional funds. To those who may look to me for guidance in this matter, I urge them to lend every support to the Foundation.

"I feel highly honored at your invitation to become a member of the National Committee. I accept the appointment with gratitude."

Smith Bill Shelved Pending U. S. Parley

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13—A major gain for the national war effort was seen this week in the announced postponement of hearings on the Smith bill and other anti-labor bills by the Senate Labor Committee, pending a conference of labor, industry and government to work out voluntary means of settling disputes that might interrupt production.

The conference plan, first proposed by Pres. Murray and carried to Congress by the CIO workers' lobby that has been fighting the anti-union bills, was accepted by leaders of the Senate Committee on reports that President Roosevelt and other high government officials had approved it as a contribution toward crushing the nation's fascist enemies.

President Murray described the move as "an achievement of the CIO" and declared it was "due in large part to the good work done by the delegates sent here to Washington by CIO affiliates."

He warned, however, that the job of resisting labor-shackling laws is not finished "until all repressive bills are laid aside and the decks cleared for action to outproduce the Axis, free of all crippling restraints on the democratic process of collective bargaining."

COUNCIL PLAN

Pres. Murray later expressed the view that the eventual outcome of the conference would be a closer move by the government toward adoption of the Industry Council Plan, which would not only provide an efficient means of preventing industrial disputes but would also apply rational planning to the task of war production.

Earlier in the week the executive officers of the CIO, including Pres. Murray, Secretary Carey and the six vice-presidents, met to adopt a resolution re-defining the CIO position on the national crisis.

CIO RESOLUTION

After pointing to the CIO's convention declaration backing the nation's anti-Axis program and urging adoption of the Industry Council plan, the resolution declared in part:

"The CIO condemns the attempt to enslave American labor through the Smith bill, the Connally bill, the Ball bill and all other anti-labor measures now before the Senate and the Congress as a deliberate attempt to destroy American democracy and to cripple the national defense program."

In addition, the executive officers authorized Pres. Murray to select a delegation of CIO officers to call on Vice-President Wallace and Senate and House leaders "to urge the defeat of all repressive measures as the guarantee of all-out production."

Political observers here warned, with Pres. Murray, that the announced postponement of Smith bill hearings did not mean the danger was past, pointing out that individual Senators could move for consideration at any time.

CIO Board Meets

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13—Pres. Philip Murray called a special meeting today of the CIO's Executive Board to meet at the United Mine Workers Building in Washington.

Murray said the meeting was being held to "discuss the present war situation and the President's forthcoming labor and industry conference."

'Eager To Do Utmost,' Murray Says in Broadcast

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13—American labor this week rolled up its sleeves, spat on its hands and went to work with redoubled vigor for the defense of the United States and the military defeat of the Rome-Berlin-Tokio Axis.

Within a few hours after Nippon's treacherous attack on Hawaii the unions of the CIO had renewed their pledges of full support to the U. S. government and by the time America formally entered the war a nationwide chorus of pledges to make every needed sacrifice for full production and for defeat of Japan, Germany and Italy echoed throughout the land.

In the blacked-out industrial areas of the Pacific Coast, in the steel and auto and rubber districts of the midwest, along the Atlantic Coast's busy shipyards, in the textile centers of the South—in every locality where CIO has brought industrial democracy to the nation's workers, the pledge was unanimous: "Tell American labor what's needed, and we'll produce it."

CITES CIO POSITION

The CIO position was stated a few hours after the country's entry into the conflict by Pres. Philip Murray over an NBC network in a speech originally planned to deal only with the Smith bill and other anti-labor legislation.

"I am speaking to you tonight on behalf of five million American working men and women, members of the CIO," Pres. Murray said in slow, sober phrases, "who are ready and eager to do their utmost to defend our country against the outrageous aggression of Japanese imperialism, and to secure the final defeat of the forces of Hitler, which have plunged the whole world into a bloody war in their drive to enslave the human race."

The CIO leader said that the outbreak of war "has increased one-hundred-fold the importance of the message which I bring you tonight on behalf of these millions of Americans. It is an urgent message of the necessity for immediately enlisting the full cooperation of all elements in the production of the weapons of war and other materials needed for the success of our national effort."

WARNS AGAINST SMITH BILL

Much of Pres. Murray's 15-minute speech was devoted to the harmful effects that would result from passage of the Smith bill or other anti-labor legislation. On the other hand, he pointed out that the nation can produce on the huge scale necessary for fighting total war only through adoption of the Industry Council Plan.

Murray said that he had intended to discuss the past misdoings of big business and its hindrance to defense. "But now that war has actually been declared," he added, "I recognize that the time for recrimination over past misdoings has passed. Now is the time for all Americans of good will, for all sections of our population, to get together in the spirit of national unity, to work out the greatest degree of cooperation in our common effort."

JOB TO DO AT HOME

Allan S. Haywood, CIO director of organization, speaking a few hours after Pres. Murray on a Mutual network, reminded the nation that thousands of loyal CIO members are in the armed forces.

"The millions who remain at home to make defense weapons have an equally important role to play—they have to win the battle for production. The defeat of Hitler and his Japanese puppets depends on the uninterrupted flow of planes, tanks, guns, ships, all the weapons of defense, from the factories of America."

Haywood asserted that the defense program could best be aided by adoption of the Industry Council Plan and by scuttling of anti-labor legislation—a theme that was repeated two days later by CIO Vice-Pres. R. J. Thomas.

"Men and women of common sense and responsibility will agree with me and with the CIO, that we need more than patriotic speeches,"

Buy Defense Bonds!

Washington, Dec. 13—After the Axis attack Pres. Roosevelt said: "The lives of our soldiers and sailors—the whole future of this nation—depend upon the manner in which each and every one of us fulfills his obligation to our country."

As union members we can take immediate practical steps to fulfill that obligation. We can increase our purchases of defense savings bonds and stamps. We can insist that voluntary payroll allotment plans be installed wherever we have contracts. We can arrange that defense savings stamps be sold in our union offices along with dues stamps.

We must invest our dollars now in freedom to insure a victory for democracy.

All-Out For Victory

One single purpose, above all others, now inspires the membership of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, along with all true Americans. It is to win victory over Hitler and his Axis partners, who have attacked our country because it stood in the way of their drive for world conquest and the enslavement of the human race.

To this historic purpose, to this immediate necessity, all else must be subordinated. Until victory is won, there can be no peace, no security, no hope for human progress.

The CIO gave its answer to Hitler's world challenge at the Detroit convention. And when his Japanese allies struck the blow that brought war to the United States, the unions of the CIO and their members rose to a man, and to a woman, to make this answer one of deeds and blow for blow.

Countless members of the CIO and of CIO families are in the armed forces. And those who serve in industry ask only for the fullest opportunity to use all their brains and energies in the most efficient and maximum production of the weapons and supplies needed by the fighting men.

The CIO has long and repeatedly advanced constructive proposals for achieving all-out production for national defense, including its industry council plan and other specific proposals for major industries. It will now redouble its energies to promote and plan for ever-increasing production.

At the same time the CIO will not be lax in defending the material interests of the working people and their democratic rights. For decent wages and fair conditions are essential for industrial morale and increased production. And the voluntary effort of a free people defending its democratic rights is the best assurance that we shall out-produce the slave labor of Hitler.

All our brains and all our efforts must now be devoted to the main task of defeating the military machine of Hitler and his allies. That is the program of the CIO, that is the program of the American people. All-out for victory!

Keep Labor Free

The Senate Labor Committee has decided to hold up consideration of the Smith slave-labor bill passed by the House, and of the other anti-union measures, pending the outcome of a conference of labor, management and government representatives called by the President, as suggested by the CIO.

"This is a major achievement of the CIO," says President Philip Murray. "It is due in large part to the good work done by the delegates sent to Washington by CIO affiliates."

But this task, which also aroused the efforts of all sections of the CIO throughout the country, is not yet finished, he points out, saying: "We cannot rest until all repressive bills are laid aside and the decks cleared for action to out-produce the Axis, free of all crippling restraints on the democratic process of collective bargaining."

While labor's enemies are still determined to shackle the unions, we cannot let down our guard. We must be ready at all times to take action, as in the recent past, to keep labor free. For free labor means victory, slave labor means defeat.

Our Bill of Rights

The one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the adoption of the Bill of Rights (December 15, 1941) is an occasion deserving of particular attention at this time in our nation's history when the freedoms it proclaims are menaced by the armed assault of Hitler's Axis hordes.

The filthy doctrines of intolerance, bigotry, racial superiority and all forms of tyranny that Hitler so brazenly proclaims as the principles of his "new order" are the very antithesis of these rights.

The people's rights embodied in these amendments are particularly dear to labor. They are a charter of liberties such as working people everywhere have fought for centuries to win and to maintain, as steps to their complete emancipation from want and oppression.

In this moment of national resolve to fight through to victory over Hitler and all he stands for, let us re-dedicate ourselves to the defense of the rights we have so hardly won against undermining from within and attack from without.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

THE news of the bombing of Pearl Harbor was like a bolt of lightning that suddenly illumines the storm-darkened countryside. With startling clearness it revealed to the whole American people the landscape of a war-torn world and the character of the two forces battling for mastery.

The Japanese bombers and battleships blasted into American ears the brutal message that the world war had engulfed the United States, and that its people had no choice but to fight back with all their might against destruction or enslavement.

There was no hesitation, no doubt, nor even any diversity in the response. "All-out for victory" became the slogan of a whole country, united for this single purpose.

First and most emphatic in this response were the working people, and particularly their organized vanguard, the unions of the CIO.

The Detroit convention of the CIO issued storm signals to warn the whole membership of the approaching tornado that burst upon the United States on December 7.

It pointed out that Hitler, with his Nazi hordes and his Axis partners, was engaged in a desperate drive for world conquest that directly menaced the United States.

The world has seen other wars in the past in which imperialists have ravaged the globe, in their efforts to conquer, enslave and exploit for their profit all peoples too weak to resist them. It has seen wars between rival imperialisms, each seeking for itself a larger sphere of exploitation.

But no war has been quite so horrifying in its threat to the common people of every country as is that now launched on a world scale by Hitler and his puppet partners, the Italian Fascists and the Japanese imperialists.

Hitler and Mussolini came to power as leaders of a violent uprising, financed by reactionary wealth, to suppress the labor movement and all forms of democracy in their respective countries. They also had their less successful counterparts in every other country where the ruling classes feared loss of their privileges of exploitation through the claims of labor and expanding democracy.

Once in power, these Fascist and Nazi dictatorships maintained their rule by the most ruthless suppression and persecution of all democratic elements and by feverish all-out preparation for war.

They found a natural ally in the military dictatorship of Japan, whose invasion of China and whose expansionist aims preceded and paralleled the exploits and aims of Hitler in Europe.

All the evils and horrors of previous imperialist wars are involved in the present wars of aggression of these Axis partners. But in addition to the usual plans for exploiting weaker and colonial countries, there is also a diabolical program for the systematic suppression of labor and all forms of democracy and freedom in the most highly industrialized countries, following the Nazi pattern in Germany itself.

It is not surprising therefore that the working people in every country—including those brave souls in Germany and its allied and conquered nations who risk their lives to keep alight the torch of freedom—should be in the very forefront of the struggle for the defeat of Hitlerism.

And it is not surprising that the Detroit CIO convention should have registered so emphatically the determination of American labor to aid to the limit the peoples of Great Britain, the Soviet Union and China, who have been bearing the brunt of the military struggle against Hitler and his allies.

The CIO convention took this position out of patriotic concern for the defense and security of the United States. It did so because labor has more reason than any other group to safeguard its democratic rights against Fascist doctrines inside or outside our country. And it did so in a spirit of international labor solidarity with the working and common people everywhere who are fighting to gain or defend their freedom.

Now that the United States is directly involved in the world war, the position of the CIO is so crystal clear that it needs no explanation.

Its members, as patriotic Americans, are pledged to defend their country with all their energies and with their lives, if necessary. And as members of the labor movement, the most socially progressive force in the world, they rejoice to know that all the might of their country is aligned with the peoples fighting for freedom against the dark forces of world fascism. So CIO is proud to take the lead for all-out production for victory.

Offer Plan To Lift Copper Output

Metal Miners Suggest More Efficient Operations

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12—Taking the slogan, "Production for Victory," the CIO today put forward a detailed plan for increasing output of copper and other vital metals to meet the needs of war against the Axis. The plan, prepared by Pres. Robinson of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, CIO, and made public with a supporting statement by Pres. Philip Murray, is the first to be offered since the Hitler-inspired Japanese attack on the United States.

The plan is designed to meet a metals shortage that "will cripple the defense production more seriously than enemy bombs" if not corrected in time, Murray said in presenting it.

In detailed, blueprint fashion the plan implements the Industry Council proposal of the CIO for the non-ferrous metal mining and fabricating industries, offering a way out of production bottlenecks now more dangerous than ever before.

Commenting on the plan, which calls for full use of the industry's resources, for continuous operation of mines, for basic improvements in working conditions, and for the creation of an industry council made up of representatives of workers, management and government, and for union-management production committees in each mine and plant, Murray declared:

"These proposals are eloquent testimony to the ability of organized labor to contribute to the productive output in this emergency. They make clear that maximum production can be attained only by the enlistment of labor's brains and determination in the task of production."

Declaring that "we must exert every energy, use every bit of knowledge, every production trick to produce in quantities never before dreamed possible," the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers union, "together with the entire CIO, stands ready to participate in the truest sense of national unity with management and government to guarantee our final victory."

SEVEN-POINT PLAN

The plan contains seven major points for increasing production for U. S. needs and those of "our allies in Britain, the Soviet Union, China and all other anti-fascists throughout the world to guarantee the absolute destruction of the fascist Axis."

The first need is an industry-wide survey to find out the number of mines in operation, their capacity, the number of miners at work, potential output, and new mines that could be opened, the plan declares. This information, not available now, will prevent such blunders as the recent order to increase fabricating capacity by 79 per cent, despite the fact that mine output is far behind fabricating already.

Following this survey, the plan calls for full use of present resources, pointing out that 131 copper mines and 121 lead and zinc mines have been closed since 1929 and many others now in operation are working at only a fraction of full capacity. Continuous operation, 24 hours a day and seven days a week is also urged, which in turn calls for basic improvements in wages and working conditions to ensure steady employment of three shifts daily.

These improvements call for higher wages, which at present are far below pay in other defense industries, for better ventilation and safety conditions, for adequate housing, training of new workers and employment of laid-off miners, and other measures to increase output through collective bargaining procedures.

REID ROBINSON

INDUSTRY COUNCIL

Following the industry council plan set out by Pres. Murray, the metal plan calls for a council composed of labor, management and government "to blanket the basic metals from the mines through the mills, smelters, refineries and primary fabricators." This council would be supplemented by a union-management production committee at each mine and plant, whose job would be to increase output.

In addition, the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers recommends a complete overhauling of the present price system, so that price increases, if granted, will guarantee increased production rather than merely handing out extra profits with no increases in output.

Board Grants Union Shop To Captive Coal Miners

NEW YORK, Dec. 13—The CIO United Mine Workers this week won the union shop for 53,000 captive coal miners in properties owned by a dozen large steel corporations.

By a 2-1 vote, the arbitration board picked 10 days ago by Pres. Roosevelt awarded the UMWA its demands, which had twice before been backed by strikes of one-week duration.

Dr. John B. Steelman, head of the arbitration board while on temporary leave from the U. S. Conciliation Service, and UMW Pres. John L. Lewis voted for the union shop. The dissenting vote came from Ben Fairless, of the U. S. Steel Corp.

Prior to the decision, the board had received pledges from all the companies involved that they would accept as final the arbitrators' award.

TEXT OF STATEMENT

The UMW's victory was contained in a two-paragraph statement:

"The only issue in dispute between the parties is as follows: Shall the captive mine operators involved and the UMW enter into agreements requiring union membership of all employes except the exempted classifications as specified by the Appalachian agreement?

"The award of this board is as follows: That the UMW and the operators involved in this dispute proceed immediately to accept and execute an agreement the same as the Appalachian agreement and/or the applicable agreements related thereto."

LEWIS COMMENTS

Lewis issued this comment as the decision was made public: "I feel that the award justifies the position assumed by the United Mine Workers in relation to this controversy."

With the captive coal mine dispute out of the way, the United Mine Workers wound up a series of negotiations in progress since last March 15, in which it won dollar-a-day increases for all bituminous miners, elimination of the long-standing southern differential of 40 cents a day, substantial increases for the anthracite miners, and the union shop for the 53,000 workers in the steel companies' coal properties.

The arbitration board's majority opinion—a 14-page document— was in marked contrast to the double-talk decision of the Natl. Defense Mediation Board a few weeks ago, in which the defense agency admitted the justice of the union's claims and then undertook, in what it claimed was the union's own interest, to turn down the UMW demands. That action led to a one-week strike of the miners and the resignation of CIO Pres. Philip Murray and UMW Sec.-Treas. Thomas Kennedy—the two dissenters to the NDMB opinion—from the Mediation Board.

Unions Pledge Aid To War Effort

the auto union official declared, "we need more than generalizations, however well-intentioned they may be.

"Modern warfare requires two great essentials. Without them all will be lost. To win this war, the CIO believes, we need national unity of purpose and action; and we need the machinery which will produce the implements of warfare more effectively and in greater number than our enemy can turn them out."

A flood of resolutions and statements pouring into national headquarters showed CIO was enthusiastically unanimous in its devotion to the nation's war effort. Here are excerpts from some of the statements and highlights of activities in the field:

PRES. JOHN L. LEWIS, UNITED MINE WORKERS: "When the nation is attacked, every American must rally to its defense. All other considerations become insignificant. Congress and administrative government must be supported and every aid given to the men in the combat services of our country.

"Each true American will cooperate, and unified effort becomes a living reality. With all other citizens, I join in the support of our government to the day of the ultimate triumph over Japan and all other enemies."

AMALGAMATED CLOTHING WORKERS (Message to Pres. Roosevelt): "We pledge to you, the Commander-in-Chief, our unswerving loyalty, our unbending effort and our undying devotion in the great struggle for human liberty upon which we have embarked."

CONGRESS OF WOMEN'S CIO AUXILIARIES: "We pledge, Mr. President, every effort, all energy of the wives, mothers and daughters of the CIO workers to the defense of America and humanity everywhere. In particular, we offer our services in Civilian Defense, that vital part of modern warfare."

A PEOPLE'S WAR

MINE, MILL AND SMELTER WORKERS: "This is a people's war and as such must get our undying support . . . not only must the shame of Japanese treachery be wiped out, but the sources of international brutality, wherever they exist, must be absolutely and finally broken."

UNITED ELECTRICAL, RADIO & MACHINE WORKERS: Announced special emergency meetings of all its defense production workers—estimated at 75 per cent of the UE's 350,000 members "to mobilize to redouble production of arms for the Army and Navy of the United States and for our allies in Europe and Asia."

UNITED FEDERAL WORKERS: "Employes of the U. S. Government are ready to accept the great additional responsibilities placed on them by military participation in the war . . . the workers of the UFWA will do everything possible to increase the efficiency and output of their agencies."

AMERICAN COMMUNICATIONS ASSN.: "You can depend upon the support of organized communications workers in the defense of our country."

DESERVES SUPPORT

UNITED CONSTRUCTION WORKERS: "The declaration of a state of war existing between the United States of America and the Empire of Japan deserves the support, active and implied, of every member, official and representative of our organization."

NATIONAL MARITIME UNION: "Our nation is now at war. . . . Toward this end, there can be no interruption of one of the nation's most vital services, the merchant marine. Our contracts provide for settlement of any and all disputes through machinery of mediation, and all agents are instructed that under no circumstances must there be any interruption of work."

DISTRICT 50, UMWA: "We are sure that every member and every local of District 50 will so conduct the affairs of their union, the UMWA, that the record established during the last war, as an evidence of the patriotism and loyalty of this union, will be more than upheld."

UNITED RUBBER WORKERS (Message to Pres. Roosevelt): "Ninety thousand United Rubber Workers of America pledge complete support to you and our government in this hour of crisis. We pledge ourselves to full and uninterrupted production of the rubber industry of the nation. We are ready to do what is necessary to protect our country."

Smith Bill Temporarily On Ice

lows:

"The President of the United States has indicated acceptance of our proposal for a conference of labor, management and government to seek voluntary means of settling labor disputes that might lead to interruptions in production. Pending the outcome of this conference, the Senate Labor Committee has declared that it will hold up consideration of anti-labor bills such as the Smith bill and others.

"This is a major achievement of the CIO. It is due in large part to the good work done by the delegates sent here to Washington by CIO affiliates. On behalf of the entire CIO, I wish to express my appreciation to those delegates for a job well done.

"Our task is not yet finished, however. Powerful enemies of labor will still seek to shackle our unions, at whatever cost to national unity and to production for victory. We cannot rest until all repressive bills are laid aside and the decks cleared for action to out-produce the Axis, free of all crippling restraints on the democratic process of collective bargaining."

CIO Supports The Nation's War Effort

Following is the full text of a speech by Pres. Philip Murray over the NBC Blue Network on Dec. 8, 1941—the day that the United States declared war against Japan.

I am speaking to you tonight on behalf of five million American working men and women, members of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, who are ready and eager to do their utmost to defend our country against the outrageous aggression of Japanese imperialism, and to secure the final defeat of the forces of Hitler, which have plunged the whole world into a bloody war in their drive to enslave the human race.

The outbreak of war has increased one hundredfold the importance of the message which I bring you tonight on behalf of these millions of Americans. It is an urgent message of the necessity for immediately enlisting the full cooperation of all elements in the production of the weapons of war and other materials needed for the success of our national effort.

The members of the Congress of Industrial Organizations are the men and women employed in the basic defense industries who are daily doing the most important work of actual production. Upon their efforts and the enthusiastic cooperation which they have pledged depends our nation's safety as much as upon the fighting men to whom they are eager to supply the best possible weapons in the greatest quantity and with the least delay. These men and women are saying to America, "Here we are, ready to serve our country. All we ask is that you let us use our energies and our brains to the utmost and listen to our constructive proposals for achieving all-out production."

Constructive Plans

I am going to outline to you briefly this evening the constructive proposals of the CIO for reducing industrial conflict to an absolute minimum and for increasing production. These proposals, which we call the Industry Council Plan, embody certain basic and quite simple principles to secure the complete and organized cooperation of labor, industry and government.

We have advocated these principles ever since the defense program started and have repeatedly proposed concrete steps for placing them into operation. But now that we are actually engaged in war, the matter can no longer be delayed.

Before I go further into these proposals, however, I must say a word about the grave injury which was recently committed by the House of Representatives against all Americans who work for a living, in its passage of the Smith anti-labor bill. This bill, and the other anti-labor measures now pending in the Senate, were from the first a threat to the success of the whole national defense program and to the democracy which we seek to defend. But now that we are actually in war, to call them a threat is to put it too mildly. Their final passage by Congress under present circumstances would be a brazen act of treason. It is inconceivable to me that patriotic members of Congress can even contemplate such action.

The Smith Bill

The Smith bill includes nearly every anti-union provision which the worst enemies of labor have ever advocated. It would abolish practically every right secured by unions and workers during the past 50 years. It would virtually annul every federal law designed to safeguard the rights and economic welfare of labor.

The character of this bill can best be judged by its penalty provisions, which violate every concept of justice. Every individual worker who is a member of a union would be made a virtual social outcast and subjected to the most severe penalties, if a single minor union official violated one of the bill's many provisions. Every individual member would lose his rights under the National Labor Relations Act. He would even be deprived of old-age pensions, WPA employment and other forms of public aid. This is the vindictive, brutal, unjust, un-American spirit that pervades the entire Smith bill.

I had intended, when I first prepared this speech, to go into more detail on the Smith bill, and the Connally and Ball bills now pending in the Senate. I had intended to point out how small a factor strikes have actually been in our lagging defense production, all the partisan and anti-labor propaganda to the contrary notwithstanding. I had intended to elaborate on how much more big business has been responsible for delays in production, due to its sitdown strike, when it refused to start production of aircraft, ships and the like until it had forced Congress to grant higher profits and lower tax legislation.

But now that war has actually been declared, I recognize that the time for recrimination over past misdoings has passed. Now is the time for all Americans of good will, for all sections of our population, to get together in the spirit of national unity, to work out the greatest degree of cooperation in our common effort.

Now, above all, is no time for punitive class legislation, like the Smith bill, nor for any of the other measures which would shackle labor; create intense resentment among American workers resulting in increased industrial conflict; and prevent labor from playing its full part in voluntary effort for all-out production.

The CIO by no means takes a negative attitude on this question. Our recent convention, in the interests of maximum defense production, went on record to utilize all available channels of collective bargaining, conciliation, mediation and other voluntary means to prevent industrial stoppages.

To implement this resolution, we have proposed to Congress and to the President the immediate calling of a conference of representatives of labor, industry and government to work out, by voluntary agreement, the best possible methods of peacefully solving industrial disputes and to lay down basic policies governing industrial relations.

Voluntary Offer

Such a voluntary approach, let me emphasize, is the American way, the democratic way, as distinct from the dictatorial and compulsory methods of Hitler now proposed in the anti-labor bills before Congress. Let me also emphasize that this voluntary approach is the only truly effective way to enlist the full energies of a free people for national defense.

The CIO is pledged to cooperate to the utmost with government and industry in achieving uninterrupted and maximum production. The industry council plan, to which I have referred, is the best, and I may say the only really constructive proposal advanced to make such cooperation effective.

Under this plan, councils would be set up in every basic and defense industry, including representatives in equal proportion from labor and industry and with a government representative as chiarman. It would be the duty of these councils to plan and achieve maximum production, through elimination of all causes of friction, through the careful utilization of all existing facilities and through timely planning of expansion wherever necessary.

At the head of this structure would be a top planning and administrative board, the National Defense Board, with labor and industry equally represented and with the President as chairman.

Need for Planning

If anyone thinks that such planning is not needed and that all possible is being done under the existing hodgepodge setup, let him consider such facts as these. The National Association of Manufacturers recently admitted that as of this fall only 50% of machine tool capacity was being utilized. And the same organization reports a survey showing that, in 18,000 small and medium-sized plants, over two millions machine hours have been lost by failure to utilize available facilities and equipment.

As to the peaceful solution of industrial disputes through the industry council plan, it would work out something like this. Wherever grievances and differences arise, there would be a plant committee to take them up at their source, and to effect an adjustment through voluntary agreement between management and labor.

Above this plant committee there would be an appeals board, which would be the industry council. This council would take up disputes which failed of settlement in the plant. With labor, management and government represented, the council would deal with the matter in the interests of the industry as a whole and the defense program. With the voluntary cooperation of all parties assured, there should be few if any instances in which agreement could not be reached.

But if any such cases do arise, they could be appealed to the top appeals board, which would be the National Defense Board itself. With the whole weight of government behind this procedure, and with the voluntary cooperation of industry and labor, continuity of production will be substantially assured throughout, without the necessity of imposing the final recommendation of the top board on employer or employes.

At its recent convention the Congress of Industrial Organizations went on record unanimously in support of President Roosevelt's forthright foreign policy, and for all possible aid to the nations fighting Hitlerism. It offered the industry council plan as its contribution to the "full and complete prosecution of the national defense program of unlimited production of those materials needed to implement our foreign policy and crush Hitlerism."

Our convention declared that this plan "will unleash the energies and resources of all our people, through full participation of labor in the national defense program and thereby assure the achievement of our national goal." It stated further that this plan will guarantee the production of armaments in needed quantities and on time, by attaining the highest possible productive efficiency through full cooperation of industry, labor and government, at the same time preserving the basic democratic rights of the American people.

In pledging their complete cooperation, the members of the Congress of Industrial Organizations of course expect reciprocity, and that no selfish advantage will be taken of the sacrifices they are prepared to make.

There will be no need to divert the army from its main tasks by assigning it to watch defense plants. The union men and women employed in these plants are in the best position to detect and prevent sabotage. On behalf of our five million members, I am here and now pledging their voluntary effort to protect all plants in which they are employed and all machinery in those plants against saboteurs. Where plans for this purpose have not already been made, I am calling upon our unions to arouse their members and to plan carefully for reporting and preventing any kind of sabotage.

Voluntary Effort

Finally, I want to emphasize again that the worst blow which could be struck at the voluntary effort to which labor is pledged would be to enact such repressive measures as the Smith bill and the other measures pending in the Senate. Write and wire at once to your Senators and to the President of the United States. Urge the defeat of all such efforts to shackle labor and to sabotage defense. Urge the adoption of our proposal for an immediate conference of industry, labor and government representatives to plan the best possible methods, by voluntary agreement, of eliminating industrial disputes. And finally, call upon our legislators and the President to place into effect the proposals of the CIO industry council plan for achieving maximum defense production.

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

The Hitler-made World War has now involved this country to the full. Acting under Nazi orders, the Japanese fascists made the first large scale attack a week ago Sunday. Since that time, Hitler himself and his miserable puppet, Mussolini, have joined in the open attack on our country.

The open stage of the war was not exactly a surprise, though the actual declaration always comes as a shock. The CIO has recognized Hitlerism as the common enemy of mankind since it began its career of conquest and destruction. Hitler has made war on everything free and democratic since he was first put in power by the reactionary forces of Germany. First he destroyed the trade unions in Germany, then in all the countries of Europe his armies have occupied.

SEEKS TO DESTROY U. S.

Today he seeks to destroy the United States by open and avowed war. In seeking our destruction as a nation, he seeks the destruction of the free labor movement here and all the democratic institutions that go with it. The CIO's purpose and duty are clear; to do everything in our power to bring about the end of Hitlerism throughout the world.

Together with Britain, the Soviet Union, China, and all the other free nations fighting for their existence, we will crush Hitlerism once and for all. Hundreds of thousands of our members are in the armed forces of the U. S. already. Many hundreds of thousands more will go as soon as they are called.

Those of us who remain are on the front-line of the battle for production that we must win for victory. There is no doubt we will win that struggle. The CIO has pledged its full support to our government and our people. We know that pledge will be carried out—in the free, democratic way that CIO has established for labor in this country, without compulsion and without the shackles that shortsighted reactionaries here seek to impose.

NEW PACTS, VICTORIES

Regional Director Pugh, of Richmond, Virginia, reports the renewal of the agreement between the Camp Manufacturing Company of Franklin, Va.. and LIU 1061, with an increase in wages for all employees.

Regional Director Frank Bender of Baltimore, Md., reports a UAWA-CIO victory in the Bellanca Aircraft election with results of 202 as against 134.

Regional Director George Craig in Philadelphia reports that the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers won a NLRB election at the Cramp Shipyards, Philadelphia, Pa., with the following vote: CIO—2,064, AFL—583.

An organizing committee to organize the Bayuk Cigar Company which has 5,000 employees, is getting well under way, with UCAPAWA Representative John Tisa as chairman of the committee. This committee is organizing the entire cigar industry. After almost three years of continuous hard work, CIO Representative Rinaldo Cappellini reports a contract has been negotiated between the American Locomotive and the SWOC which brings gains to the workers involved that far surpass the old contract.

GLENN MARTIN DRIVE

The Maryland and District of Columbia IUC in cooperation with Regional Director Frank Bender of Baltimore, Md., is assisting in every way possible to bring the CIO to the employees of Glenn L. Martin Company.

UCAPAWA signed a closed shop contract with the Piel Starch of Indianapolis, Indiana. Piel's is a division of National Starch and this is the first CIO contract with this company. UCAPAWA extends special thanks to CIO Regional Director Powers Hapgood for his work in assisting the bargaining committee.

Workers at the Godchaux Sugar Company in New Orleans have voted overwhelmingly for CIO by 868 to 111 against no union.

Coordinate War Relief Fund Drives, Unions Told by CIO

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13—All CIO affiliates were asked this week by Pres. Philip Murray to give "primary consideration" to coordinating their war relief contributions through the National CIO Committee for American & Allied War Relief.

"This policy will prevent repeated calls upon our members and will give assurance that the money which is obtained will be distributed for the purpose intended through the trade union committees of the several nations," Pres. Murray wrote.

The CIO president recalled that delegates to the Detroit convention had expressed American labor's "sacred obligation to give fraternal and economic aid" to workers and their families in the nations fighting Hitlerism.

"The Detroit convention when asked to support other organized efforts to raise money for war relief purposes, referred all such efforts to the national CIO committee," he recalled.

MEMBERS OF GROUP

Chairman of the committee is Pres. Irving Abramson of the New Jersey CIO, and Ted Silvey, secretary-treasurer of the Ohio CIO, is secretary. Other members are August Scholle, head of the Michigan council; John Phillips, president of the Pennsylvania council; and John Brophy, director of industrial union councils.

"The national CIO committee is organized and has a program in development which will be in conformity with the convention action and with the national CIO office," Pres. Murray's letter said. "When you are informed of the program and of the details for carrying it out, I hope all your officers and members will participate fully, so that our convention order may be fulfilled and the good work accomplished which is intended to be done.

"I hereby request all the national CIO organizations to advise their respective units throughout the nation that only the program of the National CIO Committee for American & Allied War Relief is official, and that it should be supported as the only instrumentality for carrying out the Detroit convention decision."

Plan Party

Detroit, Dec. 13—More than 1,200 members of Plymouth Local 51 of the UAW-CIO will celebrate New Year's Eve at their own party in Eastwood Park.

Murray Stays Off NDMB

Washington, Dec. 13—Reaffirmation of their earlier resignations from the Natl. Defense Mediation Board was sent to Pres. Roosevelt on Dec. 6 by CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Sec.-Treas. Thomas Kennedy of the United Mine Workers.

The two officials tendered their resignations immediately following the NDMB's refusal to recommend a union shop in the captive coal mines. At that time they indicated the Board had outlived its usefulness and done harm to all collective bargaining in the nation. Pres. Roosevelt later asked them to reconsider their action.

"The CIO is most anxious that adequate machinery be established to assure the peaceful adjustment of industrial disputes," Murray and Kennedy wrote to the President.

"It is our judgment that these matters could be given consideration and properly adjusted at a conference of representatives of industry, organized labor and government which we have suggested that you convene at an early date."

Lift Pay $1,700,000 At Viscose

New York, Dec. 13—Emil Rieve, general president of the Textile Workers union of America, CIO, announced today that wage increases totalling approximately $1,700,000 annually had been negotiated by the Union on behalf of the 16,000 employes of the American Viscose Corporation as part of a contract extending the present agreement between the Union and the Company to Nov. 30, 1942.

Mr. Rieve stated that a general increase of five cents an hour will be paid to male employes and three cents an hour to female workers in six of the seven plants of the company. Because of extraordinary economic conditions in Nitro, W. Va., the increase at that plant will be 10 cents an hour for male employes and six cents an hour for females. The other plants of the company are in Meadville, Lewistown and Marcus Hook, Pa., Roanoke and Front Royal, Va., and Parkersburg, W. Va.

END INEQUALITIES

In addition to the general increase the contract provides for raises totalling $110,000 to workers in certain classifications. This will iron out some existing inequalities.

The wage increase will go into effect as of Nov. 30, 1941. The contract provides that the wage question can be reopened on May 1, 1942, and that whatever adjustments in wages are made shall go into effect on June 1, 1942.

Ladies Act Fast Against Smith Bill

Washington, Dec. 13—Quick response to the special appeal for action to oppose the Smith Bill and other anti-labor bills pending in the Senate was reported by the CIO Congress of Women's Auxiliaries here.

A letter urging all members to work for the defeat of this anti-strike bill was sent out to 106 affiliated groups by Mrs. Helen Goldmann, secretary of the Coordinating Committee of the United Automobile Workers Auxiliaries, the Women's Congress reported. Auxiliaries in the Newspaper Guild, and the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, took similar action.

Mrs. Martha Etter of the Ladies Auxiliary of Ft. Smith, Ark., reported that hundreds of letters from Arkansas were sent out opposing the bill. The Washington Assembly of CIO Auxiliaries and the Philadelphia Council of Auxiliaries, the Congress stated, have also been working busily to defeat the Smith bill.

LABOR & THE LAW:

Judges No Longer Immune From Public Criticism

By LEE PRESSMAN

CIO General Counsel

Down through history one of the extraordinary powers which judges exercised and which has been the subject of considerable abuse is one of punishing persons for contempt of court for statements made outside the courtroom. A recent decision of the United States Supreme Court has clarified and curtailed the power of judges in this regard.

Two cases arose in the State of California. In one a State Court Judge was injecting himself into the internal affairs of one of the locals of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union.

Harry Bridges, as president of the organization, addressed a wire to the Secretary of Labor pointing out that an adverse decision of the court in this situation would probably cause a strike of the longshoremen and create a very serious situation. For this the State Court adjudged Bridges in contempt of court. In the second case, a Los Angeles newspaper severely criticized certain convicted union officials while the judge was considering the sentence to be imposed and the request for probation. For this action the newspaper and publisher were adjudged in contempt of court.

REVERSED DECION

The United States Supreme Court by a vote of 5-4 reversed the contempt convictions.

Mr. Justice Black, writing the majority opinion, based his decision upon the following important factors:

(1) The United States Constitution protects freedom of speech and freedom of press against restraints which may be imposed by the United States or by any State. These freedoms are of basic importance and today all liberty loving people must jealously guard against their curtailment.

(2) Society may, however, restrict the absolute freedom of speech and freedom of press to avoid certain substantial evils. It is accepted that it would be a substantial evil to prevent an impartial and fair administration of justice by the courts.

(3) Mere expressions of opinion by private individuals regarding pending litigation does not represent a clear and present danger to the impartial and fair administration of justice. Specifically the court held that the expressions of the union leader in the one case and of the newspaper in the other case, would not fall within this test and therefore cannot be held to be the basis for adjudging the individuals or the newspaper to be in contempt of court.

CENSORSHIP

It has been commonly accepted that there may be free expression regarding judicial matters after the courts have taken final action. However, Mr. Justice Black indicated that to prohibit free expression on pending litigation would be to impose a censorship on crucial issues at a time when it was most vital to discuss the important topics.

In other words, the majority opinion pointed out that to permit a discussion of current matters only after they have become moot is not to permit freedom of expression but rather to impose a strict judicial censorship.

Furthermore, the majority opinion emphasizes the point that the judiciary cannot obtain respect by shielding judges from public criticism.

Mr. Justice Black stated that "It is a prized American privilege to speak one's mind, although not always with good taste, on all public institutions. And that an enforced silence, however limited, solely in the name of preserving the dignity of the bench, would probably engender resentment, suspicion, and contempt much more than it would enhance its respect."

The opinion of the Supreme Court in these cases does not mean that any type of comment outside the courtroom is permissible in regard to matters pending before a court. However, the decision will severely restrict the heretofore unlimited exercise of authority by judges to impose contempt of court sentences for any expression.

Courts will have to show, on the basis of the Supreme Court's decision, that the comment is one that presents a clear and present danger of creating a disorderly and unfair administration of justice. This test should tend to impress all public officials with the need of zealously safeguarding the free exercise by all Americans of our basic constitutional liberties.

CIO Sweeps Plane Poll

New Castle, Del., Dec. 13—Despite attempted company intimidation, the CIO chalked up another impressive aircraft victory this week—at the Bellanca Co. here.

With 344 out of 348 eligible workers flocking to Labor Board polls, a nearly two-to-one majority of 202 of them voted for the CIO United Automobile, Aircraft & Agricultural Implement Workers Union.

Only 134 employes succumbed to Company "suggestions" that they vote against themselves by casting ballots for "no union." One ballot was blank and seven were challenged.

The victory sustained a prediction of Frank J. Bender, regional CIO director in charge of the UAW-CIO aircraft drive, who was so sure of the outcome that he offered to bet a week's pay that the Union would win.

Woodworkers Elect Lowery as President

SEATTLE, Wash., Dec. 13—New officers of the International Woodworkers of America, elected by a referendum recently completed, have been announced by the IWA Balloting Committee. They are Worth Lowery, Jewell, Ore., president; James Fadling, Aberdeen, Wash., and Carl Winn, Everett, Wash., vice presidents; and Edward E. Benedict, Forks, Wash., secretary-treasurer.

After the results of the referendum were announced, O. M. Orton, defeated candidate for vice-president, and B. J. McCarty, defeated for secretary - treasurer, issued statements calling upon the membership to unite in backing the new program of the union, and pledging their own wholehearted cooperation.

SEEK UNITY

"I wish to re-emphasize the vital necessity for unity within our ranks," Orton declared. "I repeat my firm conviction that labor must unite as never before."

McCarty called upon the members to "join forces to insure a greater flow of materials to Britain, the Soviet Union and China, to speed the destruction of Hitler tyranny. The United States must outstrip the fascist countries in the battle of production in order to assure the success of our national defense program."

The memberships of the IWA also voted in the referendum in favor of increasing the per capita tax to build an organizing fund.

Optical Workers Strike for Pact In N. Y. Plant

NEW YORK, Dec. 13—Workers of the American Optical Co. plant here went on strike Dec. 1 for higher wages to meet the rising cost of living, and union recognition. The strike is led by the United Optical Workers Union, Local 208 of New York City.

Within several days, the strike spread to the Bronx, Brooklyn, Hempstead, L. I., and Newark, N. J., plants of the American Optical Co. Although the number of workers involved is not too great, the strike has national significance, because the company has some 300 plants throughout the country.

American Optical workers in Detroit, Pittsburgh, Milwaukee and Madison, Wisconsin, St. Louis, San Francisco and Chicago have had to resort to strike to win a living wage and union conditions.

A KEY DISPUTE

Optical workers throughout the country are watching this strike. American Optical Company, the largest and wealthiest firm in the industry, has been called the un-American Optical Company because of the miserable kind of wages and working conditions it gives its workers.

Many telegrams of support have come in from both AFL and CIO locals in the optical field. The Greater N. Y. Industrial Union Council is backing Local 208 and has offered its services in settling the strike, which was called after the Company refused to submit the points in dispute to arbitration.

SPIRIT HIGH

The morale and spirit of the workers is excellent. Every plant is out 100%. A mass picket line of over 200 workers was held on Thursday, Dec. 4th in front of the New York plant. Following this action the employers quickly agreed to sit down and negotiate through the State Mediation Board.

The Company has still to notify the Union of its decision on these mediation efforts, and the workers are still determined to stay out until victory has been won.

Pact Raises Standards In South

High Point, N. C. Dec. 13—The Textile Workers Union of America continued its drive in the South by signing a collective bargaining agreement today with the Highland Cotton Mills here.

The contract provides an eight-hour day; five-day week (Mondays through Fridays) for production workers; time and a half for overtime and work on holidays; seniority; grievance machinery; arbitration; check-off of union dues.

The agreement contains a no-strike clause covering all disputes except requests for wage changes.

It provides that the wage question will be opened January 15 and that if a settlement is not reached by January 30, the union will have the right to strike.

Better Clothes Seen Antidote To Inflation

New York, Dec. 13—More and better clothes and house furniture for America as a partial antidote for inflation was proposed at a conference here of 100 delegates representing 60,000 woolen and worsted workers organized in the CIO Textile Workers Union of America.

The conference, after hearing a report from the TWUA research department that there are ample materials, machinery and personnel for textile manufacture, adopted a resolution proposing a woolen and worsted planning board, including representatives of labor, industry, and Government to plan this production.

Surplus purchasing power, facing a shortage of civilian commodities using vital metals, can find an outlet in clothes, curtains, bed clothes, blankets, carpets, in which there will be no shortage, the conference declared.

HIT ANTI-LABOR BILLS

Following an address by Emil Rieve, TWUA president and CIO vice-president, the conference adopted a resolution memorializing the Senate to defeat the Smith, Ball and Connally Bills, and any other legislation designed to curtail or destroy labor's legitimate activities and constitutional rights; memorializing President Roosevelt to use his influence toward this end; re-endorsing arbitration, conciliation and mediation for the settlement of labor disputes; re-endorsing the union's stand in support of the Administration's foreign policy.

Sue Pottery For $40,000 Back Pay

Toledo, Ohio, Dec. 13—Charging that the Mt. Clemens Pottery Co., a subsidiary of the S. S. Kresge store chain, "is a high-class chiseling outfit," the United Pottery Workers, CIO, has filed a civil wage-hour suit for more than $40,000.

The union charges that the pottery company, located at Mt. Clemens, Mich., "not only short changes the employes as much as 56 minutes every day by fancy time clock recording, but charges the employes for sponges used in cleaning the products manufactured."

A union official said that members who protested against the chiseling practices were immediately fired—an action that brought on a sympathy strike of the firm's 1,200 employes.

The local is being represented by Edward Lamb, Toledo attorney.

Die Casters Call Special Parley

NEW YORK, Dec. 13—Taking note of the seriousness of the world and national situation as a result of the extension of the war to this country, the executive board of the Natl. Assn. of Die Casting Workers has issued a call for a special convention of the union in Cleveland on January 10, 1942.

Pres. George Peacock, in issuing the call, said further arrangements for convention headquarters and meeting place will be completed within a few days.

In announcing the special convention, it was pointed out that "although the NADCW has increased its numerical strength and its economic and political importance in American life since our last convention, the national union today is faced with a crisis as to its future status and position.

"This question of the future of the national union is so fundamental that it can only be decided by the expression of the membership through a special Convention."

BACK WAR PLANS: Members of the executive committee of the Greater New York Industrial Union Council hear Joseph Curran (seated, right), council president and CIO vice-president, outline plans for support of the nation's war effort. Smith Bill Danger Told By Thomas, Haywood

Following are excerpts from a speech by Allan S. Haywood, CIO Director of Organization, on a Mutual Broadcasting System network, Dec. 8, 1941.

Since yesterday, our nation has been under military attack. Acting on orders from Hitler, the Japanese Fascists have treacherously invaded the territory of the United States. The Axis nations have declared war on the world. Together with Great Britain, the Soviet Union, China and the other free nations, we are fighting for our national existence.

The workers of America are united behind the defense of our country. The five million members of the organization I represent — the Congress of Industrial Organizations—are doing everything in their power to keep up and increase the flow of defense weapons to the armed forces.

Hundreds of thousands of loyal CIO members are in the armed forces. The millions who remain at home to make defense weapons have an equally important role to play—they have to win the battle for production. The defeat of Hitler and his Japanese puppets depends on the uninterrupted flow of planes, tanks, guns, ships, all the weapons of defense, from the factories of America.

Free Labor's Capacity

Free labor can outproduce the slave labor of Japan and Nazi conquered Europe. Slave labor can never equal the morale, the unity and the strength of free labor working to defend democracy at home. To keep America free, we must guard and preserve American labor's freedom to organize, to bargain collectively and to take united action for the redress of grievances.

Only last week, following a barrage of anti-labor propaganda in the press and on the floor of Congress, the House of Representatives struck a blow to the nation's defense and to the cause of democracy everywhere. I refer, of course, to the Smith bill passed last Wednesday and now before the Senate of the United States.

Is it labor's fault that only now, after more than a year of fumbling, the ground is being broken for new plants to expand aluminum production, vital to the building of airplanes? Labor was the first to point out that more aluminum was needed immediately, but the CIO's plan for expansion was shelved.

The CIO was the first to point out that more steel capacity was needed to fill defense needs, let alone civilian consumption. Both officials and industry refused even to admit there was a possibility of a shortage. Today the shortage is felt everywhere.

Now, with this record in mind, let us examine briefly the measures proposed to curb labor's right to organize and bargain collectively. These measures, if passed, would destroy the painfully built up system of collective bargaining that has been so successful in maintaining labor's share in production to date.

They would outlaw practically all the normal activities of a trade union. They will force all grievances and all disputes that are normally adjusted by voluntary collective bargaining into compulsory arbitration. They would make criminals of loyal union members who take their rights and duties as Americans seriously. They would create a maze of bureaucratic red-tape around the simplest union procedure.

Following are excerpts from a speech by CIO Vice-Pres. R. J. Thomas, head of the United Automobile, Aircraft & Agricultural Implement Workers, over the Columbia Broadcasting System network on Dec. 10, 1941.

Wherever they may be called to serve, no matter what duties shall be placed upon them, the millions of the CIO will answer the call of their country. In the armed forces, on the land, on the sea and in the air, our members will take their place, ready to make any sacrifice for our common home and nation. In the mines, and in the mills and factories, the ranks of the CIO will labor unceasingly to provide our armed forces with the material of warfare through which the enemies of our freedom will be crushed and broken.

When I pledge the complete cooperation of the CIO's millions, I do not indulge in easy oratory. Within the ranks of our union we have the brains and the brawn, the intelligence and the loyalty to make certain our victory over Nazi Germany and its jackal, fascist Japan.

National Unity

National unity in the face of the foes of our nation, can be maintained and promoted only by a wholesome recognition of the part labor must and desires to play in this great emergency—the greatest our nation has ever known. The workshops of democracy must be kept humming. Disputes between labor and employer must be given over to conciliation, to voluntary arbitration in the American way.

The President of the CIO, Mr. Philip Murray, has already proposed that the government convene at once a conference of labor, industry and government to devise voluntary machinery by which all disputes affecting our defense plants may be resolved by peaceful adjustment around the conference table.

Vindictive measures which seek to punish labor, such as the Smith bill now before the United States Senate, will bring only bitterness and recrimination.

Such a state of affairs would be a deadly blow to national defense and the successful prosecution of the war. It would bring turmoil and disunity; it would engender internal strife and cynicism at a time when America needs, and labor is anxious to give, cooperation and conciliation—the priceless contributions of free men who know that they are working and fighting and dying, if need be, that democracy may live.

'Here Are Our Plans'

The CIO says to the nation, to the public, to government and industry—"Here are our skills, our experience. Here are our plans—take them and use them for the service of our nation in this, its greatest hour of need."

The record of American labor to date bears out what I say. The figures on man-hours lost in strikes are misleading and much-abused. Strikes have cost but a fraction of the valuable time we have lost because of lack of planning, because of the need for placating industrialists who insisted, up to a very recent hour, that the menace of our country was not so great as to make it necessary to abandon business as usual.

U. S. PARLEY MAPS WAR LABOR PLAN

(See Story, Page Three)

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19—Members of the government-labor-industry conference continued their conferences here today with a view to working out as speedily as possible a plan for maintaining uninterrupted production and to recommending basic labor policies for the period of the war.

Attending the meetings, which have been in intermittent session for the past 48 hours, are six representatives of the CIO, six from the AFL and 12 from American industry. Moderator of the conference is William H. Davis, head of the nearly-defunct National Defense Mediation Board. Assistant Moderator is Sen. Elbert Thomas, head of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor.

All groups participating in conference agreed to withhold publication of their views and proposals pending a final agreement by the meeting.

At a preliminary conference with President Roosevelt the representatives received a plea from the Chief Executive for quick action.

"Our kind of nation is going to make more progress," the President said. "Let us agree not to go backward. But let us agree that during the war we won't hold things up."

Editor Lauds CIO Stand On Race Bias

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20—Praise for the CIO's uncompromising stand against racial discrimination was voiced this week in a letter to Pres. Murray from George F. McCray, labor editor of the Chicago Defender, the nation's largest Negro weekly paper.

"So far as I have been able to observe, the CIO has been consistent in its policy of fair and equal treatment for all workers, regardless of their race, creed or color," McCray declared.

HEARTENED BY ACTION

"I was much heartened by the decision of the CIO at its last convention in Detroit to proceed with the organization of the unorganized workers in the South. I wondered whether the resolution adopted on the unity of Negro and white workers would be observed in the same uncompromising manner as have the substance of similar resolutions been observed in areas like Chicago, Detroit and Pittsburgh, as well as in many of the mining districts and industrial areas of the south."

Xmas Gifts For Members In Army

New York, Dec. 20—Cutters' Local 4 of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America yesterday voted to send Christmas gifts of $25 to each of its members now in the armed forces of the country.

The cutters' union, headed by Murray Weinstein, is one of the first unions in the country to make such a decision. The $25 gifts are accompanied by letters thanking the recipients for their service to the country in time of war.

Die Casters, Metal Miners Discuss Merger Plan

DENVER, Colo., Dec. 20—Plans for the merger of two CIO affiliates—the Intl. Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers and the National Association of Die Casting Workers—will be laid before a special NADCW convention in Cleveland on January 10, it was announced here today.

Pres. Reid Robinson of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, chairman of a joint committee established by the two organizations, said the proposals call for the Die Casters to become a provisional division of the metal union. A document describing the proposed merger plan which has been drawn up by the joint committee points out that the underlying principle of the amalgamation is in line with CIO aims for complete industrial unionism.

The Die Casters have partial jurisdiction in the non-ferrous metal industry, while the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers includes all the non-ferrous metal industry in its larger jurisdiction covering metal production generally.

BOARDS OK PLAN

Executive boards of the two unions have already approved the plan. Members of the joint committee are: Pres. Robinson, Sec.-Treas. James J. Leary and Board Members Jess Gonzales and William Mason, representing the IUMM&SW; and Pres. George Peacock, Executive Sec. Edward Cheyfitz, and Board Members Arnold Mason and Adam Galowsky of the NADCW.

According to the plan, the Die Casters will constitute, until the convention of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers next September, a provisional casting division of that union.

The secretary of the die casting workers will continue in the capacity of administrator of the division and as its director of organization. The president of the NADCW will serve as chairman of the division's coordinating committee.

NEW YORK LABOR RALLIES: Scene in Manhattan's Madison Square Garden as 20,000 members of CIO, AFL and unaffiliated unions meet under the auspices of the Greater New York Industrial Union Council. Several labor leaders pledged workers' full support of the U. S. war effort.

BILL OF RIGHTS: Crowds gather in front of the U. S. sub-treasury building in New York's financial district to celebrate 150th anniversary of the adoption of the Bill of Rights by the 13 states. Other celebrations were held throughout the country to remind citizens of their rights and privileges as members of a democracy.

'Bill of Rights' A Living Doctrine, Legion Group Told

NEW YORK, Dec. 20—"The guarantees of the Bill of Rights are no mere words, but a body of living doctrine which develops as the life of the people grows and changes," John Brophy, CIO director of industrial union councils, told a meeting of the Kings County American Legion's Americanism Committee.

As an example, Brophy cited the right of freedom of assembly, pointing out "that the freedom Americans have known in the political sphere for over a century and a half has broadened out into the economic sphere.

"In reality, no new rights or privileges have been created in this process," he said. "There has been merely an application of rights which existed before in new situations created by changes in methods of industrial production.

EXPANDED RIGHTS

"At the time the Bill of Rights was adopted, great industrial plants such as the Ford River Rouge plant, or the great steel mills of the United States Steel Corp., were not only non-existent but inconceivable.

"The application of the principle of free assembly and free association to permit the self-organization of workers without the interference of management could not then be anticipated, yet all the time these new modern rights were inherent within the old guarantees, and they have developed logically out of them."

The growing principles of freedom are "no mere shibboleths to be given lip service and forgotten," Brophy reminded the Legionnaires. "They are vital doctrine which is enacted in the daily lives of a free people and which takes new form and new color as it is applied to changing situations.

VITAL DOCTRINE

"It is a vital and vigorous doctrine, and a race which has lived for more than a century and a half by its precepts is destined . . . to discharge that great responsibility to human society which is the attainment of victory over the modern tyrants of Nazi Germany, Fascist Italy and Imperial Japan."

Md. CIO 'All-Out' In War Drive

Washington, Dec. 18—Pledges of all-out support and work for the victory program and renewed drives to organize unorganized workers as a vital part of the war against Hitlerism marked the fifth annual convention of the Maryland-District of Columbia CIO Council held here this week.

The convention, one of the first to meet since the Fascist attack on the U. S., took these two main themes from the report of retiring president, John T. Jones, and from Secretary-Treasurer Sidney R. Katz, and acted on them in resolutions, reports and other actions taken during the meeting.

"Our country has been attacked in the most treacherous and outrageous manner by the forces of Japanese, Nazi and Fascist imperialism, which are trying to destroy all human freedom here and the world over," Jones wrote. "We of the CIO stand pledged to defeat these enemies of our nation who are also the enemies of human liberty and human decency threatening to enslave the entire human race."

VICTORY PROGRAM

One of the main resolutions at the convention dealt with the war and the victory program, calling for the highest degree of national unity to beat Hitler and declaring that CIO Council members and their families "stand ready to make all necessary sacrifices, including their lives," that they are prepared "to outproduce the Axis powers in the production of war material," and urging full cooperation for victory among all labor groups, industry and government.

A second resolution, urging the immediate adoption of the Industry Council Plan, pointed out that it will make possible "complete unity and coordination of labor, management and government for war time production" and lay the basis for peace time reconstruction.

OFFICERS ELECTED

The convention, noting with regret, and gratitude for past leadership, the retirement of Pres. John T. Jones, elected George Myers, president of the huge Textile Workers Union of Cumberland, as president, re-elected Sidney R. Katz secretary-treasurer, and a slate of 13 vice-presidents.

Unions 'Pitch In,' Help U. S. Defense, Production

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 20—With one week of air raid alarms, alerts, blackouts and desperately urgent emergency precautions behind it, the Los Angeles CIO movement has geared itself to the task of fighting the battle of production and the battle of preservation in the great Los Angeles basin, where so much of the aircraft, oil and shipbuilding industry of the West is concentrated.

CIO representatives are functioning on the state, city and county defense councils. Union sound trucks are now equipped with special credentials and are on call 24 hours a day to assist in handling crowds in air raids and other emergencies.

Special squads of CIO defense workers are being secretly trained by the sheriff's office, Army and Navy Intelligence and the FBI in sabotage prevention at the factories.

WORKERS REGISTER

CIO men are registering as rapidly as possible into auxiliary police and fire services, the state guard, and other activities of civilian defense. CIO women, operating primarily through the auxiliaries, are registering for many different types of work, through the Red Cross.

The Los Angeles Industrial Union Council, operating in the CIO building behind windows that are painted black for the duration, is issuing regular war information bulletins to the affiliated unions and their memberships. The women's auxiliary council has established a telephonic war information service.

Mayor Fletcher Bowron is preparing to act on a double-barreled CIO program, requesting him to call an AFL-CIO-Brotherhood conference to iron out all inter-labor friction, and to call a city-wide conference of management and labor to work out increased production programs and to provide for settlement of disputes without strikes.

Cleveland, Dec. 20—More than 2,000 Cleveland CIO members pitched into the war effort by reporting at local CIO headquarters for civilian assignments.

Mayor Frank J. Lausche, who came into office recently with labor support, said he will promptly call a meeting of labor, management and government to avert stoppages and spur production. He promised to be available for calls at any time to settle industrial disputes.

BUSINESS AS USUAL

Sec. A. E. Stevenson of the Cleveland Industrial Union Council cited examples of stubborn managements doing business as usual, to the hindrance of the war program. He backed up the contention of the Natl. Assn. of Die Casting Workers that "if the government is going to take over any defense industries, one of the first should be the Aluminum Co. of America."

The union rally was arranged on three days' notice through distribution of 30,000 leaflets and through cooperation of 300 shop stewards. Four northern Ohio radio stations helped publicize the meeting.

BOSTON, Dec. 20—CIO and AFL leaders joined here in pledging full support to the Russian War Relief campaign.

Before a capacity audience of 10,000 at the Boston Arena, Pres. Joseph Salerno of the Massachusets Industrial Union Council hailed "the people of Soviet Russia for being the first great army of resistance against the enemies of freedom and the labor movement."

"Whenever Hitler and Mussolini have checked in, the labor movement has checked out. But the labor movement of England, Russia, China and the United States of America have just checked in in this total fight against barbarism. Labor will not check out from this fight until Hitlerism has been wiped from the face of the earth," Salerno predicted.

MRS. LITVINOV SPEAKS

Principal speakers were Mrs. Maxim Litvinov, wife of the Soviet Ambassador to this country, and Joseph Davies, former U. S. envoy to the USSR.

"Our war is your war," she told the crowd, "just as your war is our war."

Mrs. Litvinov expressed a wish that Adolph Hitler could see this and other such meetings throughout the country.

"It would do him good," she declared. "People who have never agreed on one thing before, are now agreed on this, that we must get rid of Hitler."

Textile Pact Climaxes Long Drive

By DON McKEE

Spartanburg, S. C., Dec. 20—A two-year contract for the 700 workers in the two plants of the Clifton Manufacturing Company at Clifton, S. C., was signed here today by the CIO Textile Workers Union of America.

Agreement on the contract climaxes a four-year TWUA campaign at Clifton.

GRIEVANCE MACHINERY

The contract grants TWUA exclusive bargaining authority, sets up a grievance machinery, and provides for arbitration of wage, workload, and grievance disputes.

It gives the workers seniority in layoffs and re-employments, time-and-a-half pay for work over eight hours in one day or 40 hours a week and on three specified holidays.

The contract further provides for the checkoff of union dues, no-strikes or lockouts during the life of the agreement, and a military clause protecting the jobs and seniority of workers inducted into the armed services of the nation.

Will Push Coast Oil Drive

Los Angeles, Dec. 20—Meeting by flashlight in Southern California's first blackout, on the first day of America's official war with Japan, leading members of the Oil Workers' International Union launched the drive to organize Standard Oil of California.

Irwin Elber, California oil drive director, had planned a huge mass meeting in the Long Beach hall of OWIU 128. When the meeting was disrupted by the sudden blackout, Elber, Philip M. Connelly, secretary of the Los Angeles Industrial Union Council; John N. Starke, secretary of local 128, and other leaders immediately began to reorganize the campaign plans to fit war conditions.

WON'T BE STOPPED

"We will not permit Japan to stop our oil organizing drive," declared Elber. "Oil is one of the most essential war industries. 100 per cent support of our armed forces can only be accomplished through 100 per cent organization of the oil workers."

Sharecropper Wins Stay; Case May Test Poll Tax

RICHMOND, Va., Dec. 20—(FP)—A third stay of execution for Odell Waller, Negro sharecropper sentenced to die for the murder of his white landlord, has been granted by Gov. James H. Price after a petition that may open up a new front for attacking the poll tax, which bars millions of southerners from voting.

The Virginia governor acted in response to appeals by the Workers Defense League that the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals be given time to act on a writ of habeas corpus which raises the poll tax issue. The court upheld Waller's death sentence in October, but Gov. Price's action delays the execution date until March 20.

UNCOVERS 1870 LAW

The petition for a writ uncovered an 1870 act of Congress which may give the U. S. Supreme Court a new basis for outlawing the poll tax, WDL attorneys said.

The act, which readmitted Virginia representation in Congress, provides that the state constitution "shall never be so amended or changed as to deprive any citizen or class of citizens of the U. S. of the right to vote who are entitled to vote by the constitution herein recognized."

In violation of that act, the state constitution was amended in 1902, when the poll tax was established in Virginia.

In Pittsylvania county, where Waller was convicted by an all-white jury, only 6,000 of the 30,000 eligible voters paid their poll tax in 1940.

Danger: Monopoly at Work

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 20—Central Metal Products is a small plant with a new and improved method for aluminum extrusions. It has one of the finest union contracts in existence with Local 101 of the Die Casting Workers. It has priorities and can obtain aluminum. Aircraft plants urgently seek its product.

And yet this company's customers are refused government permits to purchase the product and the workers are being laid off.

The workers blame monopolistic practices of the Aluminum Corporation of America, and have secured the cooperation of the Los Angeles Industrial Union Council in attempts to correct the situation.

Parley Studies War Labor Problems

Support For War Rolls In

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20—Support of the Nation's war effort continued to pour in from CIO unions and councils this week, as local labor groups moved quickly to pave the way for higher production and greater participation in civilian defense work. Here are some highlights from around the country:

Pledge Production

New York—Local 795 of the UAW-CIO, made up of workers at the B. H. Aircraft Co., unanimously approved a resolution this week pointing out that as "soldiers at the bench, we are willing to make any and every sacrifice for the defense of our nation to defeat fascism. We shall strive to the best of our ability to increase the production on the vital national defense program."

N. Y. CIO Acts

New York—Seven hundred union officials attending a special meeting of the New York CIO Council o.k.'d a statement that "we are determined that the strength of labor shall be maintained and used in this fight to the uttermost . . .

"The President of the United States has promised that the people of the United States will meet this challenge to their livelihood and liberties. We of labor are determined that the President's promise shall be fulfilled."

Ask Cooperation

Washington—The United Office & Professional Workers, Local 27, today called upon its members and the people of Washington "to rapidly enlist in the Civilian Defense for the protection of our beautiful capital city."

Donate Blood

Pittsburgh—Employes of the Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board in Pittsburgh and Allegheny County have volunteered through their union—Local 85, State, County & Municipal Workers—to cooperate actively with the Red Cross in its blood donor campaign.

Sign Statement

San Francisco—Leaders of the CIO, AFL and Railroad Brotherhoods in California have signed a statement pledging support to the government's war effort and recommending that "all factional, partisan and political differences be immediately forgotten and that all labor organizations unite to win the war.

"We recommend that all differences or misunderstandings that

Casualty

NEW KENSINGTON, Pa., Dec. 20—A member of the CIO Aluminum Workers union gave his life in the defense of Pearl Harbor from the treacherous attack of the Japanese.

One of the first casualties of the war was George R. Leslie, 20, a former member of Local 2, AWA, who was killed at the U. S. Army Post on Oahu Island during the bomber attack on Dec. 7.

Leslie worked at the local plant of the Aluminum Co. of America until last February, when he was laid off. He enlisted in the Army a few months later and was stationed at Fort Wheeler in Hawaii.

Farmers Score Smith Bill

DES MOINES, Iowa, Dec. 20. The National Farmers Union, one of the country's most important agricultural organizations, has come out squarely against the Smith Bill or other forms of anti-labor legislations.

In a telegram to Sen. Elbert Thomas, chairman of the Senate Labor and Education Committee, the farmers group urged that the "responsible leadership of labor be given a genuine role in the planning by government of production policies as agricultural leadership is given participation in the agricultural defense councils"

The statement was signed by Pres. James Patton and Chairman Tom Cheek of the National Board of Directors, following a meeting of the Board in this city.

SEE CLOSE TIES

"The working farmers of this country, now engaged in extending agricultural production for the common cause, see that our fate is closely tied up with steadily expanding industrial production," the message said.

"We working farmers believe that the overwhelming majority of industrial workers and their leaders are as patriotically eager as we are to contribute without interruption the best efforts of which they are capable in this crucial period."

The farmers group charged that much of the "public clamor" about strikes has covered up an attack on labor's rights by big business groups anxious to undermine the workers' organizations.

Legislation like the Smith bill "runs counter to the fact that morale cannot be legislated into existence, and this legislation is, on the contrary, bound to lower the production morale of millions of workers," Sen. Thomas was told.

On receipt of a copy of the telegram, CIO Sec. James B. Carey told Patton that he was "deeply moved by this expression of common purpose and common action."

Referring to the convention's resolution on cooperation with farm groups, Sec. Carey said:

"We expect that you will inform us of the times and circumstances when we can demonstrate our support for your legitimate aspirations."

John Brophy Named to OCD Group

Washington, Dec. 20—Pres. Philip Murray this week designated John Brophy, director of industrial union councils, to represent the CIO on the newly-created Labor Advisory Committee of the Office of Civilian Defense.

The committee held its first meeting with Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, OCD assistant director, on Dec. 17.

In a letter to Pres. Murray, Mrs. Roosevelt said that because "the impact of the defense programs in many situations bears down most directly on workers, I feel that representatives of the labor movement will wish to assume responsibility for presenting to us community problems which their members are forced to meet with a view to aiding us in our efforts to meet these problems."

'No Peace With Hitler'--Auxiliaries

Washington, Dec. 19—Peace on earth and goodwill toward men will only come after Hitlerism has been eliminated, Mrs. Faye Stephenson, president of the CIO Congress of Womens' Auxiliaries, said in a Christmas message to members issued here.

"This Christmas will be a sad one in many parts of the world. War, death, desolation and the iron grip of fascism do not make for a happy Christmas. 'Peace on earth, good-will to men' is a goal which can only be accomplished when fascist gangsterism has been eradicated from the world, she said.

"The Congress of Women's Auxiliaries of the CIO has pledged its 'wholehearted support to the government and the President of the United States in the war against Japan and her axis allies.' We have pledged our all out aid to those countries and those brave men and women who are fighting with us against tyranny, so that peace and good-will may reign on this earth.

"I think it is appropriate and in keeping with the spirit of Christmas to re-dedicate ourselves and our organization—a women's organization—to the task of protecting our nation and our democracy by defeating Hitler and all he stands for."

CIO Board Approves Committee

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18—Approval of a six-man committee to meet with representatives of the public, of industry and the AFL on labor relations problems in the victory program marked the special meeting of the CIO Executive Board called Saturday by Pres. Murray. In addition, the Board passed a resolution dealing with priorities unemployment and one on the problem of defense housing.

The committee approved by the Board consisted of Pres. Murray, United Mine Workers President John L. Lewis, Emil Rieve, president of the Textile Workers, Joseph Curran, president of the Natl. Maritime Union, Julius Emspak, secretary-treasurer of the Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, and R. J. Thomas, president of the United Automobile Workers.

PRIORITIES CRISIS

Pointing out that at least 300,000 automobile workers will be out of work by the spring of 1942, the resolution, calling for "every effort to give such workers jobs essential and useful to the national effort to win the war," declared in part:

"Resolved that the CIO call for the immediate establishment of a work program of projects essential to the victory program, upon which all workers so made jobless could be given jobs immediately at going rates and without means tests, and be it further

"Resolved that the CIO through its executive officers shall intensify its efforts to have established the industry council plan and other CIO proposals directed to a full employment of all workers and for the speeding up of our productive effort."

DEFENSE HOUSING

The second resolution strongly condemned the Lanham Defense Housing Act as one of the most "destructive blows ever directed at the public housing program" and simply designed to "serve the purpose of avaricious private interests at the expense of the general welfare."

Report From Group Due Soon

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19—Recommendations for a U. S. wartime labor policy aimed at highest possible production and a minimum of disputes were expected from a government-sponsored labor-industry conference today as The CIO NEWS went to press.

The group of 24 men—six from CIO, six from AFL and 12 from industry—has been meeting since Dec. 17 in the Federal Reserve Board Bldg. here after they heard a plea from Pres. Roosevelt that their activities be guided by the seriousness of the national emergency.

No indication of developments was forthcoming from the closed meetings. All groups represented had agreed that none would air its views or suggestions until a final agreement was reached.

The CIO delegation met with CIO Pres. Philip Murray on Dec. 16 and discussed the proposals it would submit to the meeting the next day.

In general the CIO has favored the Industry Council Plan as the most suitable method of reaching industrial peace and maximum production.

DAVIS HEADS GROUP

Moderator of the meetings was William H. Davis, chairman of the National Defense Mediation Board—whose CIO members resigned after the decision against the United Mine Workers' demand for the union shop in the captive mines. Associate moderator is Sen. Elbert Thomas of Utah, chairman of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, whose group is charged with consideration of the Smith Bill and other anti-labor legislation in the next few weeks.

MEET WITH FDR

Previous to the closed meetings, the entire group assembled at the White House for a discussion of the problem with President Roosevelt.

"We are here as a group—industry and labor—with a chairman chosen from the executive branch of the government and a vice-chairman from the legislative branch of the government to act," the President said.

"I dug up the word 'moderator.' It's a good word. These two gentlemen are moderators. I don't think they will have to wield any big stick. I think rather they can truly act as exceedingly peaceful

A Gift For Hitler

Christmas Spirit

Peace on earth, goodwill to men seem particularly remote this Christmas season, with Hitler's war ravaging most of the globe and every kind of persecution and hatred following in its train.

But there are compensations more in the Christmas spirit. Internationally there is the closer spirit of brotherhood between the peoples who are bound together in a common effort to destroy war-mad Hitlerism; and between them and the oppressed peoples in the conquered nations and in the Axis countries themselves.

Within the United States there is the spirit of national unity. All elements in the population are drawn together as never before, and genuine efforts are being made for greater and more fraternal cooperation. Fully in line with this is the Murray industry council plan of CIO, now more to the fore than ever and designed to effect the closest cooperation between labor, industry and government for all-out production.

Also on the cheerful side, in this Christmas season, is the temporary shelving of the hate-breeding and oppressive Smith anti-labor bill and other similar measures, to give the labor-industry-government conference in session at the time of writing a chance to work out wartime labor policies by voluntary agreement.

And talking of Christmas, one of the best presents to give to anyone this year (or to yourself for that matter) is a Defense Savings Bond or Defense Stamps. The CIO convention urged the widest possible purchase of such bonds and stamps as a patriotic duty to finance the victory program, as a safeguard against inflation, and as a "splendid financial backlog" for workers and their families against post-war readjustment and depression.

Getting Acquainted

America has a new army. Hundreds of thousands of young men from the shops and farms and every other walk of life have been added to the old regular army, and this mass influx is only just getting under way.

This new army is part of industrial America and its working population, not merely because of all the workers in uniform who swell its ranks, but also by virtue of the fact that a modern mechanized army is almost completely dependent on the closest association with modern mass-production industry.

The technical aspects of this association have long been recognized. But the human and social aspects have received slower recognition.

The War Department is becoming aware of the importance of creating a closer sense of identification between the army and the men and women of labor on whom it depends. It has sponsored a number of visits by soldiers to industrial plants, where they could see their weapons and materials being produced and meet and talk with the workers.

In line with this same purpose, the War Department is now considering proposals for enabling labor unionists to visit army camps, so they can see at first-hand the needs and problems of the soldiers using their products.

First experimental step in this direction has been a trip for a small group of labor editors to Fort Knox, Kentucky, designed to give them an opportunity to pass on their impressions to labor readers. Such initiative on the part of the War Department is sincerely to be welcomed. It is to be hoped that it may be followed by the granting of similar opportunities to union leaders and rank-and-file workers, as widely as possible, to visit army camps; and that in general closer relationships may be established.

All such steps are bound to create a more general feeling of identification between labor and the army; an increased desire to achieve ever greater production; better understanding on both sides, and a deeper realization that we all are, or should be, close comrades and co-workers in a common effort.

The OPM has just announced that the first army bomber assembled from parts fabricated by the automobile industry will roll from the production line shortly after the first of the year. Just about a year ago the CIO proposed such procedure through the Reuther plan. How many more planes we might have had by now, if these proposals had been adopted at once.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

TO FIT yourself into a tank you need to be as boneless as a contortionist, as twistable as a corkscrew and as compact as a folding camera.

Once packed inside (and we mean packed), you are 75% deaf, 25% blind and you have all the freedom of movement of a cripple caught in a New York subway rush.

A sardine at least can stretch out full length in his little can. But the four men who make up the crew of a light tank seem doomed to be continually bent around and between a wide variety of hard projecting objects.

Such at any rate are some of the impressions of the unduly plump, elongated, bony or unbendable labor editors who recently tried riding in light army tanks as guests of the Armored Force at Fort Knox, Ky. The medium tanks are a little more roomy, but seven men are fitted into them.

You wear a sort of football helmet to prevent your head from being bashed when the going gets rough. (The editors found their going roughest just getting in and out.) And though minor bumps are not so much felt as in an auto, there is a constant vibration reminiscent of the earliest automobiles.

The tank rides left the most vivid impression on the labor visitors, out of many sharp impressions of what was to most of them a strange new world. For they gave, physically and directly, a slight inkling of what it feels like to be in a tank crew.

And the result was profound admiration for the men who, in all the discomfort and confinement of such cramped quarters, must be operators of complicated equipment, skilled mechanics, and gunners and fighting men at the same time.

Beneath all the surface strangeness of army life, however, there were similarities with the life of industrial workers that were more significant.

In the first place, most of the enlisted men, and some even of the officers, are from the shops and factories. They are fellow workers in uniform (and fellow unionists, many of them) to the CIO members employed in industry.

Secondly, an armored division is in itself a microcosm of industrial America, with all the organization of a small industrial community. In addition to its purely military aspects, it has its repair shops and the widest variety of the most modern equipment to maintain. A large proportion of the soldiers must be trained mechanics, and all are directly dependent on industry to a degree never known in previous wars.

It is estimated that in the past it took three men in industry to keep one fighting man in the field; but now it takes 18 men in industry for each man on the firing line.

Another fact about our modern army: one out of every three men in it is connected in one way or another with the servicing of motor vehicles.

A few more brief and surface impressions of life in our new army:

Singing in the camp movie. Nearly everyone joins in, when songs are flashed on the screen—sentimental songs about honeysuckle, home, the girl friend, etc. The boys are homesick for the softer, warmer things of life. In the dark of the movie, their voices tell what their faces hide.

Brass hats. Perhaps we saw only the better types. But the officers we met, from generals to second lieutenants, were more informal, democratic, less hidebound than we expected. Rapid promotion in an expanding army may have something to do with it. A qualified enlisted man can graduate as an officer after a three-month training course.

Aptitude tests. The most modern educational methods are used in the Armored Force School. Novel but simple tests are applied to the draftee to find out which of the many skilled functions he can most quickly be trained to fill.

Social activity. Nothing like enough done to provide recreation and amusement for leisure hours. Resentment at having to pay, from meager army wages, for what is provided. A general feeling that the government should provide such essentials to morale, and not let the supply depend on "charity" or outside organizations.

Equipment. Not enough tanks. Tanks lacking radio and other necessary equipment. Not enough guns, not enough trucks, not enough of anything.

They look to us. Our union brothers, our fellow workers, our sons, brothers, cousins (maybe soon ourselves) are in this mushrooming people's army. Their comfort, their efficiency, their lives depend on the most and best industry can give them. They expect labor to back them up. What an incentive for the all-out production to which CIO is committed!

Plan for Quicker Ship Handling Presented to U.S.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 18—Declaring that present delays in loading and unloading ships, due to inefficient methods "are comparable to a vital defense plant ceasing operations," the Intl. Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, CIO, offered a plan for setting up an industry council to work out improvements in operating and working conditions on the docks.

The plan, prepared and offered to the government and the employers by ILWU President Harry Bridges, implements the CIO Industry Council Plan in the shipping industry and calls for "an immediate and substantial increase in production in the loading and unloading of ships, thereby affording the nation the equivalent of a substantial fleet of additional ships."

"The solution to the problem can best be found by joint planning and effort on the part of the unions representing the personnel needed to load and unload the ships, the ship operators who own and operate the ships, and the U. S. Maritime Commission, which has been authorized by Congress to aid the American maritime industry as a vital part of the nation"s defense and war effort," Bridges said in the preamble to the plan.

EFFICIENT USE

Three main points are necessary to make the most efficient use of shipping, Bridges said: proper loading, prevention of sabotage, and the "quickest possible turn-around" in American ports to avoid waste of cargo space. In addition, he pointed out, profiteering must be rigidly prevented "in the interests of national economy in prosecuting the war."

Duties of the industry council to be set up under the plan include the fullest use of labor-saving machinery, efficient storage of goods on docks to avoid congestion, utilization of Pacific coast ports at present lying almost idle, and a detailed study of present loading and unloading costs to work out the most economical methods.

On sabotage, the Bridges plan calls for use of trained longshoremen as guards and for strict measures to detect fifth column activities. In addition, better methods of preventing fires should be worked out. The plan also calls for study of means of continuing work under blackout conditions and air raids, "with due consideration for the safety of personnel, ships and cargoes."

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

A main point in the plan calls for full use of collective bargaining "in keeping with the machinery of existing union agreements," to adjust any dispute that might threaten full production. The plan also calls for use of "the best methods of hiring and placing the men on the job," which include the present hiring system under ILWU contracts.

"This plan will accomplish an increase in production and will reduce operating costs," Bridges said in presenting it. "This plan will insure immediate expansion of the maritime transport facilities of the merchant marine fleets of the U. S. and its Allies.

"In recognition of the fact that Hitlerism and fascism will not be defeated without complete national unity and maximum production in all vital defense industries, this plan is respectfully submitted for your favorable consideration.'"

Clothing Workers Donate Services To Red Cross

New York, Dec. 20—Several hundred members of the Shirtmakers' Joint Board, affiliated with the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, are to contribute their labor in making 5,000 hospital shirts for the American Red Cross at the plant of Max Hellinger, Port Chester, N. Y.

The Red Cross is contributing the material, the Hellinger and other firms are making their plants available for the purpose, while the union members are contributing their labor.

The offer made by the Hellinger employes to the Red Cross is believed to be the first of its kind in the apparel industry.

Win Back Pay At Idaho Firm

Payette, Idaho, Dec. 20—The Fruitland Cannery here recently handed out back wages to its more than 100 workers for pay due them under the U. S. Wage-Hour law for 1939-40, according to Sec. V. E. Alften of Local 256, CIO Cannery & Agricultural Workers.

The local had called the Wage-Hour Division's attention to the fact that they had been paid a nickel an hour less than the federal legal minimum during the two years, and had warned that members of the local planned to bring suit for the amount under the Fair Labor Standards Act unless the pay was given them.

Support For War Rolls In

arise between labor organizations be adjusted between themselves without stoppage of work; and that all differences or misunderstandings with employers be voluntarily submitted to federal conciliation or mediation without stoppage of work."

Support War

Wilmerding, Pa.—Local 610 of the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, employed at the Wilmerding Air Brake Co., unanimously adopted a resolution offering the President and the people of the U. S. "complete support and untiring efforts in our fight to smash the Japanese-Nazi-Fascist aggressors."

Offer Services

New York—One hundred officers and staff members of Local 65, United Wholesale & Warehouse Employes, have offered their services to the government "for such use as the authorities may deem necessary."

Vote Backing

New York—One thousand members of CIO United Optical Workers Union Local 208 have voted support of the government's war effort and pledged that they "will set an example of discipline and morale, whether in the armed forces or in civilian life."

Double Play

New York—The Industrial Insurance Agents Union, CIO, which recently won an election at the Prudential Life Insurance Co., this week wrote to Col. Franklin D'Olier, Civilian Defense Regional Director for New York, pledging full cooperation in the war effort. In the next few days the union will send another letter to Col. D'Olier asking him to bargain with the union—for D'Olier is also president of the Prudential.

Women Act

Washington—Active participation of CIO Auxiliary women all over the U. S. in the national victory effort was reported this week by the Congress of CIO Women's Auxiliaries.

Examples cited at headquarters here were a state-wide meeting in Michigan, a city-wide meeting in New York, and drives to "organize for victory" in Connecticut, Maryland, Washington, New York and on a national scale by the Auxiliary of the United Automobile Workers.

State, City Workers

New York, Dec. 20—European experience has shown that under modern war conditions "the most important tasks of Civilian Defense are borne by the government workers," Pres. Abram Flaxer of the State, County & Municipal Wokers reminded all locals this week.

Flaxer called on all members of the union "to take immediate steps to enter into home defense and other war work, and said that a meeting of the union's national executive board on Dec. 22 will adopt "a complete and concise program to make effective our contribution."

'Defeat Hitler,' N.Y. Workers Roar At Mass Meeting

NEW YORK, Dec. 20—A jammed Madison Square Garden heard CIO leaders pledge all-out production to defeat Hitler and to wipe Fascism from the earth as 25,000 New York workers turned out on three days' notice in the first major labor rally of the new war situation. The meeting received messages from CIO Pres. Philip Murray, from Interior Secretary Harold L. Ickes, from Wendell Willkie, Soviet Ambassador Maxim Litvinoff and others.

"The whole CIO is united in defense of our country against axis aggression and joins with you and all other true Americans in our common purpose to defeat once and for all the evil powers of fascism which are seeking to enslave humanity," Murray declared. "In offering the brains and energies of all its members to our country, the CIO urges speedy adoption of the industry council plan for effecting maximum production."

LABOR'S JOB

The defeat of Hitler is labor's job, Willkie said in his message to the meeting. "Labor in America will be the determining factor as to whether Hitler and Japan and all the other war lords are eliminated from this earth," he wired. "I call you men of labor to the highest destiny that has ever been afforded you."

Speakers at the meeting included Mayor F. H. LaGuardia, Rep. Vito Marcantonio, Lieut. Governor Charles Polletti, and Joseph Curran, president of the National Maritime Union and a vice-president of the CIO, who was chairman.

Litvinoff's greeting declared that "all free peace-loving nations, all classes, all associations now have only one thought, one desire; to crush and eradicate every form of fascism as the obstacle to peace, to freedom and to democracy. In your hour of trial the Soviet people are with you as you are with our people. Our common effort will be crowned by victory."

ICKES' GREETING

Secretary Ickes, in his greeting, pointed to the wisdom of enacting progressive labor laws as demonstrated in the immediate and unanimous support American labor has given the government.

"Only in a democracy are the rights of labor safeguarded," he wired.

moderators in presiding at your meetings.

"I know, if I were moderator, I would want results—a complete agreement. . . . I want speed. Speed now is of the essence, just as much in turning things out in plants as it is among the fighting forces. It is just as necessary to turn out equipment as it is to drill an army or build a navy after the equipment is turned out. Speed is very, very much of the essence."

Auto Workers Urge Chrysler, Ford, GM Adopt 7-Day Week

NEW YORK, Dec. 20—(FP)—Immediate establishment of a 7-day week through introduction of a fourth shift was demanded Dec. 11 by the CIO United Automobile Aircraft & Agricultural Implement Workers in wires to General Motors, Chrysler and Ford.

The telegrams were sent by the UAW executive board, which has been meeting here.

Overtime and other union demands under the new production schedule can be negotiated after the 7-day week is established, with unsettled points going to arbitration, the wire pointed out.

FOR SAFETY'S SAKE

"The safety of our country demands that maximum production be achieved without further delay and we sincerely trust that a 24-hour day, 7-day week schedule can be initiated in all defense plants," the wire said.

Union officials explained that the plan would operate through four 40-hour shifts, staggered to use up 160 of the 168 hours in a week. The balance of the eight hours would be reserved for repairs and other maintenance work.

DETROIT, Dec. 20—Failure of the auto industry to accept CIO proposals for a gradual change-over from civilian war production, as proposed repeatedly by the UAW-CIO through the Reuther plan, resulted in a terriffic bombardment of auto workers' jobs during the first week of U. S. participation in the war.

The UAW-CIO research department estimates that plant shutdowns will lay off about 350,000 union members. The reduced production permitted by the government in January will return 250,000 to their jobs, but by February probably no more passenger cars will be made, and employment on parts and trucks may not exceed 100,000.

Changeover to defense production is proceeding so slowly that, according to research estimates, only about 100,000 are now employed on defense work and only about 15,000 will be added per month for some time to come.

Plymouth Local 51, whose members are employed by the Chrysler Corp., held a protest mass meeting last week at which it was shown that even the rosiest plans of the corporation will not take care of laid-off members adequately. The local at the same time boosted the sale of defense bonds and other defense measures.

Reuther Hits Knudsen's Stalling

New York, Dec. 20—(FP)—Assailing the auto industry for its cold-shoulder of his plan to speed up aircraft production, Walter P. Reuther, director of the UAW-CIO General Motors division, suggested a three-point program for American war production.

Speaking at a luncheon of the Union for Democratic Action, Reuther proposed adaptation of all existing machinery for war production, the pooling of the resources, men and machinery of industry for defense production, and the reconsideration of false, out-moded standards of production to which the Army and Navy still cling.

FAILED TO COOPERATE

In his speech Reuther attacked OPM Director-General William S. Knudsen for failure to cooperate with the UAW-CIO in its plan for using idle automobile plants to produce plane parts.

After hedging on Reuther's request to tour auto plants to measure their value for aircraft production, Knudsen "suggested that he would make available a blue print of a standard airplane motor so that we might have an opportunity to break down the job and indicate what existing machines might be put to use in turning out such a motor in large numbers," Reuther said.

"We accepted the suggestion. Some nine months have passed—and we are still waiting to see those blue prints.

"WRONG SOURCE"

"During my discussions in Washington, I met with a member of the President's Cabinet. As we parted, he said: 'You know, there is only one thing wrong with your plan. It comes from the wrong source.'

"He added, in so many words, that it would be difficult to get full and fair consideration for our proposal because it came from a labor organization."

Jacksonville Unions Form CIO Council

Jacksonville, Fla., Dec. 20—Representatives of five CIO unions in Jacksonville have decided to form a city-wide industrial union council as one way of helping the government's war and civilian defense effort.

The decision was made at a meeting attended by delegates from the auto, shipbuilding, maritime, communications and newspaper unions. J. J. Pearson, Local 73, American Communications Assn., was elected temporary chairman and J. H. Thornhill of the United Automobile Workers, temporary secretary.

The group worked out an 8-point plan for aiding the war effort and is bringing it back to the locals for ratification. It calls for elimination of stoppages; cooperation with the AFL and the railroad brotherhoods; registration with civilian defense agencies; opposition to anti-labor bills and support of President Murray's Industry Council Plan; opposition to war profiteering; continuation of government assistance to foes of Hitler.

Pledge Full Radio Service On Ships

New York, Dec. 20—A pledge to President Roosevelt "that there shall be absolutely no interruption in the service performed by radio officers who are members of our union" was made today by the American Communications Assn., now bargaining for a new radio officers' contract for men employed by firms represented in the American Merchant Marine Institute.

"There shall be no strike," declared ACA Vice-Pres. Harry Morgan. "We will continue to do our part in delivering the goods so sorely needed to defeat our fascist enemies."

Negotiations between the ACA and the Institute reached a deadlock last week when the shipowners refused to comply with the union's demand for stabilization of wages for East Coast and Gulf radio operators on the basis established last month in agreements signed with the Pacific American Shipowners Assn.

Win Election

Fremont, Ohio—The UAW-CIO has won an NLRB election at the Herbrand Corp. here.

Heavy Toll

CHICAGO, Dec. 20—(FP)—Demonstrating the tremendous toll of accidents among workers, the Natl. Safety Council said here that the production time lost through accidents in the U. S. for the first nine months of 1941 was enough to build 20 battleships, 200 destroyers and 1,000 heavy bombers.

A total of 340 million man-days of production were lost during that period, through accidents on and off the job, the council reported.

During the same period 35,900 workers were killed by accidents: 13,900 at work and 22,000 off the job.

'Enlist Or Serve', Clothing Union Urges Members

NEW YORK, Dec. 20—Mobilizing its 280,000 members for participation in both the armed and civilian defenses of the country, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America yesterday moved on various fronts to aid in the successful prosecution of the war against Germany, Italy and Japan.

In a letter issued yesterday to the Amalgamated membership by Jacob S. Potofsky, general secretary-treasurer, the union called upon those of its members, who are qualified, to enlist in the armed services of the country.

Other union members were instructed to take their places in the civilian defense organizations in order to learn how "to protect the lives of your neighbors and your family from enemy attack."

Other instructions were:

"Keep the wheels of industry turning. Put a voluntary ban on strikes.

"Buy defense bonds or defense stamps steadily to the limit of your financial ability. Your money will do you no good if Hitler wins." The Amalgamated and its members to date have purchased more than $3,000,000 worth of Treasury bonds and savings stamps.

"DONATE BLOOD"

"Be a blood donor for the Red Cross; make a contribution to the Red Cross and the United Service Organizations.

"Keep a cool head and a warm heart. Do not spread rumors. Obey the authorities in letter and spirit.

"Keep your union mobilized and strong for instant action wherever needed in the cause of defense and victory.

"Wherever you are, whatever your task, fight this war with all that is in you, all day, every day, till victory is ours.

"We are right in our sacred cause. Together we are strong. The battle is ours for the winning. Start winning now. Think, work, fight for victory."

The Amalgamated operates in 30 States of the Union and in four Canadian provinces.

BUYING BONDS

Louis Hollander, co-manager, New York Joint Board, ACWA, announced, meanwhile, that the Joint Board has pledged itself to raise $1,000,000 in Treasury bonds and savings stamps among the New York membership, in addition to the $3,000,000 raised nationally by the Amalgamated.

Hollander stated that employes of Howard Clothes, chain stores, have already purchased $120,000 in bonds and stamps; employes of Goodstein Bros., $100,000, and employes of the Tops Clothing Company, meeting in their shop Tuesday at 275 Seventh Avenue, are expected to purchase another $50,000, worth of bonds and stamps.

Curb Strikes, Textile Locals Told By Leaders

New York, Dec. 20—In order to cut production losses to an absolute minimum, the Textile Workers Union of America, CIO, today called upon all locals to submit disputes to the national office before authorizing a strike.

The union's national office, Pres. Emil Rieve declared, will attempt to settle the dispute by negotiations, mediation or arbitration without the surrender of any of labor's rights.

Japan's "murderous attack" upon the United States "has immeasurably increased demands upon American production," Rieve said, with the result that "production must be the watchword of America."

Furniture Workers Gain Union Shop

Evansville, Ind., Dec. 20—A precedent was broken in Evansville's furniture industry when the Imperial Desk Co. renewed its agreement with Local 312, United Furniture Workers, and accepted a union proposal for the union shop.

Other sections of the agreement call for use of the union label on the firm's products, the right to reopen the wage clause on 30 days' notice, and seniority.

The union is carrying on an organizational campaign in many other Evansville furniture shops, and negotiations are expected to start shortly at the Globe-Basse World Furniture Co.

Sun Gives Bonus

Baltimore—For the first time in recent history, the conservative Baltimore Sun handed out Christmas bonuses to employes. The apparent reason: the Baltimore Newspaper Guild is conducting an organizing drive.

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

CIO unions and councils all over the nation are getting down to the business of beating Hitler and his Axis puppets. This weeks's convention of the Maryland-District of Columbia Council is an example. From the moment the delegates opened the meeting until the end, the defeat of fascism was the dominant theme. Organization of the unorganized to bring this victory nearer figured prominently in the delegates' plans, the officers' reports, and in resolutions and other actions.

The Maryland-D. C. Council has two major fields to organize for victory—aircraft and the Federal Government workers. Washington alone has close to 200,000 government employes who need organization, and some 4,000 a month are being added. Aircraft in Baltimore and elsewhere in the state is employing scores of thousands, and the CIO Auto Workers union is organizing them.

The Council was also able to report a good job done in organizing during the past year. Bethlehem Steel and Shipbuilding, among the leading industrial giants of the nation, were both organized and the SWOC and the Shipbuilders union can report smashing NLRB election victories.

FURNITURE VICTORY

What was probably the largest National Labor Relations Board election to be conducted among furniture workers in the South was won by the CIO United Furniture Workers of America on Tuesday, Dec. 16, according to CIO Regional Director E. L. Sandefur, who organized the workers of this plant and several others in Sumter, S. C.

The plant was that of William Furniture Corporation, which employs some 1,000 workers, 826 voting, of which 484 voted for the UFWA-CIO.

Regional Director Pete Mosele reports a decision rendered by James Largay of the N. Y. State Board of Mediation in the case involving the Lord & Burnham Co., of Irvington, N. Y., and the SWOC, providing that any person who signs an application for union membership voluntarily is considered to be a member of that union, regardless of whether or not he has paid initiation fees or dues.

Field Representative James P. Sweeney reports a victory at the Roller Bearing Company of America in behalf of the UAW-CIO with the following results: UAWA-CIO, 179; no union, 39.

Regional Director Pugh in Richmond, Va., reports that 90% of the employes at the Benjamin T. Crump Company in Richmond have signed up and received a charter from the Intl. Fur & Leather Workers Union.

Regional Director Pieper in New Orleans reports that the New Orleans Public Service Drive is well under way and results to date have been satisfactory.

Director of Organization, IWA-CIO, Adolph Germer, reports that the strike at the Brooks-Scanlon operations in Bend, Oregon, has been settled with an increased hourly pay which brings it up to the highest wage paid in the industry in that section of the state, vacations with pay was also part of the settlement.

Workers at the Caterpillar Tractor works in Peoria, Ill. voted for CIO by 5164 to 4159 for AFL, 563 for the independent and 2058 for no union.

PROGRESS IN AIRCRAFT

Progress in aircraft continues. Richard Frankensteen, director of the Aviation Division of the UAW-CIO, reports wage contracts covering 10,000 Bell aircraft workers in Buffalo, winning a 12.5 cent blanket raise and a 75 cent minimum.

Brewster Local 365 has won its fifth contract without a day's loss of production due to strikes. Negotiations at Goodyear Aircraft in Akron are continuing, following an election victory last month, and with the Aluminum Co. of America for 1,500 workers at its Vernon, Cal. plant.

Lawyers, Consumers Study Inflation Cause

NEW YORK, Dec. 20—"Inflation: What Can We Do About It"? That's the title of a new pamphlet just issued by the National Lawyers Guild and Consumers Union. It's available on request at Consumers Union, 17 Union Square West, New York City.

"We can control inflation," the pamphlet declares—"by establishing price stabilization in the interests of consumers; by working out an effective tax schedule based on ability to pay and aimed to prevent profiteering by those not now bearing their share of the national sacrifice, by taking steps to promote civilian production not conflicting with defense production; in short, by planning the future course of the defense program instead of letting it drift with runaway prices."

NEED STRONG LAW

The Price Control Bill, (HR547 and S 1810)—in its original form, before the southern polltaxers and northern reactionaries scraped out all its guts—was "an indispensable measure to combat inflation," the lawyer-consumer groups assert.

One way not to combat inflation is to freeze wages, the pamphlet contends, for that would "deprive workers of a vital protection against further rises in the cost of living."

JUSTIFICATION

"There is one supreme justification for an effective anti-inflation program," the authors conclude.

"A smoothly functioning economy can better absorb the impact of the defense program and better serve the ends of defense than one which is constantly being thrown off balance. And few developments can affect our economy so devastatingly as inflation . . .

DOLLAR LOSES VALUE

"What is inflation?

"Defined very simply, it is a very marked reduction in the purchasing power of the dollar. When inflation takes place, your dollars purchase less food, less clothing, less shelter. In World War I, for example, after an inflationary rise in prices, the purchasing power of the dollar was cut in half."

S. Claus to Distribute More Union-Made Toys

By JAMES PECK

NEW YORK, Dec. 20—(FP)—There will be more union-made toys this Christmas because three of the country's biggest toy plants have been brought under contract with the United Paper Novelty & Toy Workers Intl. Union, CIO, during the past year. They include the plant of Holgate Bros. Co. in Kane, Pa., a big plant of the Marx Toy Co. in Glendale, W. Va., and the factory of the All-Metal Toy Co. of Wyandotte, Mich.

XMAS CHEER FROM WPA: A worker at the WPA toy shop in New York City pastes a cap on the clown mask of a doll, which will be distributed among the city's poor children. The shop has produced 325,000 such gifts.

The agreement with Holgate, nationally known for its educational toys, was won through a bitter 13-week strike of 400 workers. The walkout in the isolated mountain community of Kane attracted nation-wide support after it had been publicized by Federated Press.

TWO-MONTH STRIKE

It took a tough 2-month strike of 600 workers to win the Marx contract, first agreement with one of the company's major plants, said Intl. Pres. Anthony Esposito. One of the nation's biggest toy manufacturers, the firm has plants in various parts of the country.

The contract with All-Metal Toy, manufacturer of mechanical and military toys, was won without a strike. The plant is situated in the strongly unionized Detroit area and the United Automobile Aircraft & Agricultural Implement Workers, CIO, helped the toy workers organize. The contract provides the highest scale in the industry.

BIG OPEN SHOPPER

Biggest open shopper in the toy industry is still the Rushton Toy Co. of Atlanta, a leading manufacturer of stuffed toys. The union has been trying to organize the plant for the past five years. Wages are as much as 50 per cent lower than those existing in union plants. An NLRB election is scheduled for Jan. 20.

With the exception of Rushton, there is no outstanding nonunion firm in the toy industry, Esposito said. Although a number of smaller plants are unorganized, the majority of the industry is under contract. The 1941 Christmas season found the industry strikeless.

JOB LOSS IN SPRING

The effect of the war is expected to be felt next March or April, when a number of plants will be forced either to shut down for lack of metal and other materials, or to switch to defense production. Esposito predicts that large numbers of employes will be thrown out of work, because many of the plants will be unable to get defense work. Some toy plants have already started defense orders, manufacturing such items as cartridge cases.

Most of the toy industry will probably shut down during the war as was the case in Britain, Esposito predicted. He said that in recent negotiations for contract renewals a number of employers had stalled, pleading future instability.

WAR THEME IN TOYS

Abandoning their former policy of playing down the war theme, manufacturers this year have gone in for war toys in a big way. Anti-aircraft guns, tanks, submarines and all the latest war instruments are reproduced in the 1941 crop of toys.

The public will not have to guard against buying Japanese or German toys this year, Esposito said. Even before the start of the war they constituted less than 2 per cent of the toys sold in the U. S. For the past few years the Japanese have concentrated on getting South American toy markets.

Recalling that in 1939 the union had warned Christmas shoppers against a last-minute shipment of toys from Germany, Esposito said no such shipment had arrived from Japan.

Dead Men Do Tell Tales—In Canada They 'Vote' Against Organized Workers

TORONTO, Ont., Dec. 20—Although the Steel Workers Organizing Committee was chosen by a majority of workers in the Chromium Mining & Smelting plant at Sault Ste. Marie this week, SWOC lost the election in the "Hitler" ballot conducted by the Dominion Department of Labor.

A total of 159 workers voted for recognition of SWOC, 127 against and 15 spoiled ballots.

Under the ruling of the department of labor, SWOC lost the election because a majority of the 320 workers eligible to vote was lacking by two votes. Although SWOC won a majority, the regulations provide that the 19 persons who did not mark a ballot through illness, death or other reasons, are recorded against the union.

SWOC officials pointed out that if the same principle were applied in elections to the House of Commons, only six followers of Prime Minister King would have been elected in the last general election and King and Labor Minister McLarty would not have sufficient votes to be seated. The department has also adopted a policy of refusing unions possession of voters' list.

SUPPORT FOR MINERS

Canadian labor continued to mobilize support behind the striking Kirkland Lake gold miners this week as 4,000 miners turned a deaf ear to a propaganda blitzkreig for a back-to-work movement. Plans were approved and machinery set in motion for the establishment of Kirkland Lake Strike committees in every city.

A national committee was set up at Ottawa last week-end to coordinate the efforts of all unions aiding the strikers. A wire was sent to Prime Minister King urging him to meet the committee and pointing out that "workers in Canada from coast to coast, in every factory and industry, eagerly desire to support the war and Canada's war Government.

"The anti-labor policy of the Kirkland Lake mine operators, and the Government's toleration of that policy, have seriously disturbed the workers, however, and undoubtedly affected their morale at a time when it is essential that the strongest possible basis for the fullest measure of popular support of every phase of the nation's war effort and war purpose be established."

Cork Union Wins Strike, Gets Raises

Gloucester, N. J., Dec. 20 — The United Cork Workers Local Industrial Union 1060, CIO, called off its strike at the Armstrong Cork Co. plant here after winning raises of from three to 10 cents an hour.

Watchmen and firemen gained three-cent increases; maintenance men from three to seven cents; and longshoremen a dime. Three-cent increases are retroactive to Aug. 26, while employes on the payroll Oct. 4 will receive an additional 2% bonus.

"This group of workers should be commended for the great determined fight they have put up against this gigantic corporation, which has been trying to starve them into submission since Oct. 7," it was pointed out by Victor Osuchowski, CIO field representative.

Victory Calendar

New York, Dec. 20— A Victory Calendar for 1942 containing 16 pages of drawings by well known living artists has been put out by the United American Artists Workshop. Planned, designed and published by the UAA Workshop, recently formed to produce "art with a union label," the calendar contains drawings by Rockwell Kent, William Gropper, Art Young, Hugo Gellert, Harry Gottlieb and others.

Jim Egleson, chairman of the Workshop said that in making the calendar, the artists' objective was to make it "an instrument for the forging of national unity and victory over Hitlerism."

The Victory Calendar sells for 25 cents each, with special rates for large orders. It may be ordered from United American Artists, 33 East 20th St., New York City.

Smash The Axis—Buy Defense Savings Bonds

FAR NORTH STRIKE: Frigid weather hasn't cooled down the spirits of striking members of the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers at eight Kirkland, Ontario, gold mining corporations whose fat profits are matched only by their resistance to collective bargaining. The strike, regarded as one of the most important in Dominion history, has won record-breaking support. At left, some of the strikers parade through Kirkland's main street. At right, pickets warm up with hot coffee at one of their relief tents; police later made them remove it.

Mexican Labor Shows Support Of War Stand

By FRANK JELLINEK
By Federated Press

MEXICO CITY, Dec. 20—Even before Mexico officially defined its war position beside the U. S., the Mexican Labor Federation (CTM) and the Civil Servants Union put 30,000 members on the streets of Mexico City in a demonstration of full support for action against fascist aggression.

Complete cooperation between all classes of society and all anti-fascist organizations was called for, and the unions placed themselves behind Pres. Avila Camacho in expectation that he, like many other Latin American leaders, would at once declare war.

Later, labor representatives showed appreciation of the President's position that a war declaration would be relatively meaningless, but that all productive effort and all facilities the U. S. needs should be freely given to achieve democratic victory.

It is realized here that open declaration of war might well precipitate internal struggles, since Nazi-infiltrated organizations, such as Accion Nacional and the Sinarquists, might have more than a nuisance value if they were directly attacked and their members jailed.

A policy of sharp vigilance and immediate action whenever there is the slightest indication of need for it will now characterize not only governmental but also labor union tactics.

National Action and the Sinarquists have repeatedly denied they have any links with the Axis. They must now act in a manner to prove their denials.

NO 'ZIMMERMAN PLOT'

While there is admittedly little enthusiasm for the U. S. amid certain sections of the middle class which have long been under fascist and reactionary influences, there is no possible chance of success of another Zimmerman plot, such as panicked the U. S. in the last war by promising return of Texas for aid to Germany.

The Camacho government emerged from the labor movement, the army and a political machine built by the most anti-fascist of all Latin American presidents, Lazaro Cardenas.

Recently, the Nazi government grossly insulted Mexico on the occasion of a humanitarian appeal against shooting of hostages in France.

With real political tact, the U. S. has allowed Mexican troops to cross U. S. territory under arms on their way to Lower California, a gesture appreciated here on a scale that can hardly be realized by anyone who does not know the country well.

Plan Drive In Tobacco

Philadelphia, Dec. 20—A Tobacco Workers Organizing Committee has been established by the CIO Cannery & Agricultural Workers to complete the job of unionizing some 15,000 cigar and tobacco workers in the Philadelphia area.

This district is "the heart of the machine-made cigar industry and of strategic importance in the UCAP-AWA national organizing campaign," according to Pres. Donald Henderson.

John Tisa, international representative of the union, has been appointed committee chairman.

Biggest plant in the area is Bayuk's in Philadelphia, which employs about 5,000 cigar workers. Strong drives in this and other plants are already under way.

40c Minimum Recommended

Washington, Dec. 20— A recommendation for the establishment of a 40-cent minimum wage in the cigar manufacturing industry and of a 35c base for those working on the preparation of cigar leaf tobacco, was made today to the Wage-Hour Administration by an industry committee.

Wage-Hour economists estimate that about 44,000 cigar makers and other employes of cigar factories come under the proposed 40-cent minimum rate, and that about 7,000 cigar leaf workers are now earning less than 35 cents.

Office Employes Get Raise In New Clothing Pact

New York, Dec. 20— Five thousand office workers and auxiliary help employed in the clothing and bathrobe industry in the Greater New York area are covered by a new agreement between the New York Joint Board of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and the New York Clothing Manufacturers' Exchange, providing $2 weekly increases and other gains.

This is the first time that office workers and certain auxiliary help are covered by an Amalgamated agreement in this area. They are employed in men's and boys' clothing plants, children's clothing, single pants, kneepants and bathrobe factories.

Beside the wage increase, the agreement provides that all office workers, with the exception of executives and confidential secretaries, are required to join the union. New employes must join the union after their trial period of employment is completed.

Union Raps Lockout Threat On L. A. Transit Lines

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 20—Endangering war production and civilian defense in the admitted "hot spot" of the Pacific coast, the Los Angeles Railway Co. was threatening to lock out 2,100 of its 3,500 employes this week.

The transit company has announced that it will immediately discharge all workers who do not immediately join the Amalgamated Association of Street Car Employes under the terms of a backdoor closed shop agreement negotiated last spring with a company union which has since been taken over, contract and all, by the AFL union.

The majority of the workers successfully resisted this company union maneuver, preferring local 156 of the Transport Workers' Union. TWU has secured 2,100 cards from L. A. railway workers demanding an election to choose their collective bargaining agency.

The CIO is placing this proof of a majority before Mayor Fletcher Bowron and federal authorities, requesting an immediate conference to avert the lockout. Transport Workers' Union is cooperating with the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen in a joint organizing drive among all the Los Angeles transit workers, with encouraging results.

"I'm leaving for a vacation, Mabel. I've just finished my civilian aid course with the Red Cross."

Chicago Dept. Store Signs Pact

CHICAGO, Dec. 20—CIO's second contract with a major Chicago retailing outlet was won here when the Boston store signed an agreement that lifts wages by $100,000 a year.

The pact, won by Local 291 of the United Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Employes, follows by four months a contract with the Fair Store which broke the ice against the union along Chicago's State Street.

In addition to increasing wages, the agreement provides job security, a special war clause for employes called into the military services, and improved working conditions.

CIO Federal Union Backs Ramspeck Bill

Washington, Dec. 20—The Ramspeck Bill, designed to increase the salary of workers in some sections of the federal service, today won the endorsement of the United Federal Workers, CIO.

The bill was introduced by Rep. Robert Ramspeck, chairman of the House Civil Service Committee.

The union requested Budget Director Harold Smith for a conference to work out plans for a general pay raise and overtime pay program made necessary by skyrocketing living costs.

Ramspeck's Bill (HR 6217) would establish a federal government minimum scale of $1,200 except for one grade of custodial employes, and would increase the wages of a number of other custodial and subprofessional classifications.

Union Settles 2-Week Strike

New York, Dec. 20—A two-week strike at the Advertisers Mailing Service was settled this week when the company agreed to sign the master agreement for New York's lettershop industry worked out a few weeks ago by the United Office and Professional Workers.

The agreement provides a general wage increase, one week's vacation with pay, seniority rights and five paid holidays.

Earlier offers by Local 16 of the UOPWA to mediate or arbitrate the dispute were turned down by the firm, but after the declaration of war, the management agreed to negotiate a settlement.

CIO HAILS NEW AGREEMENT TO AVERT WARTIME STRIKES

Birmingham Post Signs With Guild

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Dec. 24—The Scripps-Howard Birmingham Post, closed since Sept. 6 by a strike of the American Newspaper Guild, appeared on the streets again this week, after a contract that brought staff members a 20% increase, voluntary check-off and improved working conditions.

The settlement was gained after two weeks of negotiations, in which ANG Exec. Sec. Sam Eubanks, SWOC Regional Director William Mitch and other Alabama CIO officials participated.

SEES PEACEFUL PROGRESS

Barney Taylor, a Guild International representative, said the strikers look forward to "a new era of peaceful progress" for both the paper and the staff.

Taylor, who participated in the negotiations, declared: "Our friends in the labor movement—CIO, AFL and independent—who gave the Guild their unstinting support, will understand that the signing of a satisfactory contract ends the battle, and that there will be no reason for them to withhold support from the Post."

WIDE SUPPORT

The strike—one of the first by white collar workers in this southern industrial city—gained wide support from organized labor both in Birmingham and throughout the country.

Miners, steel workers and others who backed the Guild contributed funds and pickets to the newspapermen's cause so effectively that a few hours after the strike had been called, the Scripps-Howard management announced it would not seek to publish until an agreement had been reached.

WINS: Sec.-Treas. Alice Balmer, Local 35, United Office and Professional Workers, who led a union drive to raise state minimums for women office workers in the State of Washington. As a result, the minimums jump from $13.20 a week to $18 on January 1.

WANT PRODUCTION: Thousands of auto workers picket the Chrysler plant in Detroit protesting layoffs caused by shortages of materials. CIO plans to prevent layoffs and speed war production have been pigeon-holed by dollar-a-year men.

Jackson, Canadian Electrical Union Leader, Freed From Prison Camp

TORONTO, Ont., Dec. 24—Release of Clarence S. Jackson, Canadian vice-president of United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers' Union, from an internment camp this week overshadowed all other developments on the Canadian labor scene including appointment of a new minister of labor.

Jackson's release was attributed to a growing protest in both the U. S. and Canada against his internment without trial. He was put on a train, unconditionally released, the day after an Ontario Supreme Court judge quashed the conviction of 14 Canadian General Electric union stewards for striking illegally. Jackson was originally charged with the 14 but was interned before the trial started.

"I got out because there was no reason for being put in," Jackson commented briefly on returning after his five-months' confinement. "The main thing now is to get back to work, to help Canadiian workers to organize for a maximum war effort."

NEW LABOR MINISTER

Appointment of a former AFL electrician, Humphrey Mitchell, as minister of labor followed growing protests against the stalling tactics of the department of labor presided over by millionaire-lawyer Norman McLarty.

The latter was made secretary of state. The new minister has been closely identified with the Government's labor policy during recent years and proposed formation of company unions, notably in the Kirkland Lake gold area where a conciliation board recommended unanimous recognition of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers' Union.

Another conciliation board recommended unanimously this week that a Toronto steel company bargain with SWOC.

Win Poll By 9-1

Cleveland, Dec. 27—Bargaining rights for workers at the United Aircraft Products, Dayton, Ohio, held by the AFL for three years, went to the CIO recently as the result of a Labor Board election won by the CIO United Automobile Workers. The vote was 461 for the UAW-CIO to 57 for the AFL.

Paul Miley, UAW regional director, also reported that an election was won at the Pittsburgh-Chrysler Division of the Chrysler Corp. by a vote of 71 for the CIO to two for no union. Organizational activities will now be directed at the new G. M. Propeller plant of Aero Products, Miley said.

Yes, Adolph: That Tank's Got a CIO Label

DETROIT, Dec. 24—American-made tanks bearing a CIO union label are on the job with the British armies that are moving to sweep the Axis forces out of northern Africa.

"The American-made medium tanks in the British Libyan command are powered with motors made by Continental Motors of this city," Sec.-Treas. George Addes of the CIO auto workers union said today. "Under the UAW agreement, made by Local 280 with the Continental management, every motor has the union label imprinted on it.

"By the irony of history Adolf Hitler, who crushed the unions in Germany and the occupied countries, is now himself being crushed on the African front by tanks that are union-made, bearing the union label to the immediate attention of his lieutenants in Libya.

"We expect Detroit union-label tanks to give us equally good account of themselves on the other fronts in due time."

Murray Asks Full Support

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24—Pres. Philip Murray and other high CIO officials "hailed with delight" today the voluntary agreement to avert wartime strikes and provide adequate mediation for all disputes reached by the government-labor-industry conference this week.

The plan, accepted by President Franklin D. Roosevelt a few hours after its endorsement by the 12 CIO and AFL members of the conference, provides:

1. "There shall be no strikes or lockouts."

2. "All disputes shall be settled by peaceful means."

3. "The President shall set up a proper War Labor Board to handle these disputes."

The three-point proposal was brought forward by Sen. Elbert Thomas of Utah, head of the Senate Labor Committee and associate moderator of the conference. It rejected employer proposals to freeze open-shop conditions and to bar union shop proposals from consideration.

CIO Wins Bethlehem Ship Poll

NEW YORK, Dec. 27—A two to one victory in elections on 13 boats of the Bethlehem fleet on the Great Lakes was reported here this week by the National Maritime Union.

The vote was 212 for the NMU to 103 for no union.

"With this new triumph," the union stated, "the NMU has attained all four of the major organizing goals set by the Lakes conference last August. Under the direction of Vice President Jack Lawrenson, the job of organizing Ford, International Harvester, Inland Steel and Bethlehem Steel ships has been completed within five months.

"This achievement offers conclusive proof to seamen on the Lakes and elsewhere that while the NMU is bending all its energies toward assuring U. S. victory over the Axis, it is not neglecting its fundamental task of organizing the unorganized and improving their wage and working conditions."

SWOC As Santa Claus:

Parleys Lift Pay $335,000 At Big Steel Plants

PITTSBURGH, Dec. 24—Annual wage increases of $300,000 at the Clairton Coke plant and $35,000 at the Homestead, Pa., mill, of Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corp., were won for its members by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, through grievance cases settled in the last few days, Clinton S. Golden, northeastern regional director, announced.

The increases came through adjustment of various wage classifications at the two mills as a result of joint negotiations between SWOC representatives and officials of Carnegie-Illinois.

Employes affected by the increase in pay rates will receive first payments before Christmas.

The $35,000 raise at Homestead was based on final settlement of a grievance case which had its inception in the 100-inch mill shear crew and was the subject of negotiations since last Feb. 7.

JOINT PROGRAM

A joint program of job evaluation in which representatives of the SWOC, Carnegie-Illinois industrial engineering department, and the Trundle Engineering Co., of Cleveland, participated, made possible the final settlement.

Establishment of a standard bonus system for those occupations which previously had not participated in a bonus is part of the agreement. A great many occupations within the 100-inch mill received increases in their evaluated raises.

The original grievance involving 15 men in the shear crew will be submitted to arbitration—the first time in history that arbitration has been used in Carnegie-Illinois plants in the Pittsburgh district.

A partial payment of back wages due the union members in Homestead was made by the corporation on Dec. 17.

"REVIEW AND REVISE"

During the conferences which led to the April, 1941, wage agreement with Carnegie-Illinois, it was formally agreed bewteen President J. L. Perry, of the corporation, and Chariman Philip Murray, of SWOC, that steps would be taken to review and revise, if necessary, the wage structure at the Clairton coke plant.

Subsequently, a joint survey at Clairton was made by a committee composed of William Theis, president, and George W. Giles, of SWOC Local 1157; Frank Hoffman, of the SWOC national office; Fred Wilson, James MacIntosh, F. R. Henderer, for the company, and Bert Jody, of the Trundle Engineering Co., as neutral chairman.

This committee made a survey of the working conditions surrounding the Clairton coke plant oven operations for the purpose of determining whether or not additional employes were required in certain occupations in and about the coke ovens.

They were especially concerned with the question of relief men during the summer period.

Their recommendations, which were adopted, provided for the addition of 33 men to the coke plant operations during the summer months, 18 of whom are to be removed during the winter season, leaving an increase of 15 men over the previous winter crew.

LABOR BUYS BONDS

Four $1,000 Defense Savings Bonds were purchased by Clayton C. Harter, Massilon, Ohio, with the back pay he received from Republic Steel. A member of SWOC Lodge 1124, Mr. Harter was one of thousands of workers discharged following the "Little Steel" strike of 1937. A Labor Board decision awarded Republic workers $1,500,000. They invested most of it in Defense Savings Bonds.

Dairy Farmers In Mine Union

Flint, Mich., Dec. 24—Affiliation of the United Dairy Farmers, comprising 5,000 Michigan milk producers, to District 50 of the United Mine Workers of America was announced here this week by Ray Thomason, regional director, and Ralph H. Marlatt, newly-appointed director of organization for the Dairy Farmers Division of District 50.

Thomason said that the milk farmers "will have complete local autonomy as a division of District 50. They will also benefit from the resources and power of District 50 and the United Mine Workers of America."

PLAN NATIONAL DRIVE

The dairy farmers requested affiliation in the UMWA in order to undertake a national organization drive. The UDF has hitherto been established only in Michigan.

District 50 Pres. O. E. Gasaway and Sec.-Treas. Kathryn Lewis will work closely with the UDF division in mapping the organizational plans, it was said here.

Thomason called upon all CIO affiliates to cooperate with "our rural brothers."

Buy Bonds To Replace 'Arizona'

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24—A roaring affirmative was given this week by the CIO Automobile Workers to the now-familiar question, "Any bonds today?"

The auto union, it was announced by Sec. of the Treasury Henry Morganthau, has set as its goal the purchase of 50 million dollars' worth of the bonds—enough to build a battleship to replace the U.S.S. Arizona, sunk by Japanese raiders at Pearl Harbor.

UNION'S ANSWER

UAW-CIO Pres. R. J. Thomas wrote to Morgenthau:

"The son of a UAW-CIO member went down on the Arizona. He was killed in action.

"We are answering that dastardly attack by purchasing these defense bonds to replace the U.S.S. Arizona as speedly as possible in order to stop forever the brutal aggressions of our enemies."

Treasury sources reported that hundreds of unions throughout the country are responding to the call for purchase of the defense savings bonds.

10% OF INCOME

In New York, members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers at the Albert Turner, Inc., shop voted to allot 10% of their weekly wages to purchase of the bonds.

In Houston, Tex., Local 227 of the CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union put $6,000 of its strike funds into the bonds, while Local 23 in Port Arthur bought bonds worth $300.

Auto Union Offers Plan For Re-Tooling To Speed Production, Rehire Men

DETROIT, Dec. 24—Faster retooling of Detroit's auto plants would put several thousand unemployed auto workers back on their jobs within 90 days and speed immeasurably the nation's "Production for Victory" program, Sec.-Treas. George Addes of the auto union told a UAW-CIO conference here this week.

A year will elapse before most of the workers now out of jobs can get back to work, auto manufacturers have estimated. Just last week the Ford Motor Co. stopped its auto assembly line, throwing close to 40,000 workers into the ranks of the unemployed for some time to come.

Addes, who serves as director of UAW's defense employment division, explained his plan for "coordinated tooling for war production" as this:

"Pick the most important immediate thing and do it. Get your tooling done on the No. 1 project. Get your materials lined up, not by the self-defeating and confusing priorities system, but by real concentration on the selected project. And then go ahead and produce.

"RIGHT OF WAY"

"It is the government's function to decide what project to take up first. If it should be a complete bomber program for Detroit, or anti-aircraft guns, or tanks or motors—give it the right of way. After the tooling for the No. 1 project is out of the way, concentrate on No. 2 and then on No. 3. Don't spread yourself on all of them at once, but coordinate."

Use of this "one-at-a-time" plan permits pooling of resources, of equipment and of manpower in the industry, Addes pointed out.

MACHINES IDLE

The union's most recent survey in Detroit shows that 114 tool and die shops were working only 46 per cent of available machine-hours.

"We propose that the big employers be made the prime contractors in each project as it is successively released by the government," Addes said. "These corporations will give their tooling requirements to a central tool procurement agency on which industry, labor and the government will have representatives.

"This agency will distribute the various sections of the tooling program to both the captive shops and the larger jobbing shops. Distributions will be based on what each shop can do best and fastest. These in turn will subcontract along the lines of efficiency and speed. The smaller shops with fewer machines and fewer men will get the machining work, as a rule, while their own tooling will go to the larger shops.

"Production will be handled along similar lines. Subcontracting, instead of being grudging and niggardly as at present (except for Ford) will be pushed to the limit. Final assembly by the prime contractors will hum along like auto production at its peak."

See 3 Million Available For New Defense Jobs

Washington, Dec. 24—America has ample manpower to meet supply at least 3,000,000 new workers to arms industries, if we abolish artificial barriers raised against Negroes, women, the foreign born and other groups, according to the Defense Training Branch of the OPM's Labor Division.

Enough workers will be available, the OPM said, if we utilize all qualified workers "regardless of age, sex, color or ancestral lineage in our war effort," and if we train workers and transfer them from non-defense industries as necessary.

The OPM statement, issued by Frank J. McSherry, chief of Defense Training, hit out at discrimination against Negro workers, pointing out that refusal to employ them excludes approximately 10 percent of the population from the victory program.

"There are many industrial concerns which are expanding to a great extent to meet the war load, which have consistently refused to employ colored workers," McSherry said. "In other war industrial plants, Negro workers are allowed to work either on unskilled or semi-skilled jobs only, regardless of their qualifications.

"With approximately 9.7 percent of the population of this country colored, it can readily be appreciated that we cannot have all-out preparation for war if we ignore this important group of potential workers."

Labor Law Group Meets

New York, Dec. 27—The American Association for Labor Legislation opens its 35th annual meeting here tonight at the Hotel Commodore. The sessions will last through Wednesday.

At a symposium to be held at 10 o'clock Tuesday morning the subject for discussion is: "How shall American Labor's standards and security be safeguarded now and during the post-war emergency?" J. Douglas Brown, of the OPM Labor Division will preside.

At a luncheon meeting the same day, Joseph P. Chamberlain, Columbia University Law School, will preside at a discussion on "Preparations Now for Post-Defense Problems."

At the afternoon session, presided over by Paul M. Herzog, N. Y. Labor Relations Board, the subject will be "Trade Unions and the Law."

Start '42 Right — Buy Defense Savings Bonds

It Pays To Picket

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 24—Two turns on two picket lines within two weeks netted one worker at the Warwick Hotel here a raise of $4.70, according to reports from the CIO Hotel and Restaurant Workers Industrial Union here.

The worker, James Leonard, had worked six years for the exclusive Chateau Crillon, at $14 a week. A strike was called, and Leonard got another job at the hotel. A strike was called there—and in the settlement Leonard came out with a wage of $18.70 as compared to the former $14.

Axis Defeat Is Labor's Task In '42, Murray Warns In New Year's Message

Following is the New Year's message of President Philip Murray of the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

The Congress of Industrial Organizations, like every other group of patriotic Americans, will dedicate all its efforts in the coming year to the main task of winning victory over Hitler and his Axis partners. We recognize that we are fighting not only for the defense of our country but also for the very life of the labor movement, which is always the first target of Fascism in its drive to suppress all democratic institutions.

The five million men and women who make up the Congress of Industrial Organizations are proud to be in the forefront of our national effort. Large numbers of them are now in the armed forces, and most of them have members of their families who are or soon will be thus enlisted. The CIO members in civilian life are employed mostly in the basic and defense industries, performing the most important work of industrial production upon which our fighting forces depend.

The CIO in 1942 expects to continue to take the lead in all constructive efforts for the welfare of labor and the nation, for all-out production and for speedy and complete victory.

No-Strike Policy

We are pledged to a no-strike policy for the duration of the war; and expect to maintain uninterrupted production by the most effective means possible, namely through the voluntary and democratic processes of collective bargaining.

But more important than merely preventing strikes are our constructive proposals to get at the real causes of lagging defense production and to make possible the maximum output. We have proposed the Industry Council Plan as the most simple and effective method of bringing about close labor-industry-government cooperation to achieve increased production, through careful planning on an industry-wide basis, through full utilization of all existing facilities, and through timely expansion wherever necessary. It is also designed to prepare well in advance to cope with post-war dislocations.

While working for general adoption of this plan, we shall continue to seek application of its principles wherever possible. This the unions of the CIO have already been doing through plans for increasing production in their particular industries.

In such ways we offer our brains as well as our energies for the purpose of outproducing the Axis and giving all possible aid to our gallant allies.

The CIO also recognizes that one of the most important contributions it can make to victory is to continue and increase its organizing efforts, to secure fairer wages, better working conditions, greater security and all else that is necessary for the highest morale of our country's working population.

Democratic Rights

Underpaid, ill-fed, ill-clothed and ill-housed workers cannot do their full share in our national effort. Nor can exploitation, union busting and other oppressive practices fail to result in lowered morale and reduced production.

The most enthusiastic and voluntary efforts of a free people defending their democratic institutions are necessary to achieve victory. So the CIO in the coming year will continue to defend our democratic rights against repressive anti-labor legislation and all other infringements of our civil liberties.

The CIO expects in 1942 to intensify its efforts to organize the unorganized, to achieve and to maintain union security, and to defend the American living standards against profiteering employers, against inflationary price increases and against everything else that threatens to lower morale and hamper labor from making the all-important contribution it is so eager to make to our common cause.

At the beginning of this most critical year in world history, our nation and the peoples fighting to win or retain their freedom can count on American labor, and particularly on its best organized and most progressive elements, the membership of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, to do everything within its power to win victory for freedom and democracy and to build a better post-war world.

CIO Hails New U. S. Policy On Mediation of All Disputes

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24—American labor "hails with delight" the agreement on voluntary settlement of labor disputes reached by labor, industry and government after more than a week of conferences, CIO Pres. Philip Murray said today in commenting on the three-point plan announced by President Roosevelt.

The agreement is to stop strikes and lockouts; gives labor the right to conciliate, mediate and arbitrate all matters in dispute; and provides for setting up a new War Labor Board with representatives of labor, management and the public. It marks a major gain for labor, since it takes in the basic points proposed by the CIO and the AFL from the beginning of the meetings.

In commenting on the agreement, Pres. Murray called on all CIO members "to lend every practical support they can to the officers of the various international unions and the President of the CIO to provide continuity of operation and maximum production in all industries."

"We are in this war for the purpose of obtaining victory," he said. "All of the facilities of our organizations will be applied toward the attainment of that objective. In the meantime, the interests of labor and management are fully protected and guaranteed under the agreement."

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

Stalling tactics by the 12-man industry group caused the delay of a week or more in reaching a settlement, it was learned here. The question of the union shop, which both CIO and AFL insisted remain open to voluntary arbitration or mediation, seemed to raise the most objections on the employers' part. They were reported holding out on the line that union shop issues could not be even considered in war time.

President Roosevelt's statement in making the announcement made it clear that all disputes would be settled by peaceful and voluntary means. "I accept without reservation your covenants that there shall be no strikes or lockouts and that all disputes shall be settled by peaceful means," he said.

Murray, FDR Statements On War-Time Labor Policy

Roosevelt

Gentlemen of the Conference:

Moderator Davis and Senator Thomas have reported to me the results of your deliberations. They have given me each proposition which you have discussed. I am happy to accept your general points of agreement as follows:

1. There shall be no strikes or lockouts.
2. All disputes shall be settled by peaceful means.
3. The President shall set up a proper War Labor Board to handle these disputes.

I accept without reservation your covenants that there shall be no strikes or lockouts and all disputes shall be settled by peaceful means. I shall proceed at once to act on your third point.

Government must act in general. The three points agreed upon cover of necessity all disputes that may arise between labor and management.

The particular disputes must be left to the consideration of those who can study the particular differences and who are thereby prepared by knowledge to pass judgment in the particular case. I have full faith that no group in our national life will take undue advantage while we are faced by common enemies.

I congratulate you — I thank you, and our people will join me in appreciation of your great contribution.

Your achievement is a response to common desire of all men of good will that strikes and lockouts cease and that disputes be settled by peaceful means.

Murray

"Organized labor hails with delight the perfection of an agreement between industry, the CIO, the AFL and the public, which (1) is to stop strikes or any other stoppages that might interfere with production, including lock-outs; (2) gives to labor the right to conciliate, mediate and arbitrate all disputes between workers and their employers; and (3) provides for the setting up of a War Labor Board, truly representative of labor, management and the public.

"It is but fitting that I should compliment all of the interests represented in this great conference for the wholesome contribution they have made in bringing about this accord. It shall be the purpose of the national CIO and each of its affiliated unions to make effective the provisions of this agreement, and to lend all of their power and influence toward the prevention of strikes and other stoppages that interfere with production.

"We are in this war for the purpose of obtaining victory. All of the facilities of our organizations will be applied toward the attainment of that objective. In the meantime, the interests of labor and management are fully protected and guaranteed under the agreement.

"I appeal to all members of CIO organizations to lend every practical support they can to the officers of the various international unions and the President of the CIO to provide continuity of operation and maximum production in all industries over which our labor organization has jurisdiction."

Murray on MBS January 4

Washington, Dec. 24—Pres. Philip Murray will be one of the leaders in American life to broadcast in a special one-hour program over the Mutual Broadcasting System on Jan. 4, 1942.

The program will mark the 14th anniversary of the American Forum of the Air broadcast. Co-chairmen of the symposium, dealing with the subject "United America Looks Ahead to 1942," will be Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and Theodore Granik who conducts the weekly forum program.

Other speakers will be Pres. William Green of the AFL, Pres. A. W. Hawkes of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and a number of high government officials.

Offer To Give Up Jobs!

New York, Dec. 27—American-born radio operators of Japanese descent have volunteered to give up their jobs and offer their services to the government, in an action taken through their union, Local 3 of the American Communications Association, CIO.

The offer, accompanied by a pledge of "utmost support and loyalty to President Roosevelt and to the government and people of the U. S." was made in a resolution that condemned "the wanton acts of aggression by the Imperialist Japanese Government." The radio men are employed on west coast tuna fishing boats.

First Bonus-- The Reason: The Union

Spartansburg, S. C., Dec. 24.—Fifty-five workers of the Erwin Chain of mills, now under contract with the CIO Textile Workers Union of America, have just received their first Christmas bonus in about 9 years.

The bonus amounted in each case to approximately a week's wages, and was negotiated by the Textile Workers Union of America as part of the third pay increase this year.

Negotiations for the bonus were carried on with executive officers of the Erwin Mills company by R. R. Lawrence, Southeastern TWUA director, who was assisted by TWUA Representative H. D. Lisk and leaders of the three TWUA locals at Erwin, Durham, and Cooleemee, N. C.

PLANTERS NUT & CHOCOLATE CO.

LOOKING AHEAD

By Len De Caux

THEY seem very dim and distant now, those pre-war days. But check back through 1941 and you will see a continuity that bridges even December 7 and Pearl Harbor.

January 1941 found the CIO the proud father of a number of plans for promoting defense. President Murray had just announced his industry council plan. The Reuther plan had followed, for building planes in auto plants. Then came the Construction Workers' plan for mass-production of pre-fabricated defense housing; and the Steel Workers' plan for all-out steel production.

Significance: CIO was awake, long before war engulfed the U. S., to the need of vastly expanding defense production. It planned and pushed for more production, and its proposals were designed to avert many of the lacks and losses suffered today.

February saw the CIO pushing ahead with its organizing work in aircraft, steel, the Ford drive, etc. Enormous profits in defense industries, while wages lagged far behind.

In March the Mine and Steel Workers wage negotiations got under way. Profiteers, their press and politicians were working hard to whip up demand for anti-strike legislation. Every kind of union-busting bill was pushed in Congress, in this frenzied effort to destroy labor's bargaining power lest its demands cut in on super-profits.

April was the month when CIO turned the tide to higher wages. The United Mine Workers—locked out despite all their offers to continue production—won a $1 a day increase. The Steel Workers Organizing Committee, starting with U. S. Steel, spread a 10c-an-hour boost through the whole industry and set the standard for similar increases in many other industries.

May saw CIO wage boosts spreading far and wide—General Electric, Westinghouse, General Motors and many others. Bethlehem's Lackawanna plant and the Ford workers voted overwhelmingly for CIO, forecasting later complete success.

Significance: CIO did its duty to its members in 1941 and built the strength of a mighty labor movement to buttress democracy and defend our country in the war days ahead.

June was a month of jitters. CIO advances (topped in June by the Ford union shop contract) had driven the profiteers and union-busters frantic. Crack down on labor was their cry. Troops were used to break the North American strike; the conscription law was perverted for strikebreaking purposes; anti-union bills were passed in both Senate and House. Monopoly practices, bungling and growing priorities unemployment increased the jitters.

Finally in June Hitler proved he wasn't fooling about a world war by turning east against the Soviet Union in the biggest battlefront in history.

In July, August and September the CIO played a big part in salvaging a measure of sanity out of current hysteria. Its special legislative conference, its people's lobby succeeded in checking the anti-labor drive and defeating the May-Connally bill. The Mine Workers brought the southern operators into line, abolishing the southern differential.

SWOC cracked "Little Steel." The companies whose refusal to sign union agreements caused the bitter 1937 strike all agreed to sign contracts with SWOC, as it showed proof it had organized their employes. CIO also fought hard against tax proposals to coddle the rich and soak the poor.

October was a month when CIO grappled with priorities unemployment, fought wage-freezing proposals, demanded proper price controls, and pressed for adequate labor representation in defense. The CIO oil drive was launched.

Significance: Future historians will give CIO great credit for saving the day in these critical pre-war months. By sticking to its guns, maintaining its unity, building its strength, defending labor's rights against venomous and hysterical attacks, CIO averted violent and disruptive social conflicts which would have been most harmful to national war unity.

November, month of CIO's national convention, saw the whole movement mobilized for the coming war against Hitlerism. Organization of the south was chosen as a major domestic task. And the Mine Workers, then target of the worst anti-union hysteria but later to win the union shop in captive mines, were given full backing.

Hardly was the convention over, however, before CIO had again to fight an anti-union legislative drive which reached its height in House passage of the Smith slave-labor bill. But in December the Axis powers brought war to the United States. The Smith bill was shelved, while CIO's proposal for a labor-industry-government conference was tried. It resulted in a constructive agreement for peaceful settlement of all labor disputes.

Uniting For Victory

The outcome of the labor-industry-government conference is bad news for Hitler and his gang, but splendid news for everyone else.

An agreement was reached to stop strikes or lockouts for the duration of the war; to provide for conciliation, mediation and arbitration of all industrial disputes; and to set up a War Labor Board representing labor, management and the public.

CIO President Murray has complimented all interests represented in the conference—industry, the AFL and the public, as well as the CIO—for "the wholesome contribution they have made in bringing about this accord."

The agreement is in the spirit of the national unity so urgently needed for victory in this war. It augurs well for the future cooperation of all parties in our common effort.

How much better is such a voluntary approach than the bitterness and dissension that would have resulted from the imposition of such repressive anti-labor legislation as the Smith bill and the other similar measures advanced in Congress. Let us hope that these will now be scrapped once and for all.

The CIO takes pride in having advanced the original proposal for a labor-industry-government conference, to devise such an agreement as has now been reached. All of its unions and members are eager to make their full contribution to preventing stoppages and to out-producing the Axis. We now have the opportunity to do so, as free Americans, through the agreement voluntarily approved by our own representatives.

Details as to procedures and set-up under the agreement are not available at the time of writing. But it is immediately important, as President Murray points out, that all CIO affiliates and members should at once lend their full cooperation, in the spirit of the agreement, to maintaining uninterrupted production and achieving maximum output in all industries.

The New Year

CIO looks ahead to 1942 with all the confidence of a movement that is proud of its achievements in the past year, sure of its direction and determined to reach its goal.

The record of 1941 is one of outstanding success in organizing, in advancing the interests of the workers, and in contributing to our country's defense.

A million new members. Ford, Little Steel organized. Sweeping advances in scores of other industries. Substantial wage increases, paid vacations, union security and countless other improvements and protections won in new agreements covering millions of workers.

On the legislative field, a constant and largely successful struggle to defend labor and democratic rights against vicious and often hysterical assault by all the forces of reaction, which have sought to take advantage of the nation's emergency to undermine democracy from within.

To national defense the CIO has contributed the daily labor of its five million members engaged in all the most essential tasks of actual production. Through protecting their welfare and remedying their grievances it has helped to maintain morale and uninterrupted production.

In addition, through the Murray industry council plan and the application of its principles in particular plans for increasing production in many basic industries, the CIO has enlisted the brains and enthusiasm of labor for achieving all-out production.

As to CIO's direction and goal in 1942, there is but one answer. With all true Americans, and with all the freedom-loving peoples of the world, we are out for complete victory over Hitler, his Axis partners and all they stand for.

To this end, CIO is pledged to maintain continuity of production without stoppages, under the voluntary agreement for the settlement of industrial disputes subscribed to by its representatives in the recent labor - industry - government conference in Washington.

It will also intensify its efforts in every industry, by every means at its disposal, to increase and improve production of the weapons needed by our armed forces and those of our allies, and of all other materials and services necessary for victory.

At the same time, as part of this effort, the CIO will increase its organizing activities and its services to labor in obtaining fair wages and decent conditions and defending our democratic rights.

The constructive aims and objectives of the CIO are not only consistent with maximum effort for victory, they are essential to it.

THE LEGISLATIVE YEAR:

CIO Held Off Tories' Anti-Labor Blitz In '41

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24—Labor faced a tough legislative year in 1941, with an almost continuous assault on collective bargaining and other workers' rights in Congress and in many of the state legislatures.

The politicians and other employers' agents who led the attack in Congress and the press kept at their destructive work despite the threats to our national security that finally culminated in open war December 7. In fact, the Smith bill to outlaw all labor unions and cripple the victory program was rushed through the House only four days before the Axis attack, and the first order of business in the Senate after war was declared was a demand from polltaxer Tom Connally for quick passage of his bill.

To date the CIO has held off the anti-labor, anti-defense blitz. Following President Murray's lead, a CIO people's lobby has been at work explaining the dangers to national unity and to arms production in shackling labor, pointing out that only free labor can out-produce the Axis, that slave labor threatens the security of our country.

As a result of CIO's resistance, the Smith bill has not yet become law, the Connally bill is still on the shelf, the Ball bill is stalled, and in general the lines hold for free labor. At time of writing, the conference of labor, industry and government to work out voluntary methods of settling labor disputes—suggested by Pres. Murray—was in session.

CHECKED, NOT ROUTED

Anti-labor forces were checked, but far from routed at the year's end, and they could look back on a year that kept labor from making more than one or two positive achievements in social legislation. As Pres. Murray pointed out in his report to the fourth CIO convention in Detroit, the role of the CIO was perforce almost purely a defensive one as far as Congress was concerned, with its energies going to the effort to beat back destruction of basic rights.

BILLS BEATEN

On the defensive score, the CIO defeated earlier attempts to pass bills outlawing the normal rights and functions of labor unions, when it blocked the May-Connally amendments in the House in July, and put the Vinson bill on ice. Two other victories were marked up in defeat of the wiretapping bill and the concentration camp bill, both offered by poll-taxer Hobbs from Alabama.

House defeat of wage-freezing proposals in the price control bill was another major achievement, though the House bill makes almost no serious attempt to check the dangers of inflation.

SOME SETBACKS

On the negative side, organized labor and the people generally took a setback in the tax bill passed in September over strong CIO protests. This bill, though it steeply increased levies on low income groups of all kinds, left excess profits and huge private fortunes practically untouched. A new bill is now cooking in Congress, and the CIO is preparing to fight even more vigorously for taxation based on ability to pay.

As CIO has repeatedly pointed out, the workers are prepared to pay their full share of the financial cost of beating Hitler, but they demand that the rich and the huge corporations pay theirs also, by handing over some of the inflated profits they have made and are making from the nation's emergency.

INADEQUATE WPA

The people also took a setback in the seriously inadequate WPA appropriations. Despite the defense program and considerably increased employment, huge numbers of able and willing workers remain jobless.

Priorities unemployment, brought about through lack of planning by industry and government, is adding hundreds of thousands more. CIO is ready again to fight for the jobless, to demand adequate relief on projects that will contribute to national morale and to victory.

PROGRESS STOPPED

No progress was made during the year on legislation to end lynching, to abolish the poll tax, to tighten and improve civil rights vital to national unity and to defense. National health, housing and other social problems were almost totally ignored, with only an inadequate bill on defense housing passed in December.

Two achievements were marked up in final passage of the mine safety bill, won only after Congressional delay had cost the lives of 1,600 miners, and in renewal of the Bituminous Coal Act, both after vigorous pressure of the United Mine Workers of America and other CIO unions.

As the year ended, legislative prospects in Congress indicated another year of CIO struggle to preserve labor's rights and to gain new national strength through adequate social laws. Preparing to campaign on a new tax bill, to continue resistance to labor-crippling laws if necessary, to press for adequate social security, housing, health and other progressive measures, the CIO goes into 1942 with a fighting record for the year past and a new determination to do everything for victory over the Axis—which includes laws to strengthen our people as a vital step.

And above everything else, the CIO is determined to press for adoption of the Industry Council Plan and its detailed plans for outproducing Hitler—no matter what schemes the reactionaries in Congress may have in store.

Attack Jersey Bill As Dangerous

Newark, N. J., Dec. 27—Declaring that the victory program requires full unity of all people and that "nothing should be done to stir up hatreds and suspicion," the N. J. CIO Council here has protested threatened passage of a drastic "anti-sabotage" bill by the state legislature.

The bill would put anyone who "delays or interferes" with arms production in jail for 10 years. It would "thoroughly demoralize every worker in a national defense plant," according to Irving Abramson, state CIO president, and would "destroy voluntary cooperation and create an antagonism on the part of the workers."

Million a Month War Relief Goal

New York, Dec. 24—CIO's five million members were urged today to support a campaign to raise a million dollars a month to "aid the families of thousands of American workers in the Philippines, in Hawaii, in Alaska and possibly the United States . . . in addition to the valiant children of Britain, Russia, China and other countries in fighting Hitler."

The call came from Chairman Irving Abramson of the National CIO Committee for American and Allied Relief, which was set up by President Murray at the Detroit convention last month.

"To help these families—the families of workers engaged in the battle of production that keeps the battle for victory going—the CIO today asks its five million members to help it raise $1,000,000 a month," Abramson said.

The announcement came following a committee meeting in Washington, where the program was planned as a result of recommendations sent to all CIO organizations by Pres. Murray asking that all CIO war relief contributions go through the national war relief committee.

ASK COOPERATION

Cooperation of local managements will be sought to facilitate collections, and funds will be sent to the national committee for distribution both here and abroad.

Members of the CIO committee include. Abramson; Gustave Strebel, John Phillips and August Scholle, presidents of the CIO councils in New York, Pennsylvania and Michigan, respectively; Ted Silvey, secretary of the Ohio council; Saul Mills, secretary of the Greater New York council; and John Brophy, national CIO director of industrial union councils.

FULL TEXT

Full text of the committee statement:

"Japan's treacherous attack in the Pacific today has brought the problem of war relief closer to the American worker than ever before. For this month the children of American workers, the families of thousands of American workers in the Philippines, in Hawaii, in Alaska, and possibly the United States itself have been added to valiant children of Britain, Russia, China and other countries fighting Hitler who face bombing out as Fascist bombers thunder overhead.

"To help these families, the families of workers engaged in the battle of production that keeps the battle for Victory going, the Congress of Industrial Organizations today asks for its five million members to help it raise $1,000,000 a month through the National CIO Committee for American and Allied War Relief.

"On behalf of the CIO war relief committee, I call on five million CIO workers, and the management of the plants in which they work, to help us help the valiant workers throughout the world who are carrying on in the face of German and Japanese bombs and bullets."

to pass judgment in the particular case. I have full faith that no group in our national life will take undue advantage while we are faced by common enemies."

Observers here saw the President's statement and the settlement itself as an answer both to demands in Congress for the Smith bill and other labor-shackling measures and as a reply to the contention that government should forbid or refuse to countenance the union shop.

However, the usual reactionaries sounded off in Congress, Senator Connally, who comes from the poll-tax state of Texas, in the lead. He will press for adoption of his bill next week, he said.

Senator Bridges, tory Republican from New Hampshire, was caught slightly off-base, for he was denouncing the "impending break-up" of the conference over the union shop issue just as the President was announcing its successful conclusion.

Standard Oil Rapped for Seeking To Force Strike

Washington, Dec. 27—The Domestic Coke Corp., subsidiary of Standard Oil of New Jersey, was accused this week of attempting to provoke a strike at its Fairmont, W. Va., plant which supplies defense industries, and of refusing to agree to abide by the labor-industry regulations now being worked out by Pres. Roosevelt's special committee.

The charge was made by District 50, gas, coke and chemical division of the United Mine Workers, through George J. Titler, regional director for Dist. 50 in West Virginia. Titler, Field Representative James Gallagher of Charleston, W. Va., and a rank and file committee from the plant conferred here for a week with a special conciliation panel from the Dept. of Labor.

MAIN ISSUE

The main issue in the dispute involves union security. Titler declared that evidence had been presented to show that the company had consistently tried to tear down the union by firings, intimidation and coercion, and that the union had therefore insisted on some form of union security in the negotiations.

District 50 had agreed to arbitrate and to accept any recommendations of the conciliation panel as binding, he said, but had proposed that negotiations be postponed until President Roosevelt's conference had made its recommendations.

All these proposals were curtly rejected by O. C. Gericke, president of Domestic Coke and J. J. Knight, general superintendent, Titler asserted.

MEN WON'T WALK OUT

District 50 officials made it plain that there would be no strike at this time at Domestic Coke, in view of the war, but declared that the men at Fairmont were determined to carry the negotiations through, after the President's board acts.

A shut-down at the plant which employs about 200 men, would also force at least three Fairmont industries contributing to the defense output to close. The workers voted to strike in November, but agreed to conciliation at the advice of District 50 officials.

Ford, Willys Agree To Manufacture Jeeps

WASHINGTON (INS)—In a move to double the production of the army's "jeep" trucks, the war department Saturday announced that the Ford Motor company, and the Willys-Overland Motors, Inc., of Toledo, will join in turning out this type of vehicle.

The agreement between the two companies, the first of its kind to be negotiated by two American auto manufacturers since the World war, provides that the Ford company will make available the huge facilities of its River Rouge plant at Dearborn, Mich., for the production of a vehicle identical to the model now being manufactured by Willys. The latter company will furnish complete drawings, licenses, patents and other manufacturing information without cost.

October 24th, 1941

Gentlemen:
When I was in the market for a new car, I talked with a number of my friends who have various makes of cars. During our discussions, I realized that I had to consider these factors:

The higher cost of most cars today.
The greater cost of gas and oil and repairs.
Higher taxes.
Yes, and what about this question of substitutes being used because of material shortages?

My friends argued that the purchase price of the WILLYS would be much lower and consequently, the new taxes would not be as high. And what car gets up to and over 30 miles on a gallon of gas, uses very little oil and costs so very little to repair if it ever needs repairs? My friends assured me that this car was the Willys.

The Willys salesman convinced me, by demonstration, that there are no "ersatz" materials in the new Willys. One of my friends insisted that he paid his incidental expenses and rent from his monthly savings on his Willys.

I thought you would like to know that my friends sold me on a WILLYS.

Very truly yours,

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Director of Organization, CIO

The 5,000,000 men and women of the CIO have one paramount aim for the coming year—the annihilation of Hitlerism and all it stands for. To this end the CIO dedicates all its efforts, all its strength, all its organized will.

To crush Hitler, our Army and Navy and our Allies must have arms in unceasing supply, delivered on time and in the almost infinite quantities needed. The workers of the CIO are charged with the responsibility of making those arms. They will carry out that responsibility. We will see to it that nothing interferes with the flow of weapons to all the fighting fronts.

To this end, as President Murray has said in his New Year's message, the CIO has pledged a policy of no interruptions to production. This is a pledge that we can and will carry out for the CIO does not make idle promises.

We will take the lead in this gigantic task. Together with all the workers and the people of America, we have ranged the full strength of the CIO beside the people of Great Britain, of China, of the Soviet Union and all nations fighting with us for national existence and for life itself.

ORGANIZE TO BEAT HITLER

The job of winning this war of liberation calls for the highest degree of national unity and for organized effort. For this reason, the CIO will continue to organize the workers of America. Our great contribution of the past year in organizing Ford, Little Steel and the other basic defense industries will be carried forward because this is the way to victory.

At the same time, the CIO will continue to make its contribution in planning and in brains to the national victory effort. We will push for adoption of the Industry Council Plan, for full adoption of the many detailed production plans our CIO unions have offered to government and to industry. The task of winning this war calls for full use of every resource we have—and labor's brains are one of our greatest resources.

In line with the task of organizing for victory, the CIO will keep up its campaigns to defeat all attempts at fastening repressive laws on labor. For the sake of national unity, for the sake of victory, we must not let our homegrown fascists shackle the productive effort of American workers by such reactionary measures as the Smith bill, the Connally bill, the Ball bill or any of the others that have been proposed.

THE RECORD OF THE YEAR

The record of 1941 is an inspiring one. Despite all obstacles, the CIO organized more than 1,000,000 workers during the year, raised wages by over a billion dollars, brought industrial democracy to hundreds of industrial plants. That record will be repeated and exceeded during 1942. There are millions of workers still unorganized—and CIO will organize them.

Forward with CIO for victory!

House Group Finds Delays, Production Loss From 'Business as Usual'

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24—A sober warning that continuation of "business as usual" practices by American industry will both endanger war production and vitally disrupt civilian morale was sounded today by the House Committee Investigating National Defense Migration.

"Testimony before the committee was almost universal that production to date has been a failure, measured against the available facilities and the visible needs for military purposes," the committee, headed by Rep. John H. Tolan, California, declared.

"Written testimony from a great automobile corporation (General Motors) showed that it was producing the tools of war at a rate, which, if general, would require 15 years for the completion of the armament program already projected. . . .

"Two major obstacles impede war production: Manufacturers have been reluctant to convert their production facilities from civilian to military production, and the defense agencies of the federal government have not required such conversion."

The Congressional report showed that leaders of the CIO automobile union had been correct in their repeated warnings over the past 12 months that the nation's "big assembly line industry" was neglecting defense work in order to reap higher profits on its civilian production, and that failure to embark on a program of steady conversion to arms production was needlessly throwing hundreds of thousands of workers into unemployment.

NEED FOR PLANNING

In its recommendations for a government planning board that would have "teeth" to enforce its orders; in its suggestions for full use of existing plant capacity and for construction of new factories where needed, the committee's report parallels many of the suggestions made during the last year by CIO Pres. Murray in his continued demands for adoption of the CIO Industry Council Plan.

"It is inconceivable that war can be waged successfully without such full utilization of our resources," the Tolan report asserts. "The committee believes that to date there has been a profound lack of such planning, and an absence of the attitude necessary for the organization of our economy on behalf of the total war effort which we now see is called for if victory is to be ours."

ONE VAST PLANT

The committee stressed another point which is strongly emphasized in the Murray Plan: that the nation's whole production economy must be treated "as one vast plant," and that planning for war production must ignore many of the barriers and hindrances caused by corporations' greed for heavy profits.

A considerable portion of the committee report was devoted to discussion of the situation in the automobile industry's slowly accelerating interest in defense production as told by Pres. R. J. Thomas of the UAW-CIO at hearings in Detroit several months ago.

THOMAS TESTIMONY

The report quoted Thomas as asserting:

"Had steps been undertaken back in November of 1940 to call upon the productive power of the auto industry for national defense purposes, we would not now be facing a tragic crisis of unemployment and retarded production. Had industry and government been willing to undertake this essential task, defense jobs developed in the industry would now be more than sufficient to absorb the full complement of automobile workers displayed by curtailment of regular automobile production."

How the automobile industry has attempted to minimize its possible defense contribution is highlighted in the report.

15% OF CAPACITY

The committee received testimony from auto manufacturers "that only 15% of their productive capacity was convertible" to arms work, the report said, adding that production engineers and union witnesses claimed from 50% to 80% of the plant capacity could be used, and in England, the automobile industry finally went 100% into defense work. By way of contrast, it was pointed out that in May of this year, only 13 out of every 100 U. S. auto company employes were handling defense jobs.

Alex Taub, an engineer who worked in Great Britain, told the committee that "we found by experience that we could make three-ton trucks on an assembly line that normally handled little 10-power horsepower cars. It was largely a question of urgency, and of how many bombs were dropping outside.

"That makes a difference. Bombs have a way of speeding you along," Taub said.

The Tolan Committee report was severely critical of the OPM Labor Division's failure to work more efficiently in finding new jobs for workers displaced by conversion from civilian to defense production.

Greatest Unemployment Since Winter of '32 Forecast by Auto Union

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23—Automobile workers will face the heaviest unemployment since 1932 this winter, according to testimony presented today to the Tolan Committee on migratory labor by Pres. R. J. Thomas of the United Automobile Workers, CIO. The figure of jobless will amount to 300,000 in Michigan alone by January, Thomas said, and to 450,000 throughout the nation.

Thomas's testimony was corroborated by Richard T. Frankensteen, director of the Aviation Division of the UAWA and by Walter Reuther, General Motors director, who followed him on the witness stand.

Declaring that passenger car production will close down entirely after the first two weeks of January, Thomas pointed out that the auto workers want a chance to produce "the planes, tanks and guns which will spell out defeat for the aggressors."

"Auto workers know that this can be done," he said. "The American auto industry has been able to turn out 100 units for every 12 produced by all the Axis countries. For over a year the UAW has been urging upon government and industry the importance of swinging the tremendous producing power of this industry into the production of essential arms and munitions."

BUSINESS AS USUAL

Thomas sharply criticized the business as usual philosophy that has held the auto industry—"which is the world's most productive force"—back from all-out production of arms to beat Hitler, and offered a six-point plan to bring its resources to bear for victory.

This plan calls for setting up of an industry council as outlined in the CIO plan proposed by Pres. Murray, for a central procurement agency to be set up by Pres. Roosevelt to carry out rational planning of all arms and other government purchases, and for an immediate conference between government and the union to work out further plans.

This conference, Thomas said, should take steps to take care of extra compensation, job transfers, and retraining of workers.

QUICK STEPS NEEDED

In addition, the automobile and aircraft industries should take steps to quick conversion of plants for arms production, to pay a layoff bonus to displaced workers, to coordinate research and engineering facilities, and to use all available machine tool capacity and put the industry on a seven-day week with safeguards for collective bargaining.

In presenting the plan, Thomas declared that the union's purpose was to "ask your help in assuring that auto workers and the auto industry play their full part in the defeat of Hitlerism."

Firm Found Guilty

Washington, Dec. 27—Charges of anti-labor practices filed by the International Woodworkers of America against the Henry McCleary Timber Company in the state of Washington have been upheld by the National Labor Relations Board.

The company was ordered to bargain with the IWA as sole union representative for the production employes at its sawmill in Shelton, Wash., and to sign a written agreement embodying any understandings reached with the union. Two employes fired last March for union activity were ordered reinstated with back pay.

Economic Outlook:

Predict 2.5 Million Unemployment Jump

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24—Dislocations due to shortages in materials are causing an increase in unemployment that will add approximately 2.5 million workers to the 5,063,000 unemployed in October, the CIO Economic Outlook declared in its current issue.

"The CIO has pointed out on many occasions the dislocations in employment which would be caused by the old level of the arms program," the Outlook says. "These dislocations will result in approximately 2.5 million being displayed from their jobs in industry.

"As our arms program is doubled or tripled, the dislocations in employment will be greatly intensified."

At the same time, sharply increased living costs result in new hardships for low income groups. Food costs, which have gone up 20.8 per cent between August, 1939, and November, 1941, can be expected to rise another 12 to 15 per cent to close the present gaps between wholesale and retail prices. Workers have to spend about one-third of their income on food alone, the Outlook points out.

WAGES WIPED OUT

These rising living costs are wiping out recent wage increases, the Outlook explains, and will shortly nullify gains won in the past few months.

"Thus, the 17 per cent rise in average hourly earnings has been reduced to a rise of 4.5 per cent as the result of the increased cost of living," the Outlook says. "By February 1, with the cost of living rising at the rate of 1.5 per cent per month, the entire rise in real hourly earnings will be wiped out."

In contrast, profits are steadily increasing, and Federal Reserve Board figures show a 32.2 per cent increase between the first three quarters of 1941 compared to a similar period in 1940 and a 76.5 per cent rise between 1941 and a similar period in 1939.

COST OF LIVING

The rising cost of living points to the need for an adequate price control bill as urged on the House and Senate by CIO President Philip Murray, with particular stress on eliminating all wage control proposals from the bill. Wage controls, the Outlook reiterates, are unwise, unworkable, and a serious discrimination against labor.

Concluding with a study of the strike situation during 1941, the Outlook points out that man-days lost due to strikes during the first 10 months of 1941 were 21,460,000. At the same time, accidents cost 230 million man-days, illness 450 million and unemployment 1.57 billion. In addition, incalculable losses in production have been due to failure to plan and to use existing industrial capacity.

Hosiery Union Smashes Fake Outfit

MARTINSBURG, W. Va., Dec. 24—A company union that convinced the largest men's hosiery mill in the country that it could defeat the CIO American Federation of Hosiery Workers was smashed in a National Labor Relations Board election here Friday, Dec. 19.

The Interwoven Stocking Company, employing more than 1,500 workers in its main plant here, cancelled its contract with the CIO union Dec. 9 on the claim of the Independent Hosiery Workers' association that it represented a majority of the employes. The contract with the AFHW-CIO had two years to run but included a termination clause.

WILL OPEN PARLEY

When the ballot were counted Dec. 19 the AFHW-CIO polled 750 votes to 632 for the company union and the CIO union will open negotiations with the Interwoven management for a new contract on Jan. 5, 1942.

Circulars, hundreds of letters and scare-head advertisements were used by the company union in its campaign to frighten workers away from the hosiery union.

The name of the CIO and of John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, were smeared in the usual manner of company unions but failed entirely when the CIO answered blow for blow over the radio, by distribution of literature throughout the town and in equal space in the advertising columns of the local paper.

John J. McCoy, field representative of the AFHW, was in charge of the campaign, assisted by Fred Held, Adolph Benet and Ann Murkovich of the federation's staff.

Furriers To Donate Ambulances

New York, Dec. 27—A fully equipped ambulance for each of the major countries resisting the Axis powers will be given to the United States, Great Britain, Russia and China, by the International Fur & Leather Workers, the union announced here this week. The IFLW has a membership of 75,000 in the United States and Canada.

"Contribution of the ambulances will be part of a program of all-out aid to the U. S. Government and the countries allied with it in its efforts to defeat the fascist aggressors," the union stated.

The plan was drawn up at a meeting of the General Executive Board, which also announced that the national union and affiliated locals had already bought $500,000 worth of bonds.

The Board sent cablegrams to the governments of Great Britain, the Soviet Union and China, pledging the union's support of their struggle to crush fascism.

Cumberland Hero

Secretary William E. Meagher of Local 1874 Textile Workers Union advises that Seaman Herman F. Goodnow, whose picture appeared in the December 8 CIO News receiving a citation for heroism, is a member of that local and his home is in Cumberland, Md.

Production Parley Held In South

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Dec. 24—Its first "Production for Victory" meeting a huge success, the Steel Workers Organizing Committee today was working on plans for another in the series of meetings throughout the Birmingham steel area.

Approximately 500 workers from the Ensley local at the Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Co.—a U. S. Steel subsidiary — attended the meeting, purpose of which is to push a campaign for all-out production of steel in order to meet the requirements of the nation's war efforts.

While TCI officials did not attend the first meeting, the SWOC was told that management is heartily in accord with the union's aims, and that company executives will undoubtedly be present at the future sessions.

MITCH SPEAKS

William Mitch, SWOC southern regional director and district president of the miners, told the steel workers that "we have got to crush Hitler as well as Japan . . . your government comes before anything else in a crisis like this.

"If there is any way we can see where production can be improved, it is up to us to work with industry to that end," Mitch said.

Other speakers included Noel Beddow, local executive secretary of the SWOC; Col. O. H. Prizer, Sheriff Holt A. McDowell and W. O. Warmoth, vice-commander of the Alabama Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Beddow told the crowd that "I hate to read in the papers day after day that England is our first line of defense. That's a lie. We're England's first line of defense."

Labor Songbook Off the Press

Washington, Dec. 24.—A group of labor songs with music included has been issued in pamphlet form as a product of the Labor Workshop sponsored by the CIO Council in Wilkes-Barre, Pa. The music for the six songs in the group was composed by John Jones Owen.

The words are taken from various sources. Two are mine ballads by unknown writers. Another which is dedicated to Stella Marley, secretary of the Wilkes-Barre CIO Council, draws on Shakespeare, and words for the other three were written by Hilda W. Smith, head of the WPA Workers Service; Mike Johnson and Minnie Goldstein.

The Labor Workshop has a full educational and recreational program which is supervised by WPA teachers on the Workers' Service project. All regular classes are free to union members and their friends.

CIO Wins Poll

Houston, Tex., Dec. 24—The Oil Workers Intl. Union emerged a 3-1 victor in a Natl. Labor Relations Board election at the Gulf Coast Steel Barrel Co. here.

Local 23, OWIU, received 36 votes to 10 for no union. The firm is a subsidiary of Jones & Laughlin.

DEFENSE SIDELIGHTS:

Of Mousers & Men

In one of the nation's largest shipyards one day last week, sat a group of worried engineers, electricians and workers, gazing unhappily at the open end of a 12-inch conduit pipe.

The problem facing them was to run a cable through the pipe to connect the inspection offices of the British Purchasing Commission and the fitting-out dock—a distance of 200 feet. The pipe was two feet underground and too small for a man, or practically anything, to go through.

The engineers scowled and bit their fingernails. The electricians furrowed their brows and muttered quietly to themselves. The workers stared in bafflement at the open end of the pipe. The great Todd-California Shipbuilding Corporation was stymied.

Then, almost as everyone started to despair, the shipyard cat, Toddy, wandered casually across the floor. The eyes of several of the workers widened in recognition—and suddenly the startled Toddy was pounced upon.

A line was placed around "Toddy's" neck and he was placed at the end of the pipe. Without a moment's hesitation he disappeared.

The engineers, the electricians, and the workers hurried to the other end of the 200 foot pipe, and waited—tense. The minutes dragged on, and then Toddy walked nonchalantly out into the sunlight again, pulling the line.

The cable was hooked to the line and pulled through. Engineers, electricians and workers all breathed a great sigh of relief, and Toddy, who had saved the day, was acclaimed as a hero.

ON THEIR TOES

The alert, imaginative thinking of the shipyard workers in utilizing the cat to solve this relatively minor problem reflects the resourcefulness and ingenuity of American workers in tackling the larger problems that arise from day to day under the national defense program.

With the nation's industrial machinery geared to constantly increasing production quotas and with new plants and mills and shipyards being built and others being expanded at unprecedented speed, technical and mechanical problems are arising which make new demands on the skills and intelligence of defense workers.

In industry after industry stories are told of how workers, or their trade unions, have proposed plans designed to speed or improve defense production to OPM Associate Director-General Sidney Hillman and other government heads. Scores of inventions by workers have been accepted and successfully applied in the aircraft industry, in tank plants, in arsenals, steel mills and shipyards.

BIG CONTRIBUTION

On the production line, labor's contribution to the nation's defense effort is even more impressive. From all over the country come reports that work is ahead of schedule. In New York shipyards, the cruiser Atlanta was launched eight months ahead of schedule; the Santiago and the San Juan, five months ahead of schedule. Total ship construction has jumped by 200 per cent over the pre-emergency figure.

In one plant, in central New York, workers got so far ahead of schedule that the War Department asked them to slow up production. The workers were turning out cartridge cases faster than the government could put powder and fuses into them.

These are records of which American labor is proud, yet they reflect only part of the picture of what labor is doing in the job of building democracy's defenses.

Two Shifts For Old Glory

More than 100 full-time Betsy Rosses—the women who still sew the Stars and Stripes by hand—are busy today making American flags in Philadelphia. The Army's staff of experts — whose skilled needles are flashing hour after hour on two shifts a day—has been nearly tripled in recent months to turn out the increasing thousands of flags and insignia needed by the fast-expanding armed forces.

As many as 30 different shades of silk thread go into a 1941 model American flag, the Army revealed, but the Stars and Stripes are still sewn by hand with the same care as in George Washington's day when Betsy Ross stitched out the first flag for the Revolutionary Army.

A training period of six or seven weeks is necessary for a woman to learn how to embroider regimental flags in their exact blending of shades. A machine embroiders the silk stars, but the stripes are still cut painstakingly by hand.
